CHAPTER XV. Ver. 5, 6. They pretended that if a man devoted to religious uses what he could have spared for the support of his poor infirm parents, this freed him from all obligation to relieve or support them. 13, 14. Every ordinance in the church not instituted by my heavenly Father, and every officer not authorized by him, shall be rooted up and cast out. Nor need ye regard whether the Pharisees be pleased or not; for they are but self-conceited and obstinately ignorant leaders of poor ignorant hearers, who blindly and implicitly follow whatever they dictate; and, in the nature of things, and the just punishment of God, both deceivers and deceived, if they continue in their errors, must perish together in the bottomless pit. 18–20. Out of the corrupt lusts of the heart proceed carnal imaginations, contrivances, and designs; hatred, malice, and murder; wanton desires, words, and actions; adultery, fornication, and every other form of uncleanness; covetousness, injuries, cheats, and thefts; lies, falsehood in bearing witness, all evil-speaking, or calumny against men; and blasphemies and profaneness against God and religion. These are the abominable things which render a man unclean and odious before God, unfit for his service, and for communion

30 And[i] great multitudes came unto him, having with them those that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed,[4] and many others, and cast them down at Jesus' feet; and he healed them:

31 Insomuch that the multitude wondered, when they saw the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see: and [5]they glorified the God of Israel.

32 ¶ Then[k] Jesus called his disciples unto him, and said, I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with me now three days,[5] and have nothing to eat:[6] and I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint in the way.

33 And his disciples say unto him, [l]Whence should we have so much bread in the wilderness, as to fill so great a multitude?

34 And Jesus saith unto them, [m]How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven, and a few little fishes.

35 And he commanded the multitude [n]to sit down on the ground.

36 And he took the seven loaves and the fishes, and [o]gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

37 And[p] they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets full.

38 And they that did eat were four thousand men, beside women and children.

39 And he sent away the multitude, and took ship, and came into the coasts of [7]Magdala.[8]

CHAPTER XVI.

1 The Pharisees require a sign. 5 Jesus warneth his disciples of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees. 13 The people's opinion of Christ. 16 and Peter's confession of him. 21 Jesus foreshoweth his own death, 23 reproving Peter for dissuading him from it: 24 and admonisheth those that will follow him, to bear the cross.

THE Pharisees[a] also with the Sadducees came, and [b]tempting, desired him that he would show them a sign from heaven.[1]

2 He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather; for the sky is red.

3 And in the morning, It will be foul weather to-day; for the sky is red and lowering.[2] O ye hypocrites! ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs[3] of the times?[4]

4 A[c] wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas. [d]And he left them, and departed.

5 ¶ And [e]when his disciples were come to the other side, they had forgotten to take bread.

6 Then Jesus said unto them, [f]Take heed, and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

7 And they reasoned among themselves, saying, [g]It is because we have taken no bread.

8 Which when Jesus [h]perceived, he said unto them, O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves, because ye have brought no [5]bread?

9 [i]Do ye not yet understand, neither remember the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

10 Neither[k] the seven loaves of the four thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

11 How[l] is it that ye do not understand, that I spake it not to you concerning bread, that ye should beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees?

12 Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the [m]doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

13 ¶ When Jesus came into the coasts of Cesarea Philippi,[6] he asked his disciples, saying, [n]Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?

14 And they said, [o]Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

15 He saith unto them, [p]But whom say ye that I am?

16 And Simon Peter answered and said, [q]Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

17 And Jesus answered and said unto him, [r]Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for [s]flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, [t]but my Father which is in heaven.

18 And I say also unto thee, That [u]thou art Peter;[7] and [v]upon this rock[8] I will build my church; and the [w]gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

19 And[x] I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and with or enjoyment of him. 24–26. My commission to exercise my personal ministry and perform my miracles was not designed for the immediate benefit of the Gentiles, but of God's covenant people the Jews, who are gone astray and in perishing circumstances; my special blessings belong to this peculiar people; and therefore it is not proper to grant such favours to the Gentiles, who are without the pale of the covenant, and deserve to be treated with neglect and disdain for their impurity and wickedness. 27. I am indeed vile, worthless, and undeserving; yet, as there are blessings enough for the Jews, and to spare for us Gentiles, let me have this one so necessary mercy.

[6] This city was anciently called Paneas because it contained a sanctuary and temple dedicated to Pan. It was fortified by the son of the Canaanite Baal-gad, Jos. 11. 17. Herod the Great rebuilt the city, and erected a temple, which he dedicated to Cæsar. At a later period the city was included in the territory of Philip, 'tetrarch of Iturea' (Lu. 3.1), who enlarged it, and gave it the name Cæsarea, in honour of Tiberius Cæsar, adding Philippi (of Philip) to distinguish it from another city of the same name on the coast. The Greek name is now forgotten, and the ancient appellation has been revived under the Arabic form Banias. Its site is magnificent; on a wooded terrace on the south declivity of the ridge of Hermon, overlooking the fertile plain of Dan, and having beside it, gushing from a cliff, the upper fountain of the Jordan.—P.

REFLECTIONS.—The contemners of God's laws are ordinarily mad with zeal for the traditions and ceremonies of men.—A certain mark of detestable hypocrisy! All human inventions in religion invade the authority and pollute the worship of God, and mislead the hearts and corrupt the practices of men. May God root them out of his church and out of our heart, that we ourselves may not, on their account, be excluded from his kingdom! How certainly sinners shall be lost and false teachers push themselves and followers hastily into the depths of hell! Yea, none are farther from the light of God's truth than implicit votaries of profane ministers, and especially preachers who are puffed up with a conceit of their own wisdom. How dull, how slow of heart, to conceive the things of practical religion are even real saints! And, alas! what a sink, what a source of abominations, is the human heart! Dreadful and extensive is the defilement which it spreads abroad into the life! And infinitely important and necessary is the purification from it, by the Word, the Spirit, and the blood of Christ! Kind and honourable are those parents who bring their children to Jesus, and will not be denied his blessings. Graciously he travels to meet distressed sinners; and yet he often tries those most for whom he has the strongest affection, and for whom he intends the most speedy deliverances and most distinguished honours. Strong is the power of faith when he animates and strengthens it under trials. It breaks through every discouragement, and lays hold on the most indirect hints of mercy. And great is the honour it gains in thus honouring Christ. His repeated apparent disregards do but usher in the most advantageous fulfilment of all its requests. And since this world is so full of miseries and wants, let us bring all to Christ, that, to his own glory, he may heal the former and supply the latter.

ENTRANCE TO CÆSAREA PHILIPPI. [Matthew, xvi:13.]—Cæsarea Philippi has a population now, perhaps, of a thousand people. These are mostly Turks and Arabs, but there are a few Greeks and Druses. This city is upon the declivity of Mount Hermon. The region here is very fruitful, as well as the plain which lies before it. There is a dense growth of trees. The whole district which is so fertile extends for about two miles west of the town, and is thickly dotted with ruins, stone walls, pillars, capitals, and pedestals—these all, perhaps, coming down from the time of the Romans. On the northeastern side of the present village there is one of the streams which go to make the River Jordan. In the picture we see a part of this stream passing under the stone bridge we cross in going to Cæsarea Philippi.

20 Then* charged he his disciples, that they should tell no man[9] that he was Jesus the Christ.

21 ¶ From that time forth began Jesus [b]to show unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day.

22 Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke[1] him, saying, Be it far from thee,[2] Lord: this shall not be unto thee.

23 But he turned, and said unto Peter, [c]Get thee behind me, Satan;[3] thou art an offence[4] unto me; for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men.

24 ¶ Then[d] said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

25 For[e] whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.

26 For[9] what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

27 For[h] the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, [i]and then he shall reward every man according to his works.

28 Verily I say unto you, [j]There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom.

3 And,[d] behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias, talking with him.[2]

4 Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

5 While[e] he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and, behold, a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is [f]my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; [h]hear ye him.

6 And when the disciples heard it, [i]they fell on their face, and were sore afraid.

7 And Jesus came and [j]touched them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid.

2 There are some points worthy of special note in the persons present at the transfiguration. They were representative men. Moses represented the law; Elias the prophets; Peter, James, and John the apostles, and every section of the Christian church. The two first were typical: both fasted forty days; both had visions of glory in the holy mount; both were removed from earth in a way different from ordinary mortals. Here type and antitype appeared side by side, 'holding converse on that sublime event which had been the great central subject of the teaching of the lawgiver and the prophets, and which was also to be the sum and substance of apostolic teaching.'—P.

ness and obstinacy hinders your discerning, from the ancient prophecies fulfilled in me, and from my numerous miracles, that the Messiah is now come to set up his kingdom among you, and that your ruin is hastening apace for rejecting him! 18, 19. Upon this my person, and the truth which you have confessed concerning it, will I establish my gospel church, in all its ordinances, and believing members, as upon a sure, immovable, and everlasting foundation; and neither the policy nor force of devils or men, nor the power of death, can remove them from it, nor root my interest out of the world. And I will authorize you and your fellow-disciples, and other faithful ministers, in my name, to declare what practices are lawful and what not; and so to charge men with, or acquit them from, guilt in your preaching; and to inflict censures on the scandalous, and absolve the penitent. And whatever is done agreeably to my laws shall be ratified in heaven and confirmed in the last judgment. 20. He prohibited them from declaring that he was the Messiah, lest his enemies should be too early provoked to destroy him; lest his carnal admirers should tumultuously attempt to make him a king; and lest the Jews should beforehand be prejudiced against the testimony of the disciples. 23. In this, actuated by Satan, and serving his interest, you act the part of an adversary to me, from a regard to carnal honour, ease, or pleasure, attempting to rob me and my Father of our intended honour in the salvation of sinners. 24–26. And as I must be perfected by sufferings, every one that heartily resolves to be my disciple must deny his own carnal interests, wisdom, and will, and with faith and patience, and resignation to God's will, readily submit to whatever losses and persecution he may meet with in following my example and obeying my commands; for he that attempts to preserve his temporal enjoyments or life by sinful compliances and apostasy, shall thereby plunge himself into endless destruction; and he that, on account of his faith in or obedience to me, readily parts with his temporal life, shall obtain everlasting life in heaven as his gracious reward; for what could all the riches, honours, and pleasures which this world affords avail a man if, through his inordinate affection to them, he should lose the welfare, peace, and happiness of his immortal soul? or by what could he redeem his soul from the damnation of hell? 27, 28. For I, who am now attended with all the mean circumstances and sinless infirmities of human nature, will, in the last day, gloriously appear, and adjudge men to eternal life or death, according as their works shall manifest them righteous or wicked; as an earnest of which some of you present shall, before you die, see me appear gloriously transfigured, and powerfully erecting my gospel church in the abolition of ceremonial ordinances, and awfully destroying the city, temple, and nation of the Jews, for their obstinacy and unbelief.

Ver. 4. No sign. That is, such as they demanded; and which, after attributing his heavenly miracles to diabolical agency, they would, with equal infidel effrontery, have certainly rejected.—Note, Rational evidence every man has a right to demand; but he who rejects one rational evidence has no right to require more. C.

Ver. 18. Gates of hell. That councils were often held, and laws administered, in the gates of cities, is unquestionable. The phrase 'gates of hell' has therefore been generally interpreted of the malice and plots of Satan and his agents against our Lord and his church. It seems, however, more natural to understand by it literally the gates of death—of the grave—which, though they should apparently conquer and inclose our Lord first, and afterwards all his members, would yet be utterly unable to prevail against his resurrection, and afterwards that of his mystical body the church, Ep. 1. 22. C.

Ver. 19. I will give unto thee the keys. This was a personal promise to Peter, and not extending to the other apostles. He received keys, and not simply a key; because there were two gates to be opened—the Jewish and the Gentile. And the word of our Lord was literally fulfilled when Peter applied the key to the Jewish gate, Ac. 2. 14–41: and afterwards when he applied it to the Gentile gate, Ac. 10. 1–18; 11. 1–18; which opening being once completed, Peter's personal commission to that work necessarily ceased; see Re. 3. 7. The remaining part of the commission was common to Peter and the other apostles. See ch. 18. 18, where the address is not to Peter alone, but to all the apostles. C.

Ver. 28. The difficulty in this verse will be greatly removed by considering that our Lord does not say 'they will see the Son of man come,' but 'coming in his kingdom:' that is, beginning to 'reward every man according to his works;' which work commenced at the siege and destruction of Jerusalem, his first signal act of visible retribution, when some of his disciples were still alive to witness. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Wicked men of every sort heartily unite against Jesus, his interests, and people. And men who contemn sufficient evidence of divine truth generally insist upon more. The wisest with respect to temporal concerns are often quite blind and stupid with respect to what is plain, but spiritual. And it is just that Christ should quickly abandon men who remain obstinate in their unbelief. It is very absurd for the children of God to indulge carnal fears about the necessaries of this life, when his remarkable former interpositions have outdone every expectation or wish. Alas! what diversified and ignorant conceptions of Christ prevail with many church members! But happy are they who are divinely enlightened, united to, and built on him as their sure foundation. No plots, no attempts of hell or earth, can ruin them. All the powers, all the ordinances or officers, which he has granted to his church, concur to their establishment and happiness. His sufferings secured it, and his glories secure it. God lifts up his people and casts them down again. And never are they more ready to stumble than after they have been highly honoured by God. Left but a moment to themselves, they bend under the power of the devil. Maxims of carnal policy, and desires of temporal ease and honour, strongly tempt them to shun hardships in religion. But self-denial and obediential submission to crosses are principal articles in the following of Christ. If we hope to live and reign with him in his kingdom of glory, we must be ready to endure tribulation and death for his sake. To ruin our soul in denying our Redeemer is infinitely criminal and foolish; nor can created enjoyments ever balance or retrieve our loss. Let me then never barter my soul for a few trifles! for if it be once lost, it is lost—it is ruined—for ever! And even the glories of a Saviour will but secure and aggravate my eternal misery.

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 17. He here rebukes the father and his disciples for their weakness of faith, and the audience for their obstinate unbelief and readiness to reflect upon him in the weakness of his disciples. 20, 21. By a sincere faith in my power and promise, and through my assistance, ye shall be able to discharge and approve your office in doing things seemingly impossible. But such kind of faith must be exercised in the use of much fervent prayer and humiliation, without which you cannot expect to dislodge devils of so powerful and obstinate a kind as this is.

Ver. 1. Tabor, in the south of Galilee, has been regarded from an early period as the mount of the transfiguration. But it is more probable that it took place in the north of Galilee, as the narrative (comp. ch. 16. 13; 17. 20) evidently seems to refer to some mountain not far from Cæsarea Philippi, which lay towards the range of Hermon (comp. ch. 16. 13; 17. 20); and, after the transfiguration, it is said (Mar. 9. 30, 33) that 'they departed and passed

MOUNT HERMON—WHERE JESUS TOOK JAMES, PETER AND JOHN, AND WAS TRANSFIGURED BEFORE THEM. [Matt., xvii:1.]—Banias Castle is about two miles from Cæsarea Philippi. We are looking toward the north in the photograph, and the mountain we see is Hermon, where Jesus took James, Peter and John, and was transfigured before them. The castle seen has stood there from the days of the Phœnicians. Its situation is remarkable. From its broken walls one may look away across the plains of Lake Huleh to the hills of Galilee. The castle is nearly 1,000 feet long by about 300 feet wide, and the walls in some places are 100 feet high. This is in many respects the most remarkable castle in the world, and has been called the Gibraltar of Palestine. It is now totally abandoned.

8 And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man,[3] save Jesus only.

9 And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus [t]charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead.[4]

10 ¶ And his disciples asked him, saying, Why then say the scribes that [u]Elias must first come?

11 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias[v] truly shall first come, and restore[5] all things.

12 But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. [w]Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them.

13 Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.

14 ¶ And[x] when they were come to the multitude, there came to him a certain man, kneeling down to him, and saying,

15 Lord,[y] have mercy on my son; for he is lunatic, and sore vexed: for ofttimes he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water.

16 And [z]I brought him to thy disciples,[6] and they could not cure him.

17 Then Jesus answered and said, [a]O faithless and perverse[7] generation! how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him hither to me.

18 And[b] Jesus rebuked the devil, and he departed out of him: and the child was cured from that very hour.

19 Then[c] came the disciples to Jesus apart, and said, Why could not we cast him out?

20 And Jesus said unto them, [d]Because of your unbelief:[8] for verily I say unto you, [e]If ye have faith as a grain of mustard-seed,[9] ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove; and [f]nothing shall be impossible[1] unto you.

21 Howbeit, this kind goeth not out, but by [g]prayer and fasting.

22 ¶ And[a] while they abode in Galilee, Jesus said unto them, The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men;

23 And they shall kill him, and the third day he shall be raised again. And [b]they were exceeding sorry.

24 ¶ And when they were come to Capernaum, they that received tribute[2] money came to Peter, and said, Doth not your Master pay tribute?[3]

25 He saith, Yes. And when he was come into the house, Jesus prevented him, saying, What thinkest thou, Simon? of whom do the kings of the earth take custom or tribute? of their own children, or of strangers?

26 Peter saith unto him, Of strangers. Jesus saith unto him, Then are the children free.

27 Notwithstanding, lest we should [c]offend them, go thou to the sea, and cast an hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up; and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find a piece of money;[4] that take, and give unto them, for me and thee.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 Christ warneth his disciples to be humble and harmless: 7 to avoid offences, and not to despise the little ones; 15 teacheth how we are to deal with our brethren, when they offend us: 21 and how oft to forgive them: 23 which he setteth forth by a parable of a king, that took account of his servants, 32 and punished him who showed no mercy to his fellow.

AT the[a] same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?[1] through Galilee,' and then came to Capernaum, on the north of the Sea of Galilee. Had the mountain of transfiguration been in Galilee, would the evangelist have said 'they departed and passed through' it? Would he not have said 'they departed and went to Capernaum?' Besides, it is said, they went up to a mountain apart; whereas Tabor was certainly at the period an inhabited town and fortress, and therefore peculiarly unfitted for retirement. C.

Ver. 3. This appearance gives evidence the most decided to the most comfortable doctrine of recognition of Christian friends in a future state. For if Moses and Elias, who had been utter strangers to them, were yet made known to the disciples, why should the identity of any dear child of God be lost in the multitude of the redeemed? C.

Ver. 15. He is lunatic. That the moon exercises a powerful influence upon some nervous disorders is unquestionable. This effect is generally attributed to her attraction, which is seen to be so powerful as to influence the tides. It is, however, rather more probable that her influence upon disease is merely that of her brilliancy during the night, which irritates the nervous system, produces sleeplessness, and thereby aggravates the symptoms. The symptoms mentioned, Lu. 9. 39, indicate a disease resembling epilepsy: but both there and in ver. 18 the disease is declared to be under the control of a malignant spirit. At this infidels and sceptics may scoff: but what pretensions have they to know anything of the invisible world? When they can cure the disease with a word of rebuke, they may question the Scripture account of its origin. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How mixed was the lot of our Redeemer in this world! How quickly lifted up and cast down again! Now he shines in glory; anon he is plunged into sufferings and death. Now devils and distempers flee before his infinite power and grace; anon he is discredited, or ill understood, by weak disciples, and despised by faithless and perverse Jews. Possessed of all the fulness of Godhead—of all the riches of heaven and earth—he humbly, but miraculously, borrows his tribute-money from a fish, to avoid giving offence. But his resurrection from the dead wiped away all his reproach, and rendered illustrious his deepest debasement. If Moses and Elias have, in solemn manner, resigned to him all their powers and honours, let me hear him as my great, my only divine prophet! Let me rejoice in his dearness to God, and exalted dominion over men! Let me lift up my heart, and retire from the world, to hold fellowship with him, and prolong his visits to the utmost! Let no danger, no guilt, terrify my heart, while I enjoy the great Propitiation and Saviour! If the choicest saints forsake me, it is enough that Jesus remains to comfort me. Ravishing discoveries of him on earth are indeed but short-lived; and suffering is the certain fate of all his followers. I must return to depths of temptation, desertion, and trouble, in which my fellow-Christians have often laboriously struggled with stubborn devils and indwelling lusts. But if I or my friends experience their uncommon cruelty, let me, with fervour and humility, supplicate Jesus for relief. And let want or weakness of faith, which mar my duty and obstruct my mercies, be the grief, the burden, the detestation of my heart. And while through manifold tribulations I follow him to his kingdom and glory, let me carefully avoid whatever could prejudice others against him, his doctrines, or ways. It is better to waive my right and open my purse than dishonour my Redeemer.

CHAPTER XVIII. Ver. 1–6. His disciples having contended which of them should be preferred to the highest places of honour and trust in the temporal kingdom, which they imagined he would quickly set up, Jesus presented a little child before them, and told them that unless their minds were graciously weaned from such carnal ambition, and rendered truly humble, after the appearance of that child, they could neither be members nor honoured officers in his gospel kingdom, nor be admitted into the glories of the heavenly state; and that whoever of them affectionately regarded any of his humble, however mean, disciples, as such, should be esteemed as honouring himself; and that whoever should dishearten such weak but humble believers, and cause them to stumble into sin, should be exposed to the most certain and fearful punishments. 7–9. Dreadful hurt shall the world sustain through the corrupt opinions and practices by which Satan and his instruments will attempt to discourage, injure, and insnare weak believers; but most dreadful shall be the punishment of that man whose sinful and mischievous behaviour perverts and draws others into evil. If therefore anything, however useful or dear to you, tend to make you injure the cause of truth, peace, and holiness, to the grieving or tempting of my people, it would be much better for you to part with it, by the most self-denying and painful mortification, than, by indulging it, to hazard your own eternal damnation. 10–14. It is infinitely criminal and dangerous to contemn or discourage weak believers, whom the angels of God, on all occasions, watch over and minister unto; whom the Son of God came to save from the depths of ruin, and takes an especial pleasure in preserving and recovering when they have gone astray; and whom the Father, with all means of grace, seeks to make eternally happy. 15–17. If any of your fellow-professors of the true religion, by any sinful conduct, grieve or tempt you to sin, deal freely with him in a secret manner, in order to render him duly sensible of and penitent for it; and if he appear so, with joy renew your affection, and conceal his transgressions from others. If he appear obstinate, take one or two pru-

MILL NEAR THE WATERS OF MEROM. [Matt., 18.]—As Jesus returned from Cæsarea Philippi He would come down on the western shore of the Jordan, and thus would pass the scene we give in the above photograph. An old mill is always picturesque, and when we take this in connection with the water, the cattle standing in it, coupled with its great historic significance, the effect is greatly heightened. And then when, in addition to the elements which go to make a good picture, we remember that it is a spot our Savior witnessed and in the historic country where He lived, the interest is increased. In the region where this mill is situated the Bedouins live, and these cattle belong to them. The Bedouins are the wild children of nature, and are often kind and hospitable to strangers. Many of them are rich.

2 And Jesus called [b]a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them,

3 And said, Verily I say unto you, [c]Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

4 Whosoever[d] therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

5 And [e]whoso shall receive one such little child[2] in my name, receiveth me.

6 But[g] whoso shall offend[3] one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone[4] were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.

7 ¶ Woe[h] unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come:[5] but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!

8 Wherefore,[6] if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than, having two hands or two feet, to be cast into everlasting fire.

9 And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter[i] into life with one eye, rather than, having two [j]eyes, to be cast into hell-fire.

10 ¶ Take[k] heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven [l]their angels do always behold the [m]face of my Father which is in heaven.[7]

11 For[o] the Son of man is come to save that which was lost.

12 How[p] think ye? if a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray?

13 And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he [q]rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray.

14 Even [r]so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones[8] should perish.

15 ¶ Moreover, [s]if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother.

16 But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in [t]the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established.

17 And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it [u]unto the church:[9] but if he neglect to hear the church, [v]let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.[1]

18 Verily I say unto you, [w]Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven.

19 Again I say unto you, [x]That if two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.

20 For where two or three are gathered together in my name, [z]there am I[2] in the midst of them.

21 ¶ Then came Peter to him, and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I [a]forgive him? till seven times?

22 Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but, Until seventy times seven.[3]

23 Therefore is the kingdom of [4]heaven likened unto a [b]certain king, which would take account of his servants.

24 And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him [c]ten thousand talents:[5]

25 But forasmuch as he had not to pay, [d]his lord commanded him to be sold, and his [6]wife, and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made.

26 The servant therefore fell down, and worshipped him,[7] saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

27 Then the lord of that servant [e]was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

28 But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants which owed him an hundred pence;[8] and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest.

29 And his fellow-servant fell down at his feet, and besought him, saying, [f]Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

30 And he would not: but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt.

31 So when his fellow-servants saw what was done, they were very sorry,[9] and came and told unto their lord all that was done.

32 Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, [h]O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me:

* The doctrine of the ministry of angels is met with in various parts of Scripture. The abuses of the doctrine in some sections of the Christian church have had the tendency of leading other and purer sections altogether to ignore it. It is nevertheless true. Many incidental statements, both in Old and New Testament history, prove that the angels are 'ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation.' From this passage it is clear that children are included, and that in some way or other, for some purpose or other, certain angels are allotted as their especial attendants.—C.

9 This is an evident allusion to the constitution and discipline of the Jewish synagogue, as is testified by the Talmud. This ejection was specially applied in cases where the law made no direct provision—of which, amongst other cases, Maimonides gives the following:—'If any refuse to feed his children, they reprove, they shame, they urge him—they make proclamation against him in the synagogue:—' A. B is a cruel man, and will not feed his children—more cruel than the unclean birds, for they nourish their young ones.'—C.

1 Verses 18 and 19 show that there is a wider reference here than the Jewish synagogue. Our Lord looks forward to the Christian assemblies which were modelled upon the Jewish. The church—the regularly constituted assembly of believers was to be consulted in such cases, and its decision, solemnly and prayerfully come to, was to be considered final.—C.

dent Christians along with you, and deal earnestly and plainly with his conscience, to render him penitent. If he still continue obstinate in his sin, lay his case before that church judicatory to which he is immediately subjected; and if, notwithstanding all they can do to convince and reclaim him, he still continue obstinate, let him be solemnly cast out of the church by excommunication; and let all her members avoid all unnecessary fellowship with him, even in civil things, that he may be ashamed, and made to consider his conduct. 18-20. And that the censures may be confirmed and ratified by me and my Father, it is necessary that they be regularly passed in my name, and carried on with much fervent prayer. 23-35. The scope of this parable is to represent that nothing is more base, criminal, and dangerous than for such as profess to believe God's remission of all their high crimes against him to resent the petty injuries done to themselves; and that, though the revengefulness of believers shall not be punished with eternal damnation, it will expose them to fearful chastisements in this life.

AND it came to pass, [a]that when Jesus had finished these sayings, he departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judea beyond Jordan:[1]

2 And[b] great multitudes followed him; and he healed them there.

3 [c]¶ The[c] Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?

4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, [d]that he which made them at the beginning, made them male and female,

5 And said, [e]For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and [f]they twain shall be one flesh?

6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put [g]asunder.[3] east of the Jordan; which was not the case. Some have thought our Lord went from Galilee to Judea by a route which took him down the east side of the Jordan. tions of the mind by those parts of the body that were most affected by them: see Ro. 6. 13. 7. 23. Hence 'the bowels' denoted compassion; 'the heart,' love; 'an evil eye,' envy (Mat. 20. 15), covetousness, or other unlawful desire. 1 Jn. 2. 16. Hence 'the hand' and 'the foot' were used to signify all the powers of walking and of movement. 'To cut off,' or 'pluck out,' is, therefore, to 'mortify, through the Spirit,' those several 'deeds of the body,' that we may live to God. C.

Ver. 25. There does not appear in Scripture any instance of a man sold for payment of his debts. A man, however, might sell himself, Ex. 21. 2, 6. Le. 25. 47: and if a debtor could not pay, the creditor might appropriate his service, but could not sell him. The sale authorized (Ex. 22. 2) is not of a debtor, but a thief who could not pay the legal fine. Unless, therefore, the law imply that the right which a creditor acquired over the person and services of his debtor he might transfer to another, as he might his other properties, this case must be understood not as an illustration taken from the law of Moses, but from the practice of eastern monarchs, whose will is the only law. And this last supposition is rendered probable, if not confirmed, by our Lord's reference to 'the kings of the earth,' ch. 17. 25. C.

REFLECTIONS.—An eager ambition after worldly honour is very unlike the disciples and kingdom of Christ. And there is great need of a daily conversion to God from the errors of our way. What tender care Jesus takes of his saints, especially if weak and humble! His angels watch over, protect, and minister to them. At his Father's commandment he died for them, and seeks them out when they wander. He hears their prayers, and attends their societies. It is inexpressibly dangerous to grieve their hearts or to make them stumble into sin, or for them to indulge any darling corruption. But it is very base and criminal for Christians to pay so little regard to their God and their Saviour's rules for removing of scandals; and to be more careful to render an offender infamous than to bring him to repentance. Thrice happy are the churches where these rules are attended to without passion or prejudice, and with a readiness to forgive. Awful are church censures when regularly passed; and heinous is their guilt, and infinite their danger, who dare wilfully incur, or profanely despise, what is ratified in heaven. How inconceivably great and many are our offences against God! He keeps an exact account of them all, in every circumstance of them! And infinite is the mercy of a reprieve, and especially of a redemption, from their awful consequences in hell. But detestable both to God and men is a revengeful temper or conduct in a professed Christian; and such may expect great plagues and sorrow because of sin in eternity.

CHAPTER XIX. Ver. 17. Why do ye call me good in this emphatic manner when you conceive me to be a mere man? There is none good in and from himself but God alone. But if you desire to work righteousness in order to procure a title to eternal life, you must perfectly keep all the commandments of God. 21. To mark your perfect love to your neighbour, and that your affections are weaned from earthly enjoyments, go sell your whole estate, and give it to the poor in these distressing times, and come and follow me in my poverty and sufferings. 22–30. Ye who, through the regenerating influences of my Spirit, have attended and assisted me in my attempts to reform the nation, and introduce the gospel dispensation, shall, upon my ascension to heaven, be honoured with the distinguished effusion of the Holy Ghost, to render you leading officers in founding the gospel church; and in my appearing to destroy Jerusalem your predictions shall be fulfilled and your characters vindicated. In the latter days your Jewish brethren shall be converted by your doctrines; and in the last judgment ye shall be most honoured approvers of the sentence which I shall pass according to my gospel dispensed by you. And all they who conscientiously suffer losses in their temporal interests or enjoyments for my sake, shall in this life have their losses graciously compensated, to their unspeakable advantage, in inward contentment and divine consolations and hopes, if not in other external comforts, and in eternal glories in the future state. And yet, to manifest the glory of redeeming grace in all this, many Jews who are first called, and apparently more fitted to receive me, shall be rejected for their unbelief; while the Gentile strangers to the covenants of promise shall, through faith, be admitted to all the blessings of my kingdom of grace and glory. And even some Jews, more early converted, shall have less honour or usefulness in my church than some Gentiles who shall be afterwards influenced to believe.

Ver. 3. About the time of our Saviour there arose two famous schools of the law at Jerusalem—those of Hillel and Shammai. That of Shammai taught that divorce was unlawful except for adultery; while the more popular school of Hillel authorized divorce for any cause, even the mere will of the husband. C.

Ver. 8. Moses, in the law, did not command a dissatisfied husband to divorce and put away a wife, as the Pharisees insinuate, but merely suffered it to be done, saying, 'let him'—not as an authoritative sanction and indulgence to caprice or passion, neither as an approval of the act or pardon of the sin, but as a mere temporary reprieve or stay of judgment, that happily might eventuate, through grace, in softening the hardened heart. C.

Ver. 9. As Moses (De. 24. 1) suffered the dissatisfied husband to put away the wife, so (De. 24. 2) he suffered the divorced wife to marry again, saying, 'she may.' Our Lord, however, having denied expressly the existence of any command in favour of the husband, equally denies it in favour of the wife, and pronounces both equally guilty in the sight of God: while to the wife is extended neither approval of the act nor pardon of the sin, but the mere temporary reprieve and stay of judgment previously conceded to the hard-hearted husband. C.

Ver. 17. Why callest thou me good? You call me 'Master,' thereby showing you believe me a mere man. Why then call me good, a title that legitimately belongs to God alone? If, therefore, I be really good, I must be 'God manifest in the flesh.' But Jesus calls himself 'good,' Jn. 10. 14, therefore, by his own argument, he must be God. C.

Ver. 21. If thou wilt be perfect in character, renounce the world which you love, and your legal righteousness wherein you trust, and 'follow me' 'the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.' C.

Ver. 24. Some, for camel, read cable, the Greek words differing but in one letter; but this change is without any sufficient authority. The meaning is simply this: The matter is naturally impossible while the camel lives. To effect it by artificial means were the camel dead would not, to the chemist, be a task of difficulty. Even so while the rich man lives in the love of the world his entrance into the kingdom of heaven is a natural impossibility.

him, Good Master, [a]what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?

17 And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? [b]there is none good but one, that is, God: [c]but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.

18 He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou[d] shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness;

19 Honour thy father and thy mother; and, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

20 The young man saith unto him, [e]All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet?[1]

21 Jesus said unto him, [f]If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and [g]follow me.

22 But when the young man heard that saying, [h]he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions.

23 ¶ Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, [i]That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.

24 And again I say unto you, [k]It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

25 When his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved?

26 But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, With[l] men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible.[2]

By conformity to the outward requirements of the law the young man had almost succeeded in deceiving himself: yet conscience was not satisfied. 2 The grand fundamental doctrine, salvation by grace, is here declared by our Lord. By man's power the corrupt heart cannot be renewed, the worldly disposition cannot be overcome, the dead soul cannot be revived; 'but with God all things are possible;' 'You hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins.'—P.

* This verse contains a solemn caution. The disciples had given up much and sacrificed much for Christ; yet they must not be over confident. Presumption is to be carefully avoided. Perhaps Judas was in our Lord's mind. Great privileges entail great responsibilities. Except therefore the disciples should fully use their privileges, though the first to follow Christ, they might be last in receiving their reward.—P.

27 ¶ Then[e] answered Peter, and said unto him, Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee: what shall we have therefore?

28 And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me [g]in the regeneration, when the Son of man [h]shall sit in the throne of his glory, [i]ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

29 And[j] every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Christ, by the similitude of the labourers in the vineyard, showeth that God is debtor unto no man: 17 foretelleth his passion: 20 by answering the mother of Zebedee's children teacheth his disciples to be lowly: 29 and giveth two blind men their sight.

FOR the[a] kingdom of heaven is like unto [b]a man that is an householder, which went out [c]early in the morning to hire [d]labourers into his vineyard.

2 And when [e]he had agreed with the labourers for a penny[1] a day, he sent them into his vineyard.

3 And he went out about the third [2]hour, and saw others standing idle[3] in the marketplace,

4 And said unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard, and [f]whatsoever is right, I will give you. And they went their way.

5 Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour,[4] and did likewise.

But as soon as 'by the cross of Christ he is crucified (and thereby dead) to the world,' his entrance into that kingdom is not only possible but secure. See ver. 26, C.

Ver. 28. A change in the punctuation, which the original warrants, and the sense seems to demand, would render the passage thus: 'Ye who have followed me, in the regeneration (the time of final restoration to glory) when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit on twelve thrones,' &c. That some eminent expositors understand by 'the regeneration' the present gospel state, is not to be forgotten; but that it refers to a state still future seems certain from the fact that, in 'the regeneration' described, the apostles are, in some sense, to be changed from witnesses to judges, and, as such, to sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes—a circumstance that has never been hitherto fulfilled, and for the accomplishment of which we must therefore look to futurity. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Indefatigable was the gracious Redeemer in doing good wherever he came; prudent in avoiding the snares of his malicious enemies; careful to honour, regulate, and perpetuate every divine institution which related to the raising up of a holy seed in his church; and delighted with the early and earnest dedication of children to himself. It is cruel, then, to deprive young subjects of his kingdom of the seal of his covenant; and criminal to pretend that his incarnation, labours, and glory abridge the privileges of his people. Very important and necessary is a deep concern about the true way to everlasting life; nor can it be obtained but by a perfect righteousness, answerable to the whole law of God; and where can this be found but in Christ? Alas! that multitudes should hope to find it in their own works! and yet those who highly extol and heartily trust in their good works very seldom remarkably abound in them. And their defect quickly appears if they be tried in what lies opposite to their carnal inclinations and interests. The riches and love of this world are most powerful hinderances to our care about or progress towards heaven; and only almighty grace can conquer the heart and remove the difficulty.—In faithfully following Christ, we must expect manifold losses and troubles in this world. But if we undergo them from love to him, his truths and ways, his blessings here and glory hereafter will inexpressibly more than compensate. And whether we be first or last in time or in dignity, all must be regulated by the exceeding riches of his grace.

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 1-16. The vineyard here is the church, formed by infinite wisdom, power, and grace, from the world that lieth in wickedness, and furnished with divine oracles, ordinances, and officers; hedged about by God's special protection, government, and discipline, and cultivated by his Spirit, ministers, and people. The 3d, 6th, 9th, and 11th hours, may represent the patriarchal, Mosaic, apostolic, and millennial periods of the church; or the periods of human life, childhood, youth, middle, and old age, in which different persons are called and converted to Christ, that they may serve him in his church. But as the kingdom of heaven chiefly denotes the gospel church, the 3d, 6th, and 9th hours chiefly denote those periods in which the Jews were called and converted by the ministry of John and Christ, or of his apostles for some years after his ascension. The 11th hour may denote that period in which the Gentiles have, or shall be, converted to Christ by the apostles and other gospel ministers, after they had been for many ages abandoned to idolatries, and destitute of the ordinances and calls of the gospel. The penny of reward denotes all the privileges of the gospel church, and all the blessings of grace and glory. At God's giving these to the Gentiles equally as to themselves, who had been long the peculiar people of God, and who had long served him in burdensome ceremonies, the Jews, and even the real converts among them, exceedingly murmured—not considering that all the favours of God spring entirely from his own free grace; and that many are outwardly called by the ministry of the gospel, and made members of the visible church, who fall short, through their self-conceit and unbelief, while few are chosen of God to eternal life, because few continue faithful to the end. 21-23. Let my sons, who are now thy constant favourites, be next in honour and authority to thyself in that kingdom which thou art about to erect. Jesus replied that they appeared quite ignorant of the nature and honours of his kingdom, and that they must expect terrible persecutions, reproaches, and distresses, as he himself had or should suffer; but that all the honours of his kingdom would be conferred by him upon those who were faithful in life and work. 24-28. The other ten apostles being filled with envy and resentment against the two brothers for attempting to procure a pre-eminence above themselves, Jesus meekly reproved them altogether, and told them that a carnal and heathenish ambition for lordly dominion over others was very contrary to the nature and design of his spiritual kingdom; and that their only proper way to become truly great and honourable in his church was to be most humble, self-denied, and active in doing even the meanest services for the benefit of others; even as he himself, notwithstanding his infinite glory, had come into this world to submit to the meanest services, and even an ignominious death, for the redemption of the race of poor sinners.

Ver. 20. The mother of Zebedee's children. Her name was Salome, as appears from Mat. 27.56; comp. with Mar. 15.40. She is not called Zebedee's wife; he was therefore most probably dead. Her sons were James and John, Mar. 10.35. She presents the character of an ambitious but affectionate mother, who seems to have trained her sons to her own high aspirings: for they evidently join with her (ver. 22) and assert their ability to fulfil the conditions of their elevation, though as yet totally ignorant of their nature, and, as their own experience demonstrated (Mat. 26.56), sadly unfitted for the task.—Note, Men of ardent and aspiring minds, when subdued by grace, do not altogether lose

FOUNTAIN OF THE APOSTLES—WHERE CHRIST PASSED, RESTED AND DRANK. [Matt., xx:17.]—"And Jesus going up to Jerusalem took the twelve disciples apart in the way and said to them, Behold we go up to Jerusalem." When Jesus uttered these words he was on His way to Jerusalem. He was beyond the Jordan and was to come through Jericho. The Fountain of the Apostles is between Jericho and Jerusalem, and about four miles from the Holy City. It is one of the places that we may be absolutely sure Jesus passed, for the road from Jerusalem to Jericho has not changed, and this fountain is so necessary as a place to get water in the Judean mountains that we may know that Christ not only passed here, but often rested and drank water here. Here the sheik furnishes a guide to conduct travelers to Jericho.

6 And about the eleventh hour[5] he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, [h]Why stand ye here all the day idle?

7 They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, [i]Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.

8 So when [j]even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first.

9 And when they came that were hired about the [k]eleventh hour, they received every man a penny.

10 But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more: and they likewise received every man a penny.

11 And when they had received it, they [l]murmured[6] against the goodman of the house,

12 Saying, These last [7]have wrought but one hour,[8] and thou hast made them equal unto us, [m]which have borne the burden and heat of the day.

13 But he answered one of them, and said, Friend,[9] I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny?

14 Take that thine is, and [n]go thy way: I will give unto this last even as unto thee.

15 Is[o] it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? [p]Is thine eye evil, because I am good?[1]

16 So[q] the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called, but few chosen.[2]

17 ¶ And[r] Jesus going up to Jerusalem, [s]took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,

18 Behold, [t]we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death,

19 And shall [u]deliver him to the Gentiles, to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again.

20 ¶ Then[w] came to him the mother[3] of Zebedee's children, with her sons, worshipping him, and desiring a certain thing of him.

21 And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left,[4] in[y] thy kingdom.

22 But Jesus answered and said, [z]Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink [a]of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, [b]We are able.

23 And he saith unto them, [c]Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with; but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them [d]for whom it is prepared of my Father.[5]

24 And[e] when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren.

25 But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them.

26 But[g] it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister;[6]

27 And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant:

28 Even[h] as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give his life a ransom[7] for many.[8]

29 ¶ And[i] as they departed[9] from Jericho, a great multitude followed him.

30 And, behold, [j]two blind men, sitting by the way-side, when they heard that Jesus passed by, cried out, saying, Have mercy on us, [k]O Lord, thou Son of David!

31 And[l] the multitude rebuked them, because they should hold their peace: but they cried the more, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David!

32 And Jesus stood still, and called them, and said, What [m]will ye that I shall do unto you?

33 They say unto him, Lord, that our eyes may be opened.

34 So [o]Jesus had compassion on them, [p]and touched their eyes: and immediately their eyes received sight, and they followed him.

their original character, but have their desires and energies directed to new and better objects. Hence these ambitious sons of an ambitious mother became faithful apostles and glorious martyrs. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Free and constant is the redeeming grace of God; the most unlikely are often converted because God in his mercy seeks to save all. And the latest called and converted often attain the highest privileges of grace and glory; while others, who seemed to stand fair for them, fall short. But all have the same opportunity, it is a gift of free grace! Gospel hearers have great need to take heed, and to strive to enter in at the strait gate, when the conditions are such that all must strive who enter in! While I enjoy my life, and have the offers of salvation, let me flee to the once suffering but now exalted Redeemer for relief! In old age I may perhaps be converted; but after death it is impossible—all is then lost for ever! Alas! that the followers of the lowly and suffering Jesus should so indulge themselves in carnal imaginations and worldly ambition; and that clergymen, by their pride, should so plague that church which he hath secured by his blood, and taught humility by his example! Let me vie with others in humility, holiness, and usefulness, and in patient suffering, in hopes of a crown of life. Deeply sensible of my maladies, let me always apply to Jesus Christ for relief. Confident faith, deep humility, and fervent prayer never return from him without a gracious answer. And the more he does for me, let me cleave the closer to his Word, his Spirit, his person, his example, his ordinances, and cause.

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 13. By their merchandise in the temple they robbed God of his due honour, and at the same time they defrauded their neighbours in their dealings with them. 19–22. This tree represents the Jews, who made great professions of their regard to God, and readiness to receive the Messiah, but nevertheless brought forth no good fruits of faith or holiness; wherefore our Redeemer, by his curse, quickly ejected them from their church state, and rendered them fearfully miserable. 28–32. The first of these sons represents the notorious sinners of the Gentiles, who, after long professed rebellion against God, their Creator and Preserver, did at last repent and turn to the Lord by the gospel: and the second represents the Jews, who, notwithstanding their high professions of readiness to serve God, did not believe in his Son, nor bring forth good works. 33–41, 43. This vineyard denotes the church state given to the Jews, furnished with God's oracles, ordinances, protection, and privileges. After withdrawing from them the cloudy pillar and other miraculous tokens of his presence, he sent his prophets to remind them of their duty, direct them

VIEW OF JERICHO—WHERE OUR SAVIOR HEALED THE TWO BLIND MEN. [Matt., xx:30.]—No place on earth has had more changes than Jericho. Here the Israelites first came under Joshua when they crossed the Jordan from their wanderings. Under Pompey Jericho was destroyed. At the time of Herod and Cleopatra it was rebuilt as a magnificent city of palaces, castles and theaters. It was again destroyed by Vespasian, and subsequently rebuilt as a garrison city for the tenth legion. Here resided the Byzantine bishops, and here were churches and convents under the reign of the Emperor Justinian. Here the Christian Crusaders came, causing the gardens to bloom and again become fertile. Here our Savior healed the two blind men that were sitting by the way as He passed, and here John the Baptist lived.

THE GOLDEN GATE—THROUGH WHICH OUR SAVIOR PASSED. [Matt., xxi:1.]—The Golden Gate is in the eastern wall of Jerusalem. It looks toward the Mount of Olives. In the first verse of the 21st chapter of Matthew, we have an account of the triumphant entry of our Savior from the Mount of Olives through this gate. It is now closed up. The Mahometans have a tradition to the effect that foreigners will some day capture Jerusalem and enter the city through this gate. Two columns of this gate are said by Moslems to have been brought on her shoulders by the Queen of Sheba as a present to King Solomon. Through this gate the Moslems think the good at the last day will pass on their way to the houris of Paradise after having safely crossed the Kedron on that bridge which is sharper than the sharpest sword.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Christ rideth into Jerusalem upon an ass, 12 driveth the buyers and sellers out of the temple, 17 curseth the fig-tree, 23 putteth to silence the priests and elders, 28 and rebuketh them by the similitude of the two sons, 33 and the husbandmen, who slew such as were sent unto them.

AND when[a] they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage,[1] unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples,

2 Saying unto them, Go into the village over against you,[2] and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me.

3 And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, [b]The Lord hath need of them;[3] and straightway he will send them.

4 All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying,

5 Tell[c] ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass.[4]

6 And[d] the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them,

7 And brought the ass, and the colt, [e]and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon.[5]

8 And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strawed them in the way.

9 And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, [g]cried, saying, Hosanna to the Son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: [h]Hosanna in the highest!

10 And[i] when he was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this?

11 And the multitude said, This is [j]Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee.

12 ¶ And Jesus went into the temple of God, and [k]cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves;

13 And said unto them, It is written, [l]My house shall be called the house of prayer; [m]but ye have made it a den of thieves.[6]

14 And[o] the blind and the lame came to him in the temple; and he healed them.

15 ¶ And[p] when the chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna[7] to the Son of David;[8] they were sore displeased,

16 And said unto him, Hearest thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto them, Yea; have ye never read, [q]Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?[9]

17 ¶ And[r] he left them, and went out of the city into Bethany; and he lodged there.

18 Now in the morning as he returned into the city, he hungered.

19 And[s] when he saw a fig-tree[1] in the [2]way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but [t]leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig-tree [u]withered away.[3]

20 And when the disciples saw it, they marvelled, saying, [v]How soon is the fig-tree withered away!

21 Jesus answered and said unto them, Verily I say unto you, [w]If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig-tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea, it shall be done.

22 And[y] all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive.

23 ¶ And[z] when he was come into the temple, [a]the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said, [b]By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority?

24 And[c] Jesus answered and said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I in likewise will tell you by what authority I do these things.

25 The[d] baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men? And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him?

26 But if we shall say, Of men; we fear the people; [f]for all hold John as a prophet.

27 And they answered Jesus, and said, [g]We cannot tell. And he said unto them, [h]Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

28 ¶ But what think ye? [i]A certain man had two sons; and he came to the first, and said, Son, go work to-day in my vineyard.

1 The narratives of the evangelists when carefully examined show that Bethphage and Bethany must have stood close together: in fact, it seems probable that they were names for different quarters of the same village: the one called Bethany, 'house of dates,' from its palm-trees, the other Bethphage, 'house of figs,' from its fig orchards. 2 Bethany is about a mile and a half from Jerusalem, on the main road round the shoulder of Olivet. Soon after leaving the village, the road reaches the ravine, on the brow of the opposite bank, is the site of a very ancient village—this is doubtless the place here referred to where the ass was found.—P.

It is not unusual in the East to place the loose flowing robe generally worn by men, on the back of an animal, and to use it as a saddle. 3 Is this miracle is embodied a solemn lesson. The disciples had just witnessed the sad effects of a cold and heartless formalism. While men frequented the temple of God, and professed to perform sacred duties there, they made those duties the curtain of fraud. Our Lord drove the dishonest dealers out of the temple. He wished to show that such acts could not be tolerated; and to impress more deeply the same solemn lesson on the minds of the disciples and of mankind, he cursed the fig-tree which had leaves but no fruit. in it, and encourage them to it; but all of these they persecuted and murdered one after another. After a long interval he sent his Son, as the last expedient for rendering them penitent and fruitful. But when they saw him speaking and acting with divine power and authority, and extolled by the people as the Messiah, their rulers in church and state resolved to establish their own authority by excommunicating, persecuting, and murdering him: on account of which God, about forty years after his death, deprived them of all their privileges in church and state, and by sword, famine, pestilence, and captivity, rendered them dreadfully miserable; and admitted the Gentiles into the gospel church in their stead. 42, 44. Notwithstanding all the abuse and persecution which Christ suffered from the Jewish rulers till he was put to death upon the cross, yet was he exalted to glory, and made Head over all things to his church. They who, through ignorance and prejudice, undervalued him in his state of humiliation, endangered their souls; but they who obstinately reject him in his exalted state after the wonderful effusion of the Spirit, draw down upon themselves fearful and inevitable misery.

Ver. 12. Jesus went into the temple. Not into the 'house of the Lord'—for in that case the word employed would have been ναός—but into some of the courts, which, together, were called ἱερόν and most probably the outer, called the court of the Gentiles.—All that sold and bought—oil, flour, wine, frankincense, animals, &c., for sacrifice. Money-changers, who furnished Jewish money for the Roman and other heathen coins, which, being impressed with the images of emperors and idols, could not be admitted into the treasury of the temple—or occasionally furnished local coin for such foreign money as was not current at Jerusalem.—Doves, the offerings which the poor were authorized to offer in place of more expensive sacrifices. C.

Ver. 22. Believing in the Word of God, which has instructed you to ask them—in the truth of God, which has promised to grant them—and in the power of God, which is able to accomplish them. 'ye shall receive.' The promise cannot be strained to any other sense—especially to any sense that puts any presumptuous confidence of men into the place of the authority and promise of God. C.

Ver. 27. Our Lord was not evading the question, but demonstrating, out of their own mouths, how unworthy his questioners were of an answer—unworthy in any case upon their own showing. For they were either so unintelligent that they could not judge of John's credentials, or so dishonest that they would not declare their conviction. C.

Ver. 28. Two sons. By comparing ver. 28, 31, and 45, it will be evident that the 'two sons' represent two classes—the first, the 'publicans and harlots,' who, in their youth, had refused to

THE MOSQUE OF OMAR, JERUSALEM. [MATT., xxi:28.]—The square upon which the Mosque of Omar stands contains thirty-five acres. Here stood the court, the palaces and the temple of Solomon, the temporary and inferior temple built by Nehemiah, and the gorgeous and magnificent temple built by Herod. The rock, sixty feet one way and fifty feet the other, over which rises the dome of the Mosque of Omar, is the most interesting spot in the world. Here Melchizedek offered sacrifice; here Abraham was about to offer Isaac; here Jacob saw the ladder leading up to heaven; here was the threshing floor of Araunah, the Jebusite; here was the site of an "Altar for the burnt offering of Israel," upon which David sacrificed, and here was the altar of the temples of Solomon, Zerubbabel and Herod.

29 He[j] answered and said, I will not; [k]but afterward he repented, and went.

30 And [l]he came to the second, and said likewise. And he answered and said, I go, sir; and went not.

31 Whether of them twain did the will of his father? [m]They say unto him, The first. Jesus saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, [n]That the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you.

32 For [o]John came unto you in the way of righteousness,[4] and ye believed him not; but the publicans and the harlots believed him: and ye,[5] when ye had seen it, repented not afterward,[5] that ye might believe him.

33 ¶ Hear another parable: There was a certain householder, [r]which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a winepress in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen,[r] and went into a far country:

34 And when the time of the fruit drew near, he [s]sent his servants to the husbandmen, that[s] they might receive the fruits[6] of it.

35 And[t] the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one,[7] and killed another, and stoned another.

36 Again, he sent other servants more[8] than the first: and they did unto them likewise.

37 But, last of all, he [u]sent unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son.

38 But[v] when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir: come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance.

39 And [w]they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him.

40 When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen?

41 They say unto him, [x]He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and [y]will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons.

42 Jesus saith unto them, [z]Did ye never read in the scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is [a]marvellous in our eyes?[9]

43 Therefore say I unto you, [b]The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a [9]nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

44 And[h] whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

45 And when the chief priests and Pharisees had heard his parables, [c]they perceived that he spake of them.

46 But when they sought to lay hands on him, they [d]feared the multitude, because they [k]took him for a prophet.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 The parable of the marriage of the king's son. 9 The vocation of the Gentiles. 12 The punishment of him that wanted the wedding-garment. 15 Tribute ought to be paid to Cæsar. 23 Christ confuteth the Sadducees, who questioned him touching the resurrection: 34 answereth the lawyer, which is the first and great commandment: 41 and proposeth to the Pharisees a knotty question concerning Christ.

AND Jesus answered [a]and spake unto them again by parables, and said,

2 The[b] kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son,

3 And sent forth [c]his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding: and they would not come.

4 Again, he sent forth [d]other servants, saying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner; my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage.

5 But[e] they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise:

6 And[g] the remnant took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them.[1]

7 But[h] when the king heard thereof, he was wroth: and he sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city.

8 Then saith he to his servants, The wedding

[1] Two classes are represented; 1 Those who simply neglected the truth. They were occupied with the world. They preferred business to religion. Whatever their occupations were, whether merchants, politicians, soldiers, literary men—they deemed them more important than the service of God. 2 Those who opposed the truth. The truth did not accord with their prejudices; it condemned their vices; habits it tended to overthrow their tyranny; they therefore met it as open enemies, and tried to crush it by open force. The sequel shows the final triumph of God's cause in spite of neglect on the one hand, and persecution on the other.—C.

serve God—but who repented at the preaching of John, and believed in our Lord for salvation. The second, the 'chief priests and elders,' ver. 23, who, from their youth, had been professors of religion, but who, 'counting themselves righteous,' rejected 'the righteousness of God,' and denied and crucified the Lord of life and glory. C.

Ver. 44. Whosoever shall fall upon this stone (as the Jews stumbled at the humiliated condition of Christ, and so rejected him; shall be broken rather, bruised: but on whomsoever it shall fall (when the long-suffering of God comes to an end, and he goes terribly to judgment), it will grind him to powder rather, 'he shall be driven away as chaff from a winnowing-fan.' See Ps. 1. 4. All which things were fulfilled on the Jewish nation, who were first bruised in their own land, then utterly dispersed throughout the earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Let me at once behold in Jesus the omniscient, the all-commanding, the temple-purifying, the miracle-working God; and the weak man, pinched with poverty and hunger! Yea, the true Messiah riding on an ass, attended with shouts of salvation in order to die for the people! But what ignorant and diversified views men have of him! And how is the church of God often corrupted, and her ordinances profaned, while they, who ought to reform others, hate to be reformed, or to hear of others more devout than themselves, or to see God perform his promises to, and glorify his Son! Yea, careless clergymen are apt to oppose every faithful administration of the truth, unless shame or fear restrain them. And the most ignorant and notorious sinners are frequently turned to the Lord and his ways, when forward professors draw back unto their everlasting perdition. But if God bestow his means of salvation upon men, he will demand their careful improvement of them. And if his ministers be contemned and persecuted, he will uncharch the persecutors at last, and put others in their room. Yea, let men trample the Redeemer under foot as they may, God will cause him to be highly exalted, and made the Connector and glory of his church. If men will not bow to the outstretched sceptre of his grace, they must, self-condemned, fearfully perish under the weight of his wrath. And awful is the prospect when faithful reproofs do but exasperate the reproved: and when God must make the awe of inferiors restrain the rage of persecuting superiors.

CHAPTER XXII. Ver. 1-14. The marriage-feast denotes the gospel dispensation, in which Jesus Christ, as the Bridegroom of souls, and all the rich fulness of God in him, are offered by God to sinful men. The servants are John Baptist, Christ, and his apostles and ministers, who invite and encourage men to receive the same. All things were ready when Christ had suffered, risen again, and ascended to glory, and the Holy Ghost was poured out in a plentiful and miraculous manner. The refusers and contemners of the feast, and murderers of the messengers, are the Jews, who not only rejected the offers of the gospel, but persecuted and murdered the preachers of it; and on that account their cities and temple were soon afterwards burned, themselves murdered in multitudes, their land desolated, and their constitution, in both church and state, miserably broken to pieces. Those called from the highways are the sinful Gentiles of every rank and condition, or greater and lesser sinners, who, by the preaching of the gospel, are invited and converted to Christ and his church. The man without the wedding-garment denotes hypocritical professors, who take their place as members of the church without receiving Christ and his righteousness, or being renewed in holiness after his image; and whose end will be redoubled and everlasting destruction. 20, 21. Since, by your using the Roman em-is ready, but [t]they which were bidden were not worthy.

9 Go[j] ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage.

10 So[k] those servants went out into the highways, and gathered together all, as many as they found, both bad and good: and the wedding was furnished with guests.

11 And when the king [u]came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a[n] wedding-garment:

12 And he saith unto him, [2]Friend, [v]how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment? And he was [w]speechless.

13 Then said the king to the servants, [x]Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

14 For[r] many are called, but few are chosen.[3]

15 ¶ Then[s] went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk.

16 And they sent out unto him their disciples, with the [t]Herodians, saying, [u]Master, we know that thou art true, and [v]teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man; for thou regardest not the person of men.

17 Tell[z] us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not?

18 But [w]Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why [x]tempt ye me, ye hypocrites?[4]

19 Show me the tribute-money. And they brought unto him a penny.[5]

20 And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription?[6]

21 They say unto him, Cæsar's. Then saith he unto them, [a]Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, [b]and unto God the things that are God's.

22 When they had heard these words, they marvelled,[c] and left him, and went their way.

23 ¶ The[d] same day came to him the Sadducees, which say that there is no resurrection, and asked him,

24 Saying, Master, [e]Moses said, If a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

25 Now there were with us seven brethren: and the first, when he had married a wife, deceased, and, having no issue, left his wife unto his brother:

26 Likewise the second also, and the third, unto the seventh.

27 And last of all the woman died also.

28 Therefore, in the resurrection, whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her.

29 Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, [g]not knowing the scriptures, [h]nor the power of God.

30 For [i]in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven.

31 But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying,

32 I[j] am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.

33 And [k]when the multitude heard this, they were astonished at his doctrine.

34 ¶ But[l] when the Pharisees had heard that he had put the Sadducees to silence, they were gathered together.

35 Then one of them, which was a lawyer, asked him a question, tempting him, and saying, 36 Master,[m] which is the great commandment in the law?

37 Jesus said unto him, [n]Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart,[7] and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

38 This is the first and great commandment.

39 And the second is like unto it, [o]Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

40 On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.[8]

41 ¶ While[q] the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them,

42 Saying, What think ye of Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, [r]The son of David.

43 He saith unto them, How then doth David [s]in spirit[9] call him Lord, saying, peror's money, ye have acknowledged yourselves his subjects, therefore ye ought, in civil concerns, to return him the tribute of that which, by the authority and protection of his government, ye receive from him; as well as in religious concerns to render unto God the homage and acknowledgments which are due to him as Lord of all. 31, 32. God's calling himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, after they had been long dead, plainly imported that they continued still the sons of God, waiting for the redemption of their bodies; and that their bodies, which still remained in covenant with him, as well as their souls, could not be suffered always to abide in a state of death. 40. These two commandments include the substance of the whole moral law, which is fundamental to all true religion. They include the whole natural law, which was originally written in the heart of man; the obligation of which can never be dissolved, and which all the revelations of God are founded on, and designed to enforce. 46. The scribes and Pharisees were either ignorant or unwilling to acknowledge that the Messiah, who, in his human nature, was a descendant of David, in his divine nature was God over all.

44 The[t] LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool?

45 If David then call him Lord, how is he his son?[1]

The king, according to an eastern custom, furnished each guest with a garment, and the neglect or refusal of this garment was an insult to the munificent donor.—Note. This 'wedding-garment' has been represented by some as 'the justifying righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ;' by others, as 'the believer's robe of personal righteousness;' while others 'see no reason for excluding either.' Now that it must include 'the righteousness of God, which is unto and upon all them that believe,' is certain; but before it can be understood of the personal righteousness of any believer, it is necessary to inquire what 'personal righteousness,' as distinct from 'the righteousness of God,' can possibly mean. In truth, it has neither meaning nor existence. The only righteousness of a believer is the righteousness of God. The personal righteousness of a sinner, like the personal riches of a pauper, is an absolute contradiction in terms.—C.

Ver. 3. 'The carnal mind,' in its 'enmity against God,' is here represented (ver. 3, 5, 6) under four aspects:—1. They would not—the human will being set up against the will of God. 2. In levity and neglect, they made light of it, ver. 5. 3. In preference of earthly to heavenly things, ver. 5, they went 'one to his farm,' &c. 4. In rebellious persecution of God's servants, ver. 6. All which things were not only exemplified by the Jews, but have continued among the Gentiles till this day. C.

Ver. 16. The Herodians were certain political partisans of Herod, to whom, as an Idumean and Sadducee, the Pharisees were directly opposed. But in opposition to Christ these extremes are made to coalesce.—Note. Thus in these very days Popery and infidelity—implicit faith and no faith—are seen to unite in determined opposition to evangelical truth! C.

Ver. 28. The object of the Sadducees is to show the absurdity of a future state, by producing what they conceive an insuperable difficulty—a difficulty which our Lord solves with a readiness that humbles their pride of intellect, though it does not soften the hardness of their heart. C.

Ver. 32. Our Lord's argument is this: You admit the being of a God—a living God—the God of living men. But God called himself the God of Abraham, &c., long after Abraham's body was dead, therefore the soul of Abraham must have been still alive, since the living God continues to acknowledge him for his servant and friend. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Infinite is the mercy of God in making a new covenant and New Testament dispensation of his grace for sinners of mankind; and that his invitations to partake of it are so unlimited, earnest, and so often repeated! Fearful then is their guilt, and dreadful their punishment, who decline his offers, persecute his ministers, or presume to be Christians without the saving power of Jesus and his grace 46 And[u] no man was able to answer him a word; neither durst any man, from that day forth, ask him any more questions.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Christ exhorteth the people to follow the good doctrine, not the evil examples, of the scribes and Pharisees. 5 His disciples must beware of their ambition. 13 He denounceth divers woes against their hypocrisy and blindness: 34 and prophesieth the destruction of Jerusalem.

THEN spake Jesus to the multitude, and to his disciples,

2 Saying, [1]The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat:[2]

3 All[a] therefore whatsoever they bid you[3] observe, that observe and do; [b]but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not.

4 For[4] they bind heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers.

5 But[c] all their works they do for to be seen of men: [d]they make broad their phylacteries,[5] and enlarge the borders of their garments,

6 And[e] love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues,

7 And greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi.[6]

8 But[g] be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren.

9 And call no man your father[7] upon the earth: [h]for one is your Father, which is in heaven.

10 Neither be ye called masters:[8] for one is your Master, even Christ.

11 But[i] he that is greatest among you, shall be your servant.

12 And[j] whosoever shall exalt himself, shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself, shall be exalted.

13 ¶ But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for [k]ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.

14 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses,[1] and for a pretence make long prayer:[2] therefore ye shall receive the [l]greater damnation.

15 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye [m]compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is made, ye make him twofold[3] more the [n]child of hell than yourselves.[4]

16 Woe unto you, [o]ye blind guides, which say, Whosoever[5] shall swear by the temple, it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold[6] of the temple, he is a debtor.

17 Ye[p] fools, and blind! for whether is greater, the gold, [q]or the temple that sanctifieth the gold?

18 And, Whosoever shall swear by the altar, it is nothing; but whosoever sweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is guilty.[7]

19 Ye fools, and blind! for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that [r]sanctifieth the gift?

20 Whoso therefore shall swear by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things thereon.

21 And whoso shall swear by the temple, sweareth by it, and by [s]him that dwelleth therein.

22 And he that shall swear by heaven, sweareth by the throne of God, and by [t]him that sitteth thereon.

23 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! [u]for ye pay tithe of mint, and [8]anise, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

24 Ye[v] blind guides! which strain[8] at a [1]gnat, and swallow a camel.[2]

25 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! [w]for ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess.

26 Thou blind Pharisee! cleanse[3] first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also.

27 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are [x]like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness.

28 Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

implanted in their souls. Why should we dissemble before the all-seeing Redeemer? Rather let us tremble to reflect, that all men are called to salvation, yet so few heed the call—that many, instead of believing the gospel, should occupy themselves in disputes against the truth, or endeavour to entangle its preachers. And all, but especially ministers, have great need to answer captious questions with caution; and duly to connect our duty to magistrates with that which we owe to God. And it is no wonder that men are embarrassed who are ignorant of God's power and Word.—Happy is that spiritual relation to God, which secures blessedness here and to eternity, when all the fashions and connections of this world shall be no more! But how extensive is our duty to God and to men—and how delightful to a renewed heart! Love to my God and my neighbour is the fulfilling of the law. Great is the mystery of godliness—God made manifest in the flesh! What think I of this Christ? Is he my Saviour and my ALL IN ALL? Let me then in holy diligence, in cautious prudence, and in readiness to render a reason of the hope that is in me, follow him while I live: and endeavour to turn every perplexing question into important and useful hints and inquiries for my real instruction.

CHAPTER XXIII. Ver. 32–37. Go on then in your fathers' wicked courses, persecuting and murdering me and the apostles and other ministers whom I will send to preach the gospel among you, till, by your malicious wickedness, ye have rendered the approaching ruin of your nation inevitable; and have, by your approbation of it, rendered yourselves chargeable with all the blood of righteous men shed from the foundation of the world to this time. Ye persecuting rulers and inhabitants of Jerusalem, how often have I, by myself and servants, attempted, in the most earnest and gracious manner, to call you to a state of salvation and comfort in fellowship with me; but ye obstinately refused. Behold, therefore, in a little time your city, temple, and nation shall be consigned to utter destruction! And when I am enthroned with my Father, dreadful shall be the state of your nation, cast out from the church of God, and abandoned to miseries unnumbered; till at last they shall be glad to welcome me into their hearts, and be ready to triumph in my praise: and many of you shall never see me, after my death, till I come in the clouds at the last day.

Ver. 4. Heavy burdens. These were the traditions of the elders—in many things making void the law of God, and imposing the intolerable authority of man. C.

Ver. 5. Phylacteries. The Jewish phylacteries (so called from 29 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because [z]ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous,

30 And say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them [a]in the blood of the prophets.

31 Wherefore [b]ye be witnesses unto yourselves, that ye are [c]the children of them which killed the prophets.

32 Fill[d] ye up then the measure of your fathers.

33 Ye[e] serpents, ye generation of vipers! how can ye escape the damnation of hell?

34 ¶ Wherefore, behold, [f]I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city:

35 That [h]upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar.

36 Verily I say unto you, [i]All these things shall come upon this generation.

37 O[j] Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, [k]how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and [l]ye would not!

38 Behold, your house[4] is left unto you desolate.

39 For I say unto you, [m]Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, [n]Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.[5]

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Christ foretelleth the destruction of the temple: 3 what and how great calamities shall be before it: 29 the signs of his coming to judgment. 36 And because that day and hour is unknown, 42 we ought to watch like good servants, expecting every moment our Master's coming.

AND Jesus[o] went out, and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him for to show him the buildings of the temple.

4 These words are rendered more solemn and emphatic by the circumstances under which they were uttered. Our Lord had frequently, especially of late, taught in the temple. He had set forth the truth: he had besought, warned, and threatened. It was all in vain. The infatuated people, assembled in the temple courts professedly to worship God, would not hear God's Son. Now he turns away from the temple for ever. He would enter it no more. In words of deepest tenderness he pronounces judgment on an impenitent and infatuated people.—P.

* The most commanding view of the temple and its courts was obtained from the side of the Mount of Olives, where Jesus sat when he uttered the words of this terrible prophecy. He saw across the narrow glen of the Kidron the colossal supporting wall of the artificial platform on which the temple stood, at this point about 150 feet high. Along its summit ran the stately columns of Solomon's porch. The naos, or shrine itself, with its encircling chambers, was raised on an inner platform so as to overtop the porches, and, of course, all the buildings of the city. With such a magnificent structure before their eyes, the words of Jesus must have fallen with painful force upon the ears and hearts of the disciples.—P. a Greek word signifying to keep or guard are said to have originated from the literal understanding of Ex. 13. 9. They were little rolls of parchment, on which were written certain portions of the law, and were worn on the forehead or wrist of the left arm. The passages written on them were Ex. 13. 2–10, 11–16; De. 6. 4–9; 11. 13–21.—Borders. The fringes required by the law. See note on Nu. 15. 38. C.

Ver. 7. Rabbi is derived from a word first signifying great, and, by consequence, superior, master. The Jews have its origin as a personal title, no farther back than the time of the famous Hillel, or rather of his son Simeon, supposed to be the same who took the child Jesus in his arms in the temple. Lu. 2. 25–32. There were three gradations of the title—Rab, Rabbi, and Rabban—which latter title was bestowed upon no more than seven, all the descendants of Hillel—among whom were this Simeon, and Gamaliel, the instructor of Paul. C.

Ver. 23. Mint. A well-known plant, both of the field and garden, of various species, generally possessing an agreeable aromatic odour—upon account of which it was strewed on the floors of the synagogues, besides being used for culinary and medicinal purposes.—Anise. This should not have been translated anise, but dill, an umbelliferous plant, the seeds of which are used both for culinary purposes, as are the seeds of the caraway, and also as an agreeable addition to several medicines.—Cummin. Another umbelliferous plant, resembling fennel, but smaller. Its seeds have a bitterish pungent taste, accompanied with an aromatic flavour. The tithe of these plants was not mentioned by Moses; but the Pharisees, in proof of their righteousness by the law (see ver. 28; Ro. 10. 3, 5), insisted much upon these trifles, while the weightier matters of justice, humanity, and fidelity they frequently overlooked or violated. C.

Ver. 35. Zechariah, the minor prophet, is called the son of Barachiah, Zec. 1. 1; and the Zechariah mentioned 2 Ch. 24. 20, 21, is called the son of Jehoiada. But as there is no record of any violence having been offered to Zechariah the prophet, it seems more natural to understand the reference of Zechariah the priest, whose violent death was inflicted by a wicked king and idolatrous people, on account of his faithfulness to the worship of Jehovah. His being called the son of Barachias, instead of Jehoiada, is easily accounted for, as Barachias may have been a second name of Jehoiada. C.

Ver. 38. Your house. Your temple, in which you trusted as the residence of God, and earnest of your protection. C.

Ver. 39. Ye shall not see me again, till, being converted, as a nation, to the faith of my gospel, "ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh (to save us in the name of the LORD." C.

REFLECTIONS.—The highest offices, in both church and state, are often filled up with the worst of men, who are apt to make others stumble at the ordinances or truths of God for their sake. Yea, they who make the greatest noise about morality and virtue, and its influence, to recommend us to God, are in general extremely destitute of it. Rigid imposers of human invention are rarely strict in their own lives. Let then the servants of Jesus Christ always endeavour to manifest their utmost humility, uprightness, and contempt of this world. Let them practise the doctrines they preach, and never attempt to lord it over their hearers or brethren in office. With what pitiful pretences do men varnish over their neglect of real godliness, their dishonesty, persecution, and murder! And fearful are the discoveries which shall be made in the last judgment! Aggravated will be their damnation who oppose the gospel and hinder others from believing it; and who pervert the oracles of God, seduce their neighbours into wickedness, neglect their hearts, varnish over their wickedness with pretences of devotion and zeal, profane the most solemn worship of God, and conduct all their religion by selfish and secular designs! Infinite is the patience of our Redeemer in long bearing with such; and great his mercy in giving them plain, timely, and frequently repeated warnings of their danger. But dreadful is the case when whole nations are at last punished for their unbelief and persecution: when Jesus' kind offers and entreaties issue in his depriving them of his ordinances, abandoning them to their own lusts, and casting them into the depths of hell! Yet such must be the end of all despisers of his grace. Let Britain hear and tremble!

CHAPTER XXIV.—Before the destruction of Jerusalem many false teachers and pretended Messiahs appeared, ver. 2, 4, 5, 11, 23–26. There were many wars, commotions, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes, ver. 6, 7. Ministers and other Christians were terribly persecuted; and much apostasy from and decay of religion ensued in many places, ver. 9–13. The gospel was preached through the Roman empire and the 20 But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the sabbath-day:[1]

23 Then[w] if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not.

28 For[d] wheresoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together.

[1] Alford's view of the meaning of this passage is worthy of note. He supposes that Matthew and Mark, writing mainly for Jews, give the inner or domestic sign of the approaching calamity—a sign which would appear within the temple; while Luke, writing for Gentiles, gives the outward state of things (Lu. 21. 20). Alford thinks the inner sign may have been some abomination, defilement, well-marked, committed in the temple by the party of the Zelots. On seeing it all Christians within the city would take warning, and flee instantly.—P.

[2] There cannot be a doubt that the immediate and direct fulfilment of this prophecy is to be sought in the events which occurred in the Roman empire between the years A.D. 66 and 70, and which culminated in the destruction of Jerusalem and the final overthrow of the Jewish polity. The coming of the Son of man is his coming to judge and punish sinful nations. The sun, moon, stars and powers of heaven, are emblems of earthly potentates. A glance at the history of Rome from the death of Nero till the triumph of Titus and Vespasian, after the fall of Jerusalem, will fully illustrate the words of the prophecy. Yet still the whole scope of the passage shows that another and still greater event is here shadowed forth—not directly, perhaps, but typically: namely, the destruction of the world, and the coming of the Son of man to judgment.—P.

31 And[h] he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet,[2] and they shall gather together his [i]elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.[3]

32 ¶ Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh:

33 So likewise ye,[4] when ye shall see all these things, know that it[5] is near, even at the doors.

34 Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled.

35 Heaven[j] and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

36 ¶ But[k] of that day[6] and hour knoweth no man, no not the angels of heaven, but my Father only.

37 But[l] as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

38 For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark,

39 And knew not, until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

40 Then[m] shall two be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

41 Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

42 ¶ Watch[o] therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.

43 But[p] know this, that if the goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.

44 Therefore[q] be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh.

45 Who[r] then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?

nations adjacent, ver. 14. The Roman army invaded and laid siege to Jerusalem, and the Christians fled with the utmost haste to the mountains around Judea, ver. 15–20. That destruction was terrible, ver. 21; especially to mothers, ver. 19; threatened ruin to the whole Jewish nation, ver. 22; and was universal through the whole country, ver. 27, 28. It was foreboded by signs in the heavens, and quite dissolved the constitution of the Jewish church and state, and it occasioned terrible anguish to the carnal Jews to be thus punished by the Messiah, ver. 27–30. It took place while that very generation among whom Christ taught partly survived, ver. 32–35; and was followed by a remarkable spread of the gospel and conversion of lost sinners to Christ, ver. 30, 31. Many of the wicked Jews were preserved for the sake of children who were in their loins, and who were to descend from them after many generations, ver. 22. Ver. 27, 28 may denote the spread of the gospel among the Gentiles, and the gathering of multitudes to Jesus to feed on his flesh and blood; but rather that the Roman army, beginning at the north-east, would, with fire and sword, desolate the whole country of the Jews, and hunt out and destroy them, be where they would; 29, 30 represent the terrible appearances of Jesus' power, in destroying the Jewish church and state, while his ministers should, by the gospel trumpet, gather multitudes of sinners to him; and also his terrible appearance to judgment, while his angels shall gather together his people, and bring them to their honourable seat on his right hand. 37–41. The destruction of Jerusalem, as well as the last judgment, will take place while most men are indulging themselves in sensuality and carnal cares, and are no way provided for it; and of persons in seemingly equal danger, some will be miserably destroyed, and others graciously preserved. 42–51. Since therefore you are so uncertain of the time of this destruction and the last judgment, ye need always to be watching over your hearts and lives that ye may be ready for it, especially as great shall be the gracious and honorary reward of such as are then found faithful and diligent in their proper work; whereas, if any one become carnally secure, and indulge himself in persecuting his fellow-ministers and professors, and in immorality and profaneness, Jesus will surprise him by death or judgment, and he shall be most miserably wretched forever in hell, in company with the most detestable sinners.

Ver. 1. The buildings of the temple. Josephus states that some of the stones of the temple were 45 cubits (that is, between 60 and 70 feet) long, 5 cubits high, and 6 broad; while 162 enormous and splendid pillars adorned the porches. C.

Ver. 2. While Titus was besieging Jerusalem he was most anxious to preserve the temple. But when it was consumed, and the city taken, he ordered the foundations both of temple and city to be utterly razed. And the Jews themselves acknowledge that Terentius Rufus actually ploughed over the place where they stood—hereby fulfilling Mi. 3. 12. C.

Ver. 14. In all the world. Freely throughout the world, and not, as now, confined to Judea.—For a witness to all nations, both that Jesus was the Christ, and that the cup of Jewish iniquity was now full.—Then shall the end (of the Jewish polity) come. C.

Ver. 15. The holy place. Bloomfield understands it to mean the temple—citing, for the use of the phrase, Ac. 6. 13; 21. 28, with the parallel passage, Mar. 13. 14. But the parallel passage in Lu. 21. 20 seems clearly to point to the investment of Jerusalem, and not to the time when the temple had been taken; wherefore 'the holy place' must mean 'the holy city.' See Ps. 46. 4. C.

Ver. 21. The sufferings of the Jews during the siege of Jerusalem, as detailed by Josephus, an eye-witness, are certainly without parallel in human history. A cruel enemy without—more cruel factions within—gnawing famine, and wasting pestilence! And all this horror of darkness without one gleam of relieving light, beyond the desperate, the ferocious courage with which the factions assailed one another, and defended their devoted city against their irresistible enemies. C.

Ver. 22. Shortened—by the conquest of the city, before pestilence had acquired more malignity, and the Romans had been provoked to exterminate rather than to enslave. 1,100,000 Jews perished miserably in the siege, besides the uncounted multitudes destroyed in other cities.—For the elect's sake. That 'remnant, according to the election of grace,' Ro. 11. 5, for whose sake the sparing mercy of God is extended to a rebellious generation. C.

Ver. 30. Coming in the clouds. The import of this coming may be gathered from Is. 26. 21; 35. 4; 66. 15, 16; Mal. 3. 1, 2, 3, in all which it is a coming by national judgments upon them that forget God. C.

Ver. 31. Angels. Literally, messengers, whether human or spiritual. These angels are, in the commencement of the prophetic series, his ministers, with the gospel trumpet warning men to flee from the wrath to come, Isa. 33. 7, gathering the elect into one in Christ Jesus, Ep. 1. 10. But that they and their work may be also typical of other angels, and another gathering to another and greater judgment, is not to be denied. C.

46 Blessed[a] is that servant, whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing.

47 Verily[b] I say unto you, that he shall make him ruler over all his goods.

48 But[c] and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming;

49 And shall begin [d]to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken;

50 The[e] lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of,

51 And shall cut him asunder,[f] and [g]appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

CHAPTER XXV.

1 The parable of the ten virgins, 14 and of the talents. 31 Also the description of the last judgment.

THEN shall[a] the[b] kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten [c]virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth [d]to meet the bridegroom.

2 And[e] five of them were wise, and five[1] were foolish.

3 They that were foolish [e]took their lamps, and took no oil with them:

4 But[h] the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps.

5 While[i] the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered[2] and slept.

6 And[j] at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; [k]go ye out to meet him.[3]

7 Then[l] all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps.

8 And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for [m]our lamps are gone out.[4]

9 But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to [n]them that sell, and buy for yourselves.

10 And while they went to buy, [o]the bridegroom came; [p]and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: [q]and the door was shut.

* Jewish marriages were generally conducted as follows:—After the marriage had been solemnized, the bridegroom, in a procession as brilliant as his circumstances permitted, conducted the bride to his dwelling, where all his young female friends were assembled, and waited with lamps, prepared to go out and receive her. After which the whole train entered the house together. When the train had entered the bridegroom's house, the doors were shut to exclude strangers. The marriage customs of the modern Hindoos are almost identical with those above described, and all admittance is most peremptorily refused when once the door has been closed. b The principle or moral of this parable is identical with that of the preceding—the necessity for continuous watchfulness and activity on the part of the Christian. Christian duty was considered too hard, and was abandoned as something beyond the reach of ordinary effort —P.

13 Watch[b] therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

14 [c] For[a] the kingdom of heaven[6] is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods.[7]

Ver. 34. This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled. The subjunction of this statement immediately after the prophecy by three evangelists (see Mar. 13. 30; Lu. 21. 25) puts the idea of any dislocation of the narrative totally out of the question. Nor is it possible, upon any Scripture authority, to interpret 'this generation' of the Jewish nation, or the Christian church, in continuance. Wherefore the conclusion seems inevitable that the previous prophecy describes directly the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish state, even should that be considered typical of other and greater events. C.

Ver. 36. Knoweth no man, &c. Consequently, not even 'the Son of man' as such; for being truly man, He. 1. 14, 16, 17, he was as such ignorant of all future events but such as the Father was pleased to reveal to him; see Ac. 1. 7. Our Lord, having 'two distinct natures in one person,' could truly speak of himself under the character of either, or of both, as united in one person, just as, with perfect truth, we can speak of ourselves and say, in respect of one nature (the body,) 'we shall die,' and, in respect of another nature (the soul,) 'we shall never die;' yet, in all this, each man so constituted is one person. C.

Ver. 40, 41. From comparing ver. 40 and 41 with 43, it will be evident that the coming foretold in ver. 39 is a coming to national judgment. May not the meaning therefore of ver. 40 and 41 be elicited thus:—1. The judgment, sudden and unexpected as the flood of Noe, will sweep over the fields, or rural districts, which had escaped in former judgments, as well as over the cities, which had hitherto been the principal scenes of destruction; see 2 Ki. 24. 10-14. 25. 11, 12. 2. It will extend to the female as well as to the male population, which is not generally the case even in the most sanguinary wars. 3. It will not be confined to the rich, the political, and military classes, but will extend to the poor in the pursuit of the most peaceful avocations. 4. The two descriptions it seems impossible to refer, as some do, to the final judgment, in which 'all nations' are to be gathered before the Son of man; whereas in these descriptions 'one is taken and another left,' which will not accord with ch. 25. 46, in which all are alike judged according to their works. 5. The general use of παραλαμβάνω in Matthew is to 'take along with' the taker; see Mat. 4. 5, 8; 12. 45; 17. 1. Does not the prophecy therefore foretell that fully one-half of the most peaceable male and female population will be taken away captive by their invaders, while the remainder shall be left friendless and destitute, the victims of poverty and pestilence? C.

REFLECTIONS.—Even real saints are often puffed up with the external and quickly fading glories of religion. But how manifest is the omniscience of our Redeemer, who could so circumstantially foretell the events which befell the Jews and the nations around! And wonderfully has God proved him the Messiah by fulfilling his predictions upon his opposers. Yea, for the confirmation of our faith, Josephus, one of them, was almost miraculously saved, and inclined to give us the history of the fulfilment. Novelties in religion are always to be suspected; and inconceivable are the arts by which Satan and his instruments labour to deceive men, pervert the gospel, and dishonour Christ. But great is the mercy that leads God to watch over and guide his people. What an awful scene of misery hath sin made our earth! Even men, more savage than ravenous beasts, unnaturally hunt out and destroy one another. How dreadful then must hell be, where men meet in all the rage of their lusts! It is a great mercy that, though we must never flee from duty, we may and ought to flee from danger. What time my heart is overwhelmed, Lord, lead me to the Rock that is higher than I! And since the same preludes and descriptions can serve for both, let all the noted catastrophes of nations lead me to the serious consideration of, and preparation for, the last judgment! Thrice happy are they who, in times of trial, are preserved in Christ, and kept faithful and lively when iniquity abounds and the love of many waxes cold; and happy are they who discover greater regard to God's ordinances than to their own ease. For graciously shall they at last be crowned with glory and honour. But dreadful will it be if, after we have been intrusted with offices and gifts, we should be found, in death or judgment, unfaithful in using them: none shall share a more certain or deeper damnation. There is great need of constant watchfulness, constant acting as under Christ's eye, constant readiness for eternity! How slothful is my heart if Jesus' repeated admonitions do not awaken me!

CHAPTER XXV. Ver. 1–13. This, and the sub-

24 Then he which had received the one talent, came, and said, [a]Lord, [b]I knew thee that thou art an hard man,[1] reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed:[2]

25 And I was [h]afraid, and went, and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine.

26 His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked[3] and slothful servant, thou knewest[4] that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strawed:

27 Thou[i] oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.

28 Take[j] therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents.

29 For[k] unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not [l]shall be taken away even that which he hath.

30 And[n] cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

31 ¶ When[o] the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory:[5]

32 And before him [p]shall be gathered all nations;[6] and he shall separate them one from another,[7] as a [q]shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats:

33 And[r] he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.

34 Then[s] shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world:

35 For[t] I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in:

36 Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

37 Then shall the righteous answer him, sequent parable, may have some relation to the time of Christ's coming to destroy the Jewish nation, but especially to his coming to the last judgment. As the Jews had ordinarily their weddings at night, and seldom fewer than ten bridemaids, that custom is here alluded to. Christ, who betroths and unites sinners to himself in the day of his power, is the glorious bridegroom. His tarrying denotes his deferring the Jewish destruction, and death, and the last judgment till the due season. His coming at midnight, and with a great cry, denotes how unexpected and alarming his coming is, in common calamities, at death or judgment. The ten virgins denote multitudes of professing and apparently real Christians. Their slumbering and sleeping denote their common sloth and security while Christ withdraws his presence. The foolish virgins, who had only lamps, but no oil in them, represent nominal Christians, who have a profession of gospel truth, but no real grace; and who, when awakened by death or judgment, shall find their profession come to nothing: gladly then would they be in the condition of sincere Christians, and derive help from them; but their cares of salvation will be then too late, and they themselves shall be eternally excluded from fellowship with Christ. The wise virgins are true believers, whose external profession of Christ arises from real grace in their hearts, and who are, notwithstanding occasional sloth and slumberings, in a habitual readiness to meet with Christ, in death or judgment, upon his call; these, though they have no grace or good works to be imparted to others, shall be graciously admitted to eternal fellowship with him in the heavenly mansions. 14–30. The Master is Christ, who, in his ascension, travelled into a far country, who bestows gifts and graces on ministers and people, and will return at the last day to require an account of their improvement of them. The servants are ministers and people. The talents are offices, gifts, and opportunities, given by Christ to men in different degrees, for the good of the church, to be improved for his glory, and to be accounted for at the last day. Such as improve what they have received, whether more or less, in a faithful and diligent manner, shall be graciously rewarded. But such as, through unbelief of God's kindness and mercy, neglect to improve their gifts, shall at last be deprived of them, and undone for their abuse of them. 32, 33. He will fully and exactly separate the righteous from the wicked, never more to be mixed. The former, or those who accepted Christ as their Savior and throughout all their lives walked in him as they received him, he will honourably set at his right hand in the air; but the latter will be forever cast out, dishonoured and disgraced as filthy and abominable creatures, who loved, lived, and died in their sins. 34-40. They are called to receive the kingdom, not as any proper reward of their works, but as the inheritance to which they are entitled as faithful children of a gracious God through faith. Their works are not mentioned as grounds of the sentence, but as proofs that they are God's children, who love the brethren. Their objection denotes their viewing whatever they did as unworthy of so honourable a reward. 41–45. They, in sinning, departed from God and followed the devil. Now their punishment is answerable. Their want of charity to the saints is at once a mark of their being full of unbelief and haters of Christ and his people, and also a ground of their fearful sentence.

Ver. 29. For unto every one that hath (valued his privileges and employed his means) shall be given: but from him that hath not (employed nor valued them) shall be taken away that which he (now) hath.—Note, Do these talents represent grace? and, if so, then may not a believer fall from grace? The answer is scriptural:—the believer is 'born again, not of corruptible, but of incorruptible seed,' 1 Pe. 1. 23. Of his sheep, Jesus says, 'I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish,' Jn. 10. 28. Therefore these talents represent not inward grace, but the outward means of grace, the various privileges and ordinances of the Christian church. C.

Ver. 35, 36. Our Lord here enumerates six heads, under some one of which every possible form of human misery may be found. Hunger—thirst—a stranger—nakedness—sickness—imprisonment: one, as it were, for each day of the labour and sorrow introduced by the first transgression; and for which the knowledge of Christ crucified, risen, reigning, interceding, and coming again, can afford the only remedy.—Note, The introductory for, ver. 35, cannot be tortured, contrary to the uniform testimony of Scripture, into any proof that the entrance into 'the kingdom prepared' was purchased or deserved by the merit of the 'good works' enumerated. See De. 9. 4–6; Mat. 1. 21; 26. 28; Ro. 3. 20, 23, 28: Ep. 2. 8, 9: 2 Ti. 1. 9, &c., in which every stream of good, whether temporal or spiritual, is traced to the fountain of sovereign mercy alone. But the great purpose of final judgment being first to exhibit Christ in glory, and secondly to explain and vindicate the equity of the divine government, the 'fruit of the Spirit' is displayed in all its beauty and variety, as the evidence that the Judge decides not upon any principle of favouritism, but in righteousness; and bestows his rewards upon none but such as have been 'made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is absurd to esteem any as Christians who have not the appearance of real saintship. And inestimable is the worth of real grace exercised in the heart by a new creation in Christ. It makes a wide difference between true believers and mere nominal professors. Safe is their meeting with Christ, and certain their admission to glory, who have it: but dreadful their exclusion from Christ, and deep their sorrow in hell, who die without it! No intercession of saints, no mercy, can save them. In diversified forms and degrees Jesus bestows gifts, offices, and opportunities on men for the service of his church. And he will take an exact account of the improvement. Happy are they who, with diligence, use whatever they receive to his glory; inexpressibly great shall be their honour and their reward: but miserable are they who, through unbelieving hard thoughts of God, take up with a mere hypocritical profession. Every plea of innocence, prudence, or of wonted assistances, will issue in their confusion.—How certain—how sudden—how awful—how glorious—will be the appearance of Jesus to judgment: exact and final shall be his separation of the righteous and wicked; and impartial his trial of human works. Gracious and heart-ravishing will be his last invitation to saints: high his regard to them, and every kindness showed to them! But awful indeed his dismission of sinners from him, whom they now so hate and contemn. And how fixed—how important—how lasting—is men's future state! May these awful, these eternal realities, sink deep into my heart!

CHAPTER XXVI. Ver. 26–28. Christ conjoined the passover and supper to intimate that the former, having been long a type, should now be fulfilled in his death; and that the other should succeed as a memorial of his finished sufferings till the end of the world. The bread represents him as God-man, chosen, appointed, and furnished by his Father, and suffering unto death for the redemption of his people. The wine represents his fulfilling all righteousness for the securing and bestowing all promised spiritual blessings, particularly the full remission of sins to his faithful followers. 29. I will never more feast with you in this manner, never more so indulge you with my bodily presence; but instead thereof, will hold fellowship with you in a far more spiritual and comfortable manner in the gospel dispensation, and especially in the heavenly state.

Ver. 2. Betrayed. Rather, 'Is to be betrayed.' Bloomfield. —More literally, 'delivered up.' C.

Ver. 7. Whether this woman was Mary the sister of Lazarus, mentioned Jn. 12. 3, and whether there were two anointings, one of the head, and another of the feet, has been matter of deep question. Lightfoot, Doddridge, Gill, Guyse, &c., may be consulted for the different views and arguments. The more probable opinion seems that of one anointing—the different circumstances being related by different historians, each, as moved by the Holy Spirit, filling up some circumstance omitted by the other. C.

Ver. 11. But me ye have not always. Therefore the Popish figment of transubstantiation cannot be true; for the wafer which it asserts to be the very body, and blood, and soul, and divinity of Christ, the Romanists have always with them. C.

Ver. 14. Then—or rather, 'about that time.' The cupidity of Judas being probably excited by what he considered the useless waste of so much valuable ointment.—Note, Evil feelings are often stirred up by the sight of what is good. Let believers watch and pray that they enter not into this temptation. C.

Ver. 15. Thirty pieces of silver. Most probably thirty shekels —about £3. 15s.—the price of a slave accidentally torn by a beast, see Ex. 21. 32. 'A goodly price at which they valued him!' But, alas! alas! how often is he sold again, and 'crucified afresh' for a far inferior price! 'Be not high-minded, but fear;' and 'let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.' C.

Ver. 21. As they did eat. Whether our Lord did eat the passover has been matter of serious debate. The course of the narrative in this chapter is clearly in favour of his eating it (see also Lu. 22. 14). But then, in Jn. 18. 28, when our Lord was already a prisoner, the Jews, it appears, had yet to eat the passover. The solution of this difficulty arises from recollecting that the passover was to commence with first full moon of the month Nisan. But as this day was settled, not by astronomical calculation, but by the actual appearance of the new moon, a difference might readily arise with regard to the exact day on which the feast should commence. And as the Pharisees and Sadducees differed on almost every other point, it is most probable they would differ upon this likewise. And thus our Lord might eat saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

38 When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?

39 Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee?

40 And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, [u]Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

41 Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, [v]Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels:

42 For[w] I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink:

43 I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not.

44 Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?

45 Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, [y]Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.

46 And[z] these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.[8]

CHAPTER XXVI.

3 The rulers conspire against Christ. 6 The woman anointeth his feet. 14 Judas selleth him. 17 Christ eateth the passover: 26 instituteth his holy supper: 36 prayeth in the garden: 47 and being betrayed with a kiss, 57 is carried to Caiaphas, 69 and denied of Peter.

AND it[a] came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, he said unto his disciples,

2 Ye[b] know that after two days is the feast of the passover, and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified.

3 ¶ Then[c] assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high-priest, who was called Caiaphas,

4 And consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill him.

5 But they said, [d]Not on the feast-day,[1] lest there be an uproar among the people.

6 ¶ Now[e] when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper,

7 There came unto him a woman having an alabaster-box of very precious ointment, and poured it on his head, as he sat at meat.

8 But when his disciples saw it, they had indignation,[2] saying, To what purpose is this waste?

9 For this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor.

10 When Jesus understood[3] it, he said unto them, [g]Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought a good work upon me.

11 For[h] ye have the poor always with you; but me ye have not always.

12 For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it for my burial.

13 Verily I say unto you, [i]Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her.

14 ¶ Then[k] one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests,

15 And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of [4]silver.

16 And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him.

17 ¶ Now[l] the first day of the feast of unleavened bread,[5] the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?

18 And he said, Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, [m]The Master saith, [n]My time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples.

19 And[p] the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them; and they made ready the passover.

20 ¶ Now[q] when the even was come,[6] he sat down with the twelve.

21 And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, that [r]one of you shall betray me.

22 And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto him, Lord, is it I?

23 And he answered and said, [s]He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me.[7]

24 The[t] Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but [u]woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if he had not been born.

25 Then Judas, which betrayed him, [x]answered and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, [y]Thou hast said.[8]

26 ¶ And[y] as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and [9]blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body.

27 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it:

28 For this is my [z]blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.

29 But I say unto you, [1]I [a]will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that

8 The Greek word which indicates the duration both of the curse and the reward is the same; though in the first clause it is rendered 'everlasting,' and in the second 'eternal.' This difference in the English version is unfortunate. It would seem to favour the idea that while the reward is eternal, the punishment may not be so. The Greek favours no such idea. If the reward be eternal, so must the punishment be.—P.

3 The evening of the 14th, at, or after sunset: or as it is described in Hebrew idiom, 'between the two evenings,' i. e. between sunset and darkness, during the brief space of an eastern twilight. See Ex. 12. 6. Le. 23. 5. Nothing can be clearer than that our Lord and his disciples sat down to eat the passover; and the following verse proceeds to describe what occurred as they did eat. However the apparently discordant statements of the evangelists are to be reconciled, the plain narrative of Matthew cannot be twisted in conformity with any theory that our Lord did not eat the passover. For a solution of the difficulty see the notes on Jn 13. 29 and 18. 28.—P.

4 These words are very suggestive, they carry forward the joys and blessings of this solemn ordinance from earth to heaven. 'The Lord's Supper,' Therefore says, 'points not only to the past, but to the future also. It has not only a commemorative, but also a prophetic meaning. In it we have not only to show forth the Lord's death until he come, but we have also to think of the time when he shall come to celebrate his holy supper with his own, new, in his kingdom of glory. Every celebration of the Lord's Supper is a foretaste and a prophetic anticipation of the great marriage supper which is prepared for the church at the second appearing of Christ.' This import of the sacrament is declared in the words, 'I will not drink henceforth.' &c. These words ought never to be omitted in any liturgical form of administering the communion.—P.

5 The first of 'unleavened bread' was Thursday, the 14th of Nisan. On that day the Jews put away all leaven out of their houses, and killed the paschal lamb. The lamb was not eaten till after sunset, which, according to the Jewish mode of reckoning, the 15th day began. Their day (of 24 hours began at sunset; but as the 24 hours was divided into two parts, the one called night, the other day, we often find the word day applied to the latter alone. It was on this 14th the disciples prepared for the passover.—P.

7 The parallel passage in Mar. 14. 20 is substantially the same: but John (13. 26), whose narrative is much more minute, thus writes: 'He it is to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped.' I can see no contradiction, no real discrepancy in the two accounts. Jesus may have used both expressions, following up the more general recorded by Matthew, with the more specific recorded by John. He may have said, 'He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish—he to whom I shall give a sop when I have dipped—the same shall betray me.' Jesus and Judas dipped together; Jesus on dipping presented his morsel to Judas, a thing of common occurrence at an eastern banquet. John, who was close to Jesus, heard and saw all.—P.

Ver. 26. This is my body. The Romanists say our Lord spake literally, and that therefore the bread in his supper becomes his literal body. But if so, surely 'the cup' becomes 'the new testament,' see 1 Co. 11. 25, for both are equally asserted. But such conversion of the cup the Romanist denies; therefore, with equally valid reason, such conversion of the bread the Protestant rejects.

THE MOUNT OF OFFENSE—WHERE CHRIST WAS BETRAYED. [Matt., xxvi:3, 4.]—The Mount of Offense is south of the Mount of Olives, and east of the Hill of Evil Counsel. It bears witness of the perfidy of Judas Iscariot. It is wonderful how every event connected with the trial and death and resurrection of our Lord has found in the neighborhood of Jerusalem some spot, or hill, or monument to commemorate it. The chief interest about Jerusalem to-day is the fact that it forms a kind of monument or concrete expression of the awful tragedy which ended in the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. When one goes to Paris now, it is of Napoleon he is reminded; when he goes to Edinburg it is Sir Walter Scott; but in Jerusalem everything speaks of Christ. Every valley, every mountain reminds us of Him.

day when I drink it new with you [b]in my Father's kingdom.

30 ¶ And when they had sung an hymn,[2] they[c] went out into the mount of Olives.

31 Then saith Jesus unto them, [d]All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, [e]I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad.

32 But after I am risen again, [f]I will go before you into Galilee.

33 Peter[h] answered and said unto him, Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended.

34 Jesus said unto him, [i]Verily I say unto thee, That this night, before the cock crow,[3] thou shalt deny me thrice.

35 Peter said unto him, [j]Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. [k]Likewise also said all the disciples.

36 ¶ Then[l] cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane,[4] and saith unto the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder.

37 And[n] he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be [o]sorrowful and very heavy.[5]

38 Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and [p]watch with me.

39 And he went a little further, and [q]fell on his face, and prayed, saying, [r]O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt.

40 And he cometh unto the disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter, What! could ye not watch with me one hour?

41 Watch,[s] and pray, that ye enter not into temptation; [t]the spirit indeed is willing,[6] but the flesh is weak.

42 He[u] went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done.

43 And he came and found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy.

[9] It is remarkable to find our Lord under such circumstances speaking of angels. His own power as God was supreme. He frequently pressed this truth on his disciples. Why then speak of angels at all, and not simply declare his own omnipotence? The reason seems to be, that in the mystery of the divine government in this world angels are the regularly constituted ministers for executing God's plans in relation to the whole church. Angels announced the Messiah's advent, counselled the flight into Egypt, ministered to him in the wilderness; in Gethsemane an angel strengthened him: angels were present at his resurrection and ascension.—P.

44 And he left them, and went away again, and [w]prayed the third time, saying the same words.

45 Then cometh he to his disciples, and saith unto them, [x]Sleep on now, and take your rest; [y]behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

46 Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me.

47 ¶ And [z]while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude, with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people.

48 Now[a] he that betrayed him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he: hold him fast.

49 And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; and kissed him.

50 And Jesus said unto him, Friend,[7] wherefore art thou come? Then came they and [b]laid hands on Jesus, and took him.

51 ¶ And, behold, [c]one of them which were with Jesus stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high-priest's, and smote off his ear.

52 Then said Jesus unto him, [d]Put up again thy sword into his place: [e]for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.

53 Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and [g]he shall presently give me more than twelve legions[8] of angels?[9]

54 But how then [h]shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?

55 In that same hour said Jesus to the multitudes, Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves for to take me? I sat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me.

56 But all this was done, [i]that the scriptures of the prophets might be [j]fulfilled. [j]Then all the disciples forsook him, and fled.

57 ¶ And[k] they that had laid hold on Jesus led him away to Caiaphas the high-priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled.

And in this he agrees with the apostle Paul, who thrice declares that what the communicant eats is simply bread, 1 Co. 11. 26–28. Besides, as our Lord says, Jn. 15. 5, 'I am the vine, ye are the branches'—and yet cannot mean that he was changed into a vine, or his disciples into branches, but merely that he was like the vine, while they were like the branches—so, when he says of bread, 'This is my body,' he means, as in the case of the vine, 'this is (like) my body.' For the use of the verb to be, in which it is put for 'to be like, represent, or signify, or answer to,' see Da. 7. 23: 1 Co. 10. 4; Ga. 4. 24, 25. But if the Romanist still repeat, 'This is my body;' the Protestant replies, 'And so indeed it is—it is his body to faith;' for what sense perceives and uses bread, faith discerns and partakes of 'his body and blood, with all their benefits, to spiritual nourishment and growth in grace.' C.

Ver. 45. Sleep on now. This has been termed 'an ironical reproof;' but surely such a figure is totally unbecoming the unequalled solemnity of the occasion. Is not the meaning this? I left you to watch, but the necessity of it being now past, sleep on, and forget both my sorrows and your own, for the few moments of my time that are yet unexpired. C.

Ver. 50. Friend. Rather, Companion; though as a title, the word Friend, that is, one that has been so named, might still be justly applied to the ungrateful and faithless traitor. C.

Ver. 52. This statement, if taken in a literal and unlimited sense, is not strictly accurate—for many take the sword who do not perish by it. The meaning must therefore be sought thus: 1. The sword is a general name for all weapons and means of warfare. 2. The warfare in the case is a private opposition to public authority. 3. It is a warfare undertaken rashly, and revengefully, in defence of or for propagation of religion. Now all who thus take, and continue to hold the sword, shall finally perish by it, either literally, as the Jews soon after did; or spiritually, by making shipwreck of their holy faith. C.

Ver. 61. To speak against the temple was a capital offence, Je. 26. 11, 12, 15, 24, according to the Jewish common law—which, as is evident, both from the case of Jeremiah and of our Lord, meant little else than any decision that pleased the rulers, or any ebullition of the popular will. C.

Ver. 74. To curse. 'To anathematize himself,' to imprecate judgments upon himself, if his denial were untrue.—To swear, 'To swear by the name of God. So deep, alas! was the fall of Peter! But, oh! what a scale does it furnish wherein poor backsliding sinners may measure out the mercy and love of God!—Cook. The rabbinical writers assert that, 'on account of the holy things,' no cocks were kept in Jerusalem: and therefore it has been asserted that the narrative is untrue, as Peter could not hear what the city did not contain. Let the rabbinical account be admitted for true, so far as Jewish authority extended, and will it follow that no Roman soldier kept a cock for his own pleasure or profit? or will it follow that Peter, from the house of Caiaphas, adjoining the city wall, could not hear one from a distance in the country, where no one has questioned the bird's existence? C.

REFLECTIONS.—Unbounded was the foreknowledge of our Redeemer, and astonishing his delight in the view of his sufferings for the world. Great is his care to vindicate all good conduct, to honour all that honour him, and to direct all to opportunities of doing good to their brethren; and infinite his regard to his Father's oracles and ordinances and the salvation of the world. In view of death—a dreadful death—he joins believers in the seals of the promise, and appoints them a permanent feast for spiritual nourishment: representing all his labours of love, and sealing and applying his person and righteousness to their soul! And faithful and reasonable were his warnings against temptation.—How heavy the weight of our sins lay on him! How fearful his agonies! how fervent his prayers! Yet great was his submission to his Father's will: marvellous his readiness to suffer, and kind his rebukes even to the worst!—But, alas! how was he hated by men—plotted against without cause—envied of his honours—betrayed for a trifle—shamefully discredited and contradicted, even by his saints—presumptuously apprehended—despitefully abused—and basely denied, after the most solemn warning! Let me learn to watch and pray against temptation. I know not whether Satan may drag or my corruption drive me. Let me always honour Jesus whatever be the expense; be liberal to his poor, and always give ROCK UPON WHICH JESUS LEANED. [Matt., xxvi:36]—"Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane, and saith unto the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder." After rising from this last prayer tired and heart-broken it is thought that Jesus leaned upon the rock illustrated in the above picture for a moment's rest. Standing here and seeing hundreds of Russian pilgrims, nothing I had ever witnessed before was so deeply pathetic as to see those poor people bend and kiss this rock. The truth is that the rock is actually being kissed away by the lips of devoted saints. The greatest wonder of all the ages is the depth of affection in the heart of the human race for Jesus Christ. A wonder great as His divinity is the fact that people worship Him, and love Him.

CANA OF GALILEE—THE PLACE OF THE FIRST MIRACLE. [JOHN, ii : 1.]—"And the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee: and the mother of Jesus was there."—John, ii : 1. Five miles from Nazareth and quietly nestling in the midst of olive and fig trees, is Cana of Galilee, accurately photographed as above. There are about two hundred families here. There is a Greek church, the dome of which you see in the picture, in which it is claimed are the water-pots which contained the water Christ turned into wine, and which was obtained from the spring shown in the foreground. These vessels are preserved with great care because of their historic and religious significance. This village, like many others in Palestine, would have passed from the memory of the human race but for the first miracle of Christ performed there.

58 But Peter followed him afar off, unto the high-priest's palace, and went in, [l]and sat with the servants, to see the end.

59 Now the chief priests, and elders, and all the council, [m]sought false witness against Jesus, to put him to death;

60 But[n] found none: yea, though many false witnesses came, yet found they none.[2] At the last came two false witnesses,

61 And said, This fellow said, [p]I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days.

62 And the high-priest arose, and said unto him, Answerest thou nothing? What is it which these witness against thee?

63 But Jesus [q]held his peace. And the high-priest answered and said unto him, I adjure[r] thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be [s]the Christ, the Son of God.

64 Jesus saith unto him, Thou[3] hast said:[4] nevertheless[5] I say unto you, [t]Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

65 Then[u] the high-priest rent his clothes, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy; what further need have we of witnesses? behold, now ye have heard his blasphemy.

66 What think ye? They answered and said, He[v] is guilty of death.

67 Then[x] did they spit in his face, and buffeted[6] him; and others smote him with the palms of their hands,[7]

68 Saying,[y] Prophesy unto us, thou Christ, who is he that smote thee?

69 ¶ Now[z] Peter sat without in the palace: and a damsel came unto him, saying, Thou also wast with Jesus [a]of Galilee.

70 But he denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest.

71 And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and said unto them that were there, This fellow was also with [b]Jesus of Nazareth.

72 And again he denied with an oath, [c]I do not know the man.

73 And after a while came unto him they that stood by, and said to Peter, Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech bewrayeth thee.

74 Then[d] began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man. And immediately the cock crew.

75 And Peter remembered the word of Jesus, which said unto him, [e]Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. [f]And he went out, and wept bitterly.[8]

* The first difficulty connected with this passage is that the quotation is ascribed to Jeremiah, while it is only found in Zechariah. The following, it is will, I think, account for this. Zechariah (ch. 11. 12, 13) evidently refers to the potter of Jeremiah (ch. xviii. xix.), and the predictions illustrated by the potter's vessel. Zechariah's meaning is, Let these pieces of silver become, like the potter's vessel of Jeremiah, the symbols of the people's doom. They are the price of innocent blood — blood that must yet draw down vengeance more terrible than that shed of old in the valley of Tophet; let them therefore be identified with the potter's field, the place polluted by crime, as a warning that punishment is yet to come. Such was the import of the prediction, and it affords an explanation of the evangelist's reference to Jeremiah. He saw the connexion between the prediction in Zechariah, and the earlier one in Jeremiah, and he regarded the former as a more specific application of the latter. A second difficulty is in the words of the quotation. They differ considerably from those in the original Hebrew. In the Hebrew the whole assumes the form of a transaction between the Lord and the prophet, who personates the Messiah; in the Greek the people are represented as doing all. The change is made to adapt the words to the historical fulfilment, the same leading ideas being developed in both.—P.

8 On comparing this narrative with the parallel passages in Mar. 14. 66-72. Lu. 22. 56-62; and Jn. 18. 17-27, we find considerable verbal & fortuitous. The difficulties here arising may be satisfactorily solved by considering, 1st. That Peter disputed at some considerable length with those who charged him with being a follower of Jesus. 2d. That one of the evangelists would record one part of the conversation, and another another. As Alford rightly remarks: 'I do not see that we are obliged to limit the narrative to three sentences from Peter's mouth, each expressing a denial, and no more. On three occasions during the night he was recognized; on three occasions he was a denier of his Lord. Such a statement may well embrace reiterated expressions of recognition, and reiterated and importunate denials on each occasion.'—P.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 Christ is delivered bound to Pilate. 3 Judas hangeth himself. 19 Pilate, admonished of his wife, 24 washeth his hands: 26 and looseth Barabbas. 29 Christ is crowned with thorns, 34 crucified, 40 reviled, 50 dieth, and is buried: 66 his sepulchre is sealed, and a watch set over it.

WHEN the morning was come,[1] all[a] the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put him to death.

2 And when they had bound him, they led him away, and [b]delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor.[2]

3 ¶ Then[c] Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself,[3] and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders,

4 Saying, I have sinned, [d]in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, [e]What is that to us? see thou to that.

5 And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, [f]and departed, and went and hanged himself.

6 And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood.

7 And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in.

8 Wherefore that field was called, [h]The field of blood, unto this day.

9 Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, [i]And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value;[4]

10 And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.[5]

11 ¶ And[j] Jesus stood before the governor: and the governor asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest.[6]

12 And[k] when he was accused of the chief priests and elders, he answered nothing.

13 Then said Pilate unto him, [l]Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee?

14 And he answered him to never a word; insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

15 ¶ Now[m] at that feast the governor was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would.

16 And[n] they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas.

to embrace his preached gospel. And, on his demand, gladly let me receive him into my house and heart. A deep sense of my sinfulness should make me always ready to suspect the worst of myself. If I indulge self-confidence, if I disregard a Saviour's warning, I shall quickly fall, fearfully fall, before the slightest temptations. If I indulge one sin, it will quickly plunge me into a worse. If then I have been overtaken in a fault, let me quickly and bitterly repent. It is not the greatness or number of my sins that can ruin me, but my obstinate impenitence and unbelief.

CHAPTER XXVII.—Crucifixion was the most cruel, shameful, and cursed death that could be devised: was not at all used by the Jews; and by the Romans inflicted only upon slaves, and the basest of the people, who were capital offenders. The person was nailed to the cross as it lay upon the ground, through each hand, extended to its utmost stretch, and through both the feet together; then the cross was erected, and the foot of it, with a violent thrust which disjointed the whole body of the sufferer, placed into a hole in the ground prepared to receive it. The whole weight of the body thus hung upon the nails, which went through the hands and feet till the person expired by mere dint of terrible pain.

Ver. 9. By Jeremy. This prophecy is not found in Jeremiah.

THE FIELD OF BLOOD—NOW A PLACE OF TOMBS AND A RESORT FOR LEPERS. [Matt., xxvii:6, 7, 8.]—"And the chief priest took the silver pieces and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood, and they took counsel and bought with them the potter's field to bury strangers in. Wherefore that field was called the field of blood unto this day." And so we have with us still the same field a little way outside the walls of Jerusalem. At the bottom of this field, or hill, is the Valley of Hinnom, where children in ancient times were sacrificed to Moloch. It was called the place of fire, and sometimes Gehenna. It is now a place of tombs and a resort for lepers. The earliest mention of the Valley of Hinnom is in Josh., xv:8.

17 Therefore, when they were gathered together, Pilate said unto them, [p]Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or [q]Jesus which is called Christ?

18 For he knew [r]that for envy they had delivered him.

19 ¶ When[s] he was set down on the judgment-seat, his wife[7] sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just man; for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him.

20 ¶ But[t] the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus.

21 The governor answered and said unto them, Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you? They said, Barabbas.

22 Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus, which is called Christ? [u]They all say unto him, Let him be crucified.

23 And the governor said, Why, what evil hath he done? But they cried out the more, saying, [v]Let him be crucified.

24 When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he[w] took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of [x]this just person: see ye to it.

25 Then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us, and on our children.[8]

26 Then released he Barabbas unto them: and when he had [y]scourged Jesus, he delivered him to be crucified.

27 ¶ Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the common hall,[9] and [a]gathered unto him the whole band of soldiers.

28 And they stripped him, and put on him a scarlet robe.

29 And when they had platted a crown of thorns,[1] they put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and [b]mocked him, saying, Hail, King of the Jews!

30 And[c] they spit upon him, and took the reed, and smote him on the head.

31 And[d] after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him.

32 And,[e] as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear his cross.

33 ¶ And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, A place of a skull,[2]

[2] The word Golgotha is Aramaic, and its Greek equivalent is given by Matthew, Luke, and John. The Latin Calvary has become incorporated in every language of Europe. Different accounts have been given of the origin of the name. Some say it is so called because it was the burial-place of Adam, and his skull was preserved there: others that it was the place where malefactors were beheaded; others that there was a skull-shaped mound at it. There is no reference to any mound or hill earlier than the fourth century. As to the site of Calvary, we have no definite information. We learn from the evangelists that it was outside of Jerusalem, near some public road, and visible from a distance. Mar. 15.20. Jn. 19.20. Lu. 23.49. [9] The words of ver. 52, 53 must be interpreted literally, like other parts of this narrative. The graves were thrown open by the shock of the earthquake at the time of Christ's death. They were rock tombs, with stone doors. The dead, however, did not rise till the moment of Christ's resurrection. They rose with, or after him; for he was the "first-fruits of them that slept. They appeared unto many, as if to afford visible evidence that He was "the resurrection and the life. How long they continued to appear is not stated. What became of them afterwards is not stated. Possibly, as Alford suggests, they may have remained on earth forty days, and then ascended with Christ to glory.—P.

34 They[g] gave him vinegar to drink, mingled with gall: and when he had tasted thereof, he would not drink.

35 And[h] they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots.

36 And sitting down, they watched him there;

37 And set up over his head his accusation written, THIS[3] IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS.[4]

38 Then[i] were there two thieves[5] crucified with him; one on the right hand, and another on the left.

39 ¶ And[j] they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads,

40 And saying, [k]Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross.

41 Likewise also the chief priests [l]mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said, 42 He saved others, himself he cannot save. [m]If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him.

43 He[n] trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him: for he said, [o]I am the Son of God.

44 The thieves also,[6] which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth.[7]

45 ¶ Now [p]from the sixth hour there was darkness[8] over all the land unto the ninth hour.

46 And about the ninth hour [r]Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

47 Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, [s]This man calleth for Elias.

48 And straightway one of them ran, and took a sponge, [t]and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink.

49 The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him.

50 Jesus,[u] when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost.

but in Zechariah, ch. 11. 12, 13. This substitution has therefore been pronounced the error of a transcriber, or a lapse of memory in the writer. But the first of these opinions is contrary to the best MS. authority; the second, to the whole idea of inspiration. That Zechariah may also have been called Jeremiah, or that Jeremiah may actually have written part of the prophecy emitted by Zechariah, affords a ready and sufficient solution of the whole difficulty. C.

Ver. 22. Thou sayest. The words may be translated, 'Sayest thou that I am?' see Jn. 18. 34. But the affirmation of his being a king (see Jn. 18. 36, 37) seems as necessary for a witness to the Gentiles as it was to the Jews. C.

Ver. 25. This imprecation, dictated by a ferocious cruelty that would satiate its appetite for blood at any price, has been, alas! most literally fulfilled. After the reduction of Jerusalem by Titus, more than 500 Jews were sometimes crucified in a single day, until, in the words of their own historian, 'there was wanting room for crosses, and crosses for bodies.' And many of these were no doubt the children of those who had uttered this unmerciful imprecation. C.

55 And[d] many women were there, beholding afar off, which followed Jesus from Galilee, ministering unto him:

56 Among which was [e]Mary Magdalene,[2] and Mary the mother of James and Joses, and the mother of Zebedee's children.

57 ¶ When[g] the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathea,[3] named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple:[4]

58 He went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered.

59 And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, 60 And laid it in his[5] own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock:[6] and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed.

61 And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre.

62 ¶ Now the next day, that followed the day[h] of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, 63 Saying, Sir, we remember that [i]that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, [k]After three days I will rise again.

64 Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and [l]steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first.[7]

65 Pilate said unto them, Ye have a [8]watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can.

66 So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch.[9]

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 Christ's resurrection is declared by an angel to the women. 9 Christ himself appeareth to them. 11 The chief priests give the soldiers money to say that he was stolen out of his sepulchre. 16 Christ appeareth to his disciples, 18 and sendeth them to teach and baptize all nations.

IN the [c]end of the sabbath,[1] as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, to see the sepulchre.[2]

2 And, behold, there was[3] a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

3 His[5] countenance[4] was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow:

4 And [c]for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.[5]

5 And the angel [d]answered and said unto the women, [e]Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

6 He is not here; [g]for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

7 And [h]go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you.

2 Considerable difficulty is experienced in harmonizing the four accounts of the resurrection given by the evangelists. This arises from a variety of causes:—1. The evangelists wrote independently. None of them appears to have been acquainted with the writings of the others. 2. Each writer records those facts which most struck himself. 3. We have no full account of all the events, so as to be able to supply the connecting links. peopled by a Grecian colony. It was long governed by its own kings; but was finally bequeathed to the Romans. During the prevalence of Christianity in north Africa, it was a place of importance; but was conquered by the Saracens, A.D. 640. Christianity has nearly disappeared, and Mahometanism reigns amidst ruins and barrenness. C.

Ver. 34. Gall. That this was some bitter infusion is all that is precisely known. It is probable, however, that it was a narcotic, employed, in 'cruel mercy,' to stupify the sufferers; or perhaps even poisonous, and used to hasten dissolution. Wherefore our Lord, who was resigned to suffer, as appointed to save, 'to the uttermost,' would not drink. C.

Ver. 46. Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? These are not the precise Hebrew words of Ps. 22. 1, but a translation into the Syro-Chaldaic. Why hast thou forsaken me? This is neither the language of expostulation nor impatience: for he came to do, and therefore to suffer, the will of the Father. It is merely a believing recitation of the words of the Spirit (Ps. 22. 1), adduced to show that, in obedience to the Father's will, Messiah behoved to be 'cut off,' and left for a time to the triumphant malice of Satan and of wicked men. C.

Ver. 51. Vail. There were two vails, the one at the entrance of the holy place, the other between the holy place and the sanctuary. This was called 'the inner,' and, in He. 9. 3, 'the second vail.' The vail was the emblem of the flesh of Christ, He. 10. 20, which being rent by death, made patent the way into 'the holiest of all,' He. 9. 8. C.

Ver. 60. He rolled a great stone, &c. It is not likely that Joseph, who had hewn a sepulchre out of a rock, would have a door so inartificial as this is sometimes represented—a mere round stone to be rolled up against the entrance. It is much more probable that it was, what may still be seen in the East, a flat circular stone that was rolled in a groove. C.

Ver. 66. Sealing the stone. How this sealing was effected cannot be precisely ascertained. But tombs are still found in the East in which a hole in the circular stone described in the foregoing note (ver. 60) corresponds to one in the rock when the stone is rolled into its place. This hole, it would appear, was intended for a piece of wood or iron, the head of which, if pushed a little within the outer surface of the stone, could easily be so sealed as to render opening without detection quite impossible. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Men, especially wicked rulers, are awfully set upon mischief. Not only commanded devotion, but even necessary sleep, must give way to it. But dreadful is the reward of treachery to Christ. And the price of blood, the horrors of conscience, and the sorrows of hell, are closely linked together. Yet no alarming convictions, no pretences to piety, can restrain men abandoned to wickedness.—Dreadful from earth, from hell, from heaven, were the sufferings of our Redeemer. Hypocritical rulers, the lately extolling mob, the inwardly convinced heathen governor, the profane soldiers, concur to abuse and murder him. But, alas! at what expense of misery to themselves and posterity, for many ages, do the hardened Jews, who had witnessed his benevolent miracles and heard his saving doctrines, cry for his blood! In the most dreadful manner they tempt him to abandon his work of redemption. But willingly and steadily he persevered in his saving of sinful men! Yea, the malice of the priests and elders, the treachery of Judas, the insolence and imprecations of the mob, the indulgence and obstinacy of Pilate, the insults of the soldiers, the attempt to imprison him in his grave, were all marvellously overruled to accomplish the oracles of God, and for the honour of Jesus and redemption of his church. With pleasure and triumph he therefore breathed out his last. And the most honourable attestations were given to his death. Thrice happy are they who sleep in Jesus!—Them will God, through his death, bring with him, that they may be glorified together.—Stand in awe, then, my soul! avoid sin, lest it bring thee to a miserable end, and entail a curse on my seed. Never value thyself on popular applause, which may so quickly be turned into contempt, malice, and murder. Let me never account anything too much to be given, or to be suffered, for the sake of my dying Redeemer. While others prefer Barabbas, let me adhere to look on and weep with him in every difficulty and danger. Let me never come down from my cross till I can say, It is finished. And let neither death nor the grave terrify me, since Jesus the forerunner hath for me passed through and entered into his glory.—See now, my soul, the dreadful punishment, and in that the nature, of my sin! What is a drowned world, a burning Sodom, a plagued Egypt, an opened hell, in comparison of the Son of God suffering—troubled in spirit, till he knew not what to say—amazed and very heavy—sorrowful, even unto death—in an agony, sweating great drops of blood—tormented and insulted by men—harassed by devils—deserted by God—groaning and giving up the ghost, under the weight of infinite wrath!—Listen, O my soul, how, by every debasement, every strait, every labour, every reproach, every wound, every groan, every tear, every drop of blood, Jesus charges me to come to him, that I may have life! Behold how my debt is paid, my happiness secured, my peace with God procured and confirmed, and my comfort enhanced! There divine righteousness is honored, transgression finished, the curse exhausted, the law magnified, God reconciled, death vanquished, and hell extinguished—and all for me!

Ver. 13. The statement of the watch contains the proof of its own falsehood. Had they said, 'Some persons unknown have stolen him,' they might have been believed. But when they charge the stealing against the disciples, and yet acknowledge they themselves were asleep when the theft was committed, they are asserting what they could not know, and are therefore entitled to no credence. That this falsehood was diligently dissemi-

10 Then said Jesus unto them, [k]Be not afraid: go[l] tell my brethren, that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

11 ¶ Now when they were going, behold some of the watch came into the city,[6] and showed unto the chief priests all the things that were done.

12 And [m]when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave large money unto the soldiers, 13 Saying, Say ye, His disciples came by night, and [o]stole him away while we slept.

14 And[p] if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade him, and secure you.

15 So [q]they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day.

16 ¶ Then[r] the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them.[7]

17 And [s]when they saw him, they worshipped him: but some doubted.[8]

18 ¶ And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, [t]All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

19 Go[u] ye therefore, and teach all [9]nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;

20 Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, [v]I am with you[1] alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.[2]

2 The concluding verses of this Gospel are among the most precious in the Bible. Christ's declaration that all power is given to him, in his mediatorial capacity, King and Head of his church, is the basis of what follows. 'Go ye therefore.' I am your King, and you are bound to obey; I am omnipotent, and you must succeed. Go and 'make disciples of all nations'—never cease until all mankind become mine. Go and teach them 'what I have commanded you'—my word is to be your sole text-book. And then, 'AND, lo, I am with you always.' F.

Ver. 18. All power is given unto me—of which he had shown specimens upon earth in repelling Satan, casting out demons, healing diseases, raising the dead, producing food, stilling the tempest, smiting the barren fig-tree, and convincing and converting sinners. This power was given to him as Mediator, God and man in one person, in which character he held it not inherently but derivatively from the Father. C.

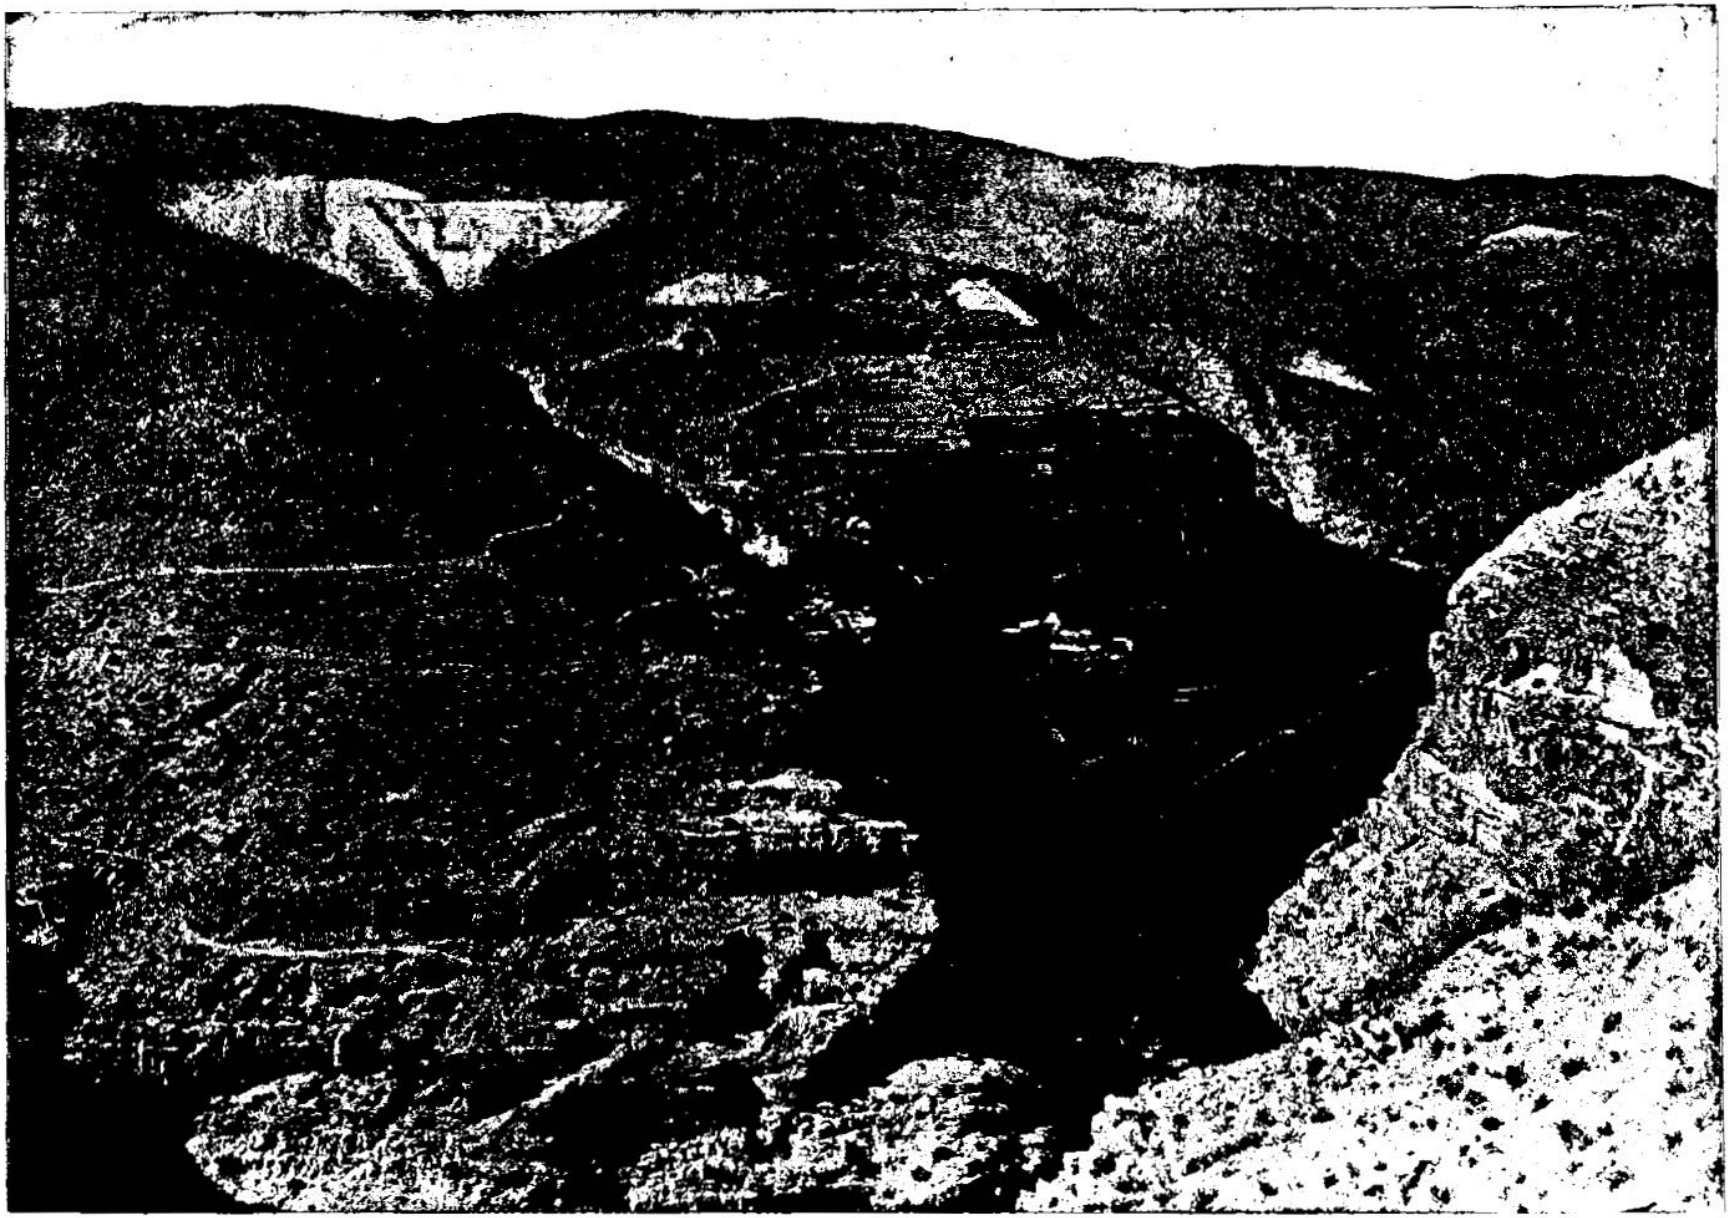
REFLECTIONS.—Jesus, who was delivered for our offences, rises again for our justification! In the most solemn and seasonable manner JEHOVAH liberates our Savior when man is redeemed. And great earthquakes, mighty angels, risen saints, suspicious disciples, terrified soldiers, and an empty grave, are made joint witnesses of this leading article of our Christian faith. Yea, even the self-destructive lie, contrived by the Jewish rulers to refute it, indirectly confirms it. But O how great was his kindness in acknowledging those for brethren who had lately forsaken him, and solemnly to visit those who had so shamefully deserted and so sinfully suspected him. Great are the joys which spring from his being; as God-man, made governor of all things in heaven and earth for the good of his church. What extending of her limits! What discipling of the Gentiles! What solemn admission of them into the family and instruction of them in the things of God. We have need then to hold fellowship with him in every ordinance, and obey him in every command; and, even under the best ministry, to try everything by his laws, and to depend on him in every circumstance for his promised presence.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF MATTHEW.



Matthew was early called to be a disciple and apostle. From that time forward he was a constant attendant upon our Lord; and so, amply qualified to relate 'the things that he both saw and heard.' The Gospel by Matthew is distinguished by the length at which he has related several of our Lord's discourses. Take as examples, the sermon on the mount, his charge to the apostles, his parabolic illustrations of the nature of his kingdom, and his prophecy concerning Jerusalem and the judgment to come. He is also remarkable for the particularity with which he has related so many of our Lord's most wonderful replies to the cavils of his adversaries—replies in which may be found what many of the deepest reasoners of this world have sought in vain—the principle by which evidence rises above probability, and attains to certainty. This our Lord shows to be found in uniformity—in judging of one thing upon exactly the same principles that we judge by in another. By this he silenced the scribes, Pharisees, and Herodians—compelling them, by their judgment in their own case, either to yield to his arguments or shrink away in silence. Of this important principle of reasoning examples may be found, ch. 12. 1–5; 15. 1–9; 16. 1–3; 21. 23–27; 22. 15–22, 41–46.—As the original purpose of the Gospel is to instruct the ignorant, and convince unbelievers, it is presented to us with all the historic evidence that entitles it to the acceptance of reasonable men. It is affirmed by competent witnesses—related with great simplicity;—and that the historians believed their own statements, their sufferings in defence of their testimony sufficiently demonstrate. Upon these grounds it was necessary the Gospel should first stand, so that no unbeliever would be able to screen his infidelity under any pretended want of ordinary historic evidence. Still it is to be remembered, that, while this species of evidence for revelation, like the evidence for the being of a God from the light of nature and creation, is sufficient to leave men without excuse, the believer ascends to a higher ground—the prophecies fulfilled, and the miracles wrought in attestation of our Lord's commission, and the commission emanating from him to his disciples, with the promise of the Holy Spirit to 'bring all things to their remembrance whatsoever he had said to them,' and certainly to 'guide them into all truth.'

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO # SAINT MARK.

Mark, the writer of the following Gospel, is generally supposed to be the person called John, surnamed Mark, who was nephew to Barnabas, Col. 4. 10, and the son of that Mary at whose house many were assembled praying when Peter was delivered from prison, Ac. 12. 12. Peter calls him 'Marcus my son,' 1 Pe. 5. 13, most probably as Paul calls Timothy 'my son in the gospel,' both being spiritual children of their respective fathers in Christ. He accompanied Paul in his travels, Ac. 12. 25; 13. 5–13; 15. 36–41; 2 Ti. 4. 11; Phile. 24; and he is said to have been amanuensis to Peter, and to have prepared his gospel narrative under Peter's inspection, and chiefly for the use of the Gentile converts. The internal evidence of this Gospel seems to favour this statement, for many things particularly honourable to Peter are omitted, while his weaknesses and faults are minutely detailed; given, as it were, con amore, not with the vain ostentation of a proud humility, but with the inward desire to humble the sinner and exalt the Saviour. Some learned commentators have represented it as an abridgment of the larger narrative of Matthew. But though there is doubtless a considerable agreement, yet Mark omits many important particulars mentioned by Matthew, and adds others, dilating upon some things only cursorily noticed by Matthew, and differs from him considerably in the order of time. So that, these things considered, there can appear no reason for supposing one Gospel an abridgment of the other, but that each is an independent narrative of the same events, derived from the same sources, and varying only as it pleased the Holy Spirit that the one should form a supplement or exposition to the other. That the Gospel of Mark was originally written in Greek, is the uniform voice of antiquity; though some, on the ground of a few Latin words, have supposed it originally written in Latin. But the use of a few Latin words in a Greek discourse may be easily accounted for by the residence of Mark at Rome, and the fact of his writing for a people who generally spoke Latin, yet as generally read and understood Greek, and considered it the most efficient vehicle for public instruction. Mark, as writing more immediately for the Gentiles, omits the genealogy of our Lord, so specially recorded by Matthew and Luke; but though omitting his record as 'Son of man,' he opens his history with asserting him to have been 'the Son of God.' C.

One or two other characteristics of Mark's Gospel are worthy of note:—(1) It contains fewer quotations from the Old Testament than the other Gospels. The reason is obvious; such quotations would not have been received as authoritative by those to whom the Gospel was immediately addressed. (2) It contains explanations of Jewish rites. (3) It gives interpretations of Aramaic words. (4) Passages abound in which hopes are held out to the heathen of admission to the kingdom of heaven even without the Jews, ch. 12. 9, and in which the religion of the heart is placed far above mere formality, ch. 2. 18; 3. 1–5; 7. 5–23. (5) It describes with greater minuteness and graphic power some of the events of our Lord's life than the other Gospels. It dwells more on the acts and history of Christ than on his sayings:—His displays of divine power; his war with and victory over Satan; his universal benevolence; his defence and development of all that is noble, good, and pure. In a word, Mark exhibits Jesus as the founder of a religion divine in its origin, pure in its principles, and ennobling in its results. P.

CHAPTER I.

1 The office of John the Baptist. 9 Jesus is baptized, 12 tempted of the devil, 14 he preacheth: 16 calleth Peter, Andrew, James, and John: 23 healeth one that had a devil, 29 Peter's mother-in-law, 32 many diseased persons, 40 and cleanseth the leper.

THE [a]beginning[1] of the gospel of Jesus Christ, [b]the Son of God;[2]

2 As it is [c]written in the [3]prophets, [d]Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

3 The[e] voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

4 John[g] did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for[4] the remission of sins.

5 And[h] there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, [i]confessing their sins.

6 And John was [j]clothed with camel's hair, and with a girdle of a skin about his loins; and he did eat locusts and wild honey;

7 And preached, saying, [k]There cometh one mightier than I after me, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.

8 I[l] indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.

9 ¶ And[m] it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.

10 And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened,[5] and the Spirit,[o] like a dove, descending upon him:

11 And [p]there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.[6]

12 ¶ And[q] immediately the Spirit driveth him[7] into the wilderness.

13 And he was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan; and was [r]with the wild beasts; and the angels [s]ministered unto him.[8]

14 ¶ Now after that [t]John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching [u]the gospel of the kingdom of God,

16 ¶ Now[z] as he walked by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.

17 And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become [a]fishers of men.

18 And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him.

19 And when he had gone a little further thence, he saw James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship mending their nets.

20 And straightway he called them: and they [b]left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after him.

21 And[c] they went into Capernaum: and straightway on the sabbath-day he entered into the synagogue, and taught.

22 And[d] they were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes.

23 ¶ And[e] there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit; and he cried out,

24 Saying, [f]Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, [h]the Holy One of God.[9]

25 And Jesus [i]rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.

26 And[j] when the unclean spirit had torn [l]him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.

27 And[k] they were all amazed, insomuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they do obey him.

* We have three independent accounts of the baptism. In the English version the words of the 'voice from heaven' are different in all three. In Matthew they are as follows:—'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased;' in Mark: 'Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased;' in Luke: 'Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleased.' In the Greek Mark differs from Luke only in one word: the former has ἐν ('whom'), the latter σοι ('thee'). The best MSS. have σοι in both, and this is the true reading; so that Mark and Luke exactly agree. In them 'the voice' speaks to Jesus. In Matthew the voice speaks to the people: 'This is,' &c. Is it not probable, is it not natural, to conclude that both utterances were given?—P.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 4. The baptism of repentance—because his principal topic was calling 'a generation of vipers' to repent, and 'flee from the wrath to come,' see Mat. 1. 7, 8; and his chief argument to enforce attention and obedience was the doctrine of the grace of God, which proclaims to every believing penitent sinner remission of his sins through Jesus Christ. C.

Ver. 10. Straightway. That is, 'And coming up out of the water, he (John) straightway (immediately after) saw the Spirit descending,' &c. Bloomfield, in conjunction with some very high authorities, says it was JESUS, and not JOHN, who saw the Spirit descending; but a reference to Jn. 1. 32–34 seems to refer it unquestionably to John. C.—Like a dove. 'The expression does not define the form of appearance (though we learn from Luke that it was in a bodily form), but the manner of its descent, namely, like the rapid gliding of a dove.' Bloomfield.

Ver. 13. Wild beasts are not mentioned by Matthew, for he wrote for Jews who knew the wilderness; but they are mentioned by Mark, who wrote for Roman citizens, and to whom this circumstance would afford a striking feature in our Lord's temptation. C.

REFLECTIONS.—John delightfully, but humbly, prepares the way that grace and truth may come through our incarnate God. But the greatest of ministers are 28 And[i] immediately his fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

29 ¶ And[n] forthwith, when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John.

30 But Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever; and anon they tell him of her.

31 And he came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up; [o]and immediately the fever left her, and she [p]ministered unto them.

32 ¶ And [q]at even, when the sun did set,[2] they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils.

33 And all the city was gathered together at the door.

34 And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases,[3] and cast out many devils; [r]and suffered not the devils [4]to speak, because they knew him.[5]

35 ¶ And [s]in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed.[6]

36 And Simon, and they that were with him, followed after him.

37 And when they had found him, they said unto him, [t]All men seek for thee.

38 And he said unto them, [u]Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth.

39 And he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and [v]cast out devils.

40 ¶ And[x] there came a leper to him, beseeching him, and kneeling down to him, and saying unto him, [y]If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

41 And Jesus, [z]moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou clean.

42 And as soon as he had spoken, [a]immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed

43 And he straitly charged him, and forthwith sent him away;

44 And saith unto him, [b]See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, show thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, [c]for a testimony unto them.

45 But[d] he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places; [e]and they came to him from every quarter.

2 We learn from ver. 21 that the day on which Christ healed the man with an unclean spirit was the Sabbath. Our Lord performed on that day acts of mercy: but the Jews considered it wrong to bring to him their sick to be healed. When even was come, however, and the Sabbath concluded, they brought the sick to our Lord.—P.

What a lesson does this teach the Christian! Jesus was overwhelmed with work; his whole time was absorbed by the labours of his great office. Business, however, did not prevent him from the exercise of prayer. When neither time nor opportunity could be secured for it by day, or in the city, he rose before dawn, and selecting a retired spot, there prayed. So should it be with us. When ordinary occupations, or pressing business, bear upon stated times of devotion, we should take the time from the rest of the night. No earthly object, in fact, ought to be permitted to abridge our times of prayer.—P.

4 Our Lord's object is to prove that he is God, and that he has therefore power to forgive sins. He admits the validity of the reasoning that God only can forgive them. He was not able to afford them any direct evidence that the man's sins were forgiven when he declared them to be so. He must give some proof of his divinity which would be fully cognizable by man's senses; this he does by the miracle of healing. They saw the miracle; they could not question its reality; they could not deny that divine power alone could accomplish it, and the logical inference from it was that Jesus, being God, had power to forgive sins. Thus our Lord himself appeals to his miracle as a proof of his Godhead and his divine mission.—P.

CHAPTER II.

1 Christ healeth one sick of the palsy, 14 calleth Matthew from the receipt of custom, 15 eateth with publicans and sinners, 18 excuseth his disciples for not fasting, 23 and vindicateth them for plucking the ears of corn on the sabbath-day.

AND again[a] he entered into Capernaum after some days; and it was noised that he was in the house.

2 And[b] straightway many were gathered together, insomuch that there was no room to receive them, no, not so much as about the door: and [c]he preached the word unto them.

3 ¶ And[d] they come unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four.

4 And when they could not come nigh unto him for the press, they uncovered the [1]roof where he was: and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the sick of the palsy lay.

5 When Jesus [e]saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, [f]Son, thy sins be [2]forgiven thee.

6 But there were certain of the scribes sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts,

7 Why[h] doth this man thus speak blasphemies? Who[i] can forgive sins but God only?

8 And immediately, when Jesus [j]perceived in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, he said unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts?[3]

9 Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk?

10 But that ye may know that [k]the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (he saith to the sick of the palsy,)[4]

11 I[l] say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house.

12 And immediately he arose, took up the bed, and went forth before them all; [m]insomuch that they were all amazed, and glorified God, saying, We never saw it on this fashion.

13 ¶ And he went forth again by the sea-side; and all [o]the multitude resorted unto him, and he taught them.

14 And[p] as he passed by, he saw Levi the son of Alphæus sitting at the receipt of [5]custom, but emptiness and nothing if compared with their divine Master. When multitudes attend their ministrations, all must issue in repentance towards God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ. And highly criminal is our unbelief of the gospel, which has been attested by concurrent reports of inspired evangelists, by the sermons of John and of Jesus, by victories over devils, the approbation of angels, by JEHOVAH'S testimony from heaven, by the Spirit's descent, and by miracles unnumbered. O what do I owe to Christ! If I am accepted of God, it is in him:—if I receive the Spirit, it is through him:—if I am tempted as a Christian, it is in conformity to him:—if I resist the devil, and he flee from me, it is through his having been tempted, that he might succour them that are tempted:—if angels minister to me, it is at his command and for his sake:—if I am called or qualified as a Christian or minister, it is by him:—if I am delivered from diseases or devils, I owe all to him. Let me then never act the part of a devil in asking, What have I to do with him? And if I have experienced his grace, let me gratefully employ all that I have in his service and praise.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 4. Uncovered the roof. They ascended by the outer stair, and came over the place where they knew or believed JESUS was. They then broke up the flat covering of the roof, and let down the sick man by cords attached to the four corners of the carpet or mat, which, according to eastern custom, constituted his bed.—Note, There is an expressive proverb: 'Wherever there is a will there is a way:' of which the faith of these friends affords a beautiful example. 'Go thou' to thy friend, diseased in spirit, 'and do likewise.' Send him to Jesus by the Word of truth, if he will go; and if he will not, bear him to the Great Physician in the prayer of faith. C.

Ver. 22. By the parable of 'new cloth,' and 'new wine,' our Lord illustrates the necessity of suiting his doctrine and requirements to the weak state of his disciples, see Jn. 16. 12, whom he compares to the 'old cloth' and 'old bottles.' In the same spirit Paul says to the Corinthians, 'I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able,' 1 Co. 3. 2. Even so, the Lord seldom tries a young convert, or an infant church, by the test of persecution; but when they have ceased to be children, it often pleases him to call them to the duties and endurance of men. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Let me always attend Jesus' ordin-and said unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him.

15 ¶ And it came to pass, that, as Jesus sat at meat in his house, [g]many publicans and sinners[6] sat also together with Jesus and his disciples: for there were many, and they followed him.

16 And when the scribes and Pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, [h]How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?

17 When Jesus heard it, he saith unto them, They[i] that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

18 ¶ And[k] the disciples of John and of the Pharisees used to fast: and they come and say unto him, [l]Why do the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast, but thy disciples fast not?

19 And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the [m]bride-chamber fast while the bridegroom[7] is with them? as long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast.

20 But the days will come when the bridegroom [n]shall be taken away from them, and then [o]shall they fast in those days.

21 No[e] man also seweth a piece of new[8] cloth on an old garment: else the new piece that filled it up taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worse.

22 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine doth burst the bottles, and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be marred:[a] but new wine must be put into new bottles.[9]

23 ¶ And[b] it came to pass, that he went through the corn-fields on the sabbath-day; and his disciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn.

24 And the Pharisees said unto him, Behold, why[c] do they on the sabbath-day that which is not lawful?

25 And he said unto them, Have ye never read [d]what David did, when he had need, and was an hungered, he, and they that were with him?

26 How he went into the house of God in the days of [e]Abiathar[1] the high-priest, and did eat the show-bread, [p]which is not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with him?

27 And he said unto them, [q]The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath:[2]

28 Therefore[3] the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.

CHAPTER III.

1 Christ healeth the withered hand, 10 and many other infirmities; 11 rebuketh the unclean spirits: 13 chooseth his twelve apostles: 22 confuteth the blasphemous absurdity of casting out devils by Beelzebub: 31 and showeth who are his brother, sister, and mother.

AND he[a] entered again into the synagogue; and there was a man there which had a withered[1] hand.

2 And[b] they watched him, whether he would heal him on the sabbath-day; that they might accuse him.

3 And he saith unto the man which had the withered hand, [c]Stand forth.

4 And he saith unto them, [d]Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath-days, or to do evil? [e]to save life, or to kill? But they held their peace.

5 And when he had looked round about on them with [f]anger, being grieved for the hardness[2] of their hearts, he saith unto the man, [g]Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it out: and his hand was restored whole as the other.[3]

6 ¶ And[h] the Pharisees went forth, and straightway took counsel with the Herodians against him, how they might destroy him.

7 But [i]Jesus withdrew himself with his disciples to the sea:[4] and a great multitude from [k]Galilee followed him, and from [l]Judea,

8 And from Jerusalem, and from [m]Idumea, and [n]from beyond Jordan; and they about [o]Tyre and Sidon, a great multitude, when they had heard what great things he did, came unto him.

9 And he spake to his disciples, that a small ship should wait on him [p]because of the multitude, lest they should throng him.

10 For [q]he had healed many; insomuch that they pressed[5] upon him for [r]to touch him, as many as had plagues.[6]

11 And unclean spirits, when they saw [s]him, [t]fell down before him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God.

[2] These words are peculiar to Mark. The meaning of them is that the Sabbath was instituted as a day of rest suitable to man's physical constitution and wants; a day of worship adapted to his moral constitution and spiritual aspirations; a day of hope, leading forward his mind to the eternal rest of heaven, and preparing him for it. The Sabbath being thus made for man, he who is man's Representative, Mediator, and King—who in his mediatorial character has been made head over all things—he is Lord of the Sabbath. He has authority to direct the manner of its observance. The conclusion from the whole is that the Sabbath law contemplates man's real good, both temporal and eternal. It forbids whatever is opposed to it; it sanctions whatever promotes it.—P.

ances, that I may honour him and receive his blessing, that he may speak to my heart, give me the faith which he will approve, forgive my sins, and heal my plagues. And let no impediment hinder me from his grace. While proud sinners are ever rejecting against him to their own destruction, it becomes me to esteem, receive, admire, and honour him to my eternal salvation. And if he call me to himself by his grace, diligently should I exert all my influence in bringing others along with me. Sinners, as such, he came to save: sinners, as such, he calls in his gospel: and him that cometh unto him, he will in no wise cast out. The more sinful and wretched I feel myself to be, the more evident is my gospel right to receive the Redeemer, who came to seek and to save that which is lost. No publican or sinner is too bad for him to save, or too obstinate for him to conquer. And he does, and must, seek us before we seek him. Wisely he connects every duty with its proper season, and proportions his people's services to their ability. Let then his word be my rule, and his authority my obligation, in observing his Sabbaths and ordinances: and let his grace make me prize his service, since all is designed for my profit.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 5. Looked round about on them with anger, being grieved. The word ὀργὴ does not necessarily signify anger, but any commotion of the mind. The first feeling of our Lord was grief for the calamities he foresaw as the natural and inevitable consequence of that hardness of heart. The second, that emotion of dissatisfaction with which a holy mind, the image of a holy God, must always regard sin, the common enemy both of God and man. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Attendance on Christ for his healing power and grace is always hopeful. No day is unseasonable for works of mercy, especially in dealing with him. And if he order us to give dead hearts, or stretch out withered hands, himself must afford the ability. The most earnest gospel calls are in vain without the loving power of his grace. Many, alas! by their obstinacy and hardness of heart, provoke his grief and indignation, and return him hatred, murder, and blasphemy for his kindness!—and men deny and abuse him whom even devils confess and obey! But it is highly absurd to pretend his connection with Satan, when their interests are so evidently contrary. And dreadful is that presumption which leads to the unpardonable sin. Professors should carefully avoid this infallible cause of ruin. Very honourable is a spiritual relation to Christ, and an active faithfulness in his service. If then he graciously call me to his work, let no censures of men deter or importunity of friends divert me from it.

TRAVELING IN GALILEE. [Mark, iii:7, 8.]—Jesus Christ was brought up in Galilee and often traveled through it. This scene is one common to the country. Every day one is likely to meet families traveling just as is here shown. Things never change in Palestine. As they travel to-day, they have always traveled, and there is no doubt that our Savior witnessed many just such scenes as the one here photographed. A couple of boxes are strapped on the back of a mule or donkey so that one box balances the other. Then a part of the family occupy one box while the remainder occupy the other. The head of the household goes in front to lead the mule and to protect and guide his loved ones. One is constantly impressed with the air of contentment which seems to gather in the faces of the people in this country.

12 And [a]he straitly charged them that they should not make him known.[8]

13 ¶ And[9] he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would: and they came unto him.

14 And he ordained[1] twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach,[2]

15 And to have power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils:

16 And [c]Simon he surnamed Peter;

17 And [d]James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James; and he surnamed them Boanerges, which is, [e]The sons of thunder:[3]

18 And [f]Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and [g]Matthew, and [h]Thomas, and [i]James the son of Alphæus, and [k]Thaddeus, and [l]Simon the Canaanite,

19 And [m]Judas Iscariot, which also betrayed him: and they went into an house.[4]

20 ¶ And the multitude cometh together again, so that [n]they could not so much as eat bread.

21 And when his friends[5] heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, [o]He is beside himself.[6]

22 ¶ And the scribes which came down from Jerusalem said, [p]He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth he out devils.

23 And he called them unto him, and said unto them in [q]parables, How can Satan cast out Satan?[7]

24 And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand.

25 And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.

26 And if Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but hath an end.

27 No man can [r]enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man; and then he will spoil his house.

28 Verily[s] I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme:

29 But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in [t]danger of eternal damnation;

30 Because[u] they said, He hath an unclean spirit.[8]

31 ¶ There[v] came then his brethren and his mother, and, standing without, sent unto him, calling him.

32 And the multitude sat about him; and they said unto him, Behold, [w]thy mother and thy brethren without seek for thee.

33 And he answered them, saying, Who is my mother, or my brethren?

34 And he looked round about on them which sat about him, and said, [x]Behold my mother and my brethren!

35 For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The parable of the sower, 14 and the meaning thereof. 21 We must communicate the light of our knowledge to others. 26 The parable of the seed growing secretly, 30 and of the mustard-seed. 35 Christ stilleth a tempest by his word.

AND he[a] began again to teach by the sea-side: and there was gathered unto him a great multitude, so that he [b]entered into a ship, and sat in the sea; and the whole multitude was by the sea on the land.

2 And he taught them many things [c]by parables, and said unto them in his doctrine,

3 Hearken;[d] Behold, there went out a sower to sow:[1]

4 And it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way-side, and [e]the fowls of the air came and devoured it up.

5 And some fell on [f]stony ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth:

6 But when the sun was up, it was scorched; [g]and because it had no root, it withered away.

7 And [h]some fell among thorns; and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit.

8 And [i]other fell on good ground, and did [k]yield fruit that sprang up and increased; and brought forth, some thirty, and some sixty, and some an hundred.

9 And he said unto them, [l]He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

10 ¶ And [m]when he was alone, they that were about him with the twelve asked of him the parable.

11 And he said unto them, [n]Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God; but unto them [o]that are without,[2] all these things are done in parables:

12 That[p] seeing they may see, and not perceive;[3] and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.

13 And he said unto them, [q]Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all parables?

14 ¶ The[r] sower soweth the word.

15 And these are [s]they by the way-side, where the word is sown; but when they have

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 26–29. As Mark very commonly relates the same facts as Matthew, so this is the only parable which Mark relates that is not mentioned by Matthew. The scope of it is to show that the gospel, being once published in the world in a gradual and mysterious manner, should produce a large church therein before the end of time; and that a vital principle of grace, being once planted in a soul, gradually and insensibly increases in strength, vigour, and appear-heard, [u]Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts.

16 And these are [v]they likewise which are sown on stony ground; who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness;

17 And [w]have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time: afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.

18 And [x]these are they which are sown among thorns; such as hear the word,

19 And the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful.

20 And [y]these are they which are sown on good ground; such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirty-fold, some sixty, and some an hundred.

21 ¶ And[a] he said unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or under a bed?[4] and not to be set on a candlestick?

22 For[b] there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested; neither was any thing kept secret, but that it should come abroad.

23 If[c] any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

24 And he said unto them, [d]Take heed what ye hear: [e]with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you; and unto you that hear shall more be given.

25 For[g] he that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath.

26 And he said, [h]So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast [i]seed into the ground,

27 And should sleep and rise, night and day, and the seed should [j]spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.[5]

28 For [k]the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; [l]first the blade, then the ear; after that, the full corn in the ear.[6]

29 But [m]when the fruit is brought forth,[7] immediately [n]he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.

30 ¶ And he said, [p]Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it?

31 It is like a grain of mustard-seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth:

32 But when it is sown, it [q]groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it.

33 And[r] with many such parables spake he the word unto them, as they were able to hear it.

34 But [s]without a parable spake he not unto them: and when they were alone, he expounded all things to his disciples.

35 ¶ And[t] the same day, when the even was come, he saith unto them, Let us pass over unto the other side.

36 And when they had sent away the multitude, they took him even as he was in the [8]ship: and there were also with him other little ships.

37 And[u] there arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full.

38 And he was in the hinder part of the ship, [v]asleep on a pillow:[9] and they awake him, and say unto him, [x]Master, carest thou not that we perish?

39 And he arose, and [y]rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still.[1] And the wind ceased, and there was a great calm.

40 And he said unto them, [z]Why are ye so fearful? how is it that ye have no faith?

41 And they [a]feared exceedingly, and said one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?[2]

AND they[a] came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the [1]Gadarenes.

2 And when he was come out of the ship, immediately there [b]met him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit,

3 Who had his [c]dwelling among the [2]tombs; and no man could bind him, no, not with chains:

4 Because[d] that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him.

5 And always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and [e]cutting himself with stones.

6 But when he saw Jesus afar off, [f]he ran and worshipped him,

7 And cried with a loud voice, and said, [h]What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son

[5] The end of this parable is to show that when our Lord should have preached and confirmed his gospel, by his resurrection and the outpouring of his Spirit, he would then be received into heaven, and seem to leave the word to the mere impulse of natural causes—that is, to the judgment, liberality, effort, zeal—you, to the very emulations, jealousies, & passions of men—yet during all this time would be watching over his field with the eye of the skilful husbandman, and would cut down and gather it the moment it became ripe for the harvest either of life or condemnation.—C.

[6] One lesson which may be drawn from this parable is, that a life of dreamy contemplation, and indolent reflection, whether in convent cell or desert cave, is not necessary to the development of true piety and purity. The truth when planted in the heart of man is nourished by a divine power. Its fruits appear when man is most active in the performance of life's various duties. No lawful duty can ever hinder or interfere with true religion.—P.

Christ our king and head rules the elements. Amid the fury of the tempest, amid the raging of the sea, when all human means of safety seem gone, the prayerful, faithful Christian is never beyond the reach of his Master's omnipotent arm.—P.

It was one of the cities called Decapolis, and much celebrated for its hot baths. It was taken by Vespasian, and, after sustaining all the horrors of a siege, was laid in ashes—an awful retribution for the rejection of the Saviour, ver. 17. [2] It is worthy of note that the cliffs and rocks round Gadara are filled with ancient tombs. They are excavated in the limestone rock, and consist of chambers of various dimensions, sometimes more than 20 ft. square, with loculi for bodies. The doors are slabs of stone, hung upon pivots, and many of them are still in their places. Most of the present inhabitants of Gadara live in these tombs.—P.

ance, and in fruits of holiness, which shall be graciously rewarded in the day of judgment.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! that so much of God's truth should be sown in our world to so little purpose! Unfruitful hearers of the gospel are everywhere numerous; and they who mix faith with the Word, to the salvation and sanctification of their souls, are, alas! very few. There is great need therefore to watch carefully against Satan, and the snares which arise from the pleasures, cares, and terrors of this world. Diligently should we consider how and what we hear; and look well to our hearts, that they be truly sincere and upright; yea, look upward for God's grace to render us fruitful in works of righteousness. Thrice happy is it to be the distinguished objects of Jesus' love, to know the secrets of his grace, and to become careful improvers of whatever gifts or graces he hath given us, that we may abound therein! His work in his church, and in every renewed heart, may indeed be preserved, gradually increased, and at last perfected. In every storm his presence secures the safety of his church, and his word can silence all our fears and troubles. And while he remains the mighty God and Prince of Peace, we need never doubt either of his power or will to save to the uttermost.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 3. His dwelling among the tombs. The

THE GADARENE COUNTRY—SHOWING THE PLACE WHERE THE DEVILS ENTERED INTO THE HERD OF SWINE. [Mark, v:1.]—The Gadarene country lies east of the Jordan. From the point of our present view we see the dim outlines, beyond the Sea of Galilee, of part of the Gadarene country. It is supposed that the swine into which the devils entered ran violently down the steep hill opposite the present city of Tiberias. So that in this view we are looking at about the place where this notable miracle of our Savior was wrought. There are little boats also out on the lake we see, which are used by the boatmen to carry tourists across the lake. The Gadarene country gets its name from the city of Gadara, which is some miles beyond the Sea of Galilee. This view was taken from a point near an old wall, by the edge of the lake.

of the most high God? [f] I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not.

8 For he said unto him, [g]Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.

9 And he asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is Legion;[3] for we are many.[4]

10 And he[5] besought him much, that he would not send them away out of the country.[6]

11 Now there was there, nigh unto the mountains, a great herd of [h]swine feeding.

12 And[i] all the devils besought him, saying, Send us into the swine, that we may enter into them.

13 And forthwith Jesus [k]gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine: and the herd [l]ran violently down a steep place into the sea, (they were about two thousand,) and were choked in the sea.[7]

14 And[m] they that fed the swine fled, and told it in the city, and in the country. And they went out to see what it was that was done.

15 And they come to Jesus, and see him that[n] was possessed with the devil, and had the legion, sitting, and clothed, and in his right mind: [o]and they were afraid.

16 And they that saw it, told them how it befell to him that was possessed with the devil, and also concerning the swine.

17 And[p] they began to pray him to depart out of their coasts.

18 And when he was come into the ship, he that had been possessed with the devil [q]prayed him that he might be with him.

19 Howbeit, Jesus suffered him not,[8] but saith unto him, [r]Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee.

20 And he departed, and began to publish in Decapolis[9] how great things Jesus had done for him: and all men did marvel.

21 ¶ And when Jesus was passed over again by ship unto the other side, [s]much people gathered unto him: and he was nigh unto the sea.

22 And,[z] behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue,[1] Jairus by name; and when he saw him, he fell at his feet,

23 And besought him greatly, saying, [u]My little daughter lieth at the point of death: [v]I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and she shall live.

24 And Jesus went with him; [w]and much people followed him, and thronged him.

25 ¶ And a certain woman, which had an [x]issue of blood twelve years,

26 And had suffered many things of many physicians, and had spent all that she had, and was [y]nothing bettered, but rather grew worse,

27 When she had heard of Jesus, came in the press behind, and [z]touched his garment:

28 For she said, If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole.

29 And straightway the fountain of her blood was dried up: and she felt[2] in her body that she was healed of that plague.

30 And Jesus, immediately knowing in himself that [a]virtue[3] had gone out of him, turned him about in the press, and said, Who touched my clothes?[4]

31 And his disciples said unto him, Thou scest the multitude thronging thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

32 And he looked round about to see her that had done this thing.

33 But the woman, [b]fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before him, and told him all the truth.

34 And he said unto her, [c]Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole: [d]go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

35 ¶ While[5] he yet spake, there came from the ruler of the synagogue's house, certain which said, Thy daughter is dead: why troublest thou the Master any further?

36 As soon as Jesus heard the word that was spoken, he saith unto the ruler of the synagogue, [e]Be not afraid, only believe.

37 And he suffered no man to follow him, save Peter, and James, and John the brother of James.

38 And he cometh to the house of the ruler of the synagogue, and seeth the tumult, and [f]them that wept and wailed[6] greatly.

39 And when he was come in, he saith unto them, Why make ye this ado, and weep? [g]the damsel is not dead, but sleepeth.

40 And they [h]laughed[8] him to scorn. But [5] The owners of the swine were probably Jews, for our Lord as yet confined his ministry to that people; and the loss may therefore have been inflicted on them as a punishment for making a swine's flesh, which they were strictly forbidden to eat themselves, and, by implication, to provide for their Gentile neighbours for the sake of gain.—This miracle may thus have been a miracle of judgment as well as of mercy.—P.

tombs of the East are often roomy and ornamented caves cut in the faces of rocks, or builded on the surface of the earth with stone. That in ancient times they were often used as dwelling-houses, is recorded in Diogenes Laertius, ix. 38; and in modern times the subterraneous tombs of Egypt are often so occupied by the Arabs.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dreadful is the case of natural men who are filled with and governed by devils. Cruelly they tyrannize over their vassals, and furiously work in them, so that no restraints of human laws, solemn vows, awful or engaging providences, nor even common operations of the Holy Ghost, can in the least avail. But great is the mercy that Christ's compassion is infinitely greater than Satan's implacable malice, and his saving power infinitely superior to all his fury; and when he casts out the unclean spirit, he puts a new heart and a right spirit within us. In the most fearful forms he sometimes punishes worldlings by the hand of their own master, for the manifestation of his own power and grace. And great is their folly and wickedness who prefer their secular interests to Jesus Christ and his salvation, and, from inordinate love to the world, desire him to depart from them. If he take them at their word, how dismal is the consequence! But if some reject him, others will rise up ready to receive him. And no distance, no filthiness, no shame, no fear, no discouragement, no derision, no death, shall hinder their health, their comfort, their life, who apply to him; while vain, and even hurtful, are all other means of relief when used without due subordination to him. Even saints are ready to tremble when they ought to triumph; for Jesus often, by voluntary delays, lets the case, even of his most earnest supplicants, become apparently desperate before he grants relief. And scoffers exclude themselves from the means of their conviction. But if his mighty works must sometimes be only the subjects of private adoration and praise, cheerfully ought we to proclaim them, when it is most seasonable, and subservient to his and his Father's glory, and the benefit of mankind.

CHAPTER VI. REFLECTIONS.—It is strange that sinners should so cavil at, contemn, and rage against the Redeemer, and labour to lay hindrances in when he had [q]put them all out, he taketh the father and the mother of the damsel, and them that were with him, and entereth in where the damsel was lying.

41 And he took the damsel by the hand, and said unto her, [r]Talitha cumi; which is, being interpreted, Damsel, I say unto thee, arise.

42 And[s] straightway the damsel arose, and walked; for she was of the age of twelve years. And they were [t]astonished with a great astonishment.

43 And[u] he charged them straitly that no man[7] should know it; and commanded that something should be given her to eat.[8]

CHAPTER VI.

1 Christ is contemned of his countrymen. 7 He giveth the twelve power over unclean spirits. 14 Divers opinions of Christ. 27 John Baptist is beheaded, 29 and buried. 30 The apostles return from preaching. 34 The miracle of five thousand fed with five loaves and two fishes. 45 Christ walketh on the sea: 53 and healeth all that touch him.

AND he[a] went out from thence, and came into his own country;[1] and his disciples follow him.

2 And [b]when the sabbath-day was come, he began to teach in the synagogue: and many, hearing him, were astonished, saying, From whence hath this man these things? and what wisdom is this which is given unto him, that even such mighty works are wrought by his hands?

3 Is [c]not this the carpenter,[2] the son of Mary, the brother of James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us? And they were offended at him.

4 But Jesus said unto them, [d]A prophet is not without honour, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house.

5 And[e] he could there do no mighty work,[3] save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them.

6 And [f]he marvelled because of their unbelief. [h]And he went round about the villages, teaching.

7 ¶ And[i] he called unto him the twelve, and began to send them forth by [j]two and two, and gave them power over unclean spirits;

8 And commanded them that they [k]should take nothing for their journey, save a staff only; no scrip, no bread, no money[4] in their purse:

9 But be [l]shod with sandals;[5] and not put on two coats.[6]

10 And he said unto them, [m]In what place soever ye enter into an house, there abide till ye depart from that place.

11 And[o] whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear you, when ye depart thence, shake off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them. [p]Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and[7] Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city.

12 And they went out, and preached [q]that men should repent.

13 And[r] they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil[8] many that were sick, and healed them.

14 ¶ And[s] king Herod[9] heard of him; (for his name was spread abroad:) and he said, That John the Baptist was risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do show forth themselves in him.

15 Others[t] said, That it is Elias. And others said, That it is a prophet, or as one of the prophets.

16 But[u] when Herod heard thereof, he said, It is John, whom I beheaded: he is risen from the dead.

17 ¶ For[v] Herod himself had sent forth and laid hold upon John, and bound him in prison, for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife: for he had married her.

18 For John had said unto Herod, [x]It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife.

19 Therefore [y]Herodias had a quarrel[1] against him, and would have killed him; but she could not.

20 For Herod [z]feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed [2]him; and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly.[3]

21 And when [a]a convenient day was come, that Herod on his birth-day made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee;

22 And when [b]the daughter of the said Herodias came in, and danced, and pleased Herod and them that sat with him, the king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee.

23 And he sware unto her, [c]Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.

24 And she went forth, and said unto her mother, What shall I ask? And she said, [d]The head of John the Baptist.

25 And she came in straightway [e]with haste unto the king, and asked, saying, I will that thou give me by-and-by, in a charger, the [g]head of John the Baptist.

26 And the king [h]was exceeding sorry; [i]yet for his oath's sake, and for their sakes which sat with him, he would not reject her.

27 And [j]immediately the king sent an executioner,[4] and commanded his head to be brought: and he went, and beheaded him in the prison,

[8] A comparison of the narratives of this transaction with the parallels in Matthew and Luke will show, 1 That Mark must have been an eye-witness of the particulars, and 2, That he was a closer observer, and a more minute and graphic delineator of events than the others. The minute accuracy of Mark's details gives a peculiar charm to his Gospel, and constitutes one of its leading characteristics.—P.

[7] Origen denies that our Lord was a carpenter; and some MSS. represent him as 'the son of this carpenter.' But all the best MSS., universal tradition, and the consent of the early writers of the church confirm the authenticity of this statement; for the Jews were required that every man should learn some handicraft trade; and what more natural than that Joseph, a poor man, should bring up his wonderful yet poor son to his father's trade? And is there anything degrading in trade? Is there anything contemptible in idleness? [8] The essence of a miracle is not the supernatural work performed, but the prophetic word or prophetic action that precedes it, declaring the mercy of Jesus in the Spirit of prophecy. Hence arose the use of the oil in the apostolic church. It was the prophetic sign by which they dedicated their intercession to heal—the prophetic symbol of the Spirit of God, and the visible witness and memorial that the work had been done by apostolic agency through supernatural power.—C.

[9] Herod is called tetrarch by Matthew (ch. 14. 1) and Luke (ch. 3. 1). Both the words, tetrarch and king, were employed with some degree of latitude: the first signifying a ruler or governor of a province. The Herod here referred to was Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great by Malthace; he was ruler of Galilee and Perea, which provinces were left to him by his father and confirmed by Rome. He was first married to a daughter of Aretas, king of Arabia, and subsequently to Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip. It was for this incestuous connection he was reproved by the Baptist.—P.

[3] Herod furnishes a striking example of that inconsistency of human nature that takes pleasure in the company and discourse of good men, and yet do not the things which they say. Like Balaam, there are many who desire to die the death of the righteous, and would so die, did they not also resolve to live in their covetousness or their pleasures.—C.

the way of their own mercy. And amazing is his grace and patience in sending forth other ministers when those formerly sent have been so basely contemned and persecuted. Men indeed are often astonished and affected by the Word of God who are never savingly changed by it. And while they reverence the preacher and hear him gladly, they yet continue in their sins. But ministers must execute their commission whether men will hear or forbear. And he who sends them on 28 And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damsel: and the damsel gave it to her mother.

29 And when his disciples heard of it, [k]they came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb.

30 ¶ And[l] the apostles gathered themselves together unto Jesus, and told him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught.

31 And he said unto them, [m]Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat.

32 And they departed into a desert place by ship privately.

33 And the people saw them departing, [o]and many knew him,[5] and ran afoot thither out of all cities, and outwent them, and came together unto him.

34 ¶ And[p] Jesus, when he came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion toward them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd; and [q]he began to teach them many things.

35 And[r] when the day was now far spent, his disciples came unto him, and said, This is a desert place, and now the time is far passed:

36 Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy themselves bread: for they have nothing to eat.

37 He answered and said unto them, [s]Give ye them to eat. And they say unto him, [t]Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth[6] of bread, and give them to eat?

38 He saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? go and see. And when they knew, they say, Five, and two fishes.

39 And [u]he commanded them to make all sit down by companies[7] upon the green grass.

40 And they sat down in ranks[8] by hundreds, and by fifties.

41 And when he had taken the five loaves and the two fishes, [v]he looked up to heaven, and blessed, and brake the loaves, and gave them to his disciples to set before them; and the two fishes divided he among them all.

42 And[x] they did all eat, and were filled.

43 And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes.

44 And they that did eat of the loaves were about five thousand men.

45 ¶ And [y]straightway he constrained his disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side before unto[9] Bethsaida,[1] while he sent away the people.

46 And when he had sent them away,[2] he departed [z]into a mountain to pray.

47 And[a] when even was come, the ship was in the midst of the sea, and he alone on the land.

48 And he saw them [b]toiling in rowing; for the wind was contrary unto them: and [c]about the fourth watch of the night he cometh unto them, walking upon the sea, and [d]would have passed by them.[3]

49 But when they saw him walking upon the sea, they [e]supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out:

50 For they all saw him, and were troubled. And immediately he talked with them, and saith unto them, [f]Be of good cheer: it is I; be not afraid.

51 And[h] he went up unto them into the ship; and the wind ceased: and they were [i]sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered.

52 For[j] they considered not the miracle of the loaves: for their heart was hardened.[4]

53 ¶ And[k] when they had passed over, they came into the land of [5]Gennesaret,[6] and drew to the shore.

54 And when they were come out of the ship, straightway they knew him,[7]

55 And [l]ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds those that were sick, where they heard he was.

56 And whithersoever he entered, into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the sick in the streets, and besought him that they might [m]touch, if it were but the [n]border of his garment: and as many as touched him[8] were made whole.

CHAPTER VII.

THEN came[a] together unto him the Pharisees, and certain of the scribes, which came from Jerusalem.

2 And when they saw some of his disciples eat bread with defiled,[1] that is to say, with unwashen, hands, [b]they found fault.

3 For the Pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands oft,[2] eat not, [c]holding the tradition of the elders.

4 And when they come from the market, except they [d]wash,[3] they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received

[5] Many knew him. Few passages of the New Testament have been the subject of so much critical labour.—which the verbal student will find collected and abridged in Bloomfield. One of the chief difficulties is found in the assertion, that 'many knew him,' which suggests the idea of an interpolation, as few could be supposed ignorant of his person where he had resided so long, and had wrought so many miracles. It is with great deference suggested that the difficulty may be better solved by translating 'and many knew him'—and many knew it, that is, the desert place to which he and his disciples were bound (see ver. 31); and so while they doubted some headland in the boat, the people crossed the promontory, and 'ran thither on foot,' &c.—C.

[3] There was a positive law (Le. 15. 11) that the Israelites, on returning from any place of public concourse, should wash their hands before sitting down to eat, lest they should have been ceremonially defiled by touching anything unclean; but, as if they could improve, by adding to the divine law, the Pharisees insisted that none should eat at any time, without having previously washed their hands. To this they added a multitude of other purifications, upon which they insisted as necessary to righteousness and salvation, and which they superstitiously and impiously exalted above the law of God.—C.

their errand will furnish them for it, own them in it, and make it the duty and inclination of hearers to honour and support them for their work's sake. On him therefore they ought to depend for maintenance and protection, neither entangling themselves with the affairs of this life nor fearing the faces of men. Terrible is their case who hear but reject the gospel. And most deplorable the situation of those who are under the direction of ignorant and unfaithful ministers. Men's lusts will drive them to the most fearful lengths when once they are fully entangled. And none are more base than abandoned women. Yea, carnal pretences to fidelity and honour often plunge men into the most bloody crimes, and at last into the depths of hell. But if men seek Jesus, even with natural seriousness, how great his tender compassion to them, and his concern that neither soul nor body should suffer hurt in his service. SIDON, FROM THE SEA. [Mark, vii:24.]—Sidon was one of the great cities of Phœnicia. The first journey our Savior ever made outside of Palestine proper was into Phœnicia. It is not known whether He ever entered into Tyre or Sidon. We are told that He went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon and entered into a house, and would have no man know it, but He could not be hid. It was during this excursion into the country of the heathen that He drove the unclean spirit from the daughter of the Syro-Phœnician woman. From what is said of St. Paul in Acts, xxvii:3, we are authorized to conclude that he had friends in Sidon, and that he made a visit to the city during one of the missionary journeys. Silks and fruits are extensively raised in the neighborhood of Sidon to-day.

5 Then the Pharisees and scribes asked him, Why[a] walk not thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashen hands?

6 He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias prophesied of you [g]hypocrites,[7] as it is written, [h]This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.

7 Howbeit, in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

8 For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do.

9 And he said unto them, 'Full well ye reject[8] the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.

10 For Moses said, [j]Honour thy father and thy mother; and, Whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death:

16 If[n] any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

17 And[p] when he was entered into the house from the people, his disciples asked him concerning the parable.

The case seems to indicate one that had been born with the power of hearing, and had learned the use of the organs of speech; but who, having lost his hearing, and whose tongue being also partially affected, retained merely the power of inarticulate and unintelligible sounds—and was therefore, so far as meaning was concerned, absolutely dumb. supply every want. And he can feed them in a wilderness, or walk on floods for their help. If then he manifest his power and his glory in our deliverance, let us never turn again to folly, nor give way to hardness and unbelief.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 9. Full well. This is commonly pronounced an irony; but such a figure seems utterly unsuited to the character of Christ. But as no meaning can be fairly extracted from the word καλῶς, except one cognate to 'fairly, justly, properly, full well,' &c., may not the imagined irony be removed by taking the words interrogatively? 'And he said unto them, Do you properly set aside the commandment of God that you may establish your own tradition?' C.

REFLECTIONS.—What self-deceivers are human hearts! The most trifling superstitions are often substituted in the place of the substantial duties of religion and morality. But no devotion, which is not commanded by God, and offered up in faith and sincerity, can be acceptable to him or profitable to us. Alas! what an infernal fountain of wickedness is every unregenerate heart! It is ready to burst forth on every occasion. And there is an absolute necessity of God's offering an abiding principle of life, light, faith, and love, in opposition to our natural corruption. His grace indeed makes a wonderful change even in the weakest believer. It gives the highest and most honourable views of Christ; the tenderest compassion to afflicted friends; earnest importunity in prayer for their relief; and great humility and patience under seeming insults and denials of help. And Jesus sometimes tries the faith of his people by great discouragements, even while he secretly upholds and animates it, till at last he crown it with the full enjoyment of all that it can wish. What complicated diseases spring from our complicated lusts and crimes! And it is a great mercy that Jesus Christ has power over all plagues. Let me then, conscious of sinful pollutions and miseries unnumbered, look up to him for relief in his own time and way. No hardened heart, deaf ears, nor stammering tongue, can withstand his healing words of power. Let me listen to his instructions with an obedient ear; and ascribe to him, as he shall direct, the glory due to his name, who is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working.

CHAPTER VIII. REFLECTIONS.—In following Christ, let me count nothing too hard. Let me trust him with my body as well as my soul: and bread shall be given me, my water shall be sure. Never let my unbelief raise or hesitate at difficulties, as if they were too great for Christ to surmount. And let me never 36 And [j]he charged them that they should tell no man: but the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it;

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Christ feedeth the people miraculously: 10 refuseth to give a sign to the Pharisees: 14 admonisheth his disciples to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod: 22 giveth a blind man his sight: 27 acknowledgeth that he is the Christ, who should suffer and rise again: 34 and exhorteth to patience in persecution for the profession of the gospel.

IN those days [a]the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called his disciples unto him, and saith unto them,

2 I[b] have compassion on the multitude, because they have now been with me three days, and have nothing[1] to eat:

3 And if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way: for divers of them came from far.

4 And his disciples answered him, [c]From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness?

5 And he asked them, [d]How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven.

6 And he commanded the people [e]to sit down on the ground: and he took the seven loaves, and [f]gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his disciples to set before them; and they did set them before the people.

7 And they had a few small fishes: and he blessed,[h] and commanded to set them also before them.

8 So [i]they did eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets.

9 And they that had eaten were about four thousand: and he sent them away.

10 ¶ And[j] straightway he entered into a ship with his disciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha.[2]

11 And[k] the Pharisees came forth, and began to question with him, seeking of him a sign from heaven, tempting him.

12 And he [l]sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? [m]Verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation.

13 And he [n]left them, and entering into the ship again departed to the other side.

14 ¶ Now[o] the disciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf.

15 And he charged them, saying, [p]Take heed, beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod.[3]

16 And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is [q]because we have no bread.

17 And when Jesus [r]knew it, he saith unto them, Why reason ye, because ye have no bread? [s]perceive ye not yet, neither understand? have ye your heart yet hardened?

18 Having eyes, see ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not remember?

19 When [u]I brake the five loaves among five thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? They say unto him, Twelve.

20 And [v]when the seven among four thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? And they said, Seven.

21 And he said unto them, [x]How is it that ye do not understand?

22 ¶ And he cometh to [y]Bethsaida;[4] and they [z]bring a blind man[5] unto him, and besought him to touch him.

23 And[a] he took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and when he had spit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he saw ought.[6]

24 And he looked up, and said, I [b]see men as trees, walking.[7]

25 After that he put his hands [c]again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and he was restored, and saw every man clearly.

[1] The string of his tongue. The impediment was removed, so as to permit a free and distinct articulation of words.—Wakefield.

[3] This miracle is only found in Mark. Though it is could have been gathered under the general statement in Mat 15 30. From the sages and miracles used by our Lord the miracle appears to have attracted even more than the ordinary attention.—P.

[3] Matthew says, Unto the coasts of Magdala. Dalmanutha is not elsewhere mentioned: but it was probably some obscure village on the shore of the lake near Magdala.—P.

[4] Our Lord had embarked at, or near, Dalmanutha, and proceeded to the 'other side' of the sea, i.e. to the eastern or rather north-eastern side. The Bethsaida here mentioned is not therefore to be the town sometimes called Julias, which was situated on the east bank of the Jordan, about two miles above the lake.—C.

[5] This miracle recorded by Mark alone—a clear internal proof that he is not a mere epitomiser of Matthew.—C.

[6] This is the only example of a progressive miracle: all others wrought by our Lord, not excepting that at Siloam (Jn 9 6, 7, were instantaneous. But the miracle, it is evident from ver. 25, our Lord did not intend for the public, but for the man himself: therefore this progressive process is adopted the more to arrest his attention.—C.

misinterpret his words or providences, nor ever forget his former mighty works. It is highly absurd to reject the most plain and proper evidences which he gives of his dignified character, and insist to be gratified with others, far less useful, merely because they are of our own contriving. Yea, infidelity and impenitent hardness of heart will work the most fearful ruin for those who indulge them. And Jesus will perform no miracles to gratify men's humours; but will abandon those who insist upon them to the heavy judgments which they deserve. But great is his readiness to bear with, help, heal, and save them who, sensible of their wants and maladies, apply to him for relief; and in an instant, or more gradually,—in public or private, as best promotes his glory and their good,—kindly will he bestow it. What mean thoughts men have of Christ! and what carnal views have some real saints of the real glories of his office and work! And never doth Satan more readily cast the saints down than after some signal token of Jesus' regard. Nothing doth Jesus more detest than low thoughts of his sufferings and death; and in nothing does he manifest more true love than in administering sharp rebukes. If we expect glory with him, we must now take up our cross and follow him: for if we be ashamed of him now, we must not expect to be honoured by him in the last judgment. And if in forsaking him we court worldly profits, pleasures, or honours, we shall fall into everlasting perdition. In death or judgment it will little avail us what our external circumstances in life were. And surely our great concern ought to be what shall become of our immortal souls in the eternal state.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 44—48. The fire denotes the eternal torments of hell; and the never-dying worm denotes conscience perpetually accusing, upbraiding, and condemning. 49. Every one in hell is preserved incorruptible by the very nature of personality; even as in saints the principle of grace, received in regeneration, secures eternal holiness and happiness.

REFLECTIONS.—O the transcendent glories of our Redeemer! How delightful are the manifestations thereof! Happy are they who are much favoured with them; but happier they who in heaven always behold his face! The ravishing displays of God on earth are indeed quickly passed: but it is enough to hear his Son, when we see him not. He is risen from the dead, and ascended to glory; and will quickly return, without sin, unto our salvation. Let us then exercise ourselves, not in curious questions, but in humble faith and ardent desires. And let all the opposition we receive from devils and men render his return doubly welcome.—Alas! how early Satan enters into men! But when once entered, he holds fast his possession, and cruelly and basely abuses his subjects. And yet, in cases the most alarming, multitudes take his part against Christ and his disciples. Invaluable are the mercies that unbelief defers or deprives men of. And near, though sometimes terribly introduced, is our relief, when unbelief is once made our burden. Yea, often the clearest views of the cause of our miseries come after our deliverance. How Jesus delighted in suffering for men, and yet how ill his sufferings are relished by men under the power of carnal ambition! Many proudly conceal their ignorance till it ruins them; and contend in angry debates till they have lost all sight of the truth. And it is a mercy if Jesus rebuke them, and shame them out of their ambition into peace and humility. It is base for Christians to take it ill that God's work

MILL AT BETHSAIDA—ON SITE OF THE ANCIENT CITY. [Mark, viii: 22-25.]—One of the most picturesque views on the Sea of Galilee is an old mill at Bethsaida. It is hardly to be supposed that this dates from the time of the ancient Bethsaida, but it stands upon the site of the ancient city, and serves to give a pathetic and picturesque impression of one of the great cities that stood upon this sacred sea. It was in Bethsaida that a blind man was brought to our Savior, whom he took by the hand and led out of town and healed him. This whole place is given up now to rank grass and weeds, and utter loneliness and desolation claim a spot where once people thronged, and traded, and passed away. It gives us a striking picture of the vanity of building our hopes upon earthly places and prospects.

26 And he sent him away to his house,[s] saying, [d]Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.

27 ¶ And[e] Jesus went out, and his disciples, into the towns of Cæsarea Philippi:[9] and by the way he asked his disciples, saying unto them, Whom do men say that I am?

28 And they answered, [g]John the Baptist: but some say, Elias; and others, One of the prophets.[1]

29 And he saith unto them, But [h]whom say ye that I am? And Peter answereth and saith unto him, [i]Thou art the Christ.[2]

30 And [j]he charged them that they should tell no man of him.

31 ¶ And[k] he began to teach them, that the Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again.

32 And he spake that saying [l]openly. And Peter took him, and began to rebuke him.

33 But when he had turned about and looked on his disciples, [m]he rebuked Peter, saying, Get thee behind me, Satan: for thou [n]savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men.

34 ¶ And when he had called the people unto him with his disciples also, he said unto them, [p]Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

35 For[q] whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it.

36 For [r]what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?

37 Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

38 Whosoever[s] therefore shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in [t]this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the [u]Son of man be ashamed, when he [v]cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels.

CHAPTER IX.

2 Jesus is transfigured. 11 He instructeth his disciples concerning the coming of Elias. 14 casteth out a dumb and deaf spirit. 30 foretelleth his own death and resurrection. 33 exhorteth his disciples to humility. 38 bidding them to hinder no one from working miracles in his name, and warning them to avoid offences.

AND he said unto them, [a]Verily I say unto you, that there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power.[1]

2 ¶ And[b] after six days Jesus taketh with him [c]Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain [d]apart by themselves: and he was [e]transfigured before them.

3 And his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them.

4 And [f]there appeared unto them Elias, with Moses; and they were talking with Jesus.

5 And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is [h]good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles: one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

6 For he [i]wist not what to say; for they were sore afraid.

7 And[j] there was a cloud that overshadowed them: and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, [k]This is my beloved Son; [l]hear him.

8 And suddenly, when they had looked round about, they saw no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves.

9 And as they came down from the mountain, [m]he charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of man were risen from the dead.

10 And they kept that saying with themselves,[2] questioning one with another what [n]the rising from the dead[3] should mean.

11 ¶ And they asked him, saying, Why say the scribes that [p]Elias must first come?

12 And he answered and told them, [q]Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all [r]things; and [s]how it is written of the Son of man, that he must suffer many things, and be [t]set at nought.

13 But I say unto you, [u]That Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him.

14 ¶ And[v] when he came to his disciples, he saw a great multitude about them, and the scribes questioning with them.

15 And straightway all the people, when they beheld him, were greatly amazed;[5] and running to him, saluted him.[6]

16 And he asked the scribes, What [w]question ye with them?[7]

17 And one of the multitude answered and said, Master, [x]I have brought unto thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit;

18 And[y] wheresoever he taketh him, he teareth him:[8] and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I spake to thy disciples, that they should cast him out; and [z]they could not.

19 He answereth him, and saith, [a]O faithless generation! how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? Bring him unto me.

[s] As our Lord sent him to his house, yet prohibited him from going into the village, Bethsaida, it is evident the man was not of that town, and therefore he will not allow him to expend Lord's leisure where he was not known, but to go to his house, where, from the knowledge of his character, every word would tell upon the people. - C.

[2] The omission here of all the favourable circumstances mentioned by Matthew gives strong corroboration to the opinion that Mark wrote under the immediate eye of Peter; who, so far from allowing his own praise to be celebrated, is at pains, as it were, to suppress whatever might seem intended for his personal honour. And intended as his Gospel was for Roman converts, the omission manifests a providential rebuke to the system of despotism in this world, and of assumed power in the world to come, which the Papal power has attempted to establish and maintain by a false interpretation of our Lord's reply to Peter. -C.

prospers in any hands but those of their particular party. And it is very dangerous to oppose that which is ratified by the blessing of God. Yea, if nothing appear contrary to the faith of the gospel, charity requires us to hope the best. God resists the proud, but giveth grace to the humble. The favour which we show to any for Christ's sake he will take as done to himself, and it shall not lose its reward. Better is it to go to heaven through much self-denial, than to hell in s him; and he fell on the ground, and wallowed foaming.

MOUNT TABOR. [Mark, ix:2.]—Mount Tabor competes with Mount Hermon for the glory of being the place of the Transfiguration of our Savior. It is on the road from Jerusalem to Nazareth, and in sight of the latter city. It is one of the mountains upon which our Savior, in his boyhood, doubtless looked every day. It would not seem strange if this had been the mountain selected for the Transfiguration. It is unique in its features. Upon the top of this mountain there are the ruins of an old church, and all who pass this way make a pilgrimage to its top. One of the most magnificent panoramic views can be obtained from the top of Tabor. It overlooks the plain of Jezreel and Nazareth, and the Sea of Galilee, and the Gadarene country, and Mount Carmel far to the south on the shore of the Mediterranean Sea.

21 And he asked his father, How long is it ago since this came unto him? And he said, Of[e] a child:

22 And ofttimes it hath cast him into the fire, and into the waters, to destroy him: but if thou canst do any thing, [d]have compassion on us, and help us.

23 Jesus said unto him, [e]If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth.

24 And straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe; help[g] thou mine unbelief.[g]

25 When Jesus saw that the people came running together, [h]he rebuked the foul spirit, saying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him.

26 And[i] the spirit cried, and rent him sore, and came out of him: and he was as one dead; insomuch that many said, He is dead.

27 But [j]Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up; and he arose.

28 And[k] when he was come into the house, his disciples asked him privately, Why could not we cast him out?

29 And he said unto them, [l]This kind can come forth by nothing but by prayer and fasting.[1]

30 ¶ And[n] they departed thence, and passed through Galilee; [o]and he would not that any man should know it.

31 For[p] he taught his disciples, and said unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day.

32 But[q] they understood not[2] that saying, and were afraid to ask him.

33 ¶ And[r] he came to Capernaum: and being in the house, he asked them, What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?

34 But they held their peace: [s]for by the way they had disputed among themselves who should be the greatest.

35 And he sat down, and called the twelve, and saith unto them, [t]If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all.

36 And he took [u]a child, and set him in the midst of them: and when he had taken him in his arms, he said unto them,

37 Whosoever[v] shall receive one of such children in my name, receiveth me: and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me.[3]

38 ¶ And[z] John answered him, saying, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us: and we forbad him,[4] because he followeth not us.

39 But Jesus said, Forbid him not: [y]for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me.

40 For he that is not against us, is on our part.

41 For[z] whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward.

42 And[a] whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, [b]it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea.

43 And[c] if thy hand offend thee,[5] cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than, having two hands, to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched;

44 Where[d] their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

45 And if thy foot offend thee,[6] cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than, having two feet, to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched;

46 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

47 And if thine eye offend thee,[7] pluck[e] it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than, having two eyes, to be cast into hell-fire;

48 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire [g]is not quenched.

49 For[h] every one shall be salted with [8]fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.

50 [i]Salt[9] is good: but if the salt have lost his saltness, wherewith will ye season it? [j]Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another.

CHAPTER X.

2 Christ disputeth with the Pharisees touching divorcement: 13 blesseth the children that are brought unto him: 17 instructeth a rich man how he may inherit life everlasting: 23 telleth his disciples of the danger of riches: 28 promiseth rewards to them that forsake any thing for the gospel: 32 foretelleth his own death and resurrection: 35 biddeth the two ambitious suitors to think rather of suffering with him: 46 and restoreth to Bartimæus his sight.

AND he[a] arose from thence, and cometh into the coasts of Judea, by the farther side of Jordan:[1] and the [b]people resort unto him again; and, as he was wont, he taught them again.

2 ¶ And[c] the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him.[2]

3 And he answered and said unto them, [d]What did Moses command you?

1 The statement in this verse develops an important principle in the divine government, not confined to the case of miraculous gifts, but extending also to the ordinary administration of divine grace. For as no one can doubt that grace is administered in answer to 'the prayer of faith,' so, that prayer and fasting are habitually and frequently, though not unexceptionally, united, is the testimony of our Lord, illustrated by the practice of his apostles. 8 This is given as a reason for the injunctions and statements contained in ver. 43–48. 'If thy hand offend thee, cut it off. . . . If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out. . . . For every one shall be salted.' &c. Fire, like salt, is a symbol. Salt was the symbol of purity. It preserves that to which it is applied unstained. Fire—the fire of God's spiritual presence, and wise judgments, purifies the soul. It is the Divine Spirit within who enables us to mortify the members, to chasten our evil desires, to cut off a darling sin. It is thus we are 'salted' or preserved 'with fire.'—P.

9 Salt when applied and absorbed, preserves from corruption, and so becomes an emblem of perpetuity (see Nu. 18.19). It is grateful to the taste, while it serves, often unknown, to him that partakes of it, as an invaluable medicine; and thus it becomes an emblem of that 'meekness of wisdom' with which every 'exhortation, reproof, correction, or instruction' of the Christian should be constantly seasoned. Hence they have sought solutions in new translations—such as, 'He accosted him kindly;' 'He felt kindly disposed towards him;' 'He kissed him.' All these have been sought for on the 8 And[c] they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh.

9 What[d] therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter.

11 And he saith unto them, [k]Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her.

12 And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery.

13 ¶ And[l] they brought young children to him, that he should touch them: and his disciples [m]rebuked those that brought them.

14 But when Jesus saw it, he [n]was much displeased, and said unto them, [p]Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God.[4]

15 Verily I say unto you, [q]Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein.

16 And[r] he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.

17 ¶ And[s] when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, [t]Good Master, [u]what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?

18 And Jesus said unto him, [v]Why callest thou me good? There is none good, but one, that is, God.[5]

19 Thou[e] knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother.

20 And he answered and said unto him, Master, [w]all these have I observed from my youth.

21 Then[x] Jesus, beholding him, loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, [y]take up the cross, and follow me.

22 And[b] he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved; for he had great possessions.

23 ¶ And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, [c]How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

[4] Alford remarks on this passage:—'We can hardly read our Lord's solemn saying, without seeing that it reaches farther than the mere then present occasion. It might one day become a question whether the new Christian covenant of repentance and faith could take in the unconscious infant, as the old covenant did:—whether when Jesus was no longer on earth, little children might be brought to him, dedicated to his service, and made partakers of his blessing. . . . Our Lord furnishes the church, by anticipation, with an answer to it for all ages. Not only may the little infants be brought to him; but in order for us who are mature to come to him, we must cast away all that wherein our maturity has caused us to differ from them, and become like them. Not only infant baptism, in itself, but it is (abstractly considered:—not as to preparation for it, which, from the nature of the case is precluded) the normal pattern of all baptism; none can enter God's kingdom except as an infant.'—C.

[1] There is involved in this answer of Christ an evidence of his divinity. The person who addressed him called him good, yet believed him to be but a man. In that application our Lord rejects the title. None but God can be 'good.' The man had judged from the words he heard and the acts he saw that Christ was good. He had judged right-ly, and now our Lord shows him that the necessary inference was that Christ, whose words and deeds prove him to be 'good,' must be God.—P.

[4] These precious words recorded by Mark—'now in this time,' show that the rewards of the Christian are not wholly future. He gets much in this world—he gets all that his heavenly Father sees to be for his good. The restricting phrase, 'with persecutions,' limits the promise, and gives it a new meaning. The words are not to be taken literally, but in a higher sense. 24 And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them [d]that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!

25 It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, [e]Who then can be saved?

27 And Jesus, looking upon them, saith, [f]With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible.

28 ¶ Then[g] Peter began to say unto him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee.

29 And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, [2]There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, principle that the inquirer remaining an absolute lover of the world, any special love towards him was impossible. These difficulties, however, seem made rather than found. (2) Would not Christ have loved an enemy and taught his disciples the same? Not, indeed, with love of approbation or complacency—for that were unnatural, impossible, and sinful—but with love of compassion, benevolence, and forgiveness. Why then might he not feel some special movement of the love of pity and benevolence towards this visitant? (3) Is it certain because this man 'went away grieved' that he therefore never returned? It is by no means certain, and his return is the higher probability. See ver. 27. C.

the cup that I drink of: and with the baptism that I am baptized withal, shall ye be baptized:

40 But[x] to sit on my right hand and on my left hand, is not mine to give; but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared.

41 And [y]when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with James and John.

42 But Jesus called them to him, and saith unto them,[1] [z]Ye know that they which are accounted[2] to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them.

43 But[a] so shall it not be among you: but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister:

44 And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.

45 For[b] even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.[3]

46 ¶ And[c] they came to Jericho: and as he went out[4] of Jericho with his disciples and a great number of people, blind Bartimæus, the son of Timæus, sat by the highway-side, begging.

47 And when he heard that it was [d]Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, and say, Jesus, thou [e]Son of David, have mercy on me.

48 And [g]many charged him that he should hold his peace: but he cried the more a great deal, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

49 And[h] Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called. And they call the blind man, saying unto him, [i]Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee.

50 And[j] he, casting away his garment,[5] rose, and came to Jesus.

51 And Jesus answered and said unto him, What[k] wilt thou that I should do unto thee? The blind man said unto him, Lord,[6] that I might receive my sight.

52 And Jesus said unto him, [l]Go thy way; thy faith hath [7]made thee whole.[8] And[m] immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Christ rideth with triumph into Jerusalem: 12 curseth a barren fig-tree: 15 purgeth the temple: 20 exhorteth his disciples to stedfastness of faith, and to forgive their enemies: 27 and defendeth the lawfulness of his actions, by the witness of John, who was a man sent of God.

AND when[a] they came nigh to Jerusalem, unto Bethphage, and Bethany, at [b]the mount of Olives, he sendeth forth two of his disciples,[1]

2 And saith unto them, Go your way into the village over against you: and as soon as ye be entered into it, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon never man sat; loose him, and bring him.

3 And if any man say unto you, Why do ye this? say ye that [c]the Lord [d]hath need of him; and straightway he will send him hither.

4 And they went their way, and found the colt tied by the door without, in a place where two ways met; and they loose him.[2]

5 And certain of them that stood there said unto them, What do ye, loosing the colt?

6 And they said unto them even as Jesus had commanded: and they let them go.

7 And they brought the colt to Jesus, [e]and cast their garments on him; and he sat upon him.

8 And many spread their garments in the way; and others cut down branches off the trees, and strawed them in the way.

9 And they that went before, and they that followed, [f]cried, saying, Hosanna; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord:

10 Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord: [h]Hosanna in the highest.

11 And [i]Jesus entered into Jerusalem, and into the temple: [j]and when he had looked round about upon all things, and now the eventide was come, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve.

12 ¶ And[k] on the morrow, when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry:

13 And[l] seeing a fig-tree afar off, having leaves,[3] he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon: and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet.

14 And Jesus answered and said unto it, No man[4] eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. And his disciples heard it.[5]

15 ¶ And[n] they come to Jerusalem: and Jesus went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves;

16 And would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple.

[3] The fig-tree produces its fruit before its leaves, so that the appearance of the leaves was evidence that the fruit should have been ripening; and as 'the time of figs (that is, the time for their being ripe and gathered) was not yet (come),' our Lord had an additional right to expect fruit. But here the infidel asks, 'Does not this ignorance strangely contrast with, or rather invalidate, the wonderful prophetic wisdom attributed to Jesus in the previous narrative?' The answer is obvious. The visit was intended to furnish an emblem of the blighting curse that speedily follows a barren professor of the gospel.—C.

[4] But even supposing this tree to have been no man's property, but growing on an absolute common, how could Jesus be justified in destroying it for ever? If this objection be of any force, it will go to arraign the providence of God, and all that are called laws of nature—by which thousands of plants, and shrubs, and trees are annually destroyed by canker, or blight, or storms; and as whatever proves too much, in reality proves nothing,—so an objection that goes too far, is, in reality, no objection where it is applied.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—What an example of unwearied patience and labour, of wisdom and prudence, of humility and condescension, of tenderness and compassion, has Jesus set before us in himself! and under what an excellent dispensation of purity, light, and grace, do we now live in the gospel period! Its various truths are set forth in the most evident light, and all its precepts recommended by the strongest arguments. The laws of marriage are plainly settled, for preventing confusion, and for promoting conjugal faithfulness and affection. And the privileges of believers' children are clearly established, and themselves made emblems of the true heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. But self-confidence, proud ambition, and a worldly spirit are great hindrances to real religion and happiness. And God's grace rarely recovers men from their influence, or teaches them that the only use of riches is to do good with them. Alas! how many have several amiable qualities, and yet, for want of indwelling grace, land at last in eternal sorrow! but rich are the rewards of self-denial and multiplied losses for Christ's sake. And yet it is only believing views of his sufferings that will make us to delight in them. It is shameful for the disciples of a crucified Redeemer repeatedly to contend about the imaginary trifles of worldly grandeur. And great is his compassion in bearing with the infirmities, ignorance, and frowardness of his people. Yes, he is ready to heal such as apply to him for relief in the firm faith of his infinite ability and willingness to save. No meanness, no distemper, can stop the egress of his great love. And if he welcome, no matter how many thousands wickedly discourage me. And if he succour, supply, save, and enlighten my soul or body, cheerfully should I follow him in my way to eternal rest.

CHAPTER XI. REFLECTIONS.—The divine sove-

SITE OF THE TEMPLE. [Mark, xi:27.]—This view gives us the best representation of the premises upon which the temple was situated to be possibly obtained from a photograph. It was taken from the top of a house in the neighborhood, and we are enabled to see the Mosque of Omar and the Mosque of El Aksa, with gates, tombs, pulpits and arches that belong to this wonderful spot. We are able to form a very satisfactory idea of the area on which stood the temple of Solomon a thousand years before Christ, and on which stood the temple of Herod, into which our Savior entered at the time of the royal reception which the multitude gave him. What memories crowd upon us as we look at these sacred precincts! It was here that Abraham offered Isaac, and the scene calls up the illustrious names of Jewish and of Christian history.

17 And he taught, saying unto them, Is it not written, [o]My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer?[6] but ye have made it a den of thieves.

18 And[p] the scribes and chief priests heard it, and sought how they might destroy him: for they feared him, because all the people was astonished at his doctrine.

19 And[q] when even was come, he went out of the city.

20 ¶ And[r] in the morning, as they passed by, they saw the fig-tree dried up from the roots.

21 And Peter, calling to remembrance, saith unto him, Master, behold, the fig-tree which thou cursedst is withered away!

22 And Jesus, answering, saith unto them, Have faith in God.[7]

23 For[s] verily, I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass;[8] he shall have whatsoever he saith.

24 Therefore I say unto you, [t]What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.

25 And[u] when ye stand[9] praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any; that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses.

26 But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.[1]

27 ¶ And[v] they come again to Jerusalem: and as he was walking [x]in the temple, there come to him [y]the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders,

28 And say unto him, [z]By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority to do these things?

29 And [a]Jesus answered and said unto them, I will also ask of you one question,[2] and answer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things.

30 The[b] baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? Answer me.

31 And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then did ye not [c]believe him?

32 But[d] if we shall say, Of men; they feared the people: for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed.

* How wonderful are the ways of God! By the favour and fear of 'the people' he restrains the priests and scribes and elders till the work of our Lord is completed: and by the versatility, and inconsistency, and heartlessness, and cruelty of that same 'people' he delivers our Lord to his enemies, to judgment, and crucifixion! [4] The Herodians were those Jews who were attached to the family and policy of the Herods. They were less exclusive than the Pharisees, and they were inclined to make such a compromise between the Jewish law and Roman policy as might save to some extent the independence of the nation under the rule of the Herodian family. On questions of Jewish law our Lord had completely silenced the charges and cavils of the Pharisees; in the hope, therefore, of entrapping him politically, and thus bringing upon him the judicial power of the civil governor of Galilee, the Herodians assailed him.—P.

33 And they answered and said unto Jesus, [e]We cannot tell. And Jesus answering, saith unto them, [f]Neither do I tell you by what authority I do these things.

CHAPTER XII.

1 In a parable of the vineyard let out to wicked husbandmen, Christ foretelleth the reprobation of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. 13 He avoideth the snare of the Pharisees and Herodians about paying tribute to Cæsar: 18 confuteth the error of the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection: 28 resolveth the scribe, who questioned of the first commandment: 35 refuteth the opinion that the scribes held of Christ: 38 bidding the people to beware of their ambition and hypocrisy: 41 and commendeth the poor widow for her two mites, above all the gifts of the rich.

AND he[a] began to speak unto them by parables. A certain man planted a vineyard, and set an hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine-fat, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country.

2 And [b]at the season he sent to the husbandmen [c]a servant, that he might receive from the husbandmen of the [d]fruit of the vineyard.

3 And[e] they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away empty.

4 And again he sent unto them another servant; and at him they cast stones, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away shamefully handled.

5 And again he sent another; and him they killed, [g]and many others; beating some, and killing some.

6 Having[h] yet therefore one son, his well-beloved,[1] he sent him also last unto them, saying, They will reverence my son.

7 But[i] those husbandmen said among themselves, This is the [j]heir; come, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours.

8 And they took him, and killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard.

9 What shall therefore the lord of the vineyard do? [k]He will come and destroy the husbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others.

10 And have ye not read this scripture; [l]The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner:[2]

11 This was the Lord's doing, and it [m]is marvellous in our eyes?

12 And[n] they sought to lay hold on him, but feared the people:[3] for they knew that he had spoken the parable against them: and they left him, and went their way.

13 ¶ And[o] they send unto him certain of the Pharisees and of the [q]Herodians,[4] to catch him in his words.

holiness, the omniscience, and almighty power of our Redeemer, was clearly manifest even in his deepest humiliation; and his meek and lowly triumph proclaimed the spiritual nature of his kingdom. Every one's property ought therefore to be ready at his call, and every mouth opened to publish his praise. Notwithstanding the fairest pretences to the contrary, every ordinance should be inviolably observed according to his law. Yea, it is the great design of Christ and his gospel to reform the worship of God and the hearts and manners of men. And he acts with great majesty and power whenever he takes his work in hand. Christ will do great things for such as believe firmly, pray earnestly, and forgive injuries heartily. But, alas! how many prayers are lost for want of faith and a charitable frame towards others! Infinite is the danger of living fruitless under the means of salvation, and of being by rejecting Christ cast into endless perdition! But the more he displays his glory, holiness, and power, in his word or work, the more ungodly sinners, and especially hypocrites, set themselves against him. Yea, by every art, evasion, and wicked or wilful untruth, they labour to oppose him and his interests in the world. But none of their projects are hid from or can prevail against him.

CHAPTER XII. REFLECTIONS.—Great is the kindness of God in planting a church among men, and astonishing his patience towards obstinate and rebellious sinners. Thousands of the most shocking affronts to himself, his messengers, and messages, he endures before he executes his wrath upon them. Yea, marvellous above all is his grace in sending his Son to 14 And when they were come, they say unto him, [r]Master, we know that thou art true, and carest for no man: for thou regardest not the person of men, but teachest the way of God in truth: [s]Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar,[5] or not?

15 Shall we give, or shall we not give? But he, knowing their hypocrisy, said unto them, Why[t] tempt ye me? Bring me a penny,[6] that I may see it.

16 And they brought it. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? And they said unto him, Cæsar's.

17 And Jesus, answering, said unto them, Render[u] to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. [v]And they marvelled at him.

18 ¶ Then[w] come unto him the Sadducees, which say there is no resurrection; and they asked him, saying,

19 Master, Moses wrote unto us, [x]If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his [y]brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

20 Now there were seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and dying, left no seed.

21 And the second took her, and died; neither left he any seed: and the third likewise.

22 And the seven had her, and left no seed: last of all the woman died also.

23 In the resurrection therefore, when they shall rise, whose wife shall she be of them? for the seven had her to wife.

24 And Jesus answering said unto them, Do ye not therefore err, because [z]ye know not the scriptures,[b] neither [a]the power of God?

25 For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry nor are given in marriage; but are [b]as the angels which are in heaven.

26 And as touching the dead, that they rise; have ye not read in the book of Moses, [c]how in the bush[7] God spake unto him, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?[8]

27 He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living: [d]ye therefore do greatly err.

28 ¶ And[e] one of the scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, Which is the first commandment of all?

29 And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, [f]Hear,[9] O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord:

30 And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the first commandment.

31 And the second is like, namely this, [g]Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.

32 And the scribe said unto him, Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: for [h]there is one God; and there is none other but he:

33 And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbour as himself, [i]is more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices.

34 And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, [k]Thou art not [1]far from the kingdom of God.[2] And[l] no man after that durst ask him any question.

35 ¶ And[m] Jesus answered and said, while he taught in the temple, How say the scribes that Christ is the son of David?

36 For David himself said [n]by the Holy Ghost, The LORD said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool.[3]

37 David therefore himself calleth him Lord; and [o]whence is he then his son? And the common people heard him gladly.[4]

38 ¶ And he said unto them in his doctrine, [p]Beware of the scribes, which love to go in long clothing, and love salutations in the marketplaces,

39 And the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts;

40 Which[t] devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: [u]these shall receive greater damnation.

41 ¶ And[v] Jesus sat over against the treasury,[5] and beheld how the people cast [6]money into the treasury: and many that were rich cast in much.

42 And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites,[7] [w]which make a farthing.

43 And he called unto him his disciples, and saith unto them, [x]Verily I say unto you, That this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury:

See Ro. 11. 2—C.

[8] It is important in these days of scepticism to observe that our Lord brings his proof of the doctrine of the resurrection from the Pentateuch, which he ascribes to Moses as author, and whose authority he appeals to as unquestionable, because divine.—P.

[9] Most probably not from any sincere approval of his doctrine, but as having an personal interest injuriously affected by his success—as pleased with his exposure of the hypocrisy and unrighteousness of the Pharisees and scribes: as having been more frequently the witnesses or recipients of his benefits, and having many undefined hopes of advantage from that change of government which they endeavoured to effect by compelling him to become their king. Jn. 6. 15. Besides, it is probable that among 'the common people' there were many sincere believers; for experience proves that the humbling doctrines of the gospel are generally more welcome to the poor than to the rich; yet, thanks be to God, while "not many mighty, not many noble are called," there are still some who, like Joseph of Arimathea, the Roman centurion, or the dignified Ethiopian, are, in the salt of their various orders—demonstrating how God can be remembered amidst the profusion of riches, the bustle of a camp, or the splendour of a court.—C.

[h] The difference between the quotation in Matthew (ch. xxii. 35) and Mark is very instructive. Matthew wrote for the Jews, who knew the whole passage, and he therefore, for the sake of brevity, quotes but a part, to suggest the remainder. Mark, who wrote for the Gentiles, who previously knew nothing of the passage, quotes the whole: and as his record would speedily pass into the hands of polytheists, he specially introduces the Mosaic test more to the unity of God.—C.

seek and save such sinners, and call them to repentance! And just and unavoidable their ruin who reject him! But if some will tread on the Redeemer, God will make others to receive him, and bring forth fruits answerable to their privileges. And, in spite of all the rage of his enemies, Jesus shall be honoured, and his kingdom established—to the astonishment and joy of all those who have experienced his power and the influence of his grace in their hearts. But if any remain unconcerned, no wonder that at last they become exasperated against his message and ministers.—They who heartily hate one another more heartily unite against him and his cause. Nor are their designs ever more malignant than when they profess most kindness. Yet nothing can conceal their wickedness from God. Men often pretend a regard to the Scriptures that they may undermine their credit. And there is no error so extravagant but they who live ignorant of the Scriptures and the power of God may affirm. The word of revelation sets the just bounds to civil and religious concerns. It gives the clearest certainty of a general resurrection, makes the plainest discoveries of the eternal state, and honourably and delightfully connects our duties to God and to men. They who improve the light which God gives them bid fair to be rendered more knowing, or even led into all truth. Yea, babes in Christ understand more of the mystery of godliness than the graceless learned. Alas! that many are never more than almost Christians! An inordinate desire of human respect marks their carnal and unmortified heart. But the greater men's hypocrisy and wickedness the more terrible will be their condemnation.

CHAPTER XIII. REFLECTIONS.—If external privileges be abused they but aggravate our guilt and hasten our ruin, and national sins will bring on national 44 For [v]all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even [v]all her living.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Christ foretelleth the destruction of the temple: 9 the persecutions for the gospel: 10 that the gospel must be preached to all nations: 14 that great calamities shall happen to the Jews: 24 and the manner of his coming to judgment: 32 the hour whereof being known to none, every man is to watch and pray, that we be not found unprovided, when he cometh to each one particularly by death.

AND [a]as he went out of the temple, one of his disciples saith unto him, Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings are here!

2 And Jesus, answering, said unto him, Seest thou these great buildings? [b]there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

3 ¶ And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, over against the temple, [c]Peter and James and John and Andrew asked him [d]privately,[1]

4 Tell[e] us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign[2] when all these things shall be fulfilled?

5 And Jesus, answering them, began to say, Take[g] heed lest any man deceive you:

6 For[h] many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.

7 And[i] when ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled: for such things must needs be: but [j]the end shall not be yet.

8 For[k] nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be earthquakes in divers places, and there shall be famines and troubles: these are the beginnings of sorrows.[3]

9 But[l] take heed to yourselves: for they shall deliver you up to councils; and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten;[4] and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them.

10 And[n] the gospel must first be published among all nations.

11 But[o] when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate; but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost.

12 Now[p] the brother shall betray the brother to death, and the father the son: and children shall rise up against their parents, and shall cause them to be put to death.

13 And [q]ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: [r]but he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

14 But[s] when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing [t]where it ought not, (let him that readeth understand,) then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains:[5]

15 And[u] let him that is on the house-top not go down into the house, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his house:[6]

16 And let him that is in the field not turn back again for to take up his garment.

17 But[v] woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days!

18 And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.

19 For[x] in those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither shall be.

20 And[y] except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved: but for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days.

21 And[z] then if any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ; or, Lo, he is there: believe him not:

22 For[a] false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall show signs and wonders, to seduce, [b]if it were possible, even the elect.

23 But[c] take ye heed; behold, I have foretold you all things.

24 ¶ But[d] in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light,

25 And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken.

26 And[e] then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds, with great power and glory.

27 And[g] then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth, to the uttermost part of heaven.

28 Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: When her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near:

29 So ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, [h]know that it is nigh, even at the doors.

30 Verily I say unto you, that this generation shall not pass, till all these things be [7]done.

31 Heaven[i] and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away.

32 ¶ But[j] of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.[8]

33 Take[k] ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is.

2 The apparent discrepancy between the questions in this place, and those given by Matthew (ch.24.3) is to be accounted for, not by any defect in the recollection of Mark, but by that guidance of Spirit whereby he was led to select such points as would be most intelligible to his Roman readers. See 1 K.12.9. Besides it is not to be imagined when four persons put the question, that all should employ exactly the same words. The Spirit, therefore, would direct the evangelist to choose, not the words Matthew had been directed to choose, but the words of any other of the four apostles more suited to the comprehension of the readers for whom the Gospel was first intended, as well as for the future edification of the church.—C.

This explains the command of our Lord, "Let him that is on the house-top not go down into the house, neither enter therein to take any thing out of the house." judgments. God is administering the universe in Jesus Christ. And great is his kindness in warning men before their contempt of himself and his gospel bring on them those temporal miseries which presage their eternal destruction. Kindly he chastens his people that they may be kept in mind of their own weakness; and graciously he warns them of their danger, and directs them how to conduct themselves for his honour and their own security. Safely he preserves through the worst times those who cling to him and walk in him. And many who abhor and persecute them owe their temporal preservation to them and their prayers.—If men bear his image they must expect hatred from the world, even from their nearest carnal relations. The enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent shall never cease. But let them do their worst, God will cause his gospel to spread through the world, and will support his

MOUNTAINS OF JUDEA—SHOWING BIRTHPLACE OF JOHN THE BAPTIST. [Mark, xiii:14.]—In this view we have an excellent picture of the Judean mountains. We get an idea of the sweep of the hills, of the terraces of the mountains. About the center of the picture we see the olive groves, and then in the far distance, rising up from the side of the hill, we see a little village which, according to tradition, was the birthplace of John the Baptist. It was to this village that Mary went to see her cousin Elizabeth, remaining with her six months. Here John the Baptist grew up, and there is a church in his memory there today, called the Church of St. John in the Desert. The character of the place where John the Baptist was born and brought up is in line with the character of that great preacher of repentance. It is solemn and lonely and severe.

BETHANY. [MARK, xiv: 3 ]—There is no village in the world outside of Bethlehem, where our Savior was born, more attractive than the village of Bethany, where He so often sojourned with His friends, Lazarus and Mary and Martha. Here Jesus came to rest after the toil and conflicts of the day in Jerusalem. Here He found friends who understood Him and sympathized with Him; and His connection with this little village has endeared it to the hearts of the human race. Here took place the incident of the woman having the alabaster box of ointment, giving rise to an immortal lesson. There is nothing in its present appearance to win consideration for it. Because it was so often the home and resting-place of the Lord Jesus Christ is it so much loved and so often visited to-day. It is two miles from Jerusalem and on the road to Jericho.

34 For the Son of man is [a]as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch.

35 Watch[x] ye therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning;

36 Lest coming suddenly, he find you[c] sleeping.

37 And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch.[p]

CHAPTER XIV.

1 A conspiracy against Christ. 3 Precious ointment is poured on his head by a woman. 10 Judas selleth his Master for money. 12 Christ himself foretelleth how he shall be betrayed by one of his disciples: 22 after the passover prepared, and eaten, instituteth his last supper: 26 declareth aforehand the flight of all his disciples, and Peter's denial of him. 43 Judas betrayeth him with a kiss. 46 He is apprehended in the garden, 53 falsely accused, and impiously condemned of the Jews' council: 65 shamefully abused by them. 66 Peter's denial, and repentance.

AFTER two[a] days was the feast of the passover, and of unleavened bread:[1] and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death.

2 But[b] they said, Not on the feast-day, lest there be an uproar of the people.

3 ¶ And[c] being in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster-box of ointment of spikenard,[2] very precious; and she brake the box,[3] and poured it on his head.[4]

4 And[d] there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made?

5 For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence,[5] and [e]have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her.

6 And Jesus said, [f]Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me.

7 For[h] ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good: but me ye have not always.

8 She hath done what she could:[6] she is come aforehand [i]to anoint my body to the burying.

9 Verily I say unto you, [j]Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.

10 ¶ And[k] Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests, to betray him unto them.[7]

11 And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to [l]give him money. And he sought how he might conveniently betray him.

12 ¶ And[n] the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed[8] the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayest eat the passover?

13 And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, [o]Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him.

14 And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the good-man of the house, [p]The Master saith, Where is the guest-chamber, where [q]I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

15 And he will show you a large [r]upper room furnished[9] and prepared: there make ready for us.

16 And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and [s]found as he had said unto them: and [t]they made ready the passover.[1]

17 And [u]in the evening he cometh with the twelve.

18 And[v] as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, [x]One of you which eateth with me shall betray me.

19 And they began to be [y]sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I?

20 And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve, that [z]dippeth with me in the dish.[2]

21 The Son of man indeed goeth, [a]as it is written of him: but [b]woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! good were it for that man if he had never been born.

22 ¶ And[c] as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat;[3] this is[4] my body.

23 And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it.

24 And he said unto them, [d]This is my blood of the new testament,[5] which is shed for many.

25 Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the [e]fruit of the vine, until that day that I [g]drink it [h]new in the kingdom of God.[6]

26 ¶ And when they had sung an [i]hymn, they [k]went out into the mount of Olives.

27 And[l] Jesus saith unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, [m]I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered.

28 But after that I am risen, [n]I will go before you into Galilee.

29 But[t] Peter said unto him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I.

30 And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me [s]thrice.

3 She brake the box. The word translated brake, signifies "to rub together, to crush, to break in pieces." Some take it here to signify "to shake up"—translating "very precious" by "liquid," as on the margin. The breaking can scarcely be spoken of the box itself; but, most probably, is spoken of the envelope or case in which the box was inclosed, or the seal or ramnat by which it was secured. The idea of shaking being necessary to "bring it into a proper state of liquidity," as some suppose, proceeds upon inattention to the low temperature at which such oils are perfectly liquefied, and the advanced state of the year in the warm climate of Palestine.—C.

6 This is one of those minute and delicate details which I have often noted as characteristic of Mark. It completes the picture. Mary had pondered, probably long and anxiously, how she could most palpably show her esteem and devotion to Jesus. She procured this precious ointment — perhaps spending her all upon it, and poured it upon her beloved Lord. She may have had some dim foresight of his death; and her act may have been one of faith as well as devotion. However this may be, she did all in her power to testify her supreme love and honour for the Messiah; so he understood and appreciated it; and so he has proclaimed it to all generations in these striking words recorded by Mark: "She hath done what she could."—P.

faithful servants and followers; guide them by his counsel while here, and afterwards receive them to glory. And nothing is more proper to preserve us steady and faithful in evil times than constant watchfulness and fervent prayer. In so doing we shall be able, at Jesus' tribunal, to give our account with joy, and not with grief.

CHAPTER XIV. REFLECTIONS.—Redeeming love accepted in the heart inflames it with the strongest gratitude. Nothing is thought too costly to manifest regard to the Redeemer. And they that honour him shall be sufficiently vindicated and honoured; wherever the fame of Jesus goes, thither shall theirs go at last. And in whatever point we have his orders, we may go forth depending on his providence for success.—Never is the church on earth altogether free from treacherous hypocrites; and they who are most so are the most backward to suspect themselves. But O how astonishing is the love of Jesus, who put an end to the GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE. [Mark, xiv:32.]—Between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives, in the valley of the Kedron, there is a place that no one ever fails to visit while in Palestine—it is the Garden of Gethsemane. There is about an acre of ground enclosed by a fence, and an old olive tree that is said to date from the time of Christ himself, and flowers of all varieties beautifully cultivated and kept by the faithful and devoted monks. Here it was that our Savior met his disciples for the last conference and prayer before the crucifixion. One cannot enter and return from this garden without being a tenderer and better man—something here appeals to the highest and deepest sentiments within the human heart. The flowers which grow in this sacred enclosure are cut by the monks and given in small bouquets to the tourists.

31 But[a] he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. [b]Likewise also said they all.

32 ¶ And[c] they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I [d]shall pray.

33 And he taketh with him [e]Peter and James and John, and began to be [f]sore amazed, and to be very heavy;

34 And saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch.[1]

35 And he went forward a little, and [g]fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him.

36 And[h] he said, Abba,[2] Father, [i]all things are possible unto thee; [k]take away this cup from me: nevertheless, not what I will, but what thou wilt.

37 And he cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldest[l] not thou watch one hour?

38 Watch[m] ye, and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. [n]The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak.

39 And [o]again he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words.

40 And when he returned, he found them asleep[p] again, (for their eyes were heavy,) neither wist they what to answer him.

41 And he cometh the third time, and saith unto them, [q]Sleep on now, and take your rest: it[r] is enough, the hour is come: behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

42 Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand.

43 ¶ And[s] immediately, while he yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and the scribes and the elders.

44 And he that betrayed him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever [t]I shall kiss, that same is he: take him, and lead him away safely.

45 And as soon as he was come, he goeth straightway to him, and saith, Master,[1] Master,[2] and kissed him.

46 And[u] they laid their hands on him, and took him.

47 And[x] one of them that stood by drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high-priest, and cut off his ear.

48 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and with staves to take me?

49 I[y] was daily with you in the temple, teaching, and ye took me not: but the scriptures must be fulfilled.

50 And[z] they all forsook him, and fled.

51 And there followed him a certain young man,[3] having a linen cloth cast about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him:

52 And [a]he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked.[4]

53 ¶ And[b] they led Jesus away to the high-priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests and the elders and the scribes.

54 And[c] Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high-priest: and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire.

55 And[d] the chief priests and all the council sought for witness against Jesus to put him to death; and [e]found none.

56 For many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together.

57 And there arose certain, and bare false witness against him, saying,

58 We heard him say, [f]I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands.

59 But neither so did their witness agree together.

60 And [g]the high-priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest thou nothing? What is it which these witness against thee?

61 But[h] he held his peace, and answered nothing. Again the high-priest asked him, and said unto him, Art thou [i]the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?[5]

62 And Jesus said, I am: [k]and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

63 Then the high-priest [l]rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witnesses?

64 Ye have heard [m]the blasphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death.

65 And[n] some began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say unto him, Prophesy: and the servants did strike him with the palms of their hands.

66 ¶ And[o] as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of [p]the maids of the high-priest:

67 And when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with Jesus [q]of Nazareth.

Neither were children free if their mother was a slave. Ga. 4. 21. But though on coming into the world Christ took upon him "the form of a servant," yet being still God's dear Son, he here addresses him by the title peculiar to one "free born," and cries to him, in the hours of agony inexpressible, "Abba, the Father!"—C.

[c] Master, Master. But Matthew says his words were "Hail, Master;" Is there not, therefore, either a contradiction between the two, or an error in the one or the other? or at least is there not here a clear proof that the inspiration was not verbal; for verbal inspiration would require perfect agreement? The answer to this plausible objection is easy. Verbal inspiration does not require perfect agreement between two or more narratives of the same event—it merely requires perfect truth in each. Judas must have repeated his salutation—"Hail, Master"—a thing most natural. Matthew records the one address, "Hail, Master;" Mark omits the "Hail," and records not all Judas said, but repeats "Master, Master," which he actually did say. Why the Holy Spirit directed these different selections of words we cannot positively tell. The reason, most probably, lay in the particularness of the one address to the customs of the Jews, and of the other to those of the Romans.—C.

[e] And there followed him a certain young man. Who this was, or why it all introduced, does not appear. Conjecture is, at all times, a doubtful guide, and seldom to be followed; yet here, where it cannot do an injury, and may afford a pleasing reflection, we would venture to suggest the possibility at least that this may have been that "young man" whom Jesus loved, Mat. 19. 20; ch. 10. 21. and who, repenting of his worldly sorrow (ch. 10. 22), had so far complied with our Lord's direction as to have reduced himself to the mere loose garment he wore, and who now literally and absolutely fulfils the injunction by gladly parting with the last remnant of the property which he once so dearly loved. But whoever he was, he shows by his example what a man will give up for the safety of his body. What, then, should we not renounce for the salvation of our souls?—C.

[q] Son of the Blessed. The apparent discrepancy between this question, and the consequent objection either to the historic accuracy of the evangelist, or the verbal inspiration of this Gospel, will be solved and answered as in the case of ver. 45. In this case an additional answer to the objection presents itself. The high-priest spoke, most probably, in a dialect of the Syriac, the evangelists translated into Greek, a language rich in words; and, for wise reasons, the Spirit of God may have directed each evangelist to a different, but equivalent translation of the same word.—C.

passover by being sacrificed himself; and instituted his supper, in which we might remember and feast on his pardoning and heaven-securing death! Great was his love in warning his disciples of their danger, in reproving and pitying their weakness, and in submitting to such sufferings in soul, in body, and in reputation, for the sake of his enemies; and good the confession which he boldly witnessed before many witnesses!—But how amazing is the wickedness of men! Jewish rulers plot to murder the Messiah, on whom hangs the life, the eternal salvation, of millions unnumbered; for a paltry bribe Judas deliberately betrays him; upon a small temptation Peter repeatedly and most awfully denies him; and through an ill-grounded fear of man the other disciples shamefully desert him in his suffering condition! What then must sin be, that can make men such monsters, and the divine Saviour so miserable!—There is great need

CHAPTER XV.

1 Jesus is brought bound, and accused before Pilate. 15 Upon the clamours of the common people, the murderer Barabbas is loosed, and Jesus delivered up to be crucified. 17 He is crowned with thorns, 19 spit on, and mocked: 21 fainteth in bearing his cross: 27 hangeth between two thieves: 29 suffereth the triumphing reproaches of the Jews: 39 but confessed by the centurion to be the Son of God: 43 and is honourably buried by Joseph.

AND straightway[a] in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate.

2 And[b] Pilate asked him, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he, answering, said unto him, Thou sayest it.

3 And[c] the chief priests accused him of many things: but he answered nothing.[1]

4 And[d] Pilate asked him again, saying, Answerest thou nothing? Behold how many things they witness against thee.

5 But Jesus yet answered nothing;[2] so that Pilate marvelled.

6 ¶ Now[e] at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired.

7 And[f] there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection.

8 And the multitude, crying aloud, began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them.[3]

9 But Pilate answered them, saying, [h]Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

10 For he knew that the chief priests had delivered him [i]for envy.

11 But[j] the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather release Barabbas unto them.

12 And Pilate answered, and said again unto them, What will ye then that I shall do unto him whom ye call the [k]King of the Jews?

13 And they cried out again, Crucify him.

14 Then Pilate said unto them, [l]Why, what evil hath he done? [m]And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him.

15 And[n] so Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified.

16 ¶ And[p] the soldiers led him away into the hall called Prætorium;[4] and they call together the whole band.

17 And they clothed him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head;

18 And began to salute him, Hail, King of the Jews!

19 And[q] they smote him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon him, and [r]bowing their knees, worshipped him.

20 And [s]when they had mocked him, they took off the purple from him, and put his own clothes on him, and [t]led him out to crucify him.

21 And[u] they compel one Simon a Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus,[5] to bear his cross.

22 And they bring him [v]unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, The place of a skull.

23 And they gave him to drink [w]wine mingled with myrrh: but he received it not.

24 ¶ And when they had crucified him, [x]they parted his garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take.

25 And it was the [y]third hour; and they crucified him.[6]

26 And[z] the superscription of his accusation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS.

27 And[a] with him they crucify two thieves; the one on his right hand, and the other on his left.

28 And the [b]scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And he was numbered with the transgressors.[7]

29 ¶ And[c] they that passed by railed on him, d ch. 14.61. Matt. 26. Acts 3.13, 14. Joh. 19.9, &c. Is. 53.7.

2 This and the clause mention in ver. 3 seem at variance with the answer given in verse 2. To obviate the apparent contradiction, Campbell and others translate the words, 'He answered no more.' But a simpler solution presents itself in the fact that he answered Pilate (verse 2) not to the accusations of the chief priests (ver. 3) he answered nothing.—C.

3 The additional information given by Mark in ver. 7 and 8 serves to show more fully the guilt of the people. Barabbas was a rebel and a murderer; he was apparently the leader of a notorious gang; yet the people of their own accord demanded that he should be released, and that Jesus should be crucified.—P.

* An oriental palace consists of at least two courts, with chambers ranged round, and opening into them. The outer court is usually the place of reception, and of hearing and judging causes. In this court our Lord was examined, and in it a fire was kindled round which stood the servants and soldiers with Peter among them. An entry or passage here, called 'the porch,' opened from the court on the street. "Peter's first denial took place at the fire in the middle of the court, but his being questioned by the female porter, Peter then retreats unto the passage leading to the street, where he is again questioned, and denies his former denial. The evangelists differ as to the person who uttered it. Mark says the same maid; Matthew, 'another maid;' Luke, 'one;' John, 'they said.' Uncertain and unessential points investigated by Lightfoot, as was very natural under the circumstances. The third denial took place an hour after, when one of the party said Peter could see each other. Here Matthew and Mark speak of several interrogatories; Luke says 'another;' the many John specifies the servant of the high priest." All are correct. Each evangelist records what struck himself. Mark says the cock crew twice; the other evangelists only speak of once. There is no discrepancy. Mark records with greatest minuteness of detail.—C.

of fervent and frequent prayer in a time of trouble. Nothing is worse than slothfulness therein. And none are more active instruments of hell than apostates from Christ. No fall of eminent professors ought to make us stumble at the ways of Christ. Nor need we think it strange though, notwithstanding our innocence, we should be treated as the vilest miscreants; or though our nearest relations and most intimate friends should desert us, or turn our inveterate opposers. Let us, in silent patience, possess our souls. If God be glorified, if the Scripture be fulfilled, if the church be edified, and if God at last rise up to vindicate us, it is enough; and if, through self-confidence, we have denied our Redeemer, let us without delay think thereon, and weep.

CHAPTER XV. REFLECTIONS.—What shocking wickedness is it for men, for the professed people of God, to calumniate, to persecute, to deride, to murder the meek, the innocent, the divine Jesus, the Saviour of mankind! It was strange that the HOSANNAS of the mob should be so quickly turned into murderous clamours and cruel derisions!—That, contrary to reason, contrary to proof, contrary to convictions, almost every one should concur to abuse our gracious Redeemer! Inexpressible were his sufferings from men, from devils, and from every other source! Alas! how vilified was his character, how tormented his body, while his soul was deserted and distressed. And yet with astonishing and silent resignation he bore all for the salvation of his betrayers and murderers. What honourable attestations Providence procured for him in the deepest debasement! Prodigies attended his death: Pilate, his judge, repeatedly declared him innocent, and the Jewish Messiah; and the centurion acknowledged him to be the Son of God. Joseph of Arimathea boldly begged and honourably buried his wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, 30 Save thyself, and come down from the cross.

31 Likewise also the chief priests, mocking, said among themselves with the scribes, He saved others; himself he cannot save.

32 Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, [e]that we may see, and believe. [f]And they that were crucified with him reviled him.

33 ¶ And [h]when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land[g] until the ninth hour.

34 And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, [i]Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

35 And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, [j]Behold, he calleth Elias.

36 And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar,[k] and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down.

37 And [l]Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost.

38 ¶ And[m] the vail of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom.

39 ¶ And[o] when the centurion, which stood over against him, saw that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, [p]Truly this man was the Son of God.

40 There[q] were also women looking on afar off:[9] among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the less, and of Joses, and Salome;

41 (Who also, when he was in Galilee, followed him, and ministered unto him;) and many other women which came up with him unto Jerusalem.

42 ¶ And[r] now when the even was come, because it was the Preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath,

43 Joseph[t] of Arimathea, an honourable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus.[1]

44 And[t] Pilate marvelled if he were already dead: and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead.

45 And when [u]he knew it of the centurion, he gave the body to Joseph.

46 And[v] he bought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, and [z]laid him in a sepulchre which was hewn out of a rock, and [a]rolled a stone unto the door of the sepulchre.

47 And[c] Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of Joses beheld where he was laid.

* The whole structure of the passage here appears to show that the purchase of the spices was made after the close of the Sabbath, on the same evening — the Sabbath terminating at sunset. It would, however, vary in connection with the narrative of the burial of our Lord and the women following the body to the tomb, that 'they returned and prepared spices and ointments, and rested the Sabbath-day according to the commandment.' Luke is not so minute in his details as Mark: he here states the general facts without regard to the order in which they took place.—P.

† Peter, it is most likely, would now consider himself unworthy the name of disciple, seeing he had done what none of the rest may, what not even Judas had done — first denied positively — then denied contemptuously — and, lastly, forsworn his Master: He is, therefore, specially mentioned, to afford him the earliest assurance of his Lord's compassion and pardon, and of his speedy restoration to the apostolic office, he had justly forfeited by his instability.—C.

7 Mark's narrative of the resurrection breaks off abruptly at this place. No reason can be assigned for it. The evangelist is not so minute in this part of his history as we find him in the earlier portions. Had we no other information, it would appear as if the women never delivered Christ's message; the fact is, however, that they communicated with the disciples almost immediately. It is by combining the four Gospels we get a clear and full view of the incidents of the resurrection.—P.

8 It will appear even to a cursory reader that this last section of the Gospel is a fragment unconnected with what precedes, and wanting in that definiteness which elsewhere characterizes Mark. It is not found in some ancient MSS., and hence a few critics have pronounced it spurious. The weight of evidence is unquestionably in its favour, and I have no hesitation in regarding it as genuine. The probability is that Mark added it to his Gospel at a later period.—P.

1 An angel declareth the resurrection of Christ to three women. 9 Christ himself appeareth to Mary Magdalene: 12 to two of his disciples going into the country: 14 then to the apostles, 15 whom he sendeth forth to preach the gospel: 19 and ascendeth into heaven.

AND when[a] the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him.[1]

2 And[b] very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at[2] the rising of the sun.

3 And they said among themselves, [c]Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?[3]

4 And when they looked, they saw that [d]the stone was rolled away: for it was very great.

5 And[e] entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man[4] sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted.[5]

6 And he saith unto them, [g]Be not affrighted: ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: [h]he is risen; he is not here: behold the place where they laid him.

7 But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter[6] that he goeth before you into Galilee: [i]there shall ye see him, as he said unto you.

8 And[j] they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre; for they trembled and were amazed: neither said they any thing to any man; for they were afraid.[7]

9 ¶ Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, [k]he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils.[8]

10 And[l] she went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept.

11 And they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been seen of her, [m]believed not.

12 ¶ After that he appeared in another [9]form [o]unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country.

13 And[p] they went and told it unto the residue; neither believed they them.

14 ¶ Afterward[q] he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat,[1] and [r]upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen.

corpse. The women attended in order to embalm him. And shall not my soul love and honour him who so loved me and gave himself for me!

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 6 Ye seek Jesus of NAZARETH. A pious mind—which is always the same with a truly philosophical mind—will feel pleasure in observing that an angel from heaven is well acquainted with the name of a humble and despised town upon earth, of which he makes special and honourable mention, as the birthplace of Jesus. And let every humble, though, it may be, despised believer, remember that the contrite heart receives from the Saviour the honour of being recorded not only as his birthplace, but his home. See Ga. 4. 19: Jn. 14. 23: Re. 3. 20. C.

culties which they know not how to surmount, they go forward depending on God, and find them removed; and readily, amidst fear and confusion, they obey the heavenly direction.—Happy are they who have a risen Redeemer as theirs, with all mercy in his heart and all power in his hand! How marvellous his love in appearing first to Mary Magdalene, who had been lately so notorious a sinner; and so early to disciples, who had so shamefully deserted him! How careful was he to establish the truth of his resurrection by repeated appearances to his incredulous followers! He conquered their unreasonable diffidence, and shamed them out of their unbelief. But great was his grace in granting his apostles an unlimited commission to preach the gospel in all the world, and miraculous powers to attest it. And astonishing is his glory in heaven, and the blessed effects of it in the descent of his Spirit.—Let me now then believe the gospel to the saving of my soul. Let my faith and hope be in God through him. Let me rejoice in my risen, my ascended Saviour; and eagerly ask, and abundantly receive, the gifts which he received for men, even for the rebellious. And let my affections be set on things above, where Jesus is at the right hand of God.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF MARK.

Biography is, certainly, one of the most efficient modes of instruction; for by gratifying curiosity, it lightens study, and excites attention, while it conveys and fixes precept by the visible power of example. In the biographies, however, composed by worldly men—nay, sometimes in those composed by religious men—minute and trivial details are often so extended as to beget a fear that the idolatry of friendship has rather attempted to set up an object of admiration and worship, than to record important facts either for warning against error and sin, or instruction in truth and righteousness.

Among the numerous internal evidences of the divine origin of the Scriptures, their biographies hold a conspicuous place; their chief characteristics being truth, concerning good or evil, and brevity. Had the life of our Lord been 'a cunningly devised fable,' it contains materials for many volumes, which literary vanity never could have compressed into four brief tracts, such as the Gospels literally are. This observation applies in a particular manner to the Gospel by Mark, which reduces the whole ministerial life of the most remarkable character that ever appeared on earth to sixteen chapters! Mark was not himself, so far as appears, a constant companion of our Lord, and so must have received several of his narratives, and especially whatever he records of our Lord's private discourses, from one of the twelve apostles, who is believed to have been Peter. That the style and contents of his Gospel are somewhat similar to those of Matthew, is certain; yet are there differences, both of omission and addition, to prove that he was no copyist; and especially there are some marks of style that prove the distinct originality of Mark,—the Spirit of God making use of the various styles of men—the words being his own—just as in nature God manifests a continued variety, though that boundless variety unites in one witness to his wisdom, power, and goodness.

As an example of Mark's peculiarity of style, one word may be selected, the word εὐθέως, immediately; which occurs in Matthew 15 times, in Luke 8 times, in John 4 times, in Acts 9 times, and in Mark no less than 39 times! A peculiarity so striking that were it certain that the evangelist was that John Mark who was servant to Paul and Barnabas (Ac. 15. 37–39), his so frequent use of the word might be looked upon as a result and memorial of that ready and habitual attention with which he was accustomed to reply to their directions.

That he wrote for Gentile strangers is obvious from the following, among other evidences. 1. When he mentions the Jordan (ch. 1. 5), the appellation river is added. 2. As the Romans could not understand the Jewish phrase 'defiled' hands, he adds, parenthetically, the description 'unwashen' (ch. 7. 2). 3. When he uses the word 'corban' (ch. 7. 11), he immediately subjoins the interpretation, 'that is, gift.' 4. In speaking of our Lord he never styles him 'Son of man,' which the Jews could interpret from Daniel (ch. 7. 13), but 'Son of God,' by which the Gentiles might comprehend his deity.

SAINT LUKE.

Luke was a physician, Col. 4. 14: and attended Paul about seventeen years after his coming into Macedonia, Ac. 16. 10: probably till his death, 2 Ti. 4. 11. He wrote this history of the life of Christ, perhaps about twenty-two, or rather thirty years after his ascension; and includes therein a multitude of things, not mentioned by Matthew nor Mark, concerning the birth and private life of John the Baptist and Jesus Christ, ch. i. ii.; Christ's genealogy, ch. iii.; his preaching and persecution at Nazareth, ch. iv.; his sermon on the plain, ch. vi.; his raising the widow's son, and parable of the debtors, ch. vii.; his mission of the seventy: direction of the lawyer as to the way of eternal life; parable of the Samaritan, and reproof of Martha, ch. x.; his directions to pray; parable of the importunate friend, ch. xi.; and of the rich fool, ch. xii.; his alarm to repentance, &c.; his parable of the barren fig-tree; his healing the deformed woman, ch. xiii.; his cure of the dropsy; parables of the supper, builder, and king intending to make war, ch. xiv.; his parables of the lost sheep, piece of silver, younger son, unjust steward, and of Lazarus, ch. xv. xvi.; his parable of the servant; his healing ten lepers; his warning as to the awful manner of setting up his kingdom, ch. xvii.; his parable of the importunate widow, and of the Pharisee and publican, ch. xviii.; the conversion of Zaccheus; parable of the pounds; mournful prediction of Jerusalem's ruin, ch. xix.; his abuse by Herod, ch. xxiii.; and conversation with the disciples going to Emmaus; and with the eleven, &c., ch. xxiv.

[The references of Luke to the Old Testament are Ge. 7. 27: 18. 19; 19. 26; Ex. 23. 15 17; Le. 19. 18; De. 6. 5–13; 16. 1–16: 2 Sa. 7 11, 12; 1 Ki. 10. 1; 17. 9; 2 Ki. 5. 14; 1 Ch. 24. 10–19; 2 Ch. 8. 14; 24. 20, 21; Ps. 91. 11; 118. 22, 26; 132. 11; Is. 8. 14; 9. 2; 35. 5; 46. 3; 56. 6; 52. 10; 53. 1, 2; Da. 9. 26, 27: Mi. 3. 12. C.

The origin and object of Luke's Gospel are stated by himself. Others had taken in hand to draw up narratives of our Lord's life and labours, he resolved to write a more complete history. The other narratives to which he refers were not the canonical Gospels; they appear to have been fragmentary biographies written without divine authority, and consequently imperfect, and probably erroneous. Luke, with these before him, undertook in the interests of the church, and under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, to draw up a full and authentic narrative. He was not himself an eye-witness of Christ's labours; but he received his information from those who were; he arranged his materials and constructed his narrative with philosophic skill; and his Gospel is in some respects historically more complete than any of the others. It gives details of the events preceding and accompanying the birth of our Lord which we do not find elsewhere, and which were probably obtained from the Virgin Mary. It unfolds more fully some of Christ's discourses and parables; it enlarges upon the great facts of the resurrection; and it supplies the only account we possess in the Gospels of the last earthly interview between Christ and the apostles at the ascension. Luke attached himself specially to Paul; joining him at Troas on the eve of his entrance into Greece, he remained with him during the greater number of his later missionary journeys. He accompanied him to Jerusalem, where he was seized by the Jews; he remained with him at Cæsarea; he went with him to Rome, and was his companion during a long imprisonment. The character of Paul's oral teachings, the varied nationalities of the churches he founded, his logical acumen and burning eloquence—all contributed more or less to give this Gospel its distinctive form, and to make it equally applicable and acceptable to Jewish and Gentile converts. P.]

CHURCH OF ST. JOHN IN THE DESERT. [Luke, i:5.]—The Church of St. John is built over the exact spot where it is supposed once stood the house in which lived Zachariah and Elizabeth. This is at Ain Karim. We have a distant view of this village from the Jerusalem road lying indistinct in the midst of the Judean mountains. Now we are on the very spot that is sacred to the memory of Elizabeth and Zachariah and John the Baptist. This church was built by the affection and piety of the saints of the early ages. For hundreds of years monks and priests and unworldly Christians found pleasure in living in the neighborhood of this sacred place. It is about nine miles from Jerusalem. Here Mary came from Nazareth and spent six months with her cousin Elizabeth.

1 The preface of Luke to his whole Gospel. 5 The conception of John the Baptist. 26 and of Christ. 39 The prophecy of Elisabeth, and of Mary, concerning Christ. 57 The nativity and circumcision of John. 67 The prophecy of Zacharias, both of Christ, and of John.

FORASMUCH as many[1] have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of [a]those things which are most surely believed among us,

2 Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were [b]eye-witnesses, and ministers[c] of the word;

3 It[d] seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first,[2] to [e]write unto thee in [f]order, [g]most excellent Theophilus,

4 That[h] thou mightest know the certainty of those things wherein thou hast been instructed.

5 ¶ THERE was, [i]in the days of Herod the king of Judea, a certain priest named Zacharias, [j]of the course of Abia:[3] and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth.

6 And[k] they were both righteous before God,[4] walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord,[5] blameless.[6]

7 And[l] they had no child, because that Elisabeth was barren, and they both were now well stricken in years.

8 And it came to pass, that while [m]he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course,

9 According[o] to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord.[7]

10 And[p] the whole multitude of the people were praying without, at the time of incense.

11 And[q] there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord, standing on the right side of [r]the altar of incense.

12 And when Zacharias saw him, [s]he was troubled, and fear fell upon him.

13 But the angel said unto him, [t]Fear not, Zacharias: [u]for thy prayer[8] is heard; and thy wife Elisabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John.

14 And [v]thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth.[9]

15 For he shall be [w]great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink;[1] and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb.

16 And[y] many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God.

17 And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient [z]to the [a]wisdom of the just;[3] to make ready a people prepared for [b]the Lord.

18 ¶ And Zacharias said unto the angel, [c]Whereby shall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years.

19 And the angel, answering, said unto him, [d]I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God; and am sent to speak unto thee, and to show thee these glad tidings.

20 And, behold, [e]thou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed, [f]because thou believest not my words, which shall be fulfilled in their season.[4]

21 And the people [g]waited[6] for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried so long in the temple.

22 And when he came out, he could not speak unto them: and they perceived that he had seen a vision in the temple; for he beckoned unto them, and remained speechless.

23 And it came to pass, that, as soon as the [h]days of his ministration were accomplished, he departed to his own house.

24 ¶ And after those days, his wife Elisabeth [i]conceived, and hid herself five months, saying,

25 Thus hath the Lord dealt with me, in the days wherein [k]he looked on me, to take away my reproach among men.

26 ¶ And in the [l]sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God, unto [m]a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, 27 To[l] a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary.

This is important, for it illustrates a principle in the publication of the divine Word. It is thus that wherever knowledge can be gained by human means, supernatural revelation is not employed.—P.

[8] It is evident from this word that many accounts had already been published in Luke's time, of the life and labours of Christ. It seems also to me, from ver. 4 that none of these were satisfactory, and consequently Luke cannot here refer to the canonical Gospels. It is questionable whether he ever saw, or even heard of, any of the other Gospels before writing his own. None of the narratives referred to by Luke have come down to us. The works known as apocryphal, and which profess to give histories of our Lord, are of a much later date.—P.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 16, 17. By his doctrine and example he shall be a happy instrument, in the hand of the Spirit, of turning many from their iniquities and false opinions to the Messiah. In his coarse and severe manner of life, and by his plentiful endowment with the Holy Spirit, he shall resemble the ancient Elijah; and shall be the means of reconciling men one to another, even Jews to Gentiles; yea, he shall make the most stubborn sinners wise unto salvation, and, by conviction of sin, prepare them to receive the divine Saviour. 51–53. He h_ marvellously exerted his power in helping and showing mercy to all people, in casting down self-righteous and self-sufficient sinners, and in putting high honours upon the poor and debased. He has granted the desire of such as were earnestly inquiring after a Saviour, and enriched them with his favour; but has denied the blessings of his kingdom to such as are rich in this world, or abound in self-confidence and self-conceit. 68. Let all praise, honour, and blessing be ascribed to that God who, after a long apparent neglect of his people, is now, in infinite kindness, sending his Son to save and redeem them, and who is now raising up his long-promised Messiah to exalt and protect his pious ones, and to cast down their NAZARETH, FROM THE LATIN MOUNT. [Luke, 1:26.]--We have here an excellent view of Nazareth. From the Latin Mount we see the roads and camel paths and hills about the city, with the olive trees and residences at the lower part of the city, and get a beautiful view of one of the loveliest spots under the sun. A view all the more attractive because we know, in addition to the natural features which make it lovely, the eyes of our Savior often beheld it. Perhaps there is not a hill or valley or spot about this, the city of His boyhood, that He did not pass over time and again. The tents that look so small, above the Greek Church of the Annunciation, were the tents of the tourists who passed through Palestine to get the pictures which illustrate this New Testament.

28 And the angel came in unto her, and said, [a]Hail,[7] thou that art highly [b]favoured, [c]the Lord is with thee: [d]blessed art thou among women.

29 And when she saw him, [e]she was troubled[8] at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be.

30 And the angel said unto her, [f]Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favour with God.

31 And,[g] behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS.

32 He[h] shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him [i]the throne of his father David:[1]

33 And[k] he shall reign over the house of Jacob[l] for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

34 Then said Mary unto the angel, [m]How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?[2]

35 And the angel answered and said unto her, [n]The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called [o]the Son of God.

36 And,[p] behold, thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month with her who was called barren.

37 For [q]with God nothing shall be impossible.

38 And Mary said, [r]Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word.[3] And the angel departed from her.

39 ¶ And Mary arose in those days, and went into the [s]hill country with haste, into a city of [t]Judah;[5]

40 And entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elisabeth.

41 And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the [u]babe leaped in her womb; and Elisabeth was [v]filled with the Holy Ghost:

42 And she spake out with a loud voice, and said, [w]Blessed art thou among women, and blessed[j] is the fruit of thy womb.

43 And[k] whence is this to me, that the mother of [x]my Lord should come to me?

44 For lo, as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy.

45 And[x] blessed is she that believed: for there[6] shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord.

46 ¶ And Mary said, [y]My soul doth magnify the Lord,

47 And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.[7]

48 For[z] he hath regarded the low estate[8] of his handmaiden: for, behold, from henceforth all generations [a]shall call me blessed.

49 For[r] he that is mighty hath done to me great things; and holy is his name.

50 And[s] his mercy is on them that fear him, from generation to generation.

51 He[t] hath showed strength with his arm; [u]he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

52 He[v] hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree.

53 He[z] hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich he hath sent empty away.

54 He[y] hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy;

55 As[t] he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed for ever.

56 And Mary abode with her about three months, and returned to her own house.

57 ¶ Now Elisabeth's full time came, that she should be delivered; and [b]she brought forth a son.

58 And her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had showed [b]great mercy upon her; and [c]they rejoiced with her.

59 And it came to pass, that [d]on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.

60 And his mother answered and said, Not so; [e]but he shall be called John.

enemies, spiritual or temporal; 74, 75, that being, by his love, power, and grace, redeemed from sin, Satan, and the world, we may, while we live, constantly serve God, without slavish fear of him, or tormenting fear of our enemies, in all the duties of piety, righteousness, and sobriety, as in his sight, and depending on him for assistance and gracious reward. 76-79. Thou shalt be the prophetic forerunner of the incarnate God the Messiah, to publish his appearance, and to direct and excite men to receive him: to show them that they must be saved, not by their own legal righteousness, but by the remission of their sins through Jesus' blood, according to the loving, tender and compassionate kindness of God, by which Christ, the heavenly Sun of Righteousness, comes into our world, to enlighten, revive, and save, not only us Jews, but also the Gentiles, who have been long destitute of the means of grace, and enveloped with ignorance, error, and wickedness; and to direct us to the true methods of enjoying peace with God, with our own consciences, and our neighbours, till we arrive at perfect and everlasting happiness.

Ver. 1. Theophilus. Who this person was does not appear; and historic celebrity is neither essential nor important to the children of God. That he was a real and not a fictitious personage is, however, apparent; because no man 'speaking by the Spirit of God' could call an imaginary character to receive or patronize, as it were, a real history. C.

Ver. 15. And he shall be filled, &c. A beautiful and blessed example of the work of the Spirit being contemporaneous with the moment, not merely of birth, but of living existence, as the original signifies. We once knew a philosopher to say, 'That he had known but one who had led him to question the doctrine of original sin.' The observation was striking and candid, but not just. The beauty of a personal holiness, that he could not deny, should have led him not to doubt original sin, but to admire the early, and wonderful, and effectual working of the Spirit of God. C.

Ver. 19. That stand in the presence of God. This is not a description borrowed, as Bloomfield imagines, 'from the custom of oriental courts,' but a declaration of the fact that where Gabriel stands there is 'the presence (the manifestation) of the LORD.' C.

Ver. 24. Hid herself. Not to avoid, as Bloomfield supposes, 'the raileries and gazings of the vulgar' for such conduct the Jewish feelings and manners would never have tolerated (see ver. 58); but to give herself to meditation and prayer, upon an announcement and occasion so extraordinary.—Note, 'Children are God's heritage;' and blessed is that wife who, if the Lord deny her children, bows submissively to his holy will; and who, if the Lord grant her children, receives the gift as a subject and excitement to thanksgiving and prayer. C.

Ver. 32. Surely when a demand is made for a single verse that combines the divine and human nature of Christ, this might suffice, in which he is called the 'Son of the Highest,' yet exalted by promise to 'the throne of his father David!' C.

Ver. 35. The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, is one act representing the preparation of the body of JESUS, ver. 31.—And the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee, is another, representing the personal act of the WORD, uniting himself with the humanity which was 'born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God'—even of God the Holy Spirit.—The conclusion in the word therefore, clearly demonstrates that JESUS was called 'the Son of God,' because, according to his humanity, he was conceived of the Holy Ghost. But his being named 'the Son of God' upon this account does not preclude his being also named 'the Son of God' upon another account—namely, upon account of his being 'that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested to us,' 1 Jn. 1. 2. For surely if he was 'eternal life with the FATHER,' he must have been the SON; for the FATHER could not have been the FATHER unless the WORD had been his SON! C.

Ver. 39. A city of Juda. The particular city is unnamed, and conjecture is useless. But it is worth remark, that from Nazareth to the nearest city in the 'hill country of Judea' (ver. 6) could not be less than several score miles, through mountains intersected with ravines and rivers; and that the undertaking of such a journey is a striking mark of the devotedness and decision of the personal character of Mary. C.

Ver. 42-55. It is impossible to read these pious effusions of Elisabeth and Mary without admiring the rich treasury of pray[er] and praise which the Scriptures furnish for all occasions. To DISTANT VIEW OF THE BIRTHPLACE OF JOHN THE BAPTIST. (Luke, i:57.)—The birthplace of John the Baptist which we have shown in another view of the Judean mountains, is so indistinct and vague that it can hardly be discerned. It is toward the right of the picture. The view helps us to get an idea of the Judean mountains, the folds of the hills, and the general topographical features of the country. This view is typical of the character of John the Baptist. He was a gloomy and severe and lonely man. So the country, represented in the picture before us, is gloomy and lonely and severe. A man in a region like this would be very apt to grow into a contemplative and thoughtful man. There is nothing here to divide the attention and nothing of a worldly nature to tempt anyone. Here are lonely hills and skies and lakes and olive trees, and nothing else.

61 And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.

62 And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called.

63 And he asked for a writing-table, and wrote, saying, His name [g]is John.[g] And they marvelled all.

64 And[h] his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God.

65 And[i] fear came on all[1] that dwelt round about them: and all these sayings[2] were noised abroad throughout all the hill country of Judea:

66 And all they that heard them [j]laid them up in their hearts, saying, [k]What manner of child shall this be! [l]And the hand of the Lord was with him.

67 ¶ And his father Zacharias was [m]filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying,

68 Blessed[o] be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath [p]visited and redeemed his people,

69 And[q] hath raised up an horn of salvation for us, in the house of his servant David;

70 As[r] he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began:

71 That[s] we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us;

72 To[t] perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and [u]to remember his holy covenant;

73 The oath which he sware to our father Abraham,

74 That he would grant unto us, [v]that we, being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve him without fear,

75 In[x] holiness[3] and righteousness[4] before him, [y]all the days of our life.

1 Or enrolled in the registers of the empire in order to be taxed, &c.

2 The chronological difficulty in this statement appears to be solved by the recent researches of Zumpt. P. S. Quirinius, called by Luke Cyrenius, was consul in B.C. 12, and was therefore from that time qualified to fill the office of governor of Syria. From B.C. 12 till B.C. 4 the names of the governors are recorded; from B.C. 4 till A.D. 4 the record is blank. During that period the census took place, and there is a very strong probability that Quirinius filled the office of governor from B.C. 4 till B.C. 2, and during his rule a census of the province was either first ordered by the imperial government, or first carried into effect. Grammatically the passage may bear either interpretation.—P.

CHAPTER II.

1 Augustus taxeth all the Roman empire. 6 The birth of Christ. 8 An angel relateth it to the shepherds: 13 many sing praises to God for it. 21 Christ is circumcised. 22 Mary purified. 28 Simeon and Anna prophesy of Christ: 40 who increaseth in wisdom, 46 questioneth in the temple with the doctors, 51 and is obedient to his parents.

AND it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed.[1]

2 (And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.)[2]

3 And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

4 And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto [a]the city of David, which is called Bethlehem, (because he was [b]of the house and lineage of David,)

5 To be taxed with Mary his espoused [3]wife, being great with child.

6 ¶ And so it was, that, [c]while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

7 And [d]she brought forth her first-born son, and wrapped him in swaddling-clothes, and them the Spirit leads the memories of these two godly women, and gives their feelings utterance in language doubly affecting, because uniting the recollection of the past with the possession of the present mercies; see ver. 54. C.

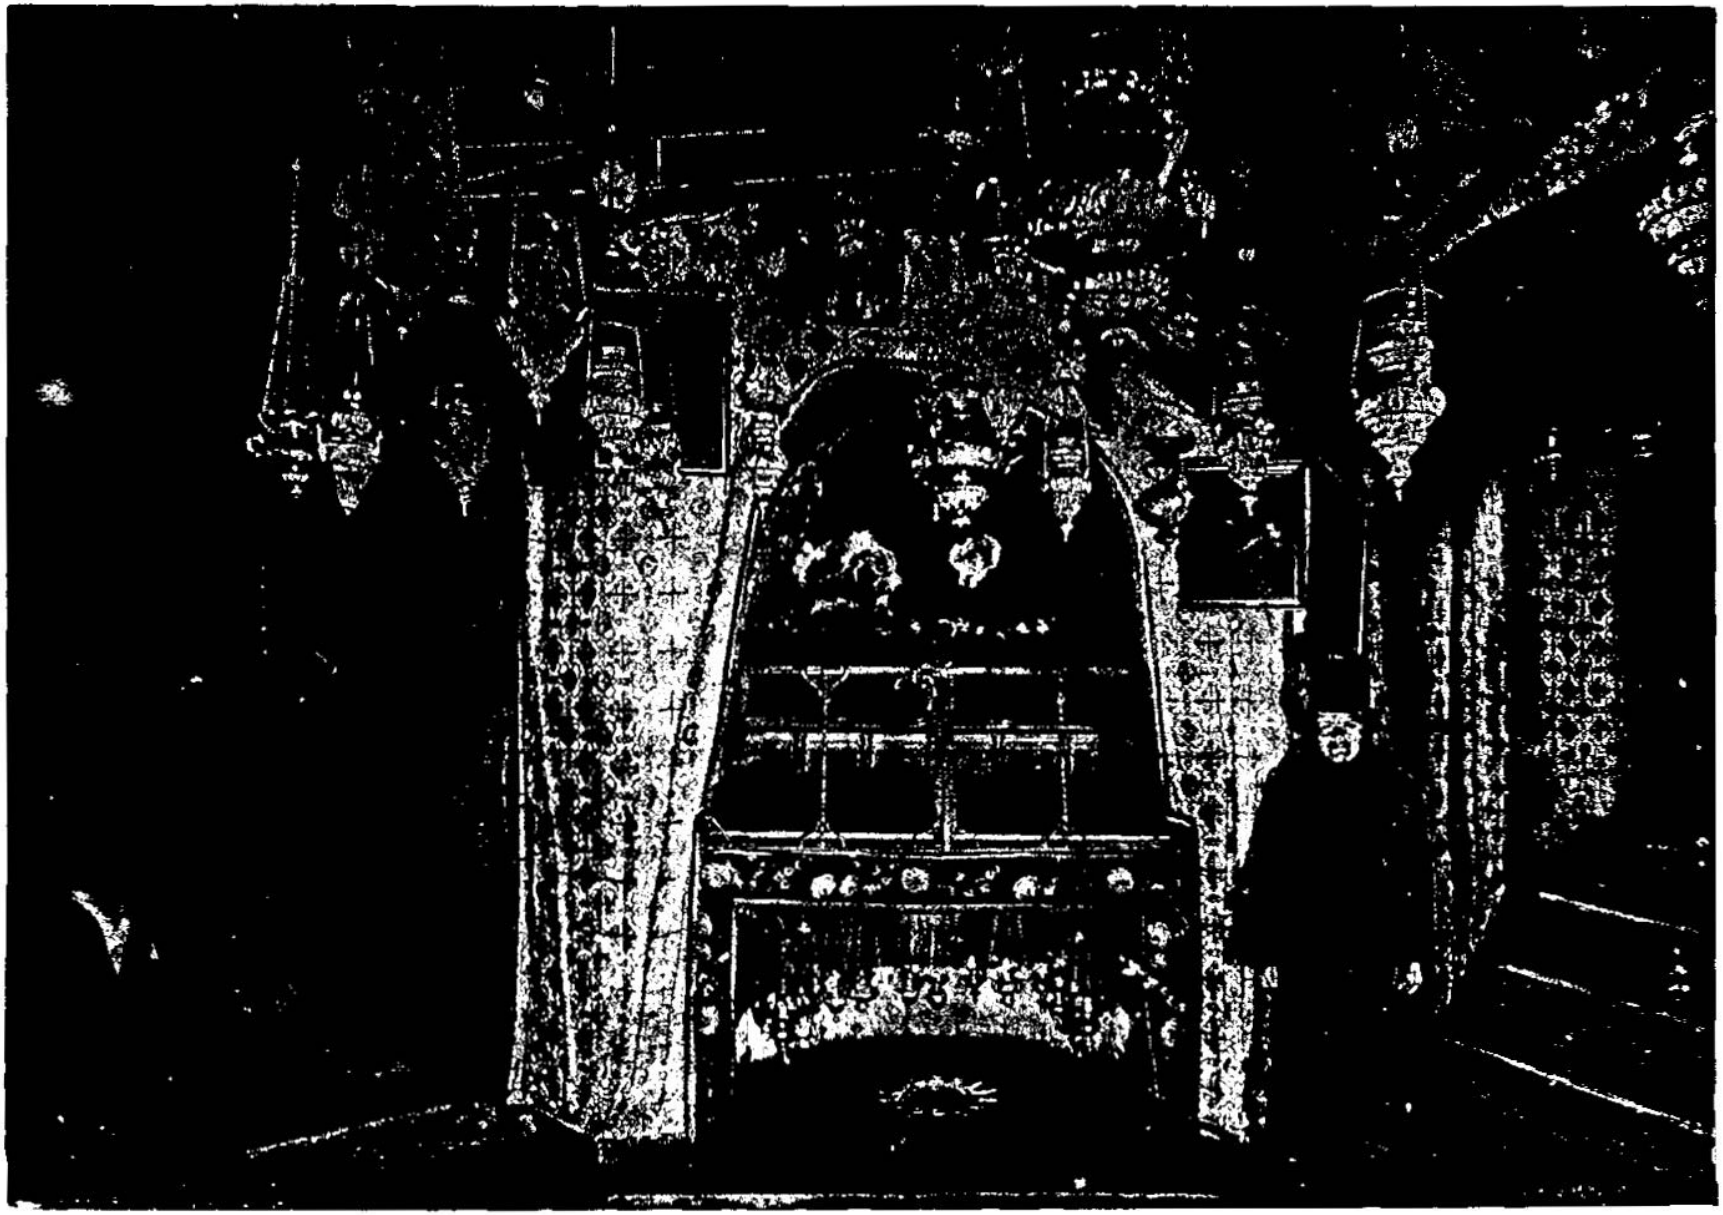
Ver. 60. It is evident Zacharias had communicated to his wife the name the angel had prescribed for the child—a lesson of that confidence that 'those whom God hath bound together' should ever reciprocate. It is equally evident that while perfectly confidential with one another, they were as perfectly silent towards their neighbours and relatives—another most valuable lesson for all relations and conditions of life; for while cunning concealment of our purposes is foolish and vain, a prudent silence, and even secrecy, is always a proof of wisdom, and generally essential to success. C.

Ver. 77. 'The knowledge of salvation,' and the knowledge of the 'remission of sins,' are inseparably connected in the purpose of God; and he that lays hold upon the one cannot possibly be ignorant of the other. Even as he that is delivered from shipwreck or disease cannot possibly, if in his right mind, be ignorant of his escape from danger, or of his restored health. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The wonderful things of the gospel are declared with the greatest care and certainty, that we may clearly understand and firmly believe them. And for the same purpose a train of miracles introduced our Immanuel into our world, by which the ancient predictions concerning him and his forerunner were exactly accomplished. Delightful, distinguished, and unexpected mercies will come at last to those who, in a distinguished manner, fear God. Those that are humble and honour him he will honour; nothing is too hard for him to effect. And saints' unbelief of his promises must meet with sharp rebukes. The revival of miracles and prophecies pleasingly opened the way for the gospel dispensation. And with what reverence ought we always to think of Jesus Christ as the Son of God, as the Lord our God; and of the Holy Ghost, who exerts the whole power of the Godhead!—But how sweetly astonishing is it to behold God's eternal Son made of a woman!—To behold the infinite JEHOVAH personally united to the likeness of sinful flesh in order to save his enemies of mankind. Permanent and glorious is his spiritual kingdom. From the riches of divine mercy all the blessings of it originally proceed, and are bestowed on us by almighty love, notwithstanding all our unwillingness and unworthiness. It is this which lays the surest ground for the firmest faith, the deepest humility, the profoundest admiration, the most ravishing joy, and exalted praise. Thrice blessed is it to rejoice in a Saviour born for us, and received into our heart, and in that great salvation which he brings near to all men. Thrice happy are true believers in the pardon of their sins, the acceptance of their prayers, and their deliverance from their enemies. And in the highest praise and filial service of God should they improve these benefits. Never does God send any upon important work without proper qualifications. And rarely do men addicted to carnal company make an agreeable figure in the church.—Let me in every state learn to be fervent in my devotions. Let me offer all my services through Jesus' mediation. Let me acquaint myself with God and his Word, and always credit whatever he says. Let me vie with angels in readiness to speak of my Redeemer. And if God honour me, let me humble myself, and rejoice in his mercy.



CHAPTER II. Ver. 34, 35. He is appointed of God and brought into the world as an occasion of the stumbling and falling of many Israelites, and as the divine means of raising up men to eternal life and happiness. And such shall be his wonderfully mean and suffering circumstances that many will speak against him with bitter enmity and blasphemy; and you, his mother, shall be tormented with anguish and pain to see him so contemned, reviled, persecuted, and murdered: yet by these means it will clearly be discovered who are his friends that accept him, and who his enemies that reject him.

Ver. 1. Cæsar Augustus. This was Caius Cæsar Octavianus Augustus, one of the Roman triumvirs, who was chosen emperor B.C. 29, and died A.D. 14. He received the name of Cæsar, the family name of Julius Cæsar, by whom he had been adopted, and the name of Augustus (the most probable meaning of which is, 'worthy of divine honours,' Pausan. iii. 11) he received from the servile senate.—All the world. Some would translate it, 'all the (Roman) empire'—an expression very frequent in the best classical writers. But as no such general taxation is mentioned by any contemporary historian, it seems more consonant to Jewish phraseology to understand it merely of 'all Judea,' which the Jews considered the earth of the whole world; see Ru. 2. 1; 2 Sa. 24. 8. This view seems to be confirmed by ver. 3, in which 'every one' went to 'his own city'—a description that evidently could apply to Judea alone. C.

Ver. 2. It appears from historical records that Cyrenius was not made governor of Syria till ten or twelve years after the birth of Jesus. The words may, however, be more literally translated, 'And this first registration was carried into effect (that is, by taxation, when Cyrenius was governor of Syria;' or, 'The first registration was made under Cyrenius (afterwards) governor of Syria.' C.

Ver. 3. His own city—the capital city of his own family (see ver. 4), not of his district. Wherefore it is evident that, though commanded by Roman authority, the registration was conducted upon Jewish principles. C.

Ver. 12. A manger. The ordinary Greek text is 'the manger, stable,' or whatever else the meaning of the term may be. The laid[e] him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.

PLACE OF THE MANGER IN THE GROTTO. [LUKE, ii:4-7.]—This is a picture of the interior of the Church of the Nativity, and there is given here a representation of the place once occupied by the manger in which our Savior was born. The star which you observe in the view is supposed to occupy the particular place where our Savior was born. Around this star are written the following words: "HERE JESUS CHRIST WAS BORN OF THE VIRGIN MARY." This place is always guarded by the Turkish soldiers, and about this star silver lamps are always burning. Notable festivities are observed in this church during Christmas time. Nearly all the lamps that are in it are very fine, and are presents from different kings of the world. There is no place in Palestine looked upon with more loving and pathetic interest than the place of the manger in the grotto.

8 ¶ And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping [4]watch over their flock by night.[5]

9 And, lo, [g]the angel of the Lord came [h]upon them, and the [i]glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid.

10 And the angel said unto them, [j]Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

11 For[k] unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

12 And this shall be a sign unto you; [l]Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling-clothes, lying in a manger.

13 And suddenly there was with the angel a[m] multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying,

14 Glory[n] to God in the highest, and on earth [p]peace, good will toward men.

15 ¶ And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds[6] said one to another, [q]Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

16 And they came [r]with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger.

17 And when they had seen it, [s]they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child.

18 And all they that heard it [t]wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds.

19 But [u]Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart.

20 And the shepherds returned, [v]glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them.

21 ¶ And[z] when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child, his name was called JESUS,[7] which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb.

22 ¶ And [y]when the days of her purification, according to the law of Moses, were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord;

23 (As it is written in the law of the Lord, Every[x] male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord;)

At that season, and in the mountains of Judea, the nights are extremely cold and neither sheep or shepherds would remain in the fields. The ecclesiastical calendars of Greece will show that the birth took place about the time of the passover in spring. P.

* In reviewing this wondrous narrative there is one thing which strikes the thoughtful student, especially in these days. In every circumstance connected with the promise and birth of the Forerunner, and the advent of the Messiah, we see the supernatural. It is so entirely interwoven with the narrative—it is so imbedded in every fact, and incident, and speech, that it cannot be eliminated without at the same time destroying the harmony and consistency of the whole history. To strip Luke's evangelical story of the supernatural element would be to make it not merely incredible but impossible. The narrative opens with the visit of an angel. His words are prophetic and his acts miraculous. A second time he appears, with a message from God. Mary and Elizabeth were both 'filled with the Holy Ghost.' His presence and inspiring power in the case of Zacharias, Simeon and Anna, were equally seen. Every event in the wondrous narrative was a miracle of Divine power.—P.

[1] I think Alford has given the key to the right interpretation of this passage. It is connected with, in fact embodied in, a sentence which describes the effects of Christ's salvation upon the hearts and consciences of men. No allusion is made to mere human sorrow, but to sorrow for sin. The struggles referred to in the context are the struggles of penitent souls for pardon and acceptance. Mary herself, if she here predicted, would pass through a similar struggle. The pangs of sorrow for sin would pierce her heart also.—P.

however, is wanting in many MSS.; the Editio Princeps is cancelled by Wetstein, and rejected by Middleton. But as it occurs in ver. 7, in distinction from 'the inn,' it is evidently as necessary here, where it serves as a direction to the shepherds—a direction which proves it to be a well-known public place, and not a private article, such as 'a manger,' that could not serve as a mark of any particular place in the town. See also ver. 16, in which the is repeated without any critical question. C.

Ver. 19. The conduct of Mary in this case furnishes a most valuable lesson to parents, who are often found anxious and labouring to display every qualification and prospect of their children. Never had a mother such an opportunity, nay, such a temptation to display, as Mary; but she was silent, yet not regardless; for while she 'kept all these things,' she 'pondered them in her heart.' C.

Ver. 21. Was so named of the angel. The angelic name Jesus is very pregnant with important discoveries of the invisible world. (1.) It shows that angels have full knowledge of our sinful estate; see Mat. 1. 21. (2.) Of the mystery of our redemption. (3.) That they have knowledge of individuals, even by name, and are interested in those names. (4.) That, either by special revelation, or by an intuitive knowledge of the ways of God, they can prophesy of future events. (5.) That they are God's agents in human affairs, even those considered minute and unimportant; and are (not ruling spirits, entitled to prayer, but) 'ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation.' C.

THE ROAD FROM JERUSALEM TO BETHLEHEM—OVER WHICH MARY AND JOSEPH PASSED. [Luke, ii:22.]—Mary and Joseph, in going from Nazareth to Bethlehem to be taxed in accordance with the decree of Cæsar Augustus, doubtless passed by Jerusalem, and this road becomes interesting to us because of its connection with the visit of the holy family. It is, perhaps, very much to-day as it was when Joseph and Mary passed this way. The particular part of it we see is just below the Joppa Gate in the Jerusalem wall. One sort of conveyance passes along this way now that was never known until within recent years—that is the omnibus which carries passengers to and from the Jerusalem trains; for it is along this same way that modern tourists now go to the Jerusalem depot, which is about half a mile from the walls of the city.

BEEROTH—WHERE MARY AND JOSEPH MISSED THE CHILD JESUS. [Luke, ii.44.]—Beeroth is about a day's journey from Jerusalem as people used to travel it is interesting to-day because it is supposed to be the place where Mary and Joseph spent the night after the first day's journey from Jerusalem upon their return to Nazareth, in our Savior's twelfth year. It is well known that at the end of the day's journey they sought Him among the people, and failed to find Him, making it necessary that they return the next day to Jerusalem to seek for Him. This is one of the cities of the Gibeonites. There are the ruins of an ancient church here, built by the Knights Templar who held Beeroth during the reign of the Latin kings. It was at Beeroth that Jotham concealed himself for fear of his brother, Abimelech.

42 And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem, after the custom of the feast.

43 And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and his mother knew not of it.

44 But they, supposing him to have been in the[h] company, went a day's journey; and they sought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance.

45 And when they found him not, they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking him.

46 And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple,[5] sitting in the midst of the doctors, both [i]hearing them, and asking them questions.

47 And all that heard him [j]were astonished at his understanding and answers.

48 And when they saw him, they were amazed: and his mother said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father[6] and I have sought thee sorrowing.

49 And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that [k]I must be about my Father's business?[7]

50 And they [l]understood not the saying which he spake unto them.

51 ¶ And he went down with them, and came[m] to Nazareth, and was subject unto them: but his mother [n]kept all these sayings in her heart.

52 And [p]Jesus increased in wisdom and stature,[8] and in favour with God and man.[9]

CHAPTER III.

1 The preaching and baptism of John: 15 his testimony of Christ. 19 Herod imprisoneth John. 21 Christ is baptized, and receiveth testimony from heaven. 23 The age and genealogy of Christ from Joseph upwards.

NOW in the fifteenth[1] year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, and Herod being tetrarch[2] of Galilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Iturea[3] and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lysanias the tetrarch[2] of Abilene,

2 Annas[4] and Caiaphas being the high-priests,[4] the[b] word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness.[5]

3 And[c] he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance[6] for the remission of sins;

4 As it is written in the book of the words of Esaias the prophet, saying, [d]The voice of one crying in the wilderness, [e]Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

5 Every[g] valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth;

6 And [h]all flesh[7] shall see the salvation of God.

7 Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, [i]O generation of vipers! who hath warned you to flee from [j]the wrath to come?

8 Bring[k] forth, therefore, fruits worthy [8]of repentance; and begin not to say within yourselves, [l]We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, That God is able of [m]these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

9 And[o] now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: every tree, therefore, which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

10 And the people[9] asked him, saying, [p]What shall we do then?

11 He answereth and saith unto them, [q]He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none;[1] and he that hath meat, let him do likewise.

12 Then[r] came also publicans to be baptized, and said unto him, Master, what shall we do?

13 And he said unto them, [s]Exact no more than that which is appointed you.

14 And the [t]soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do? And he said unto them, [u]Do violence to no man,[2] neither accuse any falsely;[3] and be content with your wages.[4]

15 ¶ And as the people were in [5]expectation, and all men mused[6] in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ or not;[7]

16 John answered, saying unto them all, [v]I indeed baptize you with water; but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose: [z]he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire:[8]

17 Whose[y] fan is in his hand, and he will throughly purge his floor, and will gather the wheat into his garner; but the chaff he will burn with fire unquenchable.

18 And many other things, in his exhortation, preached he unto the people.

19 ¶ But[a] Herod[9] the tetrarch, being reproved by him for Herodias his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done, 20 Added yet this above all, that he shut up John in prison.

21 ¶ Now when all the people were baptized, [b]it came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened,

22 And the Holy Ghost descended in a

[7] This is a remarkable statement, and recent controversies have attached to it even greater importance than it formerly possessed. I understand it as follows:—Our Lord possessed a true human nature—a human body and mind. He possessed also a divine nature; and in that nature was infinitude in wisdom and in power. His body grew, and the faculties of his mind expanded, like those of other children. And just in proportion as his mental faculties were developed did the divine wisdom manifest itself in them and shine through them. The human mind of Jesus was always filled with wisdom to the utmost extent of its capacity. Hence the statement in ch. 2. 40, 'The child grew, filled with wisdom.' As the mental powers expanded they were able to apprehend and exhibit more and more of the infinite wisdom of the indwelling God. From a human point of view, therefore, Jesus increased in wisdom. There was this essential difference, however, between him and mere men: men got their knowledge from without—from parents, schools, masters; Jesus got his from within—from his divine nature, which is the fountain of all knowledge.—P

NAZARETH FROM THE ESPLANADE OF THE ENGLISH ORPHANAGE—THE TOWN OF OUR SAVIOR'S BOYHOOD SEEN FROM AN INSTITUTION HIS LIFE CREATED. [Luke, II:51.]—"And he went down with them and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them: but his mother kept all these sayings in her heart." Some centuries after the ascension of our Lord, Nazareth became a place of great importance in the Christian Church. During the Crusades it was given to Tancred as a reward for his valor in winning Tiberias from Saracens. Tancred established a church at Nazareth and enriched it with a large endowment. Nazareth, which thus began to be celebrated because of the wealth of its church, became a metropolitan See. After the victory of Saladin in 1187, gained at the Horns of Hattin, Nazareth was reduced to great poverty. Saracen troops entered the church of the Virgin and butchered the Christians who had sought refuge there. King Louis of France is said to have visited Nazareth in 1250. At the beginning of last century the Christian population of Nazareth was greatly increased. There is a charm about the place now that no language can describe. Every rock and hill and tree glows with associations connected with the name of Jesus. There are now far more Christians here than Mahometans.

4 Son-in-law. The forty men here mentioned from Joseph to David were Christ's natural progenitors by his mother, whereas those mentioned by Matthew (ch. 1. 6–16) were ancestors in office, and progenitors of Joseph his supposed father.

5 Matthew has traced the genealogy of Jesus through Solomon and Jonah; Luke through Nathan, another son of David, and Mary. Heli was not the natural father of Joseph, but his father-in-law and father of Mary. Females were not reckoned in the Jewish genealogies. Mary is, therefore, passed over in name, but clearly intended when her father Heli is introduced. Joseph was, however, legally called the son of Heli, inasmuch as those who married heiresses were required to pass into the families of their fathers-in-law and be reckoned as their sons. Luke, writing for the Gentiles, proves Christ to be the 'seed of the woman;' Matthew, writing for the Jews, proves him the son of David and Abraham.—C.

But as 75 of the Hebrew MSS. is authorized for this omission, and as Luke must have quoted from the public registries, it would be unsafe to correct a name thus sanctioned. For examples are not wanting in the Old Testament of names occurring in one genealogy, and, for legal reasons, now unknown to us, expunged from another. The reverse of this may, of course, be the case: and a name expunged from one ancient genealogy may, for legal reasons, be restored in another.—C.

1 Our Lord had now, as man, arrived at the full vigour and maturity of mind and body. At the age of thirty the priests entered on their sacred office; at the same age Jesus entered on his office. He was solemnly consecrated also. The Holy Spirit had descended upon him, not in measure or temporarily, but in all his fulness. Christ, therefore, commenced his official work as perfect man, and filled with the Spirit of God.—P.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The temptation and fasting of Christ. 13 He overcometh the devil: 14 beginneth to preach. 16 The people of Nazareth admire his gracious words. 33 He cureth one possessed of a devil, 38 Peter's mother-in-law, 40 and divers other sick persons. 41 The devils acknowledge Christ, and are reproved for it. 42 He preacheth through the cities of Galilee.

AND Jesus,[a] being [b]full of the Holy Ghost, returned from Jordan, and was [c]led by the Spirit into the [d]wilderness,[1]

2 Being forty days [e]tempted of the devil. And [g]in those days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward [h]hungered.

Ver. 35. An ignorant man, by looking upon flint and steel, or even from feeling and minute examination, would never expect fire from their collision; and as little does any man know either himself or others, till circumstances bring out what lies concealed and unknown, and often unsuspected. The person, ministration, the cross, the sacrifice, and the judgment-seat of Christ, can alone fully reveal all that is in man of enmity that resists, or of humility, Spirit-begotten, that submits to the righteousness of God.

Ver. 36. Anna a prophetess. There were several distinguished prophetesses under the Old Testament—as Miriam, Deborah, and Huldah—so Anna is now inspired to represent woman in the knowledge and revelation of Messiah. By such historic means, and not by assertion or argument, does the Scripture declare the intellectual and moral dignity of woman. The Lord raise up many such holy women in his church to welcome and commend the Saviour! C.

Ver. 44. Company. The country being infested with many robbers, as appears from Josephus, it was needful that the people should travel in companies, for mutual protection; but it is more than probable (Ps. 84. 8, margin) that they were accustomed to unite in bands for mutual edification and religious services during their journeys. C.

Ver. 52. If Jesus were God, how could he 'grow in favour?' He grew in favour, as in stature or age. Being in the flesh, he was subject to all the sinless circumstances of the flesh, and consequently grew in favour with his heavenly Father, as years developed his amiabilities. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The taxing pride of a Roman emperor in a wonderful manner occasions our Redeemer's birth at the place long before marked in propiecy, and the enrolment of him and his family as descendants of David. And O how infinite was the debasement of the Son of God to save men! Yet pregnant with the greatest glory to himself and his Father, and with grace to men. Delightful are the tidings, the gracious offers, of him and his salvation to sinners in the gospel. And with sincerity and grateful praise ought they to be received by us and commended to others. A safe child-birth ought to be esteemed a great mercy; and both mother and child ought gratefully to be devoted to God. Thrice happy are they who long wait for the Lord! He will at last appear for their comfort, and open their lips in his praise. And it is only believing views of Jesus Christ that can render death and eternity truly pleasant and hopeful. But unhappy are they to whom this light, this Saviour of the world, becomes an occasion of greater sin and more terrible ruin. Even they who have distinguished honours allotted them have frequently some bitter trials annexed to them. And even they who live nearest to Jesus Christ must often seek him. It is enough that they find him at last, and lay up his words in their heart.—While parents consider how carefully they ought to attend the ordinances of God, and bring their children along with them, let children ponder what a delightful pattern of early knowledge, devotion, trust in God, and obedience to mean parents, is represented to them in our Redeemer.

CHAPTER III. REFLECTIONS.—The season of important events ought to be exactly marked. In great wisdom and grace Jesus appears to erect his kingdom when rulers almost everywhere are monsters of wickedness. And God, by his forerunner, honourably introduces him to his work. Great need have sinners to hasten to him when death and ruin are just at their heels. Dreadful is their case who fall into the hands of the living God. And none bid fairer for hell than they who have the strongest carnal or legal hopes of heaven. No outward privilege can avail those who have unrenewed hearts and unholy lives. And no repentance can be justly reckoned sincere that does not make men cease from and detest the sins to which they are most tempted or addicted. God often renders the most unlikely the distinguished monuments of his power and grace. But at best the state of the church is but imperfect and mixed in this world. In the next God will, to the joy of saints and terror of obstinate sinners, make a full separation; and many who, like Herod, did many good things, and heard God's ministers gladly, shall be cast into eternal ruin. It is a delightful sight when great honours render men humble; and humility is rewarded with more abundant honours. How solemn was our Saviour's consecration to his work, and his attestation by God! And it is plainly manifest that he is the seed of the woman, and of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judah, Jesse, and David, according to the promise.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 2. Forty days. Matthew (ch. 4. 3) places the temptation after the forty days. Luke seems to describe it as continuing throughout the whole period. The two accounts are perfectly reconcilable. The chief temptation, as recorded by Matthew, was after the forty days of fasting. Luke relates the same chief temptation, but intimates that inferior temptations continued through the whole period. C.

Ver. 3. Command this stone. Matthew (ch. 4. 3) has it 'these stones.' How then are the two passages reconciled upon the principle of real inspiration? In the very simplest manner. Satan used both expressions, urging our Lord by the repetition and increase of his demand for miracles. Matthew records the one demand, Luke the other. C.

Ver. 6. Here, according to his system of delusion, Satan affirms what is partly true and partly false. That he has 'power, a seat, and great authority,' and that, at certain times of judgment, 'power is given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations'—that he

STREAM FLOWING FROM UNDER THE MOUNT OF TEMPTATION. [LUKE iv:5.]—The second Temptation of Christ is represented in the Scriptures as taking place upon a high mountain, from which the devil could call the attention of our Savior to all the kingdoms of the world. This mountain, upon which occurred the second Temptation, is over against Jericho and looking directly over the Plain of Sodom and Gomorrah, and away to the mountains of Moab. At the time of the Temptation this whole Plain of the Jordan, between the Dead Sea below and twenty miles above, was cultivated and kept like a garden. Herod had lived here in great style and luxury. Cleopatra had come to this place for revelry, and it was doubtless one of the most beautiful and attractive places in the world. The Mount of Temptation is a lonely height.

3 And the devil said unto him, 'If thou be the Son of God, [j]command this stone that it be made bread.[2]

4 And Jesus answered him, saying, [k]It is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.

5 And[l] the devil, taking him up into an high mountain, showed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6 And the devil said unto him, [m]All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it.

7 If thou, therefore, wilt worship me,[3] all shall be thine.

8 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Get[o] thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, Thou[p] shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

9 And[q] he brought him to Jerusalem, and set him on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto him, [r]If thou be the Son of God, [s]cast thyself down from hence:

10 For[t] it is written, He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee:[4]

11 And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

12 And Jesus, answering, said unto him, [u]It is said, [v]Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

13 And [w]when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from him for a season.[5]

14 ¶ And[y] Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about.

15 And [z]he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all.

16 ¶ And he came to [a]Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day, and [b]stood up for to read.

17 And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written,

18 The[c] Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted,[d] to preach deliverance to the captives, and [e]recovering of sight to the blind,[6] to set at liberty them that are [f]bruised,

[4] The words 'to keep thee,' are not found in the corresponding passage in Matthew. This difference, however, does not in the least degree infringe upon the principle of the real divine inspiration of the evangelists. Matthew states all that Luke states; but Matthew does not say that the tempter added no more. Luke supplies the additional argument. The reason of the difference is plain: Matthew wrote for Jews, who fully understood, from history, the nature of angelic agency, and did not require any explanation: Luke wrote for Gentiles, who were ignorant upon the subject; and, therefore, he records the portion of the dialogue in which angelic agency was described.—C.

19 To preach the [g]acceptable year of the Lord.

20 And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him.[7]

21 And he began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.

22 And all bare him witness, and wondered at the [h]gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And they said, 'Is not this Joseph's son?

23 And he said unto them, Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: [i]whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy country.

24 And he said, Verily I say unto you, No [k]prophet is accepted in his own country.

25 But I tell you of a truth, [l]many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land;

26 But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

27 And[n] many lepers were in Israel in the time of [o]Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian.

28 And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, [p]were filled with wrath,

29 And[q] rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow[8] of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast him [r]down headlong.[9]

30 But[s] he, passing through the midst of them, went his way;[1]

31 And[t] came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the sabbath-days.

32 And they were astonished at his doctrine: [u]for his word was with power.[2]

33 ¶ And[v] in the synagogue there was a man, which had a spirit of an unclean devil, and cried out with a loud voice,

34 Saying, Let us alone;[3] what[x] have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art; [y]the Holy One of God.

35 And [z]Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had [a]thrown him in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not.

is 'the prince,' nay, 'the god of this world,' is all true; but when he adds that 'all this power and glory' is his, and that 'to whomsoever he will he gives it,' he affirms what is false; for 'the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.' He alone 'putteth down one and setteth up another,' even as he 'raised up Pharaoh to show his power in him.' Satan, moreover, after the manner of all liars and deceivers, suppresses what is true: for he never alludes to the coming judgment of the great day, nor the 'everlasting fire prepared for him and his angels.' See Re. 13 2, 7; Jn. 12. 31; 2 Co. 4. 4; Ps. 97. 1; 79. 6; 75. 7; Ex. 9. 16; Mat. 25. 41. C.

Ver. 19. The acceptable year seems an allusion to the year of the jubilee, which proclaimed its blessings on the day of atonement, which proclaimed liberty to him who had been enslaved, restoration to possessions, and return to families—all emblems of gospel time and gospel blessings. The time, the day upon which the proclaimed atonement is fully embraced: the blessings, the restoration of sinners to the forfeited possession of paradise, and to membership and communion in the family of God. C.

Ver. 20. The eyes of all . . . were fastened on him. The specific reason of this intense observation is not recorded. It may have arisen from recollection of the early prophecies concerning him—from curiosity, mingled with incredulity, concerning the works he was now reported to have wrought elsewhere—from his voice, for he spake as never man spake; see ver. 22—or from his manner, for 'he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes.' C.

Ver. 24. This statement has been fully verified by all prophetic history. Moses was rebelliously vilified, Nu. 16. 3; David was ejected from his throne; Jeremiah was cast into prison; Elijah was hunted 'like a partridge upon the mountains.' All were despised or rejected by their countrymen. Wherefore let no man wait for the reformation of any church or people until God raise up some of themselves to lead the way: but rather let every one remember that the human mind is more ready to listen to strangers than to acquaintance, and take hold of this propensity, and send the gospel by 'men of other tongues.' C.

Ver. 28. The secret cause of offence seems to be the implied intimation of God's merciful regards to the heathen, whom the Jews despised, and judged unworthy of sharing with them in the divine favour: but the ostensible cause was the parallel between the humble Jesus and Elijah and Elisha, whom they esteemed as chief among the prophets. C.

GREEK MOUNT OF PRECIPITATION, NAZARETH—FROM WHICH IT WAS SOUGHT TO CAST OUR SAVIOR DOWN. [Luke, iv:28-29.]—"And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath, and rose up and thrust him out of the city and led him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down headlong." Upon the brow of this hill, from which it is supposed the people of Nazareth sought to cast our Savior down, the Greeks have built a little chapel, where the devout and faithful of that communion retire to pray and meditate. This little chapel may be said to be the scene of the sad event in the lives of the people of Nazareth, when they turned from their doors and their lives the greatest of their countrymen.

among themselves, saying, What a word is this! for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out.

37 And[c] the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about.

38 ¶ And[d] he arose out of the synagogue, and entered into Simon's house. And Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever; and they besought him for her.

39 And[e] he stood over her,[4] and rebuked the fever; and it left her: [g]and immediately she arose, and ministered unto them.

40 ¶ Now[h] when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them.

41 ¶ And[i] devils also came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ[5] the Son of God. And he, rebuking them, suffered them not to speak: for they knew that he was Christ.[6]

42 ¶ And[j] when it was day, he departed, and went into a desert place: [k]and the people sought him, and came unto him, and stayed him, that he should not depart from them.

43 And he said unto them, [l]I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent.

44 And[m] he preached in the synagogues of Galilee.

4 Trench well remarks on this passage:—'Christ here appears as the ideal man, the second Adam of Ps. viii: "Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands." Thou hast put all things under his feet: . . . the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever walketh through the paths of the seas.' The end and aim of Christ's universal sovereignty, as Mediator, appear in such cases as this. All things in earth, air, and sky he can so order as to instruct, encourage, and defend his people.—P.

3 And he entered into one of the ships, which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thrust out a little from the land. And he sat down, and taught the people out of the ship.

4 ¶ Now when he had left speaking, he said unto Simon, [d]Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.

5 And Simon, answering, said unto him, Master, we have toiled all the night, and [e]have taken nothing: nevertheless, at thy word I will let down the net.

6 And[g] when they had this done, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes: and [h]their net [3]brake.[4]

7 And they beckoned unto their partners, which were in the other ship, that they should come and [i]help them. And they came, and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink.

8 When Simon Peter saw it, [j]he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord.

9 For[k] he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken:

10 And so was also [l]James and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt [m]catch[5] men.

11 And when they had brought their ships to land, they [n]forsook all, and followed him.

12 ¶ And[p] it came to pass, when he was in a certain city, behold, a man full of leprosy; who seeing Jesus, fell on his face, and [q]besought him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou [r]canst make me clean.

13 And he put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, [s]I will; be thou clean.[6] And [t]immediately the leprosy departed from him.

14 And he charged him to [u]tell no [7]man: but go, and [v]show thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing, according as Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

REFLECTIONS.—The most fearful temptations and troubles may quickly succeed to the most distinguished testimonies of God's love. And it is highly improper for the best of saints to hope to escape even the most horrible seducements, when Jesus was called to suffer them. How shocking is the impudence of Satan! how fixed his perseverance in harassing the saints! and how implacable his malice in tempting where he surely hopes to succeed! He is very subtle in contriving the form and choosing the seasons of his temptation. And it is necessary to resist him always with the sword of the Spirit. Thus only can we prove conquerors through him that loved us, and is able and ready to succour us. But what fearful work hath sin made in the world! It hath transformed angels into unclean spirits, perverted human nature, and subjected it to the tyranny of the devil, and to diseases unnumbered.—Alas! into what sorrow and suffering it plunged our divine Saviour! But infinite is his grace; and, as appointed of God to save us, in him all fulness dwells answerable to all our need. And always by his Word, he exerts his power on the most unworthy. With great toil and danger he went about to heal human maladies, spiritual and temporal. But, alas! where he should be most readily received he is often most obstinately rejected; and almost everywhere few are turned to him! Many never believe more than devils, who never had his blessings offered to them; and though they hear his words with attention and wonder, they quickly envy and seek to destroy him or his interests; but terrible is their situation when he abandons them to their own hearts' lusts.—It is a great mercy that he can restrain furious persecutors, and cast out malicious and subtle devils, even when they almost transform themselves into angels of light. And it is delightful when they who have much public work in hand prepare for it by much fervent prayer; and when they who have enjoyed Christ's presence and ordinances earnestly desire the continuance of them.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 8. Every man of intellect judges best in his own profession. Had Peter been a landsman he would not have been at all so affected by the miracle; but as an experienced fisherman, he sees its full extent. But the narrative educes another trait of character. Had Peter been covetous he would have entreated our Lord never to leave him: had he been superstitious (as fishermen are often found to be) he would have ascribed the miracle to good fortune, or some prevalent charm or talisman; but being neither superstitious nor covetous, he beholds in the miracle the evidence of our Lord's holiness and divinity, which contrasting with his own sinfulness, he falls down and worships, and entreats him to depart, not because he desired to be freed from his presence, but counted himself unworthy of the honour. C.

Ver. 26. They were all amazed, &c. That is, the multitudes, but not the Pharisees, who, though they might be amazed, did not glorify God for the works done by Christ. C.

Ver. 36. The differences between this parable, as recorded by Matthew and as recorded by Luke, can neither be tortured into contradictions (for the meaning is the same), nor be attributed to mere variety in the memories of the evangelists, nor to an ideal instead of a real inspiration. The differences can be accounted for upon a principle much more simple, and in perfect accordance with the doctrine of full and perfect divine inspiration—that is, upon the most natural of all suppositions—that our Lord repeated the parable more than once, and varied his expressions to aid in the exposition of his meaning. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The most diligent and laborious have often little success. And all that comes is vanity and vexation of spirit. How base and polluted men appear to themselves when viewed in the light of Christ's glory! But nothing is more absurd or wicked than to make our sinfulness a reason against fellowship with him who is the Saviour from sin. Great is his power, who can command multitudes of fishes into a net, and multitudes of souls into a reception of the gospel. None who taste his goodness can forbear following him. The firm faith of his ability betokens our deliverance at hand, and promotes a regard to his ordinances. Great is the mercy that his prayers are powerful, and his mercy present to save men; and that he readily grants remission and healing to such as believe. If he forgive us, neither envious men nor malici-

15 But[a] so much the more went there a fame abroad of him: and great multitudes came together, to hear, and to be healed by him of their infirmities.

16 ¶ And[y] he withdrew himself into the wilderness, and prayed.

17 ¶ And it came to pass on a certain day, as he was teaching, that there were [z]Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judea, and Jerusalem; and [a]the power of the Lord was present[8] to heal them.[9]

18 And,[b] behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palsy: and they sought means to bring him in, and to lay him before him.

19 And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in because of the multitude, they went upon the [c]house-top, and let him down through the tiling,[1] with his couch,[2] into the midst before Jesus.

20 And when he [d]saw their faith,[3] he said unto him, Man, [e]thy sins are forgiven thee.

21 And the scribes and the Pharisees began to reason, saying, [g]Who is this which speaketh blasphemies? [h]Who can forgive sins but God alone?

22 But when Jesus [i]perceived their thoughts, he, answering, said unto them, What reason ye in your hearts?

23 Whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Rise up and walk?

24 But that ye may know that the [j]Son of man hath [k]power upon earth to forgive sins, (he said unto the sick of the palsy,) [l]I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy couch, and go unto thine house.

25 And immediately he rose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay,[4] and departed to his own house, [m]glorifying God.

26 And[o] they were all amazed, and they glorified God, and were filled with fear, saying, We have seen strange things to-day.

27 ¶ And[p] after these things he went forth, and saw a publican, named Levi, sitting at the receipt of custom: and he said unto him, [q]Follow me.

28 And[r] he left all, rose up, and followed him.

29 And[s] Levi made him a great feast in his own house: and there was a great company of publicans and of others that sat down with them.

30 But [t]their scribes and Pharisees murmured against his disciples, saying, Why do ye eat and drink with publicans and sinners?[5]

31 And Jesus, answering, said unto them, [u]They that are whole need not a physician; but they that are sick.

32 I[v] came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

33 ¶ And they said unto him,[6] Why[x] do the disciples of John fast often, and make prayers, and likewise the disciples of the Pharisees; [y]but thine eat and drink?

34 And he said unto them, Can ye make [z]the children of the bride-chamber fast, while the bridegroom[7] is with them?

35 But the days will come when the bridegroom shall be [a]taken away from them, and then [b]shall they fast in those days.

36 ¶ And he spake also a parable unto them: [c]No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old: if otherwise, then both the new maketh a rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new [d]agreeth not with the old.

37 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine will burst the bottles and be spilled, and the bottles shall perish.

38 But new wine must be put into new bottles; and both are preserved.

39 No man also having drunk old wine straightway[8] desireth new: for he saith, [g]The [f]old is better.[1]

CHAPTER VI.

1 Christ reproveth the Pharisees' blindness about the observation of the sabbath, by scripture, reason, and miracle: 12 chooseth twelve apostles: 17 healeth the diseased: 20 preacheth to his disciples before the people of blessings and curses: 27 how we must love our enemies: 46 and join the obedience of good works to the hearing of the word: lest in the evil day of temptation we fall like an house built upon the face of the earth, without any foundation.

AND it[a] came to pass, on the second sabbath after the first,[1] that he went through the corn-fields; and his disciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands.

2 And certain of the Pharisees said unto them, [b]Why do ye that which is not lawful to do on the sabbath-days?

3 And Jesus answering them said, Have ye not read so much as this, [c]what David did, when himself was an hungered, and they which were with him;

4 How he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the show-bread, and gave also to them that were with him; [d]which it is not lawful to eat but for the priests alone?

5 And he said unto them, [e]That the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.

6 ¶ And[g] it came to pass also on another sabbath, that he entered into the synagogue, and taught; and there was a man whose [h]right hand was withered.

The point of the passage is not to draw any comparison between the two systems, but simply to show the natural preference of the Jews for that to which they were accustomed.—P.

The meaning most probably is, not 'the second sabbath after the first day of unleavened bread,' but, 'the first sabbath after the second day of unleavened bread,' which was the second after the first day of the passover, which was always a sabbath (Le. 23. 7); for upon that second day of the passover the wave sheaf was offered up, and from that second day, and not from the first, the fifty days till pentecost were reckoned (Le. 23. 11, 15, 16): whence all the sabbaths from the passover to pentecost took their numeral titles from 'the second of the passover.'—C.

ous devils can reverse his sentence. And every mercy to ourselves and others should fill our hearts with wonder and praise. If the chiefs of sinners heed his call, none can keep or shut them out from his favour.—But unbounded is his condescension to become their husband, upon whose presence all their joys depend, and to proportion their duties to their strength and circumstances.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 12. In prayer to God. If the word translated prayer must be retained in that sense, as Bloomfield maintains, the translation should be altered to 'the prayer of God.' A literal translation, however, gives a sense more agreeable to history: 'He continued all night in the proseucha of God'—a retired

DISTANT VIEW OF THE MOUNT OF BEATITUDES. [Luke, vi:20.]—We have in this picture a different view of the Mount of Beatitudes from the one we gave in connection with the Sermon on the Mount, as reported by Matthew, v, vi, vii. This is an interesting height, not simply because it is supposed that Christ there uttered his memorable sermon, but also because it is thought by some to be the mount to which He retired after the resurrection. If Jesus Christ was not the son of God, is it not an unaccountable thing that He should have, nearly 2,000 years ago, uttered the words which, by general consent, are looked upon as the sublimest that have ever fallen from the lips of man? It is inconceivable that a Galilean peasant, with no help from a divine source, could have expressed himself in such a discourse.

7 And the scribes and Pharisees [t]watched him, whether he would heal on the sabbath-day, that they might find an accusation against him.

8 But[j] he knew their thoughts, and said to the man which had the withered hand, [k]Rise up, and stand forth in the midst. And he arose, and stood forth.

9 Then said Jesus unto them, I will ask you one thing; [l]Is it lawful on the sabbath-days to do good, or to do evil? to save life, or to destroy it?

10 And looking round about upon them all, he said unto the man, [m]Stretch forth thy hand. And he did so: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

11 And[n] they were filled with madness;[3] and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus.

12 ¶ And it came to pass in those days, that he[p] went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God.

13 And when it was day,[4] he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles;[5]

14 Simon[q] (whom he also named Peter) and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew,

15 Matthew and Thomas, James the son of Alpheus, and Simon called Zelotes,

16 And [r]Judas the brother of James, and Judas[s] Iscariot, which also was the traitor.

17 ¶ And he came down with them, and stood [u]in the plain, and the company of his disciples, and a [v]great multitude of people out of all Judea and Jerusalem, and from the sea-coast of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diseases;

18 And they that were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed.

19 And [w]the whole multitude sought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him, and healed them all.

20 ¶ And[x] he lifted up his eyes on his disciples, and said, [y]Blessed be ye poor;[6] for yours is the kingdom of God.[7]

21 Blessed[z] are ye that hunger now: [a]for ye shall be filled. [b]Blessed are ye that weep now: for ye shall laugh.

22 Blessed[c] are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake.

23 Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for, behold, [d]your reward is great in heaven: [e]for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets.

24 But[g] woe unto you that are [h]rich! [i]for ye have received your consolation.

25 Woe[i] unto you that are full! for ye shall hunger. Woe unto you that laugh now! for ye shall mourn and weep.

26 Woe[j] unto you when all men[9] shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.

27 ¶ But[k] I say unto you which hear, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you,

28 Bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you.

29 And[l] unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other; and him that taketh away thy cloak forbid not to take thy coat also.

30 Give[n] to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again.

31 And[o] as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.

32 For[p] if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them.

33 And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same.

34 And[q] if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again.

35 But[r] love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and [s]ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he [t]is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil.

36 Be[u] ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful.

37 Judge[v] not, and ye shall not be judged: condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: [w]forgive, and ye shall be forgiven:

38 Give,[y] and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. [z]For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again.[1]

39 And he spake a parable unto them: [a]Can the blind lead the blind? shall they not both fall into the ditch?

40 The[b] disciple is not above his Master: but every one that is perfect shall be as his [2]master.

41 And[c] why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

[8] Our Lord spent at least three years, probably nearly four, in teaching his disciples. It was natural, indeed it was necessary, that he should repeat the same truths, and develop again and again the same doctrines. One evangelist records one discourse; an-other another; but we must not expect either that there should be a total difference in the subjects when the discourses are different; or that there should be a verbal identity in language when the subjects are identical.—C.

* On a superficial view of this narrative, it would appear utterly impossible to account for the most unreasonable madness of the Pharisees. Two principles, however, will amply explain its origin: (1) A false theory establishing the traditions of the elders, whereby their own doctrines and practices were supported, the doctrines of our Lord condemned; and the mere shell of formal religion superseded, even as in other heathen times, the Church of Rome, adopting the false theory of her own infallibility, refuses to be reformed, and anathematizes even (see Joël, In Tempore Domini) the teachers of every fundamental doctrine of divine grace. (2) The worldly interests of the Pharisees, which were inseparably entwined with their doctrine of traditions, blinded their eyes to the glory of Christ, stopped their ears against the voice of truth, hardened their hearts against every feeling but those of envy, hatred, and malice, set against the people by whose righteous denunciations these interests were endangered. C.

place, such as the Jews were accustomed to erect for the purposes of private devotion.—Query. The tormenting fear which many entertain of meeting the spirits of the dead in solitary places by night, may it not be chiefly traced to the neglect of solitary nightly prayer, wherein the soul meeting in holy and immediate converse with God, would so occupy and fill itself with a sense of his presence and protection as to expel every unmanly and superstitious dread, and establish the heart in its fearlessness and peace in believing? C.

Ver. 31. And as ye would that men should do to you—in justice rendering you your own. do you also justice to them likewise. 'And as ye would that men should do to you:' in mercy, even to spare and pardon on evidence of repentance, and in hope of amendment; but not desiring them to patronize your faults and encourage you in reckless impenitence, which were a grievous sin both in you and them. In all these things show ye like mercy to others. And when you call upon any to judge righteous judgment for you and against others, do you likewise 42 Either how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, [d]let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite! cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye.

43 For[e] a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

44 For every tree is known by his own fruit: for of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble-bush gather they grapes.

45 A[f] good man out of the good treasure[3] of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh.

46 ¶ And[h] why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?

47 Whosoever[i] cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like:

48 He is like a man which [j]built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock; and when [k]the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and [l]could not shake it; for it was founded upon a rock.

49 But [m]he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that without a foundation built an house upon the earth: against which the stream did beat vehemently, and [n]immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great.

1 The additional particulars supplied here by Luke bring out in still stronger colours the character of the centurion. He was a stranger, yet he had shown great interest in the people among whom he was placed; he had displayed a singularly generosity. The Jewish rabbins pressed these facts upon the attention of our Lord so as to induce him to listen to the centurion's request. The centurion himself, however, so far from pleading any merit, takes the position of an humble, helpless, undeserving supplicant. What a lesson does this teach Christians!—P.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Christ findeth a greater faith in the centurion, a Gentile, than in any of the Jews: 10 healeth his servant, being absent: 11 raiseth to life the widow's son at Nain: 19 answereth John's messengers with the declaration of his miracles: 24 testifieth to the people what opinion he held of John: 30 inveigheth against the Jews, who, with neither the manners of John nor of Jesus, could be won: 36 and showeth, how he is a friend to sinners, not to maintain them in sins, but to forgive them their sins, upon their faith and repentance.

NOW when he had ended all his sayings in the audience of the people, [a]he entered into Capernaum.

2 And a certain [b]centurion's servant, who [c]was dear unto him, was sick, and ready to die.

3 And when he heard of Jesus, [d]he sent unto him the elders of the Jews, beseeching him that he would come and heal his servant.

4 And when they came to Jesus, they besought him instantly, saying, That he was worthy for whom he should do this:

5 For he [e]loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue.[1]

6 Then Jesus went with them. And when he was now not far from the house, the centurion sent friends[2] to him, saying unto him, Lord, [g]trouble not thyself;[3] for [h]I am not worthy that thou shouldest enter under my roof:

allow them impartially to judge like righteous judgment for others, though against yourselves. C.

Ver. 42. Cast out first the beam out of thine own eye. Does this exhortation imply that the casting out of the beam is the act of the hypocrite himself, without any reference to the Word, Spirit, and grace of God? It contains no such implication. It speaks, as the Scriptures often do, of the thing to be done, and not of the power by which alone it can be done. When the Scriptures speak of the power by which alone conversion is effected, they attribute faith to the sinner, and all to the Word, Spirit, and grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, 1 Pe. 1. 23; 1 Jn. 3. 9. Eze. 11. 19, Zec. 4. 6; Ep. 2. 8. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Works of real necessity and mercy, but no other, may consist with a proper observance of the Sabbath. And it is base when Christ's kind indulgence is abused to carnal licentiousness; and when the rigid accusers of the innocence of others are the most indulgent to their own crimes. If we desire to have our spiritual maladies healed we must attend Christ's ordinances; and neither our own inability, nor other men's perverseness, must hinder us from our duty. If Jesus command, he can enable to perform. Where passion reigns, neither conscience nor reason can be regarded: but it is in vain to devise mischief against an all-seeing Redeemer. Important work ought always to be introduced with fervent and solemn prayer; and Jesus' prayers and power can easily furnish his church with plenty of gospel ministers! Marvellous and free are the effects of his mercy: and infinitely distant his views of real happiness and mercy from those of carnal men. Happy are they whom he blesses, and miserable are they whom he curses, be their outward circumstances what they will. And it is eternity, not time, that properly distinguishes the lot of saints and sinners. Honourable and beneficent is the spirit and tendency of the Christian religion, which so calls us to imitate JEHOVAH in his most endearing perfections and work. How important is it to be a Christian indeed! It is a great reproach for the professors of the true religion to do no more in duty toward God or men than mere heathens. And we need to live always under a deep sense of our own weakness and pollution, and in daily repentance and forgiveness; so shall we be induced to candid and charitable conceptions of others. It is absurd to attempt raising good works out of unrenewed hearts; or to expect a blessing with teachers whom Christ never sent. Let us therefore take heed what, how, and whom we hear. Let us receive Christ's Word into our heart; and resting on him by faith, practise it in our lives; so shall we persevere unto the end, and safely arrive in glory, notwithstanding all the storms that may befal us by the way.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 11. Nain was a city of Galilee, a few miles south of Mount Tabor. It still exists as a small village, exclusively inhabited by Turks. O! that the Lord would again say to the dead [to Israel], the son of the widow [Zion], Young man [Israel young and vigorous in faith], Arise! O! that he would deliver him again to [Jerusalem] his mother! Surely then would he again 'begin to speak,' and, like Paul, he that persecuted Christ in his members, would preach him in every city! —Note, Infidels have spoken of this case as a mere restoration from a lethargy. This assertion represents these objectors as better judges, at the end of many hundred years, than a tender mother and all the young man's personal friends, a few days after his death. They judged him dead. Our Lord found him as carried to his grave, closely covered with a cloth, as the manner of the Jews required—he touched the bier—commanded him to arise—he obeyed, rose up, and began to speak.—All present were astonished, and ascribed the work to God. Infidels now may gainsay—for having rejected 'Moses and the prophets, neither will they believe though one rise from the dead.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Masters ought to take tender care of their faithful servants: and such indeed will in general insure their attention and regard in the time of distress or affliction. It is a great advantage to interest the fervent prayers of Christ's favourites in our behalf. And great is the influence, and distinguished the humility and honour, of a strong faith. Unanswerably has Jesus demonstrated his divine and mediatorial characters in healing all manner of diseases, raising the dead, and forgiving sins, with infinite efficacy and authority. Tender is his regard to Gentile believers, and his compassion to the afflicted and destitute: and gracious, full, and plenteous his mercy to all sorts of sinners, however guilty and miserable. What exalting thoughts ought we then to have of him, and what abasing thoughts of ourselves before him! With great earnestness ought we to call on him in every distress, and to imitate him in always doing good. Spiritually to know who and what he is, cannot but create love to him, and remove every prejudice against him: and he is ever ready to instruct and satisfy humble inquirers. Nor should we ever doubt of his excellency because we suffer for his sake, and others contemn and oppose him.—The meek will he teach his way, that they may be witnesses for God and religion, when proud and self-righteous men shall be left to reject his admonitions to their own destruction. Resolute cavillers will always find a handle in the different tempers and manners of ministers. Hatred of Christ's Word will lead them to quarrel either with the deliverer or the delivery of it.—O what a change God's almighty grace makes on the heart and life of the most atrocious sinners! And the more abundantly the grace of the gospel is believed and applied, the more abundant love to God, repentance, and deep humility will be manifested in our whole temper and conduct. Alas! that any should ever quarrel with the wisdom of God's mercy towards sinners, or with their uncommon affection towards him while impressed with a sense of his mercy!

CHAPTER VIII. REFLECTIONS.—O the infinite but voluntary debasement of our Redeemer, that he must live on the liberality of others, even of those who had lately been infamous sinners! But cheerfully they who get good by the gospel will contribute to maintain the preacher. And they who have been healed by Jesus' grace will eagerly follow him in the way. But Satan and our inward corruptions most awfully hinder the efficacy of the gospel on most of the hearers of it. Those who accept Christ are renewed, according to the will of God, and rendered fruitful in holiness. Let us then take heed how we hear, and whether we seek to have the principles of true grace implanted in our soul. And let us improve the light and grace that we have for our own and others' advantage. If we cordially embrace the gospel, we are Christ's disciples, and neither raging winds nor devouring devils shall be able to deprive us of his love and care. If storms try our faith, his presence will secure our safety. Let us therefore in dangers ever flee to, trust in, and adore our ever-merciful, ever-mindful God and Saviour. If Satan should exert all his power and malice to render us miserable, Jesus can rescue us and restrain him at pleasure. Alas, that ever love to this world, or slavish fear, should make his presence disagreeable! Happy are they who, sensible of sin, weakness, and danger, eagerly press towards and cleave to him, notwithstanding every discouragement. In what God-like manner he triumphed over diseases, devils, and death; and yet, with the greatest self-denial, laboured to conceal his miraculous works!—And still abundant is his to come unto thee: [t]but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed.

8 For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers: and I say unto one, [u]Go, [v]and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.

9 When Jesus heard these things, he [w]marvelled at him, and turned him about, and said unto the people that followed him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not [x]in Israel.

10 And [y] they that were sent,[5] returning to the house, found the servant whole that had been sick.

11 ¶ And it came to pass the day after, that he went into a city called Nain; and many of his disciples went with him, and much people.

12 Now when he came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, the [z]only son of his mother, and she was a widow: and much people of the city was with her.

13 And when the Lord saw her, he [a]had compassion on her, and said unto her, [b]Weep not.

14 And he came and touched the bier:[6] and they that bare him stood still. And he said, Young man, [c]I say unto thee, Arise.

15 And he that was dead sat up, and began to speak. And he delivered him to his mother.

16 And[d] there came a fear on all: and they glorified God, saying, That [e]a great prophet is risen up among us; and, That God hath [f]visited his people.

17 And this rumour of him went forth throughout all Judea, and throughout all the region round about.[7]

18 ¶ And[g] the disciples of John showed him of all these things.

19 And John calling unto him [h]two of his disciples, sent them to Jesus, saying, Art thou he[i] that should come? or look we for another?

20 When the men were come unto him, they said, John Baptist hath sent us unto thee, saying, Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?

21 And in that same hour he cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of evil spirits;[8] and unto many that were blind he gave sight.

22 Then Jesus answering, said unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; [k]how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached.

23 And blessed is he, whosoever shall not [l]be offended in me.

24 ¶ And when the messengers of John were departed, he began to speak unto the people concerning John, What went ye out into the [m]wilderness for to see? A reed shaken with the wind?[9]

25 But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment?[1] Behold, [n]they which are gorgeously apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings' courts.

26 But what went ye out for to see? [o]A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and much more than a prophet.

27 This is he of whom it is written, [p]Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

28 For I say unto you, [q]Among those that are born of women, there is not a greater[2] prophet than John the Baptist: but he that is least in the kingdom of God is [r]greater than he.

29 And [s]all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God,[3] being baptized with the baptism of John.

30 But[t] the Pharisees and [u]lawyers [5]rejected the counsel of God against themselves,[6] being not baptized of him.

31 ¶ And the Lord said, Whereunto[7] then shall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like?

32 They are like unto children sitting in the market-place, and calling one to another, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept.

33 For John the Baptist came [x]neither eating bread nor drinking wine; and ye say, He hath a devil.

34 The Son of man is come [y]eating and drinking; and ye say, Behold, a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!

35 But[z] Wisdom is justified of all her children.[8]

36 ¶ And[a] one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him. [b]And he went into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat.

37 And, behold, a [9]woman[1] in the city, which was a sinner,[2] when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an [c]alabaster-box of ointment, 38 And [d]stood at his feet behind[3] him weeping, and began to wash his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment.

39 Now when the Pharisee which had bidden him saw it, he spake within himself, saying, [e]This man, if he were a prophet, would have known who and what manner of woman this is that [f]toucheth him; for she is a [g]sinner.

[1] Whether this woman, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the sister of Lazarus, be the same, or three distinct persons, has been matter of serious question, both among ancient and modern expositors. See Mat. 26. 6. Mar. 14. 3. Jn. 12. 3. It seems plain, however, that this woman was a resident in Nain, well known by character to the Pharisee (ver. 39), and so a different person from Mary of Magdala, a city on the other side of Jordan; and all that is recorded of Mary the sister of Lazarus seems clearly to distinguish her from both these Marys.—C.

[2] In what sense this woman was a sinner does not appear: but our Lord acknowledges (ver. 47) that 'her sins were many.' Nor will this admission and the discovery of her peculiar character; for who can deny that his 'sins were many?' The general conclusion that she was an adulteress or harlot seems harsh, because it is unnecessary, and utterly unsupported by any intimation either from the unutterable Simeon or our righteous Lord.—C.

grace, that never casts out any. With the greatest compassion he spies our griefs and shame, and with delight raises up the trembling, and comforts the poor in spirit. INTERIOR OF THE CHURCH AT NAIN—WHERE OUR LORD RAISED THE WIDOW'S SON TO LIFE. [Luke, vii:11.]—"And it came to pass the day after, that he went into a city called Nain and many of his disciples went with him, and much people." Nain as to-day but a dilapidated and wretched village. It was here that our Savior met the funeral procession, and said to the dead young man: "Young man, I say unto thee, arise. And he that was dead sat up, and began to speak, and he delivered him to his mother." Perhaps this is the first instance on record where a funeral procession was changed into an assembly of good cheer and rejoicing, and Jesus Christ is the only one who has ever been able to redeem a funeral from its utter desolate and heartbreaking features, and to inspire those who are giving up their loved ones with hope to meet them again.

40 And[v] Jesus, answering, said unto him, Simon,[4] I have somewhat to say unto thee. And he saith, [w]Master, say on.

41 There[5] was a certain creditor which had two [x]debtors: the one owed [y]five hundred [z]pence, and the other fifty:

42 And when they [a]had nothing to pay, he frankly[c] forgave them both. Tell me, therefore, which of them will love him most?

43 Simon answered and said, I suppose that he [d]to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged.

44 And he turned to the woman, and said unto Simon, Seest thou this woman? I entered into thine house, thou [e]gavest me no water for my feet: but she hath washed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head.

45 Thou gavest me no [f]kiss: but this woman, since the time I came in, hath not ceased to kiss my feet.

46 My[h] head with oil thou didst not anoint: but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment.

47 Wherefore I say unto thee, [i]Her sins, which are many,[6] are forgiven; for[7] she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little.

48 And he said unto her, [j]Thy sins are forgiven.[8]

49 And they that sat at meat with him began to say within themselves, [k]Who is this that forgiveth sins also?

50 And he said to the woman, [l]Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Women minister unto Christ of their substance. 4 Christ, after he had preached from place to place, attended with his apostles, propoundeth the parable of the sower. 16 Light is given to be improved and communicated: 21 he declareth who are his mother and brethren: 22 rebuketh the winds: 26 casteth the legion of devils out of the man into the herd of swine: 37 is rejected of the Gadarenes: 43 healeth the woman of her bloody issue; 49 and raiseth to life Jairus' daughter.

AND it came to pass afterward, [a]that he went throughout every city and village, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God: and the [b]twelve were with him;

2 And certain women,[1] which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene,[2] out of whom went seven devils,

3 And Joanna the wife of Chuza, [c]Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, which ministered[d] unto him of their substance.

4 ¶ And[e] when much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he spake by a parable:

5 A[g] sower[3] went out to sow his seed: and as he sowed, some fell [h]by the way-side; and it was [i]trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.[4]

6 And some fell upon [j]a rock; and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture.

7 And some fell among [k]thorns; and the thorns sprang up with it, and choked it.

8 And other fell on [l]good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit an hundred-fold. And when he had said these things, he [m]cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

9 ¶ And his disciples asked him, saying, [n]What might this parable be?

10 And he said, [p]Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that [q]seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand.

11 ¶ Now[r] the parable is this: The [s]seed is the word of God.

12 Those by the way-side are [t]they that hear; then cometh the devil, and taketh away [u]the word [v]out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved.

13 They[w] on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away.

14 And [x]that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go [y]forth, and are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no [z]fruit to perfection.

15 But[a] that on the good ground are they, which, [b]in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with [c]patience.[6]

16 ¶ No[e] man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bed; but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in may see the light.

17 For[d] nothing is secret that shall not be made manifest; neither any thing hid that shall not be known and come abroad.

18 Take[e] heed therefore how ye [f]hear: [g]for whosoever hath, to him shall be given; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have.[8]

19 ¶ Then[h] came to him his mother and his brethren, and could not come at him for the press.

20 And it was told him by certain, which said, Thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to see thee.

21 And he answered and said unto them, [i]My mother and my brethren are these which hear the word of God, and do it.

22 ¶ Now[j] it came to pass on a certain day, that he went into a ship with his disciples: and he said unto them, Let us go over unto the other side of the lake. And they launched forth.

23 But as they sailed, he [k]fell asleep: and

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 62. This implied refusal of a farewell interview may, at first sight, seem severe, but was, on the contrary, true compassion, and founded on a deep knowledge of 'what was in man.' Had his follower returned, he would have been assailed by his unbelieving relatives—by some with scorn, by some with reproaches, by some with ridicule, by some with MAGDALA. [Luke, viii:2.]—North of Tiberias, on the west coast of the Sea of Galilee, a single day's journey takes the traveler through the sites of Magdala, Nazareth and Capernaum—scenes of sacred interest in connection with the New Testament. This is nothing to-day but a little fishing village, but it has continued to bear the name it was known by in the days of our Savior, while many of the great cities of the world have disappeared, and thus this insignificant little town has continued to bear witness and to keep alive the memory of Mary Magdalene. Here it was that the grace of the Redeemer was shown in transforming into a sweet and lovely saint a woman whose name perhaps would never have been known but for the fact that she came into the presence of the Son of God and the Son of Man.

there[l] came down a storm of wind on the lake; and they were filled[9] with water, and were in jeopardy.

24 And they came to him, and [n]awoke him, saying, [o]Master, Master, we perish! [p]Then he arose, and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water: and they ceased, and there was a calm.

25 And he said unto them, [q]Where is your faith? And they, [r]being afraid, wondered, saying one to another, What manner of man is this! for he commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey him.

26 ¶ And[s] they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes,[1] which is over against Galilee.

27 And when he went forth to land, [t]there met him out of the city a certain man, which had devils long time, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs.

28 When he saw Jesus, [u]he cried out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice said, [v]What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God most high? I beseech thee, [x]torment me not.

29 (For[y] he had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. [z]For oftentimes it had caught him: and he was kept bound with chains and in fetters; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil into the wilderness.)

30 And Jesus asked him, saying, What is thy name? And he said, Legion:[2] because many devils were entered into him.

31 And[a] they besought him that he would not command them to go out into the deep.[3]

32 And there was there [b]an herd of many swine feeding on the mountain: and they besought him that he would suffer them to enter into them: [c]and he suffered them.

33 Then went the devils out of the man, and entered into the swine: and [d]the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake, and were choked.

34 When they that fed them saw what was done, they [e]fled, and went and told it in the city and in the country.

35 Then they went out to see what was done; and came to Jesus, and [f]found the man, out of whom the devils were departed, sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and [h]in his right mind:[4] and they were afraid.

36 They also which saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed.

37 Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about [i]besought him to depart from them; for they were taken with great fear: and he went up into the ship, and returned back again.

38 Now the man out of whom the devils were departed [j]besought him that he might be with him: but Jesus sent him away, saying,

39 Return[k] to thine own house, and show how great things God hath done unto thee. [l]And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done unto him.

40 And it came to pass, that, [m]when Jesus was returned, the people gladly received him: for they were all waiting for him.[5]

41 ¶ And,[o] behold, there came a man named Jairus,[6] and he was a [p]ruler of the synagogue; and he fell down at Jesus' feet, and [q]besought him that he would come into his house:

42 For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and she [r]lay a dying. But as he went, the people thronged him.

43 ¶ And[s] a woman[7] having an issue of blood twelve years, which had [t]spent all her living upon [u]physicians, [v]neither could be healed of any,

44 Came[x] behind him, and [y]touched the border of his garment: [z]and immediately her issue of blood stanched.

45 And Jesus said, Who touched me? When all denied, Peter, and they that were with him, said, Master, the multitude throng thee and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

46 And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me: for I perceive that [a]virtue is gone out of me.

47 And[b] when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came [c]trembling, and [d]falling down before him, she declared unto him, before all the people, for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately.

48 And he said unto her, [e]Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole: go in peace.

49 ¶ While[g] he yet spake, there cometh one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead: trouble not the Master.

50 But when Jesus heard it, he answered him, saying, [h]Fear not: believe only, and she shall be made whole.

51 And when he came into the house, [i]he suffered no man to go in, [j]save Peter, and James, and John, and the father and the mother of the maiden.

52 And[k] all wept, and bewailed her: but he said, Weep not; [l]she is not dead, but sleepeth.

53 And they [m]laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead.

4 Madness often consists in one erroneous idea or train of ideas. Sometimes, however, but seldom, the whole mind is astray. Now that such aberrations, whether partial or universal, may arise from various bodily affections is certain. An injury on the head, vitiated digestion or secretion, narcotics, and various stimulant drugs, fever, &c., may all produce mental derangement. But surely this variety of causes, all concurring in producing the same effect, instead of leading to the conclusion that this and the similar cases recorded in the New Testament, were not demoniacal possessions, but mere bodily diseases, should conduct to the very opposite—to wit, the possibility of some other cause inscrutable to the eye of man—nay the certainty of another cause, when discovered and declared upon the authority of Christ. Indeed, to deny the possibility of demoniacal possession is as unphilosophical as it is unscriptural. The power of an unbodied spirit to infuse bad principles into others, and drive a man, a church, a kingdom, out of their right mind, is daily witnessed. Who, then, can philosophically deny to the disembodied that power which an embodied spirit is certainly known to possess?—C.

What a rebuke to those who argue, Why send the gospel to Jews and heathens abroad till you have converted all Colonial Christians at home? Jesus did not abide and argue with the Gadarenes. He departed when they rejected him; and was joyfully received on the other side of the lake.—C.—Leaving the country of the Gadarenes, which lay along the south-eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee, Jesus returned in a boat across the lake to Capernaum. worldly hopes and fears.—His spirit would thus have been harassed—perhaps, in the end, chafed and irritated; and, in any event, he must have been exposed to great temptations to apostasy, from all which our Lord delivers him, by the prescription of self-denial, and instant decision of purpose. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With authority Jesus commissions his gospel ministers: with faithfulness and care they must labour; and men's eternal state must be fixed as they hear or reject their messages. In times of scarcity and distress we should cast all our care on God, and be always ready to divide the little subsistence that we have with the hungry. By his blessing, restored through Christ, we may live comfortably, and in a Christian manner, on a little. Happy are they who boldly confess the Redeemer, whatever they may suffer on his account. What is lost for him on earth

BETHSAIDA—THE PRESENT SITE OF THE CITY THAT WITNESSED MANY OF HIS WONDERFUL WORKS. [Luke. ix:10.]—Bethsaida was one of the cities most frequently visited by our Savior. It was very near Capernaum, which is called his own city. Always, in going from Capernaum to Jerusalem, or any point west of the Sea of Galilee, He would pass through Bethsaida. It is said "He preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee and cast out devils." We know from the woe Christ pronounced on Bethsaida that it was one of the cities which had witnessed most of His wonderful works. Nothing remains of the once proud and wealthy city but a few broken walls. It is all grown up in prickly pears and thorns, making such a thick undergrowth that it is almost impossible to pass over the site at all.

54 And [o]he put them all out, and took her by the hand, and [p]called, saying, Maid, arise.

55 And [q]her spirit came again, and she arose straightway: and he commanded to give her meat.

56 And [r]her parents were astonished: but he charged them that they should tell no man what was done.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Christ sendeth his apostles to work miracles, and preach the gospel. 7 Herod desireth to see Christ. 12 Christ feedeth five thousand: 18 inquireth what opinion the world had of him: foreteileth his passion: 23 proposeth to all the pattern of his patience. 28 The transfiguration. 37 He healeth the lunatic: 43 again forewarneth his disciples of his passion: 46 commendeth humility: 51 biddeth them to show mildness towards all, without desire of revenge: 57 proposeth terms to three persons who offer to follow him.

THEN he[a] called his twelve disciples together, and [b]gave them power[1] and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases.

2 And he sent them to [c]preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

3 And he said unto them, [d]Take nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats apiece.

4 And[e] whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart.[2]

5 And[g] whosoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, shake off the very dust from your feet, for a testimony against them.

6 And[h] they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel, and healing every where.

7 ¶ Now[i] Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by him: and he was perplexed, because that it was said of some, that John was risen from the dead;

8 And[j] of some, that Elias had appeared; and of others, that one of the old prophets was risen again.

9 And Herod said, [k]John have I beheaded: but who is this,[3] of whom I hear such things? And[l] he desired to see him.

10 ¶ And[m] the apostles, when they were returned, told him all that they had done. [n]And he took them, and went aside privately into a desert place, belonging to the city called [o]Bethsaida.

11 And the people, when they [p]knew it, followed him: and [q]he received them, and spake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing.

12 ¶ And[r] when the day began to wear away,[4] then came the twelve, and said unto him, Send the multitude away, that they may go into the towns and country round about, and lodge, and get victuals: for we are here in a desert place.

13 But he said unto them, [s]Give ye them to eat. And they said, We have no more but five loaves and two fishes; except we should go and buy meat for all this people.

14 For they were about five thousand men. And he said to his disciples, [t]Make them sit down by fifties in a company.

15 And they did so, and made them all sit down.

16 Then he took the five loaves and the two fishes; and [u]looking up to heaven, he blessed them, and brake, and gave to the disciples to set before the multitude.

17 And[x] they did eat, and were all filled: and [y]there was taken up of fragments that remained to them twelve baskets.

18 ¶ And[z] it came to pass, as he was [5]alone[6] praying, his disciples were with him: and he asked them, saying, Whom say the people that I am?[7]

19 They answering said, [a]John the Baptist; but some say, Elias; and others say, that one of the old prophets is risen again.

20 He said unto them, But [b]whom say ye that I am? Peter answering said, [c]The Christ of God.

21 And[d] he straitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing;

22 Saying, [e]The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be slain, and be raised the third day.

23 ¶ And[g] he said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.

24 For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it.

25 For[h] what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away?

26 For[i] whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels.

27 But[j] I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God.

28 ¶ And[k] it came to pass, about an eight days[8] after these sayings,[9] he took [f]Peter and John and James, and went up into a mountain [g]to pray.[1]

29 And as he prayed, [h]the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistering.

30 And, behold, there talked with him two men, which were [i]Moses and Elias:

will be more than compensated in heaven. But dreadful is their eternal state who prefer the honours, profits, and pleasures of a present world, to him and his everlasting salvation, or who are ashamed of his truths and ways.—Astonishing is the influence of close fellowship with God. Easily it could even overset our mortal constitution. And how delightful then is heaven, where Jesus and all his saints shall for ever appear in their glory, and for ever, with joy inexpressible, contemplate his expiatory sufferings! In hopes of it, let me love his person, obey his directions, and trust all my cares and maladies to his power and skill. Let me accurately observe whether I have true faith, and in what degree; and into what debates I enter, and with what manner of spirit. Alas, what defects, prejudices,

BEDOUIN VILLAGE NEAR CÆSAREA PHILIPPI. [Luke, ix: 39.]—This scene in a Bedouin village, near Cæsarea Philippi, shows us people who are very much like those living in the same region in the time of our Savior. These people are often to-day diseased with afflictions they do not understand and that they have no means of relieving. They are so ignorant as to suppose that any medicine is sufficient to alleviate and cure them of their diseases. Refusing the spiritual help that our Lord brought to them, they have continued through all the centuries to suffer from the bodily ailments that flesh is heir to. Those that accept the spiritual offers of Jesus Christ have light and wisdom given to them, by which they are able to discern the herbs and minerals which are necessary to relieve their afflicted bodies.

31 Who[q] appeared in glory, and [r]spake of his decease which he should accomplish[2] at Jerusalem.

32 But Peter and they that were with him were[s] heavy with sleep: and when they were awake, [t]they saw his glory, and the two men that stood with him.

33 And it came to pass, as they departed from him, Peter said unto Jesus, Master, [u]it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: [v]not knowing what he said.

34 While he thus spake, there came a [w]cloud, and overshadowed them: and they [x]feared as they entered into the cloud.

35 And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, [y]This is my beloved Son: [z]hear him.

36 And when the voice was past, Jesus was found alone. [a]And they kept it close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen.

37 ¶ And[c] it came to pass, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met him.

38 And, behold, a man of the company cried out, saying, Master, [d]I beseech thee, look upon my son; [e]for he is mine only child.

39 And lo, [f]a spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again; and, bruising him, hardly departeth from him.

40 And I besought thy disciples to cast him out; and [h]they could not.

41 And Jesus answering said, O [i]faithless and perverse generation! how long shall I be with you, and suffer you? [j]Bring thy son hither.

42 And as he was yet a coming, [k]the devil threw him down, and tare him. And Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and healed the child, and delivered him again to his father.[3]

43 ¶ And[l] they were all amazed at the mighty power of God. But while they wondered every one at all things which Jesus did, he said unto his disciples,

44 Let[m] these sayings sink down into your ears: for the Son of man shall be delivered into the hands of men.

45 But[o] they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not: and they feared to ask him of that saying.

46 ¶ Then[p] there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest.[4]

47 And Jesus, [q]perceiving the thought of their heart, took [r]a child, and set him by him,

48 And said unto them, [s]Whosoever shall receive this child[5] in my name, receiveth me; and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth him that sent me: [t]for he that is least among you all, the same shall be great.

49 ¶ And[u] John answered and said, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name; and we forbad him, because he followeth not with us.

50 And Jesus said unto him, [v]Forbid him not: for he that is not against us is for us.

51 ¶ And it came to pass, when the time was come that he should be [x]received up,[6] he [y]stedfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem,[7]

52 And sent messengers before his face: and they went, and entered into a village of the [z]Samaritans, to make ready for him.

53 And [a]they did not receive him, because his face was as though he would go to[8] Jerusalem.

54 And when his disciples [b]James and John saw this, they said, Lord, wilt thou that [c]we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did?

55 But he turned, [d]and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not [e]what manner of spirit[9] ye are of.

56 For[g] the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them. And they went to another village.

57 ¶ And[h] it came to pass, that, as they went in the way, a certain man[1] said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.

58 And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; [i]but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.[2]

59 And he said unto another, [j]Follow me. But he said, [k]Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father.

60 Jesus said unto him, [l]Let the dead bury their dead; [m]but go thou and preach the kingdom of God.

61 And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but [o]let me first go bid them farewell which are at home at my house.

62 And Jesus said unto him, [p]No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

CHAPTER X.

1 Christ sendeth out the seventy disciples to work miracles, and to preach: 17 they return with joy: Christ showeth them wherein to rejoice: 21 thanketh his Father for his grace: 23 magnifieth the happy estate of his church: 25 teacheth the lawyer how to attain eternal life, and to take every one for his neighbour that needeth his mercy: 41 reprehendeth Martha, and commendeth Mary her sister.

AFTER these[q] things the Lord appointed other [b]seventy[1] also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.

[5] Jesus now leaves Galilee not to return till after his resurrection. Luke details the incidents, which occurred during the journey, most of which are peculiar to him, not being found in the other Gospels. Christ's route was not direct, and appears to have occupied a considerable time. We learn from Jn.10.22 that our Lord was at Jerusalem at the feast of dedication, which took place about the end of December. Between that time and the passover when he was crucified he could not have returned to Galilee, for we are able to gather from incidental notices in John where that period was spent. Consequently the journey here referred to in Luke was made in December.—P.

pride, and passion, he finds in the very best on earth! Heartily he detests them; and much more to have his gospel propagated by their means. But with great tenderness he treats the meek and humble, pities their infirmities, and cherishes their good intentions concerning him.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 30–37. In allusion, this wounded man may be viewed as an emblem of a lost sinner, to whom neither moral nor ceremonial laws can afford relief, and whom Jesus alone can tenderly pity and save by means of his gospel. But the real scope of the parable is to show that whatever provocations we have met with, we ought cordially to love, and kindly to help and relieve, our very enemies, even when their own professed friends overlook them.

Ver. 2. The labourers furnish the true emblem of a genuine minister of the gospel. The labourer must be early, punctual, attentive to his employer's orders; diligent, patient, and eat and STREET SCENE IN TIBERIAS. [LUKE, ix:51.]—While we have no knowledge that our Savior was in Tiberias, we know that he often passed in sight of it, because He could not go from Nazareth to Capernaum, or from Jerusalem to Capernaum, without going by it. While there is no record of his entering it, we must think there are many things which He did of which we have no record, because St. John said if all the things He did were recorded the world itself would not contain the books, so that we have but little doubt but what our Savior was often in the city of Tiberias. He loved the haunts of men, and wherever men assembled He was in the midst of them. This was the greatest city of the time on the Sea of Galilee, the home of the Roman governor, and the center of interest about the lake. The people here now are very poor.

PLOWING AT JEZREEL—THE RICHEST VALLEY IN PALESTINE. [LUKE, ix:52.]—In going from Nazareth to Jerusalem, our Savior, if he followed the most direct route, would pass through the plains of Jezreel. This is a valley that runs across the whole of Palestine from near the Jordan to the Mediterranean Sea, and is not only the richest valley in the Holy Land, but perhaps one of the most fertile plains on the face of the earth. Notwithstanding it has been cultivated from the days of Abraham, yet without ever being fertilized, it produces still the finest wheat. This plain belongs now to a Christian, who lives at Beyrout, and is interesting because of the memories and associations and traditions connected with it. It has been the great battlefield of the world, and the mountains Carmel, Tabor, Little Hermon and Gilboa are all within or in sight of this plain. It was upon the edge of this plain, at Jenin, that the messengers who went before our Savior, as referred to in verse 52 of the ninth chapter of St. Luke, were turned back.

2 Therefore said he unto them, [c]The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the [d]Lord of the harvest, that [e]he would send forth labourers into his harvest.[2]

3 Go[f] your ways: [h]behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves.

4 Carry[i] neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes: and salute no man by the way.[3]

5 And[j] into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house.

6 And if the [k]son of peace[4] be there, your peace shall [l]rest upon it: if not, it shall turn to you again.

7 And[m] in the same house[5] remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire. [n]Go not from house to house.

8 And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you:

9 And [p]heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, [q]The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

10 But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say,

11 Even[r] the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you: notwithstanding,[s] be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

12 But I say unto you, that [t]it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom, than for that city.

13 ¶ Woe[u] unto thee, Chorazin![6] woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon which have been done in you, they had a great while ago [v]repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes.

14 But[w] it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment, than for you.

15 And thou, Capernaum, [x]which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell.

16 He[y] that heareth you, heareth me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth me; and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me.

17 ¶ And the [z]seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name.

18 And he said unto them, I beheld [a]Satan as lightning fall from heaven.

19 Behold, [c]I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you.

A.M. Cir. 4036. A.D. cir. 32.

20 Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you;[7] but rather rejoice, because [d]your names are written in heaven.

21 ¶ In that hour Jesus [e]rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, [f]Lord of heaven and earth, that thou [h]hast hid these things[8] from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight.

22 [i]All[9] things are delivered to me of my Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him.

23 ¶ And he turned him unto his disciples, and said privately, [j]Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see:

24 For I tell you, [k]that many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

25 ¶ And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, [l]Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

26 He said unto him, [m]What is written in the law? how readest thou?

27 And he answering said, [o]Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself.

28 And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: [p]this do, and thou shalt live.

29 But he, [q]willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbour?

30 And Jesus answering said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho,[1] and [r]fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

31 And[s] by chance there came down a certain priest[2] that way; and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side.

32 And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and [t]looked on him, and passed by on the other side.[3]

33 But a certain [u]Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he [v]had compassion on him,

34 And went to him, and [x]bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an [y]inn, and took care of him.

35 And on the morrow, when he departed,

2 The discourse addressed to the seventy is in substance the same as that to the twelve, as the similarity of their errand would lead us to suppose it would be. But there is, as Stier has well remarked, this weighty difference. The discourse in Mat. x., in its three great divisions, speaks plainly of an office founded, and a ministry appointed, which was to involve a work, and embrace consequences, coextensive, both in space and duration, with the world. Here we have no such prospective view unfolded. The whole discourse is confined to the first division there, and relates entirely to present duties.—Alford.—P.

7 It is a natural tendency for man to glory in the exercise and exhibition of power, whether that power is inherent or conferred. The apostles and disciples of our Lord sometimes showed a disposition to glory in their success. This arises from pride, and may result in neglect of the real work which God had committed to them. Against all such feelings Christ here solemnly warns them.—K.

sleep but to gain fresh strength for new employment. May the Lord send forth many such to reap and to gather in his harvest! C.

Ver. 11. We do wipe off against you. Rather, 'we do wipe off for you;' the act not implying a threat, such as the Authorized Version seems to convey, but visibly to represent their disinterestedness; as if they had said, 'we came not for yours—no, not even to a particle of your dust, which we thus wipe off and leave with you—but we came for you, that by grace we might translate you to that heavenly kingdom of which we are the messengers.' C.

Ver. 18. Like lightning. Visibly, swiftly, portentously, destructively. The destructive throes of Satan, when falling from his throne in the world he had usurped and governed, may be well illustrated by his efforts to destroy some of those miserable demoniacs from whom he was cast out, Mar. 9. 20, 22; Lu. 9. 42.—The word heaven is not merely applied to the place and state of glory, 2 Co. 5. 1, 2, but also to the powers and dignities of this world, Is. 13. 10, 13, comp. with ver. 19: see also note on Mat. 24. 29, 30. The meaning therefore seems to be that our Lord saw Satan, either in his own person or in the persons of his angels, falling from that supremacy over the world which he had so long usurped. He saw him actually beginning to fall, and, prophetically, he saw him totally fallen before the preaching of the gospel. C.

Ver. 19. The promise, 'nothing shall by any means hurt you,' being expounded by comparison with such scriptures as Mat. 10. 16–22, and by the actual history of the apostles, will be seen to insure, not exemption from temporal, but from spiritual injury; and the superiority conferred 'over all the power of the enemy' (Satan) seems to lead to the conclusion that by 'serpents and he took out two pence,[4] and gave them to [e]the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever[a] thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

INN OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN. [Luke, x.34.]—About half-way between Jerusalem and Jericho there stands to-day an inn that is said to occupy the site of the ancient inn where the good Samaritan carried the man who had fallen and been beaten among the thieves. This is the place where travelers take dinner on their way from Jerusalem to Jericho. This region of country still abounds with thieves, thus making it necessary for every one who passes this way to go under guard. This guard is furnished travelers by the sheik of the country, whose headquarters is at the Apostle's Fountain, about four miles east of Jerusalem. Our Savior seized upon the event of the man falling among thieves and being shunned by the priests and Levites, but ministered to by the good Samaritan, to teach the world charity, and to treat every one as his neighbor

36 Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves?

37 And he said, [b]He that showed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, [c]Go, and do thou likewise.

38 ¶ Now it came to pass, as they went, that he entered into a certain village:[5] and a certain woman, named [d]Martha, received him into her house.[6]

39 And she had a sister called Mary, which also [e]sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word.

40 But Martha was [f]cumbered[7] about much serving, and came to him and said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me.

41 And Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art [h]careful[8] and troubled[9] about many things:

42 But [i]one thing is needful:[1] and Mary hath chosen that [j]good part, which shall not be taken away from her.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Christ teacheth to pray, and that instantly: 11 assuring that God so will give us good things. 14 He, casting out a dumb devil, rebuketh the blasphemy of the Pharisees: 28 and showeth who are blessed: 29 preacheth to the people, 37 and reprehendeth the outward show of holiness in the Pharisees, scribes, and lawyers.

AND it came to pass, that as he was [a]praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, [b]Lord, [c]teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples.[1]

2 And he said unto them, When ye pray, say,[d] Our[e] Father which art in heaven, [f]hallowed be thy name. [h]Thy kingdom come. Thy[i] will be done, as in heaven, so in earth.

[3] A proof is here afforded of the fact that our Lord repeated substantially the same lessons and doctrines to his disciples at different periods of his public life. Both time and circumstances show that Luke is not here recording the same discourse found in Mat. vi. The form of prayer itself proves it. Though in substance identical, the language is abridged. —C.

Our Lord, therefore, had made mention of both; but Matthew, in addressing Jews, accustomed to the temporal promises of Moses, turns their attention to the 'good things' (see Mar. 10. 30); Luke, who wrote for the Gentiles, turns their attention to that 'Holy Spirit,' by whom their conversion had been wrought, and their gifts derived.—C.

7 And he from within shall answer and say, Trouble me not: the door is now shut, and my children are with me in bed;[4] I cannot rise and give thee.

14 ¶ And[t] he was casting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil was gone out, the dumb spake; and the people wondered.

15 But some of them said, [u]He casteth out devils through Beelzebub the chief of the devils.

16 And others, [w]tempting him, sought of him a sign from heaven.

17 But he, [x]knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth.

18 If Satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand? because ye say that I cast out devils through Beelzebub.[9] scorpions' are here to be understood, not the animals so named, but satanic agents, more poisonous to the soul than they to the body. That the promise of exemption from the power of serpents may, however, be also literally understood, is manifest from Mar. 16. 18; Ac. 28. 3, 5. C.

Ver. 33. Samaritan. The object of our Lord in selecting a Samaritan was to show how a people whom the Jews hated and despised were capable of kind and generous actions, that thereby he might soften down national prejudices, and prepare the way for the union of all nations under one King. C.

Ver. 37. Go and do likewise. That is, neighbour includes not merely our friends by the ties of nature or grace—two points the lawyer never questioned; but also every one, friend or stranger, countryman or alien, who may stand in any need of our aid, and whom we have the means and the opportunity to serve. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great are the difficulties of faithful gospel ministers, and proportionate their assistance. Alas! that so few should be laborious, skilful, and faithful, or successful! If their authority, qualifications, help, and success depend wholly on Christ, with what earnestness should their ministrations be attended to and improved! and cheerfully ought their hearers to provide them a subsistence. Ministers ought to appear altogether disentangled from carnal cares and pursuits. And dreadful is their case who reject a purely-preached gospel and the faithful preachers of it.—Happy is it to be instrumental in advancing the kingdom of Christ, and depressing that of Satan. But more so to be enrolled in heaven, as the loving people of God and heirs of his glory. How exhilarating are the views of that divine grace which, by the almighty influence of the Holy Ghost, God bestows on all the world the saving blessings and distinguished honours of the new kingdom! But it is absurd for men to seek righteousness and life by a law which they can never fulfil; or to attempt reducing the broad law of God to the standard of their own heart and life. Never ought any to inquire concerning eternal salvation from a captious or even curious intention, but with the most serious concern. And it is comely when love to God and to men streams powerfully through every action of life, and the miseries of strangers and enemies awaken our tender compassion. Never should ministers or others make visits without leaving a savour of Christ behind them. Everywhere they should labour to render men wise unto salvation. And no secular cares should ever hinder spiritual concern. Thrice happy are they who have the saving knowledge of, and an interest in, Christ! If once we have this, neither none but ourselves can deprive us of it; and Jesus will encourage our solicitous care about it, and seek our eternal possession of it.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 2–4. The prayer here is an abridged form of that contained in the sermon on the mount, Mat. 6. 9–12, but was delivered on a very different occasion. This was revealed to one applicant for instruction, the former as an example, in the course of the sermon, Mat. 5. 3, 9, equally addressed to all. C.

Ver. 5. Midnight. The call 'at midnight,' that would appear so unlikely in the colder northern climates, would be perfectly natural in the warmer latitudes, in which, during summer, journeys are often taken at night, for avoidance of the oppressive and even dangerous heat of the day.—Three loaves may appear a large and unnecessary quantity, but the Jewish loaves were merely thin biscuit, each weighing but a few ounces. While it is also to be recollected that eastern hospitality required an amount of provision for a friend far beyond his necessity. See Ge. 43. 34. C.

Ver. 12. Scorpion. The scorpion is generally about two inches in length, and in structure resembles a lobster. It has a jointed tail, said to increase with its age, at the end of which is a small curved sharp-pointed sting, capable of inflicting a most poisonous and often deadly wound. Ælian, Avicenna, and others, describe a white species, of an oval form, and much resembling an ordinary egg. C.

Ver. 45. Lawyers. That scribes and lawyers are sometimes used indiscriminately is certain, from comparing Mat. 22. 35 with 19 And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do [y]your sons cast them out? [z]therefore shall they be your judges.

20 But if I with the [a]finger of God[1] cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you.

21 When a [b]strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace:

22 But when [c]a stronger than he shall [d]come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils.

23 He[e] that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth.

24 When[g] the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out.[2]

25 And when he cometh, he findeth it [h]swept and garnished.

26 Then[i] goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in, and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, as he spake these things, a certain woman of the company lifted up her voice, and said unto him, [j]Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked.

28 But he said, Yea, [k]rather blessed[3] are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.

29 ¶ And[l] when the people were gathered thick together, he began to say, This is [m]an evil generation:[4] they seek a sign; and there shall no sign be given it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet.

30 For as [n]Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of man be to this generation.

31 The[p] queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them: for she came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, [q]a greater than Solomon is here.

32 The[r] men of Nineve shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a [s]greater than Jonas is here.

33 No[t] man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a secret place, neither under a [u]bushel, but on a candlestick, that they which come in may see the light.

34 The[v] light[5] of the body is the eye: therefore when thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light; [w]but when thine eye is evil, thy body also is full of darkness.

35 Take heed, therefore, [x]that the light which is in thee be not darkness.

36 If[y] thy whole body therefore be full of light,[6] having no part dark, the whole shall be full of light, as when[7] the [z]bright shining of a candle doth give thee light.

37 ¶ And as he spake, [a]a certain Pharisee besought him to dine with him: and he went in, and sat down to meat.

38 And when the Pharisee saw it, he marvelled that [b]he had not first washed before dinner.

39 And the Lord said unto him, [c]Now do ye Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and the platter; but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedness.

40 Ye [d]fools,[8] did not he that [e]made that which is without make that which is within also?

41 But[g] rather give alms[i] of such things as ye have;[9] and, behold, all things are clean unto you.

42 But[k] woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

43 Woe[l] unto you, Pharisees! for ye love the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets.

44 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for [m]ye are as graves which appear not, and the men that walk over them are not aware of them.

45 Then answered one of the lawyers, and said unto him, Master, thus saying thou reproachest us also.

46 And[n] he said, Woe unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers.

47 Woe[o] unto you! for ye build the sepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them.

He that will not believe the Bible to be the word of God will assuredly deny a miracle to be the work of God. Mar. 12. 28. But 'scribes and Pharisees' being both already mentioned, ver. 44, and the lawyer here concluding that he and his brethren were thus condemned by implication, it is evident there was a class of the learned professions specially called lawyers who yet were not called scribes. From ver. 49 it is probable some of 'the lawyers' were teachers in the colleges: and, from the influence ascribed to them, ver. 46, 47, that others were magistrates or judges.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—There is great need that Jesus Christ should teach us to pray to God, as our gracious and heavenly Father, for all temporal, and especially spiritual blessings, with holy reverence and adoration; with firm faith, strong fervour, and persevering importunity; and with a charitable and forgiving temper of spirit, that God in all things may be glorified. If we thus pour out our requests in the name of our Redeemer, it is impossible they should fail of a gracious answer. But while some learn to pray, how many, contrary to all means used with them, reject and learn to blaspheme the glorious Deliverer from sin and Satan. None are held neuter in religion, but are either Jesus' friends or enemies. They, therefore, who seemed to be once reformed, often become the vilest apostates and distinguished slaves of Satan. How ready are others to imagine real happiness to consist in outward connections with Christ. But it is only they who believe and obey the gospel that are happy indeed. How dark is the gospel to persons destitute of faith and depraved in judgment! But aggravated is their guilt, and inexpressible their misery, who remain wilfully blinded by pitiful prejudices amidst the clearest gospel light, and who are influenced by a superstitious, hypocritical, and persecuting temper. Fearful sorrow awaits them who prefer external ceremonies to the substantial duties of love and obedience; or who are zealous of fair shows of religion while they secretly indulge themselves in the vilest abominations; or who 48 Truly [u]ye bear witness that ye allow[3] the deeds of your fathers: for [v]they indeed killed them, and ye build their sepulchres.

49 Therefore also said the [w]wisdom of God, I[x] will send them prophets and apostles, and some[y] of them they shall slay and persecute:

50 That[z] the blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation:

51 From the blood of [a]Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple: verily I say unto you, [b]It shall be required of this generation.

52 Woe[4] unto you, lawyers! for ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered.[5]

53 And as he said these things unto them, the[c] scribes and the Pharisees began to urge him vehemently, and to [d]provoke him to speak of many things:

54 Laying[e] wait for him, and seeking to catch something out of his mouth, that they might accuse him.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Christ preacheth to his disciples to avoid hypocrisy, and fearfulness in publishing his doctrine: 13 warneth the people to beware of covetousness, by the parable of the rich man who set up greater barns. 22 We must not be over-careful of earthly things, 31 but seek the kingdom of God, 33 give alms, 36 be ready at a knock to open to our Lord whensoever he cometh. 41 Christ's ministers are to see to their charge, 49 and look for persecution. 54 The people must take this time of grace, 58 because it is a fearful thing to die without reconciliation.

IN the mean time, [a]when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude[1] of people, insomuch that they trode one upon another, he began to say unto his disciples first of all, Beware[b] ye of the leaven[2] of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy.

2 For[c] there is nothing covered,[3] that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known.

3 Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the house-tops.[4]

4 And I say unto you [d]my friends, [e]Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do.

5 But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him, which after he hath killed, [f]hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him.

6 Are not five [h]sparrows sold for two farthings, and [i]not one of them is forgotten before God?

[3] In the parallel accusation, Mat. 23. 30, the scribes and Pharisees are represented as disapproving of the deeds of their fathers;—here the lawyers are represented as aiding them. The Pharisees, however, were hypocritical in their disapprobation of the murder of the prophets, for they meditated how they might destroy our Lord; and the lawyers were guilty of allowing the evil deeds of their fathers, because they continued to teach and enforce their wicked traditionary principles.—C.

16 And he spake a parable unto them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man [x]brought forth plentifully:

17 And he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits?

18 And[y] he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits[8] and my goods.

19 And I will say to my soul, [z]Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; [a]take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.

20 But[b] God said unto him, Thou fool![9] this night thy soul shall be required of [1]thee: [c]then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?

21 So[d] is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God.

22 ¶ And he said unto his disciples, Therefore I say unto you, [e]Take no thought[2] for your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on.

23 The[g] life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment.

24 Consider[h] the ravens: for they neither condemning ancient persecutors, do themselves rage against and persecute Christ, his gospel, and followers. Perseverance in national sins certainly issues in national ruin. And it is highly criminal and dangerous to hate, conceal, or misinterpret the Scriptures, or to hate reproof, and rage against Jesus Christ and his Word for condemning our faults.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 29. Neither be ye of doubtful mind. The original seems to refer to those who are superstitiously guided by meteors, as both individuals and nations frequently are—any regard to which unmeaning portents (of superstition begotten, and by superstition expounded: God expressly forbids. See Je. 10. 2. A literal translation would stand thus:—'Neither be ye meteorized,' carried about as clouds 'by every wind of doctrine,' tossed up and down between hope and fear of the means of support. C.

Ver. 32. Even nominal Christians are still a 'little flock'—only about 175,500,000; while 482,000,000 are heathens, 140,000,000 Mohammedans, and 2,500,000 Jews. But of these 175,500,000 nominal Christians, how (comparatively) few can even charity reckon as real followers of the Lamb! Yet, however few, it is their Father's good-will to prevent them now, by grace, from following a multitude to do evil, and to make them the founders of that spiritual kingdom that shall yet obtain dominion over all the earth. C.

Ver. 35. Let your loins be girded about. This direction is generally considered an allusion to the order of the passover, Ex. 12. 11, and to the long, flowing, and entangling robes of the Orientals, which, however graceful in domestic use, required to be bound around the loins before a journey. But on considering ver. 37, where the master, it is said, 'will gird himself,' and recollecting the act of our Lord, when he 'girded himself with a towel,' Jn. 13. 4, it would seem rather to refer to the preparation of servants to wait at their master's table, than to the preparation of travellers to set out upon a journey. C.

sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn; and God feedeth them: how much more are ye better than the fowls?

25 And[t] which of you with taking thought can add to his stature[3] one cubit?[4]

26 If ye then be not able to do that thing which is least, why take ye thought for the rest?

27 Consider the lilies, how they grow; they toil not, they spin not: and yet I say unto you, that [j]Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

28 If then God so clothe the grass, [k]which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, how much more will he clothe you, [l]O ye of little faith?

29 And [m]seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind.[5]

30 For[n] all these things do the nations of the world seek after: [o]and your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things.

31 But[q] rather seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you.[6]

32 Fear[r] not, [s]little flock, for [t]it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.

33 ¶ Sell[u] that ye have, and give alms: [v]provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth.

34 For[w] where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

35 ¶ Let[y] your loins be girded about, and your lights burning;

36 And[z] ye yourselves like unto men[7] that wait for their lord, when he will return from the[a] wedding; that, when [b]he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately.

37 Blessed[c] are those servants, whom the lord, when he cometh, shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them.

38 And if he shall come in the second watch,[8] or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants.

39 And[d] this know, that if the goodman of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through.

40 Be[e] ye therefore ready also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not.

41 ¶ Then Peter said unto him, Lord, speakest thou this parable [p]unto us, or even to all?

42 And the Lord said, [h]Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season?

43 Blessed[i] is that servant, whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing.

44 Of a truth I say unto you, that he [j]will make him ruler over all that he hath.

45 But [k]and if that servant say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin [l]to beat the men-servants[9] and maidens, and to eat and drink, and to be drunken;

46 The[m] lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and [n]will cut him in sunder,[1] and [p]will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.

47 And[q] that servant which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.

48 But he that knew not,[2] and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more.

49 ¶ I[r] am come to send fire[3] on the earth; [s]and what will I, if it be already kindled?[5]

50 But [t]I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I [6]straitened[7] till it be accomplished!

51 Suppose[t] ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division:

52 For from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three.

53 The father shall be divided against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; the mother-in-law against her daughter-in-law, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law.

54 ¶ And he said also to the people, "When ye see a cloud rise out of the west,[8] straightway ye say, There cometh a shower; and so it is.

55 And [v]when ye see the south wind[9] blow, ye say, There will be heat; and it cometh to pass.

56 Ye[x] hypocrites! ye can discern the face of the sky, and of the earth: but how is it that ye do not discern [y]this time?

57 Yea,[z] and why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?

58 ¶ When[a] thou goest with thine adversary to the magistrate, as thou art in the way, give

[1] Allusion is doubtless made to the promise of the Baptist (ch. 3. 16), 'he (Christ) shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire.' The gift of the Holy Spirit, as a quickening, enlightening, and guiding Spirit, is especially meant. Alford renders the second clause of the verse: 'And what will I? Would that it were already kindled.'—P.

[2] How could a man who 'knew not his Lord's will,' be guilty, and liable to any stripes? Simply because there was a fault in being ignorant at all, where there was opportunity of learning. Knowledge is, no doubt, an aggravation of sin; but ignorance itself is a sin, in a land of gospel light.—C.

sion of division. The division was produced by the perversity of men, who loved darkness rather than the light, and therefore hated the light, and persecuted every one that followed it. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How absurd is hypocrisy, seeing God is omniscient, and will in the last judgment publicly expose our whole conduct! It is highly unbecoming to distrust his care for, and assistance of, us in every duty, or to fear men more than him; and infinitely dangerous not to prefer the care of our soul to everything else. There is great need of watchfulness and fidelity in religion, since Christ will certainly own or reject us in the other world as we do him in this. And with humble confidence may we commit our souls to that Saviour who eagerly desired to undergo the worst of deaths for the salvation of sinners; and to that diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him; lest he hale thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and the officer cast thee into prison.[1]

59 I tell thee, [b]thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the very last [2]mite.[3]

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Christ preacheth repentance upon the punishment of the Galileans, and others. 6 The fruitless fig-tree may not stand. 11 He healeth the crooked woman: 18 showeth the powerful working of the word in the hearts of his chosen, by the parable of the grain of mustard-seed, and of leaven. 23 exhorteth to enter in at the strait gate, 31 reproveth Herod, and lamenteth over Jerusalem.

THERE were present at that season some that told him of the [a]Galileans, whose blood Pilate had [b]mingled with their sacrifices.[1]

2 And Jesus answering said unto them, [c]Suppose ye that these Galileans were sinners above all the Galileans, because they suffered such things?

3 I tell you, Nay: but [d]except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.[2]

4 Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were sinners[3] above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem?

5 I tell you, [e]Nay: but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

6 ¶ He spake also this parable: A certain man had [f]a fig-tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.

7 Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, [h]Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none: [i]cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?

8 And he answering said unto him, Lord, let[j] it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it:

9 And if it bear fruit, well: and if not, then after[k] that thou shalt cut it down.

1 These Galileans are by some supposed to have been the followers of Judas of Galilee (Ac. 5.37), who endeavoured to excite the Jews against the Romans, and to prevent the payment of tribute to Cæsar. To this supposition, however, the chronological objections seem insuperable. But that the Galileans were a most ungovernable and seditious people, and that they excited several insurrections, Josephus testifies; and to some well-known instance of their crime and their punishment our Lord here alludes.—C.

5 Whom Satan hath bound. Now critics and others have attributed this and similar expressions (as Ac. 10.38. 2 Co. 5.5. 2 Co. 12.7. 1 Ti. 1.20) to "the popular language of the Jews," by which "diseases and infirmities were attributed to Satan or the devil." Now if by "popular language" be meant language derived from the Old Testament, the popular book of the Jews, there can be no objection to the statement; but if by "popular language" is meant the language of vulgar ignorance, prejudice, or superstition, then is the statement to be altogether repudiated. It is the glory of the Jews that, in this case, their "popular language" was the language of truth, immediately derived from the revelation of God. Till this hour, and till the last enemy shall be destroyed, Satan "has the power of death" (He. 2.14), and consequently, as in the case of Job and his family (Job 1.12; 19.2, 6, 7; in some sense of reality, the power over all that produces it.—C.

heavenly Father whose kind providence extends to the meanest creature, and has prepared for us an everlasting kingdom. Surely this is worthy to be sought for as our principal treasure, and prepared for as our inexpressible happiness. Why should we set our hearts on worldly portions, which only procure envy and contention; or which, by their abundant increase, precipitate their owners into everlasting perdition? And it is base and shameful when ministers neglect their infinitely-important work, and perplex their minds, or waste their time, in civil affairs. Yea, the more light men sin against, the greater will be their punishment. Alas that, while Jesus Christ died to reconcile men to God, and to one another, men's lusts, passions, and prejudices should make his conciliating gospel an occasion of strife and confusion! But if we be persecuted for a prudent and disinterested adherence to truth, he will enable us to defend our conduct. How perversely men are set against the Saviour, when they hate and persecute their nearest relations for his sake! And many are very prudent with respect to temporal, and fools with respect to spiritual and eternal concerns. Sinners are in unceasing danger of falling into the hand of God's displeasure. And if, in their present day of grace, they do not, through faith, obtain reconciliation with him, unavoidable, unsupportable, and endless must be their ruin. Alas, who amongst us can abide with deep anguish, or dwell with everlasting remorse!

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1-9. The ruin of the Jewish nation, about forty years after Christ, was, like that of the Galileans and the Jews crushed by the tower of Siloam, most sudden and dreadful, chiefly occasioned by their attendance on their ceremonial services, and near to the temple.—The parable of the fig-tree imports, that notwithstanding their long-continued barrenness of good tempers and works, yet, by means of the intercession of Christ and his ministers, they should, for about forty years, enjoy a gospel dispensation, and afterwards be fearfully destroyed on account of their unfruitfulness and wickedness.

Ver. 24. And shall not be able. The reasons of this inability are:—(1) They 'seek' when they ought to 'strive.' (2) They seek at the wrong time—not when the Master (Christ) was sitting in intercession, but when he had risen up to judgment, He. 7.25; 10.12, 13. (3) They 'seek' in the wrong place, for they 'stand without,' Jn. 15.2, 6—that is, not in Christ's faith, name, and righteousness. (4) They seek upon the wrong plea—not that they had submitted to him and trusted in him, Ep. 1.12; He. 5.9—but merely that they had followed him in eating and drinking—that is, professed his gospel as far as it was pleasant and profitable, and belonged to a Christian land where he had taught in their streets; but affording, by their ignorance and presumption, a melancholy evidence that the Spirit of truth and holiness had not taught in their hearts, Jn. 14.26. C.

Ver. 32. That fox. According to modern ideas, the fox is the emblem of cunning, hypocrisy, and robbery; and, consequently, its application to Herod has been considered as a condemnatory allusion to his crooked and unrighteous policy. For this interpretation, however, the Scriptures furnish no foundation. The fox is mentioned in Scripture, (1) As employed by Samson, Ju. 15.4, to burn the corn of the Philistines. (2) As destroying the vines, Ca. 2.15. (3) As inhabiting desolate ruins, La. 5.18. (4) As burrowing in holes, Mat. 8.20. Out of these facts, therefore, and not from any modern ideas, must the meaning of the title be collected. A political firebrand to his kingdom; the destroyer of her agriculture and commerce; the desolater of her cities, and a houseless exile (all which things were literally true of this Herod), is, most probably, the scriptural interpretation of the message of our Lord—a message at once descriptive of the past, and prophetic of the future. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With great care should we guard against uncharitable censures of those whom God hath sorely afflicted, remembering that his strokes on them are warnings to us, and that nothing short of evangelical repentance can prevent our eternal ruin. Severe censures of others but prepare ourselves for unmixed wrath from God. He takes the most exact notice of every season and means of grace we enjoy, and of our unprofitableness under the same. The opportunities of his mercy and patience are often unexpectedly lengthened out through the mediation of his Son and the prayers of his ministers. And if he spare, ministers ought to be diligent. The most unfruitful sinners may be renewed and turned to God by the gospel: but the obstinate abuse of this will at last issue in men's just and inexpressible ruin. Cries for mercy will then become vain, hopes and pleas from external privileges will be defeated, and there will be none to intercede for the sinner. Let not therefore curious inquiries about the number of the saved, but earnest care about my own believing in Jesus Christ, be the labour of my soul. And to quicken my diligence, let me remember that few comparatively are saved: and to raise my admiration, and encourage my faith, let me think how often the most improbable in appearance are converted, while others choose to perish in their sins. And let me behold how ready Jesus was to instruct the ignorant, 20 ¶ And again he said, Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God?

21 It[h] is like leaven,[7] which a woman took and hid in three [i]measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

22 And[j] he went through the cities and villages, teaching, and journeying towards Jerusalem.[8]

23 ¶ Then said one unto him, Lord, [k]are there few[9] that be saved? And he said unto them, 24 [l]Strive[1] to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, [m]will seek to enter in, and shall not be able.

25 When[n] once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are:

26 Then shall ye begin to say, [o]We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets.

27 But[q] he shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.

28 There[r] shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out.

29 And[s] they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God.

30 And,[t] behold, there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last.

31 ¶ The same day there came certain of the Pharisees, saying unto him, [u]Get thee out, and depart hence: for Herod will kill thee.

32 And he said unto them, Go ye, and tell that [v]fox, Behold, [w]I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be [x]perfected.

33 Nevertheless, [y]I must walk to-day, and to-morrow, and the day following: [z]for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem.

34 O[a] Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; [b]how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and [c]ye would not!

35 Behold,[d] your house is left unto you desolate: and verily I say unto you, [e]Ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, [f]Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

CHAPTER XIV.

2 Christ healeth the dropsy on the sabbath: 7 teacheth humility: 12 to feast the poor: 15 under the parable of the great supper, showeth how worldly-minded men, who contemn the word of God, shall be shut out of heaven. 25 Those who will be his disciples, to bear their cross must make their accounts aforehand, lest with shame they revolt from him afterward, 34 and become altogether unprofitable, like salt that hath lost its savour.

AND it came to pass, [a]as he went into the house of one of the [b]chief Pharisees, to eat bread on the sabbath-day, that they [c]watched him.[1]

2 And, behold, there was a certain man before him, which had the dropsy.[2]

3 And Jesus answering spake unto [d]the lawyers and Pharisees, saying, [e]Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath-day?

4 And [g]they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go;

5 And answered them, saying, [h]Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the sabbath-day?

6 And[i] they could not answer him again to these things.

7 ¶ And he put forth a parable to those which were bidden, when he marked how [j]they chose out the chief rooms;[3] saying unto them,

8 When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, sit not[4] down in the highest room; lest a more honourable man than thou be bidden of him;

9 And he that bade thee and him come and say to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with shame to take the lowest room.

10 But[k] when thou art bidden, go and sit down[5] in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then shalt thou have worship[6] in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee.

11 For[l] whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

12 ¶ Then said he also to him that bade him, When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy [m]rich neighbours;[7] lest

But at once he reveals the fearful truth that many are lost—a revelation calculated to awaken salutary fear, and warn thoughtless sinners to "flee from the wrath to come"—while he turns away the mind of the questioner from profitless speculation about others, and fixes his attention upon the salvation of his own soul. C.

7 That our Lord does not mean to forbid hospitality among equals, is manifest from the case of Matthew (ch. 5. 29), and of the marriage in Cana (Jn. 2. 1). His object is merely to inculcate that the claims of charity to the poor are to take decided precedence of the exercise of hospitality to the rich: and that, if there are not means for both, hospitality, even to friends, must be laid aside, that charity to the poor may be more amply exercised. Note. The difficulty in expounding the commandment depends, in a great degree, on the translation. The word translated 'call' (ver. 12) signifies to "call, bid, or summon with a loud voice"—that is, ostentatiously: whereas the word translated 'call' (ver. 13) signifies merely to "invite [as in Jn. 2. 2] with gentleness or affection."—C.

alarm the careless, and heal the diseased. Indefatigable was he in his labours. Highly he regarded his Father's ordinances, and contemned the terrors of wicked men; and was even ready to die for his people. Carefully was he preserved by Providence till his hour came. And the most tremendous ruin has or will overtake his obstinate opposers. Yea, the greater our privileges abused, the greater the miseries we shall incur.

CHAPTER XIV. REFLECTIONS.—There is great need of divine instruction how to observe the weekly Sabbath, and how to connect works of necessity and mercy with acts of devotion. And at our meals, and every other season, our talk ought to turn upon the important points of religion, and tend to the glory of God. Nor should the presence of enemies, who watch for our halting, deter us from our duty. In their nature and tendency, how base is pride, and how valuable humility, both before God and men! And earthly honours and esteem are contemptible when compared with the honours of humble souls at the last day and in the eternal state. Luxurious feasting marks men's pride and sensuality, robs the poor, and abuses the bounty of God. But astonishing is the grace of God in preparing a feast, a gospel dispensation, and an eternal happiness, on the flesh and blood of his Son and the fulness of his promise; and in inviting and beseeching sinners, Gentile sinners, even the chief, to share thereof! And however many Jews or others, on the highest carnal pretences, reject it, multitudes, even of the most unlikely, shall come in, till Christ's church on earth and mansions in heaven be found. With great faithfulness and labour ought ministers to teach every man, and warn every man, and call every man, for this effect. For strict is the account they must give of their conduct and success. But redoubled misery, and tremendous exclusion from God's mercy, await those who refuse Christ. And if we would be interested in his blessings, he must have the highest preference in our heart above self and everything earthly. And practical religion must begin or

JEWISH WAILING PLACE. [Luke, xiii:35.]—Every Friday afternoon the Jews gather at this place, turn their faces to these big stones in the wall—which are supposed to be part of the very building material that entered into the structure of Solomon's temple—and bewail their fate. This is just outside of the wall that encloses the Mosque of Omar. Travelers passing this way during the hours devoted by the Jews to wailing are solicited to make contributions, which they usually do. One cannot help but observe in Jerusalem to-day the devotion of the Jews to their city. All the years of change and war and bloodshed and fire and persecution have not been able to destroy the affection which this ancient people of God have for their Holy City. They have been scattered over all the world, but continue to love Jerusalem, the city of the Great King.

they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee.

13 But when thou makest a feast, [e]call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind:

14 And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: [f]for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

15 ¶ And when one of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, he said unto him, Blessed[g] is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.[g]

16 Then[r] said he unto him, A certain man made a great supper, and bade many:

17 And[s] sent his servant at supper-time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready.

18 And [t]they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused.

19 And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused.

20 And another said, [u]I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come.

21 So that servant came, and showed his lord these things. Then the master of the house, [v]being angry, said to his servant, [w]Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the [x]poor, and the maimed, and the [y]halt, and the blind.

22 And the servant said, Lord, [z]it is done as thou hast commanded, [a]and yet there is room.

23 And the lord said unto the servant, [b]Go out into the highways and hedges, and [c]compel them to come in,[9] that my house may be filled.

24 For I say unto you, That [d]none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper.

25 ¶ And there went great multitudes with him: and he turned, and said unto them,

From these gross ideas, our Lord seeks to lead him, by showing him, that, whereas all men would willingly partake of a temporal feast his is a kingdom whose spiritual banquets are contemned, and whose tables nothing but divine compulsion can fill.—C.

such consideration and principles as will dispose us to endure everything for his sake. Dreadful and eternal shame shall cover those professors who are at last found empty and graceless. How valuable are the doctrines and graces of our Redeemer, when lodged in the heart and practised in the life! and what a preserving, purifying, and savoury blessing they render us to all around! But very pernicious are all errors; and unprofitable and hurtful now, and miserable hereafter, are loose, carnal, corrupt, careless, and erroneous ministers and professors of the true religion. O my soul, consider these things, and take heed that I never draw back unto perdition! And if I think I stand, let me take heed lest I fall.

CHAPTER XV.—The scope of all these parables is to represent the exceeding riches of God's grace to sinners, especially the Gentiles. The lost sheep brought back represents them as sought and restored to Christ, the chief Shepherd, to be saved by him; but stupidly wandering on in deserts of ignorance, idolatry, and other wickedness and misery, but followed after by a laborious and faithful dispensation of the gospel, apprehended by Christ's Spirit, and by his power and grace converted to God, instated in his promise, and made members of his church. The lost piece of silver recovered represents them as dear and precious in God's account, and wholly incapable of doing anything for their own relief; but, by means of shaking providences, the gospel dispensation, and conscience-convincing and heart-renewing influences, converted to Christ. The prodigal son reformed represents them as God's honoured creatures apostatizing from him, and perverting their natural powers and the blessings of Providence to the basest purposes of iniquity, till they had rendered themselves slaves and worshippers of Satan, wicked and miserable to the last degree; but at last, by strokes of affliction and convictions of conscience, encouraged by gospel invitations, made to apply to God for his free and full salvation—choosing him and received by him, clothed with the everlasting love of Christ, endowed with his Spirit and grace, as a pledge of their eternal inheritance; helped by gospel promises and influences to walk in God's ways; and feasted on the flesh, blood, and fulness of Christ, and made glad with the light of his countenance. The joy attending the recovery of the lost sheep, piece of silver, or prodigal son, imports that God is more glorified in the redemption of men than in the preservation of angels who never sinned—in the conversion of the Gentiles than in the preservation of the Jewish church—in the conversion of notorious sinners than of such as have been always civilized—and in the conversion of all ranks and degrees of sinners than in the pretended religion of self-righteous persons; and that he and his angels more rejoice therein. The elder son denotes the Jews, particularly the scribes and Pharisees, who took such offence at God's calling the Gentiles into his gospel church, and honouring them above themselves, who had long been his peculiar people, that they obstinately refused to embrace the gospel, and unite with them in one church. He may also represent all self-righteous professors, and even peevish believers, who take offence at God's vouchsafing his singular favours to persons converted from notorious wickedness.

Ver. 30. This thy son. Unkind man! He is 'thy father's son!' but is he not 'thy brother?'—Thy living! No! ungenerous accuser of thy erring brother! whatever he has wasted was his own, freely, but legally, conveyed to him by his father, ver. 12.—Note, How great the need of watchfulness! The world has its snares, but, alas! so has the closet. The one leads to forgetfulness of God, the other betrays to an overestimate of self, and an undervaluing of others. The Lord guard his sons from turning either to the right or left to do evil! C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the grace and condescension of Jesus Christ to the very chief of sinners, and base the heart that rages against his love. Alas! how bent are sinners to wander from God, and expose themselves to danger and ruin! Unable to recover themselves, they are plunged in, and covered with, wretchedness and guilt. Yet, madly prodigal, and haters of God's presence and government, they are puffed up with a self-conceit of their excellency and merit; and imagining all that they have their own, covetous of a present portion, and regardless of every-sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?

5 And when he hath found it, [d]he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing.

6 And when he cometh home, he calleth together his [e]friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost.

7 I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine [g]just persons, which need no repentance.[2]

8 ¶ Either what woman having ten pieces of silver,[3] if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and [h]seek diligently till she find it?

9 And[i] when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost.

10 Likewise, I say unto you, [j]there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

11 ¶ And he said, A certain man had two sons:[4]

12 And the younger of them said to his father, [k]Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. [l]And he divided unto them his living.

13 And not many days after, the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a [m]far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

14 And[o] when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want.

15 And he [p]went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to [q]feed swine.

16 And[q] he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat: and [r]no man gave unto him.[5]

17 And when [s]he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!

18 I[t] will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee,

19 And[u] am no more worthy to be called thy son: [v]make me as one of thy hired servants.

20 And he arose, and came to his father. [z]But when he was yet a great way off, [y]his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

21 And the son said unto him, Father, [a]I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son.

22 But the father said to his servants, Bring forth [a]the best robe, and put it on him; and put a [b]ring on his hand, and [c]shoes on his feet:

23 And bring hither the [d]fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry:[6]

24 For[e] this my son was [g]dead,[7] and is [h]alive again; he was [i]lost, and is found. [j]And they began to be merry.

25 Now[k] his elder son was in the field: and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard [l]music and dancing.[8]

26 And he called one of the servants, and asked what these things meant.

27 And he said unto him, [n]Thy brother is come; and [o]thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound.

28 And[p] he was angry, and would not go in: therefore came his father out, and entreated him.

29 And he answering said to his father, [q]Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment;[9] and [r]yet thou never gavest me a kid,[1] that I might make merry with my friends:

30 But[s] as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf.

31 And he said unto him, Son, [t]thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine.

32 It[u] was meet that we should make merry, [v]and be glad: for this [z]thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found.

1 The parable of the unjust steward. 14 Christ reproveth the hypocrisy of the covetous Pharisees. 19 The rich man, and Lazarus the beggar.

thing eternal, they apostatize more and more from God, and become slaves to their lusts, abhsing every gift of God to their service. Yea, though destitute of everything holy, honourable, or gladdening, they are quickly involved in disappointment, perplexity, and wretchedness, and exposed to everlasting destruction: yet still obstinately will they pursue every folly, however base or ruinous, rather than return to a gracious God! —Infinite is the love of God in seeking the lost and unconverted prodigals! Quicksighted is his mercy to espy our necessities and mark our cares and desires, and alert is he in hastening to our relief. Active and generous is he in drawing us to himself, embracing the polluted, pardoning our iniquity, accepting us in the Beloved, giving us his Spirit, renewing our nature, shedding abroad his love in our hearts, and supplying all our wants with his benefits.—What a change his grace makes! The most thoughtless consider their ways, and become wise unto salvation; the proud become humble; the lost are recovered to everything useful and glorious; and the dead in trespasses and sins are made alive to God and his service! What ground of inexpressible joy is this to saints, to ministers, to angels, to God himself! But detestable is it, from a principle of malice and self-conceit, to take offence at the freedom, extent, and universality of his grace; or to murmur at the happiness of sinners by means of it. Marvellous is it that God should court such froward transgressors with overtures of mercy! But woe, woe, woe, to their souls if they obstinately reject them!

CHAPTER XVI.—In the parable of the steward we are taught that God will call us to an account for our use of every temporal enjoyment; and that, by a Christian foresight of this, we ought so to improve our uncertain riches in acts of piety and charity, as that, when we die, God and his angels may conduct us, as faithful stewards, to everlasting mansions of happiness; and the saints, whom we had relieved, may honourably welcome us thither, as an answer to their prayers for us: and that, if we be not faithful in using the perishing enjoyments of this world, which God has merely committed to us as a trust, to be used for his glory and the good of others, we can have no proper evidence of our possessing the more excellent and substantial riches of true grace, which God gives men for their own, never to be taken from them.

In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus Christ teaches us that, let true saints be as poor and contemned as they may in this world, they shall have an honour-and the same was accused unto him that he had[b] wasted his goods.

2 And he called him, and said unto him, How[c] is it that I hear this of thee? [d]give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.[1]

3 Then the steward said within himself, What shall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: [e]I cannot dig; to beg I am ashamed.

4 I[g] am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses.

5 So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord?

6 And he said, An hundred measures[2] of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.

7 Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, An hundred measures[3] of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write fourscore.

8 And the lord commended the unjust [i]steward, because he had done [k]wisely: [l]for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than [j]the children of light.

9 And I say unto you, [k]Make to yourselves friends of the mammon[4] of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.[5]

10 He[l] that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much.

11 If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon,[6] who will commit to your trust the [m]true riches?

12 And if ye have not been faithful in [n]that which is another man's,[7] who shall give you that [p]which is your own?

13 No[q] servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. [r]Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

14 ¶ And the Pharisees also, [s]who were covetous, heard all these things: and they [t]derided him.

15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which [u]justify yourselves before men; but [v]God knoweth your hearts: [x]for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God.

16 The law and the prophets were until [y]John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it.

17 And[y] it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle[9] of the law to fail.

18 Whosoever[z] putteth away his wife,[1] and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery.

19 ¶ There[a] was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day:

20 And[b] there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, [c]full of sores,

21 And[d] desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover [e]the dogs came and licked his sores.[2]

22 And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and [g]was carried by the angels into Abraham's [s]bosom: [k]the rich man also died, and [t]was buried;

23 And[j] in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments, and [k]seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom.

24 And he cried and said, [l]Father Abraham, [n]have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that [o]he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame.

25 But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime [p]receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

26 And beside all this, between us and you there is a [q]great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; [r]neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence.

27 Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house:

28 For I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment.

29 Abraham saith unto him, [t]They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them.

5 The main point and lesson of this difficult parable is, the wisdom of worldly men in their own sphere, an example and incentive to Christians in their sphere. It is the far-seeing wisdom of the steward which is alone commended. The right or wrong of the act is not taken into account at all, but merely the object he had in view, and the end he accomplished. There is no commenting of dishonesty: but there is a lesson taught from an example of worldly prudence. The special lesson seems to be this:—We are all stewards of God, to whom belongs our worldly goods. These worldly goods are called 'Mammon of unrighteousness,' because the source of so much sin. We are to make ourselves friends by a right use of the means—charity to the deserving poor, support of the people and work of the Lord, so that when we die those godly ones whom we assisted on earth, and have gone before us to heaven, may receive and welcome us into their everlasting habitations.—P.

2 This is a most touching picture, and its painful truthfulness, often, alas! exemplified around us, makes it one of the most impressive of our Lord's parables. The rich man—his garment, regal; every meal, a banquet. The poor man—without a home, lying helpless at the gate, full of sores; his food, stray crumbs that had fallen from the table of others; his clothing, rags; his only companions and sympathizers, the street dogs. This is the earthly picture. Contrast it with the heavenly. Lazarus carried to heaven by angels, laid full of peace and joy in Abraham's bosom. The rich man buried—consigned to the rottenness and corruption of the sepulchre. His soul in torment; and there, in the agony of suffering, asking that the poor despised beggar might be sent with a drop of water to cool his tongue.—P.

able entrance into, and station in, heaven with him; and that rich men, who wallow in sensual pleasures here, shall, in the other world, fall into the most aggravated miseries; and that, however damned men may wish to prevent their partners in guilt coming thither to torment them, no means of conversion but the Scripture shall ever be allowed them.—Perhaps, too, he represented to these Pharisees that, however much they now contemned him in his poor and debased estate, he should quickly be exalted to glory; and they who now rioted in wealth and honour be thrust down into hell, and the generality of their nation be reduced, for many ages, to the most deplorable and unpitied wretchedness on earth, in which they should earnestly wish for the now contemned appearances of the Messiah, but they should be utterly denied them.

Ver. 6. Measures of oil. Measures called baths in the Old Testament, 1 Ki. 7. 26. According to Godwin, the bath held four gallons and a half. Some think nine gallons and three quarts. —Take thy bill, &c. Hence it would appear that at least one evidence of an account was, not as in modern times, the name of the debtor attached to the bill, but the account itself being in his current handwriting. And if this bill, as some suppose, was a lease for a term of years, securing payment in produce, and of which the superior held a copy in the tenant's handwriting, and the tenant a copy in the steward's, then the obligation of the tenant to the steward must have been increased, because the iniquitous benefit was to continue for years. C.

Ver. 7. Measures of wheat. Measures, or cors, the same as the homer, Eze. 45. 14. Godwin calculates this measure at five bushels and five gallons; others, at fourteen bushels and two quarts. C.

Ver. 9. Make to yourselves friends. How? By repenting of your sins, whether in coveting, getting, loving, holding, or expending (see ver. 13, 14), whereby there will be 'joy in heaven, in presence of the angels of God' (ch. 15. 7, 10), by whom, 'when ye fail, ye shall be received into everlasting habitations.' See ver. 32.—Mammon of unrighteousness. The 'unrighteous mammon' (ver. 11) being opposed to 'true riches,' and to 'everlasting habitations,' ver. 9, the conclusion seems probable that it should be translated 'mammon of deceitfulness,' or 'deceitful riches' (see Mat. 13. 22), either because they are often deceitfully acquired, deceitfully expended, or that they deceitfully 'make to themselves wings and flee away.' C.

Ver. 19. This appears to be a narrative of facts, and not a parable, else why is the very name of the beggar, 'Lazarus,' introduced, ver. 20? Lazarus signifies 'the help of God.' C.

Ver. 21. Crumbs. Whether the rich man gave or denied the crumbs, does not appear; one thing is certain, the beggar (rather, 'the destitute man') expected no better; and how unfit this food of dogs (Mat. 15. 27) was for such a patient, it requires not medical skill, but humanity, to discover. The rich man was, therefore, deeply culpable, even though he granted the crumbs, for he could have afforded better, and rich and generous diet was essential to the comfort, or, humanly speaking, to the recovery of the miserable sufferer. C.

Ver. 22. Abraham's bosom, being interpreted as a figure for heaven, is supposed to establish the parabolic character of the narrative. But without having recourse to the Hebrew method of naming places, it is sufficient to remark, that until we know more of heaven, it behoves us to use much caution as to what we

30 And he said, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Christ teacheth to avoid occasions of offence: 3 one to forgive another. 5 The power of faith. 7 How we are bound to God, and not he to us. 11 He healeth ten lepers. 20 Of the kingdom of God, and the coming of the Son of man.

THEN said he unto the disciples, [a]It is impossible[1] but that offences will come: but woe unto him through whom they come!

2 It[b] were better for him that a millstone[2] were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones.

3 ¶ Take[c] heed to yourselves: If thy brother trespass[3] against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him.

4 And[d] if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him.

5 ¶ And the apostles said unto the Lord, Increase[e] our faith.

6 And[f] the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamine-tree,[4] Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you.

7 But which of you, having a servant[5] plowing, or feeding cattle, will say unto him by and by, when he is come from the field, Go, and sit down to meat?[6]

8 And will not rather say unto him, Make ready wherewith I may sup, [h]and gird thyself, and serve me, till I have eaten and drunken; and afterward thou shalt eat and drink?

9 Doth he thank that servant because he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not.

10 So likewise ye, [i]when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, as he went to Jerusalem, that he [j]passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee.[7]

12 And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood [k]afar off:[8]

13 And they lifted up their voices, and said, [l]Jesus, Master, have mercy on us.

14 And when he saw them, he said unto them, [m]Go show yourselves unto the priests. And[n] it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed.[9]

15 And [o]one of them, [p]when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God,

16 And [q]fell down on his face at his feet, giving him thanks: and he was a [r]Samaritan.

17 And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? [s]but where are the nine?

18 There[u] are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger.

19 And he said unto him, [v]Arise, go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole.

20 ¶ And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation:[1]

21 Neither shall they say, [z]Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is [y]within you.[2]

22 ¶ And he said unto the disciples, [a]The days will come, when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and ye shall not see it.

23 And[a] they shall say to you, See here; or, see there: go not after them, nor follow them.

24 For[b] as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so shall also the Son of man be [c]in his day.

25 But [d]first must he suffer many things, and be rejected of this generation.[3]

[6] The object of this parable is to illustrate the necessity and extent of Christian duty. God is our Master. As our Creator, Preserver, and Benefactor, we are bound to serve him; as our Redeemer, we are bound by even a deeper and holier obligation. Everything we can do, we are bound to do. There is no merit in it, for it is only the discharge of a duty. Considering the relation in which we stand to God, our service ought not merely to be one of duty, but of love.—P.

pronounce figurative, and what literal, in its constitution. That, however, there is a spiritual kindred and genealogy in heaven, different from natural kindred and genealogy on earth, appears unquestionable (see 1 Co. 4. 15; 1 Th. 2. 19), and that this may present a specimen of it, it is neither wise to deny nor affirm. The Lord knoweth: and secret things belong to the Lord. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Whatever things we enjoy in this world are but a trust committed to us by God to do good with. We cannot long hold them; but quickly, in an hour we think not, our reckoning for them must come. O that we may then be found faithful! It is self-contradicting and absurd to pursue earthly riches with more earnestness and industry than eternal treasures, and dangerous to neglect a single opportunity or advantage in favour of everlasting happiness. It is necessary to watch against all unfaithfulness and injustice in worldly enjoyments, which so many make instruments of unrighteousness. Lesser sins lead to greater, and pride and laziness often plunge men into the vilest dishonesty. The abuse of less important trusts provokes God to withhold what is more excellent. And as none can serve both God and the world, it is wise to prefer God in due time. But proud covetous hypocrites, enslaved by their own lusts, hate and scoff at instruction.—What is most esteemed and desired by men is generally abominable before God. His gospel dispensation does not make void, but establish the law. And blessed be God that both Jews and Gentiles have with earnestness crowded into the New-Testament church. Happy are the poorest of its true members: their adversities will quickly issue in everlasting honour and unutterable delight. God lightly values the wealth and honour of this world, which often absorbs the attention and claims the time of even those who profess Christ. Awful thought! to have only uncertain and unsatisfying enjoyments, which shall quickly issue in insupportable and everlasting emptiness! Inexpressibly different, and irreversibly fixed, is the future state of both saints and sinners. How delightful is it for the one to review his conversion to, and walking with, Christ; and how dreadful for the other to remember in what an absurd manner he lost his soul for the sake of sensual or carnal trifles! And terrible companions will they make in hell who had been partners in sin upon earth. With great diligence should we now earnestly search, believe, and practise God's Word; for, if it be neglected, no other means of salvation will ever be afforded us.

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 20, 21. The kingdom of the Messiah will not be erected by temporal authority or force, nor make any pompous appearance in temporal riches or grandeur. Nor will he confine his throne and court to any particular place or nation; but his kingdom, being spiritual in its nature, power, and tendency, suited to the benefit of the soul, and for another world, works inwardly in men's hearts and consciences; and is already begun in the preaching of the gospel and conversion of some among you.

Ver. 5. Note [1]. The petition for increase of faith plainly intimates the belief of the apostles that our Lord possessed power over the spirits as well as over the bodies of men. [2] Our Lord's reply proceeds upon the principle that it is our duty more to use what measure of faith we have, than to desire or pray for any increase. (3) That the least amount of living faith is, from its nature, an increasing faith, and is, at all times, equal to whatever work the believer has to do, or whatever trial he has to endure. C.

Ver. 19. Thy faith hath made thee whole. Had not faith then made the nine whole? It appears questionable whether the nine really believed, or whether they superstitiously sought a cure: yet the Lord cleansed them all—even as he fed all Israel in the wilderness, though few of them regarded the work of his hands. What advantage, then, had the tenth that the nine had not? All were healed in body—he, through faith, was healed in body and spirit. C.

Ver. 22. One of the days of the Son of man. Days of such quiet, peace, and opportunity as ye now enjoy, of instructing the ignorant in the knowledge of Jesus; days of his power to cast out devils and do other wonderful works, such as ye have so often witnessed; and, finally, days of his power to destroy all the works of the devil, all which things being sorely afflicted in the world ye shall earnestly desire for your own and the world's deliverance, but shall not see. By which delay he will try your faith and that of his whole church, till the 'set time' shall come, when he 'will take to himself his mighty power and reign.' C.

Ver. 32. She was killed by the sulphureous vapour, and lost by a single look backward!—Note, If those who are commanded to flee, and who are, moreover, angel-led, be so endangered, what is the danger of those 'who have put their hand to the plough,' if they should 'look back'? C.

Ver. 37. Eagles—generally taken to represent the Roman armies, whose standards were eagles. But the origin of the emblem seems rather to be Eze. 17. 3, 7, where Babylon and Egypt are both represented as eagles, into whose nests came the Roman empire, and whose armorial bearing and device, as it were, they possess, together with their persecuting and enslaving spirit. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! that so many offences and injuries should be found among professed Christians! Many are grieved, stumbled, and eternally ruined by means of them. And tremendous woes must fall on their heads whose corrupt principles or practices occasion such things. How prone are most to offend God, and cause their neighbour to stumble out of his way! Yet most offenders are very averse to repent, and, if offended, to forgive injuries. Yea, it is impossible to perform self-denying duties without strong faith; and great is the need that Jesus should be daily increasing it. With great humility ought we to perform every commanded duty, and with great gratitude to receive distinguished mercies. And yet often both are wanting where they might have been most, and found where they could have been least expected. How many amuse themselves about the circumstances of Jesus' kingdom, instead of earnestly receiving him into their heart, that he may subdue their lusts and govern their spirits! But the erection of his spiritual kingdom in the world is generally attended with some fearful judgments on its opposers. Self-indulgence in sensual gratifications is a common forerunner of fearful and sudden destruction. And none are more certainly exposed than hardened apostates who refuse to take warning from the calamities of others before them. But if men will not heartily part with the world as their portion, they must perish with it.—In great wisdom and mercy the spread of God's anger among the obstinate Jews was made a mean of spreading the gospel among and of saving the Gentiles. Fearfully he resents the injuries done to his faithful servants, and pities and rewards them that suffer for his sake. Yea, marvellously he distinguishes them in his protections here and his eternal glories hereafter.

CHAPTER XVIII. Ver. 35. Luke and Mark mention but one blind man; Matthew (ch. 20. 30) describes two. This variety, however, presents no contradiction. Matthew records the fact of two blind men having been cured; Luke, writing at a time when it is most probable only one of them survived, mentions but that one; and Mark (ch. 10. 46) mentions one by name as authentic and living evidence of the miracle he narrates. The apparent contradiction lies in the assertion of Matthew (ch. 20. 29) that the miracle took place 'as they (Jesus and his disciples) departed from Jericho,' and of Mark (ch. 10. 46), that it occurred 'as he (Jesus) went out of Jericho,' while Luke assigns it to the time 'when he (Jesus) was come nigh unto Jericho.' The attempt to reconcile these contradictions by changing the translation 'when he was come nigh' to 'when he was nigh' seems utterly unsupported by any sufficient authority. The reconciliation must therefore be sought far from another source, and that source is opened in a modern example. London, as a general geographical name, includes Westminster, Southwark, &c. &c. One historian accordingly, in speaking of a public occurrence, affirms it took place 'as some one departed from London,' though, in another geographical sense, he really departed from Westminster. Another, relating the same event, affirms it occurred as the party described 'was come nigh to London,' meaning thereby, not London inclusive of Westminster, &c., but London as specially commencing at Temple-bar. Now, is there any contradiction here? None whatever. Why then are the Scriptures condemned where a secular historian is acquitted? Besides, Jericho consisted of an old and a new town, as Josephus records. Our Lord therefore may have performed his miracle as he 'departed' from Jericho, the one town, and as he 'was come nigh' to Jericho, the other. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The fervent and importunate prayer of faith is always effectual at last. A gracious answer cannot be delayed beyond the best time. And all the injuries done to the saints shall be fearfully resented, though God often patiently delays his justice till religion be almost utterly extirpated. What a mixture is in our worshipping assemblies on earth! Different tempers, manners, and ends have different effects on the very same duty. Pride, formality, and hypocrisy indulged, render men's persons and worship detestable to God. But not the greatest sinner, who humbly asks mercy through Jesus' righteousness, shall be denied a full justification unto eternal life. It is criminal for professors to withhold children from Christ, who delights to bless them. And very honourable to be like them in teachableness and humility.—No external privileges or duties are in the least to be rested in. Men may go inconceivable lengths in apparent holiness, and yet their hearts remain unrenewed and attached to the world. Awful is the state when God's law does not convince men that they need a better righteousness than their own to justify them! and when love to Christ cannot wean their hearts from the world. Earthly enjoyments indeed often entangle and ensnare men to their everlasting ruin. And there is need of almighty power to deliver us from a carnal mind, and to make us content to forego all for Christ. But everything suffered for his sake, from principles of faith and love, will be gain at last. And nothing is too much to suffer for him, who suffered so much for us. Yet, alas! how slow of heart are men to conceive aright of his sufferings and glory! It is a great mercy to be awakened to prayer by curiosity or any means. Jesus is ready to take notice of, and grant relief under, all our troubles. And a deep sense of sin and earnest desires of mercy will quickly issue in grateful praise and holy obedience.

CHAPTER XIX. Ver. 3. And he sought to see Jesus who he was. Rather, 'what kind of person he was.' It is a fact that we scarce can hear or think of any remarkable person without forming in our minds an imaginary likeness of him, or desiring to know his bodily appearance. On this point the Scriptures afford not the least shadow of information. Of stature, of complexion, of expression, of voice, of manner, they breathe not a word, either for the painter or historian. His moral portrait they draw at full length, but of his bodily appearance believers shall know nothing till 'they see him as he is,' and themselves be 'fashioned into the image of his glorious body.' Yet as the desire of Zaccheus to see 'what kind of person Jesus was' on earth brought salvation to his house, so the desire to 'see him as he is' in heaven still continues to bring salvation to the souls of believers and their children, Phi. 3.21; 1 Jn. 3.2. C.

Ver. 23. At my coming. The object of the parable was to correct the fond imagination of the immediate restoration of the kingdom of David in Jerusalem (see ver. 11); wherefore our Lord represents its restoration by a candidate for a kingdom—not taking immediate possession, but going into a 'far country,' and followed by the opposition of his citizens: then finally returning after a successful solicitation, and adjudging—not to servants sustained and stimulated by his presence, but to servants tried and confirmed during his absence—their several rewards, according to their works, Mat. 16. 27. C.

Ver. 40. It is spiritually as impossible for these to be silent as for the stones naturally to speak.—Note, There is a spiritual necessity, perfectly consistent with the freedom of an accountable agent, which yet is absolutely certain in its results, because it is dependent upon the very nature of God and of man—his intellectual and moral image; whereas all that is called a physical necessity, being dependent upon the mere will of God, and the relations he has established between unintelligent and unaccountable agents, may be superseded in a moment, and give place to a new order of things, the very reverse of that which preceded it. See 2 Co. 13. 4, 5: 2 Pe. 3. 7, 11, 13. C.

Ver. 43. Cast a trench. Rather, 'a rampart,' which, it would appear, from the exact meaning of the original, was supported by a strong paling, or stockade, in front. This prophecy was literally fulfilled by Titus, who, finding it impossible to take the

THE DEAD SEA—WHERE ONCE STOOD THE CITIES OF SODOM AND GOMORRAH. [Luke, xvii:29.]—"But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all." The part of the Dead Sea upon which we look, which is the northern inlet of it, is supposed to occupy the place upon which once stood the celebrated cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. Part of the sites of these cities is under the sea and part on the shore. The mountains we see in the distance are the mountains of Judea. We are looking toward the west. To the east of us are the mountains of Moab. Sodom and Gomorrah once stood between the mountains of Judea and the mountains of Moab. The photograph you see was taken just a little after sunrise. will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me.

6 And the Lord said, [a]Hear what the unjust judge saith.

7 And[g] shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, [b]though he bear long with them?[5]

8 I tell you that [h]he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless, when[6] the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?[7]

9 ¶ And he spake this parable unto certain which [c]trusted in themselves that they were righteous,[8] and despised others:

10 Two men went up into the temple to pray; the[j] one a Pharisee,[9] and the other a publican.

11 The[k] Pharisee stood[1] and prayed thus with himself: God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican:

12 I fast[2] twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess.

13 And[3] the publican, [d]standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful[4] to me a sinner.

14 I tell you, this man went down to his house [e]justified[5] rather than the other: [f]for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

15 ¶ And [g]they brought unto him also infants,[6] that he would touch them: but when his disciples saw it, [h]they rebuked them.

16 But[r] Jesus called them unto him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.

17 Verily[s] I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein.

18 ¶ And[t] a certain ruler asked him, saying, Good Master,[7] what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

19 And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? [u]none is good, save one, that is, God.

20 Thou[v] knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother.

21 And he said, [w]All these have I kept from my youth up.

22 Now when Jesus heard these things, he said unto him, [x]Yet lackest thou one thing: sell[8] all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, follow me.

[t] Shall he find faith on the earth? When he cometh to avenge his elect 'speedily,' will he find faith in the land of Israel? for the word translated 'earth' in such circumstances generally signifies. A question fully illustrated by the fact, that comparatively few of the Jews believed, even when our Lord had risen from the dead, and these few were scattered abroad by the persecutions of Herod and the Pharisees (Ac. 7. 52. 8. 1. 12. 1. 2), so that when the Lord came to 'avenge his elect,' whose voice and whose blood cried to him day and night, there were but few believers in the land of Judea, and his apostles had been directed by the Spirit and providence of God to turn to the Gentiles.—C.

That is, though he bear long with their cries, tears, and anxieties, before answering their petitions, and with the cruelties, oppressions, and persecutions of their enemies before he inflicts his judgments. It was thus he bore long both with Egypt and Israel before he punished the one and heard and delivered the other.—C.

23 And when he heard this, he [g]was very sorrowful: for he was very rich.

24 ¶ And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, he said, [h]How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

25 For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they that heard it said, [i]Who then can be saved?

REFLECTIONS.—In religion it is necessary for men to hear and see for themselves. And even curiosity may issue in saving faith and repentance. Christ ever seeks to save men wherever they are; and in rich mercy he seeks them out, and touches their hearts, however hard: and his spirit and grace, accepted therein, quickly makes great reformation. The covetous, cruel, and haughty oppressor is rendered humble, honest, and merciful; and the power of grace is clearly discovered by deadness to the world, and by the affections being weaned from its pursuits. But pardon ought never to be expected without restitution of ow

THE PLAIN OF JERICHO—OVER WHICH MOSES LOOKED FROM NEBO INTO THE PROMISED LAND. [Luke, xix:1.]—"And Jesus entered and passed through Jericho. And, behold, there was a man named Zacchæus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich." The view we behold was taken at the foot of the Judean hills and furnishes us the opportunity of looking over the whole plain of the Jordan between the mountains of Judea and the mountains of Moab, which we see rising in the distance. At the foot of the mountains in the far distance flows the River Jordan. The little village to the left of the picture is Jericho, and the plain lying before us is perhaps the most historic portion of the world. Over this plain Moses looked from Nebo into the promised land.

43 And[t] immediately he received his sight, and followed him, [u]glorifying God: and all the people, when they saw it, gave praise unto God.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Christ visiteth Zaccheus the publican. 11 The ten pieces of money. 28 Christ rideth into Jerusalem with triumph: 41 weepeth over it: 45 driveth the buyers and sellers out of the temple: 47 teaching daily in it. The rulers would have destroyed him, but for fear of the people.

AND Jesus entered and passed through [a]Jericho.

2 And, behold, there was a man named Zaccheus, [b]which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich.[1]

3 And he [c]sought to see Jesus, who he was; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature.

4 And he ran before, and climbed up into a[d] sycamore-tree to see him: for he was to pass that way.

5 And when Jesus came to the place, he looked[e] up, and saw him, and said unto him, Zaccheus, [f]make haste, and come down; for today [g]I must abide at thy house.

6 And[h] he made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully.

7 And when they saw it, [i]they all murmured, saying, That he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner.

8 And[k] Zaccheus stood, and said unto the Lord, Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor: and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold.[2]

9 And Jesus said unto him, This day is [l]salvation come to this house, forsomuch as he also is[m] a son of Abraham.[3]

10 For[n] the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.

11 ¶ And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable,[4] because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because [p]they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear.

12 He[q] said therefore, A certain nobleman went into [r]a far country, [s]to receive for himself a kingdom,[5] and [t]to return.

13 And he called his ten servants, and [u]delivered them ten pounds,[6] and said unto them, Occupy till I come.

14 But his citizens[7] hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us.

15 And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, [v]then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money,[8] that he might know how much every man had gained by trading.

16 Then came the first, saying, Lord, [w]thy pound hath gained ten pounds.

17 And he said unto him, [x]Well, thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities.

18 And the second came, saying, Lord, [y]thy pound hath gained five pounds.

19 And he said likewise to him, [z]Be thou also over five cities.

20 And another came, saying, [a]Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin:

21 For I [b]feared thee, [c]because thou art an austere man: thou takest up that thou layedst not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow.

22 And he saith unto him, [d]Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. Thou knewest[9] that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow:

23 Wherefore[e] then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with usury?

24 And he said unto them that stood by, [f]Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.

25 (And they said unto him, Lord, [g]he hath ten pounds.)[1]

26 For I say unto you, [h]That unto every one which hath shall be given; [i]and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him.

27 But[l] those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

28 ¶ And when he had thus spoken, [m]he went before, ascending up to Jerusalem.[3]

29 And[n] it came to pass, when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the mount of Olives, he sent two of his disciples,[4]

30 Saying, Go ye into the village over against you; in the which, at your entering, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat: loose him, and bring him hither.

31 And if any man ask you, Why do ye loose him? thus shall ye say unto him, Because [o]the Lord hath need of him.

32 And they that were sent went their way, and found even as he had said unto them.

[1] The parable is probably an allusion to the well-known history of Herod, on his son Archelaus. Herod went to Rome to obtain the investiture of the kingdom of Judea from Antony. Having succeeded, he afterwards took a voyage to Rhodes to obtain a confirmation from Cæsar. Archelaus, his son and successor, made a similar journey, with the same object, and, to a certain extent, with similar success.—C.

ill-gotten goods. Yea, everything we have ought to be at Jesus' call; and it is better to give to pious uses while we live than defer it to be given after our death. —His free grace is sufficient both to seek and save us, be our guilt or malady what it will. And abundant are the gifts and privileges which Jesus hath given to the ministers and members of his gospel church. His exaltation to glory issues in blessings to men. But all that is received must be improved and accounted for. Happy are they who, with deep humility and dependence on Christ, improve it well; and infinitely glorious, as well as free, their eternal reward. But fearful is their punishment who, through hard thoughts of God, abandon themselves to sinful inactivity. Nowhere is sloth more criminal and ruinous than in the church of God. If men will not improve God's gifts, they must be deprived of them. And if Jews and others dare to reject an ascended Redeemer, they must be destroyed in the most public and fearful manner. Dreadful indeed is their condition whom even his compassion cannot deliver. It is strange that any should envy him a lowly triumph; that professors should hate him for purifying his temple, instructing the ignorant, and healing the diseased; and that nought

MOUNT OF OLIVES, FROM JERICHO ROAD. [LUKE, xix:37.] Our Savior always had to pass over the Mount of Olives in going from Jerusalém to Bethany. While coming down this mountain the whole multitude of the disciples met Christ and began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice for all the mighty works that they had seen, saying, "Blessed be the king that cometh in the name of the Lord. Peace in heaven and glory in the highest." The supreme interest of the road from Jericho is that it was trod by our blessed Lord when He came up to Jerusalem for the last time, passing the Mount of Olives, at the base of which he was to bow in anguish, and from whose eastern slope He was to ascend to heaven. There is infinite fascination for tempted mortals about this lonely mount to-day.

33 And as they were loosing the colt, the owners thereof said unto them, Why loose ye the colt?

34 And they said, The Lord [p]hath need of him.

35 And they brought him to Jesus: and they[q] cast their garments upon the colt, and they [r]set Jesus thereon.

36 And as he went, they spread their clothes in the way.

37 And when he was come nigh, even now at the descent of the [s]mount of Olives, [t]the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice, for all the mighty works that they had seen;

38 Saying, [u]Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord; peace in heaven, and glory in the highest.

39 And[r] some of the Pharisees from among the multitude said unto him, Master, rebuke thy disciples.

40 And he answered and said unto them, I tell you, that, if these should hold their peace, the[w] stones would immediately cry out.

41 ¶ And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and [v]wept over it,[6]

42 Saying, [z]If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in [a]this thy day, [b]the things which belong unto thy peace! but now [c]they are hid[7] from thine eyes.

43 For[8] the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side,

44 And shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone[9] upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation.[1]

45 ¶ And[d] he went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought;

46 Saying unto them, It is written, [e]My house is the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves.

47 ¶ And[g] he taught daily in the temple. But the chief priests and the scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy him,

48 And could not find what they might do: for all the people were very attentive to hear him.[2]

b Christ taught the gospel, and preached the gospel. In modern times there have arisen professed ministers of the gospel, who intermeddle the ordinance of preaching, and place the efficacy of religion chiefly in baptism, the Lord's Supper, fasting and prayer. Without once unreverencing any of these ordinances of God, let the teaching and preaching of the Lord furnish a rebuke to all such imaginations, which impiously undervalue what Jesus practised, as the chief means of convincing and converting sinners, and of building up believers through faith, unto salvation. —C.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Christ avoucheth his authority by a question of John's baptism. 9 The parable of the vineyard. 19 Of giving tribute to Cæsar. 27 He confuteth the Sadducees concerning the resurrection. 41 How Christ is the son of David. 45 He warneth his disciples to beware of the scribes.

AND [a]it came to pass, that on one of those days, as he taught the people in the temple, and preached the [b]gospel, [b]the chief priests and the scribes came upon him, with the elders,

2 And spake unto him, saying, Tell us, [c]by what authority doest thou these things? or who is he that gave thee this authority?

3 And he answered and said unto them, [d]I will also ask you one thing; and answer me:

4 The[e] baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?

5 And they reasoned with themselves, [g]saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then believed ye him not?

6 But and if we say, Of men; [h]all the people will stone us: [i]for they be persuaded that John was a prophet.

7 And they answered, [j]that they could not tell whence it was.

8 And Jesus said unto them, [k]Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.[2]

9 ¶ Then began he to speak to the people this parable: [l]A certain man planted a vineyard, and let it forth to [m]husbandmen, and went into [o]a far country for a long time.

10 And at the season, he [p]sent a servant to the husbandmen, that they should give him of the [q]fruit of the vineyard; [r]but the husbandmen beat him, and sent him away empty.

11 And again he sent another servant: and they beat him also, and entreated him shamefully, and sent him away empty.

12 And again he sent a third: and they wounded him also, and cast him out.

13 Then said the lord of the vineyard, What shall I do? [s]I will send my beloved son: it may be they will reverence him, when they see him.

14 But when the husbandmen saw him, they reasoned among themselves, saying, This is [t]the heir: come, [u]let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours.

15 So they cast him out of the vineyard, and killed him. [v]What therefore shall the lord of the vineyard do unto them?

16 He[w] shall come and destroy these husbandmen, and shall give the vineyard to others. And when they heard it, they said, God [x]forbid.

but the fear of inferiors should hinder some from murdering the divine Saviour or persecuting his people!

CHAPTER XX. REFLECTIONS.—Fear of men may restrain persecutors from murdering, but not from cavilling. Satan and his emissaries will always oppose Christ and his gospel, and his spiritual headship over his church, to their utmost. And it is but lost labour to attempt persuading such as are resolved to shut their eyes against all conviction, and who will take the most base and false evasions to avoid it. Surprising is the patience and mercy of God, that so long affords unfruitful and rebellious sinners such means of grace which they spurn and reject. But dreadful will be their condition at last, when all the injuries they had done to Jesus and his ministers shall come back upon them, and he shall glorify his power in spite of all their sinful opposition. Faithful ministers have great need to be always on their guard against deceitful brethren. Pretences to piety, and of regard to civil rulers, and cavils of carnal reasoning, will be all tried to ensnare or expose them. But let us at once fear God and honour the king, and hold fast plain Scripture truths, in the well-grounded hope of a glorious resurrection. It is necessary that we believe God's truths with all our heart, but not that we should be able to answer every wicked cavil against them. And in the faith and contemplation of Christ as God-man in one person, let us hate hypocrisy and avoid hypocrites.

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 11. By fearful sights and great signs from heaven, cannot be intended, as some suppose, the comet hanging over the city like a flaming sword, and other aerial appearances mentioned by Josephus (Bell. Jud. vii. 12), for God had expressly forbidden any regard to these things, Je. 10. 2. Nor can any natural or even supernatural wonder become 17 And he beheld them, and said, What is this then that is written, [y]The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner?

18 Whosoever[z] shall fall upon that stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

19 ¶ And[a] the chief priests and the scribes the same hour sought to lay hands on him; and they feared the people: for they perceived that he had spoken this parable against them.

20 And[b] they watched him, and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of his words, that so [c]they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor.

21 And they asked him, saying, [d]Master, we know that thou [e]sayest and teachest rightly, neither acceptest thou the person[4] of any, but teachest the way of God truly:[5]

22 Is[g] it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cæsar, or no?

23 But [h]he perceived their craftiness, and said unto them, Why [i]tempt ye me?

24 Show me a [j]penny. Whose image and superscription hath it? They answered and said, [k]Cæsar's.

25 And he said unto them, [l]Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and unto God the things which be God's.

26 And they could not take hold of his words before the people: and they [m]marvelled at his answer, and held their peace.

27 ¶ Then[o] came to him certain of the Sadducees, which deny that there is any resurrection; and they asked him,

28 Saying, Master, Moses[6] wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

29 There were therefore seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and died without children.

30 And the second took her to wife, and he died childless.

31 And the third took her; and in like manner the seven also: and they left no children, and died.

[6] There are several points of difference between our Lord's reply, as recorded in Mat. 22. 23, and in this passage; all, however, may upon the following principles be accounted for in perfect consistence with the doctrine of real divine inspiration: (1) One evangelist might omit what another, directed by the same Spirit, might insert—the one record being thus rendered the most valuable commentary upon the other. (2) As our Lord most probably spake in the Hebrew or Syro-Phœnician tongue, the same Spirit actuating both writers, might yet, for the purposes of exposition, direct the one to a translation into Greek, differing from that of the other. (3) Our Lord, discoursing to a people dark of understanding, and slow of heart to believe, might, for the sake of impression, repeat some parts of his doctrine in new terms, and thus furnish an opportunity for an amanuensis, faithfully copying the exact words of his speech, to differ from another who was equally exact, who had copied a varied, but equally original, version of the same ideas.—C.

[8] Ver. 35 and 36 are not found in the other Gospels, and contain some things worthy of special note. 'The children of this world marry'—they must do so; it is one of those great laws necessary to the happiness and to the very existence of mankind. But after the resurrection marriage will be no longer necessary, either to secure the happiness or the continuance of the race: for (1) there will be no death; and (2) the children of the resurrection will be the companions of angels and 'children of God.' They will be partakers of the divine nature, being partakers of the divine life and love.—C.

[9] Nothing offended the Pharisees more than our Lord's assertion of his deity (see Jn. 10. 30, 31, 36, 38) on the ground of his miraculous works. Here he, therefore, asserts it on the ground of Scripture; for if he were David's LORD, how could he possibly be David's SON? This difficulty, this contradiction in terms, can be solved upon no principle but one—'the WORD was God,' and 'the WORD became flesh.' As God, he was David's Lord; as man, he was David's son, Re. 22. 16.—C.

33 Therefore in the resurrection whose wife of them is she? for seven had her to wife.

34 And Jesus answering said unto them, [p]The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage:

35 But they which [q]shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage:

36 Neither[r] can they die any more:[7] for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the [8]resurrection.

37 Now that the dead are raised, [s]even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.

38 For[t] he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him.

39 Then certain of the scribes answering said, Master, thou hast well said.

40 And after that [u]they durst not ask him any question at all.

41 ¶ And he said unto them, [v]How say they that Christ is David's son?

42 And David himself saith in the book of Psalms, [w]The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, 43 Till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

44 David therefore calleth him Lord; [x]how is he then his son?[9]

45 ¶ Then [y]in the audience of all the people he said unto his disciples,

46 Beware[a] of the scribes, which desire to walk in long robes, and love greetings in the markets, and the highest seats in the synagogues, and the chief rooms at feasts;

47 Which[b] devour widows' houses, and for a show make long prayers: [c]the same shall receive greater damnation.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Christ commendeth the poor widow. 5 He foretelleth the destruction of the temple, and of the city Jerusalem: 25 the signs also which shall be before the last day. 34 He exhorteth them to be watchful.

AND he looked up, [a]and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury.

2 And he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites.[1] a true sign to a rational being, without accurate prophetic description going before, or prophetic interpretation at the time of its appearance, without which every attention given to portents and omens is neither more nor less than superstition; and both these essentials are totally wanting in the cases related by Josephus. The really 'fearful sights' were the factious murders amongst the Jews themselves; and the 'great signs from heaven' were the Roman armies encompassing Jerusalem, ver. 20; 'the abomination that maketh desolate standing in the holy place,' as described by the prophet Daniel, and repeated by our Lord himself. C.

Ver. 17. Never was any religion introduced to the world under such repulsive announcements: and especially unacceptable must such announcements have been to disciples accustomed to all the Mosaic promises of national and individual prosperity, and whose imaginations had been fired by the glowing descriptions of the kingdom of Messiah exhibited in the prophets, and which they, instead of interpreting spiritually, had been taught to apply to a temporal sovereignty, eventuating in a universal monarchy, of which the Jews were to be the exalted functionaries, and all heathen people the vassals and tributaries. A religion received and propagated under such a heavy cloud gives sufficient evidence both of the integrity of its Founder and the sincerity of its first converts: while the event of its success, with means the most inadequate, and in the face of obstructions the most formidable, affords an evidence of its divine origin which nothing but the most blinded infidelity could fail to recognize and acknowledge. C.

Ver. 24. Fall by . . . the sword. The numbers who perished by the sword, or its auxiliaries, famine and pestilence, amount, as given by Josephus, to 1,100,000 at Jerusalem, during the siege, where, according to the same historian, who calculated the amount by the number of paschal lambs, there were at least 2,500,000 assembled at the passover: while in other places there perished, from the same causes, and about the same time, 347,490 more—and these independent of the uncalculated multitudes who perished in woods, morasses, and caves, in divers places, and in the vaults and sewers at Jerusalem.—Led away captive. The number of Jewish prisoners taken during the war amounted at least to 97,000, besides 11,000 starved through neglect or a sullen refusal of food. Of these captives some were transported to Rome—to grace, according to the barbarous custom of that people, the triumph of the conqueror; others were distributed through the cities of Syria, where many fell in combats in the theatres with wild beasts, or in compulsory conflicts with one another: others were condemned to toil in the Egyptian mines; many, including persons of the first distinction, were sold for the most trifling prices, and about 40,000 were liberated because no one would purchase them. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Christ takes exact notice of all our works, particularly those of piety and charity. But who can think of his awful predictions and their exact accomplishment without beholding him at once the Saviour and the God, without considering that the Jewish constitution is now totally destroyed, and a gospel dispensation extending to all the world established on its ruins. God permits men to go on to the most fearful lengths in sin before they bring ruin to themselves. But terrible are the judgments on earth and misery in hell which obstinate despisers of the gospel shall meet with at last.—Christ's faithful ministers and people generally share deep in tribulation. But faith and patience will infallibly carry them through all their difficulties, to his and their honour, and to the confutation of their adversaries. His gracious direction and

3 And he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that[b] this poor widow hath cast in more than they all.

4 For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had.

5 ¶ And[c] as some spake of the temple, how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, he said,

6 As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which [d]there shall not be left one stone[a] upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

7 ¶ And they asked him, saying, Master, but[e] when shall these things be? and what sign will there be[e] when these things shall come to pass?

8 And he said, [f]Take heed that ye be not deceived: for [g]many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; [g]and the time draweth near: go ye not therefore after them.

9 But [h]when ye shall hear of wars[3] and commotions, be not terrified: for these things must first come to pass; but [k]the end is not by and by.

10 Then[l] said he unto them, Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom:

11 And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven.

12 But before all these, [m]they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons, being brought before kings and rulers for my name's sake.

13 And [n]it shall turn to you for a testimony.[4]

14 Settle[o] it therefore in your hearts, not to meditate before what ye shall answer:

15 For[q] I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist.

16 And[r] ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to death.

17 And[s] ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake.

18 But[t] there shall not an hair of your head perish.

19 In[u] your patience possess ye your souls.[5]

20 And[v] when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.[6]

21 Then[x] let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto.

22 For[y] these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled.

23 But[z] woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck, in those days! [a]for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people.

24 And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, [7]until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.[8]

25 ¶ And[b] there shall be signs[9] in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth[1] distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring;[2]

26 Men's[c] hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken.

27 And[d] then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud[3] with power and great glory.

28 And when these things begin to come to pass, then [e]look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh.

29 And he spake to them a parable; [g]Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees;

30 When they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your ownselves that summer is now nigh at hand.

31 So likewise ye, [h]when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

32 Verily I say unto you, [i]This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled.[4]

33 Heaven[j] and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away.

34 ¶ And[k] take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with [l]surfeiting, and drunkenness,[5] and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares.

35 For[m] as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.

36 Watch[o] ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be [p]accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man.

37 And[q] in the day-time he was teaching in the temple; and at night he went out, [r]and abode in the mount that is called the [r]mount of [6]Olives.

38 And[t] all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple, for to hear him.

* The fulfilment of the prophetic curse has been literal: the fulfilment of the prophetic promise must also, according to all the canons of interpretation, be literal. There is to be an end of the Gentile possession of Jerusalem, and there is to be a re-establishment of the Jews in the capital of their fathers.—P.

support attend, and his everlasting free rewards await them. Happy are they who in evil days discern the signs of the times, and with fervent prayer and persevering watchfulness avoid the dangerous snare of earthly cares and pleasures, and so attend on gospel ministration as to be ever ready for the judgment-seat! We have here no continuing city, but are in jeopardy every hour. Let us therefore watch and be sober, that we may be prepared for every dispensation of Providence, and be ready when our Lord shall come.

CHAPTER XXII. Ver. 3. How Satan entered into Judas—whether personally, as the demons certainly did into the bodies of the possessed—that is, certainly, if credit is to be given to plain Scripture narrative; or, whether, by taking advantage of his corrupt dispositions, especially his avarice, and managing to present the appropriate temptations before him, and thereby suggesting correspondent ideas to his mind—has been matter of question. Guyse, Gill, Rosenmüller, &c., are of opinion that Satan entered merely by suggestion; but the identity of expression between this case and even that of the swine, Mar. 5. 12, seems clearly to decide in favour of an actual entering and possession as the means whereby Satan 'put it into the heart of Judas' to betray his Master, Jn. 13. 2.—C.

Ver. 29. The kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, God's Son, was a kingdom the entrance to which was through the suffering of death, He. 2. 9, 10; 12. 2. Such an entrance was also

CHAPTER XXII.

1 The Jews conspire against Christ. 3 Satan prepareth Judas to betray him. 7 The apostles prepare the passover. 19 Christ instituteth his last supper, 21 covertly foretelleth of the traitor, 24 checketh the ambitious strife of his disciples, 31 assureth Peter his faith should not fail; 34 and yet he should deny him thrice. 39 He prayeth in the mount, and sweateth blood, 47 is betrayed with a kiss: 50 he healeth Malchus' ear, 54 he is thrice denied of Peter, 63 shamefully abused, 66 and confesseth himself to be the Son of God.

NOW the[a] feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the passover.

2 And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him;[1] for[b] they feared the people.

3 ¶ Then[c] entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve.

4 And he went his way, and [d]communed with the chief priests and captains,[2] how he might betray him unto them.

5 And they were glad, and [e]covenanted to give him money.

6 And he promised, and sought opportunity to betray him unto them [3]in the absence of the multitude.[4]

7 ¶ Then[f] came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed.[5]

8 And [h]he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat.

9 And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare?

10 And he said unto them, [i]Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in.

11 And ye shall say unto the goodman of the house, [j]The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

12 And he shall show you a large upper room furnished: there make ready.

13 And they went, and [k]found as he had said[6] unto them: [l]and they made ready the passover.

14 And[n] when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him.

15 And he said unto them, With desire I have desired[7] to eat this passover with you before I suffer:

16 For I say unto you, [o]I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled[8] in the kingdom of God.

17 And he took the cup, and [p]gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves:

So wonderfully does God control wicked and lawless men, by men as wicked and lawless as themselves: and their passions, which, like pent-up waters, have thus been restrained, he can again, as a judgment against their wickedness, let loose at his will, and render wicked people mutual executioners of justice upon their several or common crimes.—C.

* There is a difference between Luke and the other evangelists as to the exact time of the institution of the Lord's supper. Luke places it before our Lord entered into the traitor, and before Judas withdrew. It would appear, therefore, from Luke's narrative as if Judas had partaken of the Lord's supper (see ver. 21). The other evangelists, however, clearly represent Judas as being denounced by our Lord before the institution of the supper: and John (13. 30) distinctly states that on being pointed out as traitor he "went immediately out." On a review and comparison of the whole narratives I have been led to the following conclusions as to the order of events:—1. Having taken their places at the paschal feast, the disciples contended for pre-eminence (ch. 22. 24–27). 2. As a practical reproof of such unworthy feelings Jesus washed the disciples' feet (Jn. 13. 1–20). 3. Jesus pointed out the traitor, who immediately retired (Mat. 26. 21–25; Mar. 14. 18–21; Jn. 13. 21–30). 4. He foretells the denial of Peter (Mat. 26. 31–35; Mar. 14. 27–31; Jn. 13. 36–38). 5. He institutes the Lord's supper (Mat. 26. 26–29; Mar. 14. 22–25; ch. 22. 19, 20). Luke, as we have seen, does not follow the order of time; he often groups incidents which have some logical connection. In this place he was apparently led to detail the institution of the supper immediately after the first cup of wine in the paschal feast, and thus to reverse the order of events.—P.

18 For I say unto you, [q]I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.

19 ¶ And[r] he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This [s]is my body, which is given for you: [t]this do in remembrance of me.

20 Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, [u]This cup is[9] the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you.[1]

21 ¶ But,[v] behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table.

22 And[x] truly the Son of man goeth, as it was determined: but [y]woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed!

23 And[z] they began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

24 ¶ And[a] there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest.

25 And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors.

26 But [b]ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the [2]younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve.

27 For [c]whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? [d]but I am among you as he that serveth.

28 Ye are they which have continued with me [e]in my temptations.[3]

29 And [f]I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me;

30 That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

31 ¶ And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, [h]behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat:

32 But[i] I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art [j]converted, strengthen thy brethren.

33 And he said unto him, Lord, [k]I am ready to go with thee, both into prison, and to death.

34 And[l] he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me.

appointed to the disciples, who were fully warned that 'through much tribulation they should enter into the kingdom of God,' Jo. 16. 33; Ac. 14. 22. This kingdom, as it is established in the hearts of God's people, consists in 'righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost,' which are all the gifts of Christ; and as it exists in heaven, it is rest from labour, and the enjoyment of glory. Re. 14. 13. Col. 3. 4. C.

Ver. 30. That ye may eat and drink—of that righteousness after which the children of God do constantly 'hunger and thirst,' Mat. 5. 6.—And sit on thrones, &c. Even so do the apostles now sit enthroned in the church, by their testimony for Jesus, judging and condemning the twelve tribes who rejected him, Ac. 28. 23–28, adjudicating between them and the Gentiles, Ac. 15. 8–29, and, in the gospel and its ordinances, propounding those principles by which the whole world shall be finally judged, Ro. 2. 16. Whether these 'thrones' imply any special apostolic glory in the kingdom yet to be inherited, will not farther appear till 'we see as we are seen, and know as we are known.' C.

Ver. 31. Satan hath desired to have you. Not thee, Peter, alone, but all of you: even as he desired to have Job, when, with two limitations, he obtained his desire, and smote him in his property, family, and person, Job 1. 12; 2. 6. Simon is specially warned, because his self confident boldness exposed him to the greatest danger and the deepest fall. C.

Ver. 36. But now, he that hath a purse, &c. As if he had said, The time is now come when you will no longer receive hospitality, and must therefore labour, by industry, frugality, and prudent forethought, to provide for yourselves.—And he that hath no sword, &c. That our Lord did not direct the purchase of a literal sword, either for defence or attack, is evident from ver. 51; Mat. 26. 52; 2 Co. 10. 4. But, by a strong proverbial figure, he meant to prepare the hearts of the disciples for encountering, with faith and patience, the manifold dangers that were now fast closing around them, Ro. 13. 12; 2 Co. 6. 7. Ep. 6. 11, &c.; 1 Pe. 4. 1. C.

Ver. 42. The slight verbal differences in the various records of this prayer are perfectly consistent with the doctrine of complete divine inspiration; for, not to speak of the various forms of translation from Hebrew or Syro-Phœnician into Greek, which the Spirit of truth might equally and most advantageously sanction, there is no reason to conclude that our Lord uttered the petition but once, and in one form, but, on the contrary, every reason to 35 ¶ And[n] he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, Nothing.

36 Then said he unto them, But now,[4] he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one.

37 For I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in me, [o]And he was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning me have an end:

38 And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, [p]It is enough.[5]

39 ¶ And[q] he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his disciples also followed him.

40 And[r] when he was at the place,[6] he said unto them, Pray that ye enter not into temptation.

41 And[s] he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed, 42 Saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove[7] this cup from me: nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done.

43 And[t] there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him.

44 And[u] being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.[8]

45 And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow,

46 And said unto them, [v]Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

47 ¶ And while he yet spake, [w]behold a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus [x]to kiss him.

48 But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss?

49 When they which were about him saw what would follow, they said unto him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword?[9]

50 ¶ And[z] one of them smote a servant of the high-priest, and cut off his right ear.

51 And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far.[1] And he touched his ear, and healed him.

52 Then[a] Jesus said unto the chief priests, and captains of the temple, and the elders, which were come to him, Be ye come out as against a thief, with swords and staves?

53 When I was [b]daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but this is [c]your hour, and the power of darkness.

54 ¶ Then[d] took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high-priest's house. [e]And Peter followed afar off.

55 And when they had kindled a fire in the midst[2] of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them.

56 But [f]a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with him.[3]

57 And he [h]denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not.

58 And[i] after a little while another saw him, and said, Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not.

59 And about the space of one hour after, [j]another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with him; for he is a [k]Galilean.

60 And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew.

61 And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, [l]Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice.

62 And[m] Peter went out, and wept bitterly.

63 ¶ And[o] the men that held Jesus [p]mocked him, and smote him.

64 And when they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face, and asked him, saying, Prophesy, who is it that smote thee?

65 And many other things blasphemously spake they against him.

66 ¶ And[q] as soon as it was day, the elders of the people and the chief priests and the scribes came together, and led him into their council, saying,

67 Art[r] thou the Christ? tell us. [s]And he said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe:

68 And if I also ask you,[4] ye will not answer me, nor let me go.

69 Hereafter[5] shall the Son of man [t]sit on the right hand of the power of God.

[*] It is enough. Not, 'they are enough'—which would have approved of swords in the literal and offensive sense in which the disciples understood our Lord; but, 'it is enough'—that is, 'you have said enough' to demonstrate your total misapprehension of my meaning, which, in mercy to your darkness of understanding and slowness of apprehension, I will take another opportunity and means to rectify.—C.

Ver. 61. The Lord turned and looked upon Peter. Note, How ready are believers to forget their Saviour, when, as it were, his back is toward them—he is absent from them. But as one look of sight sent Peter out to weep, surely such as 'walk by faith, and not by sight,' will not forget, when they are tempted, that each should meet the temptation with, 'Thus it is written'—'Thou, Lord, seest me!' C.

Ver. 70. Ye say that I am. This being that very thing which the Jews most obstinately denied, how did they say it? Might not the words be better translated, interrogatively, 'Do ye say [admit or deny] that I am?' The subsequent neglect or refusal of reply practically verifies, at the moment, the prophetic accusation, ver. 68. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Whether should I here most admire the lengths in wickedness to which sinners will go when left to themselves—the covetousness, treachery, unbelief, hardness of heart, malice, and malignity, manifested in plotting against, betraying, apprehending, condemning, reviling, and murdering the Son of God and Saviour of mankind—or his love, in patiently undergoing everything severe and shameful; in feasting, warning, directing, and comforting his disciples; in solemn resignation of himself to his sufferings and death; in miraculously healing one of his miscreant apprehenders; in graciously converting him who most criminally denied him; and in avowing himself a divine person, at the hazard of his life!—How extensive were his sufferings in soul—in body—in character! And yet all the malice of his enemies was so overruled as only to accomplish the fulfilment of prophecies, the honour of God, and the salvation of men. Marvellously he changed the ancient passover into a crucified Redeemer, and a delightful feast on his fulness. Let us always then observe it in the faith of his institution, in obedience to his authority, and aiming at his honour. It is an awful thing for professed disciples and dignified clergymen to betray their Master; and highly shameful to indulge carnal pride and ambition in the presence of a suffering Redeemer, whose kingdom is not of this world. But seasonably preserved, highly honoured,

THE SPOT WHERE CHRIST PRAYED—GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE [LUKE, xxii:41].—The Garden of Gethsemane is enclosed by a wall. To the north of the Garden and outside of it there is a spot pointed out as the place where Christ uttered the last prayer. A lamp hangs here and burns all the day and all the night long. It is a sad and touching scene to stand in the presence of this place and to watch the reverent and devoted saints stand and look upon it with sympathy and love. Many looking upon this scene do not pretend to conceal the tears which flow down their cheeks. This serves to bring before their imagination the agony and grief of the last hours of our Savior's life, when He uttered that last prayer for his disciples and for the world. Of Himself He never seemed to think; it was of those He came into the world to teach and redeem.

70 Then said they all, Art thou then the Son of God? And he said unto them, Ye say that I am.[6]

71 And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of his own mouth.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Jesus is accused before Pilate, and sent to Herod. 8 Herod mocketh him. 12 Herod and Pilate are made friends. 13 Barabbas is desired of the people, and is loosed by Pilate, and Jesus is given to be crucified. 27 He telleth the women, that lament him, the destruction of Jerusalem: 34 prayeth for his enemies. 39 Is reviled by one of the malefactors, but confessed by the other. 46 His death. 50 His burial.

AND the[a] whole multitude of them arose, and led him unto Pilate.

2 And they began to [b]accuse him, saying, We[c] found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that he himself is Christ a King.[1]

3 And Pilate asked him, saying, [d]Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answered him, and said, Thou sayest it.

4 Then said Pilate to the chief priests and to the people, [e]I find no fault[2] in this man.

5 And [f]they were the more fierce, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning [h]from Galilee to this place.

6 When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a [i]Galilean.

7 And as soon as he knew that he belonged unto [j]Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod,[3] who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time.

8 ¶ And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was [k]desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him; and [l]he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him.

9 Then he questioned with him in many words; but [m]he answered him nothing.

10 And the chief priests and scribes stood and [o]vehemently accused him.

11 And[p] Herod with his men of war set him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a [q]gorgeous robe,[4] and sent him again to Pilate.

12 ¶ And the same day [r]Pilate and Herod were made friends together: for before they were at enmity between themselves.

13 ¶ And[s] Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests and the rulers and the people,

14 Said unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, [t]as one that perverteth the people; and, behold, I, having examined him before you, [u]have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him:

15 No, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him; and, lo, nothing worthy of death[5] is done unto him.[6]

16 I[v] will therefore chastise him, and release him.

17 (For[x] of necessity[7] he must release one unto them at the feast.)

18 And[y] they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas:

19 (Who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison.)

20 Pilate therefore, willing to release Jesus, [z]spake again to them.

21 But[a] they cried, saying, Crucify him, crucify him.

22 And[b] he said unto them the third [8]time, Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cause of death in him: I will therefore chastise him, and let him go.

23 And[c] they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. And the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed.

24 And[d] Pilate gave sentence[9] that it should be as they required.

25 And he released unto them him [e]that for sedition and murder was cast into prison, whom they had desired; but he delivered Jesus to their will.

26 ¶ And[g] as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus.

27 And there followed him a great company of people, and of women,[1] which also bewailed and lamented him.

28 But Jesus turning unto them, said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children.

29 For, [h]behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck.[2]

30 Then[i] shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us.

31 For[j] if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?[3]

32 ¶ And [k]there were also two others, malefactors,[4] led with him to be put to death.

33 And when they were come to the place which is called [5]Calvary, [l]there they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left.

34 ¶ Then said Jesus, Father, [n]forgive [o]them; for they know not what they do. [o]And they parted his raiment, and cast lots.

[2] I find no fault. The Roman government now was too strong to be moved with jealousy at our Lord's claim to be King of the Jews. Pilate, therefore, disregarded the implied charge of rebellion against Cæsar. It is not improbable that Pilate was also moved by the sight of what he would consider fallen greatness. But, by whatever moved, his feelings were overruled by Providence to produce a judicial Gentile testimony to the innocence of our Lord, and a abiding record of the injustice and cruelty of his persecutors. —C.

and plentifully rewarded, are they who continue faithful in times of trouble. Great is the danger of pride, self-confidence, and unwatchfulness; or of rashly entering into temptation; and there is need of Jesus' intercession to preserve his people's faith when it is sorely shaken. And if we experience his influences, let us improve them for the warning and strengthening of our fellow-Christians. But sins of infirmity in his saints greatly differ from the presumptuous rebellion of hardened sinners. How shocking it is for men to interrogate Jesus concerning his person, doctrine, or work, merely to strengthen their own and others' prejudices against him! For soon will he appear in great glory and majesty, to the confusion and ruin of every obstinate despiser, and to the unspeakable comfort of every cordial believer.

CHAPTER XXIII. Ver. 8. Since Herod believed that Jesus

35 ¶ And the people stood beholding. And the rulers also with them [p]derided him, saying, He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ,[q] the chosen of God.

36 And the soldiers[r] also mocked him, coming to him, and [r]offering him vinegar, 37 And saying, If thou be the king of the Jews, save thyself.

38 And[s] a superscription also was written over him, in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

39 ¶ And [t]one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us.

40 But the other, answering, [u]rebuked him, saying, [v]Dost not thou fear God, [z]seeing thou art in the same condemnation?

41 And[y] we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: [z]but this man hath done nothing amiss.

42 And he said unto Jesus, [a]Lord, remember me when thou comest into [b]thy kingdom.[8]

43 And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, [c]To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise.[9]

44 ¶ And[d] it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth[1] until the ninth hour.[2]

45 And the sun was darkened, [e]and the veil of the temple was rent in the midst.

46 ¶ And [g]when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, [h]Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost.

47 ¶ Now [i]when the centurion saw what was done, he glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous man.

48 And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things which were done, [j]smote their breasts, and returned.

49 And[k] all his acquaintance, and the women that followed him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things.

50 ¶ And,[l] behold, there was a man named Joseph, a counsellor; and he was a good man, and a just:

51 (The same [m]had not consented to the counsel and deed of them;) he was of Arimathea, a city of the Jews: who also himself [o]waited for the kingdom of God.

52 This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus.

53 And he took it down, [p]and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid.

54 And[q] that day was the preparation,[3] and the sabbath drew on.[4]

55 ¶ And[r] the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid.

56 And they returned, and prepared [s]spices and ointments; and [t]rested the sabbath-day, according to the commandment.[5]

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Christ's resurrection is declared by two angels to the women that come to the sepulchre. 9 These report it to others. 13 Christ himself appeareth to the two disciples that went to Emmaus: 36 afterwards he appeareth to the apostles, and reproveth their unbelief: 47 giveth them a charge: 49 promiseth the Holy Ghost: 51 and so ascendeth into heaven.

NOW upon[a] the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them.

2 And they found [b]the stone rolled away from the sepulchre.

3 And they entered in, and [c]found not the body of the Lord Jesus.

4 And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, [d]two men[1] stood by them in shining garments:[2]

5 And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living[3] among the dead?

Matthew and Mark state that both the thieves reviled Jesus when on the cross, Mat. 27. 44. Mar. 15. 32. Luke says one of the malefactors railed on him; but that the other rebuked the scoffer. Both narratives are doubtless correct. At first the two joined the crowd in their unseemly taunts; but one of them, when he saw the meekness of the sufferer, when he heard his words of love and pity, and when he witnessed the events which occurred, was convinced of Christ's divinity, was humbled by a sense of his own sin, and was constrained in penitence and faith to utter the prayer, 'Lord, remember me when thou comest in thy kingdom.' The prayer was heard and answered; and the thief on the cross was an example, but the only one found in Scriptures, of a sinner saved at the door of death. None need despair, and yet none should venture to delay the salvation of their souls. P.

could work miracles, why did he not acknowledge him to be the Messiah? Because he attributed his admitted power of working miracles not to the power of God working in attestation of his divine commission, but to his knowledge of mere natural causes, and superior skill in some occult philosophy, such as the Egyptians and Persian magi were supposed to possess. Thus the Pharisees had also admitted his miraculous power, yet rejected his claims to be Messiah, because they attributed his miracles to Beelzebub. In all this, Herod and the Pharisees erred alike in looking merely at the miracles, and disregarding the prophecy by which they were preceded—which preceding prophecy is essential to the evidence of a divine commission, Re. 19. 10. C.

Some have described it as a public cemetery: but the Jewish modes of burial, and care and avoidance of the bones of the dead, as well as the singular, 'skull,' not 'skulls,' will not countenance that opinion. C.

Ver. 43. Paradise. What differences, local or circumstantial, may be in the 'Father's house' and its 'many mansions,' it were presumptuous to inquire further than is revealed. The meaning of 'paradise' is, however, settled by reference to 2 Co. 12. 4; Re. 2. 7, comp. with ch. 22. 1, &c., where it is evidently synonymous with heaven and its blessedness and glory, in allusion to that terrestrial paradise in which God and man dwelt together in holy intercourse, Ge. 2. 25. C.

Ver. 47. A righteous man. Instead of 'a righteous man,' Matthew has it 'the Son of God.' These two statements are both consistent with one another and with the doctrine of divine inspiration, upon the simple principle that the centurion uttered both expressions, while each evangelist chose that one which the Spirit directed as most suited to the first readers of his Gospel. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Sinners often presumptuously charge their own faults upon Jesus and his faithful servants; and many cement their friendship by contempt of him. How strong is the power of prejudice against him! It undervalues and derides him, because he will not gratify curiosity or answer unreasonable demands; it forms the falsest accusations; it prefers every temporal interest, or even a base malefactor, lust, or devil, to him—indignant that he should reign or have any honour in the world. Yea, often they who seem convinced of his excellency, through importunity and carnal fear, or other similar temptations, violate all the bonds of truth, and rights of conscience and honour, to injure him. Many have their affections touched with the cruelty or love of his death whose hearts are never renewed to believe in and love him. But O how astonishing the grace, the infinite grace, of our Lord Jesus, in thus suffering, dying, and praying for his enemies! How great is his power and sovereignty in triumphing over Satan on the cross, and forming one of his fellow-sufferers from a hardened thief into a strong believer, a bold confessor, a fervent supplicant, an immediate partaker of heaven; while the other dies contradicting and blaspheming! And great likewise was the honour with which his Father marked his sufferings. His judge, his crucifiers, the attending women, and even the darkened sun, the quaking earth, and the rent vail, concur to attest his Messiahship!

CHAPTER XXIV. Ver. 26. 'Ought he not to have suffered,' in obedience to the divine will, in manifestation of eternal love, in fulfilment of all prophecy (Ge. 3. 15; Ps. 22. 1, &c.; Is. 50. 6; 53. 1, &c.; Da. 9. 26), and to respond to all the types by which he was represented in the history of providence and Mosaic sacrifices. C.

Ver. 30. The similarity of the expression and of the act to those of the original institution of the Lord's supper, seems to indicate that it was here again celebrated by our Lord as introductory to drawing the attention and opening the eyes of his disciples. See ver. 35. C.

Ver. 52. They worshipped him. This must have been divine worship; for, according to Ac. 1. 9, 10, they continued gazing, looking up, after him, until the angel spoke, after which no worship but divine worship could be offered to one that was absent and invisible. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How certain and sweet is the news of our Saviour's resurrection! Yea, often he surprises the most unlikely and unworthy with such discoveries of himself as they are apt to think too great or too good to be true. They who seek him early find him quickly; and they who talk of him have their eyes enlightened and hearts warmed by his presence. How seasonable are his visits! and what light his explications cast on the Scriptures, which relate to his sufferings or glory! And if men insist upon and plead for how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee,

7 Saying, The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.

8 And[g] they remembered his words,

9 And[h] returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things unto the eleven, and to all the rest.

10 It[i] was Mary Magdalene, and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things unto the apostles.

11 And[j] their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.

12 ¶ Then[k] arose Peter, and ran unto the sepulchre; and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves,[4] and departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass.[5]

13 ¶ And,[l] behold, two of them went that same day to a village called Emmaus,[6] which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs.[7]

14 And they [m]talked together of [n]all these things which had happened.

15 And it came to pass, that, while [o]they communed together and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them.

16 But[q] their eyes were holden,[8] that they should not know him.

17 And he said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad?

18 And the one of them, whose name was Cleopas,[9] answering said unto him, Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days?

19 And he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was [s]a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people:

20 And[t] how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him.

21 But we trusted that it had been he [u]which should have redeemed Israel:[1] and, beside all this, to-day is the third day since these things were done.

22 Yea,[w] and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre;

23 And when they found not his body, they came, saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive.

[6] Josephus mentions two or three places called Emmaus, the most important of which, situated near Lydda, became afterwards the seat of a Roman colony, and was then called Nicopolis. The Emmaus of Luke is situated between seven and eight miles north-west of Jerusalem, and still exists as a poor village, chiefly inhabited by Christians.—C.

[t] Alford's note on these words is most important. It accords fully with my own views, and with my observations on Mat. 5. 17. "I take "the things . . . concerning himself" to be something very different from mere prophetical passages. The whole Scriptures are a testimony to him; the whole history of the chosen people, with its types, and its law, and its prophecies, is a shewing forth of him: and it was the whole—all the Scriptures—that he laid out before them. This general leading into the meaning of the whole, as a whole, fulfilled in him, would be much more opportune to the place and time occupied than a direct exposition of selected passages. . . . Observe the testimony which this verse gives to the divine authority and Christian interpretation of the Old Testament Scriptures; so that the denial of the references to Christ's death and glory in the Old Testament is henceforth nothing less than a denial of his own teaching."—P.

Consequently our Lord here uses the terms Law, Prophets, and Psalms as proper names; and as he declares that each division was prophetic, he thus testifies to its inspiration.—P.

EMMAUS—SHOWING WHERE CHRIST MADE HIMSELF KNOWN TO HIS DISCIPLES AFTER THE RESURRECTION. [Luke, xxiv.13.]—The Emmaus represented in the picture is one of the villages making special claim to be the place where Christ made himself known, after his resurrection, to his disciples. The particular Emmaus given in the above illustration is about five miles from Jerusalem, on the road to Jaffa. There are some noble old olive trees here, and there is an air of repose and restfulness about the place which somehow falls into line with our feelings as to the kind of place Emmaus ought to be. The village is built up near the top of the hill and in quietness and grace conforms very well to the beautiful and divine life that was made known to the disciples, in the breaking of bread, in this immediate locality.

without asking God's blessing on them, or returning him thanks for them, or without attempting to hold fellowship with Jesus in them. Astonishingly great is our Redeemer, in whom all the oracles of God are YEA and AMEN, to his glory. Endearing is his love that blesses his people, notwithstanding their manifold infirmities, and gives them his Spirit to qualify them for every trial or service to which he calls them. In abundant grace he began his work of pardon and conversion upon them who had just imbrued their hands in his blood. Delightful was his departure, blessing his disciples; and exalted and glorious is his dignity in heaven. O that my heart and eye, my faith and hope, could closely follow him—looking after him, adoring him, blessing God for him, depending on him for all necessary blessings, and longing to be with him, that when he appears the second time, without sin, it may be unto my salvation.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF LUKE.

There can be no doubt that Luke was that "beloved physician" who forsook a respected and lucrative profession to become the companion of Paul in persecution and poverty (Col. 4. 14; 2 Ti. 4. 11; Phile. 24). The prescription which Paul gives to Timothy (1 Ti. 5. 23), for his health's sake, was most probably suggested by Luke: the Spirit of God thereby honouring the medical profession in the person of a godly physician. By some he is supposed to have been the unnamed disciple that accompanied Cleophas to Emmaus (ch. 24. 13, 18), and that, from modesty, he has suppressed his own name, as he has also done in the Acts of the Apostles, which internal evidence and history concur in ascribing to him. But whether he accompanied Cleophas or not, is a matter alike uncertain and unimportant.

The authenticity of Luke's Gospel is evidenced even by those called apostolic fathers; and its special value consists in the amount of events and discourses which he minutely records, and which are not contained in the other evangelists, as may be seen by reference to the introductory observations. C.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO SAINT JOHN.

John, the writer of this Gospel, and of three short epistles, was originally a fisherman; who, being called to be one of Christ's disciples, became his peculiar favourite. Living long after the other apostles, when the church was first plagued with the denial of our Saviour's essential Deity, he aims more expressly to establish that fundamental article of the Christian religion, and to manifest the inexcusableness of the Jews in rejecting him. What he relates in his Gospel is generally new, and related by none of the other evangelists: viz. John Baptist's directing his disciples to Christ, ch. i.; Christ turning water into wine; purging the temple of fraudulent merchants, ch. ii.; healing the nobleman's son, ch. iv.; and the infirm man at the pool of Bethesda, ch. v.; the blind man at the pool of Siloam, ch. ix.; and his raising Lazarus from the dead, ch. xi. But he especially sets before us his divine discourses—with Nicodemus, touching the new birth, ch. iii.; with the Samaritan woman and his disciples, ch. iv.; with the Pharisees, concerning his equality with the Father in Godhead, working, and worship, ch. 5. 18, 21, 23; with the Capernaumites, concerning himself as the bread of life, ch. vi.; with the Jews, touching his power over the Sabbath-day, and to save sinners, ch. vii.; and his being the Light of the world, the Son of the Father, and teacher of that truth which alone could render them free from the bondage of Satan, sin, and death, ch. viii.; and the chief and divine Shepherd of God's chosen people, ch. x.; and with his disciples, for their direction and comfort, at his last supper, ch. xiii.–xvi.; and his prayer to his Father, ch. xvii., &c.

[According to all antiquity this Gospel was written after the other three, and several years after the war with the Romans, that had terminated in the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersion of the Jews. It is remarkable that he alone records the name of the disciple who smote Malchus with the sword; for Peter was now beyond the reach of his enemies, and that as Lazarus had, most probably, now also returned to his rest, he alone records his resurrection, which the others had omitted for fear of incensing the Jews, who had purposed to put him to death. It is also remarkable that the other evangelists record our Lord's predictions, and that John omits them; most likely because most, if not all, of them had been already fulfilled; for Jerusalem was destroyed by Titus; and John was not banished to Patmos till the 15th of Domitian his successor, A.D. 95, and was recalled from exile upon the accession of Nerva, A.D. 96, when he returned to Ephesus, where he wrote his Gospel and epistles, and survived till the third year of the emperor Trajan, when he died in the hundredth year of his age. C.

John's Gospel is in many respects different from the others. The source and nature of its leading characteristics will be best developed by a brief notice of the author. His father was Zebedee, a fisherman of Galilee, apparently of some wealth, since he had hired servants. His son, therefore, would receive a superior education. John must have been thoughtful from boyhood, and the errors of the Jewish religion as then developed in ritual and tradition must have attracted his attention. He was a very young man when he attached himself to the Baptist, and he did not long remain under his elementary tuition. The Baptist's testimony to Jesus produced such an effect on John that he followed him. A deep attachment was formed, arising, as it appears, not merely from intellectual conviction of the truth of Christ's doctrines, but from ardent love for his person, and profound admiration of his character. John was one of the three whom Jesus admitted into the sanctuary of his inner life. They alone witnessed the transfiguration and the agony in Gethsemane. And while the three were favoured above others, John's intense love and devotion seems to have gained for him a still closer intimacy. He lay on Christ's bosom at supper; he followed him to the judgment-hall and the cross; he received from him, as the highest token of confidence and affection, the charge of Mary his mother. John had opportunities of witnessing Christ's power and glory, of seeing the depths of his love, of learning the mysteries of his nature, of observing the results of his work, such as were enjoyed by no other man. It is to this intimate communion of the beloved disciple with the loving Saviour we owe the development of those sublime truths set forth in this Gospel. It is to his profound veneration for, and appreciation of, every word that fell from Christ's lips, we are indebted for those long discourses which this Gospel alone contains. While the other disciples were attracted by his miracles, parables, and prophecies, John's philosophic mind was impressed by the mystery of his deity; by the depths of his wondrous love in assuming our nature and bearing our sin; by the triumphs of his work, in giving light to a dark, and life to a dead world; by the glories of the union established between him and his church, by the promise of the Comforter.

Such was John's training. From the moment he turned away from the Baptist, he seems never to have left the Messiah's side. He took supreme delight in the contemplation of his person and nature. He hung on every word that fell from his lips. He tried to fathom every truth embodied in his discourses. After Christ's death, too, John doubtless heard from Mary many of those displays of wisdom, power, and grace divine which the holy child had displayed from infancy to manhood, and which, as we are told, she 'treasured up in her heart.' John was taught as never man was taught.

The object of the other evangelists was mainly to give a history of our Lord; John's object was mainly to develop his theological system. The synoptists enunciated doctrines, but they did so from a historical point of view; John, on the other hand, narrated incidents, but he did so from a doctrinal point of view. The discourses of our Lord which he reports are all developments of the most sublime and profound doctrines. In this Gospel there is no biography of Jesus, properly so called; 'but there is, in historical form, a representation of the Christian faith, in relation to the person of Christ as its central point; and in this representation there is a picture, on the one hand, of the antagonism of the world to the truth revealed in him; and on the other, of the spiritual blessedness of the few who yield themselves to him as the Light of life.' P.]

CHAPTER 1.

1 The divinity, humanity, and office of Jesus Christ. 15 The testimony of John. 39 The calling of Andrew, Peter, &c.

IN the[a] beginning[1] was the [b]Word,[2] and the Word was [c]with God,[3] and the Word [d]was God.[4]

2 The same was in the beginning with God.

3 All[e] things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made.

4 In[g] him was life; and the life [h]was the light of men.

5 And [i]the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not.[5]

6 ¶ There[j] was a man sent from God, whose name was John.

7 The[k] same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe.

8 He[l] was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light.

9 That [m]was the true Light, which lighteth[6] every man that cometh into the world.

10 He was in the world, and [o]the world was made by him, [p]and the world knew him not.

11 He[q] came unto his own,[7] and [r]his own received him not.

12 But[s] as many as received him, to them gave he power[8] to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name:

13 Which[t] were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.[9]

14 ¶ And[u] the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full[v] of grace and truth.

15 ¶ John bare witness of him, and cried, saying, [w]This was he of whom I spake, He that cometh after me is preferred before me: for [x]he was before me.

16 And[a] of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace.

17 For[b] the law[1] was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.

18 No[c] man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.

19 ¶ And[d] this is the record of John, when the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou?

20 And he confessed, and denied not; but confessed, I am not the Christ.

21 And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, [z]I am not. Art thou that prophet?[2] And he answered, No.

22 Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?

23 He[e] said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias.

24 And they which were sent were of the [b]Pharisees.[3]

25 And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not [c]that Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet?

26 John answered them, saying, [f]I baptize with water: but there standeth one among you, [g]whom ye know not;

27 He it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose.

28 These things were done in [4]Bethabara[5] beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

29 ¶ The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, [h]Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh[6] away the sin of the world.

30 This is he of whom I said, [i]After me

CHAPTER 1. Ver. 1–5. From all eternity the Son of God, the great Speaker for and to men, the medium of divine manifestations to us, and to whom all the Scripture gives testimony, who may therefore properly be called the Word, existed a distinct person, equal to and the express image of his divine Father, and the same in substance with him, necessarily possessed of every excellency of Godhead; and by him were all creatures, from the highest to the lowest, formed of nothing in the beginning of time. From that life necessarily existent in him proceeded all kinds and degrees of life, knowledge, and comfort, found among men. And yet, though he, in the dictates of natural conscience and of revelation, manifests himself to men, such is the sinful ignorance and error of their minds, cometh a man which is preferred before me: for he was before me.

31 And [o]I knew him not: [p]but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water.

32 And[q] John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him.

33 And I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and [r]remaining on him, [s]the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.

34 And I saw, and bare record [t]that this is the Son of God.

35 ¶ Again, the next day after, John stood, and[u] two of his disciples;[7]

36 And looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith, [v]Behold the Lamb of God!

37 And[w] the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus.

38 Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith unto them, [x]What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where dwellest[8] thou?

39 He saith unto them, [y]Come and see. They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day: for it was about the tenth hour.[9]

40 One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was [z]Andrew, Simon Peter's brother.

41 He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the [a]Messias, which is, being interpreted, the Christ.[1]

42 And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him, he said, Thou art Simon the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas, which is, by interpretation, A stone.[2]

43 ¶ The day following, Jesus would go forth into Galilee, and [b]findeth Philip, and saith unto him, [c]Follow me.

44 Now Philip was of [d]Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.

45 Philip findeth Nathanael,[3] and saith unto him, We have found him of whom [e]Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, [f]Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.

46 And Nathanael[4] said unto him, [g]Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?[5] Philip saith unto him, [h]Come and see.

47 Jesus saw Nathanael coming to him, and saith of him, Behold [i]an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!

48 Nathanael saith unto him, Whence knowest thou me? Jesus answered and said unto him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree, [k]I saw thee.

49 Nathanael answered and saith unto him, Rabbi, [l]thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel.[6]

50 Jesus answered and said unto him, Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig-tree, believest thou? [m]thou shalt see greater things than these.

51 And he saith unto him, Verily,[7] verily, I say unto you, [n]Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the [o]Son of man.

CHAPTER II.

1 Christ turneth water into wine, 12 departeth into Capernaum, and to Jerusalem, 14 where he purgeth the temple of buyers and sellers. 19 He foretelleth his death and resurrection. 23 Many believed because of his miracles, but he would not trust himself with them.

AND the [a]third day there was a marriage in Cana[b] of Galilee; and the mother of Jesus was there:[1]

2 And[c] both Jesus was called, and his disciples, to the marriage.

3 And[d] when they wanted wine,[2] the mother of Jesus saith unto him, [e]They have no wine.

4 Jesus saith unto her, [f]Woman,[3] what[h] have I to do with thee? [i]mine hour is not yet come.

5 His mother saith unto the servants, [j]Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.

6 And there were set there six water-pots of stone, [k]after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins[4] apiece.

7 Jesus saith unto them, Fill the water-pots with water. And they filled them up to the brim.

8 And he saith unto them, [l]Draw out now, and bear unto the [m]governor of the feast. And they bare it.

9 When the ruler[5] of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was: (but the [n]servants which drew the water knew;) the governor of the feast called the bridegroom,

10 And saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have [p]well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the [q]good wine until now.

11 This[r] beginning of miracles[6] did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth his glory; and his disciples [s]believed on him.[7]

12 ¶ After this he went down to [t]Capernaum,[8] he, and [u]his mother, and his [v]brethren, and his disciples: and they continued there not many days.

13 ¶ And the Jews' passover[9] was at hand, and [x]Jesus went up to Jerusalem,[1]

[1] This was the first passover after our Lord's baptism, and consequently his first official visit to Jerusalem. On this visit, as well as upon the last, three years afterwards, our Lord exercised his authority in cleansing the temple, Mat.21.12.—P.

the bias of their will and affections, and corruption of their practice, that they do not naturally understand, but shut their eyes against, hate, and oppose these discoveries. 6–8. John the Baptist was eminently qualified, and divinely appointed, as the forerunner of his personal appearance, to point him forth as the glorious Sun of Righteousness rising among men, that persons of all sorts, Jews and Gentiles, might believe on him for life and salvation. 9–13. And indeed he, in opposition to the false lights of heathen philosophy, the corrupted and faint typical light of the Jews, and in distinction from John the Baptist and the prophets and apostles, is the original fountain of light from which all natural and divine knowledge is communicated to men in every period of time. By his upholding and governing providence, and by his dispensations of light and grace, he has all along been present in the world, which he created; and yet neither his manifest

OUR CAMP—KHAN JUBB YUSEF. [John, ii:12.]—"After this he went down to Capernaum, he and his mother, and his brethren and his disciples, and they continued there not many days." The artist and the writer left Capernaum about 12 o'clock, noon, and reached this place about half-past two. We passed over between Capernaum and Khan Jubb Yusef, the roughest road, perhaps, on earth. Our dragoman said it was called the devil's backbone. Yet it is the old caravan road from Egypt to Damascus, and has been traveled in all ages. On the last ridge, just before we reach Khan Jubb Yusef, we had our last glimpse of the Sea of Galilee and our first full view of Mount Hermon. Khan Jubb Yusef means the Inn of Joseph's Well, for there is a tradition among the Mohammedans that here Joseph's brethren threw him into the well. There is no doubt but that our Savior often retired into these wild and lonely regions for meditation and prayer.

14 And [y]found in the temple those that sold oxen[z] and sheep and doves, and the changers of money sitting:

15 And [a]when he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables;

16 And said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; [c]make not my Father's house an house of merchandise.

17 And his disciples remembered that it was written, [b]The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up.

18 ¶ Then answered the Jews and said unto him, [c]What sign showest thou unto us, seeing that thou doest these things?

19 Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy[3] this temple, and in three days I will raise it up.

20 Then said the Jews, Forty and six[4] years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days?

tions of himself, in providence or revelation, have been duly discerned or improved; and when, in the fulness of time, he manifested himself in human nature, preaching the gospel, and working miracles among the Jews his peculiar people, most of them wilfully rejected him, and refused to acknowledge him as their Creator and Saviour. But to all such, whether Jews or Gentiles, as heartily received him by faith as their Redeemer, Prophet, Priest, and King, he bestowed the dignified right and privilege of being the real children of God; all of whom, without any influence of natural descent, ceremonial law, or any external aid, seek a supernatural habit or principle of grace which, exercised in them, disposes them to every good word and work. 14, 16–18. And in order to effect these grand designs of our redemption, the eternal Son of God assumed our nature, in its debased appearances, into a personal union with himself; and therein, in all his fulness of Godhead, for a season dwelt among us men, particularly us disciples, as JEHOVAH did in the cloud of glory which covered the mercy-seat, full of infinite grace and kindness to men, and of all necessary blessings, to be freely communicated to them. All the laws, promises, types, and prophecies were fulfilled in him; and we, in his doctrine, miracles, transfiguration, resurrection, and ascension, by faith steadfastly considered and admired these glorious perfections, becoming him as one with, and in an inconceivable and unparalleled manner begotten by, his eternal Father; and out of his fulness of divine perfections and communicative blessings, who is infinitely preferable to John the Baptist, all of us believers, great and small, have, do, and shall receive all spiritual blessings, multiplied one upon another, according to our capacities and wants, and answerable, in nature and kind, to our faith in Jesus Christ.—Far superior to Moses, who delivered the laws of God to the Jews in a manner suited to their circumstances, in a ministration of condemnation, and in obscure types, which could not make the worshippers perfect, Jesus has brought in the richest and plainest discoveries of God's love and grace, in which all the ancient types and predictions have their full accomplishment. And being himself the beloved and only begotten Son of God, intimately acquainted with all his excellencies and purposes of grace, he alone was fit for this work, and he hath now manifested these things to men in such a manner as no other was able to do.

Ver. 13. 'Not of bloods.' Neither by right of natural descent from Abraham, nor any of the tribes.—Nor of the will of the flesh, which is simply to seek present pleasure and escape present pain, as is manifest in all the lower and mere animal natures. —Nor of the will of man, who, being compounded of flesh and spirit, can, under the influence of natural intellect, make many sacrifices of present pleasure, and endure many pains, from a calculating regard to futurity.—But of God, who, by his Holy Spirit, can alone renew man 'after the image of him that created him,' Ep. 4. 24; Col. 3. 10. C.

Ver. 16. Grace for grace. There being a fulness of grace in Christ, ver. 14, believers receive a measure of every form of grace in him. It may be illustrated by a garden in which there are many plants, and a barren waste into which there is made out of it a complete transplantation, so that they, at last, answer to each other, plant for plant. C.

Ver. 18. No man hath seen God at any time. God being infinite in being and perfections, can never be perfectly seen by any finite creature. For though the Shekinah, or other visible manifestation of his presence, has been or may be seen, still that manifestation is not God.—Declared him. Educed him, brought him out to the eye of the spirit in all his perfections, purposes, promises, and works of grace, providence, and final judgment. C.

Ver. 21. John replies in the sense intended by the questioner, and denies that he is Elias in resurrection flesh. When our Lord affirms that John was Elias, Mat. 11. 14, he speaks in the sense of Malachi (ch. 4. 5), of his being in the 'spirit and power of Elias,' 'that prophet' foretold by Moses, De. 18. 15. It cannot be translated 'a prophet,' for John was even more than a prophet, Mat. 11. 11. C.

Ver. 25. The Jews were accustomed to baptize heathen proselytes, but never without an order from the Sanhedrim, or great civil and ecclesiastical council, or before three magistrates or doctors of the law: they therefore very naturally feel jealous of John, who not only baptized without their authority, but baptized Jews themselves, contrary to the practice of the Pharisees. C.

Ver. 29. Behold the Lamb. The lamb was the first sacrifice on record, Ge. 4. 4; a lamb was also the daily sacrifice in the temple. It therefore furnished an appropriate title for him who came 'to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself,' He. 9. 26.—Taketh away the sin of the world. Rather, 'who is taking away,' by first bearing our sins in his own body, and finally to the cross, 1 Pe. 2. 24, whereby he finished the transgression, made an end of sins, and brought in everlasting righteousness, Da. 9. 24. 'The world' of Jew and Gentile, wherein the sacrifice of Christ differed from those of the law, which were appointed exclusively for the Jews. C.

Ver. 47. Behold an Israelite indeed. Jacob obtained the name of Israel after wrestling in prayer with the Angel of the Covenant, Ge. 32. 24, 28: and it seems most probable that Nathanael, when 'under the fig-tree,' ver. 48, had been similarly engaged.—In whom is no guile, no deceit in purpose or word, grace having already so purified his heart. C.

Ver. 51. The allusion seems evidently to the ladder of Jacob's vision, Ge. 28. 12, and the meaning, that Christ is the only medium of communication between earth and heaven.—Angels ascending —bearing the spirits of departed believers, Lu. 16. 23.—Descending—to 'minister to the heirs of salvation,' He. 1. 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Infinite and divine are the glories of our Mediator! He is the eternal God, equal with his Father; he is the Creator of all things, and the original source of all light, life, and honour, in the world.—Marvellous is his person as God-man, and full of grace and truth for our supply! His divine nature puts the most wonderful dignity upon his condescension, and on his offering himself a sacrifice to pardon our sins. And his character and mission are gloriously attested by apostles, by John the Baptist, and by his Father and blessed Spirit. Alas! that any, especially such as enjoy his oracles and favours, should remain ignorant or obstinate rejecters of him! But happy are they whom he persuades by his grace, adopts into his family, conforms unto his image, supplies with his light and life, humbles by his influence, informs by his Spirit, instructs by his visits, and honours in his service. And the more honour God puts upon men, the more humble they ought to be. The more they know of Christ and his work, the more they ought to extol him, that others, particularly their relations, may seek and follow him. It is habitual not transient fellowship with him that will supply the need and satisfy the desires of real believers. Acquaintance with him is the best answer to all prejudices and objections against him. They who find him cannot but exult in their acquisition. And great is the honour to have his attestation of our secret devotion and universal integrity.—Our views of his glory are but beginning and will be for ever on the advance. And angels and men will eternally behold, and increasingly admire and serve him, in his kingdom above.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. The third day from that on which Jesus had departed from Bethany 'beyond Jordan,' not Bethany near Jerusalem (so called according to high authority of MSS.), but called Bethabara, ch. 1. 28 of the received text. There is no difficulty in concluding that both names may have been given to the same town. C.

Ver. 9. Ruler of the feast. Some think the chief guest: others, the chief domestic who, in either capacity, did not sit at table, but attended to the supply of the others. That an evidently poor family had not any chief domestic to preside, appears probable; the ruler was therefore a friend, as his familiarity with the bridegroom seems to imply, one part of whose duty was to taste the wine, and then send it to the guests. C.

Ver. 15. He drove them all—that is, the dealers, whom he expelled merely by authoritative injunction, ver. 16, the cattle only he would drive with the scourge. These dealers, being very unpopular because of their extortions, and conscious that they were profaning the temple and violating the law, and seeing Jesus surrounded by so many zealous followers, yield to an authority which otherwise their avarice and self-interest would have prompted them to resist. It is, moreover, not improbable that there was something so commanding in our Lord's manner, and in his character for working miracles, which must by this time have become public, that the most reluctant felt compelled to yield implicit obedience.—Note, It is matter of question whether our Lord cleansed the temple once or twice. Matthew (ch. 21. 12) and Mark (ch. 11. 15) certainly record such a cleansing near the end of his ministry, which same act some think John has also recorded, without reference to order of time. The narratives, however, are accompanied by such notes of difference as seem clearly to indicate two distinct cleansings—the one at the opening, the other at the close of our Lord's ministry. See note on ver. 20. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those weddings which are directed by Christ's law, graced with his presence, and ratified by his blessing! With innocent pleasures friends may feast together, if they act as under his eye. Religion requires us not to be unsocial, but to rejoice with them that rejoice. In the very height of earthly comforts there is indeed something still wanting. But there are no wants in which Christ cannot supply us. And if we wish to receive his blessings, we must not prescribe to him, but follow his directions. Nor need we be discouraged by rebukes and delays; his mercies come soon enough if they come large and sweet in the end. And the more we see of his glory, the more firmly shall we believe in him, and desire to be with him. Jesus makes but a short stay where he is signally contemned. And the most heaven-daring corruptions are introduced into churches by the love of filthy lucre. But wisely Jesus manifests his glory, vindicates the honour and maintains the purity of these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him.

3 Jesus answered and said unto him, [c]Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man [d]be born again,[3] he cannot see the kingdom of God.[4]

4 Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born?

5 Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man [e]be born of water, and of the Spirit, he [f]cannot enter [h]into the kingdom of God.

6 That[i] which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.

7 Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again.[5]

8 The wind[6] bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound[7] thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.

9 Nicodemus answered and said unto him, How[j] can these things be?

10 Jesus answered and said unto him, [k]Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?

11 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, [l]We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and [m]ye receive not our witness.

12 If[n] I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?

13 And[p] no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven.[8]

14 ¶ And[q] as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up:

15 That[r] whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.

16 ¶ For[s] God so loved[9] the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that [t]whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

17 For[u] God sent not his Son into the world to condemn[1] the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

18 ¶ He[v] that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

19 And[x] this is the condemnation,[2] that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.

20 For[y] every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved.[3]

21 But[z] he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that [a]his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God.

22 ¶ After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land[4] of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and [b]baptized.

23 ¶ And John also was baptizing in Ænon near to [c]Salim, because there was much [d]water there: and [d]they came, and were baptized.

24 For[e] John was not yet cast into prison.

25 ¶ Then there arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying.[6]

26 And[g] they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, [h]to whom thou barest witness, behold, the same [i]baptizeth, and [j]all men come to him.

27 John answered and said, [k]A man can receive[7] nothing, except it be given him from heaven.

28 Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, [l]I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him.

29 He[n] that hath the bride is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which stand-divine ordinances, without injuring civil property.—He knows what is in man, and can overawe the spirits of his most powerful and presumptuous enemies. And he had a sovereign power over his own natural life, as God equal with his Father. Alas! how ill understood, much hated, or but feignedly believed, are his words of truth! Corrupt hearts little relish reforming authority. Even believers slowly comprehend the nature of Christ's kingdom. And sometimes it is not till long after they are heard that divine truths are remembered, understood, and believed. There is great need to avoid trusting in men, and to be careful whom we take for our friends. And studiously should we beware of hypocrisy, as Jesus hath an exact knowledge of our hearts.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 3, 5, 6, 8. I, who am truth itself, solemnly assure you that be a man's moral attainments, religious advantages, or external privileges what they will, he can by no means be a true member of the gospel church, or admitted into the heavenly state, except his heart and life be thoroughly changed in their principles, courses, and ends, and there be a new vital principle of holiness formed in him by the divine influence of the Holy Ghost. Whoever is born of sinful parents, though it were ever so often, must be still sinful, and so unfit for fellowship with God. But whoever has by choosing Christ a principle of grace and holiness, working by the Holy Ghost, in all the powers of his soul, and acts accordingly, is made meet for the enjoyments and duties of the gospel state, and for the inheritance of the saints in light.—Nor is it any wonder that you cannot conceive how the Holy Ghost enlightens, quickens, and sanctifies the souls of men, when you cannot even account for the causes and motions of the wind. 11–13. My forerunner and the prophets, and especially I, my Father, and the blessed Spirit, speak and attest what we understand and know to be certainly true; but, through blindness and prejudice, ye Jews neither understand, believe, nor embrace our doctrine. If therefore you do not understand nor believe the nature or necessity of that work of grace which must be experienced on earth in order to salvation, when thus familiarly illustrated to you from earthly similitudes, how could you understand or believe my declarations of the more sublime mysteries of the gospel, relative to the dignity of my person and office, the design of my works, the spiritual nature of my kingdom, and the blessedness of the future state, which no mere man can comprehend, or fully declare to others, but only the Messiah who came from heaven, and who even now is still there, in respect of his divine nature? 14–17. And yet that divine person the Messiah must be put to an ignominious death, in order to his bringing about the salvation of sinners; for as Moses lifted up the brazen serpent on a pole in the wilderness, as God's ordinance for effectually healing all the Israelites who had been mortally bitten by the fiery serpents, and looked on it for a cure, so the Messiah, who appears in the likeness of sinful flesh, though holy, harmless, and undefiled, must be lifted up on the cross, and afterwards exalted in heaven, and exhibited as God's ordinance in the gospel, for sinners to look to, by faith, for salvation; that every one, of whatever rank, degree, or nation he be, who, under an affecting sense of his own sinfulness and obnoxiousness to divine wrath, shall, according to God's appointment, look to and trust in him for salvation, may be delivered from all sin and misery, and be made a partaker of grace here and glory hereafter, however weak his faith be, or great or many his sins have been. For God, who delights in mercy, looking with compassion on the sinful and miserable state of mankind, conceived such an amazing and unparalleled design of mercy and love towards the whole of them, both Jews and likewise Gentiles, that he freely gave his only begotten to be their Mediator and atoning sacrifice, that who soever receives him as God's free gift offered in the gospel, and depends on him for salvation, might not perish in his sins, however great or many, but obtain an everlasting life of holiness and happiness. For God sent not his Son into the world to pass and to execute a sentence of condemnation upon all others beside you Jews, as many of you think, but that persons of all nations may be really saved from sin and misery, and blessed with everlasting holiness and happiness. 18–21. And every one, Jew or Gentile, who believes on Christ, as freely offered in the gospel, is freed from the condemning sentence of God's law; but whosoever rejects or neglects him remains under the curse; yea, his guilt is increased, and his sentence of condemnation fixed and extended, through his rejecting the only Saviour and salvation by unbelief. And this will peculiarly aggravate the sin and misery of many, that, when blessed with the clearest light of the glorious gospel, they, both Jews and Gentiles, through attachment to their own corrupt courses, will prefer their vain traditions, superstitious and idolatrous notions and worship, to it. For every one that is resolved to adhere to his sins heartily hates the truths of divine revelation, which oppose and condemn them, stifles convictions, and shuns the light of that knowledge which presents his darling corruptions in their shameful, hideous, and dangerous forms; but an upright saint, who practises whatever divine truths he knows, is sincerely willing to be tried to the utmost, and to know the whole of the divine will, that his whole conduct, being regulated thereby, may evidently appear the effect of God's regenerating power, and the fruit of vital union and communion with him, and may tend to his glory. 27–30. Both Jesus and myself have our whole commission and success from God; nor can any receive our plain instructions without being enlightened and enabled by God. I appeal to you that I openly declared I was not the Christ, but only his forerunner, to prepare the nation for the manifestation of himself. As his friend, I have laboured to gain sinners to him, the glorious Bridegroom of his church; and I exceedingly rejoice to hear and see them following after and cleaving to him, whose property they are. For it is necessary that the manifestations of his glory, and the number of his disciples, should so continue and increase, that there will be no more use for me as his forerunner. 31–34. I, and every one of the ancient prophets, are but earthly in our origin and frame, and cannot of ourselves speak of divine things but in a weak, gross, and earthly manner; but he, being the Lord from heaven, and endowed with the Holy Ghost above measure, understands the whole mind of God, and speaks of heavenly things as one fully acquainted with them. And yet, alas! how few heartily believe and receive his instructions! but every one who believes them solemnly acknowledges him to be the Messiah, in whose person and work all the promises of God are, or will certainly be, fulfilled to the praise of his love. 35, 36. Nay, such is the superlative love of the Father to this his only begotten Son, who freely undertook to be our Mediator, that he has committed to his management all things relating to the kingdoms of providence, grace and glory, that he may judge and subdue the world, and distribute blessings among all people. Whosoever therefore receives his doctrine, and believes on him as the Son of God and Saviour of sinners, hath already in himself the beginnings, securities, and foretastes of eternal life, which may certainly issue in the complete enjoyment of it; and whosoever wilfully and finally rejects him lies under the most awfully righteous justice of God, which shall certainly be completed fully to the uttermost, and for ever.

Ver. 2. This case of Nicodemus is recorded chiefly for the exposition of the new birth from above: but also for the encouragement of timid believers who, in fear of men's ridicule or displeasure, have not obtained full courage to follow conscience, and openly avow their profession of truth and godliness. But 'him that was weak in the faith' Christ received without reproach, and treated with tenderness; let 'them that are strong' 'go and do so likewise.' C.

Ver 5. Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit. If this be spoken of what Bloomfield, Valpy, and others call 'baptismal regeneration,' then what availed the promise to the penitent thief? and what is the condition of myriads of the children of believers dying in infancy who were never baptized? Should not the passage rather be translated, 'Except a man be born of water, even of the Spirit,' of which water was the scriptural emblem? see Is. 44. 3. Eze. 36. 25–37. And this translation is in perfect accordance with that of many passages exactly similar in construction—such as 1 Co. 15. 24; 2 Co. 1. 3. Ep. 5. 5; Tit. 2. 13; Jn. 4. 9. See Middleton on Gr. Art. ch. ii. pp. 83, 84; ch. iii. p. 93. This translation seems absolutely confirmed by our Lord's immediate reference of this new birth (see ver. 6.) not to water at all, but entirely to the Spirit. See Mat. 3. 11, where 'water' and 'fire,' as here 'water' and 'Spirit,' denote one thing. C.

Ver. 12. Earthly things. Things that have earthly similitudes, and that take place visibly on the earth.—Heavenly things. These are: (1) The incarnation and mission of the Son, ver. 13. (2) The crucifixion, and salvation by faith, ver. 14, 15. (3) The eternal and gratuitous love of God, &c., ver. 16. (4) The condemnation of unbelievers, ver. 19. C.

Ver. 13. No man hath ascended up to heaven. Moses merely ascended to the top of Sinai—Elijah was taken up—but he that 'came down' is the WORD that 'was God,' who 'became flesh' ch. 1. 14, and 'dwelt among us' as 'Son of man.'—Which is, rather, 'who is being, in heaven;' whose proper dwelling-place is heaven, in 'the glory he had with the Father before the world was.' C.

Ver. 23. Ænon. A town on the west of Jordan, fifty-four miles north-east of Jerusalem, and situated in the district of Samaria. No vestige of its ruins is now to be found. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The miracles of Christ were manifestly divine, and his doctrines plain and important. He was ready to cure the most inexcusable ignorance, and to instruct by night such as were ashamed to own him by day. Infinitely important is the doctrine and experience of the Spirit's gracious implantation of new habits or principles of holiness in our nature, when we choose Christ as our Savior. Yet, alas! how many ministers and others are totally ignorant of it, and prejudiced against it! And because their carnal mind cannot comprehend how or why the Spirit works on the heart; how the Saviour can be at once God and man, in heaven and on earth; or how his being crucified and offered in the gospel, and received by faith, heals and saves sinners, they contemn and deny the same! But amazing is the love of God in setting up his only begotten Son as his ordinance for the salvation of sinners, even the chief, Gentiles as well as Jews. And dreadfully criminal and dangerous is that unbelief which rejects the testimony and offer of God; which hates his glory and detests his truth, as a disturber of indwelling lusts. Nothing can save the man who perseveres in his unbelief. And nothing can damn the soul which by faith credits God's testimony concerning Christ, and receives him as a divine and well-qualified Saviour. It is absurd for professors to be more concerned about external performances of religion than about the real work of grace in their heart. And it is honourable for all, and especially ministers, to view all their gifts and graces as coming from God, and to be content to be debased to the very lowest that Jesus Christ may be exalted, answerably to his Father's love to him, and the authority which he hath given him.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 10, 14. Christ himself, in all his offices, work, and fulness, is God's gift granted freely to sinners; and the water which he gives is the Holy Ghost, in his person, operation, graces, and comforts, which solidly satisfies the soul, weans it from the cares of this world, prevents its perdition, and gradually prepares for, and seek to bring, the eternal and inexpressible holiness and happiness of the heavenly state. 35–38. The coming of yonder crowds of Samaritans to hear and believe on me, betokens the near approach of the gospel dispensation, in which multitudes, both Jews and Gentiles, will be converted to me;—as instruments in which ye shall be honourably owned and supported, and at last amply rewarded, in their and your own eternal salvation;—and shall, together with John Baptist and the ancient prophets, who sowed the good seed of the Word, rejoice in your success;—and being sent by me to preach the gospel in all the world, and having the advantage of all my labours, as also that of the preceding prophets, ye shall perfect that blessed work, which we only began, in the conversion and eternal salvation of men.

Ver. 11. Nothing to draw with. Travellers in the East frequently carry a leathern bucket, with which they draw from public wells by means of the rope and wheel.—The well is deep. Maundrell estimates the depth of the well called Jacob's at thirty-five yards, with five yards depth of water in the bottom. It is cut in the solid rock—what kind is not mentioned—and if it really be the well which Jacob dug, which can scarcely be doubted, it affords an interesting view of the engineering skill, perseverance, and expenditure of those ancient times. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Those who hate the gospel will always be exasperated at its success. And if duty do not require us to stand, it is best to avoid their resentment by flight. Alas, how our sins pained our Redeemer, hunted him to and fro as a vagabond, fatigued him with travel, pinched him with hunger and thirst, exposed him to insult, and the want even of a draught of water! But cheerfully he laboured in seeking and saving that which was lost. Freely was he given by God. Abundant was his fulness of the Spirit, of grace, and every other permanent blessing: and he is earnestly intent on the full bestowal of them! And yet how are his blessings refused, even by such as infinitely need them, and for whom they are prepared! But so pungent are his convictions, so plain his instructions, so spiritual his exhibitions of God and his worship, so attracting his discoveries of himself and his Spirit, that even a heart hardened in whoredom and prejudice could not withstand them. And yet, alas, how often is the believer's sensible fellowship with Christ interrupted when at the very sweetest! A remarkable renovation of heart produces a deep concern for the JACOB'S WELL, WHERE JESUS TALKED WITH THE WOMAN OF SAMARIA. [JOHN, iv:6.]—There has never been the slightest doubt in the minds of all the authorities as to the identity of Jacob's Well. Looking upon this picture we may know that we are looking at the representation of a spot where the Lord Jesus actually sat. Here he conversed with the woman of Samaria while the disciples were gone into the neighboring city to buy meat. The broken columns you see are parts of an old church probably built here in the time of the Crusaders. This is the parcel of ground which Jacob purchased and gave to his son Joseph. The well is now seventy-five feet six inches deep, and seven feet six inches in breadth. The diameter of the opening is seventeen and a half feet. Here Christ gave to the world that marvelous lesson that God was a spirit and sought such to worship him as worshiped him in spirit and in truth.

SYCHAR. [John, iv:5.] While the Savior conversed with the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well, the disciples went into the city of Sychar to buy meat for their midday meal. The above photograph locates the place to which they went. It was about 12 o'clock when the Savior and the disciples reached Jacob's well on their northward journey. Sychar is about two miles from Jacob's well, and in the time of our Savior was a place of importance. It is only a ruined and wretched village now, and would be the last place on earth a modern tourist would expect to find anything to eat. There is not even a store in town now where anything is offered for sale. The few people now here live by farming. Joseph's tomb is between Sychar and Jacob's well, and this whole region is historic of Biblical event.

is called Sychar, near [g]to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph.[3]

6 Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore, being [h]wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well: and it was about the sixth hour.[4]

7 There cometh a woman of Samaria[5] to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink.

8 (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.)

9 Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for[i] the Jews have no dealings[6] with the Samaritans.

10 Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou knewest [j]the gift of God,[7] and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee [k]living water.

11 The woman saith unto him, Sir, [l]thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water?

12 Art[m] thou greater than our[8] father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?

13 Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water [n]shall thirst again:

14 But[p] whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

15 The woman saith unto him, [q]Sir, Give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither.

17 The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband:

18 For thou hast had five husbands;[9] and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly.[1]

19 The woman saith unto him, Sir, I perceive that thou art [r]a prophet.

20 Our[2] fathers worshipped in this mountain; and ye say, that in [s]Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship.[3]

21 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, [t]when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father.

22 Ye[u] worship ye know not what: we [v]know what we worship: for salvation is of the Jews.

23 But the hour cometh, and now is, when the [w]true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit[4] and in truth:[5] for the Father seeketh such to worship him.

24 God[y] is a Spirit:[6] and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.

25 The woman saith unto him, I know that [z]Messias cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell us all things.

26 Jesus saith unto her, [a]I that speak unto thee am he.

27 ¶ And[b] upon this came his disciples, and [c]marvelled that he talked with the woman:[7] yet no man said, What seekest thou? or, Why talkest thou with her?

28 The[d] woman then left her water-pot, and went her way into the city, and saith to the men,

29 Come,[e] see a man which told me all things that ever I did:[8] is not this the Christ?

30 Then[g] they went out of the city, and came unto him.

31 ¶ In the meanwhile his disciples prayed him, saying, Master, eat.

32 But he said unto them, [h]I have meat to eat that ye know not of.

33 Therefore[i] said the disciples one to another, Hath any man brought him ought to eat?

34 Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that sent me,[9] and to finish his work.[1]

35 Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; [k]for they are white already to harvest.

36 And[l] he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: [m]that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together.

37 And herein is that saying true, [n]One soweth, and another reapeth.

38 I[o] sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labour: [p]other men laboured, and [q]ye are entered into their labours.

39 ¶ And[r] many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him for the saying of the woman, which testified, He told me all that ever I did.

40 So [s]when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days.

41 And[t] many more believed because of his own word;

42 And said unto the woman, [u]Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have

1 Since our Lord admits the woman said truly, 'I have no husband'—then, how came he to say to her, 'Go, call thy husband,' ver. 16? In ver. 16 the meaning is, 'Go call (him that is called) thy husband.' In ver. 17, 'Thou hast well said, I have no (real) husband.'—C.

2 Ge. 12. 6; 33. 18-20. Ju. 9. 7. Three Sabbatical had, on Mount Gerizim, built a temple for Manasseh, a Jewish priest, who had married his daughter.

3 Mount Gerizim, the sacred spot of the Samaritans, rose immediately beside the well, and the ruins of the temple which had been built upon its summit were visible from the spot where the woman stood. The great controversy between the Jews and Samaritans was whether worship ought to be offered up on Gerizim or Moriah. As Christ's words proved him to be a prophet, the woman seized upon the opportunity to have the question solved. Our Lord's answer embodies a great principle, that true worship is the worship of the heart, and is acceptable wherever offered.—C.

salvation of others. No shame, no pains, are counted too much to win them to Christ. Perpetual and powerful are the labours of a Saviour; and inexpressible his delight in saving sinners, particularly the Gentiles. Happy is it when the labours of one generation of ministers prepare remarkable fruitfulness for their successors. And greatly efficacious is the gospel when preached and heard as indeed the Word of Christ. It often does most good where it could have been least expected; and helps the bitterest enemies cordially to apply Jesus as their own Saviour. But aggravated is their wickedness who misimprove the best opportu-

HORSESHOEING IN TIBERIAS—ON THE SEA OF GALILEE. [John, iv:43.]—"Now after two days he departed thence and went into Galilee." Tiberias is a city of Galilee, and on the Sea of Galilee where Christ performed so many miracles and uttered so many of His wonderful words. During the time of Herod, Roman luxury was introduced into Northern Palestine from the Sea of Galilee to Cæsarea Philippi. So there are in Tiberias to-day many evidences of the fact that the Romans were here. Herod Antipas was the founder of Tiberias. It is said that he preferred the seaside to any other place of residence, and here surrounded the palace which he built with dwellings for his court, with amphitheaters, bathhouses and temples. We give a picture of a horseshoeing scene, taken in Tiberias. The ground is so completely covered with rocks in Palestine that it is necessary to keep horses shod all the time.

PILLARS OF AHAB, SAMARIA. [JOHN, v:43 ]—In going from Jacob's well at Shechem into Galilee, Christ would pass northward by Samaria, which is about seven miles from Shechem. There is no good reason why the columns in this picture should be called the "Pillars of Ahab," only on the account that Samaria was for a long time the capital of Ahab. These columns were really placed here by Herod in honor of Augustus, and in the days of our Savior this was doubtless a very important city. It is upon an eligible and beautiful location upon a prominence round as a sugar-loaf, from the top of which one gets a sight of the great Jezreel plains and the Mediterranean Sea in the distance. The hill Samaria, upon which the city once stood, is very fertile, and is now cultivated in wheat. The day upon which this picture was taken, our dragoman led us around the city, and the wheat was so high as to be as tall in some places as the tops of our heads while we were upon our horses.

heard him ourselves, and know that [t]this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world.

43 ¶ Now[u] after two days he departed thence, and[v] went into Galilee.

44 For Jesus himself testified, that a prophet hath no honour in his own country.[2]

45 Then[x] when he was come into Galilee, the Galileans received him, having seen [a]all the things that he did at Jerusalem at the feast: for they also went unto the feast.

46 So Jesus came again into [b]Cana of Galilee, where he made the water wine. And there was a certain nobleman,[3] whose son was sick at Capernaum.

47 When he heard that Jesus was come out of Judea into Galilee, he went unto him, and besought[c] him that he would come down, and heal his son: for he was at the point of death.

48 Then said Jesus unto him, [d]Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe.

49 The nobleman saith unto him, Sir, [e]come down ere my child die.

50 Jesus saith unto him, [f]Go thy way; thy son liveth. And the man [h]believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way.

51 And as he was now going down, his servants met him, and told him, saying, [i]Thy son liveth.

52 Then inquired he of them the hour when he began to amend. And they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him.

53 So the father knew that it was at the same hour in the which Jesus [k]said unto him, Thy son liveth: [l]and himself believed, and his whole house.

54 This is again the second[4] miracle that Jesus did, when he was come out of Judea into Galilee.

AFTER this[a] there was a feast of the Jews; and Jesus went up to Jerusalem.

nities. Happy are those troubles which graciously direct sinners to him and his salvation; and when staggerings of heart issue in the firmness of faith. Happy is it when heads of families, great and small, are given to fervent prayer, and deeply concerned for the real and eternal life of children and servants; and when new favours from Christ, and a comparison of spiritual experiences, confirm men's faith; and especially when whole families are converted by his grace!

CHAPTER V. Ver. 17–23. As my Father, who instituted the Sabbath, continually performs his providential works on that as well as on other days, so I, who am his only begotten Son, partaking of the same nature and perfections, must be allowed to work along with him, as is meet.—My union with him, in nature, operation, and design, is such, that I can do nothing separately from him, but do always act in the same work, and in the same manner, and with the same divine power and authority as he does. And such is our union, will, and affection, that nothing of his counsels or operations is ever hid from me: yea, in co-operation with him, I will perform works still greater than the healing a lame man, that, if you will continue obstinate in your unbelief, ye may at least be astonished and confounded thereat. And as he at pleasure can restore the dead to life, so I, with equal power, can not only restore to natural life whoever I please, but bestow upon all who will receive me as their Savior eternal life, and give them power to resist evil. For the Father hath not reserved for himself, nor doth he exercise immediately by himself, the management of the present concerns of providence, or the future judgment of the world, but has intrusted the same to his incarnate Son; that, instead of being offended at his deep humiliation, men might be induced, by his bearing and executing this high commission, to pay the same religious worship and obedience to him as they are obliged to pay to the Father himself: and whoever neglects to honour him in this manner, is held a neglecter of the honour of the Father, who has authorized and is represented by him. 24–30. I, who am truth itself, solemnly assure you, that whosoever heartily receives my doctrine, relative to my person and office, and believes on my Father, who has constituted me Mediator, has a full title to, and the beginnings and earnests of, eternal life, and is completely translated from under the curse and condemnation of the law into a state of justification of life: and that the time is at hand when not only some, corporally dead, shall be restored to life by my word, but even they who are dead in trespasses and sins, will be regenerated and quickened to the obedience of faith, and live for ever: for as the Father has life essentially and necessarily in himself, and communicates life to every living creature, so he has constituted me, his essentially living Son, a quickening Spirit, full of life in myself as Mediator, and authorized me to communicate it to others. Nor need you think it strange that I say dead bodies and souls shall quickly be enlivened by my power; for, at the last day, the whole race of mankind shall by it be raised from the dead, and brought to my judgment-seat. The true saints, quickened by my Spirit dwelling in them, shall be adjudged to the full enjoyment of everlasting life; and they who died in their sins, raised by my power, shall receive a dreadful sentence of condemnation, to their utter and everlasting ruin.—But in all these things I neither do, nor can do, anything separately from my Father; for in all my administrations I proceed as one perfectly acquainted with his mind, and as his Messiah, instructed by him; and my whole management must necessarily be perfectly right, because I therein neither aim at nor pursue any private will of my own, different from, or opposite to, the will of my Father, but exactly discharge the commission which he hath given me in sending me into the world. 31–39. But I do not rest the matter upon my own mere testimony, as if that alone were sufficient: I appeal to that solemn testimony which John bare concerning me, and which ye cannot object against, since ye acknowledged him an eminent prophet, submitted to his baptism, and, for a time, appeared extremely fond of his instructions, till he offended you by his sharp reproofs and his attestations of my Messiahship. I mention his testimony, not as if it could establish my divine or mediatorial character, but only that I may reason with you upon your own principles, and omit nothing which may tend to your conviction and salvation.—For the miraculous and gracious works which I have performed, or will perform by my own power, are so great and good, as plainly to manifest me the Son of God and the promised Messiah. And the Father himself, in a manner which none of your nation ever before heard or saw, has, by a voice from heaven, attested me as his beloved Son, in whom he is well pleased. But it is evident, by your continued rejection of me, that neither his immediate declaration, nor the words of his prophets, make any lasting impression on you.—As ye profess to read and study the books of the Old Testament, as containing the true doctrine of eternal life, and as a mean of securing your eternal happiness, I charge you still more earnestly and impartially to search them, and observe what they teach: for they, in their types, promises, and prophecies, and the Holy Ghost by them, concur to represent me as the Son of God and the Saviour of the world. 40–47. But notwithstanding all this evidence, such is your pride, prejudice, carnality, and wilful obstinacy, that you will not apply to nor trust in me for pardon, peace, life, and salvation, in whom alone they are to be found. I neither need, have, nor seek human applause or external pomp and grandeur, but only aim at advancing the glory of God in the salvation of men. But I know that, notwithstanding all your high professions, ye are quite destitute of the love of God, and have the love of the world reigning in your heart. Hence, when I am come, authorized by JEHOVAH, and sufficiently attested to glorify him, to effect a spiritual salvation from sin and wrath, ye reject me, because I oppose your darling vices, and give you no ground to expect worldly riches, honour, power, or pleasures. But if any mere impostors should flatter you in your sins, and promise you temporal deliverances, wealth, and grandeur, ye will readily entertain and follow them, to your own destruction.—And, indeed, while your hearts are so full of carnal ambition of worldly honours and applause, and so regardless of the spiritual, substantial, and eternal honours which God alone bestows on his people, it is impossible that ye can believe on me, whose appearances are so mean and doctrines so self-denying. But though I charge home your faults upon you for your conviction, I came not to spy out, aggravate, or accuse you of your crimes to God, but to be a merciful Saviour and Advocate. Nor need I turn your accuser, when Moses, by whose law ye expect to be saved, by his writings sufficiently indicts and condemns you for your unbelief and other wickedness: and had ye believed his declarations, ye could not but have believed me, as all the types in his law, and the prophecies recorded by him, evidently point to and are fulfilled in me. But if ye will not be convinced by what he, for whom you profess so high a regard, hath said, it cannot be expected that ye will believe me, whom ye treat with contempt, and run down as an impostor.

Ver. 4. An angel. Some imagine 'a messenger from the Sanhedrim;' and many ascribe the sanative power of the water to water stepped in, was made whole of whatsoever disease he had.

VIEW OF JERUSALEM FROM BETHESDA. [JOHN, v:2.]—"Now there is at Jerusalem by the sheep market a pool which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda, having five porches." Jerusalem is interesting from all points of view, but somehow the view of the Holy City takes on additional interest when we are looking at it from some point connected with our Savior. Perhaps the most suggestive view of Jerusalem is from the Mount of Olives, because looked over from this sacred height by our Lord so often. Bethesda is a very interesting place from which to contemplate the city of David, because here Christ healed an impotent man of an infirmity that had afflicted him for thirty-eight years. It was this miracle of Christ that provoked the wrath of his countrymen, because it was wrought on the Sabbath.

5 And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity [d]thirty and eight years.

6 When Jesus saw him lie, and [e]knew that he had been now a long time in that case, he saith unto him, [f]Wilt thou be made whole?

7 The impotent man answered him, Sir, [h]I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool: but while I am coming, another steppeth down before me.[7]

8 Jesus saith unto him, [i]Rise, take up thy bed, and walk.

9 And [j]immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked: and on the same day was the sabbath.

10 ¶ The Jews therefore said unto him that was cured, It is the sabbath-day: [k]it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed.

11 He answered them, He that made me whole, the same said unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk.

12 Then asked they him, What man is that which said unto thee, Take up thy bed, and walk?

13 And he that was healed [l]wist not who it was: for Jesus [m]had conveyed himself away, a multitude being[8] in that place.

14 Afterward Jesus findeth him in [n]the temple, and said unto him, [p]Behold, thou art made whole: sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee.

15 The man departed, and [q]told the Jews that it was Jesus which had made him whole.

16 And therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, [r]and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the sabbath-day.

17 ¶ But Jesus answered them, [s]My Father worketh hitherto,[9] and I work.[1]

18 Therefore the Jews [t]sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making[u] himself equal with God.

19 ¶ Then answered Jesus and said unto them, [v]Verily, verily, I say unto you, [w]The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise.[2]

20 For[x] the Father loveth the Son, and showeth him all things that himself doeth: and he will show him greater works[3] than these, that ye may marvel.

21 For as the Father [y]raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will.

1 God works in upholding, by an unceasing exercise of his almighty power, the universe and its wondrous mechanism; he works in providence, watching over and providing for the wants of his dependent creatures. —So Christ worked, healing the sick, giving food to the hungry, and performing acts of love and mercy. The principle in accordance with which the Sabbath is to be observed is thus indicated. We are not to rest in indolence, in simple cessation from manual or mental toil: but we are to follow the divine example, and engage actively in works of necessity and mercy, whether in regard to ourselves or to others.—P.

My 'works are only indirect testimonies: the Father himself, who sent me, has given direct testimony concerning me. Now that testimony cannot be derived by you, nor any man, by direct communication with him; for ye have never heard his voice nor seen his shape. Nor, in your case, has it been given by that inward witness which those have in whom his 22 For the Father judgeth no man, [z]but hath committed all judgment unto the Son;

23 That[a] all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath sent him.

24 Verily,[c] verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life.

25 Verily, verily, I say unto you, [d]The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live.

26 For[e] as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself;

27 And[f] hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because[4] he is the Son of man.

28 Marvel not at [h]this:[5] [i]for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice,

29 And shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.

30 I[j] can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just: because [k]I seek not mine own [l]will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me.

31 ¶ If I bear[6] witness of myself, my witness is not true.[7]

32 There[l] is another that beareth witness of me; and I know that the witness which he witnesseth of me is true.[8]

33 Ye[m] sent unto John, and he bare witness unto the truth.

34 But I receive not testimony from man: [n]but these things I say, that ye might be saved.

35 He[p] was a burning and a shining light: and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light.

36 ¶ But I have greater witness than that of John; for the [q]works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.

37 And[r] the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. [s]Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape.

38 And ye have not his word [t]abiding in you: [u]for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not.

39 ¶ Search[v] the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: [x]and they are they which testify of me.[9]

But a messenger from the Sanhedrim could have performed no miracle, and as the first stepping in after the troubling of the water was the person healed, the whole matter was a standing, but occasional, miracle, which God, for wise purposes, had been pleased to continue as a witness to an unworthy generation. C.

Ver. 14. Sin no more. Our Lord seems, in this admonition, to refer to some youthful sins of this old man, by which his disease had been induced; and as the man was evidently friendless, ver. 7, and most probably a stranger—so that our Lord could know nothing of his history—in this reference he gives him an evidence of supernatural knowledge as well as power.—Note. As 'the wages of sin is death,' so are diseases the earnest of the payment. That sometimes they are punishments is obvious to the senses, as in the case of intemperance: at other times they are admonitions to watch, pray, and be ready: at other times they are exercises of faith, producing more fruitfulness in the sufferers: and other times they are examples of patience, whereby God is glorified, his children and saints strengthened, and sinners induced to pray that they might 'die the death of the righteous.' C.

Ver. 18. Because he said that God was his Father, ποτερα ἴδιον, his own (personal) Father. The whole Jewish nation considered God their Father. They must, therefore, have understood our Lord in a very different and infinitely higher sense. C.

Ver. 19. The Son doeth nothing of himself. No person in the Godhead acts independently of the other. 'These things doeth the Son,' not such things, but 'the same things'—acting in perfect union of nature and consent of will with the Father. C.

Ver. 23. This perfect equality, nay identity, of 'honour' between the Father and the Son not only proves the Godhead of 40 And[v] ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.

41 ¶ I[x] receive not honour from men.

42 But [a]I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you.

43 I[b] am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not: [c]if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive.

44 How[d] can ye believe, which receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that cometh from God only?

45 ¶ Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: [e]there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, [f]in whom ye trust.

46 For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: [h]for he wrote of me.

47 But, [i]if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?[1]

CHAPTER VI.

1 Christ feedeth five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes. 15 Thereupon the people would have made him king. 16 But withdrawing himself, he walked on the sea to his disciples: 26 reproveth the people flocking after him, and all the fleshly hearers of his word: 32 declareth himself to be the bread of life to believers. 66 Many disciples depart from him. 68 Peter confesseth him. 70 Judas is a devil.

AFTER these things [a]Jesus went over the [b]sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias.[1]

2 And[c] a great multitude followed him, because they saw his miracles which he did on them that were diseased.

3 And [d]Jesus went up into a mountain, and there he sat with his disciples.

4 And[e] the passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh.

5 When[g] Jesus then lifted up his eyes, and saw a great company come unto him, he saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?

6 And this he said to [h]prove him: for he himself knew what he would do.

7 Philip answered him, Two hundred penny-worth[2] of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little.

8 One of his disciples, [i]Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto him,

9 There is a lad here, which hath five barley-loaves, and two small fishes: [j]but what are they among so many?

10 And Jesus said, [k]Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand.

11 And[l] Jesus took the loaves; and when he had [m]given thanks,[3] he distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down; and likewise of the fishes as much as they would.

12 When they were filled, he said unto his disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost.[4]

13 Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley-loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten.

14 Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, [o]This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the [5]world.

15 ¶ When[p] Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a king, he departed again into a [6]mountain himself alone.

16 And[q] when even[7] was now come, his disciples went down unto the sea,

17 And entered into a ship, and went[8] over the sea toward [r]Capernaum. And it was now dark, and Jesus was not come to them.[9]

18 And [s]the sea arose by reason of a great wind that blew.

19 So when they had rowed about five and twenty or thirty furlongs,[1] they see Jesus [t]walk-the Son, but, from the strong declaration of our Lord, both positively and negatively expressed, may be gathered the heinousness of the infidelity that denies his Godhead, involving practical atheism, inasmuch as it makes the Father a liar in the testimony he has so abundantly and frequently given to his Son, 1 Jn. 5. 10. C.

Ver. 25. It is evident, since 'the hour now is,' that 'the dead' to whom our Lord here refers are 'the dead in trespasses and sins,' Ep. 2. 1, whom he 'quickens' into the life of faith by his Word and Spirit. C.

Ver. 26. Given. The Godhead of the WORD, of the SON OF GOD, is eternal, and therefore underived; but everything possessed by Jesus, as the Christ, is 'given' from the Father, whose 'Servant' he became by the incarnation, Phi. 2. 6–11; Heb. 10. 7–10; Ga. 4. 4. C.

Ver. 37. Ye have neither heard his voice, &c. That the whole people of the Jews heard the 'voice' of God at Sinai that they saw his 'shape,' rather the visible representation of his presence, in the Shekinah, is recorded by Moses—and also that many of them heard the voice of God at our Lord's baptism, is declared by Matthew.—May not the apparent contradiction, however, be fully removed by taking the word 'heard,' as it often is, to mean hearing, 'in attending, believing, and obeying.' See Ex. 6. 12; De. 30. 17; Is. 30. 9; 55. 3; Je. 11. 10; Eze. 3. 27; 33. 31; Mat. 10. 14; 18. 17; Jn. 9. 27; Lu. 18. 21; 1 Co. 14. 21; Ga. 4. 21; Re. 1. 3. The word 'seen' being likewise taken to signify, as it often does, to 'discern, discover, and acknowledge'—is a literal statement of fact:—for when the Jews 'saw' Jesus, they neither discerned, discovered, nor acknowledged any 'form, or comeliness, or beauty, that they should desire him,' Is. 44. 9; 53. 2; Je. 5. 21; Mat. 13. 13; Jn. 3. 3; 12. 40; Ro. 7. 23; 11. 8. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a great mercy that our world is not altogether filled with persons diseased, since sin hath introduced such a variety of evils. Marvellous, as well as numerous, were the types by which God prefigured his Messiah. And who, sensible of spiritual distempers, would not gladly wait at the pool of ordinances for relief! Jesus graciously prevents the most needy and miserable with his mercy: and his word powerfully convicts and enables to obedience. And yet much weakness and ignorance sometimes remain for a while. It is wonderful that his kindness should have occasioned to him such malicious hatred and envy. And marvellous is his wisdom, that this abuse of him should be the mean of a more clear manifestation of himself, as the Son of God and promised Messiah. How sufficient is he to save sinners who is both God and man; one with, and equal to, God; knowing, willing, and performing the same things as JEHOVAH his Father! Even in his mediatorial character he is the absolute Lord of life and death, who manages all providences, quickens the dead, examines all causes, and distributes eternal happiness according to men's deeds. Faithfully he executes his office, to the glory of God and the salvation of men. And worthy is he to be honoured and worshipped equally with the Father, that God may be glorified and worshipped in him. What ground is there for the most undoubting confidence in him who hath such attestation from prophets, from miracles, from God himself! And it becomes us seriously to search the Scriptures, where every saving truth concerning him is to be found. But, alas! fearful are the effects of ignorance, pride, and carnal ambition. No clear and earnest ministrations of truth can affect such as are under the power of these things. —Owning the authority of the Scriptures, they neither understand, believe, nor practise them. Pretending regard to Jesus, they will never receive him for salvation, and yet are ready to run after the vilest impostors. —It is the highest folly to lean to the broken law for happiness when it so charges us with our sins: and greatly absurd to prefer men to Christ, and yet disregard even these our human favourites when they instruct us concerning Christ.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 27–29. Beware of laying out your principal care and labour about temporal provision or other perishing enjoyments; but chiefly inquire after, and labour to possess, those spiritual and eternal blessings which I, as anointed and miraculously attested by my Father, freely give to every one that believes in me. Your great and important work, which God commands and seeks as a source of obedience and means of acceptance, is cordially to believe on and receive me, as the SENT of God, and his unspeakable gift offered in the gospel. 30, 31. What token can you produce of your Messiahship, and superiority to Moses, who not merely multiplied provision, but for forty years miraculously nourished our fathers in the wilderness with manna from heaven? 32–59. Christ calls himself bread in allusion to the manna, and because he, in his person, offices, work, and fulness, is the mean of all our spiritual and eternal life, happiness, and comfort. He is the true bread, of which the manna and all the bread used in the ancient oblations were but a typical shadow, and which is infinitely excellent, important, and permanent in its virtue. He is living bread, having all life in himself as Son of God, and as Mediator, and as being the Author of all spiritual life to sinful

TIBERIAS, ON THE SEA OF GALILEE. [John, vi:23.]—"Howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias nigh unto the place where they did eat bread, after the Lord had given thanks." Before us is a picture of this same Tiberias as it appears to-day. We see the little boats out on the sea, doubtless like those used in the time of our Lord. We see the fishermen's nets drying. We see the cactus and the palm trees, and the scattering fig and olive trees. We have in this picture all the things well nigh representative of Tiberias as it is to-day—sea, boats, nets, ruins, palm tree, fig tree, olive tree and one new building. Once the magnificent expression of Roman power and Roman taste in architecture, Tiberias is now the broken and desolate home of about four thousand Jews, who themselves seem also to be desolate and without heart.

20 But he saith unto them, It is I; be not afraid.

21 Then [v]they willingly received him into the ship: and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went.

22 ¶ The day following, when the people which stood[2] on the other side of the sea saw that there was none other boat there, save that one whereinto his disciples were entered, and that Jesus went not with his disciples into the boat, but that his disciples were gone away alone;

23 (Howbeit there came other boats[3] from Tiberias,[4] nigh unto the place [x]where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks:)

24 When the people therefore saw that Jesus was not [y]there, neither his disciples, they also took shipping, and came to Capernaum,[5] seeking for Jesus.

25 And when they had found him on the other side of the sea, they said unto him, Rabbi, when camest thou hither?

26 Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, [z]Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles,[6] but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled.

27 Labour not[7] for [a]the meat which perisheth, but for [b]that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which [c]the Son of man shall give unto you: [d]for him hath God the Father sealed.[8]

28 Then said they unto him, [e]What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?

29 Jesus answered and said unto them, [f]This is the work of God, that ye believe[9] on him whom he hath sent.

30 ¶ They said therefore unto him, [h]What sign[1] showest thou then, that we may see, and believe thee? what dost thou work?

31 Our[i] fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat.

32 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven;[2] but my Father giveth you [k]the true bread from heaven.

33 For[l] the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world.

34 Then said they unto him, Lord, [m]evermore give us this bread.[3]

35 And Jesus said unto them, [n]I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.

36 But I said unto you,[4] That [o]ye also have seen me, and believe not.

37 All[p] that the Father giveth me[5] shall come to me; [q]and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out.

38 For [r]I came down from heaven, [s]not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.

39 And[t] this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day.

40 And this is the will of him that sent me, [u]that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day.

41 The Jews then [w]murmured at him, because he said, I am the bread which came down from heaven.

42 And they said, [x]Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that he saith, I came down from heaven?

43 Jesus therefore answered and said unto them, Murmur not among yourselves.

44 No[y] man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw[6] him: and I will raise him up at the last day.

45 It[z] is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. [a]Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me.

men. He is bread of life, which gives spiritual life to dead souls, and nourishes them up in knowledge and grace, comfort and holiness, to eternal life; and none that receive him by faith shall ever perish with hunger, or thirst for any necessary blessings. His flesh is meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed. His person God-man Mediator, and his righteousness, with the blessings secured by it, are eminent and gracious means of our spiritual and eternal life. To eat his flesh and drink his blood, is by faith to receive and rest on him for salvation, as God in our nature, who has fulfilled the law, and secured, and bestows all heavenly blessings upon us;—and by means hereof Christ dwells in us and we in him. There is the closest union and communion between him and us;—he dwelling in us by his Spirit, and we dwelling in him by the permanent habit of faith, and holding fellowship with him by repeated acts of it. 63, 64. Why do ye conceive prejudice against my saying that I came down from heaven, when in a short time some present shall see me ascend back to it? And the eating of my flesh and drinking of my blood must be understood in a spiritual, not in a carnal sense. It is only the operation of the Spirit of God that quickens souls to a spiritual and eternal life. The carnal eating of my flesh could profit no one. My words, which I have spoken unto you, relate to spiritual things: and are the means of conveying the Holy Ghost, and his enlivening influences, into men's hearts. But some of you, who profess to be my disciples, do not heartily believe in me; and are therefore ready to cavil at my doctrine, and put the most absurd construction on my words.

REFLECTIONS.—Worthy of repeated remembrance are the great works of our Redeemer. He often graciously perplexes his people, that he may have the honour of kindly answering their doubts. And if we have him with us, we can never want any good thing. The more liberal we are to others, from a principle of faith and love, the more liberal God will be to us. But we must never waste anything in hopes of his miraculous supply. Carnal minds greatly mistake the nature of Christ's kingdom. And his ministers ought earnestly to avoid every political office and work. Dark nights of desertion, temptation, and distress often quickly succeed the most delightful seasons of fellowship with Christ, and even himself is suspected for Satan. But under all our distresses his word alone can relieve and comfort. And his presence is doubly precious after fearful storms of darkness and grief. Powerfully do his visits hasten forward his people to the haven of glory. They therefore who truly love him, will grudge no pains to find him: and often they meet with him sooner, and more easily, than they expected. But, alas, that ever he should be sought, not from love, but for some carnal advantages!—What a wonderful, well furnished, and divinely authorized Saviour is Jesus Christ! Heavenly and divine is his original;—deep was his debasement, even unto death;—and high his exaltation to his Father's throne. He hath in himself, and gives to our souls, the living, life-giving, substantial, and abundant provisions of his grace.—And freely granted by himself and his Father to sinful men are all the blessings of his love. Yea, even the weakest act of faith on him secures permanent grace, a glorious resurrection, and eternal life! Every poor sinner is invited to him; and no one who comes, however weak or wicked, shall be neglected or turned away. But none either will or can come till they hear the gospel of Christ, and are 46 Not that any man hath seen the Father,[7] save he which is of God, he hath seen the Father.

47 Verily,[b] verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life.

48 I[c] am that bread of life.

49 Your[d] fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead.

50 This[e] is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die.

51 I[g] am the living bread[8] which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is [h]my flesh, which I will give for the [i]life of the world.

52 The[j] Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, [k]How can this man give us his flesh to eat?

53 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, [l]Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood,[9] ye have no life in you.

54 Whoso[m] eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life;[1] and I will raise him up at the last day.

55 For [o]my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.

56 He[p] that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, [q]dwelleth in me, and I in him.

57 As[r] the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father: [s]so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me.

58 This[t] is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever.

59 These things said he in [u]the synagogue, as he taught in Capernaum.

60 ¶ Many[v] therefore of his disciples, when they had heard this, said, This is an hard saying; who can hear it?

[1] The feast of tabernacles was the third of the three great feasts at which all Jews were required to assemble at Jerusalem. It was so called because during its celebration the people were enjoined to live in tents or booths outside their houses, so as to commemorate the wilderness journey, Le. 23.42,43. It was also called the feast of ingathering, because it took place at the close of the harvest. The time of celebration was from 15th to 22nd Tisri, which corresponded with our September.—C.

64 But[b] there are some of you that believe not. [c]For Jesus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who should betray him.

66 ¶ From[e] that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him.

67 Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away?

68 Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, [g]to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life.

69 And[h] we believe and are sure that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God.

70 Jesus answered them, [i]Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is [j]a devil?[3] quickened and convicted by the Holy Spirit.—Awful is the thought that many should prefer earthly enjoyments to him and his everlasting salvation;—should ignorantly or maliciously cavil at the declarations of his grace; should apostatize from him, offended with his spiritual doctrines or necessary reproofs; or should adhere to him in profession while carnal lusts are indulged in their heart. Never, O my soul, cavil at his words who is the wisdom of God! Never attempt to deceive him who searches the heart. Never neglect him who is thy food and thy life, and the length of thy days. Never refuse him who is the free, the unspeakable gift of God. Never doubt of that salvation which is intrusted to his care, who shuts out none, and turns away none who accept him as Savior. And never desert him who is Christ the quickening Son of the living God, full of grace and truth.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 3, 4. Stay no longer in this poor obscure country, but go preach and work miracles at Jerusalem, that you may make the great and learned men your disciples; and that, their number being increased, they may, on such a public occasion, favour your designs to set up your kingdom; for if you can do any wonderful works, it is proper you should establish and spread your fame by doing them in the most public manner, and in the most famous places, and on the most public occasions, that men of learning and authority may see and be convinced by them. 6, 7. However safely ye who have the favour of worldly men, being like them in your principles, tempers, and designs, may go up at the very beginning of the feast, it is not proper that I, whom they seek to kill, should go up so early, and give them an opportunity to concert measures against me. 16–18. I did not learn my doctrine which I preach by any human assistance; nor is it an invention of my own. But God hath sent me as Mediator, and qualified me to publish it to the world, not to gain applause to myself, but for the advancement of his honour and glory. And whosoever will, by humble, serious, and impartial reading, hearing, meditation, and prayer, labour to understand the will of God, in order to practise it, he shall experience such delight and power in my doctrine as shall prove it really divine. He will perceive that impostors suit their doctrines to the carnal inclinations of men in order to establish their own reputation and carnal interests; and that, as an evidence of my sincerity, and of the truth of my doctrine, I am wholly intent upon promoting the glory of God, who authorized me, and publish only what tends to humble mankind, and reform them from their errors and corruptions. 19–24. When ye profess such zeal for the laws of Moses, why do ye so universally break them? Why, in direct contradiction to an unalterable precept, do ye seek to murder me? When on the Sabbath-day ye circumcise children, and apply cures to the wounded, how absurd is it to seek to murder me, because on the Sabbath I perfectly cured the man who had long been infirm at the pool of Bethesda? Beware therefore of partially indulging prejudices against me on account of my mean appearances, or in favour of your chief priests and rulers, on account of their specious pretences and authority over you; but carefully examine things, and judge according to truth and equity. 28, 29. Ye indeed know my earthly parentage, but my office and original are much higher than ye apprehend. My Father, of whom ye are grossly ignorant, hath, in the faithful fulfilment of his love and promises, sent me into the world.—I have a perfect knowledge of his mind and will, for I am from him, by a peculiar and eternal generation; and as the anointed Mediator, I am authorized by him to reveal the way of salvation to men. 33, 34. It is but a short time that I shall continue preaching and working miracles among you; and then I shall, in my ascension, return to my Father. Then, in your miserable extremities, ye shall earnestly, but in vain, wish for my presence and favour; but ye shall 4 For[d] there is no man that doeth any thing in secret, and he himself seeketh to be known openly. If thou do these things, show thyself to the world.

5 For[e] neither did his brethren believe[4] in him.

6 Then Jesus said unto them, [g]My time is not yet come: but your time is alway ready.

7 The[h] world cannot hate you; but me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil.

8 Go ye up unto this feast: [i]I go not up yet unto this feast; for my time is not yet full come.

9 When he had said these words unto them, he abode still in Galilee.

10 But when his brethren were gone up, then[j] went he also up unto the feast, [k]not openly, but as it were in secret.[5]

11 ¶ Then[l] the Jews sought him at the feast, and said, Where is he?

12 And[m] there was much murmuring among the people concerning him: for some said, He is a good man: others said, Nay; but he deceiveth the people.

13 Howbeit,[o] no man spake openly of him, for fear[6] of the Jews.

14 ¶ Now about the midst of the feast, Jesus went up [p]into the temple, and taught.

15 And the Jews marvelled, saying, [q]How knoweth this man letters,[7] having never learned?[8]

16 Jesus answered them, and said, [r]My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.

17 If[s] any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.

18 He[t] that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory: [u]but he that seeketh his glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him.

19 Did[v] not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? [w]Why go ye about to kill me?[9]

20 The people answered and said, [x]Thou hast a devil: who goeth about to kill thee?

21 Jesus answered and said unto them, I have done one work, and ye all marvel.

22 Moses[z] therefore gave unto you circumcision; (not because it is of Moses, but of the fathers;) and ye on the sabbath-day circumcise a man.

23 If a man on the sabbath-day receive circumcision, that the law of Moses should not be broken;[1] are ye angry at me, because I have made a man every whit[2] whole on the sabbath-day?

24 Judge[a] not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment.

25 Then said some of them of Jerusalem, Is not this he whom they seek to kill?

26 But, [b]lo, he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing unto him. [c]Do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ?

27 Howbeit [d]we know this man whence he is: but when Christ cometh, no[3] man knoweth whence[4] he is.

28 Then cried Jesus in the temple as he taught, saying, [e]Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am: [g]and I am not come of myself, but he that sent me is true, whom ye know not.

29 But I know him: for I am from him, and he hath sent me.

30 Then[h] they sought to take him: but no man laid hands on him, [i]because his hour was not yet come.

31 And[j] many of the people believed on him, and said, When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these which this man hath done?

32 ¶ The Pharisees heard [k]that the people murmured such things concerning him; and the Pharisees and the chief priests sent officers to take him.

33 Then said Jesus unto them, [l]Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto him that sent me.

34 Ye[n] shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come.

35 Then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will he go, that we shall not find him? will he go unto the [o]dispersed among the Gentiles,[5] and teach the Gentiles?

36 What[p] manner of saying is this that he said, Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come?

37 In[q] the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, [r]If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink.[6]

38 He[s] that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water.

39 (But[t] this spake he of the Spirit, which

 For fear* of offending either his friends or his enemies. A state of society frequently occurring, both in regard to opinions and persons, and which requires great care and charity in judging—great caution to avoid giving unnecessary pain or offence—and great honesty of purpose when an opinion must be given, a truth asserted, a character defended, an error refuted, or a sin reproved.—C.

neither find me to your comfort, nor ever follow me to heaven, where even now I am in my divine nature, either to enjoy or persecute me. 37–39. Let every destitute sinner among you who wishes after happiness believe on me, as the only Saviour, that he may be refreshed and satisfied with an abundant, increasing, and continued supply of blessing, which may flow out from his heart, in plentiful streams of good works, for his own and others' edification and comfort.—This signified that all who cordially believed in and received and rested on him for salvation, should, after his ascension to glory, receive an abundant communication of the gifts, graces, and comforts of the Holy Ghost, to refresh and cleanse their souls, and render them fruitful in good works and useful to others; which communication was not to be granted till Christ should have the honour of sending the Spirit to attest his exaltation and influence in heaven, and the Spirit could glorify Christ in the numerous conversions and remarkable holiness and comfort of both Jews and Gentiles.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a mournful case when the Saviour is banished. And base when men, even in religious duties, chiefly aim at their own carnal advantages. It wears but a very suspicious appearance when professors of religion are the darlings of wicked men. And it is highly shameful when the near relations of faithful ministers, or they who have most means of instruction, are the most careless or carnal. Faithful ministers must expect to go through various scenes of good and bad treatment, and the more faithful they are the more of the world's hatred will they experience. Men who hate the truth will always find something to quarrel with. But no malice can destroy them till their life be ended. They may therefore proceed boldly but cautiously in it.—Ignorance of Christ and his doctrines will make men doubt their divinity, or they that believe on him should receive: "for the Holy Ghost was not yet given;[7] because that Jesus was not yet glorified.)

40 ¶ Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, [x]Of a truth this is the prophet.

41 Others said, [y]This is the Christ. But some said, [z]Shall Christ come out of Galilee?

42 Hath[a] not the scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, [b]where David was?

43 So[b] there was a division among the people because of him.

44 And some of them would have taken him; but [c]no man laid hands on him.

45 ¶ Then came the officers to the chief priests and Pharisees; and they said unto them, Why have ye not brought him?

46 The officers answered, [d]Never man spake like this man.[8]

47 Then answered them the Pharisees, Are ye also deceived?

48 Have[e] any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on him?

49 But this people, who knoweth not the law, are cursed.

50 Nicodemus saith unto them, (he that came to Jesus[g] by night, being one of them,)

51 Doth[h] our law judge any man before it hear him, and know what he doeth?

52 They answered and said unto him, Art thou also of Galilee? Search and look: [i]for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet.

53 And[j] every man went unto his own house.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Christ delivereth the woman taken in adultery. 12 He preacheth himself the light of the world, and justifieth his doctrine: 33 answereth the Jews that boasted of Abraham, 59 and conveyeth himself from their cruelty.

JESUS went[a] unto the mount of Olives.[1]

2 And [b]early in the morning he came again into the temple, and [c]all the people came unto him; and he sat down, and taught them.

3 And the scribes and Pharisees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had set her in the midst,

4 They say unto him, Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act.

5 Now[d] Moses in the law commanded us that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou?

6 This they said, [e]tempting[2] him, that they might have to accuse him. But [g]Jesus stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not.

7 So when they continued asking him, he lifted up himself, and said unto them, [h]He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone[3] at her.

8 And again he stooped down, and wrote on the ground.

9 And[i] they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last: and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst.[4]

10 When Jesus had lifted up himself, and saw none but the woman, he said unto her, Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee?

11 She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, [j]Neither do I condemn[5] thee: go, [k]and sin no more.

12 ¶ Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, [l]I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

13 The Pharisees therefore said unto him, Thou bearest record of thyself; thy record is not true.

14 Jesus answered and said unto them, [m]Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true: [o]for I know whence I came, and whither I go; but ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go.[6] raise cavils against them. Prejudice against him will render them blind to the clearest means of conviction, make them reckon appearances realities, and pretend great zeal for God's law while they indulge themselves in the grossest violation of it, and condemn in others what they approve in themselves. But delightfully Jesus vindicates his character, doctrine, and work, to his own and his Father's honour, and to the confusion of his enemies. And serious attention will either convince or confound his opposers. Astonishing are the riches of his grace in offering a full and free salvation to his contemners and murderers. And abundant are the communications that flow from an exalted Redeemer. And it is most dreadful to seek occasions and raise cavils against his kindness. It is dangerous to enjoy ordinances without his presence. And his despisers shall be awfully deprived of him, and all the means of his grace, in a little time. But it is a great mercy that the poor embrace and enjoy him when most men of rank and learning contemn both him and them. Wicked men readily curse whom the Lord hath blessed. But Christ can easily overawe, if not convert, the most stubborn, and render them witnesses for his honour. Easily he can embolden the most cowardly in a time of need, and disappoint and dispirit the crafty. And nothing more plainly manifests a bad cause than that its friends have recourse to persecution rather than to arguments.

15 Ye[p] judge after the [q]flesh: [r]I judge no man.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 3–6. If he had encouraged them to stone her they might have reproached him with cruelty, in partially ordering a severe punishment against one no worse than the publicans and sinners with whom he conversed, or they might have accused him to the Roman governor as an usurper of judicial authority and an abettor of tumults. If he had declared against stoning her, or bade them refer the matter to the Roman governor, they hoped to incense the people against him as an enemy to the law of Moses and their liberty. 12. Having in myself all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, I am come into the world to direct both Jews and Gentiles into the way of life and salvation by my Word and Spirit. And whosoever believeth on me, and follows my direction and pattern, shall not go on in ignorance, error, sin, or misery, but have the saving light and comfort of a spiritual life here and eternal life hereafter. 13–19. Though in ordinary cases a man's testimony concerning himself avails nothing, yet it is otherwise in the case of one who is light and truth itself, and whose original and commission are from God, and whose return is to him; of all which things ye are wilfully ignorant. Ye judge and condemn me only from carnal considerations and appearances; but I interfere with no civil judgment, and at present condemn or punish no man, but call sinners to repentance and salvation; and yet, though I were to pass or execute judgment, my sentence would be just and valid, on account of my oneness with, and commission from, my Father. Nor is my Messiahship destitute of sufficient attestation, since I myself, as a divine person, assert it; and my Father, by his prophets, and by his immediate declarations from heaven, as well as by many other signs, hath attested it. Notwithstanding repeated instructions, ye continue wilfully ignorant of my person and office, and of my heavenly Father, from whom I come to you. If ye had considered me as one in nature, counsel, and operation with him, ye would have seen his perfections shining forth in me, and discerned the relation in which he stands to me, as his Son and mediatorial Servant. 21–26. Knowing how eagerly they desired that he might be murdered before the time appointed by his 16 And[r] yet if I judge, my judgment is true: for I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent me.

17 It[s] is also written in your law, that the testimony of two men is true.

18 I[t] am one that bear witness of myself, and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me.[8]

19 Then said they unto him, Where is thy Father? Jesus answered, [u]Ye neither know me, nor my Father: [v]if ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also.

20 These words spake Jesus [w]in the treasury, as he taught in the temple: and [x]no man laid hands on him; for his hour[9] was not yet come.

21 Then said Jesus again unto them, [z]I go my way, and ye shall seek me, and shall [a]die in your [1]sins: [b]whither I go, ye cannot come.

22 Then said the Jews, [c]Will he kill himself? because he saith, Whither I go, ye cannot come.

23 And he said unto them, [d]Ye are from beneath; [e]I am from above: ye are of this world; I am not of this world.

24 I [f]said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins: for if ye [h]believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins.

25 Then said they unto him, Who art thou? And Jesus saith unto them, [i]Even the same that I said unto you from the beginning.

26 I[j] have many things to say and to judge of you: but he that sent me is true; and [k]I speak to the world those things which I have heard of him.

27 They[l] understood not that he spake to them of the Father.

28 Then said Jesus unto them, [m]When ye have lifted up the Son of man,[2] then [n]shall ye know that I am he, and that [o]I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things.

29 And[q] he that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for [r]I do always those things that please him.

30 As he spake these words, [s]many believed on him.

31 ¶ Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, [t]If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed;

32 And[u] ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

33 ¶ They[3] answered him, [v]We be Abraham's seed, and [x]were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?

34 Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, [y]Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.

35 And[z] the servant abideth not in the house for ever: [a]but the Son abideth ever.

36 If[b] the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

37 I know that ye are [c]Abraham's seed; [d]but ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you.

38 I[e] speak that which I have seen with my Father: and ye [g]do that which ye have seen with your father.

39 They answered and said unto him, [h]Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, [i]If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham.

40 But[j] now ye seek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God: this did not Abraham.[4]

41 Ye[k] do the deeds of your father. Then said they to him, We be not born of fornication;[5] we[l] have one Father, even God.

42 Jesus said unto them, [m]If God were your Father, ye would love me: for [o]I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me.

43 Why[p] do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word.[6]

44 Ye[q] are of your father the devil, and the

* These respondents were, most probably, the captious Pharisees mentioned ver. 13, 19, and whom our Lord accuses of seeking to kill him, ver. 37; but could not be the parties to whom he had just been speaking, for they were 'Jews who believed on him,' ver. 31.—C.

Father, Jesus said to them, I will soon ascend back to my Father, and ye shall earnestly wish to have me among you to deliver you from your miseries, but shall die under the power and guilt of your sin, especially your rejection of me, and be rendered inexpressibly wretched, both in time and through eternity. Nor shall it be in your power to follow me into the heavenly state, either to bring me back, or to partake of my glory.—Being not only of an earthly origin, but of unregenerate hearts and carnal tempers, ye cannot have fellowship with me, who am divine, and whose affections are perfectly set on heavenly things; but on account of your obstinate refusal to embrace and acknowledge me as the promised Messiah and only Saviour, and other sins attending it, your city and nation shall be fearfully destroyed in this world, and yourselves for evermore terribly lost in hell. I still insist on it that I am the Son of God and promised Messiah. I could easily charge you with a multitude of crimes, and condemn you for them; but as that is not my present work, I only tell you that my Father infallibly performs all his promises concerning me and to me, and them that believe in me, and all his threatenings against those that reject me; and whatever I say to men is exactly according to the commission which I have received from his uncontrollable and awful authority. 28, 29. But however ignorant ye now are of me, when once ye have crucified me, and occasioned my exaltation to glory, either the happy influences of my Spirit, or the miseries on yourselves and nation, shall convince you that I act by my Father's authority, and have faithfully declared his doctrines, promises, and threatenings.—And meanwhile my Father, who is one with me in essence, continues with me the unmeasurable unction of his Spirit, and the tokens of his favour to me, as one who always acts agreeably to his will and for his honour. 31, 32. Jesus said to these weak or pretended believers, If ye really embrace and adhere to my holy doctrine, and subject your whole souls to it, ye shall be proved and owned to be my disciples in truth as well as in name; and ye shall be still further enlightened and confirmed in the certainty, excellency, and importance of my gospel; and by means of it be honourably delivered from everything inthralling, mean, or miserable. 34–36. Notwithstanding your haughty, and even notoriously false boasts of civil and religious freedom, I assure you that, be whose descendants you avill, if ye indulge yourselves in the practice of wickedness, ye are slaves under the power of your lusts and the guilt of your sins; and as such all unbelieving Jews, though the natural seed of Abraham, shall be quickly excluded from God's church and favour; while I, the Son of God and eminent seed of Abraham, shall continue as Head of the church, and all true believers abide therein as members. If therefore I, who am the Son of God and Lord of my church, grant you my spiritual freedom, ye shall be really and eminently free from the guilt and dominion of sin, and from the law, as a covenant, and from burdensome ceremonies; and, in fine, free from all evil, and fully possessed of everything glorious and comfortable. 37–41. I know that ye are the natural descendants of Abraham; but ye are so far from being like him in his faith or obedience, that ye seek to murder me, merely because your own proud and carnal hearts cannot relish nor receive the holy, spiritual, and self-humbling doctrine which I preach unto you. I speak and act as one intimately acquainted with, and obedient to, God my Father; and ye act as under the influence of, and in communion and concert with, the devil as your true Father—a very sure evidence that ye are not the genuine and believing children of Abraham. 45–47. Not only do ye discredit the proofs of my Sonship and Messiahship, and the doctrines which I preach, but because I tell you truths which are spiritual and holy, disagreeable to your corrupt inclinations and interests, ye reject both me and them; and so perverse are you, that though lusts of your father ye will do. [r]He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it.

45 And [s]because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not.

46 Which[t] of you convinceth me of sin?[7] And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?

47 He[u] that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God.

48 ¶ Then answered the Jews, and said unto him, Say we not well that thou art [8]a Samaritan,[8] and hast a devil?

49 Jesus answered, [v]I have not a devil; but I[v] honour my Father, and ye do dishonour me.

50 And[w] I seek not mine own glory: [x]there is one that seeketh and judgeth.

51 Verily, verily, I say unto you, [y]If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death.

52 Then said the Jews unto him, Now we know that thou hast a [9]devil. [z]Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and thou sayest, If a man keep my saying, he shall never taste of death.

53 Art[2] thou greater than our father Abraham, which is dead? and the prophets are dead: whom makest thou thyself?

54 Jesus answered, [a]If I honour myself, my honour is nothing: [b]it is my Father that honoureth me; of whom ye say, that he is your God:

55 Yet[A] ye have not known him; but I know him: and if I should say, I know him not, I shall be a liar like unto you: [c]but I know him, and keep his saying.

56 Your father Abraham [d]rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it,[1] and was glad 57 Then said the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham?

58 Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, [e]Before Abraham was, I am.[2]

59 ¶ Then[f] took they up stones to cast at him: [g]but Jesus hid himself,[3] and went out of the temple, going through the midst of them, and so passed by.[4]

CHAPTER IX.

1 The man that was born blind restored to sight. 8 He is brought to the Pharisees. 13 They are offended at it, and excommunicate him: 35 but he is received of Jesus, and confesseth him. 39 Who they are whom Christ enlighteneth.

AND, as Jesus passed by,[1] he saw a man which was blind from his birth.

2 And his disciples asked him, saying, Mas-ye cannot point out the smallest fault in my behaviour or doctrine, ye obstinately persist in your unbelief. From this it is evident that ye are not lovers of God, who are all of them desirous to know, and ready to receive and observe, whatever he speaks. 49–51. My continual and earnest study to advance the glory of my Father in the salvation of the people, fully manifests that in my work I am no way influenced or directed by the devil; nor am I solicitous about either your reproaches or your applause, as I know that my Father will secure me the regard of all faithful people, and will effectually vindicate my character, and punish all the indignities offered to it. And I solemnly assure you that whosoever heartily embraces and holds fast my spiritual and holy doctrine, in faith and obedience, shall be delivered from every real misery, and enjoy everlasting happiness. 56–58. So highly did your father Abraham esteem me, that he earnestly desired to see my appearance in the flesh, and exceedingly rejoiced in the foresight of it. How young soever I be with respect to my human birth, yet I existed from eternity as the unchangeable I AM.

Ver. 25. From the beginning. The original presents a greater difficulty than appears in the translation. John's customary phrase for 'from or at the beginning' being of very different construction. See ch. 6. 64; 8. 44; 15. 27; 16. 4; 1 Jn. 1. 1; 2. 7, &c. Paul, no doubt, uses a phrase for 'at the beginning' similar to that in the text; but the phraseology of John should rather be interpreted by his own writings. If so, the view of Augustine seems preferable: 'Believe me; ver. 24 to be the beginning, head, or chief of all principality and power (see Col. 1. 18; Re. 1. 8; 21. 6) —that which now I declare myself to you.' C.

Ver. 33. We . . . were never in bondage. Some consider this statement a gross historical falsehood, as the Jews had been in bondage to the Egyptians, Philistines, Moabites, Babylonians, and now were subject to the Romans. But such glaring historical facts even Pharisees could not have ventured publicly to deny. The meaning is therefore to be sought in giving a distinctive emphasis to we; and, in point of fact, up till this period the Romans were rather arbitrators and protectors than masters. The Roman bondage did not properly commence till several years after our Lord's resurrection. C.

Ver. 51. These words of our Lord are as literally true of the first as of the second death. That the believer never sees the second death, is unquestioned; but neither does he see the first. Death is literally not death to him. It is a serpent unstinged, an enemy conquered, a power destroyed. He thinks not of the world he is to leave behind, but the heaven to which he is removing, and the crown of righteousness and glory. He does not die, he but departs; he falls asleep in Jesus, and awakes in the morning of the resurrection, when death is swallowed up in victory, Ac. 7. 60; 1 Co. 15. 51–57; 2 Ti. 4. 6–8; He. 9. 14, 15. C.

REFLECTIONS.—There is great need of caution in dealing with malicious hypocrites. Very abominable is adultery, and richly deserving of capital punishment. But those who indulge themselves in it, or any like wickedness, are very unfit to be zealous prosecutors of the guilty. Many fear shame on account of sin more than damnation; and by fleeing from Christ, the merciful Saviour, wilfully destroy themselves. Now he is ready to pardon the greatest transgressions; but he will quickly be an inexorable judge. He is come into our dark world to reveal the method of salvation by the gospel, and to illuminate our hearts by his Spirit. Ignorant of and far from him, we shall certainly wander into everlasting perdition. But under his enlightening influence we shall avoid dangerous errors, be freed from spiritual slavery, and safely arrive at eternal life. Being a divine person, one with and sent by the Father, we may safely rest in and abide by his testimony. But no external evidence is sufficient to persuade a carnal heart. Many were the blasphemous contradictions which he endured in the cause of mercy and truth. While he was horridly insulted by the wicked, the hypocritical, the proud, and malicious children of Satan, as if he had been diabolical and mad. And great was the forbearance and meekness which he manifested in his own vindication. It looks ill when men are enraged by reproof. Unprofitable is descent from the most godly parents if we continue strangers to their faith and holiness. And it is base to boast of such while we obstinately persevere in our sins. It is impossible either to know or believe Christ's words while we remain hardened in carnal lusts and under the power of the devil. Yea, an empty profession of the true religion but tends to make our case still the more miserable. And if we drive Jesus the Saviour from us now, he will at last leave us in our sinfulness and ruin. But happy they who know his truth and have it abiding in their heart, who are conformed to his image, and desire after and delight in him! Thrice glorious their gospel-liberties, and unspeakable their eternal felicities.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 3, 4. It was not on account of any particular crime, either of his own or his parents, more than others, that this man was born blind; but that, by opening his eyes, I might manifest my Father's love, and prove myself to be the Messiah, in miraculously curing him. I must therefore improve the present opportunity of giving him his sight as an emblem of my enlightening blind souls. And since the day of my mortal life hastens to a period, as long as I am in the world I must cure not only corporal blindness, but instruct, enlighten, and comfort them that are spiritually blind. 39–41. I am come to establish a rule of judgment; to alter the present state of the church; to try men's spirits; and, by distinguishing grace, to separate the precious from the vile; to open blind eyes, and teach ignorant souls; and to manifest and occasion the increase of their stupidity and perverseness who, through self-conceit, shut their eyes against the light of my word. If you Pharisees, who pretend to so much knowledge and ability to instruct others, were either grossly ignorant or as sensible of your ignorance as many of the common people, your sin in rejecting me would be far less heinous, and there would be hopes of your deliverance from it; but while you are so self-conceited your sin is highly aggravated, and it is most probable that you will remain under its guilt and power for ever.

REFLECTIONS.—We ought to be extremely cautious in our interpretations of providences. Men's sins are not to be judged of from their sufferings. It is enough that God is righteous, and will make all things turn out to his own glory. We have great need to be diligent in working out our salvation while we have life and opportunity to walk in Christ's light. Marvellous is his power and ready his grace towards the unworthy and distressed. He works the most gracious salvation by means the most unlikely. It is his appointment, not any natural virtue, that renders them powerful. And only in obedience to his authority can we justly expect benefit by them.—What blessed experience of his mercy he gives to the obedient! and with cheerful thankfulness it should be acknowledged to his love. He can easily make the weakest of his followers wiser than their teachers—bold confessors of his name, and humble adorers of his majesty. And if men reject and abuse them for his sake, he will reward them with repeated manifestations of his glory. But, alas! how desirous are some to avoid owning him, even after he hath bestowed singular favours upon them. The fear of men causeth a snare. The censures of the church are often turned against her best friends. But inexcusable are they who, through self-conceit, contemn all means of conviction, and upbraid Jesus and his followers. Rage against reproof most plainly discovers real ignorance. But hopeful is the case of such as perceive their own weakness and sinfulness, and dan-

POOL OF SILOAM. [JOHN, ix:7.]—Siloam is mentioned but three times in the Scriptures. Isaiah, viii:6, 7, refers to the waters of Siloam, which "go softly," in contrast with the sweeping current of the Euphrates. In Nehemiah, third chapter and fifteenth verse, allusion is made to Siloam, where it speaks of the rebuilding of the gate of the fountains by the hands of Shallum. And in the third place we have the reference to Siloam in John, ix:7, where our Lord tells the man born blind to "go wash in the Pool of Siloam," etc. Luke mentions a tower of Siloam, which by its fall occasioned the death of eighteen men. This tower stood by the Pool of Siloam. Jerome says the Spring of Siloam lies at the base of Mt. Zion. Josephus alludes to Siloam. Its sweet water flows to-day just as in ancient times.

ter, who [a]did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?[2]

3 Jesus answered, [b]Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents:[3] but[c] that the works of God should be made manifest in him.

4 I must work the works of him that sent me, [d]while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work.

5 As long as I am in the world, [e]I am the light of the world.

6 When he had thus spoken, [f]he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay,[4]

7 And said unto him, [h]Go, wash in the [i]pool of Siloam, (which is, by interpretation, [j]Sent.) He went[5] his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing.

8 ¶ The neighbours therefore, and they which before had seen him that he was blind, said, Is not this he that sat and begged?

9 Some said, This is he: others said, He is like him: but he said, I am he.

10 Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?

11 He answered and said, A man that is called [k]Jesus made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam,[6] and wash: and I went and washed, and I received sight.

12 Then said they unto him, Where is he? He said, I know not.

13 ¶ They brought to the Pharisees him that aforetime was blind.

14 And it was [l]the sabbath-day when Jesus made the clay, and opened his eyes.

15 Then[m] again the Pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He said unto them, He put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed, and do see.

16 Therefore said some of the Pharisees, This man [n]is not of God, because he [p]keepeth not the sabbath-day. [q]Others said, How can a man that is a sinner do such miracles? And there was a division among them.

17 They say unto the blind man again, What sayest thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes? He said, [r]He is a prophet.

18 But the [7]Jews [s]did not believe concerning him, that he had been blind, and received his sight, until they called the parents of him that had received his sight.

[5] The sending of the blind man, and his ready compliance, without any mention of a guide, when contrasted with the reference to the common practice of leading the blind (Mat. 15. 14), furnishes a striking internal proof of the truth of the narrative, and that it was written by an eye-witness of the fact: for men 'born blind' do frequently acquire the most wonderful local knowledge, so that they can find out any place as readily as those who see. But the inventor of a 'cunningly devised fable' would never have omitted to add to the verisimilitude of the miracle the accompaniment of a guide.—Note, The use of the clay, and washing in Siloam, may perhaps represent that incrustation of worldliness (Hab. 2. 6) which the water of life 'sent from above must wash away before the eyes of a sinner can be spiritually opened; and the act of washing, in obedience to the word of the Lord, may well represent the 'diligent use of all the outward and ordinary means whereby Christ communicateth to us the benefits of redemption.'—C.

[8] Some think the question of the disciples had reference to the doctrine of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the soul of a dead man into a living infant—a doctrine prevalent among the Egyptians, and at least to some extent among the Greeks. But had it been their object to obtain information concerning this doctrine, it seems scarcely possible our Lord should have neglected or refused to answer. Their meaning, therefore, seems rather to be—'Who hath sinned? has this man, that he is become blind? or his parents, that he was born blind?' for, being generally Galileans, they knew nothing about the man or his parents. To give God the praise, or glory, is then equivalent to telling the truth. It was a form of adjuration. So it appears to have been used in this verse.—P.

19 And they asked them, saying, Is this your son, who ye say was born blind? how then doth he now see?

20 His parents answered them and said, We know that this is our son, and that he was born blind:

21 But by what means he now seeth, we know not; or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age; ask him: he shall speak for himself.

22 These words spake his parents, [t]because they feared the Jews: for the Jews had agreed already that [u]if any man did confess that he was Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue.

23 Therefore said his parents, He is of age; ask him.

24 Then again called they the man that was blind, and said unto him, [x]Give God the praise: we know that this man is [8]a sinner.[8]

25 He answered and said, Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not: one thing I know; that, whereas I was blind, now I see.

26 Then[y] said they to him again, What did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes?

27 He answered them, I have told you already, and [z]ye did not hear: wherefore would ye hear it again? will ye also be his disciples?

28 Then they [a]reviled him, and said, Thou art his disciple; but we are [b]Moses' disciples.

29 We know that [c]God spake unto Moses: as for [d]this fellow, [e]we know not from whence he is.[9]

30 The man answered and said unto them, Why [f]herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes.

31 Now[h] we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him [i]he heareth.[1]

32 Since the world began was it not heard [j]that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.

33 If this man were not of God, he could do nothing.

34 ¶ They answered and said unto him, [k]Thou wast altogether born in sins, and [l]dost thou teach us?[2] And they cast him out.[3]

35 ¶ Jesus heard that they had cast him out; [m]and when he had found him, he said unto him, [n]Dost thou believe on the [p]Son of God?

36 He answered and said, [q]Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1–5. I, who am truth itself, solemnly assure you that whoever they are who enter into any office in God's church not according to his appointment, but by methods of their own devising, are intruders and seducers, who, instead of feeding and governing his people, attempt to rob God of his authority over and property in them, and to pervert and destroy their souls. But he who, from right principles and ends, and in the manner appointed by God, enters upon the work of feeding and guiding the church, hath a proper right to take care of his people—those cleanly and tractable, meek, patient, harmless, and cautious, but timorous and exposed, social and useful, fearers of God. And having invested him with all proper authority, God, by his Spirit and the ministry of his servants, opens the hearts of his people to receive him, and they are taught to understand and distinguish his voice in the gospel; while he, by his grace, calls them to himself, in the most blessed manner, and leads them into the good pastures of his Word and ordinances.—In so doing, he, by his instruction and example, shows them the way; and they, understanding and approving the same, willingly yield up themselves to his authority, and tread in his steps. But the true and faithful people of God have a fixed aversion to the unscriptural doctrines and bad example of false teachers, because they perceive their tendency to lead them away from the right way of salvation. 6-9. Finding that, through their self-conceit, the Pharisaic teachers did not comprehend his meaning, Jesus added, I am the only door

37 And Jesus said unto him, [r]Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee.

38 And he said, [s]Lord, I believe. And he worshipped him.

39 ¶ And Jesus said, [t]For judgment I am come into this world, that they which see not might see;[u] and that they which see might be made blind.

40 And some of the Pharisees which were with him heard these words, and said unto him, Are[w] we blind also?

41 Jesus said unto them, [x]If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth.[5] of salvation and way to eternal life, and the only one by whom ministers can have admission to office in the gospel-church, or people have access to spiritual privileges and saving benefits. All that, before me, pretended to Messiahship, and all that oppose me and teach other methods of salvation, are but mere intruders into their office, who rob my Father and me of our honour and property, and destroy men's souls; but God's people, by the use of their enlightened consciences, shall be able to detect their errors. I therefore insist on it, as a matter of infinite importance, that I am the only true door of the church, and entrance to eternal life. Whosoever therefore enters upon religion by faith in me as the only Saviour, shall certainly be protected from spiritual enemies, delivered from misery of every kind, and obtain eternal blessedness; and shall, under the conduct of my Word and Spirit, find access to, liberty in, and spiritual support, nourishment, and comfort, by my divine ordinances. 10–13. False teachers come only to seduce church-members, murder their souls, or plunder and persecute them; but I am come to manifest the method of obtaining spiritual and eternal life, yea, to secure it for them, and to bestow it upon them, in the most universal, unexpected, eminent, inconceivably large, and everlasting manner. I am the eminently and infinitely good Shepherd of the church foretold by the prophets, and who not only lead, protect, and feed, but give my very life, soul, and self, in the stead of the faithful, to secure their eternal happiness.—But they who from selfish views commence pastors in the church, having no real affectionate concern for their people, are unwilling to hazard their life, reputation, or secular interests in their service; but are alway ready to shift for themselves, and leave the people to be seduced or perverted as Satan and his emissaries please. No wonder they are so careless of their hearers' spiritual and eternal advantage when they only entered on their office from a regard to secular advantage. 14–18. And being the infinitely good and the chief Shepherd of the church, I perfectly know, exactly observe, and tenderly care for all faithful people, who are, by my Father's gift, my own sacrifice, and their self-dedication, my peculiar property; and they spiritually know me and my doctrine, and faithfully and affectionately embrace me and hearken to it. And as the Father perfectly knows, loves, approves, and confides in me, I also am perfectly acquainted with him and all his mind, and trust in him, and delight to do his will. Such is my love to him and to all the world that I am willing and ready to lay down my life in its stead, that all may obtain eternal salvation. And besides those Jews which I have called, or will surely call, into my church, I must, in pursuance of my eternal engagements, and in justice to my sacrifice for them, seek to bring in multitudes also of heathen Gentiles, and unite them with those Jews in the gospel-church, new-covenant, or heavenly state, under my tender care, influences, and government.—And not only doth my Father love me as his only begotten Son, but even on account of my zeal for the manifestation of his glory in the salvation of sinful men, in so cheerfully dying for the pardon of their sins, that I might rise again for their justification.—No man, by either stratagem or force, can deprive me of my life without my own consent; but, as absolute proprietor thereof, I voluntarily lay it down, and will, by my own power, rise from the dead, after making satisfaction for the sins of the world according to the commandment and love of my Father. 25–30. Not only have I, in the strongest declarations, asserted my Messiahship, though ye perversely refused to believe me, but I have demonstrated it by my divine and miraculous works: yet such is your obstinacy, that no declarations or demonstrations will persuade you; as I know, from your indifference and hardness, that your affections are fixed on the world, and that because of this you do not wish to hear me and obey me.—As I distinctly know, observe, and love all men, I shall seek to lead them to attend to, distinguish, prize, and willingly obey the voice of my Word and Spirit, and readily follow my instructions and example. And I freely give them an irrevocable right to all spiritual and eternal benefits, lead them now into some enjoyment of them, and, will strive to put them into the full possession.—Nor shall either their own weakness, unworthiness, or sinfulness, make them fall short of heaven, if they will only by faith hold to my words and by prayer and good works consecrate themselves to God. Nay, my heavenly Father, who loves them, and hath a tender interest in them, and who calleth them to me that I might bring them safely to glory, being infinitely superior to all their enemies in power and wisdom, it is absolutely impossible to defeat his gracious designs towards them, or to entice or force them out of his almighty hands, only by their own unfaithfulness. And my Father and I, being the very same in nature, power, and every other perfection, as well as in will and design, we must be both overcome before the weakest of true believers can be deprived of eternal life. 32. Many great and merciful works I have wrought among you, in confirmation of my character, in feeding multitudes of hungry persons, healing all manner of diseases, raising the dead, and casting out tormenting devils. For which of these do you intend to stone me to death? 34–38. And when the Scripture, which is infallible, and must be accomplished, calls your magistrates GODS, who were but types and shadows of the Messiah, why do you perversely charge me, in whom these types are perfectly fulfilled, and whom the Father hath appointed from eternity, and hath sent into the world to exercise all authority as the true Messiah, with blasphemy, for asserting my oneness in nature and perfections with the Father! If I do not perform works as great and glorious as could be expected from the Father, and which, being superior and contrary to the laws of nature, must be performed by that power which is in the Father himself, I do not claim your belief as the Son of God or promised Messiah. But if I perform works peculiar to God, and in a manner proper to him, then, however ye disregard my person or doctrine in itself, submit to the unexceptionable evidence of my miracles, that ye may be convinced that my Father and I have essential and necessary communion in Godhead.

Ver. 3. Calleth his own sheep by name. The eastern shepherds give names to their sheep, as Europeans generally give to their dogs: and by its name the eastern shepherd will call any sheep in his flock, and it will immediately come out and follow him. C.

Ver. 4. Goeth before them. The eastern shepherd, having often to conduct his flock far, and through unfrequented tracts, in search of grass, does not drive, but walks before his flock, which is taught to look to and follow him. C.

Ver. 16. Other sheep. The Gentiles that were not of the Jewish fold, but whom our Lord in due time gathered into one, Ep. 1.10; 2.11–22; 3.6, 15. C.

Ver. 18. I have power, &c. This power or authority of laying down and taking up life is peculiar to Christ.—This commandment (rather, 'this commission') have I received of my Father.—Note, When 'the WORD was made flesh' he came into the world 'to do the will' of his Father: consequently, as Messiah, did nothing but by the Father's authority or commandment. Oh, that believers would remember this part of the condition of Christ 'in the days of his flesh,' and 'go and do likewise!' C.

Ver. 22. Feast of the dedication. This feast was appointed by Judas Maccabæus to commemorate the purification of the temple after it had been profaned by Antiochus. It began on the 25th of Chisleu (answering to part of our December), and lasted for eight days. C.

Ver. 27. My sheep hear my voice. (1) As a voice of truth. (2) As a voice of love and mercy. (3) As a voice of power.—And I know them. (1) In all their waywardness. (2) In all their weakness. (3) In all their sin. (4) In all their troubles, perplexities, and dangers.—And they follow me. (1) In believing on my name. (2) In denying themselves. (3) In bearing my cross through all danger. (4) In bearing witness for me through all gainsaying. (5) In holiness in all manner of conversation. C.

Ver. 30. I and (not my) Father are one—one in energy and power; for power is the attribute in question (see ver. 28, 29) —and therefore one in Godhead; which doctrine results from the identity of divine attributes between the Father and the Son. C.

Ver. 36. Sanctified—set apart for himself (Ps. 4.3) by giving him 'the Spirit without measure,' and dwelling essentially in him, and working the works of Godhead in him and by him, ch. 3.34; 14.10; 17.21. See also ver. 37, 38. C.

Ver. 41. John did no miracle. The performing of miracles is not essential to the proof of a divine commission. All that is absolutely necessary is doctrinal conformity with the Word of God (already established by miracles and prophecy), with holiness of life and singleness of purpose—the visible evidences of the presence, power, and authority of the Spirit of God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Infinitely necessary and useful is Jesus Christ to sinful men, as their shepherd, to seek out, gather, and feed them, as their door and entrance to, and the precious price of, salvation. Indissoluble are his living connections with his people, and kind his regards to them. Unbounded was his love in giving his life for all men, and rising again for their justification. And through him they receive the most holy liberty, inexpressible delight, spiritual supplies, and superabundant and endless felicity. With what transcendent faithfulness, wisdom, and grace, he seeks them out, and strives to bring them into his kingdom and church, and guides, governs, protects, and goes before them through life and death into everlasting blessedness! Infallible is their perseverance, and certain their eternal life, if they continue faithful to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ. But base are the men who, without his commission, thrust themselves into offices in his church, or behave indolently, unconcernedly, or tyranically therein. Let every one that regards the life of his soul flee from them. The purpose of God certainly stands firm, whether with respect to men's salvation or ruin. But how implacable is the rage which words of infinite grace, offers of unbounded fulness, declarations of truth, and merciful miracles unnumbered, do but heighten and provoke to murder the Saviour! No wonder he abandons such, and offers his presence to others more likely to regard him.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 25, 26. Not only will the Father grant me whatever I request, but I have life in myself, and do quicken, spiritually or corporally, all sinful men. Every one therefore that believeth in me shall be renewed in his soul, and even in his body, at the resurrection; or, likewise in this world also. And no one that, being spiritually quickened, continues faithful, shall ever undergo eternal death, nor shall his body be always continued in the state of the dead. 41–43. Christ never prayed for power to work a miracle, having infinite power in himself; but here he thanked his Father for this opportunity of demonstrating his Messiahship, for the con-

A.D. cir. 32.

4 And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he[h] goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for [i]they know his voice.

5 And [j]a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers.[1]

6 This parable spake Jesus unto them: [k]but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them.

7 Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, [l]I am the door of the sheep.

8 All [m]that ever came before me[2] are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them.

9 I[n] am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out,[3] and find pasture.

10 The[p] thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: [q]I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.[4]

11 I[r] am the good shepherd: [s]the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.[5]

12 But[t] he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the [u]wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth: and the wolf catcheth them, and scatteth the sheep.

13 The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep.

14 I[v] am the good shepherd, and [w]know my sheep, [x]and am known of mine.

15 As[y] the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father:[6] and [z]I lay down my life for the sheep.

16 And[a] other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

17 Therefore[c] doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again.

18 No[d] man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. [e]This commandment have I received of my Father.[7]

19 ¶ There[g] was a division therefore again among the Jews for these sayings.

20 And many of them said, [h]He hath a devil, and is mad; why hear ye him?

21 Others said, These are not the words of him that hath a devil. [i]Can a devil open the eyes of the blind?

22 ¶ And it was at Jerusalem the feast[8] of the dedication, and it was winter.

23 And Jesus walked in the temple in Solomon's[8] porch.[1]

24 Then came the Jews round about him, and said unto him, How long dost thou make us to doubt?[2] If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly.

25 Jesus answered them, [j]I told you, and ye believed not: [k]the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me.

26 But[l] ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you.

27 My[m] sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me:

28 And[o] I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand.

29 My Father, [p]which gave them me,[3] is greater than all;[4] and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand.

30 I[q] and my Father are one.

31 ¶ Then[r] the Jews took up stones again to stone him.

32 Jesus answered them, [s]Many good works have I showed you from my Father; [t]for which of those works do ye stone me?

33 The Jews answered him, saying, [u]For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy;. and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God.

34 Jesus answered them, [v]Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods?

35 If he called them gods, [w]unto whom the word of God came, and [x]the scripture cannot be broken;

36 Say ye of him, whom [y]the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I said, [z]I am the Son of God?

37 If[b] I do not the works of my Father, believe me not.

38 But if I do, though ye believe not me, [c]believe the works: that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me, and I in him.

39 ¶ Therefore[e] they sought again to take him: but he escaped out of their hand,

40 And [f]went away again beyond Jordan into the place where John at first baptized; and there he abode.

41 And[g] many resorted unto him, and said, John did no miracle: but all things that John spake of this man were true.

42 And[h] many believed on him there.

[k] 1 I have often seen eastern shepherds leading their flocks. I have been present when, during the heat of day, a number of flocks assembled round a fountain. The shepherds rested together for an hour or two; their sheep mingled. When the time arrived for going off again to pasture, each shepherd went through the mingled flock, then walked off slowly along his own path, uttering a peculiar call; his own sheep followed him. [e] This beautiful discourse is intimately connected with the healing of the blind man and the outrageous conduct of the Pharisees. They professed to be the only shepherds of God's people: Christ shows that they are in reality thieves and robbers. Instead of tending and watching the sheep, they destroy them. In the first verses of this chapter every ruler or minister in the church is a shepherd: Christ is the door: the sheep are God's true, not merely professing people; the porter is the Divine Spirit; the fold is the invisible church.—P.

Ver. 4. Is not unto death and corruption, but to illustrate my divine power by a miraculous resurrection. This seems to be the verbal message returned to the disconsolate sisters and their suffering brother. O! that believers, when their friends are sick, would take example by Martha and Mary, and prayerfully send this message of faith to Jesus—'Lord, he whom thou invest is sick!' And O! how certainly does murmuring give place to submission, and fear and sorrow to hope and joy, when the sufferer can say, 'My Beloved is mine, and I am his!' C.

Ver. 9. The Jews divided every day, from sunrise to sunset, into twelve hours; so that the number of hours was always the same, but the length of the hours varied according to the seasons. And as the principal means of measuring time among the ancient Jews was by sun-dials, 2 Ki. 20. 11; Is. 38. 8, a practical mathematician would have little difficulty in constructing, either one dial-plate with movable parts, capable of extension or contraction, on the hour line—or a succession of dial-plates, to be changed at brief and fixed intervals throughout the year, still dividing the absolute time of sunshine into twelve equal parts.—Note, Hence learn the necessity of measuring and noting time, and see how equal are the opportunities of working for God presented by the shortest as well as by the longest life! The question is, not how long we walk, but how circumspectly we walk. The Lord preserve our hearts from fearing and our feet from stumbling. Ps. 116. 8. C.

Ver. 36. The groaning and the weeping of Jesus appear to the Jews incontestable evidences of love. There must have, there-

CHAPTER XI.

1 Christ raiseth Lazarus, four dam buried. 45 Many Jews believe. 47 The high-priests and Pharisees gather a council against Christ. 49 Caiaphas prophesieth. 54 Jesus hideth himself. 55 At the passover they inquire after him, and lay wait for him.

NOW a certain man was sick, named Lazarus, of [a]Bethany, the town of [b]Mary and her sister Martha.[1]

2 (It[c] was that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped his feet with her hair, whose brother Lazarus was sick.)

3 Therefore his sisters sent unto him, saying, Lord, behold, [d]he whom thou lovest is sick.

4 When Jesus heard that, he said, [e]This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.

5 Now [g]Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus.

6 When he had heard therefore that he was sick, [h]he abode two days still in the same place where he was.[2]

7 Then after that saith he to his disciples, Let[i] us go into Judea again.

8 His disciples say unto him, Master, [j]the Jews of late sought to stone thee; and goest thou thither again?

9 Jesus answered, Are there not twelve hours in the day?[3] If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth the light of this world.

10 But[k] if a man walk in the night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him.

11 These things said he: and after that he saith unto them, [l]Our friend Lazarus [m]sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep.

12 Then said his disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well.[5]

13 Howbeit Jesus spake of his death: but they thought that he had spoken of taking of rest in sleep.

14 Then said Jesus unto them [n]plainly, Lazarus is dead;

15 And I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent [o]ye may believe;[6] nevertheless let us go unto him.

16 Then said [p]Thomas, which is called Didymus, unto his fellow-disciples, Let us also go,[7] that we may die with him.[8]

17 Then when Jesus came, he found that he had lain in the grave four days already.[9]

18 Now Bethany was nigh unto Jerusalem, about fifteen furlongs[1] off:[2]

19 And many of the Jews came to Martha and Mary, [q]to comfort them concerning their brother.

20 Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met him: but Mary sat still in the house.

21 Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, [r]if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

22 But I know, that even now, [s]whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee.

23 Jesus saith unto her, [t]Thy brother shall rise again.

24 Martha saith unto him, [u]I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day.

25 Jesus said unto her, [v]I am the resurrection, and the life:[3] he[w] that believeth in me, [x]though he were dead,[4] yet shall he live:

26 And[y] whosoever liveth and believeth in me[5] shall never die. [z]Believest thou this?

27 She saith unto him, [a]Yea, Lord; I believe[6] that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world.[7]

28 And when she had so said, she went her way, and called Mary her sister secretly, saying, [b]The Master is come, and calleth for thee.

29 As[d] soon as she heard that, she arose quickly, and came unto him.

30 Now Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him.

31 The Jews then which were with her in the house, and [e]comforted her, when they saw Mary, that she rose up hastily and went out, followed her,[8] saying, She goeth unto the grave to weep there.

32 Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw him, [f]she fell down at his feet, saying unto him, [h]Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

33 When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, [i]he groaned in the spirit, and was [j]troubled,

34 And said, Where have ye laid him? They said unto him, Lord, come and see.

35 Jesus wept.[1]

36 Then said the Jews, Behold, how he loved him!

37 And some of them said, Could not this man, [k]which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?

38 Jesus therefore, again [l]groaning in himself, cometh to the grave. [m]It was a cave,[2] and a stone lay upon it.

39 Jesus said, [n]Take ye away the stone. Martha, the sister of him that was dead, saith unto him, Lord, [o]by this time he stinketh: for he hath been dead four days.

40 Jesus saith unto her, [p]Said I not unto

[w] Not with Lazarus, as some interpret, for then had he said, 'and the like him,' but 'let us die with our Lord,' who thus through love to his friends in Bethany exposes himself to his implacable enemies in Jerusalem.—C.

[x] It is the universal custom in the East—indeed it is a necessity in such a climate, to bury on the day of death. It would seem from the narrative that Lazarus was already dead when the messenger told our Lord of his sickness, for he remained two days where he was, and then occupied two days more on the journey, going the first probably to Jericho, and ascending on the second to Bethany.—P.

[y] That is, near two miles.

[z] The situation of Bethany is on the eastern declivity of the Mount of Olives, completely hidden from the Holy City and the district round it by the intervening hill. The slopes of Bethany are ragged and rocky, and the wilderness of Judea, an extensive view of which it commands, is wild and desolate. The village is built on the side of the main road from Jerusalem to Jericho; a shorter footpath to the city leads over the top of Olivet.—P.

[b] It is very remarkable that this, the greatest, and in its results the most momentous of our Lord's miracles, is only recorded by John, and is not even remotely hinted at by the other evangelists. They could not have been ignorant of it, for it became the exciting cause of that bitter enmity among the Jewish rulers which resulted in the crucifixion. Any ordinary biographer would have made such an incident one of the most prominent parts of his story. The only reason I can assign for this and similar omissions in the Gospels is, that each evangelist was guided, both in the selection and detail of his facts, by one Divine Spirit, who so directed all as to give to man one perfect picture of the Great Exemplar, and not complete development of his saving work.—C.

fore, been an intensity of feeling in them that removed them beyond all suspicion of simulated sorrow. Yet these sorrows were not altogether what the Jews supposed. For while they, no doubt, sprung, in part, from the remembrance of him that was gone, and sympathy with the bereaved and defenceless sisters, they also arose from the view of the fearful and universal ravages of sin and death, and the darkening shadows of that unbelief that he foresaw would defy even the evidence of light from the grave. C.

Ver. 44. Came forth, bound hand and foot. This statement has been made matter for infidel objection; 'for how,' it is said, 'could he come forth,' if 'bound hand and foot, and still requiring to be loosed?' The objection vanishes when the nature of the grave is considered. When the stone was removed, and the word of power uttered, he, most probably, slided down from a niche in the side of the cave, and stood partly out of the door, and so 'came forth,' but could not move farther until he was loosed from the grave-clothes. C.

TOMB OF LAZARUS. [JOHN, xi:43.]—The tomb of Lazarus is in Bethany, where Mary and Martha and Lazarus lived. This is a wretched and miserable village now. But because it was once the home of the family where our Savior was so often entertained it has an undying charm for the Christian world. The tomb of Lazarus is a deep vault excavated in the rock and lined with masonry. Christians and Mohammedans alike regard the place with the greatest reverence. It is absolutely certain that Lazarus was buried here. It seems reasonable to accept the place that has so long been looked upon as the tomb of Lazarus as correct. Above the tomb and the village of Bethany is a square tower called the Castle of Lazarus.

thee, That, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?

41 Then they took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and said, Father, [q]I thank thee that thou hast heard me.

42 And I knew [r]that thou hearest me always: but [s]because of the people which stand by I said it, that they may believe that thou hast sent me.

43 And when he thus had spoken, he cried with a loud voice, [t]Lazarus, come forth.

44 And[u] he that was dead[3] came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-clothes:[4] and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, Loose him, and let him go.

45 Then[v] many of the Jews which came to Mary, and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on him.

46 But[w] some of them went their ways to the Pharisees, and told them what things Jesus had done.

47 ¶ Then[y] gathered the chief priests and the Pharisees a council, and said, [z]What do we? for this man doeth many miracles.[5]

48 If we let him thus alone, [a]all men will believe on him: [b]and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation.[6]

49 And one of them, named [c]Caiaphas, being the high-priest that same year, said unto them, Ye[d] know nothing at all,

50 Nor consider that it is expedient for us, that one man should die for the people,[7] and that the whole nation perish not.

51 And this spake he not of himself: but being high-priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus[e] should die for that nation;[8]

52 And not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad.

53 Then[f] from that day forth they took counsel together[9] for to put him to death.

54 Jesus[h] therefore walked no more openly among the Jews: but went thence unto a country near to the wilderness, into a city called 'Ephraim, and there continued with his disciples.[1]

55 ¶ And[j] the Jews' passover was nigh at hand: and many went out of the country up to Jerusalem before the passover, [k]to purify themselves.

56 Then[l] sought they for Jesus, and spake among themselves, as they stood in the temple, What think ye, that he will not come to the feast?

57 Now[n] both the chief priests and the Pharisees had given a commandment, that, if any man knew where he were, he should show it, that they might take him.

[a] Mat 14. 3-9. Mat. 26. 6–13. Ch. 11. 1–45.

[2] The supper was in the house of Simon the leper, not of Lazarus. The only conclusion we can draw from ver. 2, is that it took place in Bethany. Matthew and Mark mention an alabaster-box of ointment, which Mark says 'she brake,' or 'crushed,' 'and poured on his head.' Though neither Matthew nor John mention the crushing, yet as I have frequently had occasion to state, Mark is always characterized by minuteness of detail. John says 'she anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair.' Matthew and Mark say nothing of this, but simply mention the pouring on his head. There is no contradiction. Crushing the box with her hands over his head, the ointment ran down upon it as he reclined. Then with her hands already smeared she stooped and anointed his feet, wiping them with her long loose hair.—P.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Jesus excuseth Mary anointing his feet. 9 The people flock to see Lazarus. 10 The high-priests consult to kill him. 12 Christ rideth into Jerusalem. 20 Greeks desire to see Jesus. 23 He foretelleth his death. 37 The Jews are generally blinded: 42 yet many chief rulers believe, but do not confess him: 44 therefore Jesus calleth earnestly for confession of faith.

THEN Jesus,[a] six days before the passover, came to Bethany, where Lazarus was which had been dead, whom he raised from the [1]dead.

2 There[b] they made him a supper, and Martha served: but Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with him.

3 Then took [c]Mary a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair: and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment.[2]

4 Then[d] saith one of his disciples, Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, which should betray him,

5 Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence,[3] and given to the poor?

6 This[e] he said, not that he cared for the poor; but [g]because he was a thief, [h]and had the bag, and bare what was put therein.

7 Then[i] said Jesus, Let her alone: against the day of my [j]burying hath she kept this.

8 For [k]the poor always ye have with you; [l]but me ye have not always.

9 ¶ Much[n] people of the Jews therefore knew that he was there: and they came not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, whom he had raised from the dead.

Ver. 49, 50. Caiaphas, according to his own view, was merely giving utterance to a common sentiment, that 'whatever is politically expedient for a nation is to be boldly executed, however it may be morally wrong in itself or injurious to individual rights.' He does not assert that Jesus for any crime deserves to die, but that, for sake of the people and nation, it is expedient that he should die. But yet, while he thus utters his own opinion, God, unknown to the speaker, overrules his words, ver. 51, and, in honour of the office of the high-priesthood, of which he was personally unworthy, he employs him, in his bloodthirstiness, as he employed Balaam in his covetousness, and draws from him an official exposition of the great doctrine of atonement by sacrifice. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Jesus keeps an exact account of all his people's works of faith and their labours of love. But the most eminent piety cannot exclude afflictions and death. Yet if Christ love us, we may boldly apply to him in our distress. And happy is it if our troubles give him an opportunity to glorify himself, and either prepare us for, or usher us into, everlasting happiness. He often indeed graciously defers relief till it become seemingly impossible. But neither danger nor provocation can make him to neglect his work in its proper season. And with cheerfulness and activity we ought always to follow his example. The death of our godly friends should make life less sweet, death less bitter, and heaven more desirable to us. Dead saints ought not to be lamented as lost, but as gone before, to be with Christ, and to be raised with him to glory.—Many mournful changes may happen in a short time. And it is absurd to pride ourselves in our bodies that may quickly become so ugly and loathsome. It is very friendly to attempt comforting the distressed; but only Jesus' presence can afford solid relief. He at once delightfully acts as the mighty God, the object of faith, and raiser of the dead; and as the affectionate man, whose heart sympathizes with the afflicted, and is burdened with their unbelief. With eagerness then should we run to meet him, and pour our lamentations, as well as our requests, into his bosom. Secret fellowship may ascertain his approaching gracious deliverances. For quickly his salvation comes, whenever our heart is prepared for it by faith. And we never believe aright till we receive and rest on him as God's eternal Son and our given Saviour. With eager delight he lays hold on every opportunity to comfort his people and glorify his Father: and with the greatest ease he can grant instantaneous deliverances to either soul or body. No death, no bands can hinder his work. Alas! that while his marvellous works affect some, they should but enrage others against him. And great must be the wickedness of human hearts that can be thus influenced. But none are more furious enemies to the Redeemer than careless clergymen; and nothing more hurries men into plots and practices against him than worldly views. While all things work together for the redemption of those who love God, the sinful methods taken to preserve nations do but accelerate their ruin. While Christ hides himself, he may be sought for different ends; and though he delay his approach, he will always attend the ordinances of his own grace.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 23–26. This request of the Greeks manifests that the time appointed of the Father for glorifying me, in the salvation of the Gentiles as 10 But[o] the chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also to death;

11 Because[p] that by reason of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jesus.

12 ¶ On[q] the next day[4] much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem,

13 Took branches of palm-trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, [r]Hosanna! blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord.[5]

14 And Jesus, when he had found a young ass, sat thereon; as it is written,

15 Fear[s] not, daughter of Zion: behold, thy King cometh, sitting on an ass's colt.

16 These[t] things understood not his disciples at the first: but when Jesus was [u]glorified, then remembered[v] they that these things were written of him, and that they had done these things unto him.

17 The[w] people therefore that was with him when he called Lazarus ou of his grave, and raised him from the dead, bare record.[6]

18 For[y] this cause the people also met him, for that they heard that he had done this mi acle.

19 The Pharisees therefore said among themselves, [z]Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? behold, the world is gone after him.

20 ¶ And there were certain [7]Greeks[8] among them that came up to worship at the feast:

21 The same came therefore to [a]Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, Sir, [b]we would see Jesus.

22 Philip cometh and telleth Andrew: and again Andrew and Philip tell Jesus.

23 ¶ And Jesus answered them, saying, [c]The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, [d]Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.

25 He[e] that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal.

26 If[g] any man serve me, let him follow me; and [h]where I am, there shall also my servant be: [i]if any man serve me, him will my Father honour.

27 Now[j] is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour: [k]but for this cause came I unto this hour.

28 Father,[l] glorify thy name. [m]Then came there a voice from heaven, saying, I [n]have both glorified it, and will [o]glorify it again.

29 The people therefore that stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered: others said, An angel spake to him.

30 Jesus answered and said, This voice came not because of me, [q]but for your sakes.

31 Now[r] is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out.[9]

32 And I, if I be [s]lifted up from the earth, [t]will draw [u]all men unto me.

33 (This he said, [v]signifying what death he should die.)

34 The people answered him, We have heard out of the law[1] that[z] Christ abideth for [2]ever: and h w sayest thou, The Son of man must be lifted up? [y]who is this Son of man?

35 Then Jesus said unto them, [z]Yet a little while is the light with you. [a]Walk while ye have the light, lest [b]darkness come upon you: for [c]he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth.

36 While[d] ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be [e]the children of light. These things spake Je us, and [g]departed, and did hide himself from them.

37 ¶ But though he had done so many miracles before them, [h]yet they believed not on him:

38 That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he spake, [i]Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom hath [j]the arm of the Lord been revealed?

39 Therefore[k] they could not believe, because that Esaias said again,

40 He[l] hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their heart; that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them.[3]

3 Alford says on this passage:—Could not, i.e. it was otherwise ordained in the divine counsels. No attempt to escape this meaning will agree with the prophecy cited ver. 40. But the inability, as thus stated, is coincident with the fullest freedom of the human will.'—P.

well as the Jews, is just at hand.—Were I to continue in my present state, without dying a sacrifice for sin, I should not have the honour of raising up a spiritual seed to bear my image, and show forth my praise; but being made an offering for sin, I shall be glorified in the conversion, and salvation, and praises of repentant sinners.—And ye likewise must be conformed to me in entering into your glory through much tribulation: for whoever, from love to this life, and the enjoyments of it, denies, disowns, and rejects me, that he may escape persecution and danger, shall certainly fall short of the heavenly felicity; and he that undervalues his natural life, and all its enjoyments, for my sake, shall certainly inherit eternal life as his gracious reward. If any man therefore would be a true disciple and servant to me, let him follow my example, and the instructions of my Word, providence, and Spirit. Then shall he quickly share with me in the felicities of the heavenly world, in which my divine nature is at present, and my human will shortly be; and his unfeigned devoting himself to my service shall issue in his obtaining immortal honours from my Father. 27–30. My soul is inexpressibly distressed, in the views of my approaching sufferings and tribulations from every quarter. If it were possible, I could gladly be excused from it; but I do not insist upon it, as the great end of my coming into the world is to undergo them: I therefore entirely resign myself to the will of God, and beg that, in all I do or suffer, his perfections may be glorified to the highest.—To which the Father, by a voice from heaven, replied, That he had already glorified himself in his obedience, ministry, and miracles, and would further glorify himself in his sufferings and death, and in the complete salvation of Jews and Gentiles flowing therefrom. 31. Certainly and quickly shall both Jews and Gentiles be tried with regard to their thoughts of me; the righteous shall be distinguished from the wicked, and they shall be acquitted or condemned answerably to their believing or not believing in me. And Satan, who hath long reigned over most part of the world, in ignorance, idolatry, and other wickedness, and who reigns in the hearts of worldly men, shall be totally vanquished, his claim defeated, his oracles silenced, and himself be cast out of men's hearts, by the powerful spread of the gospel. 32. And I, after first offering up myself a sacrifice for sin on a cross, and in the virtue of it ascending to my Father's right hand, will erect my kingdom upon the ruins of his, inviting men of all ranks, Gentiles as well as Jews, to myself by my Word and Spirit. 35, 36. As the light of my personal ministry, or even the dispensation by my apostles, is to continue but a short time with you Jews, ye ought without delay to make the most diligent improvement of it; for if ye do not, ye must be left to continue in your ignorance and unbelief, to your utter destruction, in time and eternity. While you have me and my gospel among you to show you the way of salvation, believe in me that ye may receive the truth in the love of it, and be under its infallible direction, till ye be admitted into the mansions 41 These things said Esaias, [w]when he saw his glory, and spake of him.

42 ¶ Nevertheless [x]among the chief rulers also many believed on him; but [y]because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue:

43 For[q] they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God.

44 ¶ Jesus[r] cried and said, [z]He that believeth on me, believeth not on me,[4] but on him that sent me.

45 And[t] he that seeth me seeth him[5] that sent me.

46 I[u] am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness.

47 And [v]if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him [6]not:[7] for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world.

48 He[w] that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: [y]the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.

49 For[x] I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.

50 And I know that [a]his commandment[8] is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Jesus washeth the disciples' feet: exhorteth them to humility and charity. 18 He foretelleth, and discovereth to John by a token, that Judas should betray him: 31 commandeth them to love one another, 36 and forewarneth Peter of his denial.

NOW before[a] the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew[1] that [b]his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, [c]having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end.[2]

2 And [d]supper being [3]ended,[4] (the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him;)

3 Jesus knowing that [e]the Father had given all things into his hands, and that [f]he was come from God, and went to God;

4 He[g] riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself.

5 After that he poureth water into a bason, and began to [5]wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

6 Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and Peter[5] saith unto him, Lord, [k]dost thou wash my feet?

7 Jesus answered and said unto him, [l]What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter.

8 Peter saith unto him, [m]Thou shalt never wash my feet.[6] Jesus answered him, [n]If I wash thee not,[7] thou hast no part with me.

of glory above. 44–50. He that truly believes in me as the promised Messiah, believes not in me only or ultimately, but, together with and through me, believes in my heavenly Father, who sent me into the world to seek and save lost sinners. And he who, by faith, discerns my person and office, is thereby led into the knowledge of my Father's nature, perfections, and will. I am come into this world to dispel the darkness of ignorance, superstition, and idolatry, and to bring life and immortality to light by the gospel, that whosoever receives and trusts in me should not continue under the power of spiritual blindness, nor wander in the way to eternal misery, but be instructed and guided in the way to everlasting blessedness. And if men, who have had opportunities of hearing and knowing my gospel, wilfully refuse it, and me in it, I will at present neither accuse them to the Father, nor pass nor execute upon them any sentence of condemnation; as the direct design of my coming into the world is not to accuse, condemn, or punish, but to secure, offer, and graciously give spiritual and eternal salvation to all that believe, whether Jews or Gentiles. But he that contemns and rejects me and my doctrines, shall, in due time, find an impartial Judge to try, condemn, and punish him: and the truths which I have preached shall be the rule of judgment, and the awful means of aggravating his offences in the last day. For the holy, excellent, supernatural, and gracious nature of the doctrines which I have taught, and my manner of delivering and confirming the same, manifest that I have uttered them as one directed and authorized by my Father. And whatever ye think of it, I know that what I preach by his authority is the only means of bringing lost sinners to everlasting life; and it is at your infinite peril to reject it.

Ver. 3. Some consider this event distinct from that of Matthew (ch. xxvi.) and Mark (ch. xiv.)—(1) Because this was six days before the passover, that only two, Mat. 26. 2. (2) This seems to have occurred in the house of Lazarus, that in the house of Simon the leper, Mat. 26. 6. (3) In this Mary anointed the feet of Jesus, in that a woman unnamed poured ointment on his head, Mat. 26. 7. Others consider the three narratives identical, though the circumstances differ, judging it more probable that Matthew and Mark should have dislocated the chronology of the events, than that our Lord should have twice been anointed within four days. C.

Ver. 24. This statement of our Lord, and that of Paul, 1 Co. 15. 36, have been impugned as contrary to fact; for, say the objectors, if the grain of wheat die, there can be no produce. This objection is a melancholy specimen of ignorance. When a man dies, the outward body dies—the inward 'spirit returns to God who gave it.' So, when the outward parts of the seed are chemically changed by moisture and heat, the inward germ, the embryo plant, is developed, and presents, if not an intended type, yet a natural parallel and illustration, of the resurrection. C.

Ver. 27. If our Lord prayed to be saved and was not answered, how can it be said that 'the Father heareth him always?' ch. 11. 42. Two simple and efficient answers present themselves:—(1) The words may be taken interrogatively: 'What shall I say? (Shall I say) Father, save me from this hour? (Nay) but for this cause came I unto this hour.' (2) A more literal translation will totally remove the difficulty without the interrogation: 'Father, save me out of this hour:'—(which prayer was literally fulfilled, for out of that hour of darkness he arose more bright than ever!) —'but for this cause came I into this world,' and therefore know I must patiently endure till thy name is glorified in my sufferings. C.

Ver. 41. The glory which Isaiah saw, ch. 6. 1, 5, 8, 9, and the person of whom he spoke, was certainly JEHOVAH, JEHOVAH OF HOSTS; and certainly the words of Isaiah are here applied to Christ. The conclusion is, therefore, inevitable—Christ is JEHOVAH 'manifest in the flesh.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Grateful acknowledgments should never be long delayed. While true believers think all expense and service for Christ too little, hypocrites grudge him either heart, hand, or purse: and it is not regard to the poor, but love to the world, that sways them. While some gospel-hearers relish the report of Jesus and his works, others are thereby filled with murderous rancour. And the more Christ honours men, the world will hate them the more. Yea, the stronger evidence of his character Christ gives, obstinate unbelievers are the more exasperated; and if God check them, they become more resolute in wickedness. But let them rage as they please, Jesus will royally triumph over all opposition, fulfil his Father's promises, and honour his perfections, in both his sufferings and glories.—Thrice happy is it, if even curiosity lead us to the saving knowledge of him, and if regard to his people occasion our intimacy with himself!—Great is the virtue of his obedience and death for glorifying God, vanquishing Satan, and converting Jews, and especially Gentiles, to God. Much self-denial is necessary in following him aright. And transcendent is their reward who faithfully serve him, and, by faith, improve the light of his gospel while they have it. But great is their guilt and misery who indulge spite, devise cavils, and shut their eyes against the illuminations of his Word; or who, for secular honours, avoid the open profession of his name. Abandoned by God, they go on in the ways of ignorance and self-deceit, till they land in the depths of hell. Dreadful will be their case when he, who came into the world to save men, shall judge and condemn them at last. Yea, nothing will more fearfully aggravate their guilt and punishment than abused means of salvation.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1, 7. You know not the reasons of what I am now doing, and little think what is my meaning in it; but I will in a little time somewhat explain my design; and when the Holy Ghost shall be poured out from on high he will further acquaint you with it, and make you to experience the benefit of it. 8. You may think your refusal is a humble aversion to my disparaging myself; but you cannot be my disciple if you set yourself against my authority, wisdom, and love; and you can have no fellowship with me, or interest in my saving blessings, unless you be spiritually washed in my blood, and, by my Word and Spirit, from the guilt and filth of your sins. 10. He who is once justified and sanctified by my blood and Spirit, needs only to be further cleansed, in the daily exercise of faith and repentance, from the guilt and defilement which, through remaining corruption, he perpetually contracts by his conversation in the world. And most, though not all, of you present are cleansed in this respect. 18. I do not expect you all to be either obedient or happy. I know that, though I have chosen you all to the apostleship, there is one among you, sitting familiarly with us at table, that is not seeking faith, holiness, and salvation, and who will ungratefully desert and betray me. 31, 32. Now the hour is just at hand when I, the Messiah, shall, by more remarkable sufferings and death, gloriously fulfil all my engagements in the room of sinners, conquer sin, Satan, and all his assistants, and secure an eternal redemption; yea, all the perfections of my heavenly Father shall be harmoniously exalted in this my astonishing self-abasement, and therefore shall he honour me in my sufferings by amazing signs and wonders, and with testimonies 9 Simon Peter saith unto him, Lord, [p]not my feet only, but also my hands and my head.

10 Jesus saith to him, He that is [q]washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit: and [r]ye are clean, but not all.

11 For he knew who should betray him; therefore said he, Ye are not all clean.

12 So after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he said unto them, [s]Know ye what I have done to you?

13 Ye[t] call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am.

14 If[u] I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet.

15 For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.

16 Verily,[v] verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him.

17 If[w] ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.

18 ¶ I speak not of you all: [x]I know whom I have chosen: but that the scripture may be fulfilled, [y]He that eateth bread with me[8] hath lifted up his heel against me.

19 Now[9] I[a] tell you before it come, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am he.

20 Verily,[b] verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me: and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me.

21 When Jesus had thus said, [c]he was troubled in spirit, and testified, and said, [d]Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me.[1]

22 Then[e] the disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he spake.

[e] Satan had formerly, through the influence of avarice, 'put into the heart of Judas (the thought) to betray' his Lord; now through the door which, not the suggestion, but the entertainment of that thought, had opened, he himself enters in, and takes full possession of his slave.—C.

[f] This is the commencement of Christ's last discourse to his disciples. At first there is a dialogue between him and them as they sat at table—they asking, and he replying; 'but when they had risen from the supper (ch. 14. 31), the discourse of Christ took a higher form: surrounding their Master the disciples listened to the words of life, and seldom spoke. Finally, in the sublime prayer of the great High-priest, the whole soul of Christ flowed forth in earnest intercession for his own to his heavenly Father' (Olshausen).—P.

1 The scope of the narrative shows that our Lord and his disciples were already assembled at the paschal feast; how therefore can they have thought that Judas had been ordered to buy what was necessary for the feast? It was manifestly the latter the disciples referred to.—P.

23 Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of his disciples, whom [g]Jesus loved.[2]

24 Simon Peter therefore beckoned[3] to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom he spake.

25 He then lying[4] on Jesus' breast[5] saith unto him, Lord, who is it?

26 Jesus[6] answered, He it is to whom I shall give a sop,[7] when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon.[8]

27 And after the sop [h]Satan entered[9] into him. Then said Jesus unto him, [i]That thou doest, do quickly.

28 Now no man at the table knew for what intent he spake this unto him.

29 For some of them thought, because [j]Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, Buy those things that we have need of against the feast; or, that he should give something to the poor.[1]

30 He then, having received the sop, [k]went immediately out: and it was night.

31 ¶ Therefore when he was gone out, Jesus said, [l]Now is the Son of man glorified, and [n]God is glorified in him.[2]

32 If[o] God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him.

33 Little children, [p]yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me: and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you.

34 A[q] new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

35 By[r] this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.

36 ¶ Simon Peter said unto him, [s]Lord, whither goest thou? Jesus answered him, extorted from enemies themselves; and shall speedily and suitably reward me with a glorious resurrection, ascension, and exaltation at his right hand. 34. The command of brotherly love is here called NEW, not as if it had not all along existed in the law of God, but because Christ revived it when it was sadly corrupted and almost forgotten, and enjoined it by a new example, and with new explications, motives, and enforcements, that it might be observed with a new spirit and temper, and in a new manner, as a fundamental law of his kingdom, written in his people's hearts by the spirit of the New Testament; and because it is most excellent, and will be eternally in full force.

Ver. 1. The former chapter having closed John's account of our Lord's public teaching and procedure, here commences a specimen of his private instruction and domestic intercourse with his disciples—a portion of the Word most deeply interesting, both as the best example for fathers and mothers, and the highest practical authority for the use of family prayer. C.

Ver. 10. He that is washed. Rather, 'He that is bathed,' whose whole body has been washed: for so the original signifies, needs not but to wash his feet. That is, he that has once truly received the gospel, who has been 'justified by faith,' and entered into 'peace with God,' will never again require such renewal; but will require, nevertheless, continual watchfulness and prayer, that in his daily walk he may 'keep himself unspotted from the world.' C.

Ver. 14. Had this precept been literal, there would doubtless have been some subsequent mention of it in the Acts or Epistles. The precept, however, is not literal, but emblematic, as the act of which it is the exposition. It is annually caricatured at Rome, when he who proudly professes to be the successor of Peter, and blasphemously asserts himself to be the vicar of Christ, washes the feet of a company of poor; and it is truly fulfilled wheresoever one Christian, of whatever rank, performs an act of mercy and kindness to another; but it is violated wherever pride despises, indifference neglects, or covetousness refuses to condescend and relieve. C.

Ver. 26. The 'sop' was a portion of the paschal supper, collected in the fingers and dipped in the sauce, and handed to a guest as a mark of attention.—Note, From considering the position of our Lord and his disciples, and the fact that our Lord, while John was reclining on his bosom, could not have reached to any considerable distance, it seems probable that Judas lay immediately to his left, so that had our Lord laid down his head as John did it, it would have rested on the breast of the traitor. C.

Ver. 31. Now is the Son of man glorified. In the translation the prophetic present is put for the future; in the Greek it is the preterite, used also prophetically to express the nearness or certainty of an event: see ch. 15. 6. The Son is glorified by the resurrection, the victory over death and hell, speedily to be achieved. 'God (the Father) is glorified' in the manifestation of his love to sinners through Jesus. C.

Ver. 32. In himself. Either in the Father 'himself,' by again receiving the Son into the bosom of eternal love, or in the Son 'himself,' by exhibiting in his Godhead-glory the power of his resurrection, ascension, and kingdom. C.

Ver. 34. A new commandment. 'New' to you: for you have hitherto been ambitious and envious, and at strife for supremacy, that can never operate but in a 'new' heart, enforced by a 'new' and unchangeable sanction, 'as I have loved you:' and that will abide for ever 'new,' as the sun in the firmament that waxes not old or dim—the emblem of myself, 'the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.' G.

REFLECTIONS.—How affectionate and permanent is Christ's love to all men! Astonishing was his condescension for their instruction and advantage. And it is impossible to be his disciples unless he wash us by his blood and Spirit, and we are willing to obey his command, and imitate his condescension and kindness. If his providences be dark, we must wait till he explain them, and meanwhile daily apply his Word, Spirit, and blood, for the further purification of our heart and life. Without hesitation we must always submit to his authority, and put all the knowledge which we have of his truths into practice. To know better, and do worse, is doubly criminal. And, alas! awful is the thought that any who are in profession Christ's disciples, and under the highest visible relation and obligation to him, should kick at and betray him! But fearfully Satan leads men captive at his will when they are left to their own corruptions. Yea, never is he more ready to enter into men than when they are employed in solemn acts of religion; and desertion of godly society is a common inlet to final apostasy.—It is a great mercy that the Lord knows them that are his, and will assist them in their spiritual state and gracious course, if they are only faithful and walk in him as they received him; and that, notwithstanding the most dreadful falls, he seeks to restore by his love, and afterwards bring them to his glory. Transcendent were the glories of our Redeemer in his death and exaltation to heaven; and marvellous the displays of the divine perfections in him, as manifested, and to be for ever manifested, in the salvation of men. Strong, then, is the reason, and plain the duty, of following him through good report

Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; but[t] thou shalt follow me afterwards.

37 Peter said unto him, Lord, [u]why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy sake.

38 Jesus answered him, [v]Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake? Verily, verily, I say unto thee, The cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied me thrice.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Christ comforteth his disciples with the hope of heaven: 6 professeth himself the way, the truth, and the life, and one with the Father: 13 assureth their prayers in his name to be effectual: 15 requesteth love and obedience: 16 promiseth the Holy Ghost, the Comforter: 27 and leaveth his peace with them.

LET not[a] your heart be troubled: [b]ye believe in God, believe also in me.[1]

2 In[c] my Father's house are many mansions: if[d] it were not so, I would have told you. [e]I go to prepare a place[2] for you.

3 And if I go and prepare a place for you, I[g] will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

4 And[h] whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.

5 ¶ Thomas[i] saith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way?

6 Jesus saith unto him, I am [j]the way,[3] and the[k] truth, and [l]the life: [m]no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.

7 If[n] ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him.

8 ¶ Philip saith unto him, Lord, show[4] us the Father, and it sufficeth us.[5]

9 Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me [p]hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Show us the Father?

10 Believest[q] thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? [r]the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: [s]but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.

11 Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else [t]believe me for the very works' sake.

12 ¶ Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, [u]the works that I do shall he do also; and [v]greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father.[6]

13 And[x] whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son.

14 If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it.

15 ¶ If[y] ye love me, keep my commandments.

16 And[z] I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever;

17 Even[a] the spirit of truth; whom [b]the world

CHAPTER XIV. Ver. 1–3. Be not discomposed or terrified at my being betrayed, nor at my approaching ignominies and death, nor at the disappointments and sufferings which ye may be called to undergo on my account; but labour to live by faith, not only on God's promises, but also on my character, offices, relations, work, and fulness, as represented in the gospel, as the blessed means of quieting your hearts. For in heaven, where my Father dwells in the highest manifestations of himself, there are many delightful abodes, and some in which ye shall have eternal rest and satisfaction after your toil and trouble on earth. If it had been otherwise, I would have faithfully and kindly undeceived you; but I am going away from you by death to secure that glory for you, and, by my ascension, to take possession of it in your name, and to prepare everything in the best manner for your arrival thither.—And when, and as surely as, I go in this manner to prepare heaven for you, I will quickly return, by my Spirit, to prepare you for it; and will receive your souls at death, and your whole persons at my second appearance, into my immediate presence and fellowship, that ye may be for ever in a state of freedom, honour, and delight, where I already am in my divine nature, and shortly will be in my human. 6, 7. I myself am the only mean of access to and acceptance with God, and of your receiving grace and eternal blessedness from him. I am the Way, as, by my own blood, I am entering into the holy place, and will thereby open a path for you to follow me. I am the Truth, as all the legal types and ancient promises are fulfilled in me, and as I attest the truths of God and teach you the sure way to heaven. And I am the Life, as I have life in myself, and am the author of spiritual and eternal life to all that believe in me; so that no man can acceptably approach to God in worship, or have any comfortable communion with him, by faith and love here, or any personal admission into his immediate presence hereafter, in any other way than by me. And if ye had known what I am in my person, natures, and office, ye would have known what my Father is, who is one with me in all essential properties. And as ye have begun to see him in the manifestations which I have made of his power and goodness, ye shall hereafter, by the descent of the Holy Ghost, and by other means, know more and more of him. 9–11. Whoever is duly acquainted with me, who am his express image, in my person, offices, and work, hath seen the most lively displays of the Father's perfections. Why, then, after so long acquaintance with me, do you unadvisedly desire a visible representation of him to satisfy all your doubts? Do you not yet believe that I and my Father, though distinct persons, are essentially united, and have the most real, mutual, and intimate communion in Godhead? For neither do I preach the doctrines which you have heard, nor perform the miraculous works which you have seen, but as inseparably united to and sent by him. Believe therefore upon the authority of my Word, and upon the credit of my miracles which I perform in so godlike a manner, that I and my Father have an essential and inseparable inbeing in one another. 12–14. And I assure you, my disciples, that if ye believe in me, according to the declarations which I have made of myself, ye shall be enabled to do as great miracles as ye have seen me do; nay, be instrumental in the far greater and more extensive work of converting multitudes of Jews and Gentiles through all nations of the world; because I will ascend to heaven to intercede for and send down my Spirit upon you and them. And whatsoever ye shall ask for the glory of God, and your own assistance, acceptance, and success, upon the ground of my grant and promise, and with humble dependence upon my wisdom and power, faithfulness and grace, merit and advocacy, I will certainly perform it in answer to your prayers, that the Father may manifest his glorious perfections through my obedience and sufferings, and in my gracious and almighty works. 15–17. Since such shall be the fruits of my departure from you, instead of being anxiously concerned at losing my bodily presence, or at the disappointment of your secular expectations, show your affection to me in a conscientious respect to all my commandments.—And to encourage you herein, I, as your High-priest and Advocate, will intercede effectually with my Father for you; and he, in concurrence with me, will send you another Counsellor, Advocate, and Comforter, to supply the want of my bodily presence, in instructing, assisting, and exciting you to every duty, in pleading your cause against your enemies, and comforting you in all your tribulations: who shall not abide with you a little while, as I have done, but in every period of time and eternity—even the Holy Ghost, who, being of the same nature with me and my Father, is truth itself, infinitely faithful, and the author and teacher of all truth; and whom carnal and unregenerate men do not entertain or embrace, because they have no true knowledge of or affection towards him; but ye who are enlightened and renewed by his operation have an experimental acquaintance with him; for he at present dwells, and works, and manifests himself in you, by his gracious and miraculous influences; and shall quickly further manifest himself in you with increasing light, power, and consolation. 18–20. And though I am going from you by death, I will not leave you destitute, exposed, friendless, and forlorn, but will pay you repeated visits after my resurrection; and will return, by my Spirit, after my ascension, to your unspeakable comfort and advantage. Shortly these wicked men who reject, despise, and abuse me, shall see me no more on earth, but ye shall see me alive after my passion; and because I am the living God, and shall rise again to an immortal life in my manhood, and always live in heaven as the head of my mystical body, ye shall, in union to my person, in fellowship with me, and by virtue derived from me, live spiritually, in a state of justification, sanctification, and consolation, in this world, and of glorification in the next. And when I have risen from the dead, as a triumphant conqueror over sin and Satan, death and hell, and have poured out my Spirit upon you, ye shall begin more clearly to understand that I am essentially one with the Father, and that ye are spiritually united to me as the source of your life. 21–24. Whoever, by virtue of this union with me, not only hears, but receives, hides in his cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he [c]dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.

18 I[d] will not leave you comfortless:[7] I will come to you.

19 Yet[e] a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me: [f]because I live, ye shall live also.

20 At that day ye shall know [h]that I am in my Father, and [i]ye in me, and I in you.

21 He[j] that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that[k] loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.

22 Judas [l]saith unto him, (not Iscariot,) Lord, how[m] is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?

23 Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.

24 He[p] that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings: [q]and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me.

25 These[r] things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you.

26 But[s] the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he[t] shall teach you all things, and [u]bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.[8]

27 ¶ Peace[v] I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let [x]not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

28 Ye have heard how I said unto you, [y]I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, [z]ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for my Father is [a]greater than I.

29 And[b] now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

30 Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for [c]the prince of this world cometh, and [d]hath nothing in me.[9]

31 But[e] that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do. Arise, let us go hence.

CHAPTER XV.

1 The consolation and mutual love between Christ and his members, under the parable of the vine. 18 A comfort in the hatred and persecution of the world. 26 The office of the Holy Ghost, and of the apostles.

I AM[a] the true vine, and my Father is [b]the husbandman.

2 Every[c] branch in me[1] that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and [d]every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.

3 Now[e] ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.

4 Abide[f] in me, and I in you.[2] As[h] the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me.

2 The term 'abide' expresses real, as contradistinguished from nominal union with Christ. Man may not always be able to distinguish them, but God can. Man can only judge by the fruit, which from the merely human stand-point is the only trustworthy test of the Christian. God looks deeper. He sees the, to us, invisible link of faith the moment it joins the soul to the Saviour.—P.

Satan, the 'prince of this world,' who brought sin into it, and by sin death—he would come again to battle with Christ. Christ declares that Satan has nothing in him—no property, no relic of the fall, no passion or sinful tendency. Death, which under ordinary circumstances is the result of Satan's power, Christ would yield up, that he might, by triumph-heart, and faithfully observes, my commandments, manifests his love to me; and shall in return be accepted and approved of, and delighted in, by me and my Father; and we will favour him with the peculiar manifestations of our glory; multiply the tokens of our special presence with him, by our Word, ordinances, and Spirit, and continue to hold the most free and intimate fellowship with him, as the spiritual house and temple in which we desire to dwell. 26, 27. But when, after my death and ascension to heaven, the Holy Ghost, whom the Father shall, for my merit and upon my intercession, send as a Guide, Advocate, and Comforter, to supply my room and carry on my work, is come unto you, he shall lead you into a more clear and extensive acquaintance with all truths necessary to be known or preached, and shall revive in your minds the remembrance of all the particulars which ye have heard from me, that ye may fully apprehend and properly improve the same. And meanwhile, as your parting and dying friend, I not only earnestly wish for you, but promise, and graciously bestow upon you all that solid and substantial peace and happiness which I secure and enjoy, and which the world neither can give you nor take from you. Let therefore no apprehensions of my approaching death, nor of your own loss or trouble, discompose your minds. 28, 29. I have told you that I am just going to leave you with a design to return and receive you into my Father's heavenly palace. If your love to me were truly spiritual, regular, and considerate, instead of being troubled, ye would, both for my sake and your own, rejoice at my departure to my Father, that I, his servant as man and mediator, may with him enjoy the utmost blessedness, and all power in heaven and earth, as the reward of my obedience and suffering, to exercise it for your advantage.—And I have told you these things beforehand, that when you see them accomplished ye may be the more confirmed in your belief of my being the promised Messiah, able and ready to fulfil whatever I have promised to you. 30, 31. I shall have little opportunity of discoursing more to you before my death; for Satan, who formerly pretended to offer me all the kingdoms of this world, and who powerfully works in the hearts of its rulers and people, is now making his last effort, stirring up his evil instruments, to unite their stratagems and force for murdering me. But he can find no corruption in me to work upon by his temptations, or to give him power over me. Nor can he hinder my death from tending to the glory of my Father, the salvation of believers, and destruction of his own kingdom, or even bring it about, without my own free consent. But to make it evident, both to friends and foes, that I love my Father, and am now heartily willing to obey his commandment in laying down my life for all the world, let us therefore rise from this table and retire to the garden, whither my enemies are coming to apprehend me.

Ver. 9. He that hath seen me hath seen the Father. God, in his infinity of being and perfection, must be essentially invisible to every finite creature; for it is manifestly impossible for the finite, either by bodily or mental sight, to comprehend the infinite. God therefore becomes 'manifest in the flesh,' and he that has, on examination and conviction, acknowledged Jesus to be the 'Son of God,' has seen all that man can see of the eternal love, the tender mercy, the overflowing goodness, the unerring wisdom, and the saving power of 'God the Father.' C.

Ver. 12. This promise has undoubtedly a special reference to the apostles, and was most literally fulfilled when Peter, not by a power inherent in himself (as was the power of our Lord), but merely by a power derived from the name of Jesus, converted, by one sermon, 3000 (Ac. 2. 41, 47), and by another, 5000 souls (Ac. 4. 4.); and when Paul turned to the Gentiles, preached the gospel in every nation, and reared up churches in every city. And greater by far than all miracles upon their bodies were these miracles of converting grace upon the souls of men. The promise has moreover an encouraging reference to every believer; for he that 'attempts great things for God will also, in due time, perform great things for God.' See, for instruction and encouragement, almost every history of Protestant missions to the heathen. C.

Ver. 16. I will pray the Father. If Jesus prayed to the Father, then, say the deniers of the true and proper Godhead of the Word, how could he be God? for God would thus be found praying to God. This objection proceeds upon two oversights—1. That Jesus was as truly man as he was truly God. 2. That man prays only in proportion as he is God-possessed.—Wherefore, as in Jesus 'dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily,' from him, as our Mediator, must ever ascend the voice of all our necessities to the Father, and through him must come down, in reply, 'every good and every perfect gift.' C.

Ver. 23. We will come unto him, &c. The union of Jesus and the Father in one word, 'we;' and in one action, 'we will come;' and in one permanent 'abode' with every believer, is surely an assertion of the Godhead attribute of omnipresence common to the Father and the Son which is not to be resisted or gainsaid! Had the speaker been a mere man or the highest angel, the language had been folly, falsehood, and blasphemy! C.

Ver. 28. My Father is greater than I. This is the accustomed stronghold of all who deny the Godhead of the Son. But surely, whether they assert Jesus to be mere man or highest angel, the declaration that God was 'greater' in power than either man or angel amounts to the merest and most useless truism, conveying no new information. How, then, is the Father greater than the Son? Even as every believer is greater, not in nature, but in work, because the Son has gone in righteousness to the Father (see ver. 12), and thence supplies him with grace and power, ver. 13. Thus also the Father is greater, not in nature, but in working for the glory of the Son, than was the Son, either for his own glory or the glory of the Father. In the days of his humiliation he 'finished the work which the Father had given him to do,' but no more.—But the Father has reserved 'in his own power' (Ac. 1. 7) the 'greater work' of progressively subduing all the enemies of the Son, even to the last enemy, death, 1 Co. 15. 28. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a safe and suitable object of faith is our Redeemer! All his Father's perfections shine in him as his only begotten Son and mediatorial Servant. There is no saving knowledge of, faith in, or fellowship with God, but through him. Infinite was his condescension in becoming his Father's servant, and cheerfully yielding up himself to obedience and sufferings. And great is the glory to which he is advanced as his reward. It is a sure confirmation to our faith that all his predictions are exactly accomplished. And strong is the consolation to our souls that he is our new and living way to God and glory; and that he has risen from the dead, and in our nature ascended to heaven, to secure our interest there, and provide delightful mansions for us. In death, and at the resurrection, he will therefore receive us to, and keep us for ever with, himself. His life secures ours, spiritual and eternal; and his and his Father's presence, and his Spirit's indwelling influence, shall refresh and com-

Astonishing is it that he should thus manifest himself unto us and not unto the world! And if we desire further discoveries of his glory, and experience of his goodness, let us love him, keep his commandments, and faithfully follow him whithersoever he goeth.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 1–5. In my peculiar relation to the church, I am the fountain of spiritual influence, and the means of conveying it to her members: and my Father plants and takes care of me, and of all that are connected with me. Such members of the church as are united to me only in profession and appearance, without bringing forth the fruits of holiness, he, in his righteous judgment, cuts off as unprofitable and injurious. Such, as being spiritually and vitally united to me by my Spirit and faith, bring forth fruits of righteousness, he, by the various methods of his Word, ordinances, influences, and rods, purges from their remaining corruption, that they may abound more in good works, and have their end everlasting life. Now therefore, Judas being gone, ye are all my living and fruitful members, partakers of my Spirit, and inwardly purified by faith in my Word, which works truly in you: adhere therefore more and more closely by faith and love to me, as your source of perpetual support and supply; for whatever be your present attainments in grace, ye cannot continue to perform holy obedience any otherwise than by continued union and communion with me. And the more abundantly ye cleave to me by faith and love, and have my Spirit dwelling in you, the more ye will abound in spiritual fruits, to the glory of God, and your own and others' advantage: for separate from me, and without my continual influence, even ye, my real members, can do nothing truly good and acceptable to God. 6, 7. Such church members, as do not thus adhere to me by faith and love, shall quickly be stripped of all relation to me or my church; and their gifts, profession, and specious appearances shall wither and die; and they shall be gathered together at the last day as fit fuel for divine wrath, and cast into everlasting remorse. But they who steadfastly cleave to me, and have me and my Word dwelling in their heart by faith, to guide, govern, quicken, and establish them, shall have everything which they request of God, for his glory and their own edification and fruitfulness, granted them to the utmost of their desires and wants. 8–11. By your thus abiding in me, and I in you, and having your petitions answered, my Father's wisdom, faithfulness, and grace are gloriously manifested; for thus he enables you to abound in holy tempers and works, by which he may be still further glorified; and ye may more plainly appear to yourselves and to the world as my true disciples, and be approved, esteemed and owned by me as such. For as my Father dearly loves and delights in me, not only as his eternal Son, but as the root and medium of all gracious communications to you, so I dearly love and delight in you, as branches united to me, and deriving virtue unto all holy fruitfulness from me. Cleave therefore affectionately and steadfastly to me, that ye may be still further approved of and delighted in by me. And if, from a principle of faith and love, ye cheerfully obey my commandments as your Lord and Saviour, ye shall continue to be approved and owned by me as my dearly beloved friends, even as I, in the character of man and mediator, have cheerfully fulfilled all righteousness in obedience to my Father's commandment, and am continually approved by him, and know that he loves me.—These things have I thus freely and plainly declared to you, that I may rejoice in you as my fruitful members; and ye may rejoice in your union with me, and in my abiding love to you; that through the influences of my Spirit, ye may have fulness of joy to support you under all your troubles and losses; and all may issue in your complete and everlasting joy with me. 12–17. The great command which I now insist on, as a proof of your sincere affection and discipleship to me, is, that you be affectionate, and ready to perform all kind offices one to another for my sake, in consideration and in imitation of my fervent love to you in laying down my life for you. For greater love I cannot show to you, who were naturally my enemies, than in dying for you, as if ye had been my most important and endeared friends. And ye will manifest yourselves to be my true friends, and be esteemed and owned by me as such, if, from the sense of my love to you, ye make conscience of a ready and impartial obedience to all my commandments.—I neither have nor will use you as mere servants, who are kept ignorant of their master's secrets, but as friends, to whom I have imparted, and will further impart by my Spirit, all the blessed love of my Father, which is profitable for you to know or preach.—And not from natural goodness of yours, but out of love, have I called you either to salvation or to the apostleship, but by my own grace have I made you my servants and friends, that, by virtue derived from me, ye may bring forth the fruits of righteousness in your lives and ministrations, and persevere in them, till ye and your converts propagate my cause on earth, and arrive safe in heaven: and that my Father may grant you everything you ask in my name, as your prevailing advocate and friend, to promote these holy purposes. These things I require of you, in order that ye, after my example, may heartily love one another, as members of the same body, partakers of the same blessings, and as servants, disciples, and friends of the same Lord. 18–21. Do not wonder if carnal and worldly men, the children and subjects of Satan, hate, oppose, and persecute you; for ye know that they began with me, and have been as full of rage and spite against me, your head and chief, as they can be against you.—If ye were of the same carnal tempe and disposition with worldly men, encouraging them in their sinful courses, they would esteem you as persons of their own party and likeness; but because ye are not conformed to them in their corrupt principles, manners and customs, but are through active faith in my sacrifice set apart to exemplify and preach my spiritual and holy gospel, they have an irreconcilable antipathy to you. In order therefore to prevent murmuring at the maltreatment which you must meet with, often consider that you are not worthy of, nor warranted to expect, better treatment than I, your Lord and Master, have found. If then these carnal men have reviled and persecuted me, ye may expect they will do the same to you: and if, instead of receiving the truth in the love of it from me, they have carped and cavilled at my doctrine on account of its contrariety to their depraved sentiments, tempers, and views, they will, for the same reason, set themselves against it when delivered by you.—And on account of your relation and likeness to me, and your zealous profession and publishing of my gospel, they will thus hate, oppose, and persecute you, as they have no true knowledge of God, nor of his sending me into the world to secure the salvation of men. 22–25. If I had not in the plainest manner asserted and demonstrated my Messiahship among them, their sin, in refusing to believe in me, had been less: but since they have had so long the enjoyment of the clearest evidence of the divinity of my person, office, and doctrine, their sin is so highly aggravated, that they can plead no excuse for it.—And whoever hates and opposes me, is an enemy to my heavenly Father who sent me, and hath given public testimony to me as his beloved Son.—Nay, if I had not wrought among them such a multitude of merciful and public miracles, as neither Moses nor any other man ever wrought in such a gracious and godlike manner, they might still have had some pretence of excusing their infidelity, or at least of lessening its guilt: but their persisting in it, notwithstanding their being eye-witnesses of all, must proceed from a rooted enmity at the holiness and authority of both me and my Father; and is, as the psalmist David typically foretold, a hating me without any just provocation. 26, 27. But notwithstanding their most furious and causeless enmity to my person, truths, and interests, they shall triumph over all opposition; for when that divine Counsellor, Advocate, and Comforter is come, whom I have promised, and with my Father's concurrence will send unto you,—even the Holy Spirit, who is infinitely faithful, and the inditer of all inspired truth; and who, in a divine manner, proceeds from the Father as well as from me,—he will direct, encourage, comfort, and support you under all your difficulties and dangers, and will attest my dignity and character by the further revelations which he will make, and the miraculous operations that he will enable you to love his own: but [d]because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

20 Remember the word that I said unto you, The[e] servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; [f]if they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also.

21 But[h] all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me.

22 If[i] I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin:[1] but now they have no cloak[2] for their sin.

23 He[j] that hateth me hateth my Father also.

24 If[k] I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin: [l]but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father.

25 But this cometh to pass, [m]that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law, They hated me without a cause.

26 ¶ But [n]when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me:

27 And[p] ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Christ comforteth his disciples against tribulation by the promise of the Holy Ghost, and of his resurrection and ascension: 23 assureth their prayers made in his name to be acceptable to his Father. 33 Peace in Christ, and in the world affliction.

THESE things[a] have I spoken unto you, that ye should not be offended.[1]

2 They[b] shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, [c]that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service.

3 And[d] these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me.

4 But[e] these things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. And these things I said not unto you at the beginning, [2]because I was with you.

5 ¶ But[h] now I go my way to him that sent me; and none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou?[2]

6 But because I have said these things unto you, [3]sorrow hath filled your heart.

7 Nevertheless I tell you the truth; [i]It is expedient for you that I go away: [k]for if I go not away, the Comforter[3] will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you.

8 And when he is come, he will [4]reprove [l]the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment:

form; and will assist, own, and succeed you in confuting your enemies, and bringing vast multitudes of all nations to the obedience of faith. And under his conduct and influence ye shall be enabled to give a noble, plain, courageous, and unexceptionable testimony to me and my cause, in your doctrines, miracles, lives, and deaths, as persons who have, during the whole course of my public ministry, been acquainted with my discourses, miracles, sufferings, and behaviour, public and private, all along, till my ascension to heaven.

REFLECTIONS.—God has made the most abundant provision in Christ for the spiritual life, growth, fruitfulness, and happiness of men, and for advancing his own glory in and by them. Intimate, beneficial, and endearing is their union with him, and gracious his influence upon them. But without union to and fellowship with him, there can be nothing in religion done in a spiritual or acceptable manner. While under the influence of his grace, received by faith through his Word and ordinances, a most abundant production of good works may be expected. The more vigorously faith is exercised, the more will our holiness in all manner of conversation increase; and everything that we ask for God's glory and our own good, shall be graciously bestowed. But, alas! great is their folly and guilt who take up with external forms of religion instead of vital union with Christ, and by their dead works of formality and wickedness prepare themselves for eternal woe.—Infinite is his love in dying for us his enemies, and in calling us his endeared friends. But we cannot have the evidence of our union to him, or friendship with him, but in cleaving to him. Nor can we expect the manifestations of his love, but in believing his promise, and gratefully keeping his commandments without reserve. His love to us, and ours to him, ought to make us obey and imitate him in a sincere, affectionate, and active love to our brethren.—Thrice happy is it when he grants us his Spirit to attest his truths, and, as our Advocate, Guide, and Comforter, to animate us with holy courage in our profession of his name, and to support us under all the tribulations which we endure for his sake. And never should we wonder at, or be discouraged by, the hatred, reproach, contempt, and persecution we may be called to suffer from carnal men for the sake of Christ, when he our great Lord, has undergone all and much worse for us. All that will live godly must suffer persecution; and the more faithful professors are, especially ministers, the more must they expect of it.—But inexpressible will be our guilt if we pervert the clearest revelations of Christ, and render them the occasion of greater enmity and opposition to him and his gospel, his servants and followers. It is to quarrel with our own mercies, and become our own worst adversaries: and whatever we may pretend, it is all owing to our ignorance of, and enmity against, God[3] himself.

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 1–3. I have beforehand told you of the trials and comforts which lie before you, that ye may not be discouraged in, or turned from, your duty by my leaving you, or by the troubles which you may meet with from my enemies and yours, whose rage will lead them to all manner of violence and cruelty against you. The ecclesiastical rulers will excommunicate you from all church-fellowship, as the most abandoned wretches. Nay, so furious will be their mad zeal against you, that multitudes will barbarously take pleasure in murdering you, imagining it an honour done to God, and a mean of promoting his interest in the world.—Thus they will persecute you for my sake, because, through the wilful blindness and hardness of their hearts, they neither know, nor believe in, nor love me nor my Father. 4–6. These things I have thus plainly foretold you, that, when such trials come, ye may hereby be the more confirmed in your faith in me and my words.—And I did not tell you of this sooner, because I was with you to shelter you from trials, by exposing myself, and to support and comfort you under them.—But now I am just going to leave you, and return to my Father's immediate presence in heaven; and yet ye little understand my meaning, or rejoice in my happy departure and the fruits of it, nor do ye even make inquiries about it, as ye did when ye thought I was going somewhere on earth to erect a temporal kingdom. And so much quicker are your apprehensions of things grievous than of gladdening promises, that what I have said of my leaving you, and the troubles that will ensue, hath quite overwhelmed you with sorrow. 7–11. But notwithstanding all your dejection and fears, it is really necessary, and for your unspeakable advantage, that I leave this world and ascend to my heavenly Father: for according to our loving purpose and the just order of things, unless I return thither, the Holy Ghost, that blessed Guide, Advocate, and Comforter, will not visit you with his richest gifts, graces, counsels, and assistances, supports and joys; but when once I am enthroned in my heavenly kingdom, I will send him to answer all the great and glorious purposes for which ye and my church shall need him.—And he, coming from on high, by virtue of my death, and in consequence of my resurrection and exaltation, shall carry on my cause in this lower world, demonstratively convincing both Jews and Gentiles of their sinfulness and misery, of the insufficiency of all their works to recommend them to the favour of God, of the sufficiency of my obedience and suffering to justify them in his sight; and of my judicial power to reform the world, overthrow the kingdom of Satan, and at last condemn to punishment the unbelieving and unrighteous. By his miraculous gifts and operations for confirming the gospel, and by his internal illumination and influences, he shall convince the world of the sinfulness of heart and life, and especially of its great sin of unbelief in wilfully rejecting me. He shall convince men of the righteousness of my person and cause, and of the necessity and perfection of that everlasting righteousness which I am come to work out by my obedience and death, because I am now to be exalted at my Father's right hand, in testimony of his full acceptance of it in the room of a lost world;—and ye shall no more see me in this state of debasement, in which I must continue till it be finished. He shall also convince men of my power and will to renew and sanctify sinners, to destroy the kingdom of darkness, and to execute judgment upon all the finally impenitent and unbelieving; because Satan, who rules in the hearts of carnal men, is tried, and judicially defeated in all his power and claims, by my death, resurrection, and ascension; and my kingdom of light, grace, and holiness established on the ruins of his dominion on earth; and he and his agents shall be condemned to everlasting ruin at the last day. 12–15. I have still many other things to inform you of relative to the future alterations of the state and worship of the church under the direction and influence of the Holy Ghost; but through the weakness of your faith, and the strength of your carnal prejudices, ye cannot as yet apprehend, or be reconciled to them

A.M. cir. 4037. A.D. cir. 33.

9 Of[n] sin, because they believe not on me;

10 Of[o] righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more;

11 Of[p] judgment, because the prince of this world is judged.

12 I[q] have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now.

13 Howbeit[r] when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: [s]and he will show you things to come.

14 He shall [t]glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you.

15 All[u] things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you.

16 ¶ A[v] little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, [z]a little while, and ye shall see me, because [y]I go to the Father.

17 Then[z] said some of his disciples among themselves, What is this that he saith unto us, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me: and, Because I go to the Father?

18 They said therefore, What is this that he saith, A little while? [a]we cannot tell what he saith.

A.M. cir. 4037. A.D. cir. 33.

19 Now Jesus [b]knew that they were desirous to ask him, and said unto them, Do ye inquire among yourselves of that I said, [c]A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me?

20 Verily, verily, I say unto you, That [d]ye shall weep and lament, [e]but the world shall rejoice: and ye sha. be sorrowful, [f]but your sorrow shall be turned into joy.

21 A[h] woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, [i]for joy that a man is born into the world.

22 And[j] ye now therefore have sorrow: [k]but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you.

23 And in that day ye shall [l]ask me [5]nothing. [m]Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you.[6]

24 Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name: [o]ask, and ye shall receive, that your [7]joy may be full.

25 These things have I spoken unto you in proverbs:[8] but the time cometh, when I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs,[9] but [p]I shall show you plainly of the Father.

[b] The two clauses of this verse are not antithetical. There is no contrast or comparison between the asking of Christ, and the asking of the Father in his name. In Greek the words rendered 'ask' are quite distinct. The first signifies to ask for information:—In that day, when the Holy Spirit shall be given to you, ye shall be no longer in ignorance, no longer desirous of asking me questions. The second signifies to ask in prayer, or to pray. The clause is in no way connected with what precedes: it is an independent promise.—P.

But when the Holy Ghost, who is faithfulness and truth itself, shall come to do his work upon and by you, he shall give you a complete understanding of the whole of divine truth relative to my gospel kingdom. And he will reveal these things unto you, not as separate from, but as one with me and my Father, and entirely acquainted with our whole mind and will. He will also acquaint you with all that is necessary for you to know, or make known to the church, relative to time or eternity. And his manifesting to you the things relative to my person, offices, cause, and kingdom, will tend to my honour, and make you to have clear, exalted, and endearing thoughts of me, of my love, fulness, office, and work. For in this he will manifest to you what concerns my Father, as I am one with him in nature, perfections, counsels, and property; and the administration of all that he does is committed to me. 16, 20, 22. In a few hours I shall be taken from you by death and burial, and after that ye shall have but for a few days an opportunity of seeing me, and then I will ascend to my Father.—My sufferings and death shall quickly overwhelm you with sorrow and mourning, while my carnal enemies will triumph and rejoice, imagining that they have ruined me: but very soon after, by my personal visits, and the pouring out of my Spirit upon you, I will turn your sorrow into the greatest joy, the foundation of which neither men nor devils shall ever be able to shake, and of which no one can rob you. 23-27. And under this comforting light, and these influences of my Spirit, ye shall neither need my bodily presence, nor to ask information as ye now do. But I solemnly assure you, that whatever ye, by the assistance of the Spirit, shall ask my Father and yours, with faith in my name, as your only Mediator, High-priest, and Advocate, he will readily grant it on my account. Hitherto ye have had recourse to me in all your difficulties, and have not well understood how to plead with him upon the ground of my righteousness, and interest with him for you.—But henceforth, in all your wants, present your petitions and pleas with faith in my atonement and intercession, that, by the gracious answers which you receive, your joy may daily increase, till it be completed. These things I have delivered to you in short substantial sentences, which, by reason of your ignorance, sorrows, and prejudices, ye do not well understand; but in a little time after my resurrection, and afterwards by my Spirit, I will make to you a free, open, and full discovery of my Father, and of all his gracious mind; of my own person, office, and work; and of your proper method of fellowship with us: and then shall ye, by the assistance of the Spirit, offer up all your requests, with express mention of my name, and entire dependence on me.—Nor need I again inform you that I, as your great Advocate, will recommend your persons and prayers to the Father's acceptance: nay, he himself will delight to hear your prayers thus presented to him, and to manifest his affection towards, and bestow his favours upon, you as my disciples, who believe in and love me as his Son and the appointed Saviour of mankind. 28. I, who was with the Father from everlasting, voluntarily came forth from him, in a way of peculiar manifestation, into this world; and in a little time I am to leave this world and return to the Father in my ascension, that I may be glorified together with him, and may manage the concerns of my people in heaven, and by my Spirit apply my complete salvation to all who believe. 31-33. Do ye now at last clearly apprehend, and firmly believe what I have said? or do ye imagine that ye are so established in the faith, that ye shall no more stagger through unbelief? Nay, to manifest my omniscience, and to warn you to be humble and watchful, I assure you that within a very little time, even this same night, ye shall all, suddenly affrighted, leave me to my murderous enemies, and disperse yourselves, for your safety, among your friends. But though you will thus shamefully desert me, my Father will assist, own, and carry me through all the sufferings which I have consented to undergo in his service and for his honour. Now, all these things I have delivered to you in this farewell discourse, that, by virtue of your union with me, and by faith in me, ye may enjoy the most refreshing peace with God and your own consciences. While ye continue in this world, great troubles and persecutions for my sake will attend you; but courageously trust in me, and expect a happy issue; for, having vanquished all opposition from men and devils, I am going, through my death and resurrection, to the heavenly mansions, that, by my intercession and the outpouring of my Spirit, I may prepare all believers to dwell with me for ever.

Ver. 8-11. Reprove. Rather 'convict' (comp. ch. 8. 9, 46; 1 Co. 14. 24; Tit. 1. 9; Ja. 2. 9). Ver. 9. Sin—their own sin, unbelief. Ver. 10. Righteousness—consequently their own imaginary righteousness. Ver. 11. Judgment—their own unrighteous judgment in condemning the Holy One.—Note, Are not these three acts of the Spirit, though commonly considered as descriptive of the process of conversion, rather a description of that threefold evidence whereby he shall convict the world, the unbelieving, self-righteous, Christ-condemning world, of that 'blasphemy against the Holy Ghost which shall not be forgiven, neither in this world, neither in the world to come?' Mat. 12. 31, 32. C.

Ver. 26. And I say not unto you, &c. That is, 'I do not merely say that I will pray the Father for you:'—I need not farther assure you of it, 'for the Father himself loveth you;' and therefore I never can either forget, neglect, or cease to love and intercede for you. C.

Ver. 33. I have overcome the world—its flatteries, its ambition, its honours, its pleasures, its hopes, its injustice, its malice, its calumnies, its sorrows, its fears, and its god. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Blind bigotry often raises the most furious persecution in the church; and her best friends are frequently reproached and murdered as her worst enemies. True believers are sometimes grieved at that which, properly understood, is a real ground of their joy. For how much more advantageous is it to have Jesus, our exalted Forerunner and Advocate, on his throne, than to have him always continued on earth! How great is he!—possessed of all perfections and property equally with his Father and the Holy Spirit. And thrice happy is it that this divine Spirit, who perfectly knows all the designs and mysteries of the Godhead, comes to acquaint us with all needful truth, and to glorify Jesus Christ, in revealing and communicating his fulness to us. Powerfully he convinces men of sin, righteousness, and judgment—all to the honour of Christ.—Kindly Jesus suits his instructions to our capacities and circumstances.—But great is our dulness and ignorance that we rightly apprehend but few of them. Powerfully he dispels our griefs, and turns them into joy by his gracious visits. But never, when we are self-conceited, are we far from danger and shame. Let me therefore always be clothed with self-diffidence, and given to pour forth prayers in his name. The Father, who loves him, and us for his sake, will not refuse us a gracious answer. And faith in and love to him will graciously secure his Father's delight to do us good.—What a scene of sorrow is this world! Quickly the triumphing of the wicked issues in everlasting disappointment and misery; and children are certain crosses, but uncertain comforts. They but come into a world of sin, snares, troubles, and griefs.—But if we meet with great tribulation, it is but the predicted lot of Christians. If friends forsake us, so they did Christ our Saviour. If his peace compose and victory comfort us, nothing need discourage us; and if he and his Father abide with us, our light and tranglory afflictions shall work for us an exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 1–3. O Father, the time fixed in thy eternal love for completing my course of obedience on earth is now come! Own and support me as thy Son, under my sufferings, that, in finishing all righteousness, triumphing over sin, Satan, and death, and in ascending to heaven, I may manifest and spread the honour of all thy compassion in the world; that in the exercise of that mediatorial authority over all mankind which thou hast allotted me as the reward of my obedience, I may freely and graciously bestow the great blessing of eternal life upon all those who come unto me and accept me as their Savior and abide in me. And the way to, the beginning, earnest, and evidence of right to, this eternal life, and even the complete enjoyment of it, is by an approving and fiducial knowledge of thee as the only true and faithful God, in opposition to all idols; and of me as the anointed Saviour and the only Mediator, in opposition to all others. 4, 5. As I have invariably intended and manifested thy glory in the whole of my doctrine, miracles, and practice, and am just ready, without fail, to honour all thy perfections by my death, which will complete that work of the work of redemption which was intrusted to me, do thou therefore, according to thy affection to me, advance my incarnate person to the highest glory at thy right hand, where I may appear in my human nature and mediatorial office like myself, and shine forth in that divine majesty which I had with thee from eternity, but which has been obscured in my humble state on earth. 6-8. As for those true believers who through faith have accepted me as the Savior of the world and have determined to walk in me as they received me, I have begun to give them a spiritual understanding of thine excellencies, mind, and will, and of my relation to thee and commission from thee; and they, under my powerful influence on their hearts, have embraced and adhered to thy truths which I taught them; and by my instructions have been made to know and believe that all things which I, as Mediator, have undertaken, taught, performed, or suffered, are by thy love and blessed, and the fruits of thy infinite wisdom and sovereign grace. 9, 10. I therefore affectionately recommend to thy care, these my disciples and those who through their ministry accept me as the Redeemer of the world as the members of my mystical body, to be redeemed and saved by me, that thou mayest perfect everything which concerns them. And as thy right in them is so inseparably and entirely the same with mine, I pray that thou wouldest perform in them all the good pleasure of thy goodness, that I, together with thee, may be glorified in their redemption and blessedness, and in their faith, love, worship, obedience, and eternal salvation. 11–13. And now the time is come that I must die a sacrifice for all sin, and afterwards be but little with men in this world, to instruct, defend, and comfort them; yet these my apostles, as well as my other disciples, must for a time remain in it, compassed about with many infirmities, temptations, and dangers.—And as I am coming to appear in thy presence for them, I beseech thee, by thy mighty power and infinite wisdom, and for thine own name's sake, to preserve them steadfast in their faith and holy profession, that, as my witnesses and chief ministers, they may be entirely united in heart and affection, testimony, interest, and designs, as we are in ours.—While I have been personally conversant with them, I have, according to thy commission, by my doctrine, example, and powerful influences, so confirmed and preserved them from apostasy, that not one of them has miscarried, except the perfidious Judas, who, by forsaking and betraying me, is just now bringing inevitable ruin upon his own head, agreeably to the ancient predictions concerning him. But now, as I am coming to be glorified at thy right hand in heaven, leaving them without the benefit of my company to guide, protect, and comfort them, I thus supplicate thee in their hearing, that they may rejoice in hope of thy preserving, teaching, and comforting Spirit, and that their joy may be more abundant than ever it was in my personal presence. 14, 15. I have given them a spiritual understanding of, and commission to preach, thy gospel; and carnal and unbelieving men are filled with enmity, rage, and violence against them, because their principles, tempers, doctrines, and views, as well as mine, are utterly disagreeable to their carnal lusts, sentiments, and interests. However, I do not plead that thou, to deliver them from their troubles, shouldest deprive this world of their holy example and useful ministrations; but that thou wouldest preserve them from the temptations of Satan and their own remaining corruptions, and support them under, sanctify to them, and carry them through, all the persecutions which they may meet with before they have finished their work. 16-19. They are already of such a religious temper and disposition, and engaged in such excellent work, as is directly contrary to the inclinations of carnal men, even as I myself have been before them. Let this holy temper and practice be maintained and increased in them by means of thy Word; and by the anointing of thy Spirit, let them be consecrated to serve thee in propagating gospel truth. For as thou hast sent me into the world with a commission to preach thy important and infallible truths to mankind, I have authorized them to carry on the same work, wherever Providence may cast their lot, after my departure from them. And for this, as one great reason, have I devoted myself to the mediatorial office, and am going to consecrate myself by suffering and death, that they, through the truth, may, by the Holy Ghost, be consecrated to, fitted for, supported, and succeeded in preaching it. 20, 21. Nor do I only pray for such preserving, supporting, sanctifying, and comforting influences to my apostles, but to all who, in this and the following ages, shall be brought to a saving faith in me, by means of their publication of the gospel—that the whole number of believers, in all generations, may be joined together as one body, in faith and love, worship and obedience, by one spirit, in as near a resemblance as possible to that union which we have by our mutual inbeing; and that, in their measure, they may be united to us; that others, beholding the powerful effects of the gospel on them, may be induced to believe in me as the promised Messiah. 22, 23. And in pursuit of this great design, I have given them an interest and subordinate partnership in that glory which thou hast given me, as their Head, Representative, and Trustee; that, as members of my mystical body, and joint heirs of God with me, and partakers of my Spirit, they may be united in the most close, honourable, and beneficial manner. In order to which I will dwell in them by my Spirit, according to their measure, as thou dwellest in me by him without measure, that they, being joined to me, may attain to the most perfect union they are capable of, in one spiritual body, under me as their Head—that by means hereof multitudes of both Jews and Gentiles may clearly and satisfactorily perceive and believe that I am the Christ whom thou hast sent into the world for the redemption of men; and that thou hast a peculiar, affectionate, and delightful love to them for my sake, some way resembling that supreme love which thou bearest to me as thine eternal Son and their Mediator. 24. And I further claim that, according to my sacrifice and suffering, all those whom thou hast called to receive eternal life be given the opportunity of repentance and acceptance of heaven, where I already am in my divine nature, and for ever shall be in my entire person, that there they may have an appropriating, blissful, and transforming vision of that glory which thou hast bestowed on me as their Head and Representative, because from all eternity thou hadst an infinite delight in me, as thy Son and their Savior, who sought to glorify thee in their salvation. 25, 26. All these things do I ask from thee, not only as thou infinitely hatest all impurity, and lovest me and them for my sake, but as thou art a righteous and faithful Father, ready to give men whatever I have secured for them. As for the unregenerate worldlings, they are ignorant of and reject thee and thy counsels; but I am thoroughly acquainted with thy nature, perfections, and will; and these my apostles have known and received me as the true Messiah whom thou has sent for the salvation of Israel.—And as, according to my commission, I have fully declared to them whatever was proper, and have savingly enlightened them in the knowledge of thyself, I will, after my resurrection, by personal visits, and after my ascension by the effusion of my Spirit, more clearly and fully acquaint them with thy glorious perfections and will, that the infinite love with which thou hast from eternity loved me may extend to and manifest itself in men, and that I may dwell in their hearts by faith till they arrive at that perfection of eternal blessedness which, in thy distinguishing love, thou hast prepared for all and for all who receive me by faith.

Ver. 1. It is recorded of our Lord that he continued all night in prayer, but this is the longest of his prayers of which the Spirit has left any verbal record. C.

Ver. 3. The only true God. This, like ch. 14. 28, has been a special stronghold of all who deny the supreme deity of the Son of God: yet requires merely the application of one Scripture rule, the 'comparing of spiritual things with spiritual,' 1 Co. 2. 3, to show itself in perfect accordance with that essential doctrine. (1) Then, be it remembered, that our Lord teaches us to say, 'Our Father who art in heaven.' (2) That the gods of the nations are idols—false gods—always on earth—never in heaven. (3) That 'THE WORD was God,' Jn. 1. 1, 'and dwelt among us.' (4) That, as such, he is called 'the true God,' 1 Jn. 5. 20. Wherefore, the Father is called 'the only true God'—God in heaven—not in opposition to Jesus Christ, who is 'the true God'—'God manifest in the flesh,' dwelling among us on earth; but the Father is so called in opposition to idols, which are vanity and a lie. C.

Ver. 4. I have finished the work. The work of instruction, of miracles, of witness-bearing—the work of contending with Satan and his auxiliaries—and now I am about to enter upon the sufferings I have been appointed to undergo. C.

Ver. 9. I pray not for the world. When Christ prays he is certainly heard, Jn. 11. 42. But he prays not at this time, for the impenitent world, his whole mind at this time was upon his disciples. C.

Ver. 12. None of them is lost, &c. None that were given are lost; but 'the son of perdition' is lost, 'that the scripture might be fulfilled.' Not as if Judas were lost that the prophecy might become true, but the prophecy is verified in the fact of his treason. C.

Ver. 13. My joy. The joy derivable from me.—Fulfilled. By the presence of the Holy Spirit—one form of whose precious fruit is joy in the birth, doctrine, death, resurrection, kingdom, and victories of Christ, Lu. 2. 10; Ga. 5. 22; Re. 12. 12. C.

hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee:[1]

2 As[d] thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should [e]give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him.

3 And[f] this is life eternal, [h]that they might know thee [i]the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom[j] thou hast sent.

4 I[k] have glorified thee on the earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.

5 And now, O Father, [l]glorify thou me, with thine own self, with the glory which [m]I had with thee before the world was.[2]

6 ¶ I[o] have manifested thy name unto [p]the men which thou gavest me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gavest them me; and they[q] have kept thy word.

7 Now[r] they have known that all things whatsoever thou hast given me are of thee.

8 For [s]I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me.

9 I[t] pray for them: [u]I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine.

10 And[v] all mine are thine, and thine are mine; [w]and I am glorified in them.

11 And[y] now I am no more in the world, but these are in [x]the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, [a]keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, [b]that they may be one, as we are.

12 While I was with them in the world, [c]I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the[d] son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled.

13 And[e] now come I to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves.

14 I[g] have given them thy word; and [h]the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

[1] Our Lord here most distinctly refers to three estates of existence as realized in his person: (1) The state of eternal pre-existence with the Father in heaven. (2) The state of humiliation on earth when he assumed manhood, and put off for a time the external glory of deity. (3) The state of resurrection glory, when he assumed in his twofold nature, God-man, the same glory which he had as God with the Father from eternity. John here brings out in the very words of Christ the deepest mysteries of our faith.—C.

15 ¶ I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest [i]keep them from the evil.[3]

16 They[j] are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

17 ¶ Sanctify[k] them through thy truth: thy word is truth.

18 As[l] thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world.

19 And[m] for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the [4]truth.

20 ¶ Neither pray I for [o]these alone, but for [p]them also which shall believe on me through their word;

21 That they all [q]may be one; [r]as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one[5] in us: [s]that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

22 And[t] the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one:

23 I[u] in them, and thou in me, that they may be made [v]perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and [z]hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

24 Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me [y]be with me where I am; [a]that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.

25 O righteous Father, the world [b]hath not known thee: [c]but I have known thee, and [d]these have known that thou hast sent me.

26 And[e] I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou hast loved me [g]may be in them, and I [g]in them.

Ver. 19. Sanctify myself. Separate myself from the world, and dedicate myself utterly to the service of my Father. C.

Ver. 22. How is it that 'the world,' out of which the disciples were taken (ver. 6), for whom Christ Jesus did not pray (ver. 9), that hated his disciples (ver. 14), and with which our Lord and his apostles had nothing spiritually in common (ver. 16), is here said to 'believe' that the Father had sent him? Some solve the difficulty by taking the word 'world' in two senses, viz. the one an unbelieving, and the other a believing world. But how strange must it appear if the same word be taken thrice in one sense, and immediately after twice in a sense the very opposite! Surely there is no necessity for this arbitrary and violent transmutation! Believing, when alone, is no mark of a change of heart, Ja. 2. 17. The 'devils believe and tremble,' Ja. 2. 19. Even so the time is coming when 'the world' that hated both Christ and his disciples shall both believe and know that the Father sent the Son (ver. 23, even as multitudes of Mahometans and professing Christians both 'believe and know' that he was sent: yet the one part prefer to him the 'false prophet,' and the other 'hold the truth in unrighteousness.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is necessary to conclude important advices, and prepare for impending temptations, by fervent and solemn prayer, and with heart and eyes lifted up unto God. In what a dignified manner Jesus intercedes for all men, particularly his ministers, upon the footing of his own finished righteousness, and his Father's perfections manifested and promises ratified thereby! It is impossible for those to fall short of grace or glory who are interested in such prayers, which so closely connect the glory of God and the good of men.—Marvellous is his exaltation and his saving power! And thrice happy are they who have the saving knowledge of him as the only Mediator, and of his Father in him. His glorification of his Father's perfections, by fulfilling all righteousness in our stead, wonderfully secures eternal glories to himself, and conversion, deliverance, and everlasting happiness to all faithful members. And by our holding fast his doctrine, by our holiness in heart and life, and giving him the glory of all that we are and do, he marks our relation to him as his true children.—Great is the mercy that all our spiritual knowledge, faith, holiness, and eternal happiness are secured in and by him; and that though he be no more in this world, his Word and Spirit are left to supply his room. This polluting and insnaring world is the greatest enemy to his saints. But while multitudes of professors, and even noted preachers, are eternally ruined by its influence, Christ's prayers, the directions of his Word, and the influences of his Spirit, will carry all who are faithful safely, and even comfortably and honourably, through it. If we be not carnally disposed, we shall quickly get to heaven, out of the reach of carnal men. For if Jesus devoted himself to sufferings for us, he will advance us to glory with him. Whatever good work he once begins will not fail on his account; and if his ministers need to be eminently holy, steadfast, and faithful, he offers up particular prayers in their behalf; and if he send ministers, he will make their labours powerful for increasing, uniting, and edifying his mystical body the church. Let carnal men deride it now as they will, they shall be made to know that Christ and his people are one in law, spirit, temper, and design. And while the wicked are ruined by their sins, the good shall be admitted into the most immediate vision of and fellowship with him, in his glory and in his Father's love.

CHAPTER XVIII. Ver. 11. It is no time for fighting; nor is my kingdom or cause to be propagated VALLEY OF JEHOSHAPHAT. [John, xviii:1.]—This is also called the valley of the Kedron, but is generally known as the Valley of Jesoshaphat. The Jews believe that the final judgment will be held here, and for this reason they regard it a great privilege to be buried on the sides of the Mount of Olives, so when they arise from the dead to be judged they will be close to the place of the final accounts. This belief among the orthodox Jews is based on Joel, iii:2-12. The Moslems have also adopted the belief of the Jews, and so they have turned the sides of the valley next to the walls of Jerusalem into a cemetery. In this valley are the tombs of Absalom, Zechariah and St James. The brook Kedron flows through it. When the name "Valley of Jehoshaphat" was first applied to this place is not known. The date is not mentioned in the Bible.

2 And Judas also, which betrayed him, knew the place: for [c]Jesus ofttimes resorted thither with his disciples.[1]

3 Judas[d] then, having received a band of men and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees, cometh thither with lanterns and torches and weapons.

4 Jesus therefore, [e]knowing all things that should come upon him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye?

5 They answered him, [f]Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am he. And Judas also, which betrayed him, [h]stood with them.

6 As soon then as he had said unto them, I am he, [i]they went backward, and fell to the ground.[3]

7 Then asked he them again, Whom seek ye? And they said, Jesus of Nazareth.

8 Jesus answered, I have told you that I am he: [k]if therefore ye seek me, let these go their way:

9 That the saying might be fulfilled which he spake, [l]Of them which thou gavest me have I lost none.

10 ¶ Then[k] Simon Peter, having a sword,[4] drew it, and smote the high-priest's servant, and cut off his right ear. The servant's name was Malchus.

11 Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath: [t]the cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

12 ¶ Then[n] the band and the captain, and officers of the Jews took Jesus, and [o]bound him,

13 And led him away to [p]Annas first; for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas, which was the high-priest that same year.[5]

14 Now[q] Caiaphas was he which gave counsel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should die[6] for the people.

15 ¶ And[r] Simon Peter followed Jesus, and so did another[7] disciple: that disciple was known unto the high-priest, and went in with Jesus into the palace of the high-priest.

16 But[s] Peter stood at the door without. Then went out that other disciple, which was known unto the high-priest, and spake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

17 Then saith the damsel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou also one of this man's disciples? He saith, I am not.

18 And[t] the servants and officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals;[8] for it was cold: and they warmed themselves: and Peter stood with them, and warmed himself.

19 ¶ The[u] high-priest then asked Jesus of his disciples, and of his doctrine.

20 Jesus answered him, [v]I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing.

21 Why askest thou me? [w]ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I said.

22 And when he had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by [x]struck Jesus[9] with the palm of his hand,[1] saying, Answerest thou the high-priest so?

23 Jesus answered him, [y]If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if well, why smitest thou me?[2]

24 Now[z] Annas had sent him bound unto Caiaphas the high-priest.

25 ¶ And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself. [a]They said therefore unto him, Art not thou also one of his disciples? He denied it, and said, I am not.

26 One[b] of the servants of the high-priest, being his kinsman whose ear Peter cut off, saith, Did not I see thee in the garden with him?

27 Peter[c] then denied again: and immediately the cock crew.[3]

28 ¶ Then[d] led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment:[4] and it was [e]early; [g]and they themselves went not into the judgment-hall, lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the [h]passover.[6]

29 Pilate then went out unto them, and said, What accusation bring ye against this man?

3 By what specialty in the appearance or manner of our Lord this was effected does not appear. But as the band, which was doubtless of Roman soldiers, must have heard much of the miraculous powers of Jesus, and as they had with them such light as would give full display to his person, it is not improbable that some indescribable heavenliness in his appearance, manner, or voice, produced an effect upon them which, if not directly miraculous, was in every sense supernatural, and amounted to an acknowledgment of his kingly dignity. And perhaps (as Bloomfield supposes) our Lord intended by this power over the soldiers to show to his disciples that he could have escaped if he had pleased.—C.

5 The phrase eat the passover may signify eat the paschal lamb; but it may have a wider signification. The context alone can determine the true meaning. If it signify the paschal lamb, then our Lord must have been crucified on the 14th of the month, and could not have eaten the paschal supper with his disciples. Yet the other evangelists say he did, Mat.26.17–20, &c. The word passover, therefore, must have some other meaning. John employs it to denote the whole festival, ch. 2. 13; 6. 4, &c.; but the word eat limits it here to some particular act. We know that it was customary to kill voluntary peace-offerings on the 15th, and these were eaten by the offerer and his friends who were ceremonially clean. To these offerings the term passover was applicable; and to these doubtless the evangelist refers in this passage.—I.

by force of arms. I am not destitute of almighty power to rescue myself; but from regard to the glory of God, and to manifest my own love in the salvation of sinners, I freely and cheerfully submit to all the tribulation and wrath which he hath appointed me to undergo, and I will allow of no opposition to it. 20, 21. Whatsoever I have taught has been with all openness, plainness, and freedom to all sorts of people, in the most public places, and on the most solemn occasions. Nor did I ever teach aught in private that I did not teach openly.—Let then my hearers, whether friends or foes, be examined as to what they heard me deliver. 36, 37. My kingdom is altogether spiritual and heavenly, consisting in a dominion over men's souls and consciences, and not over their secular affairs.—Nor does it in the least interfere with, or tend to the disturbance of, civil government; if it had, I should have allowed my followers to fight for my protection or rescue.—I freely own myself a king; but, to satisfy you that my kingdom is not of a worldly constitution or design, know that God hath sent me into this world, that, by my preaching and miracles, I might reveal and confirm the truth, and that alone, concerning God and myself, and the way of salvation to sinful men. This is the mean of my conquests and government; and every one that is acquainted with and awakened by the word of truth may believe and embrace my testimony, and become my willing subject.

Ver. 2. This garden may have belonged to some friend of our Lord; or, more probably, have been one of those public gardens which are common around cities both in Asia and Europe.—Note, The life of our Lord is strikingly diversified between extreme activity and publicity, and the love of quiet and retirement. There never appears, however, any morbid preference either for publicity or solitude; but the one is diligently employed as the means of doing good to men, the other is thankfully received as an occasion of more private converse with his disciples, or of communion with his Father. C.

Ver. 28. Defiled. They were defiled with hypocrisy, malice, falsehood, and bloodthirstiness: with all these pollutions within them and upon them they were ready to eat the passover as a work of righteousness; but they would neither enter the prætorium nor come in contact with a Gentile soldier, lest they should be disqualified. They were careful to 'make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter,' to whiten the exterior of the sepulchre, but forgetful or regardless of the death and rottenness within.—Note, Let this ceremonial scrupulosity and moral defilement of the Jews furnish to every Christian a special note for self-examination before prayer and the Lord's supper, and every other act of religion! C.

REFLECTIONS.—Garden retirements should at once lead our thoughts to Adam's ruining fall, and to the gracious promises and redeeming sufferings of Christ. Amazing was his willingness to die for us who thus went forth to meet his murderers. And after showing his ability to strike them dead, he readily resigned himself into their hands, in obedience to his Father's will. Why then should danger or death ever deter us from faithfully owning his cause! Kindly he proportions his people's trials to their strength, and preserves them by offering himself a sacrifice for them. And his cause is to be maintained by his ministers by weapons not carnal, but mighty through God. Yea, the most hasty in their zeal are seldom the most steadfast in his service. But hardened indeed are men when even awful miracles cannot restrain their wickedness and folly. Dreadful is the nature of sin, that brought God, in our nature, under such sorrow and suffering. And infinite was his kindness and condescension cheerfully to submit to all for our sake. O my soul, let the treachery of Judas, the rage of Jews, the repeated denials of Peter, the cowardly injustice of Pilate, serve me as a glass to view myself, as a warning to watch 30 They answered and said unto him, If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee.

31 Then said Pilate unto them, [h]Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews therefore said unto him, [i]It is not lawful for us to put any man to death:

32 That the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled,[7] which he spake, signifying what death he should die.[8]

33 Then[j] Pilate entered into the judgment-hall again, and called Jesus, and said unto him, Art thou the King of the Jews?

34 Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself,[9] or did others tell it thee of me?

35 Pilate answered, [k]Am I a [l]Jew? [l]Thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered thee unto me: what hast thou done?

36 Jesus[n] answered, [o]My kingdom is not of this world:[2] if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence.

37 Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king.[3] To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear[p] witness unto the truth. Every one that is [q]of the truth heareth my voice.

38 Pilate saith unto him, What is truth?[4] And when he had said this, he went out again unto the Jews, and saith unto them, [r]I find in him no fault at all.

39 But[r] ye have a custom, that I should release unto you one at the passover: will ye therefore that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

40 Then[t] cried they all again, saying, Not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber.

4 Behold the man! From this example, as well as in ch. 18. 38, it is apparent that Pilate was a sententious and laconic speaker. Nor is it easy in either case precisely to pronounce upon his meaning. The Scriptures have left us not a single trace of the personal appearance of our Lord; yet it is not improbable that Pilate saw in the countenance of our Lord such evident marks of sincerity, guileless simplicity, and innocence, that he makes this appeal to the compassion of the Jews—as if he had said, "Behold the man you have accused, and let his meek, subdued, patient, and innocent aspect excite your pity, while I pronounce his release."—Note, While such was, probably, the secret thought of Pilate, Providence overrules it to make him add further a witness for, and, as it were, a preacher of Jesus.—C.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Christ is scourged, crowned with thorns, and beaten. 4 Pilate is desirous to release him, but being overcome with the outrage of the Jews, he delivereth him to be crucified. 23 They cast lots for his garments. 26 He commendeth his mother to John. 28 He dieth. 31 His side is pierced. 38 He is buried by Joseph and Nicodemus.

THEN Pilate[a] therefore took Jesus, and scourged him.

2 And the soldiers platted [b]a crown of [1]thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe,

3 And said, Hail,[2] King of the Jews! and they smote him with their hands.

4 ¶ Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that [c]I find no fault in him.[3]

5 Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man![4]

6 When[d] the chief priests therefore and officers saw him, they cried out, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him.

7 The Jews answered him, [e]We have a [5]law, and by our law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God.

8 ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid;[6]

9 And went again into the judgment-hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art thou? [f]But Jesus gave him no answer.

10 Then saith Pilate unto him, Speakest thou not unto me? [h]knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?

CHAPTER XIX. Ver. 11. Therefore, &c. To discover the grounds of this conclusion has greatly perplexed commentators. Might we venture to suggest one additional solution, it would be this:—Take the words 'Thou couldst have no power at all against me except it were given thee from above' as parenthetical, and consider the words 'Therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin.' as a reply to Pilate's assertion of despotic authority, 'I have power to crucify thee, and I have power to release thee,' and the reply is most applicable—'Therefore he that delivered me'—to a judge determined to assert and act upon power, and not upon justice and mercy, 'has the greater sin—his own sin aggravated by that of the judge his accomplice.' C.

Ver. 14. Mark says 'it was the third hour, and they crucified him,' ch. 15. 25; John says 'it was about the sixth hour,' even before he was delivered to his enemies. The most common method of reconciliation is that of Eusebius, who states that the Hebrew numeral for 'the third' was mistaken by the early transcribers for the Greek numeral for 'the sixth.' In this reading seven of the best MSS. concur; it is also supported by several of the early fathers, and adopted by the most learned modern commentators. But, in opposition to all these authorities, the early versions of this Gospel have all 'the sixth hour'—an evidence of authenticity scarcely to be overborne. Perhaps a better solution of the difficulty may be found in the difference between the Jewish and Roman modes of commencing the numeration of hours. The Jewish numeration commenced at sunrise, the Roman at midnight; so that, 'about the' Roman 'sixth hour' corresponded with the time about the Jewish first hour—most probably half-past the Jewish one o'clock A.M., at which time, according to John, Jesus was 'delivered to be crucified,' ver. 16. Now, as it is evident from Mat. 20. 12 that the Jews counted their hours from their commencement, and not from their conclusion, this would leave barely an hour and a half till the Jewish 'third hour.' And considering the slowness with which the mass of spectators could emerge from the half and advance through the crowded streets; and allowing a sufficient time for the procession to Calvary, which lay without, though near to the city: He. 13. 12; Jn. 19. 20; and Robinson's Geography, pp. 64–80; and adding the time necessary for completing the cruel preparations for the crucifixion—it will be easy to perceive how this hour and half would be occupied, and the accounts of Mark and John perfectly harmonized. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What struggles are there in the breasts of carnal men between the convictions of their conscience and their care of their secular interests—between the terrors of God and the fears of men! But indulged lusts dreadfully bear down all religion, truth, and equity.—How shocking is it to behold the men of Israel persecute their divine King with outrage, indignity, and barbarity! Yet more amazing to behold the God of heaven giving up his only begotten Son into the hands of such vile and savage miscreants! But, lo! even the marks of disgrace proclaim his character and spread his renown! Astonishing is his meekness, patience, and holy fortitude, under all his sufferings. Remarkable his filial regard to his mother, and his dying trust in his heavenly Father. And while his hypocritical persecutors pretend ceremonious scruples of conscience amidst their obstinate violation of important precepts, the blood and water streaming from his heart verify the scripture, mark him really dead, and figure out our justification by his blood, and sanctification by his Spirit. And to magnify the grace of God, fulfil the predictions of the prophets, and honour the crucified Redeemer, disciples who had long been timorous and afraid to own him are emboldened at such an important crisis to give him an honourable interment.—Now, my soul, behold the God-man who was falsely accused that I might be honourably acquitted—was wounded and scourged, that by his stripes I might be healed—was clothed with a robe of derision, that I might be clothed with robes of righteousness and garments of salvation:—was crowned with thorns, that I might wear a diadem of glory—had his royalty insulted, that I might be made a king unto God—was condemned, that I might be justified—bore his own cross, and was crucified on it, that he might bear my sins and carry my sorrows—was numbered with transgressors, that I might have a cup of salvation, joy, and praise—and finished transgression and suffering, that I might be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation!

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 17. Do not stay now to express your affection to me in this manner, as you will have repeated opportunities of seeing me before I ascend to my heavenly Father; but run quickly to my poor disconsolate disciples, whom, notwithstanding their late defection, I still love as much as ever, and esteem as my brethren, and heirs of the same glory with myself, and tell them that I am risen to an immortal life, and not to set up a temporal kingdom among them on earth; and am, after some time, to power at all against me, except it were given thee from above: therefore [f]he that delivered me unto thee hath the [g]greater sin.

THE ARCH OF ECCE HOMO, JERUSALEM—WHERE THE CROSS WAS LAID UPON CHRIST. [John, xix:16.]—The way along which our Savior was led from the Judgment Hall to the place of crucifixion is called the Via Dolorosa, or the Way of Sorrow. The Arch of Ecce Homo is the second station in the Way of Sorrow, for it is said that here the cross was laid upon Christ. There is something very pathetic about this gloomy street. As one walks along and sees the people kiss the various stations, thereby evidencing their deep love for the Man of Sorrows, it is sufficient to call forth tears from the hardest heart. Beginning with the palace of Pilate and ending with Calvary, the Via Dolorosa is the most loved street in the world, and it is the only street in history made famous by one single person walking over it one time.

12 And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him: but the Jews cried out, saying, [h]If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar.

13 When[i] Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth, and sat down in the judgment-seat, in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.[7]

14 And it was [k]the preparation of the passover,[8] and about the [l]sixth hour:[1] and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King!

15 But[m] they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him! Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, [n]We have no king but Cæsar.

16 Then[o] delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus, and led him away.

17 ¶ And he bearing his cross went [p]forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha:

18 Where[q] they crucified him, and two other with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst.

19 ¶ And[s] Pilate wrote a title,[2] and put it on the cross. And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.[3]

20 This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin.[4]

21 Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am King of the Jews.

22 Pilate answered, What I have written I have written.

23 ¶ Then[v] the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took his garments, and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also his coat: now the coat was without seam,[5] woven[6] from the top throughout.

24 They said therefore among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: that the scripture might be fulfilled, which saith, [x]They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did.

25 ¶ Now[y] there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of Cleophas,[7] and Mary Magdalene.

26 When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple[8] standing by whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son!

27 Then saith he to the disciple, [a]Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his [b]own home.

28 ¶ After this, Jesus, knowing [c]that all things were now accomplished,[9] that[c] the scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst.

29 Now[d] there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop,[1] and put it to his mouth.

30 When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, [e]It is finished:[2] and [g]he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost.

31 ¶ The Jews therefore, because it was the [k]preparation,[3] that[i] the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath-day, (for that sabbath-day was an [l]high day,[4]) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

32 Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with him.

33 But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs:

34 But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came there out [m]blood and water.[5]

35 And[l] he that saw it bare record, and his record is true; and he knoweth that he saith true, [n]that ye might believe.

36 For these things were done, [o]that the scripture should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken.

37 And again another scripture saith, [p]They shall look on him whom they pierced.

38 ¶ And[q] after this, Joseph of Arimathea, being a disciple of Jesus, but [r]secretly for fear of the Jews, besought Pilate that he might take away the body of Jesus: and Pilate gave him leave. He came therefore, and took the body of Jesus.

39 And there came also Nicodemus, (which at the first came to Jesus [s]by night,) and brought [t]a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred pound weight.

40 Then took they the body of Jesus, and wound it in [u]linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

41 Now in the place where he was crucified there was a [x]garden; and in the garden [z]a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

ascend to the right hand of God, who is my Father by nature, and theirs by repentance and faith, and who is my God as their Mediator, and their God as they are my members. 21–23. I now effectually confer my promised peace upon you; and as my Father hath sent me into the world to discharge the office of Mediator, so I, as the Head of the New Testament church, appoint you, as my apostles, to preach the gospel to both Jews and Gentiles, and to confirm it with miraculous signs wherever you go. And receive ye now the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, which I can as easily convey as I thus breathe upon you, to enlighten your minds, and strengthen your faith in me as a risen Saviour, and as an earnest of that plentiful effusion which ye shall in a short time receive for your spiritual illumination, sanctification, and consolation, and for your assistance and success in the ministerial work which I commit to you. MODERN MOUNT CALVARY—ONE OF THE TWO PLACES AGREED UPON AS THE PLACE OF CRUCIFIXION. [John, xix:17.]—This is here called modern Mount Calvary, because another place contends for the honor of being the spot where our Lord was crucified. The other place is inside the walls of Jerusalem and covered by the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. This is outside of the walls, and many of the best authorities claim that the evidences are in favor of its being the real place where Christ was crucified. It is to the north of the city, just across the Damascus road from the wall. To the right of the picture, near the margin, we see the dome of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. So from this place we really have a view of both of the places where different authorities represent Christ as being crucified.

42 There[y] laid they Jesus therefore, because of the Jews' preparation day; for the sepulchre was nigh at hand.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Mary cometh to the sepulchre: 3 so do Peter and John, ignorant of the resurrection. 11 Jesus appeareth to Mary Magdalene, 19 and to his disciples. 24 The incredulity and confession of Thomas. 30 The scripture is sufficient to salvation.

THE first[a] day of the week cometh Mary[1] Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre.

2 Then she runneth, and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the [b]other disciple whom Jesus loved, and saith unto them, [c]They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him.

3 Peter[d] therefore went forth, and that other disciple, and came to the sepulchre.

4 So they ran both together: and the other disciple did [e]outrun Peter, and came first to the sepulchre.

5 And he, stooping down, and looking in, saw[g] the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in.

6 Then[h] cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the sepulchre, and seeth the linen clothes lie,[2]

7 And the napkin, that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself.

8 Then went in also that other disciple which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw, and believed.

9 For[i] as yet they knew not the scripture, that he must rise again from the dead.

10 Then[j] the disciples went away again unto their own home.

11 ¶ But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping: and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulchre,

12 And seeth two angels in white sitting,[3] the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain.

13 And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

14 And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw [k]Jesus standing, and knew not that it was Jesus.

15 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? She, supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, [l]and I will take him away.

16 Jesus saith unto her, [n]Mary. [o]She turned herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni; which is to say, [p]Master.

17 Jesus saith unto her, [q]Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to [r]my brethren, and say unto them, [s]I ascend unto my Father, [t]and your Father; and to my God, and [u]your God.

18 Mary[v] Magdalene came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, and that he had spoken these things unto her.

19 ¶ Then[x] the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus, and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, [y]Peace be unto you.

20 And when he had so said, [z]he showed unto them his hands and his side. [a]Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord.

21 Then said Jesus to them again, [b]Peace be unto you: [c]as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you.

22 And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, [d]Receive ye the Holy Ghost:

23 Whose[e] soever sins ye remit,[4] they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain,[5] they are retained.

24 ¶ But[g] Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

25 The other disciples therefore said unto him, [h]We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, [i]Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand[6] into his side, I will not believe.

26 ¶ And after eight days, again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, [j]Peace be unto you.

27 Then saith he to Thomas, [k]Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side: [l]and be not faithless, but believing.

28 And Thomas answered and said unto him, [m]My Lord and my God.[7]

29 Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: [o]blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

30 ¶ And[p] many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book:

3 The diversities in the four narratives of our Lord's resurrection present no contradictions; and while they testify that there was no private conference between the evangelists to produce a cunningly devised fabric, their textual differences may all be removed by the following principle, legitimately deducible from a combined view of the whole:—1. There were two companies of women, one of which immediately after the interment, on Friday, returned to the city to prepare (purchase) spices (Lu. 23. 56; 24. 1. A second, consisting of the two Marys and Salome, who still lingered in deep sorrow near the sepulchre (Mat. 27. 59-61), and did not buy their share of the spices till the Sabbath (Saturday) was past, Mar. 16. 1. Though Mary Magdalene is mentioned here alone, because she alone can to tell Peter and John, yet it is evident from Mar. 16. 2 that she had come in as one of a company. 2. That there were two visions of angels, and two separate addresses to two separate parties. 3. That Simon went at first time to the tomb, and returned unbelieving (Lu. 24. 12); and a second time, and returned worshipping himself, yet unbelieving (Lu. 24. 12). Jesus appeared to him (Mar. 16. 14; 1 Co. 15. 5), yet left him still in unbelief (Mar. 16. 14), and finally yielded even the reality of the resurrection when sense and prophecy and the Spirit of God rendered further resistance impossible. See for a more detailed solution of the difficulties in the narrative of the resurrection, either Scottish, West, Doddridge, Pilkington, Tawlson, Crambell, or Townsend, &c. West is said to have been an infidel, and being determined to write against Christ's resurrection, sat down to study the Gospel narratives. He soon had read the Spirit of God enlightened his eyes; and, like Paul, who preached him whom once he persecuted, so he produced an unanswerable defence of that resurrection which, in his blindness, he had purposed to overturn.—Note, The apparent contradictions between Mar. 16. 2, 3, 4 and Lu. 24. 34 may easily be reconciled, by rendering the passage as I take this: "Is then the Lord risen indeed, and hath he not appeared unto Simon?" An exclamation of wonder, or question of doubt, not an assertion of belief.—C.

with such divine authority, that whomsoever ye, according to the gospel, declare pardoned as a believer, or absolved from church censure as a penitent, he may take the comfort of forgiveness and absolution, as ratified by my authority; and whomsoever ye declare unpardoned on account of his unbelief, or keep under church censure as impenitent, his condemnation and continued censure shall stand ratified by my authority, and even the last judgment shall be passed in agreement thereto.

REFLECTIONS.—Strong and many are the evidences of our Saviour's resurrection, that fundamental article of our Christian faith. An open grave, his grave-clothes orderly placed, the testimony of angels, and GROTTO OF JEREMIAH—THE PLACE WHERE CHRIST WAS BURIED. [John, xx:1.]—The Grotto of Jeremiah is under the height we have already given under the name of modern Mount Calvary. Those who look upon what we call modern Mount Calvary as the place where Christ was crucified take the position that the tomb of Joseph, in which Christ was buried, is what is now known as the Grotto of Jeremiah. This Joseph of Arimathea, a city of the Jews, asked Pilate for the body of Jesus, and then took it down from the cross, wrapped it in new linen and laid it in a sepulcher that was hewn in stone wherein man never before was laid. Joseph of Arimathea was said to be a native of Ramleh, on the road from Jerusalem to Joppa. His connection with the burial of Christ brings his name to our day.

31 But[q] these are written, that ye might believe[r] that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that, [s]believing, ye might have life through his name.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Christ appearing again to his disciples was known of them by the great draught of fishes. 12 He dineth with them: 15 earnestly commandeth Peter to feed his lambs and sheep: 18 foretelleth him of his death: 22 rebuketh his curiosity touching John. 25 The conclusion.

AFTER these[a] things[1] Jesus showed himself again to the disciples at the sea of Tiberias; and on this wise showed he himself.

2 There[b] were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, and the sons of Zebedee, and two other of his disciples.

3 Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing. They say unto him, We also go with thee. They went forth, and entered into a ship immediately; and that night [t]they caught nothing.

4 But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore: [d]but the disciples knew not that it was Jesus.

5 Then Jesus saith unto them, Children,[2] have[e] ye any meat? They answered him, No.

6 And he said unto them, [g]Cast the net on the right side[3] of the ship, and ye shall find. They cast therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes.

7 Therefore [h]that disciple whom Jesus loved saith unto Peter, It is [i]the Lord. Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fisher's coat unto him, (for he was naked,[4]) and [j]did cast himself into the sea.

8 And the other disciples came in a little ship; (for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits,[5]) dragging the net with fishes.

9 As soon then as they were come to land, they saw [k]a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread.[6]

10 Jesus saith unto them, Bring of the fish which ye have now caught.

11 Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fishes, an hundred and fifty and three:[7] and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken.

12 ¶ Jesus saith unto them, Come and [8]dine. And none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord.

13 Jesus[l] then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fish likewise.

14 This is now the [m]third time that Jesus showed himself to his disciples after that he was risen from the dead.

15 ¶ So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, [n]Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me [o]more than these?[9] He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; [q]thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, [r]Feed my lambs.[1]

16 He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed[2] my sheep.

17 He saith unto him the third time,[3] Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was [s]grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, [t]thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, [u]Feed[4] my sheep.

18 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt [v]stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not.[5]

19 This spake he, signifying [x]by what death he should glorify God. And when he had spoken this, he saith unto him, [y]Follow me.

20 Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple [z]whom Jesus loved following; which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?

21 Peter, seeing him, saith to Jesus, Lord, and [a]what shall this man do?

22 Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry [b]till I come,[6] what[c] is that to thee? Follow thou me.

23 Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die: yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?[7] his own repeated appearances, and even the jealousies of disciples, concur to render it unquestionable. But marvellous was his condescension and kindness to such as had forsaken him in his extremity—to Peter, who had denied him, and to Thomas, who had so perversely indulged the most obstinate unbelief. He gives them his peace, owns them for brethren, and qualifies and appoints them to preach his gospel. Great is the mercy that we have all this recorded by eye-witnesses directed by the Holy Spirit, that we may believe it, to the eternal salvation of our soul; and that we have the weekly Sabbath as a stated season of intercourse with our Saviour. If we love him much, eagerly and early, through darkness and danger, we shall push our way into his presence. For to a tender-hearted Christian the felt absence of his Lord is the most distressing and insupportable. But often that is mourned over which is a great ground of rejoicing. And Jesus and his consolations are frequently at hand when we know not where to find him. He takes delight to recognize his relation and hasten to our help. And neither shut doors, slavish fears, nor unbelieving hearts, can hinder his gracious visits. Yea, the stoutest hearts ought to melt in confident believing under the transcendent intimations of his love.

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 25. Contain. This is no hyperbole, a figure totally incompatible with the derivation of the Scriptures from 'the Spirit of truth.' To 'contain' a book is not to afford it room as an article of furniture, but to retain it in the memory and digest it in the judgment. In this sense, a minute and complete narrative of 'all that Jesus began to do and to teach,' Ac. 1.1, with all the immediate bearings and effects of every word and action, would, instead of a portable volume suited to every man's time and capacity, have formed a library too voluminous for the leisure and study even of the most learned.—Written. These words form an incontrovertible evidence that the Scriptures, and not unwritten tradition or the church, are the true and infallible rule of faith. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Often repeated, miraculous, and manifest are the proofs of Christ's resurrection. And it is highly criminal to doubt of it after so many satisfactory documents. With what wonders of divine power, condescension, and kindness he shows himself to his people! He is often near them while they know it not, and is better to them than they expect; or even visits them before they look for him. The sight of him powerfully draws out the heart of penitent beholders. And neither danger nor death can restrain their running to him. He delightfully prospers the labours, notices the circumstances, and supplies the wants of all people. But if they have been ashamed of or in any way departed from him, their love to him must be thoroughly tried. Happy are they who can prove it by their superlative esteem of and faithful appeals to himself. And if we know that he first loved us, let our former falls lie heavy on our heart; and let SEA OF GALILEE—SHOWING VIEWS OF CAPERNAUM. [John, xxi:11.]—"Simon Peter went up and drew the net to land full of great fishes, an hundred and fifty and three, and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken." This incident took place on the Sea of Galilee after the resurrection. It is probable that it also occurred at Capernaum, where our Savior made his home after being rejected by His own people at Nazareth. The picture above is a representation of Capernaum as it appears to-day. Broken marble, Corinthian and Doric capitals, weeds, desolation, and the ever moving and ever-changing Galilean Sea, is all that we see now. The proud Capernaum, that was exalted to heaven, is now left utterly in ruins. Here, in the midst of His old home, the Lord appeared to the disciples after the resurrection.

24 ¶ This is the disciple which testifieth of these things, and wrote these things: and [d]we know that his testimony is true.

25 And[e] there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, [g]I suppose that even the world itself could not contain[8] the books that should be written. Amen.

us, without indulging vain curiosity, follow him through sufferings and death.—Without his direction ministers spend themselves in vain in fishing for souls; but under his guidance and influence multitudes are brought to him; nor can their gospel altogether fail. The weakest souls must be equally taken care of as the strongest. Nor can ministers ever truly manifest their love to Jesus without earnest care and labour to feed his lambs and sheep with his gospel provision. And blessed be the Lord that his own oracles have no uncertainties and need no human supplements. On their contents we may safely rest the eternal salvation of our souls.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF JOHN.

The young student of the Greek language who attempts, in any degree, to become his own teacher, soon discovers some surprising difference between the style of John and that of the preceding evangelists. He can read his Gospel with comparative ease, while he finds the difficulties of the others nearly insuperable. This simplicity of construction forms a beautiful example of the teaching Spirit 'becoming all things to all men, that he might (instruct) some;' furnishing 'milk to babes,' while abounding in 'strong meat' for them who 'are able to bear it.' C.

The training of St. John under our Lord, his mental characteristics, and the circumstances under which he wrote this Gospel, have been sketched in the introduction. From the moment when, turning from the Baptist, he joined Jesus, he seems never to have left his side. He delighted in the contemplation of that nature which was all love and mercy. He hung with devoted attention on every word which fell from his lips. He endeavoured to fathom every truth set forth in those matchless discourses. In the intimacy of companionship he doubtless asked and prayed until the full light of divine truth flashed upon his mind. From Mary, too, after our Lord on the cross had committed her to his care, John doubtless derived much information. She who had watched her son with mingled affection and wonder from infancy could no doubt communicate to the beloved disciple many of those displays of wisdom, love, and power which she alone had witnessed. John was also impressed more deeply than any of his brethren with the promise of the Holy Spirit given during one of our Lord's last interviews with his disciples:—'But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have done unto you. . . . When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear that shall he speak, and he will show you things to come.' And John appears to have realized, in some respects at least, more remarkably than any of his brethren, the fulfilment of this promise, in the way in which he was able to record Christ's long discourses.

John's subsequent career is prophetically sketched in the close of the Gospel, ch. 21. 20–24. After the ascension John seldom appears in the great events of the church's history until near the close of his life. He was a man of contemplation rather than of action. His mind was in all probability absorbed in the study of the deep mysteries of gospel doctrine. He saw others better adapted for the external work of the church, and he was content, while aiding occasionally by his counsel, Acts 3. 1, 11; 4. 19–23; 8. 14–17. Paul speaks of him as one of the pillars of the church at Jerusalem, Ga. 2. 9. His subsequent career is only dimly shadowed in early church history. He is said to have remained in Judaea till the death of Mary relieved him from his sacred trust. Afterwards he seems to have gone to Ephesus, and to have settled there after the close of Paul's work. When he alone was left of all Christ's disciples, and when the trials of the infant church needed his aid, he came boldly forward as a champion of the truth. False doctrines began to spring up. The humanity of Christ was denied by some; the reality of his divine mission by others. A partial conformity to Judaism was advocated on the one hand; and an unholy alliance with idolatrous worship was tolerated on the other. With all these, and probably other forms of error, the aged apostle had now to battle. His profound knowledge of divine truth was now of advantage, and was set forth with equal clearness and simplicity in his Gospel. An age of controversy is apt to be an age of angry feeling. Theological disputes are generally productive of more bitterness than other disputes. But while John met error boldly, and refuted it fearlessly and effectively, he displayed and inculcated a love and gentleness such as could only be drawn from the heart of Jesus himself. He gave to the church and the world in his writings a divine exemplar of Christian controversy.

While John breathed the very spirit of love—while he affirmed that 'God is love'—that the substance of both Law and Gospel is love, the religion which he defended and developed was yet no mere sentiment. The love which John inculcated and exemplified was a love displayed in obedience to divine law, and in the full reception of divine truth. The character of John has been often greatly misrepresented. Christian art has in some degree contributed to this. 'The youthful feminine form which art has assigned to St. John, has served to remove from our minds the stronger features of his nature. Yet these may not be forgotten, for even in this aspect the eagle is his true symbol. His love was no soft feeling, but a living principle, an absolute devotion to truth, as he had seen and known it in the person of his Lord. He stands forth as the ideal of a thoughtful Christian, relentless against evil, and yet patient with the doubting. He tarried till the Lord came, and left his Gospel as the witness and seal of the accomplishment of the apostolic work.'

John was a close follower, and an ardent and enthusiastic imitator of Jesus. Christ's life, Christ's character, Christ's words, formed the constant subjects of contemplation and study. To him Christ was all in all. He sought wisdom from its highest source; he drew his love from the heart of his loving Master. In John we see the noblest powers employed in the noblest work; we see the highest genius consecrated to God; we see, too, his life-work crowned with the noblest reward. P.

THE # ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

The Gospel by Luke and the Acts of the Apostles are both dedicated to Theophilus; and as the author of 'The Acts' calls the Gospel his 'former treatise,' there is, therefore, internal evidence, with which all antiquity agrees, that the book of 'Acts' was written by Luke. As it continues to the second year of Paul's imprisonment, it could not have been finished earlier than A.D. 64 or 65. The object of the writer was, evidently, not a complete history of the Christian church during the period which his narrative embraces; for he passes over all the affairs of the church at Jerusalem subsequent to the conversion of Paul; furnishes few records of the labours of any other apostle; while some he never mentions at all. Nor was it his object to write a complete history even of Paul, his companion; for he passes over in silence some of the most remarkable events of his life, such as his journey into Arabia, three of his shipwrecks, and his exposure and perils among the robber hordes of the deserts. His objects were higher than these, however gratifying they might appear to a pious curiosity, and however instructive as examples of devotedness and zeal. The object of Luke was mainly to record the wonderful effusion of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, thus teaching the church that, without the Spirit of God, all other qualifications are impotent; to furnish a few specimens of apostolic preaching; to record some of the principal miracles by which the gospel testimony was confirmed; and to bear witness to the admission of the Gentiles into the Christian community.

This being the last historical book of the Scriptures, it is worthy of remark, that not one of the sacred biographers, from Moses to Luke, ever attempts to produce 'a hero'—a man superior to all his contemporaries—the idol of historic worship! The Bible alone tells truth! Paul is introduced as a guilty murderer! and subsequently to his conversion—though the writer passes no opinion—he faithfully records the fact, and leaves us to judge for ourselves, whether Paul or Barnabas was in error in that 'sharp contention' that separated them in the work of the mission, ch. 15. 39. Yet the Bible produces really great characters! Men devoid of every ambition but to do good! Men capable of sacrificing every hour of ease, every prospect of emolument, and hope of honour; of undergoing every toil, of enduring every persecution, of repaying kindness for every injury, of rejoicing in tribulation, of hoping against hope, of enduring to the end; neither depressed by failure, nor rendered vain by success.—Self nothing—Jesus all! Such was Moses—such the prophets—such the apostles; and such, in some measure, must be every one who, 'through faith and patience, would inherit the promises.' C.

CHAPTER I.

1 Christ, preparing his apostles to the beholding of his ascension, gathereth them together into the mount Olivet, commandeth them to expect in Jerusalem the sending down of the Holy Ghost, promiseth after few days to send it: by virtue whereof they should be witnesses unto him, even to the utmost parts of the earth. 10 After his ascension they are warned by two angels to depart, and to set their minds upon his second coming. 12 They accordingly return, and, giving themselves to prayer, choose Matthias apostle in the place of Judas.

5 For[k] John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence.

6 When they therefore were come together[3] they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time [l]restore again the kingdom to Israel?

CHAPTER I. Ver. 6. Restore the kingdom. Not merely by breaking the Roman yoke, but by overturning the Pharisaic or Sadducean oligarchy, and re-establishing the constitutional monarchy of David. This idea of an immediate temporal kingdom still haunted the disciples; and, in prospect, is still the hope of the Jewish nation, unless where, alas! they have become totally infidel. The answer of our Lord (ver. 7) seems clearly to intimate that a national restoration is one of the purposes of Providence, though the date of its accomplishment has not been revealed. C.

Ver. 7, 8. Power. The word translated power in ver. 7 is ἐξουσία. The passage there may be rendered thus: 'which the Father hath reserved in his own disposal,' as things unrevealed.—The word here translated power is δύναμις, signifying miraculous power communicated from God. C.

Ver. 13. Upper room. Some have supposed this 'room' to have been in the temple; no opinion can seem more unnatural. If, in the absence of certainty, conjecture may be indulged, might not our thoughts turn to 'the large upper room furnished' in which our Lord and his disciples partook of the last supper? Lu. 22. 12. C.

Ver. 25. His own place. The place suited to him, 'prepared' for him, Mat. 25. 41; the place that, in the face of all warning, he had literally chosen, by choosing covetousness and lies, Col. 3. 5; 1 Co. 6. 9, 10; Mat. 26. 48; Re. 21. 8. C.

14 These[e] all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren.

15 ¶ And in those days [a]Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number of the names[g] together were about an hundred and twenty,)[1]

16 Men and brethren, [b]this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus.

17 For he was [c]numbered with us, and had obtained part of this [d]ministry.

18 Now[e] this man purchased[2] a field with the reward of iniquity; and [f]falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out.[3]

19 And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood.

20 For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let[h] his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and, His bishopric[4] let another take.

21 Wherefore of these men which have companied with us [i]all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us,

22 Beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained[5] to be a [j]witness with us of his resurrection.

23 And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas,[k] who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias.

24 And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which[l] knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen,[6]

25 That he may take part of [m]this ministry and apostleship, from which [n]Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place.

Matthew shows that he attempted suicide; Luke is more particular, and shows what during the suicidal attempt a catastrophe of some kind occurred; he fell, and in the fall was fearfully mutilated. He was thus in reality guilty of the crime of self-murder: while at the same time the vengeance of Heaven reached him in a direct and terrible form. The diversity of narrative indicates very clearly the entire independence of the historians.—P.

[1] The Greek and Hebrew words for spirit are universally rendered by words which properly signify breathe. When Christ ordained the Spirit, upon the apostles as brethren upon them. So here the chosen vehicle by which the divine Spirit, when descending on the disciples, was manifested to their sense of hearing, was "a sound as of a rushing mighty wind." But as if to afford additional testimony of the reality of the spirit's advent, there was a visible manifestation given in the "cloven tongues, like as of fire."—P.

It was a miraculous power, temporary in its duration, intended to serve as a convincing proof to all who were then assembled at Jerusalem, of the divine commission of the apostles.—P.

CHAPTER II.

1 The apostles, filled with the Holy Ghost, and speaking divers languages, are admired by some, and derided by others. 14 Whom Peter disproving, and showing that the apostles spake by the power of the Holy Ghost, that Jesus was risen from the dead, ascended into heaven, had poured down the same Holy Ghost, and was the Messias, a man known to them to be approved of God by his miracles, wonders, and signs, and not crucified without his determinate counsel and foreknowledge: 37 he baptizeth a great number that were converted. 41 Who afterwards devoutly and charitably converse together: the apostles working many miracles, and God daily increasing his church.

AND when[a] the day of Pentecost was fully come, [b]they were all with one accord in one place.

2 And[c] suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting.

3 And there appeared unto them [d]cloven tongues, like as of [e]fire, and it sat upon each of them:[1]

4 And[g] they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.[2]

5 And[h] there were dwelling[3] at Jerusalem, Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven.

6 Now when this was noised abroad,[4] the multitude came together, and were [5]confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language.

7 And they were all [i]amazed, and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak [j]Galileans?

8 And [k]how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?

9 Parthians, and [l]Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in [m]Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and [o]Cappadocia, in Pontus, and [p]Asia,[6]

10 Phrygia,[q] and Pamphylia, in [r]Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of [s]Rome, [t]Jews and proselytes, 11 Cretes[u] and [v]Arabians, we do hear them speak in our [x]tongues the [y]wonderful works of God.

12 And[z] they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, [a]What meaneth this?

13 Others[b] mocking said, These men are full of new wine.

REFLECTIONS.—The most glorious and uncontrollable evidence is given us of the resurrection and exaltation of our once crucified Redeemer, that through him our faith and hope might be in God. Great numbers of disciples had frequent opportunities of seeing and conversing with him after his death, and could not possibly mistake him for any other; yea, saw him ascend, in our nature, to heaven, and heard the angel's attestation concerning him. Most gladdening truth! He has carried our nature to the right hand of God, and will in due time return, for our salvation, to judge the quick and the dead. And infinite the mercy that in his absence he has, by promise and settlement, secured for us the presence and influence of the Holy Ghost to supply his room, and to own, assist, and comfort us in his work. Let us then, in a humble dependence on and patient waiting for him, avoid all carnal views of his kingdom, or curious prying into God's secrets. For there is need of great activity in the honourable work, and of preparation for his second coming, at which we must give our account. While the world rages in wickedness, let united devotions be the delight of our souls! The joint effectual fervent prayers of righteous men avail much. But O the inexpressibly terrible end of treacherous ministers! Their honour or wealth avail them but little in the day of God's wrath. Happy is it when God, even by terrible things in righteousness, degrades and punishes them for the confirmation of his truths, and supplies their room with such as are qualified and faithful. And great care ought to be taken that none but such be admitted. But if God testify his call and approbation, all ought to receive and regard them as his ambassadors. Ever solicitous for the welfare of the church, we ought to commit all her matters to Jesus, as her kind head and gracious Lord of all things. And never let us, by lot, appeal to God in matters ludicrous or trifling, but only in cases of great importance which cannot be otherwise decided, and that with solemn prayer for his direction and a ready submission to his decision.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. Pentecost. One of the three great festivals in which all the males were required to appear at Jerusalem. It was called Pentecost 'the fiftieth' because celebrated on the fiftieth, counting from the second day of the passover; that is, seven weeks after the 16th Nisan. Comp. Le. 23. 15, &c.; De. 16. 9, &c.: and see Josephus' Antiq. iii. x. 6. It was also called the feast of weeks, De. 16. 10, and was considered a thanksgiving for the harvest, De. 16. 9, &c. C.

Ver. 5. Can this assertion be true, seeing the continent of America and Pacific Islands had not been discovered? Observe, the narrative does not say 'out of every country,' but 'out of every nation under heaven;' that is, men who were acquainted with every generic language—a statement which requires no figure for its defence, but which was simply and literally true. C.

Ver. 13. Others. Not other foreign Jews, for they would have recognized the speech of their several countries, but Jews of Jerusalem, to whom the foreign tongues would appear as the ravings of drunken men; or who, out of malice against the followers of Jesus, would willingly invent and propagate any plausible accusation that might discredit them with the people. C.

Ver. 23. By wicked hands. If Jesus was delivered by 'the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God,' 'why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will?' God hath said it, and 'who art thou, O man, that repliest against God,' Ro. 9. 19. But, still it is questioned, if God 'determined' that the event should come to pass, how could those who fulfilled his will be 'wicked?' or, if God 'determined' the act, is he not thereby represented as the author of sin? This, if really a question, is fair and reasonable; but if a cavil, most worthless and foolish. God cannot be the author of sin; for God is love, Ja. 1. 13; 1 Jn.

14 ¶ But [c]Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted[d] up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words:

15 For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing[e] it is but the third hour of the day.[7]

16 But this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel:

17 And[g] it shall come to pass in the last days,[8] saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams:

18 And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out, in those days, of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy:

19 And[h] I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke:

20 The[i] sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come:[9]

21 And[j] it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord, shall be saved.[1]

22 Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus[k] of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know:

23 Him,[l] being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain:

24 Whom[m] God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not [o]possible[2] that he should be holden of it.

25 For David speaketh concerning him, [p]I foresaw the Lord always before my face; for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved:

26 Therefore[q] did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope:

27 Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer [r]thine Holy One to see corruption.

28 Thou[s] hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.

29 Men and brethren, let me[3] freely speak unto you [t]of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day.

30 Therefore[u] being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne;

31 He,[v] seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption.

32 This[z] Jesus hath God raised up, whereof [y]we all are witnesses.

33 Therefore, [z]being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear.

34 For David is not ascended[a] into the heavens: but he saith himself, [a]The LORD said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, 35 Until I make thy foes thy footstool.

36 Therefore let all the [b]house of Israel [c]know assuredly, that [d]God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ.

37 ¶ Now when they heard this, [e]they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do?[5]

38 Then Peter said unto them, [g]Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission[6] of sins, and [h]ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.[7]

39 For [i]the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off,[8] even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

40 And with many other words did he [j]testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation.

41 ¶ Then[k] they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

42 And[l] they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread,[9] and in prayers.

43 And[n] fear came upon every soul: and [o]many wonders and signs were done by the apostles.

44 And[p] all that believed were together, and had all things common;

45 And[q] sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need.

46 And[r] they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread[1] from house to house,[2] did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart,

47 Praising[s] God, and having favour with all the people.[3] And[t] the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.[4]

4, 8. God therefore does not, cannot, 'determine' that men should sin: that is, should become 'wicked.' But God 'foreknows' that men, of their own rebellious hearts, will sin, will be 'wicked;' and God, as a judge, can only give them up to their own hearts' lusts, and to walk in their own 'counsels,' Ps. 81.12; Ro. 1.24,28. So that while men act freely, the event is 'determined,' because the judgment 'allowing freedom' is fixed and certain. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It was impossible that Jesus, who by obedience unto death had honored his Father's law and justice, should be held a prisoner in the grave. Yea, astonishing is the effusion of the Holy Ghost thereby to qualify his preachers and to awaken hearers.—Quickly he comes to them who, with united hearts, wait and cry for his

CHAPTER III.

1 Peter preaching to the people that came to see a lame man restored to his feet, 12 protesteth the cure not to have been wrought by his or John's own power, or holiness, but by God, and his Son Jesus, and through faith in his name; 13 withal reprehending them for crucifying Jesus. 17 Which because they did it through ignorance, and that thereby were fulfilled God's determinate counsel, and the scriptures; 19 he exhorteth them by repentance and faith to seek remission of their sins, and salvation in the same Jesus.

NOW Peter[a] and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour.[1]

2 And a certain man, [b]lame from his mother's womb, was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful,[2] to ask[c] alms of them that entered into the temple;

3 Who, seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple, asked an alms.

4 And [d]Peter, fastening his eyes upon him, with John, said, Look on us.

5 And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them.

6 Then Peter said, [e]Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk.[3]

7 And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up: and [g]immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength.

8 And [h]he, leaping up, stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God.

9 And[i] all the people saw him walking and praising God:

10 And they knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and [j]they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

11 And, as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them, in [k]the porch that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering.

12 ¶ And when Peter saw it, he answered unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as[l] though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk?

13 The[m] God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath [o]glorified his Son Jesus; whom [p]ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate,[4] when he was determined to let him go.

14 But[q] ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you;

15 And killed the Prince[5] of life, [r]whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses.

16 And his name,[6] through [s]faith in his name, hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know; yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all.

17 And now, brethren, I wot that [t]through ignorance[7] ye did it, as did also your rulers.

18 But[u] those things, which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets,[8] that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled.

19 Repent[v] ye therefore, and be [x]converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when [y]the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord;

20 And he shall [z]send Jesus Christ, which [a]before was preached unto you:

21 Whom[b] the heaven must receive until the times of [c]restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

22 For Moses truly said unto the fathers, [d]A Prophet shall the Lord your God [e]raise up unto you of your brethren, [f]like unto me; him shall ye [h]hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you.

23 And it shall come to pass, [i]that every soul, which will not hear that Prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.

24 Yea,[j] and all the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days.[9]

25 Ye[k] are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, [l]And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.

26 Unto[n] you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to [o]bless you, in [p]turning away every one of you from his iniquities.[1] presence. And he can suddenly effect a great spreading and understanding of the gospel, and fulfilment of ancient predictions. What bold resolution he gives his lately so timorous disciples! How open their avowal of Jesus' messiahship, divinity, and resurrection from the dead, where he had been lately crucified as a notorious malefactor! Great is the wisdom and power of God in thus overruling the wickedness of men for his own glory, for the honour of Christ, and the salvation of men. But his purpose, or overruling providence, in no respect excuses or extenuates our guilt. Alas! how perversely men will continue opposing and reviling the most evident manifestations of God's power and goodness till the Holy Ghost begins to work in their heart! But then the most wonderful effects will follow—the deepest impressions of divine truths; a thorough conviction and self-debasement; earnest inquiries after salvation: the most unfeigned faith and sincere repentance; dedication of men's riches and their children to the Lord; faithful subjection to Christ and to his gospel; joining in religious fellowship with his people; an observation of his commandments; delightful and reverential regard to his ordinances; grateful praise for his kindness, and zeal for his glory; heavenly-mindedness, contempt of this world, and compassionate love to poor fellow-saints; and a daily addition of members to the church.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 19. Repent. Change your minds.—Be converted. Change your conduct—doing both, not in order to believing, but as the necessary consequences of believing the evidence now furnished to your eyes and your understandings. C.

Ver. 21. The times of restitution. The times when all prophecy shall have been accomplished in the restoration of the Jews and the conversion of the Gentiles;—when Christ shall be truly acknowledged as King in Zion, and head over all things to the church.—Even so, come, Lord Jesus—come quickly! C.

REFLECTIONS.—Thrice happy are they, whose hearts are so fitted for devotion, that the returning seasons of it, in public or private, are always welcome! And if men heartily love prayer, they will never think morning and evening too frequent for it. Many, rich in faith, are poor and destitute in this world: but the blessings of grace do more than balance their wants. It is good to attend God's ordinances in expectation of his favours. If he apprehend us by his Spirit, we shall lay hold on him by faith. And if we obtain his deliverances, we ought to triumph in his praise, and even dearly to regard the honoured instruments of our deliverance. But the more God honours ministers, the more should they lay out themselves for his honour, and take every opportunity of doing good to souls.—How glorious is our exalted Saviour! And safely may we believe his apostles' testimony concerning him. In him ancient predictions are fulfilled. And through believing dependence on his power and authority the NAZARETH FROM THE EAST. [Acts, iii:22.]—We are permitted here to look upon the beautiful little mountain city where lived the prophet the Lord raised up, like unto Moses, but greater than Moses, for He who was prophet was at the same time priest and king. In the valley are the olive trees, whose very names call up Palestine and the East. Rising gradually up the sides of the hill are the white two-story houses, built of stone, and furnishing all that is necessary to make a striking and attractive picture. No one can ever tire of Nazareth. Valleys, mountains, transparent atmosphere, and deep, overbending skies unite with the beautiful stone houses to make a picture worthy the brush of Raphael. The Savior, who grew up here, and who spent so many of the years of His manhood here, is gone, but His spirit lends enchantment to the place.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The rulers of the Jews offended with Peter's sermon, 4 though thousands of the people were converted that heard the word, imprison him and John. 5 After, upon examination, Peter boldly preaching the lame man to be healed by the name of Jesus, and that by the same Jesus only we must be eternally saved, 13 they command him and John to preach no more in that name, adding also threatening; 23 whereupon the church fleeth to prayer. 31 And God, by moving the place where they were assembled, testified that he heard their prayer: confirming the church with the gift of the Holy Ghost, and with mutual love and charity.

AND as they spake unto the people, [a]the priests, and the [1]captain[2] of the temple, and the Sadducees,[b] came upon them,

2 Being[c] grieved that they taught the people, and preached [d]through Jesus the resurrection from the dead.

3 And they laid hands on them, and [e]put them in hold unto the next day: for it was now eventide.

4 Howbeit [f]many of them which heard the word believed; and the number of the men was about five thousand.[3]

5 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that their[h] rulers, and elders, and scribes,

6 And Annas[4] the high-priest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high-priest, were gathered together at Jerusalem.

7 And when they had [i]set them in the midst, they asked, [j]By what power,[5] or by what name, have ye done this?

8 Then Peter, [k]filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel,

9 If we this day be examined of the [l]good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole;

10 Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name[6] of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, [m]whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole.

11 This[o] is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.

12 Neither[p] is there salvation[7] in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.

13 ¶ Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were [q]unlearned[8] and ignorant men, they marvelled;[9] and[r] they took knowledge[t] of them, that they had been with Jesus.

14 And[s] beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it.

15 But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, [u]they conferred among themselves,

16 Saying, [x]What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it.

17 But that it spread no further among the people, let us [y]straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in this name.

18 And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus.

19 But Peter and John answered and said unto them, [z]Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.

20 For[y] we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.[2]

21 So when they had further [a]threatened them, they [b]let them go, finding nothing how they might punish them, [c]because of the people: for all men glorified God for [d]that which was done.

22 For the man was above [e]forty years old on whom this miracle of healing was showed.

23 ¶ And being let go, they went [f]to their own company, and reported all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them.

24 And when they heard [g]that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, [h]thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is;

25 Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, [i]Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?

26 The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ.

27 For of a truth, against thy [j]holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, [k]both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together,

28 For[l] to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined[3] before to be done.

29 And now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto thy servants, that with [m]all boldness they may speak thy word,

30 By[o] stretching forth thine hand to heal; and that signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus.[4]

31 ¶ And[p] when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together;

most amazing miracles have been wrought. Marvellous is the wisdom and power of God in making even the most daring wickedness of men the great means of bringing about our salvation! And extensive is the instruction, ample the pardons, gracious the reformation, and abundant the blessings which Jesus Christ bestows on the chief of sinners. What delightful encouragement is this to faith and repentance, that, in his seasons of mercy, we may find rest and refreshment to our souls! What excitement to rejoice in his exaltation, and to wait for his return to judgment!

CHAPTER IV. REFLECTIONS.—Men who heartily hate one another, often cordially unite in opposition to Christ, his gospel, and his servants. But it is delightful when fierce persecution animates to a prudent zeal for Christ's honour, and when he balances it by the conversion of multitudes of hardened sinners. For if ministers preach Christ faithfully and successfully, they must expect trouble for it. Rich, full, and free is that salvation for sinful men which is in him alone. It is necessary always to believe and receive it, and in our stations to exhibit and declare it. Excellent is the cause of the gospel; and nothing but absurd rage and overbearing violence can ever oppose it. But in the most violent opposition Jesus can inspire his most cowardly servants with wisdom and courage to make and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and [q]they spake the word of God with boldness.

32 And[r] the multitude of them that believed were of one heart, and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common.[5]

33 And[s] with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and [t]great grace was upon them all.

34 Neither[u] was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold,

35 And laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need.

36 And [v]Joses, who by the apostles was surnamed Barnabas, (which is, being interpreted, The son of consolation,) a Levite,[6] and of the country of Cyprus, 37 Having land, [w]sold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

CHAPTER V.

5 After that Ananias and Sapphira his wife, for their hypocrisy, at Peter's rebuke had fallen down dead, 12 and that the rest of the apostles had wrought many miracles, 14 to the increase of the faith, 17 the apostles are again imprisoned, 19 but delivered by an angel, bidding them to preach openly to all: 21 when, after their teaching accordingly in the temple, 29 and before the council, 33 they are in danger to be killed; through the advice of Gamaliel, a great counsellor among the Jews, they be kept alive, 40 and are but beaten: for which they glorify God, and cease no day from preaching.

BUT [a]a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession,

2 And[b] kept back[1] part of the price, his wife also being privy to it, and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apostles' feet.[2]

3 But Peter said, Ananias, why [c]hath Satan filled thine heart to lie[3] to the Holy Ghost, and to [d]keep back part of the price of the land?

4 Whiles it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? Why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? thou hast not lied unto men, but unto[e] God.[4]

5 And Ananias, hearing these words, [f]fell down, and gave up the ghost: and [h]great fear came on all them that heard these things.

6 And the young men arose, [i]wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him.

7 And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.

8 And Peter answered unto her, Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much? And she said, Yea, for so much.

9 Then Peter said unto her, How is it that ye have [j]agreed together to [k]tempt the Spirit of the Lord? behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out.

10 Then[l] fell she down straightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghost: and the young men came in, and found her dead, and, carrying her forth, buried her by her husband.

11 And [m]great fear[5] came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things.

12 ¶ And[o] by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people; (and [p]they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch.

13 And[q] of the rest durst no man join himself to them: but the people magnified them.

14 And[r] believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women.)

15 Insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets,[6] and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least [s]the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.[7]

16 There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were [t]healed every one.

17 ¶ Then[u] the high-priest rose up, and all they that were with him, (which is the sect of the [x]Sadducees,) and were filled with indignation,[8]

18 And[w] laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common prison.

2 These came upon the rest of the members of the church a great dread of falling into the sin of hypocrisy; and upon others a fear of putting them for the sake of their alms and benefactions, among their lives might be endangered by insincere and secret persecution.—Note. This awful judgment seems to have been intended: 1. As a protection to the church against selfish and false impostors, attracted by their liberality, but neither believers in their doctrine, nor partakers of their spirit. 2. an open and bold confession of himself and his truths; and by them he can confound their most potent and learned opposers, and even convince their consciences of the inconceivable advantage of fellowship with him. Easily he restrains the wrath of men, and makes the remainder of it to praise him. And it is manifest that, however despised by men in authority, he is the head and Lord of his church. In every case it is much better to obey God than men. He is the almighty JEHOVAH, the Maker and Governor of all things. He rules the world in the interests of righteousness. All events are a fulfilment of his inspired oracles, and expression of his laws. In every time of need let us therefore address him by solemn prayer. Often he hears and answers in mercy while his people are yet speaking. And if he be with us, we need neither fear nor anxiously care who is against us. He knows every plot and every threatening of our enemies; and his presence and blessing are sufficient to encourage our perseverance in much tribulation. Heavenly is the delight and comfort that his Spirit can produce in our hearts. Yea, he can even make us rejoice in persecution for his sake. And glorious is the church when ministers are remarkably faithful and useful, and Christians so knit together as to be ready to give all they have for the relief of their indigent brethren.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 31. To give repentance, by giving time for consideration between the warning and the judgment, as God gave to the world between the preaching of Noah and the coming of the flood, and by presenting and applying, through the Spirit, the only sufficient arguments for repentance, the love, mercy, and free grace of God in Christ Jesus. C.

Ver. 36. Josephus places an insurrection under Theudas in the fourth year of the reign of Claudius. But this may be true without any impeachment of the accuracy of Luke, for Theudas was a common name among the Jews; and as there were several insurrections, two may have occurred under a leader of the same name. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is impossible to find a church on earth without tares, or much Christianity without some hypocrisy. Satan's temptations and men's own corruptions, particularly covetousness, easily lead them into lying and falsehood. But most heinous is this in dealing with God, as it is a direct contempt of his all-seeing Spirit. And yet, if Satan fill our heart, he will delude us into it; and even our nearest relations will encourage us in it. Seriously then should we guard against prevarication with that God who can strike liars and dissemblers dead for the honour of his gospel and church. And happy is it when such events deter hypocrites from joining her.—Well would it be if men showed as much care for their souls as most do for the health of their bodies! But, alas! with what blind fury do many, under pretence of religion, set themselves against Christ's eminent ministers, and fight against God; and by endeavouring to render them despicable, study to prejudice hearers against them! Yet his counsel and work shall stand, to the defiance and confusion of every opposer. At his pleasure prisons become paradises, or open their doors; marvellous miracles are wrought for the attestation of truth; the fury of the haughtiest rulers is restrained; the multitude is awed, and the church increased, amidst attempts to destroy her. Yea, learned, potent, and even inveterate enemies are made advocates for his cause. If then we endure terrors and reproaches for his sake, we may despise them, or even glory in them. And let us always publish the praises of our once crucified but now risen Redeemer, who is ex-

19 But[a] the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison-doors, and brought them forth, and said,

20 Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people [y]all the words of this life.[9]

21 And when they heard that, [z]they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. [a]But the high-priest came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought.

22 But when the officers came, and found them not in the prison, they returned and told,

23 Saying, [b]The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors: but when we had opened, we found no man within.

24 Now when the high-priest[1] and [c]the captain of the temple and the chief priests heard these things, they [d]doubted of them whereunto this would grow.

25 Then[e] came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people.

26 Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence:[2] for [g]they feared the people,[3] lest they should have been stoned.

27 And when they had brought them, [h]they set them before the council: and the high-priest asked them,

28 Saying, [i]Did not we straitly command you, that ye should not teach in this name? and, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and [j]intend to bring this man's blood upon us.[4]

29 ¶ Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, [k]We ought to obey God rather than men.

30 The[l] God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged on a tree.

31 Him[m] hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.

32 And [o]we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also [p]the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.[5]

33 ¶ When they heard that, they [q]were cut to the heart, and took counsel to slay them.

34 Then stood there up one in the council, a Pharisee, named [r]Gamaliel,[6] a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people,

[7] False systems of religion have again and again succeeded in the world, and still continue, either where they have superseded Christianity, or where they have corrupted it. Does not this experience, therefore, contradict the doctrine of Calmet? No. Two circumstances, totally wanting in Christianity, have always characterized the false systems that have been successful in the world:—1. Every such system has flattered existing prejudices, adopted existing opinions and practices, or ministered to the lower passions of men. All these Christianity rejected, opposed, or mortified. 2. Every such system has had founders possessing such worldly learning, or employing such worldly means as obtained them influence with worldly men. Christianity had none of these means: its preachers twelve poor unlearned Galilean fishermen; its converts despised; and their only visible means, preaching boldly, bearing patiently, and praying continually. The eventual success of such a system, sustained by such inadequate means, Gamaliel did, therefore, rightly assume as a certain evidence of its divine origin.—C.

alted as a Prince and a Saviour, freely to give repentance and forgiveness of sins to the most heinous transgressors.

CHAPTER VI. REFLECTIONS.—It is hard to manage much business without much inconvenience, and even some reflections. But it is shameful that money matters should occasion discontents among church-members, who are otherwise of one heart and soul.—And to prevent this, it becomes us to use the strictest impartiality in the management of the money, and all other matters of churches or states. It is a great sin and reproach to many Christian congregations that the office of deacon, so clearly appointed in Scripture, should be so much contemned. And it is necessary that every church-officer be intelligent, pious, and prudent; and that church-members be always required to choose their own officers, small or great. No patrons or presbyteries can pretend more fitness to choose for others than the inspired apostles, who refused it. It is dangerous and awful when ministers give themselves to idle chat, unprofitable reading, unnecessary sleep, or civil business, instead of their important ministrations and fervent prayer. But when gospel ministers are faithful and diligent, God often works by them miracles of grace in the conversion of sinners, even of profane clergymen, whose spiritual titude: and they chose [a]Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and [b]Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and [c]Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch:

6 Whom they set before the apostles: and when[d] they had prayed, they laid their hands on them.[4]

7 ¶ And[e] the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient[a] to the faith.

8 ¶ And[f] Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people.

9 Then[g] there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines,[5] and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and of them of Cilicia and of Asia, disputing with Stephen.

10 And[h] they were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake.

11 Then[i] they suborned men, which said, We have heard him speak blasphemous words[6] against Moses, and against God.

12 And[k] they stirred up the people, and the elders, and the scribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council,

13 And[l] set up false witnesses, which said, This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law:

14 For[m] we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth shall destroy this place, and shall change the customs[7] which Moses delivered us.

15 And all that sat in the council, looking steadfastly on him, [n]saw his face as it had been the face of an angel.[8]

CHAPTER VII.

1 Stephen, permitted to answer to the accusation of blasphemy, 2 showeth that Abraham worshipped God rightly, and how God did choose the fathers, 20 before Moses was born, and before the tabernacle and temple were built: 37 that Moses himself witnessed of Christ: 44 and that all outward ceremonies were ordained according to the heavenly pattern, to last but for a time: 51 reprehending their rebellion, and murdering of Christ, the Just One, whom the prophets foretold should come into the world. 54 Whereupon they stone him to death, who commendeth his soul to Jesus, and humbly prayeth for them.

THEN said the high-priest, [a]Are these things so?

2 And he said, [b]Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken;[1] The[c] God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, [d]when he was in Mesopotamia,[2] before he dwelt in Charran,

3 And said unto him, [e]Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall show thee.

4 Then[g] came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran: and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land, wherein ye now dwell.

5 And[h] he gave him none inheritance[3] in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on: [i]yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child.

6 And God spake on this wise, [j]That his seed should sojourn in a strange land; and that they should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil four hundred years.[4]

7 And [k]the nation to whom they shall be in bondage will I judge, said God: and after that shall they come forth, and [l]serve me in this place.

8 And[m] he gave him the covenant of circumcision: and so Abraham begat Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day; and Isaac begat Jacob; and Jacob begat the twelve [5]patriarchs:

9 ¶ And[o] the patriarchs, moved with [6]envy, sold Joseph into Egypt: but God was with him,

10 And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt and all his house.

11 Now[p] there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Chanaan, and great affliction: and our fathers found no sustenance.

12 But[q] when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first.

13 And at the second time Joseph was made known to his brethren; and Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh.

14 Then[r] sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, [7]threescore and fifteen souls.[8]

15 So[t] Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers,

16 And were carried over into Sychem,[9] and laid in the sepulchre that Abraham[1] bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

17 ¶ But[t] when the time of the promise drew nigh, which God had sworn to Abraham, the people grew and multiplied in Egypt, end. He was charged with speaking against the temple; he shows the true object of the temple, and the true character of worship. Along with these things he proves that the Old Testament Scriptures point to Christ, and that the gospel is the real spiritual development of the Mosaic ritual. By his skilful reasoning he shows that his accusers themselves were the men who had really opposed the truth of Scripture, and spoken against and rejected God.—F.

case is peculiarly desperate. But, alas! how maliciously carnal men set themselves against Christ and his gospel, and readily charge its peculiar doctrines with blasphemy! And none are apt to be more inveterate enemies of truth than empty professors. No spirit of wisdom, no miracles, can move those who, instead of Scripture and reason, fly to calumny and violence, and who can falsely witness, or suborn others so to do, against those whom God signally owns and honours.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 16. Here are two difficulties:—(1) According to Ge. 33. 19 and Jos. 24. 32, the sepulchre of Sychem was bought by Jacob, and not by Abraham. (2) Jacob was buried, not in Sychem, but in Machpelah, before Mamre, Ge. 49. 30; 50. 13. To reconcile the first, it is generally admitted by expositors, that 'Abraham' has, by the oversight of a transcriber, been substituted for 'Jacob;' but while nearly all MSS. have 'Abraham,' and none 'Jacob,' the substitution of 'Jacob' seems totally unauthorized. May not both difficulties be solved by filling up the ellipses thus: - 'But Jacob went down into Egypt, and died there, he and our fathers; and they were all carried over (our fathers to Sychem, and buried (he, Jacob) in the tomb which Abraham had purchased, for a sum of money, and (they the fathers) in the tomb that Jacob had purchased from the sons of Emmor, the father of Sychem.' A similar construction, in which the nouns are all placed in the beginning, and the verbs in the end of the sentences, may still be frequently found in legal documents and in Latin epitaphs. And to the Jews, who were perfectly familiar with the history of their fathers, the statement of Stephen would thus be understood. C.

Ver. 35. The object of this statement is to show, that as the refusal of Moses as a ruler and judge was no evidence against his divine legation, so the refusal of Jesus as a Saviour was no evidence against his personal dignity and authority. C.

Ver. 59. The word 'God' is not in the original, but is erroneously supplied by the translators. From comparing this passage with Re. 22. 20, it will be evident that the dying prayer of the noble proto-martyr was addressed directly to the Lord Jesus. Which prayer, compared with that of our Lord himself, Lu. 23. 34. furnishes an evidence of the Godhead of Christ which nothing but blinded and hardened prejudice can possibly resist. C.

REFLECTIONS.—If we are called to account for our faith and hope in Christ, let the oracles of God be our sole defence: they all relate to him. In them he is represented as the God of glory; as the angel JEHOVAH who appeared to the patriarchs; and as the worker of

THE VALLEY OF SHECHEM. [Acts, vii:16.]—Set in the midst of olive groves, gardens and orchards, and refreshed and made productive by as many as 80 springs, Shechem enjoys advantages of a natural character hardly equaled by any other town in Palestine. It was to this place that Abram came when he first entered Canaan. For we are told in Genesis, xii:6, that he came "unto the place of Sichem." Thus Shechem is the oldest town in Palestine of which we have any authentic history, dating back in the distant past as far as 4,000 years. Here Jacob bought land and took up his abode; here Joseph came in search of his brethren on the occasion when they sold him to the Ishmaelites at Dothan; and here the law was given to Israel. There are about 15,000 inhabitants here today, and it is a prosperous town for the East.

THE ISLAND RHODA (RODA)—WHERE THE CHILD MOSES WAS CONCEALED. [ACTS, vii:21.] "And when he was cast out, Pharoah's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son."—Acts, vii:21. We are told that the mother of Moses took an ark of bulrushes and daubed it with slime and with pitch, and put her child into it, and laid the ark with the child in the flags by the brink of the Nile. It has been supposed that this place on the Nile was on the Island of Rhoda. Every tourist who goes to Cairo will have his attention called to this beautiful island in the Nile as the point in the river where Moses was concealed. The boats we see are wheat boats which have come from far into the interior of Egypt, loaded with wheat to sell in Cairo. The island is in the western suburbs of Cairo.

18 Till[u] another king arose, which knew not Joseph.

19 The same dealt subtilly with our kindred, and evil-entreated our fathers, so that they cast out their young children, to the end they might not live.

20 In[v] which time Moses was born, and was exceeding fair,[2] and nourished up in his father's house three months:

21 And[x] when he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourished him for her own son.

22 And[y] Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds.[3]

23 And [z]when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel.

24 And seeing one of them suffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian:

25 For[4] he supposed his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them: but [a]they understood not.

26 And[b] the next day he showed himself unto them as they strove, and would have set them at one again, saying, Sirs, [c]ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?

27 But he that did his neighbour wrong thrust him away, saying, [d]Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?

28 Wilt thou kill me, as thou didst the Egyptian yesterday?

29 Then[e] fled Moses at this saying; and was a stranger in the land of Madian, where he begat two sons.

30 And[g] when forty years were expired, there appeared to him in the wilderness of mount Sina[5] an [h]angel of the Lord[6] in a flame of fire in a bush.

31 When Moses saw it, [i]he wondered at the sight: and as he drew near to behold it, [j]the voice of the Lord came unto him, 32 Saying, I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. [k]Then Moses trembled, and durst not behold.

33 Then said the Lord to him, [l]Put off thy shoes from thy feet; for the place where thou standest is holy ground.

34 I[m] have seen, I have seen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. [n]And now come, I will send thee into Egypt.

4 Stephen's object here is to show that the great principle which lies at the foundation of the gospel is clearly set forth in the Old Testament. It is not a new or strange dogma, therefore. It was enunciated by the prophets; it was divine in its origin. The unity of revelation in spirit and in fundamental dogma is proved in this speech. In the Old Testament the very same grand truths are developed by symbol, type, and prophecy, which in the New Testament are embodied in historic facts and doctrinal teaching.—P.

41 And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands.

42 Then[x] God turned,[9] and gave them up to worship [y]the host of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets, [z]O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts, and sacrifices, by the space of forty years in the wilderness?

43 Yea, [a]ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made, to worship them: and I [b]will carry you away beyond Babylon.

wonders for, and giver of laws to, his people. He was prefigured by Moses and Joshua, David and Solomon, their distinguished rulers, and by the tabernacle and temple; and is now exalted to the right hand of God as the object of all religious adoration.—Infinitely faithful is God to his gracious promises: all are fulfilled in their season. But very mixed and mysterious is the conduct of his providence. Great perplexity and distress often usher in the most remarkable deliverances. And God's people are in general tried before they are honoured. It is a distinguishing mercy to be, even in our ancestors, early taken into his love, and to be always under his special direction, government, and care. And thrice happy are they who not only have his ordinances established among them, but are themselves made his meet habitation through the Spirit!—But notwithstanding all his awful or delightful providences towards his church, many hypocritical professors

52 Which[t] of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? and they have slain them which showed before of the coming of the [u]Just One; of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers:

53 Who[v] have received the law by the disposition of angels,[6] and [w]have not kept it.

54 ¶ When they heard these things, they were [x]cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth.

55 But he, being [y]full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw [z]the glory of God, and Jesus [a]standing on the right hand of God,

56 And said, Behold, I see [b]the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God.[7]

57 Then[c] they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord,

58 And[d] cast him out of the city, and stoned him: and the witnesses[8] laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul.

59 And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, [e]Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.

60 And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, [h]lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep.[i]

CHAPTER VIII.

1 By occasion of the persecution in Jerusalem, the church being planted in Samaria, by Philip the deacon, who preached, did miracles, and baptized many, among the rest Simon the sorcerer, a great seducer of the people: 14 Peter and John come to confirm and enlarge the church: where, by prayer and imposition of hands giving the Holy Ghost, 18 when Simon would have bought the like power of them, 20 Peter sharply reproving his hypocrisy and covetousness, and exhorting him to repentance, together with John preaching the word of the Lord, return to Jerusalem. 26 But the angel sendeth Philip to teach, and baptize the Ethiopian eunuch.

AND Saul[a] was consenting unto his death. And at that time there was [b]a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they[1] were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles.[2]

2 And [c]devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

3 As[d] for Saul, he made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and, haling men and women, committed them to prison.

4 Therefore they that were scattered abroad [e]went every where preaching the word.[3]

5 Then [g]Philip[4] went down to [h]the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them.

6 And the people with one [i]accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, [j]hearing and seeing the miracles which he did.

7 For[k] unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.

8 And[l] there was great joy[5] in that city.

9 ¶ But [n]there was a certain man, called Simon, which beforetime in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, [o]giving out that himself was some great one:

10 To[p] whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God.

11 And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had [q]bewitched them with sorceries.

12 But[r] when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.

13 Then Simon himself [s]believed[6] also: and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the [t]miracles and signs which were done.

14 ¶ Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they [u]sent unto them Peter[7] and John;

15 Who, when they were come down, [v]prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost:

16 (For[x] as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)

17 Then[y] laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.

18 ¶ And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he [z]offered them money, are more fond of rites and ceremonies, or of their own idolatrous inventions, than of either his law or his gospel. Obstinately they revolt from him, resist his Spirit, persecute his servants, and reject him and his salvation, to their own everlasting perdition.—Kindly and honourably Jesus stands by his faithful confessors; fills them with the Holy Ghost, and grants them clear and seasonable manifestations of his glory. If enemies cast them out and murder them, he stands ready to embrace, support, comfort, and carry them to heaven. With the greatest confidence of faith may they therefore commit their departing souls to him; and imploring forgiveness to their murderers, with glory and triumph fall asleep in his arms.

---

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 20. Thy money perish with thee—seems an awful imprecation, scarcely reconcilable with charity: to avoid which appearance, others have represented it as a prediction. A more literal translation will remove both interpretations, and exhibit the address as neither imprecation nor prediction, but a mere warning of the tendency, and, without repentance, of the result of Simon's trust in deceitful riches:—'Let thy money abide with thyself unto loss.' 'You can gain nothing substantial or permanent by it—above all, it cannot purchase the gift of God. Wherefore, repent, and seek for mercy and pardon.' —'If, perhaps,' &c., does not imply any doubt of the fulness of mercy in God, but a question whether Simon was at all sensible of his sin, or likely to look to Jesus for repentance and forgiveness. C.

Ver. 26. Desert, is not descriptive of the city, whether the old or new, but of the road to it, which, it is probable, the studious Ethiopian had chosen as comparatively unfrequented. C.

Ver. 27. Candace. This had long been the name of the queens of the African Ethiopia, or Abyssinia, as appears from Pliny, Strabo, and Dio. C.

Ver. 35. He preached Jesus, either from this passage alone, by showing how it agreed with no other, but was perfectly fulfilled in Christ; or by collating this with similar passages in the other prophets, and demonstrating how they all united to describe a suffering Messiah, and how the doctrines, miracles, and resurrection of Jesus established his title to that office and dignity. C.

Ver. 38. The universal method of entrance into the Church is by the rite of baptism. When Christ came to John the Baptist at the Jordan seeking baptism the forerunner of the Lord was astonished that the Sinless One, who needed no cleansing, should desire baptism. John had seen merely the idea of external cleansing in the ceremony. But Christ had deeper insight into the meaning of the rite, and said, "Thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." To know the right, to do the right, to love the right—that is the spiritual idea in the outward service. Christ comes to baptism as the leader of the race. He is our representative and as such he asks to be baptized, leaving us his example to follow. L.

REFLECTIONS.—It seems hard and inexplicable that eminent ministers should be murdered when they begin to be remarkably useful. But the wisdom of God makes the blood of martyrs the seed of the church, and overrules the persecution of his servants for the spread of his gospel. And it is wonderful to see sometimes the most noted ministers protected amidst the fury of outrageous persecution; and that, while hell and earth rage against the gospel, Jesus Christ shall thereby convert multitudes to himself. If we believe his truth, we

PILLARS IN SAMARIA—BUILT BY HEROD. [ACTS, viii:5.]—We read in I. Kings, xvi:23, 24, that the hill known as Samaria was purchased by King Omri from Shemer. And in this way it doubtless came by its name. Ahab, the son of Omri, lived here with his wife Jezebel, daughter of the king of Sidon. Here Ahab erected a temple on the summit of the hill of Samaria to the Phœnician god Baal.—Kings, xvi:31, 32. This temple was destroyed, we learn from II. Kings, x:17, 28, by Jehu. Elisha the prophet lived here a part of his life, and many of his wonderful actions are associated with this place. The pillars we see in the picture were built, it is supposed, by Herod, for he built a temple here in honor of Augustus, the emperor of Rome. The limestone columns stand now in the midst of the wheat fields.

19 Saying, [a]Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.

20 But Peter said unto him, [b]Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money.

21 Thou hast neither [c]part nor lot in this matter: for [d]thy heart is not right in the sight of God.[8]

22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedness; and pray God, if [e]perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee:

23 For I perceive that thou art in the [f]gall of bitterness,[9] and in the bond of iniquity.

24 Then answered Simon, and said, [h]Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

25 ¶ And they, when they had [i]testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.

26 ¶ And [j]the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south, unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza,[1] which is desert.[2]

27 And he arose and went: and, behold, [k]a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and [l]had come to Jerusalem for to worship,

28 Was returning; and, sitting in his chariot, read[m] Esaias the prophet.

29 Then[n] the Spirit[3] said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.

30 And Philip [o]ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, [q]Understandest thou what thou readest?

31 And he said, [r]How can I, except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.

32 The place of the scripture which he read was this, [s]He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth:

33 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

34 And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, [t]of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?

35 Then Philip opened his mouth, and [u]began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

36 And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; [v]what doth hinder me to be baptized?

37 And Philip said, [x]If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, [y]I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.[4]

38 And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they [z]went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.

39 And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord [a]caught [5]away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more:[6] and he went on his way [b]rejoicing.

40 But Philip was found[7] at Azotus:[8] and passing through, he preached [c]in all the cities, till he came to Cesarea.[9]

CHAPTER IX.

1 Saul, going towards Damascus, 4 is stricken down to the earth, 10 is called to the apostleship, 18 and is baptized by Ananias. 20 He preacheth Christ boldly. 23 The Jews lay wait to kill him: 29 so do the Grecians, but he escapeth both. 31 The church having rest, Peter healeth Eneas of the palsy, 36 and restoreth Tabitha to life.

AND Saul,[a] yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high-priest,

2 And desired of him [b]letters to [1]Damascus to the synagogues, that, if he found any of [c]this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem.

3 And[d] as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven:

4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou [e]me?[2]

5 And he said, [f]Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: [h]it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

[8] We are not to regard Simon as a thorough hypocrite. He saw Philip's miracles. He was a thoughtful man, and he concluded that Philip must be in league with some supernatural power. He believed that baptism must be the initiatory rite of this new and powerful sect; consequently he confessed his faith in Jesus, and was baptized. He found, however, that baptism alone did not impart the miraculous powers which he sought; he supposed there was a deeper mystery which the apostles kept secret, and he offered to purchase it. ought speedily and solemnly to devote ourselves to him and his service. But, alas! through ambition, covetousness, or other vicious inclinations, many profane the seals of his covenant, and publicly pretend to be his when they are not; and from mercenary views, many are too readily admitted as members or officers in the church. Dreadful will it be if a Saviour perceive them at last in the gall of bitterness and bond of iniquity! in an unconverted state! Yet it is to be feared that many ask, and rely on the prayers of others, who never heartily pray for themselves.—But no awful discovery of hypocrites must discourage ministers from going on with their work. While wrath lights on the heads of dissemblers, the earnest shall be instructed and strengthened in their most holy faith; and by following the means of grace which they have, they may hope to meet with a blessing, or even to receive means more eminent. If we be humble searchers of God's Word, and often call ourselves to an account whether we understand it, he will send us an interpreter. And much of Jesus Christ may be seen in the Scriptures, if our mind be enlightened by his Spirit. Yea, nothing so affects the conscience as the gospel record concerning him.—What strange methods God sometimes takes to send the gospel to nations answerably to his own promises! Short-lived is the delightful fellowship of Christians on earth. But if Jesus and his Spirit go with each, all may go on their way rejoicing.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 29. The Grecians. Paul, upon two accounts, made choice of 'the Grecians' as the special objects of his missionary efforts:—(1) Because they had been his unhappy assistants in the martyrdom of Stephen. (2) Because he was intimately acquainted with Grecian literature, and therefore better fitted to argue with them than any other of the apostles. For while God bestowed supernatural, he always made use of the natural and educational endowments of his servants. C.

Ver. 31. Rest. Rather, 'peace.' This lull in the storm of persecution, so far as natural causes can be assigned, is accounted for by referring it to the time when Caligula attempted to place his statue in the temple at Jerusalem—an event which threw the Jews into such consternation that they ceased to think of the Christians, or perhaps were willing to borrow countenance and aid from them in opposing that image-worship that was equally hateful to both. C.

Ver. 39. Showing the coats and garments, &c. Either the stock of ('outer and inner') garments she had provided for the future comfort of the poor, or the raiment of her providing which they had actually on. It matters nothing which! Blessed be the Lord! Dorcas hath still many daughters who continue to 'make the widows' hearts to sing for joy.'—Note, A religion that does not call forth, or permit, or encourage, the active benevolence of woman, cannot be the religion of the apostles! While ostentation of charity must be avoided, benevolence of heart must be cultivated. C.

GATEWAY TO DAMASCUS. [Acts, ix:3.]—"As he journeyed he came near Damascus; and suddenly there shined around about him a light from heaven." In the picture we have a gateway in the wall of Damascus looking toward Jerusalem. Whether St. Paul entered this city through the same place or not we have no means of knowing. It is true, however, that he entered from the same side. The roadway just before passing through the gate, leads over a bridge, under which flows, through a canal, one of the many streams of the Abana river. It is strange to think that notwithstanding St. Paul entered Damascus nearly 2,000 years ago, that the city then was 2,000 years old. This city has witnessed well-nigh all the history the human race has made. The location seems to have been intended for a city.

THE STREET CALLED STRAIGHT—DAMASCUS—INTO WHICH THE LORD COMMANDED ANANIAS TO GO AND INQUIRE FOR SAUL. [ACTS, ix:11.]—The Lord appeared unto Ananias, a good man of Damascus, in a vision, and commanded him to go into a street called Straight, that he might inquire at the house of Judas for Saul of Tarsus. This was just after Saul had been stricken down on the road near Damascus, by the great light from heaven, and by the sense of the enormous sin he was committing in persecuting the disciples of the crucified Christ. Just as it probably was two thousand years ago, so to-day the street called Straight is the leading one in Damascus. It is one of the streets in the city through which a carriage can pass. It is also the leading street for trade. Along this street St. Paul walked many times.

6 And he, trembling and astonished, said,[1] Lord,[i] what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.

7 And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, [2]hearing a voice, but seeing no man.[3]

8 And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened,[4] he saw no man: [k]but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus.

9 And he was three days [l]without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.

10 ¶ And[n] there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord.

11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight,[5] and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul,[o] of Tarsus: for, [p]behold, he prayeth,[6]

12 And[q] hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

13 Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, [r]how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem:

14 And here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that [s]call on thy name.

15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for [t]he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel:

16 For[u] I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake.

17 And[v] Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him, said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and [x]be filled with the Holy Ghost.

18 And[y] immediately[7] there fell from his eyes as it had been scales; and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized.

19 And[z] when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.

20 And[a] straightway[8] he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God.

21 But all that heard him were amazed, and said, [b]Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?

22 But Saul [c]increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, [d]proving that this is very Christ.[9]

23 ¶ And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews [e]took counsel to kill him.[1]

24 But[g] their laying await was known of Saul. And they watched the gates[2] day and night, to kill him.

25 Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall, in a basket.

26 ¶ And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, [h]he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.

27 But [i]Barnabas took him, and brought him to the [j]apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached [k]boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.

28 And he was with them [l]coming in and going out at Jerusalem.

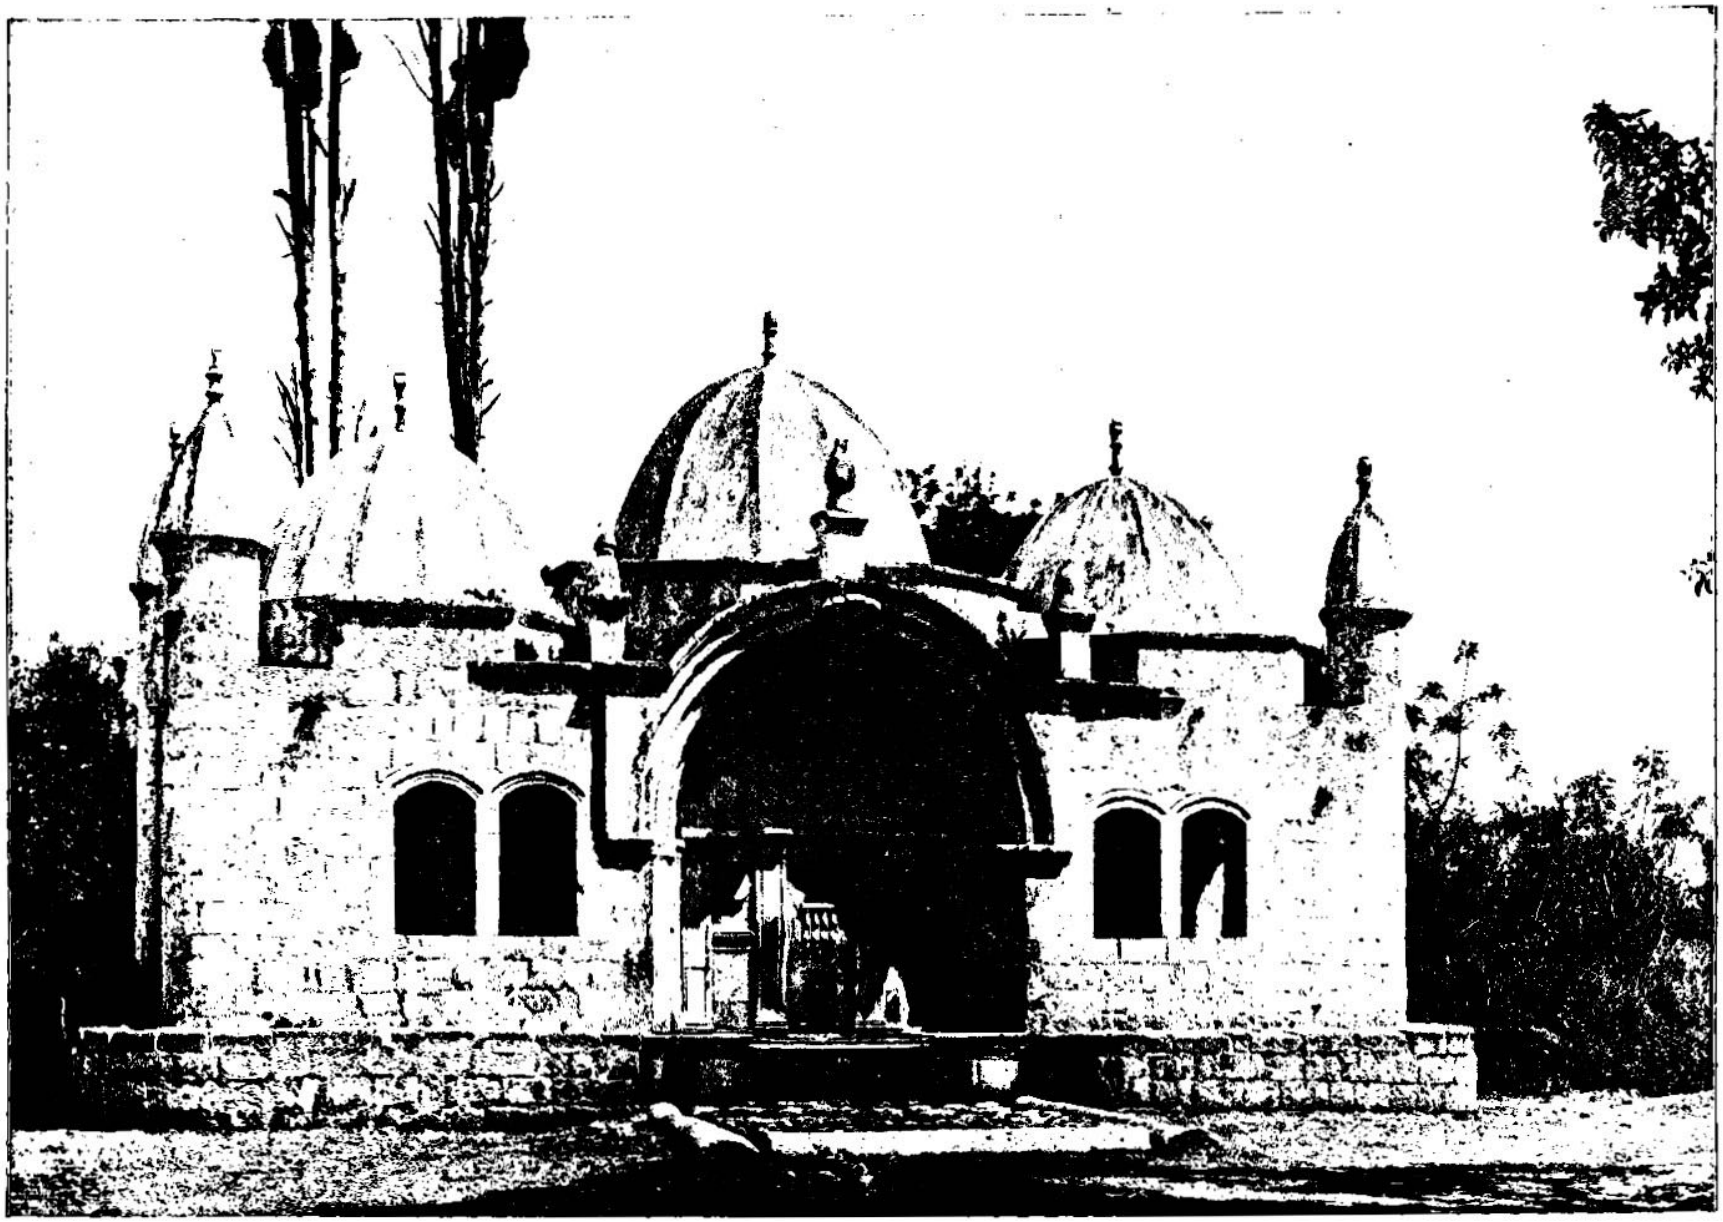
29 And he [m]spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the [3]Grecians: but [o]they went about to slay him.

30 Which when the brethren knew, [p]they brought him down to Cesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus.[4]

31 Then[q] had the churches [r]rest throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria, and were [s]edified; and [t]walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the [u]comfort of the Holy Ghost, were [v]multiplied.

32 ¶ And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters, he came down also to [x]the saints which dwelt at Lydda.[5]

33 And there he found a certain man named Eneas, which had kept his bed [y]eight years, and was sick of the palsy.



34 And Peter said unto him, Eneas, [z]Jesus

REFLECTIONS.—Often it happens that Christians may have gone to the most fearful lengths before their conversion, yet through grace they are at length led to Christ. Yea, great is their madness, their malice, against the Redeemer; and all at their own infinite hazard. How irretragable are the proofs of our Saviour's exaltation to his Father's right hand! He has appeared and spoken from heaven with divine majesty and glory: and through an authoritative use of his name, by faith, has healed the sick and raised the dead even the dead in trespasses and sins. Victorious and divine also is his grace. It leads the most daring sinner into trembling and astonishment; stops his career of wickedness, and makes him all concern, all resignation, all obedience to his will; gives him a heart to pray, and turns the furious persecutor into a zealous preacher of the faith which he had once destroyed. No wonder that both saints and sinners are amazed at the marvellous change. Through great distress and darkness the good are sometimes brought into their blessed state, to their spiritual comforts, and remarkable usefulness in the church. But the miraculous convert is gradually emboldened and strengthened, to the silencing and confounding of every opposer. With great caution ought church-members to be admitted; but never should those whom Christ has marked with his grace and truth be rejected.—It is impossible for Christ ever to want instruments for carrying on his work. If he find them not here he does there, and can easily take away all their objections and discouraging difficulties. Nor can the most furious malice, nor the most crafty plots, keep them from going forward with their work. It is his desire to turn threatenings against and slaughter of his people into rest and peace, and so fill them with the comforts of the Holy Ghost, that they may be multiplied and edified. Pleasantly, then, do ministers visit churches, and impart benefits in the name of their Master. Thrice happy are they when their faithful ministrations issue in the conversion of multitudes. And it is honourable for saints and their profession when their piety and charity render their life greatly desired, and their death as much lamented.

CHAPTER X. REFLECTIONS.—It is an honour for persons of all ranks to be devout and liberal, and to worship God in their families as well as in secret. And how does this Roman soldier shame many pro-

SITE OF THE HOUSE OF TABITHA—SHOWING ALSO PLACE OF BURIAL. [Acts, ix:36.]—"Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and alms-deeds which she did." The site of the house of Tabitha in Joppa is always pointed out to travelers as one of the places of interest. Joppa almost rocks with [illegible] the oldest cities in the world. Pliny says it existed before the flood, and Josephus says it was founded by the Phœnicians. Strabo says that it was here that Andromeda was exposed to the sea monster, and in Pliny's time the chains were said to be pointed out in the rocks to which she was bound. Joppa is interesting to Christians now, however, because it was the home of Tabitha, whose charity [illegible]

Christ maketh thee whole; arise, and make thy bed. [a]And he arose immediately.

35 And[b] all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron[6] saw him, and turned to the Lord.

36 ¶ Now there was at [c]Joppa[7] a certain disciple named Tabitha,[8] which by interpretation is called Dorcas:[9] this woman was [d]full of good works and alms-deeds which she did.

37 And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died: whom, when they had washed, they laid her in an [e]upper chamber.

38 And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa,[9] and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not delay[1] to come to them.

39 Then Peter arose, and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him [h]weeping, and showing [i]the coats and garments which Dorcas made while she was with them.

40 But[j] Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning him to the body, said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up.

41 And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up, and when he had called the saints and widows, he presented her alive.

42 And[k] it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord.

43 And it came to pass, that he tarried many days in Joppa,[2] with one Simon a tanner.

CHAPTER X.

1 Cornelius, a devout man, 5 being commanded by an angel, sendeth for Peter: 11 who by a vision, 15, 20 is taught not to despise the Gentiles. 34 As he preacheth Christ to Cornelius and his company, 44 the Holy Ghost falleth on them, 48 and they are baptized.

THERE was[a] a certain man in Cesarea,[1] called Cornelius, a centurion[2] of the band called the Italian band,

2 A[b] devout[3] man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway.[4]

3 He[c] saw in a vision evidently, about the ninth hour of the day,[5] an angel of God coming in to him, and saying unto him, Cornelius.

4 And when he looked on him, [d]he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord? And he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come[e] up for a memorial[6] before God.

5 And[g] now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter:

6 He[h] lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea-side: he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do.

7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually;

8 And when he had declared all these things unto them, [i]he sent them to Joppa.

9 ¶ On the morrow, as they went on their journey,[7] and drew nigh unto the city, [j]Peter went up upon the house-top[8] to pray, about the sixth hour:[9]

10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into [k]a trance,

11 And saw [l]heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been [m]a great sheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth;

12 Wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

13 And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat.

14 But Peter said, [o]Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common[1] or unclean.

15 And the voice spake unto him again the second time, [p]What God hath cleansed,[2] that call not thou common.

16 This was done [q]thrice: [r]and the vessel was received up again into heaven.

17 ¶ Now while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men [s]which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate,

18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there.

19 While Peter thought on [t]the vision, [u]the Spirit said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee.

20 Arise[v] therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have sent them.

21 Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius, and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek: what is the cause wherefore ye are come?

22 And they said, [z]Cornelius the centurion, a just man,[3] and one that feareth God, and of [y]good report among all the nation of the Jews, fessed Christians who, on the most trifling pretences, neglect the worship of their Maker, who scarcely know what it is to observe family devotion, and who take no more pains in the religious education of children and servants than if they were beasts! God takes great delight to increase their knowledge and comfort who sincerely practise what they know, and earnestly ask his further direction. And though our best actions cannot render our persons acceptable to God, yet, if they are agreeable to his perfections and law, he graciously rewards them.—It is by men, not by angels, that we must expect to be taught.—With tender care God removes the conscientious scruples of his servants, and prepares them beforehand for their duty. And never are we more ready to receive his direction than when we are engaged in solemn prayer. Cheerfully therefore ought all, especially ministers, to go whithersoever he, in his providence, calls them, hoping for success, whatever impediments lie in their way. Gospel preachers ought to be gladly received and kindly entertained; and as many friends as we can influence be encouraged to share their instructions. With the deepest reverence and attention ought we to hear and believe the truths of God, on which depend our eternal salvation and his glory. And with their utmost care ought preachers to make known Jesus Christ in his person, offices, debasement, and glory, as the source and mean of our whole salvation, and as our great Judge, to whom we must quickly give an account. It is a delightful season when the Holy Ghost, with supernatural influence, attests the truths preached, and applies them to the hearts of hearers. Cheerfully they then surrender themselves to Jesus, and avow their was warned from God by an holy angel, to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee.

HOUSE OF ST. PETER, JAFFA—WHERE PETER PRAYED, FELL INTO A TRANCE AND SAW HEAVEN OPEN. [Acts, x:32.]—This is called the house of St. Peter here, but it is really the house of Simon, the tanner. "Send therefore to Joppa and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon, a tanner, by the seaside; who when he cometh shall speak unto thee."—Acts, x:32. This house of Simon, the tanner, is still pointed out. This, with the house of Tabitha, make up the two most interesting objects of historic interest in Joppa. Here it was that Peter learned the great lesson that God was no respecter of persons, but thought as much of a Gentile as of a Jew. He here learned that in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him.

23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And[t] on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him.

24 And the morrow after they entered into Cesarea. And Cornelius waited for them, [u]and had called together his kinsmen and near friends.

25 ¶ And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and [b]worshipped him.[4]

26 But[c] Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man.

27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found [d]many that were come together.

28 And he said unto them, Ye know [e]how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath showed me [g]that I should not call any man common or unclean.

29 Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, [h]as soon as I was sent for: I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me?

30 And Cornelius said, Four days ago I was fasting[i] until this hour: and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house; and, behold, a man stood before me in [j]bright clothing,

31 And[k] said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God.[5]

32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter: he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner, by the seaside; who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee.

33 Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, [l]to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

34 ¶ Then Peter [m]opened his mouth, and said, [o]Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons:

35 But[p] in every nation he that feareth him,[6] and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

36 The[q] word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he [r]is Lord of all:)

37 That word, I say, ye know, [s]which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached;

38 How [t]God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went[u] about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil: for [x]God was with him.

39 And [y]we are witnesses of all things which he did, both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom [z]they slew and hanged on a tree:

40 Him God raised up the third day, and showed him openly;

41 Not[a] to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead.

42 And[c] he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he [b]which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead.

43 To[c] him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.[7]

44 ¶ While[d] Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word.

45 And they of the circumcision [e]which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost:

46 For they heard them [g]speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, 47 Can[h] any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?

48 And he commanded them [i]to be baptized in the name of the Lord. [j]Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Peter, being accused for going in to the Gentiles, 5 maketh his defence, 18 which is accepted. 19 The gospel being spread into Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, Barnabas is sent to confirm them. 26 The disciples there are first called Christians. 27 They send relief to the brethren in Judea in time of famine.

AND the apostles and brethren[1] that were in Judea heard that [e]the Gentiles had also received the word of God.

2 And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, [b]they that were of the circumcision[2] contended with him,

3 Saying, [c]Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them.

4 But [d]Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, saying,

5 I[e] was in the city of Joppa, praying: and [g]in a trance I saw a vision, [h]a certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me:

faith in him. Cordially they praise him for his kindness, and desire to be more acquainted with, established in, and edified by his truths.—But O with what astonishing condescension and marvellous operation of providence and grace has God extended his gospel to us unclean and brutish sinners of the Gentiles, and has made of both Jews and Gentiles one gospel church, by making peace!

of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

7 And I heard a voice saying unto me, [j]Arise, Peter; slay, and eat.

8 But I said, [k]Not so, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.[3]

9 But the voice answered me again from heaven, [l]What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

10 And this was done [m]three times: and [n]all were drawn up again into heaven.

11 And, behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Cesarea unto me.

12 And [o]the Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover, these six[4] brethren accompanied me; and we entered into the man's house:

13 And[q] he showed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter;

14 Who shall tell thee [r]words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.

15 And as I began to speak, [s]the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning.

16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, [t]John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.

17 Forasmuch then as [u]God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, what was I, [v]that I could withstand God?

18 When they heard these things, [w]they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, [x]Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

19 ¶ Now[z] they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen, travelled as far as [a]Phenice,[5] and Cyprus,[6] and Antioch,[7] preaching the word [b]to none but unto the Jews only.

20 And some of them were men of Cyprus and [c]Cyrene, which, when they were come to

The verbal difference, however, may be easily accounted for, on the principle of verbal inspiration, when it is recollected that the sheet was let down three times, and that the reply of Peter may be accurately given upon one of these occasions—another reply different from the former, yet as accurate, upon a second. Antioch, spake unto the [8]Grecians,[9] [d]preaching the Lord Jesus.

21 And[e] the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.

22 ¶ Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and [g]they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch.

23 Who, when he came, and [h]had seen the grace of God,[1] was glad, and [i]exhorted them all, that with [j]purpose of [k]heart they would [l]cleave unto the Lord.

24 For he was a [m]good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord.

25 Then[n] departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul:[2]

26 And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year [p]they assembled themselves [3]with the church, and [q]taught much people. And the disciples were called [r]Christians first in Antioch.

27 ¶ And in these days came [s]prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch.

28 And there stood up one of them, named [t]Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cæsar.

29 Then the disciples, every man [u]according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea:

30 Which also they did, and sent it to the [v]elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

2 And he [b]killed James[4] the brother of John with the sword.

---

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 26. The disciples were called Christians, &c. Hitherto, by the Gentiles, they had been called 'Jews;' and by the Jews, 'Nazarenes,' 'Galileans,' &c. Whether the name was taken by the disciples themselves, or given by others, does not appear. That it was not given in derision seems probable from the use of it by King Agrippa, Ac. 26. 28; and that the disciples were not ashamed of it is evident from its use by Peter, 1 Pe. 4. 16. C.

Ver. 28. The word translated 'world' is one of very indefinite application—sometimes describing the lands inhabited by the Greeks, sometimes those jointly inhabited by Greeks and Romans, sometimes confined to Palestine and its immediate dependencies, as Lu. 2. 1; 3. 21. 26.—Note, Four famines are recorded in the reign of Claudius, but none of them general. Indeed, among the merciful dispensations of Providence, there is one very remarkable, that a famine is seldom, if ever, universal; but while one country is visited with drought or deluged with rain, other, and even neighbouring countries, are blessed with fair weather and fruitful harvests, by which the wants of other lands may be supplied. This seems to have been the case in the present instance, as the people of Antioch were able to afford a liberal collection to relieve their brethren during the famine at Jerusalem. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Delightful are the tidings of sinners receiving and being converted by the gospel of Christ. The salvation of souls, the honour of Christ, and the glory of God are hereby highly promoted. And it is strange that even saints should be sometimes prejudiced, when their enemies, or persons of detested characters, are made partakers of the same spiritual blessings as themselves—that rash censure should so often drop from gracious lips, and godlike charity should be reproached as looseness in religion! But ministers must bear with the weak; and though no unreasonable prejudice should ever hinder the execution of their commission, they should be always ready to clear their conduct to scrupulous minds. And every Christian also ought gladly to hear and receive anything that may tend to remove his prejudices.—What! are we to withstand God, who distributes his favour as is best, and overrules the fury of persecutors for the spread of the gospel and conversion of sinners? Thrice happy are they who show willingly that repentance which manifests spiritual life received, and prepares them for the eternal life promised hereafter.—When his Spirit and power attend the preached gospel, multitudes believe and are turned to the Lord, and cleave to him with fixed purpose of heart. And with alacrity and diligence do ministers then attend their increasing work. Delightful is the name, and great the honour, to possess the privileges and tempers of CHRISTIANS; and especially to act up to the profession and obligations included in the character! Happy had it been for the church if no other character had ever marked the followers of Christ. With harmony in the truth, with holiness and order, ought such to hold fellowship one with another; and with great cheerfulness should they supply one another's wants, none of which can take place without the approval of God. Yea, he sometimes wisely permits calamities to his people, for the trial, exercise, and improvement of their own or others' faith, love, and self-denied obedience, and for the removal of groundless differences among them.

CHAPTER XII. REFLECTIONS.—Whether should he proceeded further to take [d]Peter also. ([e]Then were the days of unleavened bread.)

4 And [g]when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions[5] of soldiers, to keep him; intending after Easter[6] to bring him forth to the people.

5 Peter therefore was kept in prison: but prayer[7] was made [k]without ceasing[8] of the church unto God for him.

6 And when Herod would have [l]brought him forth, the [j]same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains;[9] and the keepers before the door kept the prison.

7 And, behold, [k]the angel of the Lord[1] came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And[l] his chains fell off from his hands.

8 And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals: and so he did. And he saith unto him, Cast thy garment about thee, and follow me.

9 And he went out, and followed him; [s]and wist not that it was true which was done by the angel; but [t]thought he saw a vision.

10 When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city, [p]which opened to them of his own accord: and they went out, and passed on through one street; and forthwith the angel departed from him.

11 And when Peter was come to himself, he said, Now I know of a surety, [q]that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hath [r]delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

12 And when he had considered the thing, he[s] came to the house of Mary the mother of John,[t] whose surname was Mark; where [u]many were gathered together praying.

13 And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came to hearken,[2] named Rhoda.

14 And when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness, but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate.

15 And they said unto her, [v]Thou art mad. But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, It is [x]his angel.[3]

16 But Peter continued knocking:[4] and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished.

17 But he, [y]beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them [z]how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, Go, show these things unto James,[5] and to the brethren. And [a]he departed,[6] and went into another place.

18 Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, what was become of Peter.

19 And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and [b]commanded that they should be put to death. And he went down from Judea to [c]Cesarea,[7] and there abode.

20 ¶ And Herod was highly displeased[8] with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and, having made Blastus the king's chamberlain[9] their friend, desired peace; because their country was [d]nourished by the king's country.[1]

21 And upon a set day, Herod, arrayed in royal apparel, sat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them.

22 And the people gave a shout, saying, [e]It is the voice of a god, and not of a man.

23 And [g]immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost.

24 ¶ But[h] the word of God grew and multiplied.

25 And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their ministry,[2] and took with them [i]John, whose surname was Mark.

1 Paul and Barnabas are chosen to go to the Gentiles. 7 Of Sergius Paulus, and Elymas the sorcerer. 14 Paul preacheth at Antioch, that Jesus is Christ. 42 The Gentiles believe: 45 but the Jews gainsay and blaspheme: 46 whereupon they turn to the Gentiles. 48 As many as were ordained to life believe.

NOW there[a] were in the church that was at Antioch, certain [b]prophets and teachers; as [c]Barnabas, and Simeon that was called [1]Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, [2]which had been brought up with [d]Herod[3] the tetrarch, and Saul.

we here most admire the wickedness of men in promoting, or the wisdom of God in overruling, the persecutions of his church? Alas! what selfishness, pride, rashness, and cruelty, to murder one of the best, the most useful of men! And infernal the malice to take pleasure in it! But men-pleasers will lead themselves at last into the greatest guilt; and success in one sin will embolden them to commit another. The united and fervent prayers of the saints will prove in the end too hard for all that oppose them. If God bestow his Spirit of grace and supplication, to make intercession with groanings which cannot be uttered, deliverance is at hand. And in their extremity, though often not till then, he will rise up for their help. And if ordinary means cannot avail for their preservation, he will work miracles for them. Nay, even by ordinary means, he can hide them from their most inveterate foes. But proud persecutors quickly meet with the living God. The prudent submission of neighbours, and the servile flattery of friends, but lift them up, that their destruction may be the more terrible. God seasonably cuts them off in the midst of their pomp and grandeur, and makes their fall, as well as their fury, subservient to the propagation of the gospel.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 5. Salamis. A city on the east side of Cyprus—not to be confounded with the island of Salamis, so famous in Grecian history as the scene of a memorable sea-fight and victory. This city attained to great eminence, but its very site has been swept away by the sea. C.

Ver. 9. Saul appears to have been his Hebrew, and Paul his Roman name; which, from this time onwards, the evangelist uses, as he had now become a preacher of the gospel to the Gentiles. C.

Ver. 29. And laid him in a sepulchre. This statement seems to disagree with Jn. 19. 38, &c., in which, as well as in the other evangelists, his sepulture is ascribed to Joseph of Arimathea and his other disciples. The difference may easily be removed by the most simple and natural supposition, that some of the Pharisees who took so deep and malignant an interest in securing and watching the tomb, Mat. 27. 62–66, had also taken an insulting and triumphant part in the funeral procession and act of sepulture. C.

Ver. 33. This day have I begotten thee that is, from the dead, Ro. 1. 4, even as every Christian is said to be 'begotten' on the day of his conversion, of his spiritual resurrection, 1 Co. 4. 15; Phile. 10, 1 Pe. 1. 3, 1 Jn. 5. 1, 18. But the address does not ascribe his Sonship to his resurrection, for he had already been acknowledged as 'Son' by a voice from heaven—by his disciples on earth; and he himself had openly asserted the title before the and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

3 And [h]when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.[5]

4 So they, [i]being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia;[6] and from thence they sailed to [j]Cyprus.

5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God [k]in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also [l]John[7] to their minister.

6 ¶ And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos,[8] they found a certain [m]sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Barjesus:

7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God.

8 But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) [n]withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

9 Then Saul, (who also is called Paul,[9]) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him,

10 And said, [p]O full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness,[1] wilt thou not cease [q]to pervert the right ways of the Lord?

11 And now, behold, [r]the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.

12 Then the deputy,[2] when[s] he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.

13 ¶ Now when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia:[3] and [t]John departing from them returned to Jerusalem.

14 But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch[4] in Pisidia,[5] and [u]went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day, and sat down.

15 And after [v]the reading of the law and the prophets, the [w]rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, [x]Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on.

16 Then Paul stood up, and [y]beckoning with his hand, said, [z]Men of Israel, and ye that fear God, give audience.

17 The[b] God of this people of Israel chose our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, [a]and with an high arm brought he them out of it.

18 And[d] about the time of forty years [b]suffered[7] he their manners in the wilderness.

19 And [c]when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Chanaan, he divided their land to them by lot.

20 And after that, [d]he gave unto them judges, about the space of four hundred and fifty [e]years, until Samuel the prophet.

21 And[h] afterward they desired a king: and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years.[9]

22 And[i] when he had removed him, he raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom also he gave testimony, and said, I have found David, the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will.[1]

23 Of[j] this man's seed hath God, according to his promise, raised unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus:

Jews, Mat. 3. 17; 16. 16; Jn. 10. 36. Besides which, the eternity of the Father implies the eternity of the Son, he being described as 'that eternal Life that was with the Father,' 1 Jn. 1. 2, and to whom as Son the Father saith, 'Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever,' Ps. 45. 6, 7, and, 'Thou, Lord JEHOVAH, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thy hands,' Ps. 102. 12, 25; He. 1. 8, 10. C.

Ver. 35. Of 'the Holy One of God' Jesus Christ it is expressly declared that he 'should not see corruption.' Wherefore, it is impossible the doctrine of transubstantiation can be true; for while that doctrine asserts that a piece of bread becomes, by what is called 'consecration,' the very body, and blood, and soul, and divinity of Christ, it admits that that same transubstantiated bread (body, &c., may, and often does, see corruption. Wherefore, because it sees corruption, it cannot be the body of Christ. See ver. 37. C.

Ver. 39. Justification by the law of Moses is simply this: 'He that doeth these things shall live by them,' Ro. 10. 5. By that law, therefore, no sinner could ever be justified; that is, pardoned, and accepted as righteous before God. But 'being justified by faith in Jesus Christ, we have peace with God,' having 'redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of our sins,' being made, through grace, 'accepted in the Beloved,' Ro. 5. 1; Ep. 1. 6, 7. C.

Ver. 48. The word translated 'ordained,' or its immediate cognates, occurs also Mat. 28. 16; Lu. 7. 8; Ac. 15. 2; 22. 10; 28. 23; Ro. 13. 1; 1 Co. 14. 16. Taking the examples in order, six orders (usually signify 'appointed,' or 'constituted,' by authority or decision of another, a superior. The last alone appears to signify 'self-devoted,' but that must still be under the power of the Spirit of God, 1 Co. 12. 6, 11; Phi. 2. 13, so that no other conclusion can be drawn but that 'believing' and 'eternal life' are alike the gifts of God, one combined with the act of man, the other absolutely. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Important is the work of preaching the gospel, and absolutely necessary for it is the direction of God's Spirit and providence. He qualifies his servants for it, calls them to it, and directs and succeeds them in it; and with pleasure and courage they may set about it if satisfied of their divine call. But Satan and his instruments will certainly oppose them in it with great warmth and earnestness, especially if great sinners and persons in power appear to be converted by it. Great will be their subtlety and mischievous ardour in opposing the gospel—the right ways of the Lord. All the arts of sorcery and infidelity; all the fury that blind zeal, temporal interests, and envy can inspire; all the powers of this world, are stirred up to oppress it. But no weapon formed against Zion shall prosper: for under the influence of the Holy Ghost the word shall the more spread and be glorified. Very important are the tidings it brings us concerning the promised Saviour; for whose being born, crucified, and raised from the dead, according to the ancient oracles of God, all former dispensations towards Israel but paved the way. By infinitely wise and seasonable advances has the knowledge of Jesus Christ, and a full redemption through him, spread and prevailed in the world. Thrice happy are they who receive him as the light of life and propitiation for sins. From eternity he was the slain lamb of God. In time they are justified through their living faith, even from crimes for which the ceremonial laws allowed no expiation. They are endowed with the presence, supplies, and consolations of the Holy Ghost, and enabled to continue in the faith, profession, and obedience of the gospel, notwithstanding the most cruel persecution.—If among these converts some be remarkable for sense, others for stupid idolatries, all marks the wisdom and power of gospel grace.—But, alas! great is their sin and danger who, notwithstanding their visible relation to him, reject the Redeemer, and set themselves to reproach his servants, his truths, and ways. They thrust the gospel and eternal life from themselves, and provoke God to cast them off with sorrow into everlasting ruin. Take heed, my soul, to hear only such preachers as the Holy Ghost has qualified and regularly placed in their office. Let no station make me think myself above the gospel; and let no sinfulness make me reckon myself below it. Let reading and hearing of God's Word be my constant delight. And let me carefully observe all providences in connection with Christ. Regarding the word of salvation he hath sent, and receiving the sure mercies he hath given, let me serve my generation according to the will of God, and then fall asleep in the Lord.—If I am justified, let me manifest it by my good works. If I have grace implanted in my heart, let me continue therein. If I am benefited by ministers, let me love and cleave to them. And if for Jesus' sake I am tossed to and fro, let his comforts delight my soul.

CHAPTER XIV. REFLECTIONS.—God plainly testifies his own being, life, patience, goodness, power, and wisdom, to the heathen world in the works of creation and providence. And even while, by their perverse manners, they abuse the light of their consciences, he graciously gives them the necessaries and delights of outward life. Surely even these his common favours should attract their love to him. And, alas! great is their sin and misery who, being left to their own lusts and imaginations, put vanity and devils as 24 When[k] John had first preached, before his coming, the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel.

25 And as John [l]fulfilled his course, he said, Whom[m] think ye that I am? I am not he. But, behold, there cometh one after me, whose shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose.

26 Men[n] and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent.

27 For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because [p]they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which [q]are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him.

28 And[r] though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain.

29 And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, [s]they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre.

30 But[t] God raised him from the dead:

31 And[u] he was seen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his [v]witnesses unto the people.

32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the [x]promise which was made unto the fathers,

33 God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, [y]Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

34 And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, [z]I will give you the sure mercies[2] of David.[3]

35 Wherefore he saith also in another psalm, Thou[a] shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

36 For David, after he had served[b] his own generation by the will of God,[4] fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption:

37 But he, whom [c]God raised again, saw no corruption.

38 Be[d] it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins:

39 And by him [e]all that believe are justified from all things, from which [g]ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

40 Beware, therefore, lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the [h]prophets;

41 Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish:[5] for I work a work[6] in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you.

42 ¶ And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles[7] besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath.[8]

43 Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, persuaded them [i]to continue in the grace of God.

44 ¶ And the next sabbath-day [k]came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God.

45 But when the Jews saw the multitudes, [l]they were filled with envy,[9] and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming.

46 Then Paul and Barnabas [m]waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should [n]first have been spoken to you: but seeing [o]ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, [p]we turn to the Gentiles.[1]

47 For [q]so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.[2]

48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they [r]were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: [s]and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.

49 And[t] the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region.

50 ¶ But the Jews [u]stirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.

51 But[v] they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium.

52 And the [z]disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Paul and Barnabas are persecuted from Iconium. 8 At Lystra Paul healeth a cripple, whereupon they are reputed as gods. 19 Paul is stoned. 21 They pass through divers churches, confirming the disciples in faith and patience. 26 Returning to Antioch, they report what God had done with them.

AND it came to pass in Iconium,[1] that they went both together [a]into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake, that [b]a great multitude, both of the Jews and also of the Greeks,[2] believed.

2 But[c] the unbelieving Jews stirred up the objects of worship in his place. Infinite is the mercy that now the door of faith is opened to the Gentiles; the gospel of salvation through Jesus Christ is preached to them. But, alas! while some believe it, others rage against and oppose it. Yea, while heathens believe and are healed, Jews oppose and are hardened, to their eternal ruin. And great is the unanimity of wicked men against Jesus Christ and his faithful ministers.—Inconstant and worthless is the applause of the multitude. To-day they admire preachers as gods; to-morrow they persecute and murder them as miscreants. But God's testimony to his word, in external and internal operations, is sufficient to overcome all opposition. With wisdom, care, and love, he forms his people into a church; and by their own choice provides them pastors and teachers after his own heart, for their further edification and establishment, and in compassion to the snares and troubles through which they must pass into the heavenly state. In the most solemn manner, by prayer and fasting, ought ministers to be set apart to their work. And with pleasure and hope, labour and diligence, should they spend and be spent in the conversion of sinners and edification of saints. And though they ought to avoid suffering as

THE TEMPLE OF JUPITER OLYMPUS, ATHENS. [Acts, xiv:13.]—It is almost impossible for us to understand in our time what great obstacles the early disciples had to overcome in preaching the gospel. We can get some idea of the tremendous hold the heathen gods had upon the popular imagination of the time, by considering the magnitude and splendor of the temples erected in their honor and for their worship. We have in the above picture three columns, one fallen and two standing, which formed a part of the temple of Jupiter Olympus. There were more than a hundred of these splendid Corinthian columns in the original temple. The preaching of St. Paul and of others, however, displaced the heathen gods, and now their temples everywhere are in ruins, while Christianity is taking the world.

Gentiles,[3] and made their minds evil-affected against the brethren.

3 Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord, [d]which gave testimony unto the word of his grace, [e]and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands.

4 But[g] the multitude of the city was divided: and part held with the Jews, and part with the apostles.

5 And [h]when there was an assault made, both of the Gentiles and also of the Jews, with their rulers, to use them despitefully, and to stone them,

6 They[i] were ware of it, and fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about:[4]

7 And[j] there they preached the gospel.

8 ¶ And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, [k]being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked:

9 The same heard Paul speak: who stedfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had [l]faith[5] to be healed,

10 Said with a loud voice, [m]Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked.

11 And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, [n]The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.

12 And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker.

13 Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city,[6] brought oxen and garlands[7] unto the gates, and [p]would have done sacrifice with the people.

14 Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they [q]rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out,

15 And saying, Sirs, [r]why do ye these things? We also are men [s]of like passions[8] with you, and preach unto you, that ye should turn from these [t]vanities unto the [u]living God, which made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein:

16 Who[v] in times past suffered all nations[9] to walk in their own ways.

17 Nevertheless,[x] he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness.

18 And with these sayings [y]scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them.

19 ¶ And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people,[1] and,[z] having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing [a]he had been dead.

20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

21 ¶ And[b] when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many,[2] they returned again to [c]Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch,[3]

22 Confirming[d] the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them [e]to continue in the faith, and that we must [f]through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.

23 And when they[4] had ordained[5] them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.

24 And after they had passed throughout [k]Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia.

25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia:[6]

26 And thence sailed to Antioch,[7] from whence they had been [l]recommended to the grace of God for the work which they [j]fulfilled.

27 And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they [k]rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had [l]opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.

28 And there they abode long time with the disciples.

CHAPTER XV.

1 Great dissension ariseth touching circumcision. 6 The apostles consult about it, 22 and send their determination by letters to the churches. 36 Paul and Barnabas, thinking to visit the brethren together, fall at strife, and depart asunder.

AND certain[a] men which came down from Judea taught the [b]brethren, and said, [c]Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.

2 When[d] therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, they[1] determined that Paul and Barnabas, and far as can be done without sin, yet none must ever deter them from the faithful execution of their office. Till their testimony be finished God will help them in life; nor will upright disciples ever disown them on account of reproach or danger.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 20 Whether this precept, originally delivered to Noah, Ge. 9. 1–7, be still binding upon the Gentiles, is a point upon which much difference of opinion prevails among Christians—some holding the prohibition to be perpetually obligatory as much as the prohibition of idolatry and fornication with which it is associated; others holding the prohibition of idolatry and fornication alone to be perpetually obligatory, as founded on the first, second, and seventh commandments; but the prohibition of "things strangled and blood" to be mere temporary accommodations to Jewish prejudices (comp ch. 16. 3. with Ga. 2. 3. 5; 5. 1–6; an abstinence from things not unlawful in themselves; Ti. 4. 4; Ro. 14. 14), but merely out of tenderness and charity to the prejudices and consciences of weaker brethren, Ro. 14. 15. 21. In the midst of this division of opinion—a division among learned, sincere, and godly men, one thing is certain, that "every man should be fully persuaded in his own mind" that he is following scriptural authority, not led by bodily appetite, "in that thing which he alloweth," Ro. 14. 5. 22. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how early a spirit of bigotry, legality, and attachment to ceremonies, began in the Christian church, to the great injury of the pure doctrines of salvation by Christ alone, through faith! And it is a great mercy that the church is now delivered from the ancient burdensome rites of Moses, which never availed to the purification of men's consciences; and that the salvation of sinners, greater or lesser, Jews or Gentiles, is wholly of free grace; for the faith of the gospel powerfully tends to the purification of men's hearts and lives.—When attempts are made, especially under pretence of apostolic authority, to corrupt the peculiar doctrines of the gospel, and to pervert the souls of believers, it is high time to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. But proud and angry contentions about mere circumstances should never trouble the church, and expose her to confusion, danger, and reproach. It is a mercy that Jesus has appointed courts in proper subordination, and proper regulations, for the happy adjusting of differences. And there is need in all our disputes to adhere closely to the Scriptures, and in all ecclesiastical decisions to manifest a strict regard to the gospel liberty secured by Christ, and to the weakness of tender consciences. If they be made with proper prudence and harmony, they will in certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem, unto [t]the apostles and elders, about this question.

3 And being [u]brought on their way[2] by the church, they passed through [v]Phenice and Samaria, [w]declaring the conversion of the Gentiles: and they caused [x]great joy unto all the brethren.[3]

4 And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders, and they declared all things that God had done with them.

5 ¶ But there rose up certain[4] of the sect of the Pharisees which believed, saying, That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses.

6 And[k] the apostles and elders came together, for to consider of this matter.

7 ¶ And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men[1] and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.

8 And God, [z]which knoweth the hearts, [a]bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us;

9 And [b]put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith.

10 Now therefore why tempt[5] ye God, [c]to put a yoke[6] upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?

11 But we believe [d]that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.[7]

12 ¶ Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, [e]declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them.

13 ¶ And [f]after they had held their peace, James[m] answered, saying, [n]Men and brethren, hearken unto me:[8]

14 Simeon hath declared how God at the first [o]did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name.

15 And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written,

16 After[p] this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up:

17 That[r] the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things.

18 Known[s] unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

19 Wherefore my sentence is, [t]that we trouble not them which from among the Gentiles [u]are turned to God:

20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain from [v]pollutions of idols,[9] and from [w]fornication,[1] and from [x]things strangled,[2] and from blood.

21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being [y]read in the synagogues every sabbath-day.

22 ¶ Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the [z]whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch, with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed [a]Barsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren:[4]

23 And they wrote letters by them after this manner; The apostles, and elders, and [b]brethren, send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia:

24 Forasmuch as we have heard, that [c]certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom we gave no such commandment:

25 It seemed good unto us, being assembled [d]with one accord, to send chosen men unto you, with our beloved [e]Barnabas and Paul,

26 Men that have [f]hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

27 We have sent therefore Judas and [g]Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by[6] mouth.

28 For it seemed good [h]to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater [i]burden than these necessary things:[7]

29 That[r] ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye [k]keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.

30 So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle:

31 Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the [l]consolation.[9]

32 And Judas and Silas, being [m]prophets[3] also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and [n]confirmed them.

33 And after they had tarried there a space, they were [o]let go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles.

34 Notwithstanding, it pleased Silas to abide there still.

35 Paul also and Barnabas [p]continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also.

general be heartily received by church-members for their edification. And greatly should we rejoice in the success of other churches, and in the union of Jews and Gentiles into one body of Christ; and carefully should all avoid giving offence to their neighbours, even in things indifferent in themselves. But since the gospel is necessary for the confirmation of believers, as well as for the conversion of sinners, not only ought ministers to labour in the ministrations of it, but all to rejoice in their success.—It is an unpleasing reflection that smaller differences should so often occasion sharp contentions between the best of men; and that dear friends should, in ill humour, bid each other adieu for life. It is nevertheless a mercy if God make the weakness of men a mean of spreading his gospel.

FALLS OF BEYROUT.- [ACTS, xv:41.]—"And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches."—Acts, xv:41. It is not definitely stated in the Scriptures when St. Paul entered Beyrout, or the city that stood where the modern Beyrout now stands. He could hardly pass through Syria, along the coast into Cilicia, without passing through the Berytus of the Greeks and the Romans. This was a city of the ancient Jebelites. Herod the Great caused a mock trial to be held here over his two sons. Herod Agrippa adorned this city with baths and theaters. Here Titus came after the destruction of Jerusalem. The silk trade has flourished here from the time of the Romans. The falls are north of the city. They are at the foot of the Lebanon Mountains, and the water is largely melted snow.

36 ¶ And some days after, Paul said unto Barnabas, [b]Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.

37 And Barnabas determined to take with them [c]John, whose surname was Mark.

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, [d]who departed[2] from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

39 And [e]the contention was so sharp[3] between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto [f]Cyprus;

40 And Paul chose Silas, and departed, being[4] recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God.[4]

41 And he went [g]through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Paul having circumcised Timothy, 7 and being called by the Spirit from one country to another, 14 converteth Lydia. 16 casteth out a spirit of divination. 19 For which cause he and Silas are whipped and imprisoned. 26 The prison doors are opened. 31 The jailer is converted, 37 and they are delivered.

THEN came he to [a]Derbe and Lystra: and, behold, a certain disciple was there, [b]named Timotheus, the son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek:[1]

2 Which was [c]well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium.

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumcised[2] him, because of the Jews which were in those quarters: for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4 And as they went through the cities, [d]they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

5 And[e] so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

6 Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of [g]Galatia, and were forbidden [h]of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in [i]Asia,[3]

7 After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia:[4] but the Spirit[5] suffered them not.

8 And they, passing by Mysia, came down to [j]Troas.[6]

9 ¶ And [k]a vision appeared to Paul in the night; There stood a man of Macedonia,[7] and prayed him, saying, [l]Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10 And after he had seen the vision, [m]immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them.

11 Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia,[8] and the next day to Neapolis;[9]

12 And from thence to [n]Philippi, which is the chief[1] city of that part of Macedonia,[2] and a colony:[3] and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13 And on the [o]sabbath we went out of the city by a river-side, [p]where prayer was wont to be made;[4] and we sat down, and [q]spake unto the women which resorted thither.

14 ¶ And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of [r]Thyatira,[5] which worshipped God, heard us: [s]whose heart the Lord opened,[6] that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul.

15 And when [t]she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me [u]to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she [v]constrained us.

16 ¶ And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel [w]possessed with a spirit of divination[7] met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying:[8]

17 The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These[9] men are the servants of the most high God, which show unto us the [x]way of salvation.

18 And this did she many days. But Paul, [y]being grieved,[1] turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.

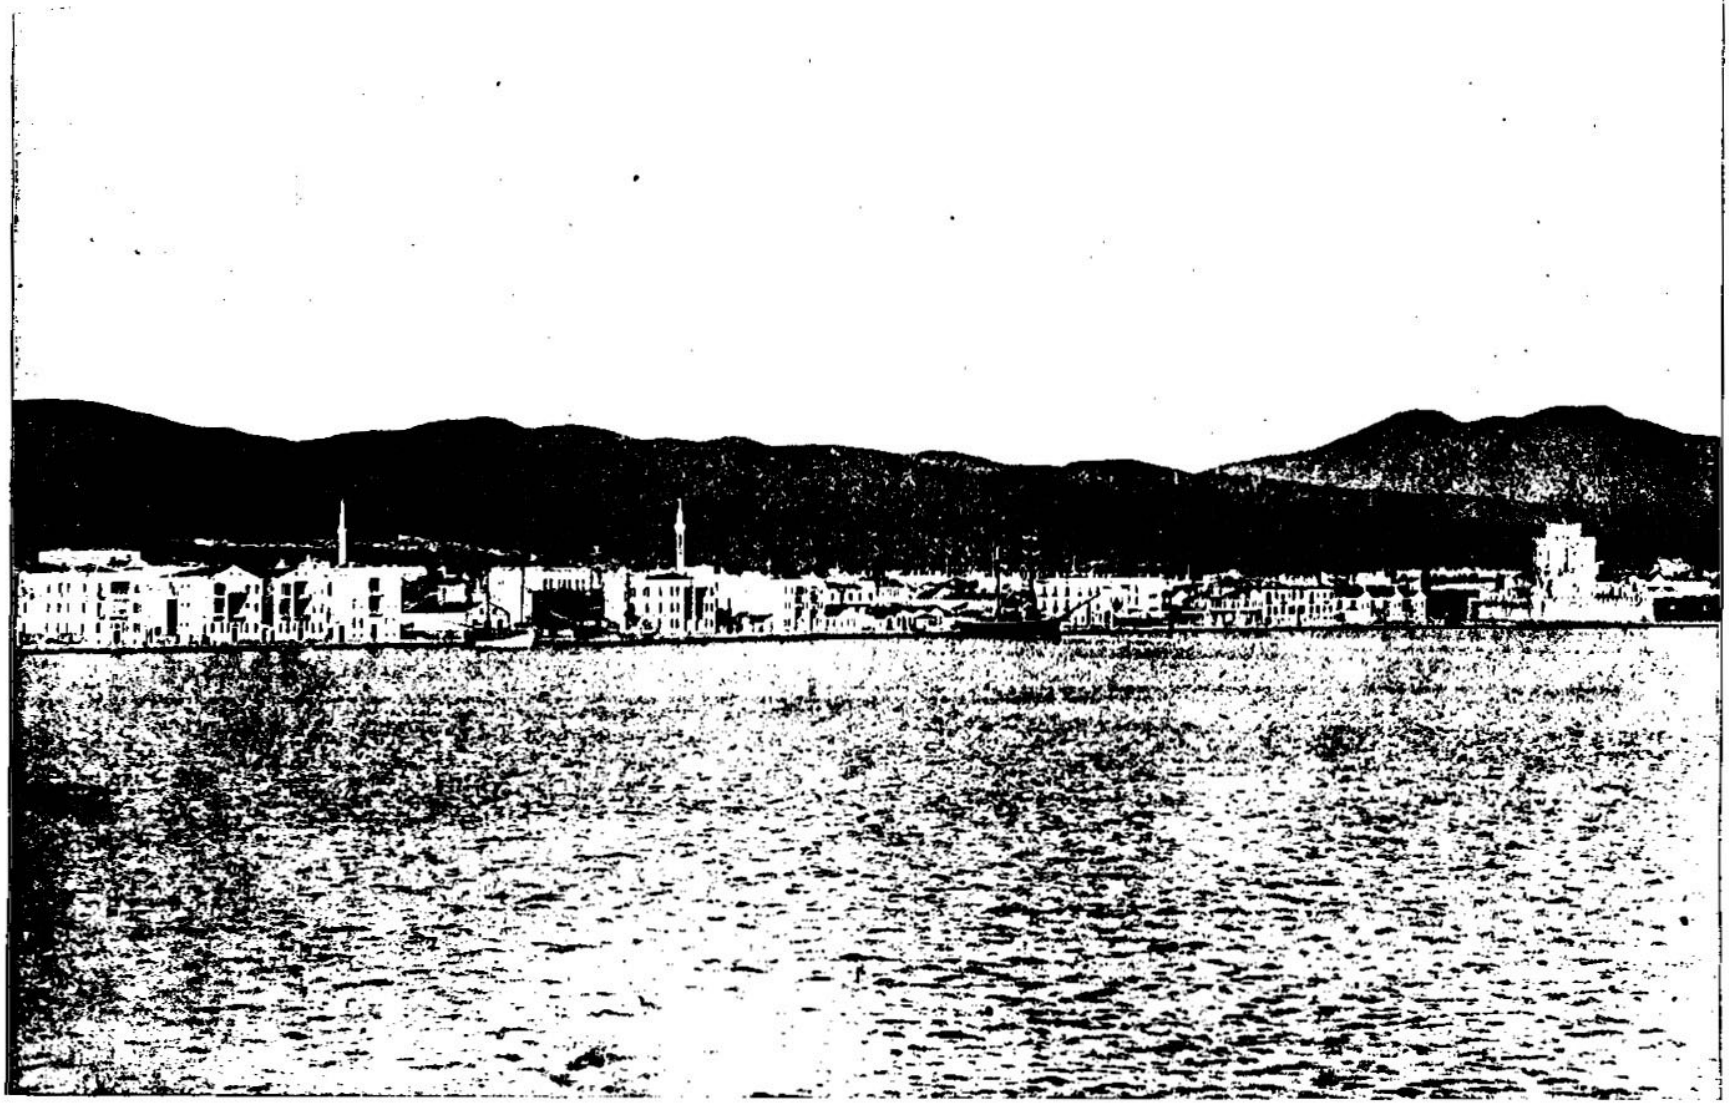
19 ¶ And when her masters saw that [z]the hope of their gains was gone, [a]they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the [b]market-place, unto the rulers,

20 And[d] brought them to the magistrates, saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city,

21 And teach customs, which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans.[3]

22 And[e] the multitude rose up together against them: and the magistrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

23 And[f] when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailer to keep them safely:



24 Who, having received such a charge, thrust

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 4. As they went through the cities. While a local and fixed ministry is undoubtedly sanctioned, because exemplified in the Acts and Epistles, Ac. xiv. 17, 28, &c.; Tit. i. 5, yet an itinerant ministry appears under equally apostolic sanction. Wherefore it well becomes all churches, however long and firmly settled in the faith, well to consider how far continuance of a similar itinerancy may still be necessary both to apostolic structure and apostolic success. C.

Ver. 6. Galatia. A division of Western Asia adjoining Phrygia on the north-east, sometimes called Gallo Grecia, both of which names it derived from a colony of Gauls who migrated thither under Brennus, B.C. 276, and whose descendants continued to speak the Gallic language till the third century of the Christian era. C.

Ver. 12. Philippi. A city about twelve miles north of Neapolis, so named after Philip, the father of Alexander, and celebrated in heathen annals as the scene of the decisive conflicts between the armies of Augustus and Anthony, Brutus and Cas-

THESSALONICA. [Acts. xvii:1.]—"Now when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews." The above view shows Thessalonica as it is to-day. Thessalonica has always been a city of note. It was an ancient city of Macedonia and was known as Thernia. A daughter of Philip, king of Macedonia, was named Thessalonica. She was the sister of Alexander the Great and married Cassander. This city was named Thessalonica in honor of King Philip's daughter. There are here about 75,000 inhabitants, among them a great many prosperous Jews. You see the minarets of the mosques rising in different parts of the city; this indicates that there are Mahometans here also, but they are not influential.

them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the [h]stocks.[4]

25 ¶ And[i] at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them.

26 And[j] suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed.

27 And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison-doors open, he[k] drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled.

28 But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do[l] thyself no harm; for we are all here.

29 Then he called for a light,[5] and sprang in, and came [m]trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, 30 And brought them out, and said, [n]Sirs, what must I do to be saved?

31 And they said, [o]Believe on[6] the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house.

32 And[q] they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house.

33 And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and [r]was baptized, he and all his, straightway.

34 And when he had brought them into his house, he [s]set meat before them, and [t]rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

35 ¶ And [u]when it was day, the magistrates sent the sergeants,[7] saying, Let those men go.

36 And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, The magistrates have sent to let you go: now therefore depart, and [v]go in peace.

37 But Paul said unto them, They have beaten us openly uncondemned,[8] being[w] Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay, verily; [x]but let them come themselves and fetch us out.

38 And the sergeants told these words unto the magistrates: and they [y]feared, when they heard that they were Romans.[9]

39 And[z] they came and besought them, and brought them out, and desired them to depart out of the city.

40 And they went out of the prison, [a]and entered into the house of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Paul preacheth at Thessalonica, 4 where some believe, and others persecute him. 10 He is sent to Berea, and preacheth there. 13 Being persecuted at Thessalonica, 15 he cometh to Athens, and disputeth, and preacheth the living God to them unknown, 34 whereby many are converted unto Christ.

NOW when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to [a]Thessalonica,[1] where was a synagogue of the Jews:

2 And Paul, [b]as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath-days reasoned with them out of the scriptures,

3 Opening[c] and alleging that Christ must needs[2] have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, whom I [3]preach unto you, is Christ.[4]

4 And[d] some of them believed, and [e]consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout [5]Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few.

5 ¶ But[g] the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a commius; but still more justly celebrated in Christian annals as the first city of Europe in which the gospel was preached. Under Turkish misrule it has long been reduced to the condition of a miserable village; but some remnants of Christianity are still found among its few and impoverished inhabitants—a seed of hope when 'the time for favour' shall return. C.

REFLECTIONS.—There is need of wisdom from above to direct us when to condescend to men's weaknesses, and when to assert our privileges, religious or civil. God remarkably owns his gospel for the conversion and edification of men when it is faithfully and rudently preached. And in loving wisdom he directs where to preach it, and where not. Marvellous is it that he has not forbidden nor hindered the preaching of it in Britain, where it has been so peculiarly undervalued, rejected, denied, and detested! God deals with people in very different forms in bringing them to his Son. And some of them, when near to the brink of hell, as well as to the ordinances of grace, are plucked as brands out of the burning. But it is enough if, either in a more kind or a more awful manner, they be deeply convinced of sin and self-insufficiency, and led to receive and rest upon Jesus Christ alone, in all his offices, for salvation, as he is offered in the gospel. And while God, in infinite kindness, becomes at once their God and the God of their seed, they will testify their high regard to the instrument of their conversion, and be deeply concerned for the eternal salvation of their whole family. Satan will turn himself and his agents into very different forms, will become a friend, an angel of light, a witness for Christ, or a selfish, outrageous, persecuting fury, in order to sully the honour and prevent the spread of the gospel. But let them do as they will, Jesus can support, comfort, vindicate, and render victorious his faithful servants. No persecutor is so proud or furious but either the terrors of God can restrain or his grace convert him. And, if possible, Christ's ministers should study to obtain their deliverances with honour as well as with safety; but they must never manifest any selfish resentment. Learn, my soul, carefully to observe providential directions. Always delight in meetings for prayer or religious conference. Never relish dissembled applause, however just. In every distress believe in Jesus Christ; and always rejoice in suffering for his sake.

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 11. More noble seems to imply both higher in rank (see ver. 5), of better education, principles, and feelings—more rational, more candid, more thoughtful, more generously disposed, because more acquainted with the Scriptures, and more anxious to study them. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How justly the Holy Ghost had witnessed that bonds and afflictions awaited the apostle in every city! And it is delightful to see ministers preaching the gospel, regardless of all fatigue, contempt, and persecution, counting nothing too dear for Christ and his cause. It is comely when all the sermon is plainly derived from the oracles of God, and when hearers attentively receive the truth, and examine all they hear by the Scripture. Important is the matter of gospel preaching, even Jesus' person, sufferings, and glory; his dying for our sins, and calling us back from our graves to his last judgment. Powerful is its efficacy in the conversion of multitudes, and even of persons of rank, in places the most wicked. Real converts take delight in owning, holding fellowship with, and caring for the safety and comfort of, faithful ministers; while the offscourings of mankind, and the high pretenders to wisdom, readily unite together against Jesus Christ and his gospel. Unhappy is the place where the mob are both judges and executioners. Very false, but common, is the pretence that Jesus' sole headship over his church interferes with lawful civil authority; and yet many magistrates dread danger chiefly from noted believers.—If ministers be persecuted in one city they may flee to another. But they will everywhere meet with as abounding wickedness, and, in consequence thereof, much contempt and hatred. Yet, the nearer Christ's Word lies to their own hearts, they will the more eagerly seize all opportunities of publishing it. Great prudence is necessary in dealing with self-conceited pretenders to wisdom. Nowhere has the gospel less success than among such. They are often ignorant of the plainest doctrines of nature, of the divine perfections, and of our relation to God as our Maker, Preserver, and Disposer. None are more madly set upon the most senseless idolatry, or more given to waste precious moments in mere trifles. Wonderful is the wisdom of God in permitting them to be so blinded by the god of this world; and great his mercy in calling men to repent, in view of the future judgment, whether they will hear or forbear.

CHAPTER XVIII. Ver. 1. Corinth. One of the most illustrious cities of Greece, situated on the isthmus that joins the Peloponnesus, or Morea, to the continent. It is said to have been founded in the year 1514 B.C., and to have been ATHENS, FROM MARS HILL, SHOWING TEMPLE OF THESEUS AS PAUL SAW IT. [Acts, xvii:16.]—There is but one building in the panorama before us that was standing, as it stands to-day, when Paul looked in the direction you are looking now. That was the temple of Theseus, which you see with rows of Doric columns running all the way round it. It is a source of pleasure to be able to look upon a building now that we know absolutely he saw. We can say this of the temple of Theseus. This temple had been here more than 500 years when Paul came to Athens. The city he saw from Mars Hill was far different from the modern Athens, with its electric lights and railroad cars, which we see to-day from the same sacred height. Athens has now nearly 150,000 inhabitants, and is in all respects a modern city.

MARS HILL, ATHENS, FROM WHICH PAUL ADDRESSED THE SUPERSTITIOUS ATHENIANS. [Acts, xvii:22.]—From the top of Mars Hill, overlooking the classic and beautiful Athens, was preached perhaps the greatest sermon that was ever uttered by the lips of man. It was delivered in the presence of philosophers and from the top of the rock you see in the picture. It was in this place the ancient Athenians were accustomed to hold their court. Standing on Mars Hill, St. Paul was in full view of all the great works of art that made Greece famous. The Parthenon, crowning the Acropolis, was to the east, the temple of Theseus was to the northwest and the rostrum from which Demosthenes thundered was to the southwest. When St. Paul was here all these works of art and historic places had not suffered from the disintegrating effects of time.

pany, and set all the city on an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason,[h] and sought to bring them out to the people.

6 And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, [i]These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also;

7 Whom Jason hath received: and [j]these all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus.

8 And [k]they troubled the people, and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things.

9 And when they had taken security of Jason, and of the other, they let them go.

10 ¶ And[l] the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea:[6] who coming thither, went into the synagogue of the Jews.

11 These were [m]more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that [n]they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so.

12 Therefore[o] many of them believed; also of honourable women which were Greeks, and of men, not a few.

13 ¶ But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, [p]they came thither also, and stirred up the people.

14 And[r] then immediately the brethren sent away Paul, to go as it were to the sea: but Silas and Timotheus abode there still.

15 And they that conducted Paul brought him unto Athens:[7] and receiving a commandment [s]unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him with all speed, they departed.

16 ¶ Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, [t]his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry.[8]

17 Therefore[u] disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them[9] that met with him.

18 Then certain [v]philosophers of the Epicureans,[1] and of the Stoics,[2] encountered him.[3] And some said, What will this babbler[4] say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he [x]preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection.

19 And they took him, and brought him unto [5]Areopagus,[6] saying, May we know what this new[y] doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is?

20 For thou bringest [z]certain strange things to our ears: we would know therefore what these things mean.

21 (For all the Athenians, and strangers which were there, spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing.)

22 ¶ Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars'-hill,[7] and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are [a]too superstitious.[8]

23 For as I passed by, and beheld[9] your [1]devotions,[2] I found an altar with this inscription, TO [3]THE UNKNOWN GOD.[4] Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.

24 God[b] that made the world,[5] and all things therein, seeing that [c]he is Lord of heaven and earth, [d]dwelleth not in temples made with hands;

25 Neither[e] is worshipped with men's hands, as though he needed any thing, seeing he [f]giveth to all life, and breath, and all things;

26 And[g] hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and [h]hath determined the times before appointed,[6] and the bounds of their habitation;

27 That[i] they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not [k]far from every one of us:

28 For [l]in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own [m]poets[7] have said, For we are also his offspring.

29 Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, [n]we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device.[8]

30 And[p] the times of this ignorance God winked at;[9] but now [q]commandeth all men every where to repent:

31 Because [r]he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance[1] unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

32 ¶ And when they heard of the [s]resurrection of the dead, some [t]mocked: and others said, We will hear thee [u]again of this matter.

33 So[v] Paul departed from among them.

34 Howbeit[x] certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite,[2] and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

CHAPTER XVIII.

3 Paul laboureth with his hands, and preacheth at Corinth to the Gentiles. 9 The Lord encourageth him in a vision. 12 He is accused before Gallio the deputy, but is dismissed. 18 Afterwards passing from city to city, he strengtheneth the disciples. 24 Apollos, being more perfectly instructed by Aquila and Priscilla, 28 preacheth Christ with great efficacy.

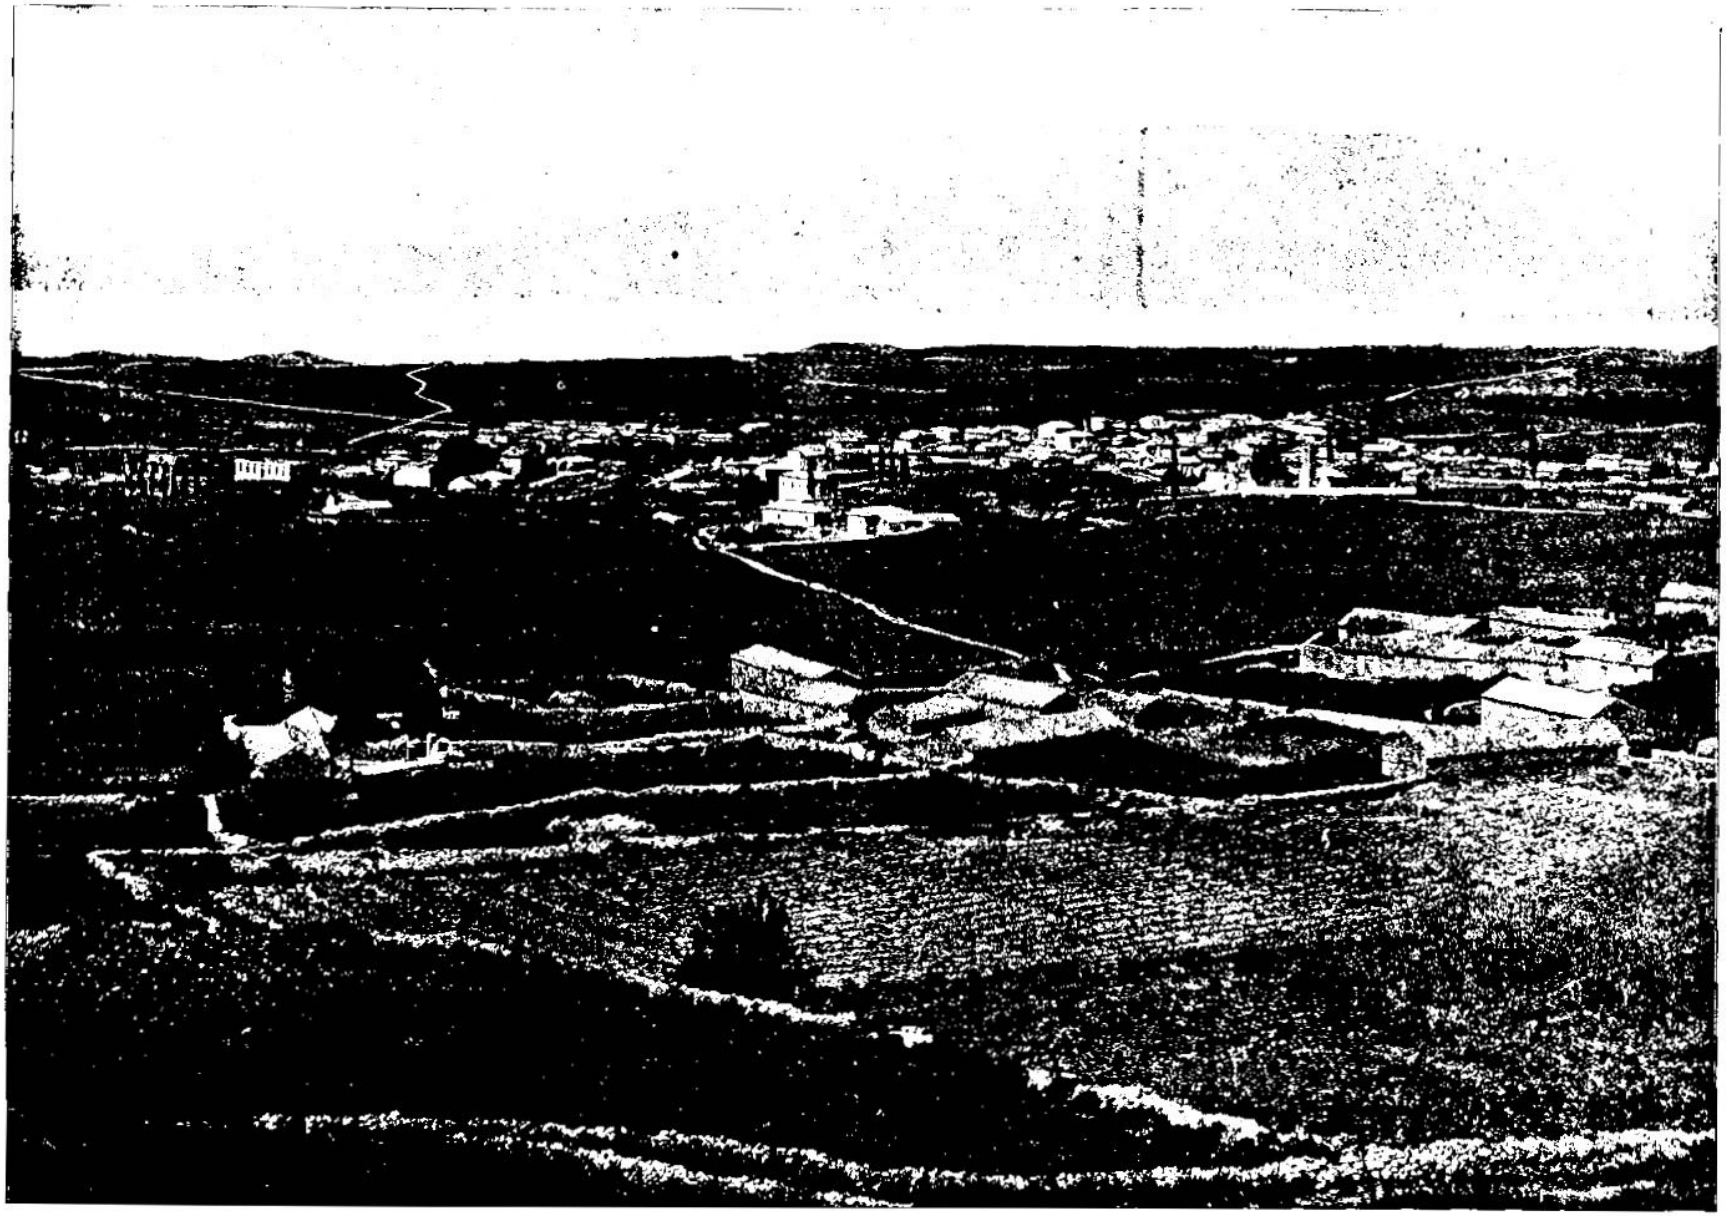
AFTER these things, Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth;[1]



2 And found a certain Jew named [a]Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla; (because that Claudius had governed by native kings from 1360 till 728 B.C., when it came under the government of an annual magistracy. In 146 B.C. it was pillaged and burned by the Roman consul Mummius, but restored by Julius Cæsar in the year 46 B.C., when it became the finest city in Greece. In this condition of prosperity that accompanied, alas! with proportionate luxury and proverbial laxity of morals), it was visited by the apostle Paul about A.D. 54. C.

Ver. 20. Great cities are always very hot-beds of sin; yet in the midst of their corruption God often preserves a 'salt of the earth' by which they are preserved from a total moral putrefaction. Nay, where the whole visible mass of society seems utterly hopeless of reformation, God has often 'much people' secretly 'sighing and commanded all Jews to depart[2] from Rome;) and came unto them.

GENERAL VIEW OF OLD CORINTH. [Acts, xviii:1.]—"After these things Paul departed from Athens and came to Corinth." Corinth was an ancient city of Greece situated on the middle of the Isthmus of Corinth. It received its name from Corinthus, the son of Pelops. The inhabitants were once very powerful. Corinth was burned to the ground by the Romans in 146 B. C. It is said that during the conflagration all the metals which were in the city melted and mixed together and formed that valuable composition of metals known as Corinthian brass. When St. Paul came to this city in A. D. 51 it was perhaps the most corrupt community on earth. There was a famous temple of Venus here then given up to lasciviousness. The city that St. Paul saw was built by Julius Cæsar. It is about five miles from the new city.

3 And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them, and [h]wrought: for by their occupation they were tent-makers.[3]

4 And[c] he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks.

5 And [d]when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in the spirit,[4] and [e]testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ.

6 And [f]when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, [g]he shook his raiment, and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: [h]from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles.

7 And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, one[5] that worshipped God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue.

8 And[i] Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians [k]hearing, believed, and were baptized.

9 ¶ Then[l] spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace:

10 For[m] I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for [n]I have much people in this city.

11 And he continued[6] there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

12 ¶ And when Gallio[7] was the deputy of Achaia,[8] the Jews [p]made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the judgment-seat,

13 Saying, [q]This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law.[9]

14 And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio said unto the Jews, [r]If it were a matter of wrong,[1] or wicked lewdness,[2] O ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with you:

15 But if it be a question of words and names,[3] and of your law, [s]look ye to it; for I will be no judge of such matters.

16 And[t] he drave them from the judgment-seat.

17 Then all the Greeks took Sosthenes,[4] the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the judgment-seat. And Gallio [u]cared for none of those things.

18 ¶ And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and sailed thence into Syria, and with him Priscilla and Aquila; having shorn his head in [v]Cenchrea:[5] for[w] he had a vow.[6]

19 And he came to [x]Ephesus,[7] and left them there: but he himself entered into the synagogue, and [y]reasoned with the Jews.

20 When they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not;

21 But bade them farewell, saying, I must by all means keep this feast[8] that cometh in Jerusalem: but I will return again unto you, [z]if God will. And he sailed from Ephesus.

22 And when he had landed at [a]Cesarea, and gone up, and saluted the church, he went down to [b]Antioch.

23 And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of [c]Galatia and Phrygia in order, [d]strengthening all the disciples.

24 ¶ And[e] a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria,[9] an eloquent man, and [f]mighty in the scriptures, came to Ephesus.

25 This[h] man was instructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in the spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, [i]knowing only the baptism of John.[1]

26 And he began to speak [j]boldly in the synagogue: whom when [k]Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and [l]expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly.

27 And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren [m]wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him: who, when he was come, [n]helped them much which had [o]believed through grace:

28 For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, [p]showing by the scriptures that Jesus was Christ.

[3] Were tent-makers. Paul's trade was not a mean one, as some have supposed. Cilicia, his native country, was famous for the manufacture of tents, and Tarsus, his native city, was the principal seat of that manufacture. Paul's trade was therefore honourable, and he was not ashamed of it. C.

[3] Names. Such as, whether Jesus were or were not to be called "King," which the deputy considered a question of Jewish law, not as an interference with the imperial superiority of Rome. C.

[5] It was customary for Jewish parents in all ranks of life to train their children in trades and handicrafts. Paul was taught tent-making. It is a remarkable fact that tent-making was a staple manufacture of Cilicia, and that Tarsus, his native city, was the principal seat of that manufacture. Paul's trade was therefore honourable, and he was not ashamed of it. C.

[6] Whether Paul or Aquila had made the vow is matter of question. The expositors mostly incline with the Greek tongue are, however, generally agreed in referring it to Aquila. Whether the vow was that of the Nazarite, or some other vow, is unknown, and conjecture is useless. But as the word of God does not condemn it, it must have been some holy resolution. C.

crying for all the abominations that are round about them, and earnestly inquiring, 'What must we do to be saved?' Note, Let this statement of the Spirit, who knows the hearts of all men, and who searches and reveals when he will the deep things of God, encourage every effort for the melioration of society through the preaching of the gospel. It is God's means. It succeeded in licentious Corinth, and has never been unsuccessful wherever it has been employed in faith. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those churches where ministers are so hearty in their work that they will rather labour for their own subsistence than prejudice men against the gospel, or give enemies a handle to reproach them as mercenary! But there is need of divine direction when to condescend and when not. Ministers should take great pains in making known Christ, and persuading men to accept of him as their only Saviour, and in defending the great truths of the gospel, till their hearers manifest themselves incorrigibly wicked and obstinate rejecters of it. And, alas! dreadful is their destruction whose blood faithful ministers stand clear of! But while some despise the gospel to their own undoing, it will become powerful to others, even the most unlikely. His own, whether great or small, shall be ever blessed. If ministers have God's direction, promise, presence, comfort, and protection, they need fear nothing. Success shall crown their labours; yea, even heathens, not very attentive to their duty as magistrates, shall refuse to persecute them. And the more success faithful ministers meet with, they are still the more diligent.—It is comely when old experienced Christians are inclined readily to instruct younger ones. And young preachers, who gladly accept instructions from exercised saints, though of the weaker sex, bid fair to be useful, if not famous, in gathering and edifying the church. There is little hope of such as are too wise to learn. And nothing should preachers more study than to have the Scriptures stored up in their memories and deeply written in their hearts, that all they deliver to others may be plainly marked with the authority of God.

CHAPTER XIX. REFLECTIONS.—Much more clear and glorious is the gospel dispensation which we the upper coasts,[1] came[b] to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples,

2 He said unto them, Have [c]ye received the Holy Ghost[2] since ye believed? And they said unto him, [d]We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.

3 And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, [e]Unto John's baptism.

4 Then said Paul, [f]John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.

5 When they heard this, they were baptized in[h] the name of the Lord Jesus.

6 And[i] when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and [j]prophesied.

7 And all the men were about twelve.

8 ¶ And he went [k]into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing,[3] and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God.

9 But[l] when divers were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil of that [m]way before the multitude, he [n]departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus.[4]

10 And[p] this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in [q]Asia[5] heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks.

11 And[r] God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul:

12 So that from his body were brought unto the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.

13 ¶ Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists,[s] took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We [t]adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth.

14 And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which did so.

15 And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus[u] I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?

16 And[v] the man in whom the evil spirit was, leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded.

18 And many that [b]believed came, and [c]confessed, and showed their deeds.[6]

19 Many of them also [d]which used curious arts[7] brought their books[8] together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.[9]

20 So[e] mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed.

21 ¶ After these things were ended, Paul purposed [f]in the spirit,[1] when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to [g]go to Jerusalem, saying, After I have been there, I [h]must also see Rome.

22 So [i]he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministered unto him, Timotheus and Erastus; but he himself stayed in Asia for a season.

29 And[t] the whole city was filled with confusion: and having caught [u]Gaius and Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they rushed with one accord into the theatre.[5] enjoy than even the ministration of John Baptist. And much better the baptism of the Holy Ghost than that of mere water. But, alas! how many receive the external seals of God's covenant who have no experimental, and very little notional, knowledge of him or his influences! And though baptism is never to be repeated, yet the Spirit is daily to be received. With great boldness and persevering courage ought the gospel to be preached; and dreadful is their fate who put it from them, or attempt to counterfeit its miraculous confirmations. They but fight and labour for the devil that he may reward them with shame and ruin.—But happy are they who are turned to the Lord by a cordial faith and genuine repentance! And hopeful is the case when the peculiar favourites of Satan are made openly to renounce his service, sacrifice their dearest abominations with abhorrence, and remove every temptation of drawing back out of their own and their neighbours' way. How furiously zealous are the most of mankind for a false religion, especially if worldly gain and long custom are on its side. And with such, noise and clamour are invincible arguments for the most blasphemous absurdities. When those are so zealous for the devil, it is much to be lamented that many called Christians have so little concern for the glory of God.—Safe are the persons of God's faithful ministers, since he can make heathens earnest advocates for and prudent protectors of them. Fear of men hinders many from wickedness; but much more wise are they who are prevented from it by serious views of their future account to God.

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 7. Upon the first day of the week

FORUM AND PRISON OF ST. PAUL—EPHESUS. [Acts, xix:26.]—"And it came to pass that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts, came to Ephesus." Ephesus was a famous city in Ionia, built, according to Justin, by the Amazons. Here was the great temple of Diana, the most glorious structure ever applied to the uses of pagan religion. The temple of Diana was four hundred and twenty-five feet long and two hundred feet broad. The roof was supported by one hundred and twenty-seven columns sixty feet high, which had been placed there by so many kings. It took two hundred years to complete the building. This great temple was burnt the night after Alexander the Great was born. But soon the temple was rebuilt with all its former splendor. There is absolutely nothing here now but ruins. In the above picture we have what is left of the Forum and Prison of St. Paul.

31 And certain of the chief of [a]Asia,[7] which were his friends, sent unto him, [b]desiring him that he would not adventure himself into the theatre.

32 Some[c] therefore cried one thing, and some another; for the assembly was confused: and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together.

33 And they drew[8] Alexander[d] out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward.[9] And Alexander [e]beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence[1] unto the people.

34 But when they[2] knew that he was a Jew,[3] all with one voice, about the space of two hours, cried out, [g]Great is Diana of the Ephesians!

35 And when the town-clerk[4] had appeased the people, he said, [h]Ye men of Ephesus, what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of the Ephesians is a worshipper[5] of the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell[6] down from Jupiter?[7]

36 Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and [i]to do nothing rashly.

37 For ye have brought hither these men, which are neither [k]robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess.

38 Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen which are with him, have a matter against any man, the law is open,[8] and there are deputies: let them implead one another.

39 But if ye inquire any thing concerning other matters, it shall be determined in a lawful[9] assembly.

40 For we are in danger to be called in question for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse.

41 And[c] when he had thus spoken, [d]he dismissed the assembly.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Paul goeth to Macedonia. 7 He celebrateth the Lord's supper, and preacheth. 9 Eutychus having fallen down dead, 10 is raised to life. 17 At Miletus he calleth the elders together, telleth them what shall befall to himself, 28 committeth God's flock to them, 29 warneth them of false teachers, 32 commendeth them to God, 36 prayeth with them, and goeth his way.

AND after[a] the uproar was ceased, [b]Paul called unto him the disciples, and embraced them, and [c]departed for to go into Macedonia.

2 And when he had gone over those [1]parts, and [d]had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece,[2]

3 And there abode three months. And when the Jews laid wait for him,[3] as he was about to sail into Syria, he purposed to return through Macedonia.

4 And there accompanied him into Asia, [e]Sopater of Berea; and of the Thessalonians, Aristarchus and Secundus; and [g]Gaius of Derbe, and [h]Timotheus; and of Asia, [i]Tychicus [k]and Trophimus.

5 These going before, tarried for us at [l]Troas.

6 And we sailed away from [1]Philippi[4] after the [m]days of unleavened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five days; where we abode seven days.

7 ¶ And upon the [o]first day of the week, when the disciples came together [p]to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and [q]continued his speech until midnight.

8 And there were many lights in the [r]upper chamber, where they were gathered together.

9 And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into [s]a deep sleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.[5]

10 And Paul went down, [t]and fell on him, and embracing him, said, [u]Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him.

11 When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed.

12 And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

13 ¶ And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos,[6] there intending to take in Paul: for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot.

14 And when he met with us at Assos,[7] we took him in, and came to Mitylene.[8]

15 And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios;[9] and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at [1]Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus.[2]

16 For Paul had determined to [s]sail by

The object of it seems to have been to show that the Jews were not chargeable in any way with this tumult. It would be supposed by the beadles that the Christians were only a sect of the Jews, and the Jews wished to show that they had not been concerned in giving entrance to this tumult, but that it was to be imputed to Paul and his friends.—I.

* This is stated as a fact, not as a mere supposition or belief of those who had not full opportunity of testing the truth.

An evident proof that the primitive Christians observed the first (or Lord's) day, and were also accustomed on that day to assemble themselves for hearing the Word and observing the Lord's supper. C.

Ver. 8. Many lights. For what purpose are the 'lights' mentioned? Partly perhaps to bear record of the perfect visibility of all the acts of Christian worship which the heathen were ready to calumniate, and partly to account for the sleep of Eutychus, from the heat of the room and the exhaustion of the air. C.

Ver. 12. How much more should parents and friends be 'comforted' when they that have fallen asleep in forbidden pleasures, and have fallen 'dead in trespasses and sins,' are restored again to life through the preaching of the Word and the power of the Spirit. C.

Ver. 21. Repentance toward God. Grief for and hatred of sin, not because it has injured ourselves, but because it has offended a holy and merciful God—hence called 'godly sorrow,' 2 Co. 7. 10, whereby the sinner, by 'faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ,' the only Saviour and way to the Father, turns from his sin to God. C.

Ver. 31. Night. For the avoiding of danger and offence, it would appear that the primitive Christians were much accustomed to meet by night; see ver. 8. Poverty, no doubt, also tended to introduce the practice, some being originally poor, others reduced by being outcasts from their friends and proscribed in their trade, others ruined by 'the spoiling of their goods' by the hands of their covetous and unfeeling persecutors. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Christ's providence can carry his servants safe through the wildest uproars, and turn mad outrage into calm tranquillity and peace. Parting with Christian friends whom we expect to see no more on earth ought to be very devout and affectionate. And if murderous enemies lie in wait for us, we may cautiously avoid them. If we honour Christ much, he will honour us with good companions. And if ministers be truly faithful, they will never think they do enough in the service of Christ. They may be often wearied with, but never weary of, their work. Christians who fervently love Christ will make his Sabbath and supper their delight. And it is very unlike a Christian to shorten the one by unnecessary sloth and sleep, and almost forget the other by unfrequency. How criminal and dangerous is it, even at mid-day, to sleep at the worship of God! What if he whom we affront as unworthy of our notice he whom we contemn as unworthy to be embraced—should seize the moment, and awaken us in eternal woe! Surely then every sermon should be heard, every sacrament received, every prayer poured forth, and every farewell of friends taken, as on the brink of eternity, and as before the awful tribunal. Infinite is the importance of the ministerial work. With deep humility, earnest care, holy fear, self-denial, and candid fidelity, all the duties of it ought to be performed. The truths, the honour of Jesus Christ, and the salvation of immortal souls, are all at stake. And both ministers and people

VATHY, ISLAND OF SAMOS. [Acts, xx:15.]—"And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios, and the next day we arrived at Samos." Samos is an island in the Ægean Sea, on the coast of Asia Minor. The island is about 87 miles in circumference, and is known as the birthplace of Pythagoras. The people of Samos assisted the Greeks against the Persians when Xerxes invaded Europe. The people of the island have always been under the influence of Grecian ideas, and while to-day ruled by the Sultan of Turkey they are loyal in thought and feeling to Greece. This is not surprising, for the inhabitants of this island share the glory that belongs to Greece because of her achievements in literature, art and war in ancient times. The people here are seemingly prosperous.

Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia; for he hasted, if it were possible for him, to be at Jerusalem the [z]day of Pentecost.

17 ¶ And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders[3] of the church.[4]

18 And when they were come to him, he said unto them, [y]Ye know, from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons,

19 Serving[x] the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations,[5] which befell me by the lying in wait of the Jews:

20 And [w]how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have showed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house,

21 Testifying[b] both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

22 And now, behold, [c]I go bound in the spirit[6] unto Jerusalem, [d]not knowing the things that shall befall me there:

23 Save[e] that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me.[7]

24 But[g] none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that [h]I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which [i]I have received of the Lord Jesus, [j]to testify the [k]gospel of the grace of God.

25 And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the [l]kingdom of God, shall see my face no more.

26 Wherefore[m] I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men.

27 For[o] I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God.

28 Take[p] heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers,[8] to feed the church of God,[9] which [q]he hath purchased with his own blood.[1]

29 For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous [r]wolves enter in among you, not sparing[s] the flock.

30 Also[t] of your ownselves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them.

31 Therefore[u] watch, and remember, that [v]by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears.

The fact, however, that the apostle did not, upon other occasions, act by his own impulse, but by the guidance of the Holy Spirit, seems to refer this binding to the same power (see ch. 16. 6, 7) which now commanded him to go to Jerusalem, but left him uninformed of the result, further than the general prophecies of 'bonds and imprisonments' declared to him 'in every city' through which he had passed.—C.

CHAPTER XXI. REFLECTIONS.—It is delightful to travel about under the special direction and protection of Providence, and in every place to have edifying converse with Christian friends concerning the great things which God has done for us and for his church. And it is comely for Christians to meet and part with cordial affection and solemn prayer. No wonder that loving Christians are averse to think of the sufferings or death of their faithful and useful ministers. But glorious is the fortitude to be ready to suffer anything for Christ, and to be entirely resigned to his will; and yet the tender affections of friends sometimes occasion a greater trial than the fury of enemies.—Entangling

PANORAMA OF JERUSALEM. [ACTS, xxi: 15.]—"And after those days we took up our carriages and went to Jerusalem."—Acts, xxi: 15. Paul went up to Jerusalem at this time to see the Elders, and to give them some account of his ministry among the Gentiles. As he went up from the seacoast it is probable that he entered through the gate in the western wall. In the above view we are looking at Jerusalem from the Mount of Olives, which is to the east of the city. We see the extreme northern part of the city. The wall which begins at the extreme left of the view is above the golden gate, hence the site of the temple does not appear. It is about two miles and a half all round the walls of Jerusalem. The city is entered by about seven gates. These were formerly closed at night, but for the last few years they are kept open night and day.

and we entered into the house of [f]Philip the evangelist,[1] which was one of the seven; and abode with him.

9 And the same man had four daughters, virgins, [h]which did prophesy.

10 ¶ And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet, named [i]Agabus.

11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, [k]Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

12 And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, [l]besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.

13 Then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? [m]for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.

14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, [n]The will of the Lord be done.

15 And after those days we took up our carriages,[2] and went up to Jerusalem.

16 There[r] went with us also certain of the disciples of [o]Cesarea, and brought with them one Mnason of [p]Cyprus, an [q]old disciple, with whom we should lodge.

17 ¶ And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us [s]gladly.

18 And the day following Paul went in with us unto [t]James; and all the elders were present.

19 And when he had saluted them, [u]he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry.

20 And when they heard it, they [v]glorified the Lord; and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how[a] many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all [b]zealous of the law:

21 And they are informed[3] of thee, [c]that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs.

22 What is it therefore? [d]the multitude must needs come together: for they will hear that thou art come.

23 Do therefore this that we say to thee: We[e] have four men which have a vow[4] on them;

24 Them take, and purify[5] thyself with them, and be at charges with them, that they may shave their heads: and all may know that those things, whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing; but that [g]thou thyself also walkest orderly, and keepest the law.

25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, [h]we have written, and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication.

26 Then[i] Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them, entered into the temple, to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them.

27 ¶ And when the seven days were almost ended, [k]the Jews which were of Asia,[6] when they saw him in the temple, [l]stirred up all the people, and laid hands on him,

28 Crying out, Men of Israel, help: this is the man that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place; and further, brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.

29 (For they had seen before with him, in the city, [m]Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.)

30 And[o] all the city was moved, and the people ran together: and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple: and forthwith the doors were shut.[7]

31 And [p]as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jerusalem was in an uproar:

32 Who[q] immediately took soldiers and centurions, and ran down unto them: and when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul.

33 Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and commanded him to be [r]bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done.

34 And[s] some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the [t]castle.[8]

35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers, for the [u]violence of the people.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, [v]Away with him!

37 ¶ And as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek?

38 Art not thou[9] that Egyptian,[1] which be-

1 It appears from Josephus (Antiq. b. xx. and Jewish Wars, b. ii.) that, in the first or second year of Nero, and when Felix was procurator of Judea, a certain Egyptian persuaded a multitude to follow him to the Mount of Olives, in which he promised a miraculous overthrow of the walls of Jerusalem. But Felix attacked them, slew 400, took 200 prisoners, and put the Egyptian to flight. The chief captain imagined that in Paul he had found the Egyptian returned to foment new disturbances, as he had done two or three years before. So slow to inquiry—so ready to misconception.—C.

weaknesses and strong prejudices remain with real believers. And it is difficult to judge how far we ought to condescend to their infirmity, or to appear zealous for our Christian liberty. It is indeed needless to condescend to ignorant cavillers or obstinate ungodly bigots, who will at any rate rage against us as the servants of Christ. Nothing can be expected in their popular tumults but violence and fury, confusion and injustice. But seasonably God interposes for the preservation of his servants from wicked and unreasonable men, and gives them opportunities to vindicate themselves, plead for the Redeemer, and spread abroad his glorious gospel.

CHAPTER XXII. REFLECTIONS.—With great prudence, temper, courage, and faithfulness, ought the cause of Christ to be maintained against its most malicious opposers.—Blind bigots are in general inflamed against it and its candid professors with the most outrageous and murderous zeal.—But God's grace strangely changes the most furious and obstinate tempers. And yet men often have gospel light shining all around them, and are never thereby converted to Christ or instructed in his truth.—Even when conversion is begun

RIVER ROAD, DAMASCUS. [Acts, xxii:5.]—No one can ever forget even a short sojourn in Damascus. It is created by the River Abana, as completely as Egypt is created by the Nile. Take away the Abana river and Damascus would simply become a part of the great desert which stretches from the Lebanon mountains to Palmyra. The Abana river, made up of melted snow from the Lebanon mountains, rushes through a gorge in the mountains about three miles above the city, and is distributed through canals to every part of Damascus. It also makes productive the surrounding country for a circuit of 25 miles. After thus refreshing and replenishing a small area in the desert, the Abana loses itself in the lakes of the meadow about 25 miles from the city and finally sinks out of sight in the burning plains of Syria.

THE VALLEY OF THE KEDRON—THE MOST FAMOUS VALLEY IN THE WORLD. [Acts, xxii:20.]—"And when the blood of the Martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him." Stephen was stoned to death near St. Stephen's gate, and this gate opens out into the Valley of the Kedron. The Valley of the Kedron is the most famous valley in the world, situated as it is between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives. Here are the graves of kings and prophets. Here David walked, and Isaiah meditated and Jeremiah wailed. Here Christ prayed, and here the Garden of Gethsemane bears its nurslings of the sky, the beautiful flowers, to remind us that though Christ suffered and died, He lives again in the grace and beauty and tenderness of the world.

fore these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?

39 But Paul said, [z]I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city:[2] and, I beseech thee, [a]suffer me to speak unto the people.

40 And when he had given him license, Paul stood on the stairs, and [b]beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue,[3] saying,

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Paul declareth at large how he was converted to the faith, 17 and called to his apostleship. 22 At the very mentioning of the Gentiles, the people exclaim on him. 24 He would have been scourged, 25 but claiming the privilege of a Roman, he escapeth.

MEN, [c]brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence which I make now unto you.

2 (And when they heard that he [b]spake in the Hebrew[1] tongue to them, they kept the more silence: and he saith,)

3 I [c]am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city, [d]at the feet[2] of Gamaliel, and taught according[e] to the perfect manner[3] of the law of the fathers, and was zealous toward God, as ye all are this day.

4 And[g] I persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women.

5 As[h] also the high-priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders: from whom also I received letters unto the brethren,[4] and went to Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished.

6 And[i] it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.

7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

9 And[l] they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not[5] the voice[6] of him that spake to me.

10 And[k] I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

11 And [l]when I could not see for the glory of that light, [l]being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.[7]

12 And[n] one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, [n]having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there,

13 Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him.

14 And he said, [p]The God of our fathers [q]hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and [r]see that [s]Just One, and shouldest hear the [t]voice of his mouth.

15 For thou shalt be [u]his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard.

16 And now, why tarriest thou? [v]arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins,[8] calling on the name of the Lord.

17 And it came to pass, that [z]when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a [y]trance;

18 And [z]saw him saying unto me, [a]Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me.

19 And I said, Lord, they know [b]that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee:

20 And[c] when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.

21 And he said unto me, Depart: for [d]I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

22 ¶ And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, [e]Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he should live.

23 And as they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air,

24 The[g] chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade [h]that he should be examined[9] by scourging; that he might know[1] wherefore they cried so against him.

25 ¶ And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, [i]Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?

26 When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, [j]Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman.

in a miraculous manner, God leads to the ordinary means of his own appointment to carry it on, and render such persons acquainted with his will and their work. And while baptism solemnly admits them into his church, effectual fervent prayer recommends them to God. – When notorious sinners are converted, their former opposition to Christ sticks fast in their remembrance, and lies heavy on their heart; and sometimes God, in merciful chastisement, returns it on their head. But if Jesus install ministers in their office, he will take care of them, and direct their course where they shall be truly successful, when others would have rejected them. And wonderful is the wisdom of his grace in accepting the most distant and unlikely, while others wilfully harden themselves in their sins. – Great is their wickedness who are enraged at the extending of God's redeeming kindness, even to the most despicable and infamous sinners, and who shut their eyes against the most evident appearances of God's Word and Spirit. – Seasonably he raises up protectors where his servants are in imminent danger. – And for their own safety saints ought to insist on their civil privileges, that, while they stand up for his truth, God may own them, and give them further opportunities of defending his and their righteous cause.

CHAPTER XXIII. REFLECTIONS. – Happy are they who can appeal to God, that, by his grace, they have lived soberly, righteously, and godly before him.

27 Then the chief captain came, and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea.

28 And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born.[2]

29 Then straightway they departed from him which should have examined him:[3] and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and because he had bound him.

30 ¶ On the morrow, [k]because he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and [l]commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 As Paul pleadeth his cause, 2 Ananias commandeth them to smite him. 7 Dissension among his accusers. 11 God encouraqeth him. 14 The Jews' laying wait for Paul 20 is declared unto the chief captain. 27 He sendeth him to Felix the governor.

AND Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, [a]Men and brethren, [b]I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.[1]

2 And the high-priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him [c]to smite him on the mouth.

3 Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee,[2] thou [d]whited wall: for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and [e]commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?

4 And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high-priest?

5 Then said Paul, I wist not,[3] brethren, that he was the high-priest: for it is written, [f]Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.

6 ¶ But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I [h]am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.

7 And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided.

8 For[i] the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both.

9 And there arose a great cry: and the scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, [j]We find no evil in this man: but[k] if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, let us not fight against God.

10 ¶ And when there arose a great dissension, the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle.

11 And[l] the night following, the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome.

12 ¶ And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, [m]and bound themselves under a curse,[4] saying that they would neither eat nor drink [n]till they had killed Paul.

13 And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy.

14 And they came to the [o]chief priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul.

15 Now[5] therefore ye,[6] with the council, signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you to-morrow, as though ye would inquire something more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever he come near, are [p]ready to kill him.

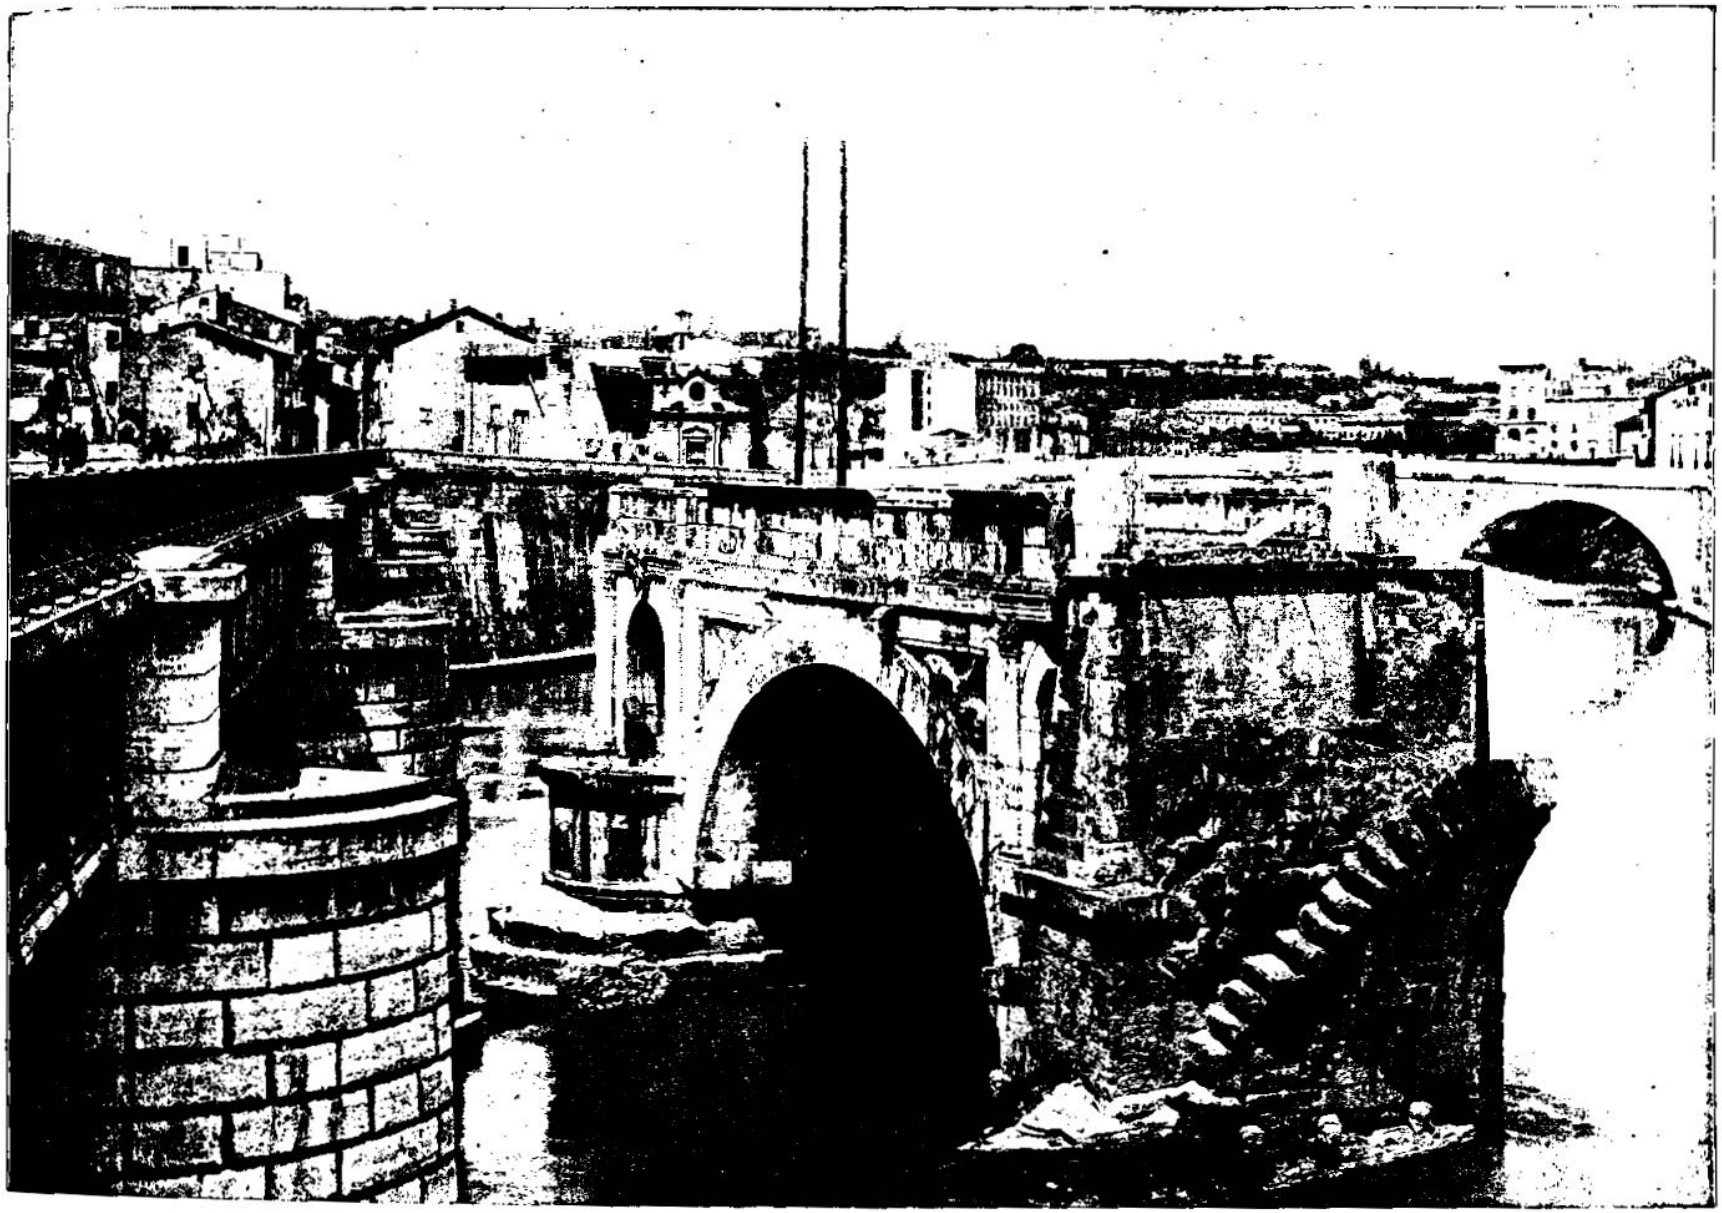
16 And[q] when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul.

17 Then[r] Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain; for he hath a certain thing to tell him.

18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the [s]prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee.

19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me?

20 And he said, [t]The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to-morrow into the council, as though they would inquire somewhat of him more perfectly.



21 But[u] do not thou yield unto them: for [v]there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath,[6] that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee.

22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast showed these things to me.

23 ¶ And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Cesarea,[7] and horsemen threescore and ten,

And it is base in judges to abuse any honest man for avowing his own integrity. He who knows their heart and way will vindicate his faithful servants, to the confusion of their enemies, however great; and proud persecutors will quickly feel themselves unable to stand before the storm of his judgments.—In ordinary cases we must not speak evil of our rulers whom we know and own as such.—But we may join the wisdom of the serpent with the simplicity of the dove. We may divide the counsels of our enemies, though we may not revile their persons; and by maintaining some particular article of truth, set one part of them against another. If one party be enraged, the other will probably favour us.—If we be upright followers of that which is good, God can make the secular powers to protect us, and can overrule our dangerous circumstances to gain their favour. And if Jesus assure us of his presence and support, and of our future useful-

ANCIENT BRIDGE, ROME [Acts, xxiii:11.]—"For as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also in Rome." We give as an illustration of Rome the arch of an old bridge that is interesting in this connection, because we see it now exactly as St. Paul saw it when in Rome. This arch, which is just above the new bridge you see, was built here 181 B. C. St. Paul was in Rome two years upon his first visit; and he unquestionably often crossed the very bridge this old arch helped to bear up. It is almost impossible for an American, accustomed to seeing everything new, to appreciate the great age of things connected with the city of Cicero and Cæsar. Many of the oldest structures in Rome are built of brick, but they do not seem to crumble or decay; they last as well as stone.

and spearmen[8] two hundred, at the third hour of the night;

24 And provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor.

25 And he wrote a letter after this manner:

26 Claudius Lysias unto the most excellent governor [t]Felix[1] sendeth greeting.

27 This[u] man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman.

28 And when I would have known the cause wherefore they accused him, [v]I brought him forth into their council:

29 Whom I perceived to be accused of [w]questions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds.

30 And[d] when it was told me, how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had against him. Farewell.

31 Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris.[2]

32 On the morrow they left the horsemen to go with him, and returned to the castle:

33 Who, when they came to Cesarea,[3] and delivered the [x]epistle to the governor, presented Paul also before him.

34 And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was. And when he understood that he was of Cilicia;[4]

35 I will hear thee, said he, [y]when thine accusers are also come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herod's judgment-hall.[5]

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Paul being accused by Tertullus the orator, 10 answereth for his life and doctrine. 24 He preacheth Christ to the governor and his wife. 26 The governor hopeth for a bribe, but in vain. 27 At last, going out of his office, he leaveth Paul in prison.

AND after[a] five days, Ananias the high-priest descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus,[1] who [b]informed the governor against Paul.

2 And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, [c]Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence,

3 We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness.

4 Notwithstanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words.

5 For[d] we have found this man a pestilent fellow,[2] and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes:

6 Who[e] also hath gone about to profane the temple: whom we took, and would have judged according to our law.

7 But[g] the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands,

8 Commanding[h] his accusers to come unto thee: by examining of whom[3] thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things whereof we accuse him.

9 And[i] the Jews also assented, saying that these things were so.

10 ¶ Then Paul, after that the governor had [k]beckoned unto him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years[4] a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully [l]answer for myself:

11 Because[l] that thou mayest understand that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem for to worship.

12 And[m] they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city:

13 Neither[o] can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me.

14 But this I confess unto thee, [p]that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers,[5] believing[q] all things which are written in the law and in the prophets;

15 And[r] have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust.[6]

16 And[s] herein[7] do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men.

17 Now after many years,[8] I came to bring [t]alms to my nation, and offerings.

18 Whereupon[u] certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult:

But is it not much more probable, that as a pleader, he employs the term 'we' as a mere legal phrase, whereby the advocate is decently identified with his client? For it is by no means likely that the Jewish priests, who were deeply acquainted with the ways and feelings of the world, would present before their heathen governor a proselyte to Judaism, whom he, as a heathen, would consider at once both an apostate and a fool.—C.

[*] The desperate measures of the Jews no doubt confirmed Lysias in his determination to protect his prisoner; but, by keeping him at Jerusalem, insurrections might have been excited, and some opportunity might have been afforded to his vigilant enemies of murdering him. He therefore resolved to send him to Felix the Roman governor, who resided at Cæsarea, which is computed to have been about seventy miles from Jerusalem. The band of Roman soldiers appointed to escort him, consisting of two hundred regularly soldiers, two hundred light-armed soldiers, and seventy horsemen, might have sufficed for especially travelling at a season of the Jews, but to prevent an ambush, they were ordered to set out about three hours after sunset, that they might be out of the reach of the zealots before morning. This prudent precaution was accompanied by acts equally humane. Paul was not required to walk with the soldiers, who had been accustomed to long and speedy marches, but they were ordered to provide horses, mules or horses, changing them when necessary, that he might be conducted safely & conveniently to Cæsarea.—C.

ness, it should entirely remove all our disquieting fears, let our enemies do what they will.—Abandoned are those miscreants, and especially those judges, who, contrary to the law of nature or nations, combine to murder such as they cannot convict of any crime. No pretence of religion can sanctify, but greatly aggravates, such horrible villainy. To bind ourselves under a curse to work iniquity, is but to insnare our souls into fearful damnation.—But watchfully God marks the most secret plots of his people's enemies. Easily he discovers and disappoints them in favour of his faithful servants. And he will avenge wickedness on the wicked, and will even turn their intended mischiefs to the good of his servants, and for promoting their further usefulness in the world.

CHAPTER XXIV. REFLECTIONS.—Profane clergymen and abandoned lawyers stick at nothing to gain their own vile ends. Falsehood, flattery, and slander go hand in hand. The purest innocence will not protect men from the most abominable aspersions; and the most infamous characters will not render some men ashamed of flattery. Spiteful malice generally represents faithful ministers as enemies to the state. And as it is in the power of every villain to propagate falsehood, and lay the heaviest charges against the noblest characters, it becomes the innocent meekly to vindicate themselves and their doctrines from invidious reproach, and that with due deference to the magistrates who give them an opportunity. But in vindicating ourselves it becomes us to own the truths of God, particularly the general resurrection of the dead, in which ruin.—But watchfully God marks the most secret plots of his people's enemies. Easily he discovers and disappoints them in favor of his faithful servants. And he will return wickedness on the wicked, and 21 Except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them, [z]Touching the resurrection of the dead, I am called in question by you this day.

22 ¶ And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge[9] of that way, he deferred them, and said, When [y]Lysias the chief captain shall come down, I [z]will know the uttermost of your matter.

23 And[a] he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him.

24 ¶ And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla,[1] which was a Jewess, he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the [b]faith in Christ.

25 And as he reasoned of [c]righteousness, [d]temperance,[2] and [e]judgment to come,[3] Felix trembled,[f] and answered, [h]Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season I will call for thee.

26 ¶ He[i] hoped also that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him: wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.[4]

27 But after two years, Porcius Festus came into Felix' room: and Felix, [j]willing to show the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.[5]

2 The Jews accuse Paul before Festus. 8 He answereth for himself, 11 and appealeth unto Cæsar. 14 Afterwards Festus openeth his matter to king Agrippa, 23 and he is brought forth. 25 Festus cleareth him to have done nothing worthy of death.

NOW when Festus was come into the province, after three days he ascended from Cesarea to Jerusalem.

2 Then[a] the high-priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him,

3 And desired favour against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, [b]laying wait in the way to kill him.[1]

4 But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Cesarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither.

5 Let[c] them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him.

6 And when he had tarried among them more than ten days,[2] he went down unto Cesarea; and the next day, sitting on the judgment-seat, commanded Paul to be brought.

9 How things seem more unlikely than that a man of the dispositions and habits of Felix should become an accomplished adept in Jewish jurisprudence and theology. By his 'more perfect knowledge of that way' cannot well, therefore, be understood any extensive knowledge of Judaism derived from his long residence in Cesarea. Neither could he have learned much of Christianity from all that Paul had yet said; though by 'that way,' some understand the knowledge of Christianity he had acquired from Paul's expository defence. Is it not better to render the passage thus—But when Felix had heard these things, he adjourned the cause, saying, 'When I shall have acquired a more perfect knowledge of that way (which you, the Jews, condemn), and you, Paul, justify, and when Lysias the tribune shall have come down, I shall decide upon your cause.'—C.

It is said of Albinus, who, at a later period, was governor of Judæa, that he encouraged bribery to such an extent, that no malefactors remained in prison, except such as were too poor to purchase their liberty. Paul was most unjustly imprisoned; he was, without a shadow of reason, detained two years, yet his Christian principles forbade his using any such means for securing his liberation.—P.

3 Festus was a just man. He was anxious on the one hand to act upright as a Roman magistrate, and yet, on the other, as far as possible to gain favour with those over whom he was so recently placed. He therefore asked Paul whether he was willing to be tried at Jerusalem under his own immediate presidency, but yet according to Jewish law. Had Paul consented the sentence would have been final. But Paul, though not afraid of a fair trial, knew well that the Jews would attempt his life by treachery. He, therefore, exercised his right to decline the proposition's offer, and appealed to Rome.—P.

7 And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, [g]and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove.

8 ¶ While he answered for himself, [o]Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended any thing at all.

9 But Festus, [q]willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said, Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?[3]

10 Then said Paul, I stand at Cæsar's judgment-seat, where I ought to be judged: [4] to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest.

11 For[k] if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, [l]no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal[5] unto Cæsar.

12 Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? [m]unto Cæsar shalt thou go.

13 ¶ And after certain days, king [6]Agrippa and Bernice[7] came unto Cesarea, to salute Festus.

17 Therefore,[o] when they were come hither, without any delay on the morrow I sat on the judgment-seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth.

19 But[y] had certain questions against him of their own superstition,[8] and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.

offence towards God and towards men. And it is very shameful when infamous heathens manifest more regard to common equity, and more awe of God's truth, than high-flown professors.—Amazing is the power of divine truth. Uttered by a prisoner, it makes a wicked heathen judge to tremble, though his wife, an abandoned Jewish professor, feels it not. But if sharp convictions be stifled, the love of this world, and the deceitfulness of sin, ordinarily prevent their return.

HOUSE OF TIBERIUS, ROME. [Acts, xxv:21.]—Tiberius was Emperor of Rome from A. D. 14 to A. D. 37. His house on the Palatine hill helped to form the manifold and massive series of structures which all together constituted the palaces of the Cæsars. When Tiberius ascended the throne of Rome, Christ was ten years old, and was crucified just a few years before Tiberius died. His house on the Palatine is built of brick, and is one of the ruins that inspired a part of Byron's celebrated poem, "Childe Harold." Tiberius was the Roman emperor who from his resort near the city of Pompeii wrote to the Roman Senate the despairing words: "May all the gods and goddesses damn me a thousand times worse than I am damned, if I know what to write to you." All the emperors of Rome were called Cæsar. The emperor referred to in Acts xxv:21 is Nero.

manded him to be kept till I might send him to Cæsar.

22 Then Agrippa said unto Festus, [1]I would also hear the man myself. To-morrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.

23 ¶ And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with [2]great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Festus' commandment [3]Paul was brought forth.

24 And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom [4]all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying that [5]he ought not to live any longer.

25 But when [6]I found that he had committed nothing[a] worthy of death, and that he himself hath [7]appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him.

26 Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord.[8] Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, [9]and specially before thee, O king Agrippa, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write.[4]

27 For [10]it seemeth to me unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.

CHAPTER XXVI.

2 Paul, in the presence of Agrippa, declareth his life from his childhood, 12 and how miraculously he was converted, and called to his apostleship. 24 Festus chargeth him to be mad, whereunto he answereth modestly. 28 Agrippa is almost persuaded to be a Christian. 31 The whole company pronounce him innocent.

THE Agrippa said unto Paul, [a]Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul stretched[b] forth the hand, and answered for himself:

[1] With great oratorical skill the apostle here connects the fundamental principles of the Pharisees with the true doctrine of the Messiah. His object is to show that as a true Pharisee he must believe the Old Testament promises, and believing them he must believe in Jesus. F.—By 'the hope of the promise' some understand the hope of the resurrection of the dead; but as Messiah, and not the resurrection, was the great object of revelation and promise, it seems more natural to understand the apostle as speaking of 'the hope' of a Saviour first, and of the resurrection to life and glory through him.—C.

[2] Though Paul was not a member of the council, it is most probable he had permission from Jerusalem that demonstrated his fitness for an appointment to Damascus, ver. 12, and that the 'giving of his voice' was not merely joining in the popular cry against the Christians, but giving his official testimony (such as European

Many who have been once terrified by convictions die slaves to their lusts. And a sinful desire to please men makes many, to no purpose, act contrary to their own conscience, and injure the people of God.

CHAPTER XXV. REFLECTIONS.—No length of time can wear out, or repeated disappointments subdue, inveterate malice against Christ and his servants: no sentence is so unjust but it will insist upon it; no murder so horrid but it will attempt it.—By secret springs God sometimes, for the preservation of his servants, restrains the most easy and selfish compliance of judges. And when men prudently insist on their just rights, his providence overrules all for the accomplishment of his promises. But it is hard when a righteous cause must be referred from those who enjoy divine revelation to barbarous and blood-thirsty heathens. And it is shameful when a man can scarcely get a fair hearing before he be condemned. Alas! how ignorant and unconcerned are many great men with respect to the one thing needful! Yea, many have the means of instruction always near, and never profit by them. And multitudes are eternally lost for making the gospel an object of mere curiosity.—The faithful followers and ministers of Christ easily stand clear of being enemies to the peace and order of civil societies. And judges ought to be very tender and exact in representing the case of the accused.

CHAPTER XXVI. Ver. 14. Pricks. Κέντρα may be rendered 'goads,' but more correctly 'military spurs.' The figure is taken from a horse whose 'obstinacy of temper resists the spurs' of his rider.—Note, In ch. 8. 7 it is said his fellow-travellers 'stood speechless:' here it is said, 'we were all fallen to the earth.' True: but the passages present neither difficulty nor contradiction. Either Paul, who heard and understood the words spoken, fell down first, while his companions, who merely heard the sound, stood for a time, and afterwards fell down: or they all fell down together; and his fellow-travellers, who were merely affrighted with the suddenness of the light, but not conscience-stricken by the accusation, rose first and 'stood:' while Paul, whose conscience was awakened to a deep sense of his guilt, remained prostrate upon the ground, in earnest prayer for mercy. C.

Ver. 23. That he should be the first that should rise from the dead. New, from 2 Ki. 13. 21; Mat. 9. 25; Lu. 7. 15; Jn. 11. 43, it appears that several had risen from the dead previously to the resurrection of Jesus. How therefore may these facts be reconciled with Paul's statement? Without having recourse to the doctrine that as he was 'the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world,' in the purpose of God, the prophecies, the promises, and the types—so, in like purpose, prophecy, promise, and types (see Le. 14. 6, 7; 16. 22), was he, the Saviour, raised from the dead—the difficulty may be solved by a more literal translation: to wit, 'that he should be chief-head over all things to the church, after his resurrection from the dead.' C.

Ver. 28. Almost thou persuadest me. Upon that fatal rock 'almost,' how many thousands have suffered shipwreck! O, my soul! why not 'altogether' persuaded? Hast thou not need of a Saviour? Is not Jesus such a Saviour as thou needest? What more evidence of his mission, grace, or power can reason suggest or demand? Halt then no longer between two opinions, but give thyself wholly to the Lord! 2 Co. 8. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Jesus remarkably fulfils his promise in enabling his servants to speak when brought before rulers and kings for his sake. And it is delightful to see the cause of Christ defended with all the grace and faithfulness of a Christian, and yet all the good manners of a courtier. It is a high honour to be chargeable with nothing but an avowed dependence on God's promises, and belief of his performances, relative to the resurrection of Christ, and the eternal life of believers through him, and the general judgment of all by him.—But dreadful is their enmity against Christ who think his followers deserve everything cruel and barbarous for holding the fundamental truths of the gospel. Yea, devilish is their temper who can gratify themselves by forcing them, contrary to their conscience, to blaspheme their Saviour. And very distressing is it, though candid, to call to mind such things in our conduct. Amazing is that grace which changes such monsters into distinguished saints and eminent preachers, which honours them as noted instruments in winning multitudes to Christ, and preserves and protects them long in that honourable work. And happy are those ministers that make God's Word the standard of all their ministrations, in matter, manner, and end.—Dreadful is the condition in which the gospel and Spirit of Christ find sinful men; and marvellous the change they make, the infinite and everlasting blessings they confer, and the happy end to which they conduct. Alas! that these should ever be esteemed madness! that many who hear the gospel should be no more than almost Christians, and never experience the power and pleasures of religion! But it is delightful when Christians wish better to others than to themselves, and make even those who hate their cause avow their innocence.

CHAPTER XXVII. Ver. 16. We had much work to come by the boat. The boat, among the ancient navigators, was generally towed after the ship; for before the discovery of the mariner's compass, navigation being merely coasting, it was important to have the boat always ready for communicating with the shore. The storm being now high, they found great difficulty in getting their boat on board. C.

FALLS OF THE ABANA, DAMASCUS. [Acts, xxvi.20.]—What a refreshing and lovely picture! So thought the writer. The soft, invigorating air was coming in gentle breezes from the top of the Lebanon mountains, lifting their snow-covered heads to the clouds in full view. The birds were singing in the groves of black walnut and poplar, which thickly shaded the ground on the right and on the left, while over the rock the clear, sparkling waters of the River of Damascus fell in spray to gladden the hearts of the flowers which grew in profuse abundance at the bottom of the falls. In that country, where the sun shines so hot, and where water is so rare, the waterfall represented by the picture is a perpetual benediction.

light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me.

14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in [g]the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

15 And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest.

16 But[r] rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, [s]to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear[6] unto thee;

17 Delivering[t] thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee,

18 To[u] open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and [v]from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive [w]forgiveness of sins, and [x]inheritance among them which are [y]sanctified by faith that is in me.

19 Whereupon, O king Agrippa, [z]I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision:

20 But[b] showed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, [c]that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.

21 For these causes [d]the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.[7]

22 Having therefore [e]obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, [f]witnessing both to small and great, saying [h]none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come:[8]

23 That[i] Christ should suffer, and that he should be [j]the first that should rise from the dead, and should [k]show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

24 ¶ And as he thus spake for himself, [l]Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad.

25 But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness.

26 For [m]the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely: for I am persuaded that none of these things are [9]hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner.

27 King Agrippa, believest thou [o]the prophets? I know that thou believest.

28 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, [p]Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.

29 And Paul said, [q]I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these [r]bonds.[1]

30 ¶ And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them:

31 And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, This man [s]doeth nothing worthy of death or of bonds.

32 Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty,[2] if he had not [t]appealed unto Cæsar.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 Paul, shipping toward Rome, 10 foretelleth of the danger of the voyage, 11 but is not believed. 14 They are tossed to and fro with tempest, 41 and suffer shipwreck, 22, 34, 44 yet all come safe to land.

AND, when it was [a]determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius, a centurion[1] of Augustus' band.

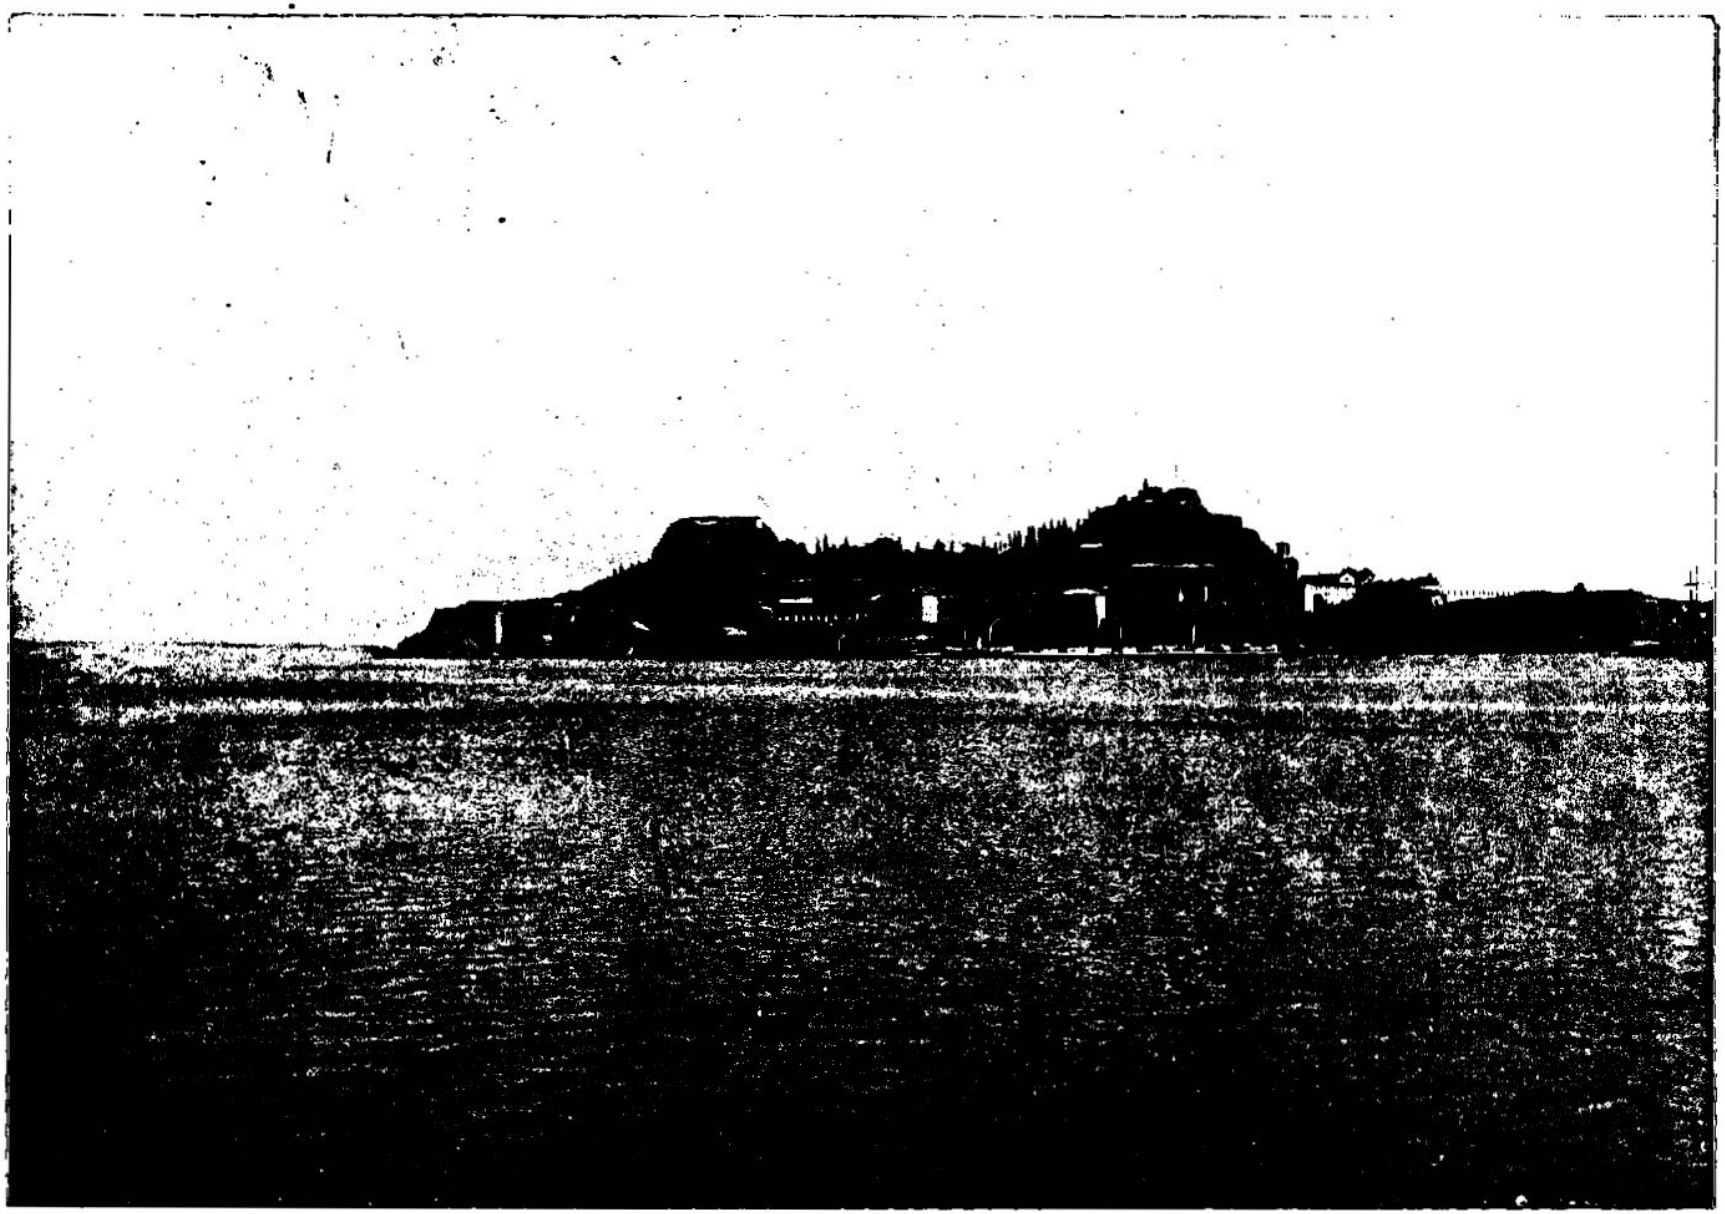
2 And entering into a ship of [2]Adramyttium, we launched, meaning [b]to sail by the coasts of Asia; one [c]Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us.

3 And the next day we touched at [d]Sidon. And Julius [e]courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself.

4 And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus,[3] because the winds were contrary.

5 And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia.[4]

6 And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria[5] sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.



7 And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against [6]Cnidus, the wind not suffering us, we sailed under Crete,[7] over against Salmone;[8]

---

Ver. 17. Sail. The word translated 'sail' is of uncertain signification, and has also been rendered 'mast or yard.' Bloomfield holds it to have been the mast; and observes, that by the ancients masts were constructed with a kind of socket, so that they could be lowered at pleasure. And this construction is no doubt still common with European vessels prepared to pass under bridges, but is by no means probable in vessels intended for the open sea, and capable of carrying 276 souls, ver. 37. Neither is it likely that in such weather there would be any sail set: but if any, there would certainly be no more than would enable the vessel to steer, with a view to keeping off the coast, which the mariners believed to lie to leeward. The yards is therefore more probably the gigantic 'yard,' such as appears in some of the paintings of Pompeii, with the main-sail, hailed around it, or some close-reefed sail which the violence of the storm compelled the mariners to take in. C.

Reflections.—The passage of saints through this world is often extremely tempestuous. Yet frequently the Lord gives them repeated favours from whom they might have expected the hardest usage. Kindly he communes with and comforts them when terrors prevail all around them. By them he sends his warnings of danger and messages of peace. And he not only preserves them, but others for their sakes, from raging seas and bloodthirsty men. God can exactly foretell events that are to happen in time to come: and whatever be his means, whether winds, waves, or mariners, their influence is necessarily connected with the end which he has seen and foretold.—Thrice happy are they who can speak of him as their Proprietor, Master, and Friend. Great confidence may they repose in his promise, and may expect safety and comfort from his hand. While they who trust to their fancied wisdom rather than to his Word most surely plunge themselves into mischief and shame. We owe great thanks to him for our daily bread, as well as for our hopes or enjoyment of remarkable deliverances. Yet how tasteless is our necessary provision when all hope of life is taken away, and there is like to be no more occasion for it; and insignificant is all the wealth of this world when a storm of raging elements may make us glad to part with it for our own preservation.—Sailors had need to live in union to Christ and fellowship with God, who alone can preserve them from the jaws of destruction. And it is proper that all should sympathize with them that do business in great waters.

But thrice happy are those souls which are made to renounce the broken covenant of works, and their own

CITADEL AT CORFU. [Acts, xxvii:40.]—We have no record in the Acts of the Apostles that St. Paul was ever at Corfu. But it was in the track of his voyage and was then an important island, so that he doubtless passed and stopped there. It was customary for trading vessels, such as he sailed on as he made his way to Rome, to stop at the leading points of commercial interest. Corfu is one of the islands now under control of the king of Greece. When George I. ascended the throne of Greece, Great Britian made over to him the Island of Corfu, one of the loveliest places in the Mediterranean sea. We have before us a view of the Citadel as it appears from the sea. This picture was taken from the deck of the Italian steamer upon which we sailed. Viewed from the steamer the island looks like some fairyland

8 And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called the Fair Havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.[9]

9 Now when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, because the fast[1] was now already past, Paul admonished them,

10 And said unto them, Sirs, [g]I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt[2] and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.

11 Nevertheless, the centurion [h]believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul.

12 ¶ And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice,[3] and there to winter; which is an haven of [i]Crete, and [k]lieth toward the south-west and north-west.[5]

13 And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, [l]loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete.

14 But[t] not long after there arose[6] against it a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.[7]

15 And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive.

16 And running under a certain island which is called Clauda,[8] we had much work to come by the boat;

17 Which when they had taken up, they used helps,[9] undergirding the ship; and fearing lest they should [t]fall into the quicksands,[1] strake sail, and so were driven.

18 And we being exceedingly [u]tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship;

19 And the third day [v]we cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship.

20 And[p] when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away.

21 ¶ But after [q]long abstinence, Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, [r]and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss.

22 And now [s]I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be [t]no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship.

23 For [u]there' stood by me this night the angel[x] of God, [x]whose I am, and [y]whom I serve,

24 Saying, [z]Fear not, Paul; [a]thou must be brought before Cæsar: and, lo, [b]God hath given thee all them that sail with thee.

25 Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: [c]for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me.

26 Howbeit, we must be cast upon [d]a certain island.

27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in [2]Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country;

28 And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms: and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms.

29 Then fearing lest they should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors[3] out of the stern,[4] and [e]wished for the day.

30 And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under colour as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship,

31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except[5] these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.[6]

32 Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.[7]

33 And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried, and continued fasting, having taken [8]nothing.

34 Wherefore I pray you to take some meat; for this is [g]for your health:[9] for[h] there shall not an hair fall from the head of any of you.

35 And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and [f]gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36 Then were they all [i]of good cheer, and they also took some meat.

37 And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen souls.

38 And when they had eaten enough, [k]they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat[1] into the sea.

39 And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they discovered a certain creek with a shore,[2] into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship.

40 And when they had [3]taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder-bands,[4] and hoised up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore.

41 And falling into a place where two seas met,[5] they[l] ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.

42 And[n] the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out, and escape.

43 But the centurion, [o]willing to save Paul, kept them from their purpose; and commanded self-righteousness and strength, that, through Jesus' merits and grace, they may, through much tribulation, get safe to the celestial country.

CHAPTER XXVIII. REFLECTIONS.—Barbarous heathens often far exceed many professed Christians in their kind compassion to shipwrecked mariners. And richly are they here rewarded of God with the healing of their sick, and no doubt much instruction for the salvation of their souls. We must never hastily PUTEOLI—WHERE ST. PAUL LANDED. [Acts, xxviii:13.]—"And from thence we fetched a compass and came to Rhegium; and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli." We have in full view the place on the sea where St. Paul landed when he touched the Italian shore. When he landed on the quay at Puteoli, he was again on classic grounds. He was near Virgil's tomb and in the midst of scenes about which Virgil has sung. He was close to the luxurious winter home of Tiberius, and in sight of the region where has been committed the unnatural crime of Nero, who attempted to drown his own mother, which failing to do, he had her put to death by the hand of one of his hired assassins. This was the Roman emperor before whom Paul was to be tried, in the city of Rome.

that they which could swim should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land:

44 And the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And so it came to pass, that [p]they escaped all safe to land.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 Paul after his shipwreck is kindly entertained of the barbarians. 5 The viper on his hand hurteth him not. 8 He healeth many diseases in the island. 11 They depart towards Rome. 17 He declareth to the Jews the cause of his coming. 24 After his preaching some were persuaded, and some believed not; 30 yet he preacheth there two years.

AND when they were escaped, then they knew that the [a]island was called [1]Melita.[2]

2 And the [b]barbarous[3] people [c]showed us no little kindness: for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold.

3 ¶ And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand.

4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, [d]No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live.

5 And[e] he shook off the beast into the fire, and felt no harm.

6 Howbeit, they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly: but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said that [f]he was a god.

7 ¶ In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously.

8 And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever, and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, [h]and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.

9 So when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed:

10 Who[i] also honoured us with many honours; and when we departed, they laded us with such things as were necessary.

11 ¶ And after three months we departed in a ship of [j]Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, whose sign was Castor and Pollux.[4]

12 And landing at Syracuse,[5] we tarried there three days.

13 And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to [6]Rhegium:[7] and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli;[8]

14 Where we found brethren, and were desired to tarry with them seven days:[9] and so we went toward Rome.

15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, [k]they came to meet us as far as Appii Forum, and the Three Taverns;[1] whom[l] when Paul saw,[2] he thanked God, and [m]took courage.

16 And when we came to Rome,[3] the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard: [n]but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though [o]I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans:

18 Who,[q] when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me.

19 But when the Jews spake against it, [r]I was constrained to appeal unto Cæsar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of.

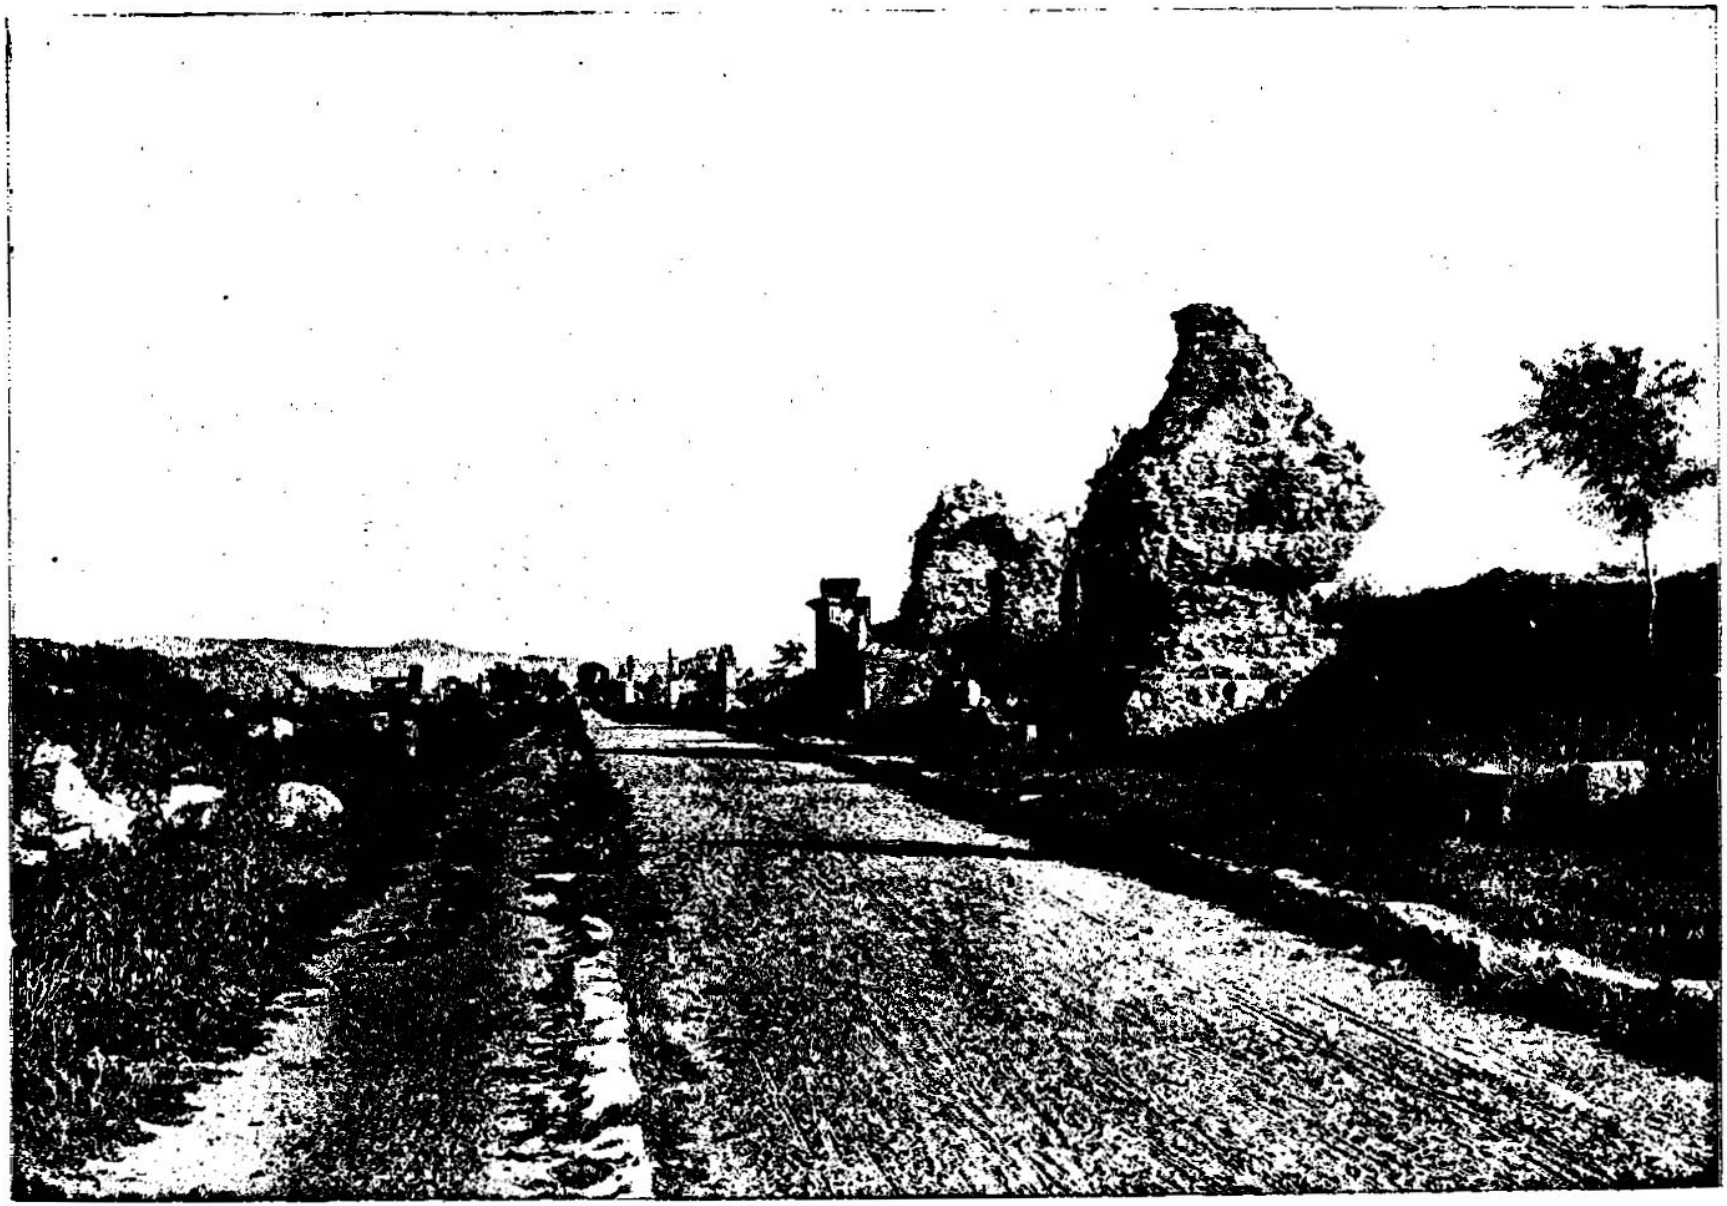
20 For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you; because that for the hope[4] of Israel I am bound with this chain.

21 And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came showed or spake any harm of thee.

22 But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for [s]as concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against.

23 ¶ And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his [t]lodging; to whom [u]he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

24 And[v] some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not.



25 And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, [x]Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers,

26 Saying, [y]Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive:

27 For the heart of this people is waxed judge of the external dispensations of Providence, nor run from one extreme to another. There is great danger in thinking uncharitably of the distressed, or too honourably of the prosperous. And it is God's will, not idols or charms, that can render our attempts successful. If we sincerely aim at honouring God, he will procure sufficient honour, comfort, and kindness for us, go where we will. But awful is the enmity of carnal minds against Christ; that his religion, notwithstanding all its purity, dignity, and benevolence, should be everywhere spoken against, and that any should be loaded with chains on his account.— And for the advantage of souls, ministers should be careful to prevent, avert, or remove whatever groundless prejudices can be conceived against them. But let them do what they will, the gospel will be to many a savour of death unto death. And dreadful indeed is the experience of this. But it is a great mercy if any are made to believe; and if ministers can be useful, even under persecuting restraints, and can devote their house, as well as their heart, lips, and hands, to the service of Jesus Christ.

THE APPIAN WAY, NEAR ROME—OVER WHICH THE APOSTLES WALKED IN CHAINS. [Acts, xxviii:16.]—We see the road in the above picture along which the tired and persecuted apostles walked in chains from the coast of Puteoli to Rome. At the point represented in our view of the Appian Way, St. Paul was about five miles from the city of Cæsars. Now amid tombs, which lined either side of the Appian Way, he was slowly making his way to the imperial capital of the world. While he walked amid the tombs of the great men who had reigned and died in Rome, he was also moving along the most fashionable boulevard, for the Romans built their tombs beside their gayest driveway, and thus he slowly entered the city where he was to be beheaded. This road now is strewn with the wrecks of tombs.

gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.

28 Be it known therefore unto you, that [a]the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it.

29 And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and [b]had great reasoning among themselves.

30 ¶ And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him,

31 Preaching[b] the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.[5]

5 With this remark Luke closes his history: probably the apostle was soon after set at liberty; though it is generally agreed that he afterwards suffered martyrdom at Rome. Doubtless Luke, Aristarchus, & others who attended on the apostle, or came to him, 'came themselves at liberty,' laboured diligently to make the gospel known in the city and its vicinity, during all the time of the apostle's imprisonment; though the historian, by a modesty almost unprecedented, is wholly silent concerning his own labours and sufferings. — I.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

The 'ACTS OF THE APOSTLES' possesses all the characteristics of other scriptural histories—brevity; impartiality; selection of what is valuable for instruction; neglect of what is merely curious; tenderness towards the persons of the wicked, but unflinching condemnation of their sins; a continuous reference of all events to God, with an overwhelming desire to promote his glory by the conversion of sinners. The whole book presents, not so much a history as a specimen of the primitive church; but that specimen amply sufficient, not merely to attest the miraculous origin of Christianity, but also to exhibit those moral qualities—those graces of the Spirit—by which, as 'outward and ordinary means,' the gospel was originally propagated; and by which alone it can continue to be propagated, where miraculous powers are not bestowed—graces of the Spirit, more or less common to all true believers, and without which, even the eye of the prophet penetrating the depths of futurity, the tongue of inspiration expounding all mysteries, with the arm of faith miraculously removing mountains—are all 'nothing,' 1 Co. 13. 2. Accordingly it will be seen that one of the first moral qualities—one of the first graces—of the primitive church was absolute dependence upon God, evidencing itself in an earnest desire for his Spirit, and in continued waiting upon his promise and providence in prayer, ch. 1. 4, 14, 24; 2. 46; 6. 4–6; 9. 11; 10. 9; 12. 5; 16. 16. A second distinguishing feature of the primitive church appears in the spirit of liberality of the rich towards the poor, and their personal indifference, as individuals, to the acquirement and accumulation of wealth, ch. 2. 44, 45; 5. 4; 8. 18-20. A third characteristic may be seen in the order and efficiency with which their temporal affairs were conducted, as manifested in that most difficult department, the comfortable support of the poor, ch. 6. 1–6. This part of primitive Christianity was, most probably, derived from the Mosaic institutions, in which provision for the widow, the fatherless, the poor, and even the stranger, occupied a conspicuous place. And, in this characteristic, had the modern imitated the primitive churches more, the interference of human law on behalf of the poor would have been quite unnecessary; and although it is certain pauperism would not have been annihilated, there is little question that it would have been diminished; and the unexpensive machinery of the deaconship would have been amply sufficient for distinguishing between the really necessitous and the indolent impostor, and collection and outlay of the ample finance of benevolence. A fourth characteristic of the primitive church may be seen in the profound respect with which the apostles regarded, in things temporal, 'the powers that be,' and the faithfulness and courage with which, in things spiritual, they declared their determination to 'obey God rather than man,' ch. 4. 13-20; 16. 37; 25. 11. A fifth speciality in the primitive church is founded in the coexistence of a fixed and itinerant or superintendent ministry. The fixed ministry lay in the hands of the deacons managing the temporalities, and of the elders labouring in the spiritualities, ch. 6. 1–6; 14. 23; 20. 17, 28; the itinerant or superintendent in the hands of the apostles and their companions, as qualified and designated by the Holy Spirit, and prayerfully appointed by their brethren, ch. 11. 22, 23; 13. 2, 3; 15. 36–41; 16. 4–8. Upon this characteristic there is immediately ingrafted a sixth—the primitive was essentially, if not totally, a missionary church—a church of missionaries. But there is a speciality in this characteristic not to be overlooked—the primitive church did not intend to become missionary—the very apostles did not at first understand either the nature, object, or extent of their original commission. And when the eyes of an apostle were opened, as it were, by light from heaven, the body of the church took offence, and he was necessitated to justify himself for obeying a heavenly vision, and preaching the gospel to the Gentiles, ch. 10. 9–16, 34, 35, 45; 11. 1–3, 18. Christianity alone has been able to grapple with and overcome the prejudices of caste and colour. Christianity alone infuses a heaven-born ambition—an ambition that aims at universal conquest and universal monarchy—a conquest of truth over error, of love over enmity; and a monarchy of which the meek and lowly Jesus is the sole King and Head. Among the many internal evidences of Christianity, the early eradication of national prejudices, and the cordial reconciliation and fellowship of the Jews with the Gentiles, presents one, in the form of a moral transformation, never to be accounted for by any power inferior to that of him in whose hands are the hearts of all men, and who turneth them (if they will) as the rivers of water in the valleys. The last characteristic of the primitive church specially demanding notice is presented in the humility of its rulers, and the simplicity of its government. This is no place for any discussion of the comparative merits of mere forms of church government. But one fact every true Christian will admit—that whatever form approaches nearest to that historically depicted in the Acts of the Apostles, must be acknowledged as the true model by all who seek and find their religion in the Bible, and the Bible alone. But to whatever conclusion Christians may come concerning the original form of the church and its binding nature as a model to future times, one thing they will do well to observe—that no outward form can supply the lack of truth and charity, 1 Co. 13. 1–6; a world renounced and self-denied, Mat. 16. 24; Ro. 12. 1, 2; of Christ crucified before the eyes, and of Christ reigning in the heart, Ga. 3. 1; Col. 1. 27; that heart renewed by the indwelling Spirit of God, and thereby rendered an abiding place for the Father and the Son, 1 Co. 3. 16; Jn. 14. 23. Without these, ministers and churches are 'nothing;' with these, they either have all that they need, or, if anything be wanting, or anything superfluous, God will assuredly reveal it to them in his own time, Phi. 3. 15.

Before closing our remarks on the Book of Acts, let us direct a moment's attention, not to the whole, but to a few peculiar features in the character of Paul. (1) One of the first features of his character, as exemplified in his actions, is that perfect and undivided energy with which he devoted himself to one object. As a Jewish persecutor he did nothing but persecute; as a Christian apostle he did nothing but journey, visit, pray, preach, and write. Even when by a necessity arising from the poverty of a persecuted church, he was compelled to labour for his daily bread, he still continued to 'reason in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuade both the Jews and the Gentiles,' ch. 18. 4. And when this interval was past, with what undivided purpose and energy he again devoted himself to his one work, the brief notices in the 'Acts,' and the cursory review in one of his epistles, will sufficiently demonstrate. Hear his own account, the truth of which was right well known to the churches:—'In journeyings often—in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches,' 2 Co. 11. 26. (2) Immediately connected with the foregoing trait of character, or rather intimately and inseparably blended with it, appears that endurance of fatigue which seems to imply an iron-like constitution of body, with that endurance of insults, injuries, and ingratitude which depends upon a crucified spirit. (3) It is unnecessary to record more than a passing remark upon the personal courage with which he was endowed, which, in prophetic view of 'bonds and imprisonments,' could easily reply to all the dissuasion of his friends, 'None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself.' (4) With similar brevity may be noted that remarkable decision by which he was distinguished. When even Peter vacillated, Paul remained unshaken; when Peter 'was to be blamed,' Paul 'withstood him to the face.' A truth once confirmed, he never doubts; a prejudice once uprooted, he never suffers to be replanted; a purpose once formed, no obstruction can induce him to relax his efforts for its accomplishment. He uniformly acts as one who has 'set the Lord before him,' and therefore, whatever may betide him, can never be unduly moved. (5) The last characteristic we shall select from among many may be discovered in that perfect readiness with which he meets the difficulties of every emergency in his laborious and eventful life. No doubt this, like every other quality noticed, was 'the gift of God,' in fulfilment of his gracious promise to his disciples of a 'strength' sufficient for 'their day.' Still we are not the less, upon that account, to note or admire the gift; in fact, our admiration should only be the greater, when to the worth of the possessor is superadded the grace of the donor. Every remarkable incident of his life exemplifies the readiness of the apostle—take the examples of his use of the Greek tongue with Lysias (ch. 21. 37), his immediate transition to Hebrew when he addresses the Jews, who, be it observed, did not generally speak the Hebrew, but who nevertheless honoured it above all languages. Note also the readiness with which he justly put forward his faith in the resurrection, whereby he roused the Pharisees against the Sadducees, while he engaged the Pharisees themselves to a more attentive consideration of the evidences of the resurrection of Jesus, ch. 23. 6. Mark again the readiness and graphic accuracy with which he distinguishes between Felix and Agrippa, seizing at a glance the distinctive peculiarities of each, flattering neither, but conciliating both, ch. 24. 10; 26. 2, 3. With similar readiness he appeals to Cesar (ch. 25. 11); for the time had now arrived when, had he willingly returned to Jerusalem, he had been guilty of his own death. But the most striking example of this wonderful readiness for all emergencies appears during his voyage to Rome, a readiness the more wonderful, that there appears no trace of his previous acquaintance with maritime affairs; nevertheless we find him (ch. 27. 9) admonishing the captain of the ship and officers of the imperial army of the future disasters of the voyage. When the cowardly sailors are about to become the first to desert their ship, we find him detaining them on board as the agents and securities of the general safety; and when crew and passengers were alike exhausted with labour and fasting, we find him again, by precept, example, and promise, cheering their drooping spirits; and when they had escaped from shipwreck, with the same characteristic readiness he 'gathers a bundle of sticks, lays them on the fire;' and, when bitten by a viper—the emblem of Satan's enmity when God's dear children escape from the moral storms he is permitted to raise—we find him, unmoved, cast the venomous creature back into the fire—the emblem of that judgment 'prepared for the devil and his angels.' Now in all these instances—and many others might easily be adduced—Paul certainly stands assimilated to the character of our Lord beyond any other apostle. Our Lord, it may be justly said, was never taken unawares or unprepared. He alone fully realized the words of the psalm (Ps. 16. 8), 'I have set the LORD always before me; because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved:' and Paul, in an eminent degree realized his promise (Mat. 10. 19), because, in an eminent degree, he was filled with his Spirit. C.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE # ROMANS.

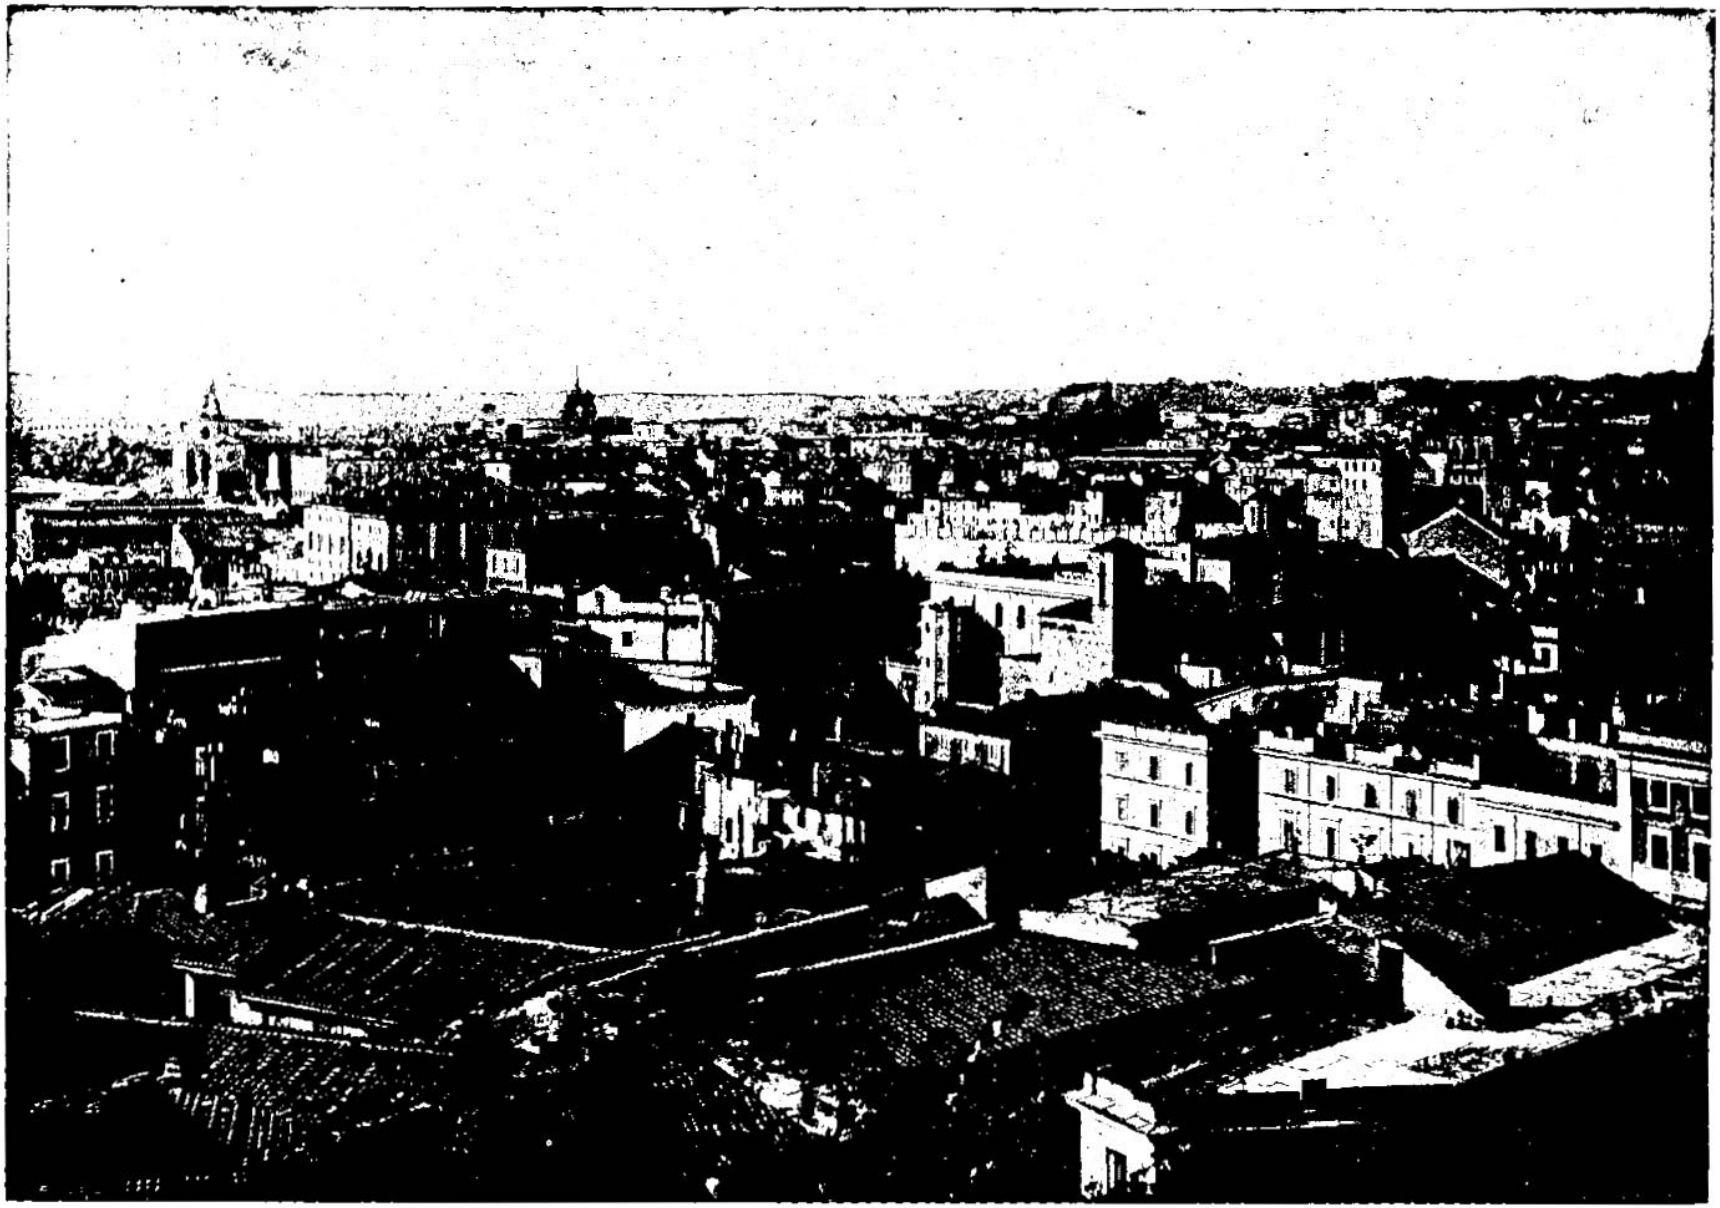
Rome was, and is, the chief city of Italy, and was long the mistress of the then known world. To the Christians there, though not converted by his ministrations, Paul, as the apostle of the Gentiles, about A.D. 60, wrote this epistle, in order to establish their minds in the leading principles of the gospel, and direct them to a suitable improvement of it. After an introduction, asserting his own apostolic mission, and commending their faith, ch. 1. 1–17, he represents both Gentiles and Jews as being so sinful, that they could not possibly be justified before God by their own works, ch. 1. 18; ii.; 3. 1–20: how God's free grace reigns, through Jesus Christ's righteousness, to the justification of the greatest sinners, ch. 3. 21; iv.; v.: what obligations to holiness in heart and life are laid upon believers, by the happy freedom and rich privileges which they enjoy in him, ch. vi.–viii.: and while he traces up all heavenly blessings to the eternal and wise purpose of God as their true original, he points out how the just rejection of the Jews for their unbelief, and the gracious calling of the Gentiles by the gospel, because of their repentance and good works, was exactly answerable thereto, ch. ix.–xi.: and finally, exhorts to a multitude of personal and relative duties, incumbent on these Romans as members of the commonwealth, and especially of the church, ch. xii.–xvi.



[Letter-writing upon sacred subjects was an ancient practice among the prophets of the Lord. Thus Elijah not only wrote (2 Ch. 21. 12–15) to warn Jehoram to flee from the wrath to come; but he appears to have written the letter before his translation to heaven, that it might come as with all the solemnity and sanction of one sending a message from the world of spirits. Thus, again, we find Jeremiah (ch. xxix.) writing a letter to the captives in Babylon, exhorting them to quietness, to beware of false prophets, and promising their return after seventy years. Other portions of the prophecies seem also to have been written and sent as letters—such as several of the 'burdens' of particular countries or cities, of which the chief use must have lain in their speedy communication to the parties addressed. See for example Is. 13. 1; 15. 1; 17. 1, &c.; Je. 36. 1–10, 18, 32; 44. 1–14; Eze. 28. 1, 2, &c. Thus also the prophecy of Haggai, ch. 1. 1, seems to have been a letter to Zerubbabel and Joshua; and Malachi, the last of the prophets, seems to have written his 'burden,' ch. 1. 1, first as a general epistle to all Israel, and then as a special lesson of rebuke and instruction to the priests, ch. 2. 1.

Of the New Testament a large portion is composed of letters, some to individuals and some to communities. Among these the epistle to the Romans occupies a conspicuous place. By consent of all historic antiquity it is ascribed to Paul. It appears to have been the fifth of his apostolic letters, but is placed at the head of the collection, either because Rome was the imperial city, or because it is the longest and most comprehensive of his epistles, embracing the case both of Jews and Gentiles, and presenting the general doctrines of Christianity in a regular and systematic form.

This epistle has always attracted the peculiar attention of interpreters; 'yet no considerable difference of interpretation (observes Haldane) has ever been given of its contents by those who have renounced their own wisdom, and have determined to follow implicitly the obvious meaning of the Word of God.' In the first chapter, after declaring his own rank and authority in the church, the apostle proceeds by directing attention to the Son of God, in his incarnation in time, and his divine nature from eternity, as the great object of the gospel which he was commissioned to proclaim. Then, after an affectionate Christian salutation to the church, he proceeds to announce the doctrine he intends to inculcate and establish, viz. that the gospel is 'the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth;' and then presents the reason and the means, because 'therein is the righteousness of God revealed;' and that unless such righteousness had been brought in and rendered available, all men must have perished, because 'the wrath of God (has been) revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men.' Accordingly, in the first chapter, the apostle proceeds, by an appeal to facts, to establish the charge of 'ungodliness and unrighteousness' against the Gentiles, who had outraged reason in rejecting the Creator, and adopting the creatures as their gods, while they violated even the fragments of the law written in their hearts, disregarded the admonitions of their own consciences, and took their pleasure in sin and sinners, though aware of the righteous judgment of a holy God against all the workers of iniquity. In the second chapter the Jews, who would have lent a ready ear to the indictment and condemnation of the Gentiles, are themselves to be arraigned. But before they could well be aware of what was to follow, like David before Nathan, they pronounce their own doom, by concurring in a sentence by which an indefinite character is pronounced 'inexcusable' when he himself condemns another, and yet is guilty of the same crimes. The Jews are then proved guilty of violating the law delivered at Sinai, and instructed in the vanity of trusting to outward ceremonies and ordinances, while the heart is polluted with sin, and alienated from God. In the third chapter, the apostle proceeds to arraign both Jews and Gentiles under one common indictment, and draws from the Old Testament, and especially from the Psalms, that anatomy of the human heart, a fearful picture of their common depravity and guilt. Thus having proved, by an undeniable appeal to facts, that every man in his natural state lies under the just condemnation of God, because a rebel against him, whether as revealed in the visible creation, in the hearts and consciences of men, or in the positive ordinances and eternal principles of a written law, he arrives at the inevitable conclusion, that by obedience to the law no living man shall be justified; for that so far from justifying him, each form of this threefold revelation proves him to be a transgressor, and therefore worthy of condemnation.

The way is thus prepared for the grand display of the grace and mercy of God announced in the gospel. What the law could not do, not from any deficiency in itself, but owing to the depravity of man, God has fully accomplished. Man has no righteousness of his own, but God has provided a living way for him, a living way provided solely by grace and received solely by faith; it is placed to the account of the believer, when he repents of his sins and receives Christ as his Savior. Yet so far from being contrary to the justice of God, this method of justification 'freely by grace' illustrates his justice, and vindicates his former dealings with men. So far from making the law void, it establishes the law in all honour and authority. This way of salvation equally applies to all, both Jews and Gentiles, men of every nation and of every character; there is no difference here, for all, without exception, are sinners.

In the fourth chapter the apostle proceeds to obviate certain objections. First, that drawn from Abraham's alleged justification by works when he delivered up his son at the commandment of God, see Ja. 2. 21–24. Now this he admits, with James, to be a justification before men, a thing capable of being shown outwardly by one to another, comp. Ro. 4. 2 with Ja. 2. 18, but demonstrates to be no justification before God, because no present obedience, however conspicuous, can possibly obliterate past sin, and because this is a work to which grace alone is adequate. Secondly, he obviates the Jewish objection against the justification of the Gentiles, who, because 'salvation was of (began with) the Jews,' would have confined it to them, or to proselytes of circumcision. This the apostle obviates, by showing that the promise of God was made, the faith of Abraham professed, and the righteousness of God bestowed before circumcision, when Abraham was still as a Gentile, and that circumcision was a mere seal of that righteousness received by faith, which he already had; that so, being of God, pronounced a 'father of many nations,' he might become the representative and fountain-head of all upon whom God, by his Spirit, should confer like precious faith in the Saviour. While thus obviating objections, the apostle casts much additional light upon his great topic, and in order to complete his view, describes in the fifth chapter the blessed effects connected with a state of justification, especially peace with God, access to the throne of grace, hope of glory, ability for all trials, deliverance from wrath, joy in God, eternal salvation and reign in glory through the Lord Jesus Christ. But now, as free grace in the justification of a sinner might be supposed to set aside the necessity of obedience to God, the apostle proceeds in the sixth and seventh chapters to prove, that so far from this being the case, his

ROME, FROM ST. NICHOLAS. [ROMANS, i.]—The Church of San Nicolo di Tolentino stands in the grounds of the villa Massimo Rignano, the site of the famous gardens of Sallust. After the death of Sallust, this place was purchased for the emperor, and was a favorite place of abode with Aurelian. The view of Rome we have in the above picture is modern. And one thing is to be remembered in looking at modern Rome—that, while it is a splendidly built city, it does not begin to compare with the magnificent Rome of the Cæsars St. Paul saw. So strong and massive was the Rome of Nero that many parts of it have defied all the changes of time, and stand out as the most splendid structures to be found in the modern city. One never tires of looking over Rome from the tops of her hills. There is infinite interest about the city doctrine establishes the only sufficient grounds of a cheerful, loving, and holy obedience. This foundation is union with the Redeemer, through that faith by which the believer is justified. Whereas the law, instead of sanctifying, operates by its restraints to stimulate the corruptions of the human heart, and rouses them into action; while, at the same time, it condemns all who are under it. But, through their union with Christ, believers are delivered from the law; and being under grace, which produces love, they are enabled to bring forth fruit acceptable to God. The law, however, is holy, just, and good, and is employed by the Spirit of God to discover the nature and extent of sin in the heart, and thereby to demonstrate the value of the remedy by which this disease is to be healed. As a general conclusion, the believer's entire freedom from condemnation, through union with his glorious Head, and his consequent sanctification, are both asserted in the eighth chapter,—effects, neither of which could ever have been accomplished by the law. The doctrine of God's sovereignty occupies the greater part of the ninth chapter; in the end of which, and throughout the tenth, the error of the Jews in seeking righteousness by the law, and refusing the righteousness which is by faith, is clearly exhibited. After which he propounds the freeness of salvation through the Redeemer, and the certainty that all who accept it shall be saved. And since faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God, the necessity of preaching the gospel to the Gentiles is inferred and asserted. In the eleventh chapter the doctrine of election is resumed, and affirmed to be wholly of grace. Upon which is founded a most consolatory view of the issue of the present dispensation, in the final ingathering of the Jews with the fulness of the Gentile nations. He then proceeds to vindicate the providence of God, both toward Jews and Gentiles; showing that God was acting upon a plan which would finally issue in the fullest manifestations of the divine attributes of wisdom, justice, and mercy. While, as it were, lost in the height and depth, and length and breadth of his subject, the apostle prostrates himself in humble adoration, and summons all to join him in ascribing the glory of salvation to God alone! As the natural result of correct views of God's providence and grace, the apostle, in the twelfth chapter, proceeds to inculcate the moral duties of the Christian life. These he founds on the mercies of God through Jesus Christ, and sums up in two points,—the body for a sacrifice, the spirit for renewal. And here it may be proper to observe that, as in the visible world, we infer that nothing short of divine wisdom and power could have produced the heavens, Ps. 19. 1. so nothing short of divine inspiration could have produced the morality of the Scriptures. The whole array of philosophers can produce no such gem of morality as the twelfth chapter of this epistle. So many ideas in so few words are nowhere, unless in Scripture, again to be found. Paul was either the prince of all philosophers, or he was inspired. Philosophers will not acknowledge the first point; in denying it, however, they establish the second. He was inspired; and the superiority of his moral system to all that unassisted reason could produce, or human depravity tolerate, furnishes an internal evidence to the fact that infidelity, if it could reason, could neither gainsay nor resist. In the thirteenth chapter the apostle proceeds to inculcate the political relations and duties of Christians. They are subjects of a kingdom which is 'not of this world,' and lest they should conclude that they are, therefore, not also subject to the kingdoms which are 'of this world,' he inculcates obedience, in things lawful before God, to 'the powers that be,' without any distinction whatsoever as to mere forms of government. In the fourteenth, and to the thirteenth verse of the fifteenth chapter, he inculcates the duty of mutual forbearance among Christians, in relation to things indifferent; such as observance of days, with abstinence from, or use of, certain meats. These were subjects of keen and irritating discussion in the days of the apostle, though the questions concerning them may now, for a time, have gone to rest; but other things equally indifferent may arise, and have arisen, to occupy their room, and the doctrine of forbearance inculcated by the apostle may still find ample room for its patient and charitable exercise. In the succeeding portion of the fifteenth chapter he offers up earnest prayer for the believers at Rome, recounts his apostolic labours, and declares his purpose and hope of visiting them in due time. And in chapter sixteenth, he concludes with sundry personal notices, with salutary warnings against divisions, and earnest commendations to the grace of God. C.

We have internal evidence both of the date of this epistle, and of the place where it was written. In ch. 15. 25 Paul says, 'But now I go unto Jerusalem to minister unto the saints.' From 1 Co. 16. 1 we learn that the contribution to which he refers was given by the church at Corinth; and from Ac. 24. 17 we learn that Paul with others went from Corinth to Jerusalem, bearing the offerings. In ch. 16. 1 Paul mentions Cenchrea, the port of Corinth. In ver. 23 of the same chapter he mentions Gaius, his host, who was a native of Corinth, 1 Co. 1. 14, and Erastus, 'the chamberlain of the city.' It appears, therefore, that the epistle was written from Corinth, when Paul was about to leave that city for Jerusalem, in the spring of A.D. 58. P.]

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. I, Paul, who was formerly a bitter enemy of Christianity, and a furious persecutor of its professors, being now graciously honoured to be an obedient and devoted servant of Jesus Christ, the only Saviour of sinful men; converted by his wonderful grace; and by his immediate authority, since his exaltation to heaven, appointed one of his distinguished messengers for founding his gospel church, particularly among the Gentiles; and, in consequence of God's choice of me in his divine wisdom, separated and furnished by him;—and by my own voluntary act devoted to publish his intimations of his mind and will concerning the free, the rich, and eternal salvation of Jews and Gentiles through Christ. 2. (Which gracious tidings and offers of mercy and deliverance, though but lately published, in all the light, grace, and glory thereof, are no new contrivance of men, but are wholly of God, who, in former ages, gave manifold hints of them by his inspired prophets, and in his holy and sanctifying oracles; and promised that they should be more fully and plainly revealed in due time. 3. And which especially reveal, hold forth, and offer to men, Jesus Christ, his eternal and only begotten Son, and our only anointed Saviour, and Lord of our faith, worship, and obedience, who, with respect to his human nature or fleshly descent, is, according to the promises, sprung from David, the renowned favourite of God and king of Israel. 4. And as to his divine, absolutely spiritual, and infinitely holy nature, is constantly avowed, openly proclaimed, and convincingly demonstrated, to be the only begotten Son of God, by the resurrection of his dead body through his own power, and the power of the Holy Ghost, to a glorious state of immortality. 5. Through whose merits and intercession, and by whose free gift, I and others have been graciously enriched with special communications of divine favour, saving graces, and ministerial gifts, and honoured with an apostolic office, that, through our labours, multitudes of all nations, Gentiles as well as Jews, might be made obediently to give up their understandings, consciences, and wills to the authority of God, in believing on and receiving his Son, and spiritually and holily

13 Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that [x]oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, (but was let hitherto,) that I might have[b] some fruit among[6] you also, [y]even as among other Gentiles.

14 I[d] am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians, both to the wise and to the unwise.

15 So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also.

7 This expression seems, as Admi says, to be suggested and called forth by the attention of Rome. The pomp, the pride, the philosophy, the learning of the world did not make Paul feel ashamed of Christ's gospel. Whatever the opinion of men might be regarding this gospel, he knew that it was the 'power of God unto salvation.' —P.

obeying his commandments, that hereby all his perfections might be glorified to the highest in their eternal salvation. 6. Among which highly favoured multitude, ye, who dwell in the chief city of the Gentile world, have, by the grace and power of Christ, been called even to the knowledge, faith, and fellowship of the gospel.) 7. To you therefore, as objects of my particular care, as the apostle of the Gentiles, and as manifested, by the effects of the gospel upon you, to be objects of God's special love, and not only reputed to be, but by your divine calling rendered holy in your qualities, tempers, and conversation, I, in an earnest and affectionate manner, wish, and authoritatively declare, that the riches of divine grace shall abound, and be delightfully manifested, in your receiving freely and extensively all manner of peace, prosperity, and blessings, from God, as our living God and Father, as the original spring and designer of them; and from the Lord Jesus Christ, as the only Mediator, who secured them by his blood, and conveys them by his Spirit. 8. As what I hear of the work of God among you is great matter of gladness to my soul, though a stranger to you, I cannot forbear offering up the most hearty praises and thanksgivings on your behalf to your and my gracious God, through Jesus Christ as our only Mediator, that your ready reception of the gospel, and your remarkable faith in Christ, manifested by the good fruits of it, notwithstanding the manifold temptations and great opposition you meet with, are spoken of with religious wonder and joy, and with high commendations, among all the churches in the Roman empire. 9. And I can solemnly appeal to that all-seeing and heart-searching God, whom I serve, not in mere outward appearance, or with bodily labours, but, as renewed by his grace, sincerely, affectionately, faithfully, and with full bent of my heart, in publishing, maintaining, recommending, and enforcing the glorious gospel of salvation, of which his Son is the subject and author—that, in my stated and occasional addresses to him, in a particular manner, I plead that may ye be more and more abundantly filled with all the gifts and graces of his Spirit. 10. And I often entreat that, if it be for his own glory and your spiritual advantage, he would by his providence remove all hindrances out of the way, and give me a safe and favourable opportunity of coming to and personally conversing with you; 11. That, by his blessing upon my instructions, some of you may be furnished with ministerial gifts, and all of you confirmed in the doctrines of the gospel and in your most holy faith, in opposition to all the temptations which you meet with from Satan, seducers, or persecutors; 12. That you and I may rejoice together in the love of God manifested toward us, and in affectionately expressing our mutual love to each other; and may be delightfully satisfied in comparing our spiritual experiences, which manifest the same faith wrought by God in both you and me.—13. Now, my dear brethren in Christ, think not these words are mere compliment, or only expressive of a present blaze of affection; for I have long and often seriously intended and endeavoured to visit you, in order that among you, as well as among other Gentiles, I might be useful in the conversion and edification of many souls; but I have been hitherto hindered by opposition, hardships, or necessary services in other places. 14. For, having freely received my apostolic office and qualifications for it, I look on myself obliged, in point of duty and gratitude, to improve them, as the Lord shall enable me, for the spiritual advantage of my fellow-sinners of mankind, Jews or Gentiles, polite or rude, learned or unlearned, sagacious or stupid. 15. And gladly would I hazard my reputation, ease, or even my life, to preach to you at Rome the blessed tidings of salvation through Jesus Christ, in the face of all possible opposition, contempt, and danger, as I have already done at Antioch, Philippi, Thessalonica, Athens, and Corinth. 16. For however great men or others may contemn and set themselves against the gospel, on account of the debasement of its author and principal subject, and of the meanness of such as profess it; or of the artless dress or sublimity of its doctrines, and their contrariety to their own lusts and prejudices; and however they may reproach and ridicule me for espousing and publishing it, I account it my highest honour to avow, preach, and defend it as an illustrious scheme, in which the glory of all the divine perfections is brightly displayed; and which God, by spiritual application of it to men's hearts, renders powerful for their conversion and eternal salvation, be of what nation or rank they will. 17. For in it the transcendently excellent obedience and sufferings of the Son of God in our nature, which God appointed, provided, approves, accepts, gladly for sinful men, for their full and complete justification to eternal life, is clearly revealed, exhibited, and offered, on the ground of God's faithful testimony, to be received by a living active faith, whether weak or strong, or among Jews or Gentiles. And thus, as the prophet Habakkuk hinted, men become righteous, and live for ever, not by their own good works, but by believing in and receiving Christ.—18. And indeed it is impossible for either Jews or Gentiles to obtain pardon or justification by any other method; for, to begin with the Gentiles, though God has not favoured them with his inspired oracles, he has, in the awful events of his providence, and by the inward convictions of their consciences, warned them that his just and holy nature determines him to punish all their iniquity, whether immediately against himself or against their fellow-creatures; especially as they wickedly and unrighteously stifle, confine, and suppress whatever notions of right and wrong they have, and will not act according to them. 19, 20. For by the light of reason in their souls, and the works of creation and providence thereby discerned, God has given them such plain manifestations of his infinite perfections, absolute eternity, almighty power, supreme dominion, unbounded wisdom, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth, as renders their contempt of him, and rebellion against him, altogether inexcusable. 21, 22. For when they could not but have some discernment of his being and attributes, they neither conceived of him, nor worshipped him answerably thereto, nor were thankful for the knowledge which they had, or the benefits which they received, but indulged their own groundless and pernicious fancies concerning his nature and the worship due to him, till, through the depravity of their wills and affections, their inconsiderate minds became infatuated with ignorance and error; so that they, and especially their Greek philosophers, amidst the highest pretences to uncommon learning and wisdom, became really stupid and senseless in everything pertaining to God and his service. 23. And under the influence of this wilful blindness and depravity of their minds, they debased his honour, in ascribing godhead to the most mutable, perishing, and contemptible creatures, and in representing him by such creatures, as if he had been of the same corporeal and contemptible form. 24–27. To punish their thus setting up false objects of worship, and representing him in so unjust, false, and shameless a manner, and regarding and worshipping the basest of creatures more than himself, God, their infinitely glorious and blessed Creator, Preserver, and Governor, in his righteous judgment, withdrew his abused light and restraints, left them to themselves, and gave them up to their own vicious inclinations, which hurried them, both men and women, into such shocking, lustful, disgraceful, and unnatural abuse of their bodies, as cannot be thought of or mentioned without shame and horror. 28. And because, out of mere enmity against God, they refused to retain, cultivate, or improve what just notions of him they had, or to search after the knowledge of or fellowship with him, he, in righteous judgment, delivered them up as persons disapproved and rejected, to their own careless, undiscerning, and disaffected mind, till, under its darkening and malignant influence, they committed the most unnatural, injurious, dishonourable, and detestable enormities. 29. Inwardly filled with the most wicked and abominable inclinations, they abounded in every sinful practice; they abandoned themselves to every form of uncleanness, fornication, adultery, incest, and unnatural lust; to a base and devilish malignity of temper, doing mischief for mischief's sake; to an eager and insatiable desire after earthly enjoyments; and, together with an inclination to, and doing of, injuries out of mere malice, they no less abandoned themselves to an envious grudging and repining at the welfare or prosperity of others; to an unjust, wilful, illegal, malicious, or wanton destroying of men's lives; to strifes, contentions, and quarrellings; to overreach, defraud, and impose on their neighbours by subtle contrivances and falsehoods; to a habitual practice and custom of doing evil to all around them; and to defame others by sly and artful methods, or under pretences of pity and friendship; 30. Or openly to slander them behind their backs, or while they could not vindicate themselves.—They were also stated and open enemies to the authority, justice, holiness, laws, and government of God, as contrary to their beloved vices; and revilers of men, or outrageous, insolent, or vexatious in their words and deeds towards them. Puffed up with a conceit of their own attainments and enjoyments, they vainly pretended to more than they really had. Not contented with common methods of sinning, they industriously contrived new forms of wickedness; and behaved perversely, disrespectfully, and undutifully to their parents, paying no regard to their authority, counsels, warnings, or commands. 31. Amidst all their skill in doing evil, they behaved like persons destitute of common sense, reason, or conscience, in everything religious or moral. They were so perfidious that no promises, contracts, oaths, or engagements, to God or men, could hold them; they had quite defaced or extirpated the common sentiments of humanity towards their fellow-creatures, parents or children. If once offended, they could never be reconciled on the most reasonable terms. And instead of pitying and relieving the miserable, they delighted in cruelty and oppression. 32. And what exceedingly aggravates their complicated and atrocious wickedness, is, that though the light of nature, their own consciences, and the dictates of their philosophers, teach them that such vices expose them to the just disfavour of God, they not only continue and abound in the practice thereof, but even encourage, abet, and delight in such as dare to be as wicked as themselves.

Ver. 1. Separated. Selected and appointed, Ac. 13. 2; Ga. 1. 15. Separated from Judaism as taught by the Pharisees: from his dearest kindred, who now held him an apostate; from the world, with all its pleasures, hopes, and honours; and set apart to the propagation of 'the truth as it is in Jesus.' C.

Ver. 4. The Spirit of holiness. Not the Holy Spirit, but the Divine Spirit; or, in other words, the divine nature of our Lord, which is here placed in contrast to 'the flesh.' In his human nature he was Son of David; in his divine nature he was Son of God; and he was shown—proved to be 'the Son of God with power,' by the fact that he rose from the dead. He laid down his life and took it again, and thereby manifested his divinity. P.

Ver. 5. 'We have received.' Paul speaks of himself only, as in 1 Th. 2. 17, 18, using the plural—a practice not uncommon with writers.—For obedience, &c. 'In order to produce, or bring about, obedience to the faith among all nations.' This was the grand object of his apostolic calling and mission. P.

Ver. 17. Righteousness of God. The word here translated 'righteousness' is the same as in ch. 3. 21, 22; 4. 3, 6, 9, 11, 13; 5. 17; 10. 3, 4, 5, 6, &c., and may be translated either 'justice' or 'righteousness.' When the subject relates to administration of the law, it must be translated 'justice;' when it implies obedience to the law, 'righteousness.' The phrase 'righteousness of God' forms the key to Paul's epistles—indeed to the whole gospel. Wherefore, the following definitions are selected, as presenting a brief review of the minds of several distinguished expositors, ancient and modern:—'God's attribute of justice'.Origen: 'The divine clemency' (Chrysostom). 'The justice or rectitude of the divine nature—a system of morality—a pure scheme of morality, 17 For therein is the [p]righteousness of God revealed [q]from faith to faith:[8] as it is written, The[r] just shall live by faith.

18 For [s]the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who [t]hold[9] the truth in unrighteousness;[1]

19 Because[u] that which may be known of God is manifest in[2] them; [v]for God hath showed it unto them.

20 For[w] the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are[3] without[x] excuse.

21 Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, [y]neither were thankful; [z]but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

22 Professing[a] themselves to be wise, they became fools, truly of God' (Campbell). 'A righteousness belonging to faith, and not that conveyed and received by faith. Because God has enjoined faith as the righteousness he will count to sinners, and will accept and reward it as righteousness' (Macknight). 'God's method of justification' (Newcome). 'God's method of constituting men righteous, though in fact they are criminal, and obnoxious to punishment' (R. Watson). 'Not the essential righteousness of God's nature, but the manner of becoming righteous which God has appointed and exhibited in the gospel—the method which God has contrived and proposed for becoming righteous, by believing his testimony, and casting ourselves on his mercy' (Doddridge). Now, it is of the highest importance that every Christian should be aware of the insufficiency of these several definitions, but especially of the two latter, because they constitute the staple of a large amount of popular theology, and the doctrine which they would eventually overturn is that by which, as Luther truly declared, the church of God must either stand or fall. And surely it will be admitted that if such arbitrary modes of definition were followed out with other words and phrases, the Scriptures would be deprived of all certain meaning. For if 'the righteousness of God' do not mean simply his 'righteousness,' but merely 'a manner or method in which he renders believers righteous,' then the love, the mercy, the grace, the truth, the justice of God, do not mean those very attributes as essential to God, but so many methods or manners of their exercise. In fact, such arbitrary definition outrages the first principle of all interpretation, which ever must be, to search out the meaning of words or phrases, not in the judgment of the expositor, but in the use and wont of the author. Accordingly the phrase 'righteousness of God,' if thus sought, by comparing Ro. 1. 17 with 5. 19, will be found to mean 'the obedience of one,' by which 'many are made righteous;' that righteousness or obedience to the law, taken in its requirements and penalty, which has been yielded to it by our Lord Jesus Christ. This is indeed 'the righteousness of God,' for it has been provided of God (He. 5. 10; Joh 33. 24; Mat. 20. 28), and, from first to last, has been effected by his Son, who is 'the mighty God, the Father of eternity' (Haldane). 'God manifest in the flesh,' who being, as the incarnate Word (Jo. 1. 1, 14), 'made under the law' (Ga. 4. 4), 'became obedient unto death' (Phi. 2. 8. death, the penalty of a broken law, inclusive); and thus 'brought in an everlasting righteousness' (Da. 9. 24); which is 'unto all' (as a gift, Ro. 3. 22; 5. 17), and upon all (as a garment (Is. 61. 10) 'who believe' in his name for justification of life. C.

Ver. 23. The apostle justly represents idolatry as the root of all abominable immoralities; indeed the heathen deities ever have been at once the examples and patrons of licentiousness. See ver. 28. C.

Ver. 28. A reprobate mind. A mind judicially condemned to be given up to itself, and, consequently, blinded by its own imaginations, and hardened by its own habits. C.

Ver. 30. Inventors of evil things. Such as the 'inventors' of the orgies of Bacchus, the horrors of the arena, the mysteries of Ceres, in ancient times; with the debasing cruelties of the cockpit, the abominations of the theatre, the ruinous fascinations of the gaming-table, and such like, among the moderns. C.

Ver. 31. Without understanding. He does not deny them high intellectual cultivation and acquirement, for that they possessed, as their arts, sciences, and literature will witness; but he pronounces them 'stupid' concerning God, the knowledge of whom is the only genuine wisdom. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a great, a full, a suitable Saviour is God in our nature! For the only begotten Son of God is clearly manifested in our promised, our risen Redeemer. And blessings of grace and glory proceed from him equally as from his Father. How ancient, how excellent, is that gospel which exhibits him and his fulness to us sinful men! While he is its author and subject, its great design is to bring both Jews and Gentiles everywhere to faith in and obedience to him. Therein his grace, as our hope, is revealed and bestowed, and thereby men are led to Jesus Christ. And marvellous is their honour, and great their happiness, who share its saving effects. It is delightful and edifying to hear of the remarkable grace and holiness of others, and for Christians to communicate their spiritual experiences one to another. Inexpressible is the honour to be divinely called, qualified, diligent, and successful ministers of Christ. And indispensable is their obligation to a faithful, bold, and laborious preaching of the gospel. Nor ought any opposition or contempt from men to render them ashamed of their work. God's existence and perfections are manifestly marked in his works all around and in us. And inexcusable then is our rebellion against him, or stifling the natural intimations which he has given us of himself. But, alas! what monsters men become when left to themselves, and abandoned to their own hearts' lusts! There is nothing too absurd for them to intend, or too idolatrous, brutish, unnatural, or shocking for them to practise. And diabolical is their temper who can take pleasure in wickedness for itself.—Great is the mercy to have the wickedness of our heart restrained, and especially to have it subdued by God's grace. And surely it is impossible for men to whom such wickedness is natural to be justified by their own works, or by anything less than a living and active faith in Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. Since then God has given to all men knowledge sufficient to render them inexcusable if they abandon themselves to wickedness, ye Jews, and all who are disposed to censure others, must be still more inexcusable and incapable of being justified by your own works; for your censuring and condemning their faults is a practical condemnation of yourselves, who, notwithstanding your greater light, knowledge, and conviction, do the same things, or worse. 2. But from what we know of God's infinite holiness, equity, wisdom, and goodness, we are certain that all his threatenings, condemnations, or punishments which he will execute upon such, be of what nation, character, or rank they will, are exactly right and just, and according to the declarations which he has made, and answerable to the true state of things and eternal rule of righteousness. 3. Dare then any one of you who are endued with common sense and reason, and altogether dependent on and accountable to God for all your thoughts, words, and deeds, absurdly and injuriously imagine that you shall escape his just condemnation and wrath, when ye are so forward and dogmatical in arraigning and condemning others for crimes in which ye indulge yourselves? 4. Or, are ye so sordidly ungrateful as to slight, abuse, or pervert, not only the common bounties of his providence, but even his distinguished favours, marvellous patience, and long-suffering, as encouragements to wickedness; never seriously considering that the obligation, tendency, and design of his multiplied favours, is to overcome your obstinacy, and to make you, with grief and hatred of your sins, turn from them to God in Christ? 5. But according to the natural and wilfully contracted stubbornness and insensibility of your perverse hearts, are, by your persistence in unbelief and other wickedness, secretly preparing for yourselves the most fearful condemnation and punishment, to be inflicted in that great and terrible day of the last judgment. 6. For then God will impartially assign and distribute rewards and punishments to all mankind, Jews or Gentiles, small or great, not according to their fallible, mistaken, censorious, or self-flattering judgment, but according and in proportion to the good or evil nature or degree of every one's works. 7, 10. Bestowing immortal glory and honour, sweet harmony and delight, and perfection of blessedness in every form upon such, whether Jews or Gentiles, as, from a principle of faith in and love to Christ, have patiently persevered in good works, and earnestly sought after be adjudged according to their knowledge; but they heaping the most dreadful and tormenting, but just, punishments upon such as contentiously quarrel with his doctrines, laws, and providential dispensations; and instead of believing and practising what he has revealed to them, give up themselves willingly to a course of unbelief, hatred of him, and other like conduct. 11. For in passing the final decision, and distributing rewards and punishments in the last judgment, he will exactly and impartially proceed according to his own unerring knowledge and righteous rule of judgment, regarding none for their outward circumstances, privileges, professions, or pretences, and disregarding none for that ignorance or wickedness of which they have sincerely repented. 12. The Gentiles, who have sinned merely against the light of nature, without having the benefit of revelation to instruct and reform them, shall these great blessings of his kingdom. 8, 9. And who have contemned and rebelled against the clear light of revelation, and have refused Christ and his 11 For [m]there is no respect of persons with God.

12 For[o] as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law: and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law;

13 (For [p]not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law[4] shall be justified:

14 For when the Gentiles, [q]which have not the law, [r]do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves:[5]

15 Which show the work[6] of the law written in their hearts, [7]their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile[8] accusing or else [t]excusing one another;)

17 Behold, [v]thou art called a Jew, and [w]restest in the law, and makest thy boast of God,

18 And[y] knowest his will, and approvest the things that are more excellent,[z] being instructed out of the law;

19 And[a] art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkness, salvation, shall, in proportion to the heinous nature of their crimes, come to deeper despair because having more light. 16. In that great and awful day, in which God will exactly search out not only the open acts, professions, and pretences, but even the most secret thoughts, dispositions, principles, motives, and ends of all mankind; and pass decisive, irreversible, and eternally-effective sentences upon them, by Jesus Christ his Son, and our Mediator, as is plainly declared and testified in that gospel which I preach by his revelation and appointment. 13. Since then it is not men's having or hearing the revealed law, or their perfect fulfilment of all its demands, that can justify any on that occasion, the Jews, however they boast of their own righteousness, will need an infinitely better. 14, 15. And the Gentiles, though not privileged with the revealed oracles of God, manifest, by the small remains or semblances of morality in their practice, that the law of nature, with respect to some general notions of good and evil, truth and falsehood, right and wrong, remains written in their natural rationality, and their consciences accuse, check, and reproach them when they act contrary thereto, and acquit or excuse them when they do well in any respect—a sure token that they also must have a better righteousness than their own to justify them before God.—17-20. Ye Jews pride yourselves in being the descendants of Abraham, and the professed people of God, and in having his oracles and ordinances, as if these could justify you before him. Ye boast of your profession of the true God, and his peculiar covenant relation to your people, as if these could secure you from his wrath, and entitle you to all the blessings of time and eternity. Ye pretend to understand the revelations which God has given you, and to be expert in distinguishing truth from error, and right from wrong, and to be fully acquainted with and firmly attached to the most excellent points of religion taught you by the law of Moses. In your attempts to convert the Gentiles to your religion, ye assume high-sounding titles, and presumptuously looking on them as poor, foolish, stupid, and ignorant wretches, ye pretend to be distinguished leaders, enlighteners, and masterly instructors, while ye have nothing but a merely apparent or notional knowledge of God and his laws, without any answerable practice. 21-24. Think therefore, for your conviction of the insufficiency of your own righteousness, how shamefully and inexcusably your practice contradicts your pretensions to knowledge and your instruction of others. While, according to the law, ye declaim against fraud and dishonesty in the Gentiles, ye indulge yourselves therein; while ye loudly inveigh against adultery in them, ye commit it yourselves; while ye profess a high detestation of heathenish idolatry, which ye have especially done since your return from Babylon, ye indulge yourselves in sacrilegiously robbing God of his offerings, obedience, and worship, and pretend to fulfil his law by hypocritical and imperfect performances; while ye boast of your knowledge of God's law, as your distinguished privilege, high honour, and infallible security for eternal life, ye dishonour his authority and holiness by your manifest and voluntary violations of his law.—For your notorious wickedness, committed in plain contradiction to your laws, professions, and privileges, brings a reproach on his perfections and government, word and ways, and tempts the very heathens to think or speak of him as if he allowed, encouraged, or connived at it, or could not hinder it among his own favourite people. 25-27. And with respect to circumcision, in which ye chiefly glory, and on which ye depend as your security for eternal happiness, it will indeed effectually seal and confirm God's covenant with you, if your natures be truly renewed, and ye sincerely study holiness of life, proceeding from union to and fellowship with Christ; but if ye live in your sins, your circumcision will render you no more acceptable to God than if ye were heathens. And if Gentiles, being renewed in their hearts, sincerely observe the law, they will be as highly valued by God as if they had been Jews, and will rise up in judgment against and condemn you, who, depending on your having the letter of the divine law, and being outwardly circumcised, presume to violate the obligations of the moral law. 28, 29. For it is not natural descent mit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege?[22]

23 Thou[d] that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law[3] dishonourest thou God?

24 For[e] the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is written.

25 For[g] circumcision verily profiteth, if thou keep the law: but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision.

26 Therefore [h]if the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision?

27 And shall not uncircumcision which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, [i]judge thee, who by the [j]letter and circumcision dost transgress the law?

28 For[k] he is not a Jew which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh:

29 But[l] he is a Jew which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, [m]in the spirit, and not in the letter; [n]whose praise is not of men, but of God.

from Abraham, nor external covenant relation to God, nor profession of his truths, that will make a true child of Abraham; nor, in God's reckoning, is that external circumcision available to any saving purpose, which is only a mark of distinction imprinted on the body. But he is a true Israelite, one of Abraham's spiritual and believing seed, and an heir according to the promise, who, whether he be Jew or Gentile, is regenerated and sanctified in his inward nature, tempers, and disposition, and turned to God through Christ; and that is true circumcision, highly acceptable, not to carnal men, but to an all-seeing God, which consists not in any external cutting of the flesh, but in the renewing of the mind by the Holy Ghost, and purifying of the heart by faith in Christ.

Ver. 4. Goodness. The mercies so freely extended to the Jews, in their calling, deliverance, preservation, institutions, and settlement, De. 7. 7. C.

Ver. 7. This verse describes the principle of divine judgment: but to the character described no one has ever attained, save 'Jesus Christ the righteous.' Even he who, at least in his own opinion, came up to the full requirement of the law, received this for answer—'one thing thou lackest,' Mar. 10. 21. But who will dare to say, 'I lack nothing'? C.

Ver. 12. Without law—that is, without an audible or visible law.—Shall perish. Shall be condemned, not by a law which speaks from God, but by nature, ver. 14, or an appeal to themselves. As they have felt, desired, and judged in their own case, condemning those who injured them, so shall they be judged and condemned of God, where they have offended him. C.

Ver. 17–20. In these verses the apostle enumerates the advantages of the Jews. (1) They are called Jews, which, though now a name of contempt, yet contains within it the most glorious recollections and anticipations, both spiritual and temporal. (2) Having received the law in all its ordinances. (3) Having Jehovah for their God. (4) Knowing his will. (5) Discerning the superiority of right over wrong. (6) And that by means of a scriptural education, ver. 18, 'being instructed (catechised) out of the law.' (7) In being guides, lights, instructors, teachers. (8) In possessing the form or model of knowledge and truth into which they might mould themselves and their pupils. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is base and criminal to condemn sin in others while we indulge it in ourselves; or to continue workers of iniquity under high professions of godliness. And desperate is their condition who harden themselves in sin from the mercies of God apprehended or experienced. Certain and awfully exact is the future judgment of men by Jesus Christ. And correspondent to their qualities and works shall be the eternal punishments or gracious rewards of men. All the means of illumination and grace which they have received will come into the account. And very unavailing is it, nay, dangerous, to have external privileges, extensive knowledge, and an orthodox profession, without real holiness in heart and life. None give a deeper stab to the cause and honour of God than they who sin against the light, and prove false to their profession.—What a rare, a hard, an inward work is real Christianity! Highly is it esteemed by God, who alone knows its worth, or can immediately discern its existence. And it is infinitely dangerous to rest in anything short of Jesus Christ and his sacrifice, as the only ground of our salvation.

---

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1, 2. Nevertheless, the Jewish descendants of Abraham, who have been marked as the peculiar people of God by circumcision, have thereby their distinguished advantages; chiefly that God, as eminently present with them, has given them various types, promises, and predictions of the Messiah, and salvation through him, and granted them his inspired oracles, for their spiritual instruction and ground of faith and hope. 3. And though many of them have not believed in Christ the promised Messiah, or the gospel revelation of him, their ungrateful infidelity cannot defeat God's faithful accomplishment of his promises to Abraham and his spiritual seed. 4. Nay, though all men should prove liars and deceivers, God will always appear just and faithful; and men's rebellion against his law, and presumptuous arraignment of his conduct, will, in the issue, tend to vindicate and clearly manifest his equity and faithfulness. 5, 6. But let not carnal Jews imagine that he, the righteous Judge of the world, cannot justly punish their wickedness and unbelief in rejecting the promised Messiah, and his righteousness and salvation, since, by his overruling providence, he makes use of it as a foil to set off, enhance, and give opportunity for brighter displays of his glory. 7, 8. Let them not imagine that, if God make their unbelief, which is so contrary to his truth and to their own profession, a mean of the spread and success of the gospel, they, as some blasphemously charge us apostles and Christians with saying, may abandon themselves to their own lusts, and practise all manner of wickedness, that he may thereby take occasion to glorify his own faithfulness and infinite grace. Nothing can be more detestable, or more justly damnable, than such conduct. 9. But whatever peculiar privileges we Jews possess, we are no more able to justify ourselves before God by our own works than the worst of heathens; nay, our sins are the more aggravated, as being committed against greater light and mercies, means and obligations. And it has already been proved, by notorious facts, that both Jews and Gentiles are in themselves chargeable with, and condemned on account of, their sins before God. 10–12. And this the oracles of God, which were given to and immediately respected us Jews, harmoniously attest, representing all men in general as sinful in their nature and practice, ignorant of themselves and of God, the method of salvation, and every other spiritual object; as careless of all knowledge of and fellowship with God, and neglecters of his worship and service; as apostates from God and his Christ, his law, and everything good; and as altogether vile and useless before God; unfit and unable of themselves to do anything truly and spiritually good. 13–15. Their heart being wholly defiled with sin, all their members are ready instruments of unrighteousness. Their mouths, wherewith they ought to glorify God and edify one another, they employ to vent the most offensive, loathsome, and injurious language, flattery, falsehood, deceit, malignant slander and reproach, or even hideous oaths and curses, and bitter provocations and revilings. Their feet, which should carry them to every good work, they employ in running about to perpetrate mischief and murder. 16–18. By these means they bring calamities and destruction, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, on themselves, and all they are connected with; they are utter strangers to the true method of peace with God or their own consciences, and of promoting solid tranquillity and friendship among men; they have no serious sense or holy reverence of God's perfections or their own accountableness to him; no fear of offending him; no principle of real religion to direct their views, restrain them from evil, or influence them to good. 19. Now, whatever charges the law of God, manifested in the light of nature or revelation, lays against men, must be extended to all that are under that law, that every man be convinced in his own conscience that his works are not excusable, far less justifying, before God; and that he is chargeable with many crimes, and legally obnoxious to his righteous will. 20. And if the law, by its holy and just commandments, thus charge all men with, and convince them of, sin in their dispositions, thoughts, words, and actions, it is clearly manifest that none of them, in their present state of degeneracy, can ever be justified at the awful tribunal of an all-seeing, heart-searching, just, and holy God. 21–23. Nevertheless, this deplorable state of mankind is not desperate; for in the gospel is now clearly manifested that divine righteousness, fulfilled by the Son of God in our nature, which the moral law neither provided nor exhibited, but which has been all along represented in the typical ceremonies and the writings of the Old Testament prophets, as the designed ground of the justification of sinful men; even the righteousness of our divine Redeemer, which he wrought as our Saviour, consisting in his holiness of human nature, obedience of life, and satisfactory sufferings and death, in our stead; which, being freely offered in the gospel, to all men, and by faith received by, all who will, weak or strong, Jews or Gentiles—all of them having lost his image, and being incapable of glorifying him, recommending themselves to his favour, or procuring any title to the enjoyment of him. 24–26. And all of them have their sins pardoned, their persons accepted, and are entitled to eternal life, merely by the ever gracious and tender love of God, without any desert of their own, but only on account of that infinitely valuable eternal sacrifice which Jesus Christ endured through his infinite obedience and sufferings, which is lodged in him as an inexhaustible fund of merit to be offered to them; and which God, from his love to them, accepted as their ransom, and offers to all who will, and enables them to receive through faith in his Son.—Him, in his eternal compassion and infinite love, he delightfully set apart as a fit Mediator between God and man, and has clearly manifested and exhibited in the types and predictions of the Old Testament, in his incarnation and public ministry, and in the declarations and offers of the gospel, as a propitiatory and reconciling sacrifice, on account of which every one that believes therein may have free access to God. Herein he demonstrates the glory of his own justice, and the perfection of that righteousness of Christ which he offered freely and gladly for the sins of the whole world; and through this he was honoured in pardoning the Old Testament offences before the incarnation, as well as in now pardoning the Gentiles who had long continued in their sins, and in freely justifying every one, Jew or Gentile, who, however guilty in himself, by faith receives and depends on Jesus Christ as his only Saviour. 27, 28. And as this doctrine of justification by the free grace of God, through the willing sacrifice of Christ, leaves no room for any man to boast, as if he had either in whole or in part recommended himself to the divine favour, it ought to be openly avowed, for the honour of God and humiliation of men, as a thing most plain and evident, that whatever Jew or Gentile, greater or lesser sinner, is pardoned and accepted by God, obtains this privilege merely through the sacrifice of Christ received by faith, without any dependence on his own good dispositions or works. 29, 30. And it is no less manifest, that now God is, in every saving respect, the God of the Gentiles as well as of the Jews, and that he justifies

2 Much[b] every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God.

3 For[c] what if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?

4 God forbid: yea, [d]let God be true, but every man a liar; as it is written, That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged.

5 But[e] if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God, [f]what shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I speak [h]as a man)

6 God[i] forbid: for then [j]how shall God judge the world?

7 For[k] if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory, why yet am I also judged as a sinner?

8 And not rather, (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) [l]Let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just.

9 What then? [m]are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved[1] both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin:

10 As it is written, [o]There is none righteous, no, not one:[2]

11 There[p] is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.

12 They[q] are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

13 Their[r] throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; [s]the poison of asps is under their lips:

14 Whose[t] mouth is full of cursing and bitterness:

15 Their[u] feet are swift to shed blood:

16 Destruction and misery are in their ways;

17 And the way of peace have they not known:

18 There[v] is no fear of God before their eyes:

19 Now[3] we know that what things soever the law saith, [w]it saith to them who are under the law; [x]that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God.[4]

20 Therefore [y]by the deeds of the law there shall no [z]flesh be justified in his sight: for [a]by the law is the knowledge of sin.

21 But now [c]the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, [d]being witnessed by the law and the prophets;

22 Even the righteousness of God, which is [e]by faith of Jesus Christ [f]unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference:

23 For [h]all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;

24 Being[i] justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus:

25 Whom God hath set forth[5] to be a propitiation [j]through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission[6] of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God;

26 To declare, I say, at this time [k]his righteousness: that [l]he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

27 Where[n] is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the [o]law of faith.

28 Therefore we conclude that [p]a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

29 Is[q] he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also:

30 Seeing[r] it is one God which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith.

31 Do[s] we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the [t]law.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Abraham's faith was imputed to him for righteousness. 10 before he was circumcised. 13 By faith only he and his seed received the promise. 16 Abraham is the father of all that believe. 24 Our faith also shall be credited to us for righteousness.

WHAT shall[a] we then say that Abraham, our[b] father[1] as pertaining to the flesh, hath found?

He meets the objection in this verse by showing that the words must apply to the Jews, inasmuch as they are found in the Jewish Scriptures. In fact he states that they are of universal application.—P.

[1] Not 'our father according to the flesh,' but 'what advantage or means of justification shall we say Abraham our father hath found pertaining to or resulting from the flesh?' That is, from circumcision or sacrifice. For, if he, the father, were not justified by these fleshly ordinances, how much less shall his children be justified by them?—C.

men, whether circumcised or uncircumcised, upon the ground of the same sacrifice of his Son, and by the same instrumentality of faith. 31. And no less manifest is it, that our believing renunciation of our own works in the matter of justification, and receiving the glorious sacrifice of Christ as the only ground of our pardon and acceptance, are so far from invalidating or setting aside the moral law, that hereby we greatly confirm and approve its authority, regard it as a mean of conviction, present it with a complete magnifying fulfilment of all its demands as a covenant, and are tenderly influenced and enabled to love, regard, and cheerfully obey it as a rule of life.

Ver. 2. Much every way—as exhibited ch. 2. 17–20; and afterwards enlarged ch. 9. 4, 5.—Chiefly: primarily.—Oracles: words of the mouth. The Scriptures are so called to signify that they are altogether the very words which God spake, and not merely a paraphrase or meaning of what he revealed. C.

Ver. 4. Yea, let God be true, &c. 'Yea, let God be (found) true (faithful to his promise), though every man there, every child of Abraham be found a liar'—unfaithful to the covenant. —When thou art judged. When God is judged, his promises and faithfulness being called in question. C.

Ver. 5. I speak as a man. I object in the irreverent and cavilling language of infidels, not as adopting their principles. C.

Ver. 6. How shall he judge in righteousness, if, according to the objection, ver. 5, he himself were found unrighteous? C.

Ver. 7. 'For if the truth (faithfulness of God in his promise to Abraham and his seed) hath abounded (been extended to myriads of Gentiles) through my lie (through the unfaithfulness and disobedience of the Jews), how am I (a Jew) judged as a sinner,' seeing I have been the means of magnifying the grace of God? C.

Ver. 8. As we. The apostle here speaks in his own person, and in conjunction with the Christian church, whose doctrine of justification by faith was, and still is, equally slandered by Jews and Gentiles; and his words furnish an answer to the preceding objection of the Jew, by showing that they are the legitimate but shocking consequence of his perverse reasoning in the preceding verse.—Whose damnation is just. That is, not necessarily of our calumniators, who may ignorantly think what they say, but of those who say, 'Let us do evil that good may come.' C.

Ver. 9. Are we [the Jews] better than they? Better than the Gentiles, in virtue of our national and ecclesiastical privileges? ch. 2. 17–20. The most eminent commentators consider this a return to the question in the first verse: and Bloomfield considers it another objection. Is it not rather the conclusive appeal of the apostle himself, as if he had said, 'Are we better than they,' by a perfect improvement of our greater advantages? C.

Ver. 20. In the present fallen state of man, the law's office is one, and indeed could not be, to effect justification; its office is humbler, but still essential—it is to convince man of sin, to show him his guilt and his helplessness, and thus, as a monitor and teacher, to lead him to Jesus. P.

Ver. 27. By the law of faith. Literally, 'by law of faith:' not by a law requiring faith, as if the gospel were a law, or, as it has been called, a new law, a remedial or mitigated law. For if the gospel were in any sense a law, then faith would, in that sense, be a 'deed of law.' But 'by deeds of law shall no flesh be justified.' The meaning must therefore be sought in a form of speech common in the Scriptures—common in all languages—the antanaclasis, or allusion to a preceding word. See, for example, Jn. 1. 10; 4. 31, 32, where the word 'world' in the one, and 'meat' in the other, is changed from the literal sense in the first occurrence to the figurative in the second. So Paul calls 'faith' a law, not because it literally is so, but because law was considered by the Jews as the ground of their salvation. But if salvation were by obedience to law, whatever that law might be, boasting could not be excluded. Boasting, however, is excluded, because Jews and Gentiles have alike been found under sin. Salvation by faith, then, is the only principle that can exclude boasting; for there can be no merit in believing a testimony and trusting to another. See Glassii Philol. Sac., Amstel. 1711, p. 929; and Carson on Figurative Language, p. 80. C.

Ver. 31. We establish the law in its condemning power, ver. 19, which the Jews, in their own case, never did, and also in its utmost moral requirements, when we show that by faith we receive that perfect righteousness by which the law was fulfilled by Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is an invaluable privilege to enjoy the word and ordinances of God, and yet very dangerous to rest in them. It is impossible to defeat the purposes or promises of God. The faithful shall obtain salvation, and the unfaithful fail. It is very common for ministers, especially if faithful, to be virulently reproached. And just is their eternal undoing who abuse the doctrines of grace to encourage themselves in licentiousness. How universal and fearful is the depravity of mankind! It discovers itself

2 For [c]if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory; but not before God.

3 For what saith the scripture? [d]Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness.

4 Now[e] to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.

5 But to him that worketh not,[2] but [g]believeth on him that justifieth [h]the ungodly, his faith[i] is counted for righteousness.

6 Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God [j]imputeth righteousness without works,

7 Saying, [k]Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered.

8 Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.

9 Cometh[l] this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? for we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness.[3]

10 How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? [m]not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision.

11 And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised; that he might be [n]the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; [o]that righteousness might be imputed unto them also:

12 And the father of circumcision to them who[q] are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised.

13 For[r] the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.[4]

14 For[s] if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect:

15 Because[t] the law worketh wrath: [u]for where no law is, there is no transgression.

16 Therefore[v] it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all,

17 (As it is written, [x]I have made thee a father of many nations,[5]) before him[6] whom he believed, even God, who [y]quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were.

18 Who[z] against hope believed in hope, that he might become [a]the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken, So shall thy seed be.

19 And being not [b]weak in faith, [c]he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sara's womb:

20 He [d]staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God;

21 And being fully persuaded that what he had promised [e]he was able also to perform.

22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness.[7]

23 Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him:

24 But[g] for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, [h]if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead;

25 Who[i] was delivered for our offences,[8] and [j]was raised again for our justification.

r This text is brought forward in proof of the general principle the apostle has laid down in the preceding verse, that Abraham is the spiritual father of all the faithful. His seed is co-extensive with faith in God. Here again Paul shows equal tact and logical acumen. The Jew with whom he argues might, through prejudice, withstand the power of his logic; but Paul produces a proof which no Jew would venture to resist.—P.

but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; 25 Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification.

in unnumbered forms of thoughts, words, and actions, in things dishonourable to God, and injurious to men. The divine law makes fearful work upon men's consciences when it charges all their sins home upon them. And it is absurd to expect happiness by that law which so deeply accuses us of crimes.—But how amazing is it that Jesus' sacrifice, and salvation through it, should be prepared for, offered and given to, such monsters of guilt, Jews or Gentiles! And yet it is exactly suited to our need, fully manifested and attested in Scripture; and highly and delightfully all the perfections of God, particularly his justice and mercy, are glorified in our redemption thereby. Yea, the reign of his grace, through Jesus' glorious sacrifice received by faith, effectually humbles our pride, establishes God's relation to us, honours his law, and promotes our holiness of heart and life.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1–3. Nay, even our natural father Abraham, notwithstanding his circumcision and remarkable piety, had no ground to glory before God, as if his own works had contributed to his justification; for the Scripture expressly declares that he believed the promise of the Messiah as the price and mean of blessing to all nations; and that what he believed concerning him was graciously placed to his account, as if he had done and suffered what the Messiah would do and suffer in his stead. 4, 5. Now, it is plain that if a man fulfil the law himself, by his own personal good works, in order to justification, his acceptance with God and eternal happiness cannot properly be by grace, but what he has a claim to as his due wages by the covenant of works; but if, conscious of his utter inability to yield any acceptable obedience to the law as a covenant, he renounces all his own works, as to their being any part of his justifying righteousness, and by faith receives what is freely given to him in the gospel promises by that gracious God who justifies sinners through faith in Christ his Son, it is certainly that which he receives by faith which must be accounted to him for righteousness. 6–8. Accordingly the Holy Ghost, by David, has declared blessed, not the men who fulfil the law in their own persons, but the sinners to whom God, because of faith in his Son which he gave as our Savior, has freely, fully, and irrevocably forgiven all their sins, and whose persons he hath graciously accepted and entitled to eternal life. 9–12. It is no less manifest also that this privilege of free justification through faith alone belongs as much to the uncircumcised Gentiles as to the circumcised Jews; for what Abraham believed on was accounted to him for righteousness, not after, but long before he was circumcised; and many years afterwards he received circumcision, in order to mark the sinful corruption of his nature, distinguish him and his seed for the peculiar people of God, bind them to act answerably to this character, and to assure him of his being already a partaker of the blessed righteousness of the Messiah, and an heir of all the promised blessings of the new kingdom—all which tended, through the infinite wisdom of God, to render him a noble pattern of faith, an eminent example of free justification through it, and a distinguished mean of conveying spiritual benefits to all true believers in after ages, whether Gentiles or Jews. 13. For the promise, that he should be the renowned chief of the believing world, Jews and Gentiles; and in the Messiah, his promised seed, be the prime heir and possessor of the blessings of this world and of that which is to come, was given to him and his spiritual seed, not through any law, natural or ceremonial, or his personal obedience to it, but through the sacrifice of Christ which is received by faith. 14, 15. And indeed, if men could become heirs of such blessings by their own personal obedience to any law, natural or revealed, the doctrine of justification by faith, and the free promise of God, must be entirely set aside; but in our present degenerate state, the law of nature and revelation condemns every man to punishment, irritates our sinful corruption to acts of wickedness, and awakens our consciences to expect the eternal wrath of God, and that because of our transgressing his commands. 16, 17. It being therefore absolutely impossible that any man can be entitled to spiritual or eternal blessings by his obedience to the law, moral or ceremonial, God has wisely as well as graciously provided that they should be bestowed merely by infinite grace, and received by faith, that so his promises might, notwithstanding all our unworthiness and sinfulness, be absolutely certain and infallibly accomplished to all the truly believing seed of Abraham, who is constituted the common pattern of faith and mean of blessing to us all, Jews or Gentiles, who believe after his example, before that almighty Object of his faith who invigorates men's bodies, or raises them when dead, or even spiritually quickens men who are dead in trespasses and sins, and

CHAPTER V.

1 Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, 2 and joy in our hope, 8 that since we were reconciled by his blood, when we were enemies, 10 we shall much more be saved being reconciled. 12 As sin and death came by Adam, 17 so much more righteousness and life by Jesus Christ. 20 Where sin abounded, grace did superabound.

THEREFORE being[a] justified by faith,[1] we[b] have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ:

2 By[c] whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

3 And not only so, but we [d]glory in tribulations[2] also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

4 And[e] patience, experience; and experience, hope;

5 And[g] hope maketh not ashamed;[3] because the love of God is [h]shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us.

6 For [i]when we were yet without strength, in due time[4] Christ died for the ungodly.

7 For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; yet [j]peradventure for a good man[5] some would even dare to die.

8 But [k]God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

9 Much[l] more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him.

10 For if, when we were enemies, [m]we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we [n]shall be saved by his life.[6]

11 And not only so, [p]but we also joy in God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement.[7]

12 Wherefore, [q]as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that[8] all have sinned:

13 (For [r]until the law, sin was in the world: [s]but sin is not imputed when there is no law.

14 Nevertheless, [t]death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, [u]who is the figure of him that was to come.

15 But not as the offence, [w]so also is the free gift. For if through the offence of one many who, being anxious to produce them, speaks of things that are not with as much distinctness and certainty as if they actually existed. 18–21. In view of which, notwithstanding all the difficulties and high improbabilities arising from the condition of his own and his wife's body, Abraham was firmly confident, without any discernible doubts or staggerings of unbelief, that God, who had promised to make him the father of many nations, would certainly exert his almighty power in performing it. 22. And his faith, thus going out towards the Messiah, and receiving and resting upon him and his righteousness, that which he received and rested upon was accounted to him as his justifying righteousness before God. 23–25. Now the inspired account of this matter is transmitted to us, not chiefly to honour Abraham, but to direct and encourage us to believe that the very same righteousness which was credited to him for his justification shall in like manner be credited to us, if we truly and cordially trust in that same almighty and gracious God who, that we might be blessed in him with all his spiritual blessings, hath raised from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, who was, by himself and his Father, delivered up to servile obedience, sufferings, and death, to make atonement for our sins and secure our salvation, and was raised again to immortal life and glory, that he might become as our public Head and Representative, and that, in consequence hereof, we might, if we receive him, be delivered from condemnation, accepted into God's favour, and entitled to eternal life through the impartation of his sacrificial life to us in believing.

Ver. 11. That righteousness might be imputed unto them also. How can a sinner be made righteous? Paul answers, by faith in Christ. The doctrine of sacrifice being fundamental in truth, and most essential to the assurance of understanding (Col. 2. 2), faith (He. 10. 22), and hope (He. 6. 11), may be established by the three following steps of evidence:—(1) Some righteousness, whatever it may be, is imparted: see ver. 6, 11. (2) There is no human righteousness of any kind; see ch. 3. 10. (3) The only righteousness revealed in the gospel is the righteousness of God, ch. 1. 17; 4. 22–24; therefore the conclusion is inevitable that the believer is justified by faith in Christ who fulfilled the righteous law. C.

Ver. 13. For where no law is, there is no transgression. Consequently, where 'transgression' is, there must be 'law.' But Jews and Gentiles have alike been proved guilty, ch. 3. 9, 22; therefore, under law—under wrath—and so, by law, not justified, but condemned. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The best of men can obtain nothing but emptiness by their own works. But justification through the obedience of Christ opens a door of hope to the most heinous transgressor who receives it by faith. This method at once delightfully secures the highest glory to God and happiness to every believer. And the death and resurrection of our Redeemer harmoniously concur to promote our full salvation and comfort. Here we have a sure foundation for the most unshaken faith in the promises of a faithful, almighty, and unchangeable God, notwithstanding all the obstructions and discouragements in ourselves or others which stand in the way of their fulfilment. And great is the mercy that now righteousness, grace, and salvation are extended to believing Gentiles equally as to Jews—as to Abraham; and that whatever is recorded concerning him or David, is granted to us, to encourage our faith and hope. And it is very necessary, for our instruction and comfort, everywhere in Scripture to observe accurately what relates to the justification of a sinner before God.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1. Therefore, being thus justified by faith, we are received into peace, favour, and friendship with God, and enjoy a pleasant serenity of soul towards him, through the sacrifice, resurrection, and intercession of Christ. 2. By whom, as our Mediator, Peace-maker, and spiritual Husband, we, under the direction and influence of the Holy Ghost, have a free and open access into this excellent state of favour and acceptance with God, and into the actual enjoyment of all saving graces implanted in our heart; in which we, with great honour, stand on the sure foundation of God's perfections and promises, and of Christ's person, offices, and work, remaining firmly thereon, and rejoice in the assured hope that God will quickly and exceedingly manifest the glory of his own perfections, counsels, and operations, in making us partakers of the glorious and immediate enjoyment of himself: 3. In the exercise of which hope we triumph over and glory in all the distressing afflictions and persecutions which befall us in life, being persuaded, by the Word and Spirit of God, and our own observation and experience, that they are all wisely ordered, overruled, and blessed by God, to beget in us a calm submission to his will, and patient bearing of whatever hardships he thinks fit to lay upon us. 4. And this patience produces much useful experience and proof of the truth of our graces under trials, and of the emptiness of worldly things, and the excellency of things spiritual and heavenly; and of God's wise, powerful, and gracious care over us, and of his seasonably helping and supporting us, and sanctifying his providential dispensations to us.—And this experience contributes to wean our affections from the things of this world, and raise them to things above, and to encourage our hopes of their eternal enjoyment. 5. And this well grounded hope, we certainly know, will never shamefully disappoint us, as it rests on the compassion of God, abundantly manifested to our souls; and has an earnest of its fulfilment in that ardent love to God nurtured in them by the Holy Ghost, whom he has given to abide constantly in us, as our counsellor, comforter, and sanctifier, and as a witness and pledge of his full and constant love to us. 6. For when we were in the most sinful and miserable condition, utterly incapable of appeasing the wrath of God, or recovering ourselves from ruin and danger, nay, profanely unmindful of and contemning God, Jesus Christ, in the most proper season, when our guilt, wickedness, and need were increased to the highest, died for us impotent, wretched, and ungodly creatures. 7. Among men scarcely could any be found who would willingly sacrifice their life for the redemption of a harmless or upright man; and but few that would have enough of courage, gratitude, or friendship to do it for the sake of a public-spirited, bountiful man, who had been, and might continue to be, an uncommon blessing to his family, friends, and country. 8. But God has, in the most transcendent and astonishing manner, manifested his love towards us, in that while we were, by nature and practice, highly injurious to him and to one another, and justly condemned by his law to utter destruction, Jesus Christ, his only-begotten Son, according to his appointment, died a most accursed, tormenting, and shameful death, to secure our forgiveness and eternal life. 9. Now, if God so loved us when we were under the power and guilt of sin, much more may we hope that, having all our sins pardoned and our persons accepted, through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, we shall certainly be delivered from all punishment through faith in him. 10. For if, when we were not only weak, sinful, and ungodly, but even malicious enemies, rebels, and traitors against God, he had, in his Word and providence, and our own consciences, declared his just indignation against us, Jesus' obedience and suffering as our sacrifice for sin triumphantly opened a way for communicating his grace and favour to us, much more coming into a state of favour and friendship with God, shall we be actually delivered from all sin and misery, and advanced to perfect blessedness in the immediate and eternal enjoyment of God. 11. Having, then, these views, we not only rejoice in hope of receiving spiritual and eternal blessings from God, through a living faith in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who loved us and gave himself for us, who thus made it possible for us to be justified before God; by faith in whom, we, Jews or Gentiles, have now, under gospel discoveries, approved of, accepted, rested upon, and taken comfort in his sacrifice, as the only atoning sacrifice that can really redeem us from sin, and recommend us to the favour of God.—12. The fall of all mankind in the first Adam further proves the universal necessity and illustrates the nature of a free jusbe dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many.

16 And[x] not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation, but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.

17 For if by one man's offence[9] death[y] reigned by one; [z]much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ.)

18 Therefore, as by the offence[1] of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one[2] the free gift came upon all men unto justification[3] of life.

19 For [b]as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners,[4] so[c] by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous.

20 Moreover, [d]the law entered, that the offence might abound. But [e]where sin abounded, grace did much more abound:[5]

21 That as sin hath reigned unto death,[6] even so might [g]grace reign, through righteousness, unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord.

CHAPTER VI.

1 We may not live in sin, 2 for we are dead unto it, 3 as appeareth by our baptism. 12 Let not sin reign any more, 18 because we have yielded ourselves to the service of righteousness, 23 and for that death is the wages of sin.

WHAT[a] shall we say then? [b]Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound?[1]

2 God[c] forbid. [d]How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?

3 Know ye not, that [e]so many of us as were[2] baptized[3] into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?

4 Therefore we are [f]buried with him by baptism into death; that [h]like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so [i]we also should walk in newness of life.

5 For[j] if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection:[4]

6 Knowing this, that [k]our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin

7 For[l] he that is dead is freed[5] from sin.

8 Now[n] if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him:

9 Knowing that Christ, [o]being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

10 For[p] in that he died, he died unto sin once: [q]but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God.

11 Likewise[r] reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

12 Let[s] not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof.

13 Neither[t] yield ye your members as instruments[6] of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God.

14 For[u] sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.

15 What[w] then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid.

16 Know ye not, that [x]to whom ye yield your-

* If salvation be wholly by grace—if works have no part in it—if it be so that the more heinous the transgression, the more abundant becomes the grace of pardon, then may we put no restraint on our sinful career so that the grace of God may in the end become the more conspicuous? Such a presumptuous objection Paul meets with a short and decisive denial. Then he shows that such a thing is impossible, because faith which justifies is the act of a changed—a regenerated nature, which hates sin, and delights in holiness. F.

tification, through the great sacrifice of Christ, for both Jews and Gentiles; for sin by him, as our common parent and federal head, broke in upon all men, from his eating the forbidden fruit; his first sin opened the way, and this wilful, awful disobedience, and the corruption of nature attending it, being spread among them, and a sentence of death, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, being passed upon them, because of sin, death, in all its hideous forms, in and through him as their public head, spread over all mankind, as persons descended from him. 13, 14. And it is manifest that, by virtue of some law, sin was charged, and its penalty inflicted, in the world before God gave the law to the Jewish nation by Moses. Nay, for 2500 years before, all along from Adam's fall, death, the inseparable attendant of sin, had reigned over mankind, cutting off one generation after another, leading men to the most outrageous acts of violence and bloodshed. Instead of pity and love, men were controlled by self-interest and hate. 15. But though Adam, as the federal head of his natural posterity, was a remarkable type of Jesus Christ, the gracious benefit which comes through the righteousness of the one is more than answerable to the mischievous effects of the first sin of the other; for if, through the sinful fall of a mere man, sentence of death was brought upon all his natural posterity as the just wages of his sin, much more must that God, who delighteth in mercy, cause his rich and undeserved favours and blessings to abound, through the glorious sacrifice of Christ, to all mankind, in bestowing upon them greater happiness than they lost by the fall. 16. And not only does the gracious favour of God, through the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, remove the guilt and curse of that one offence of Adam's eating the forbidden fruit, which brought the sentence of condemnation upon all mankind, but procures a complete forgiveness of that and innumerable other personal transgressions, and a full acceptance unto eternal life. 17. And therefore if, by the destructive fall of one mere man as their representative, death, in all its forms, has invaded, subdued, and exercised dominion over all men, through their natural connection with him, much more they who become partakers of the rich abundance of God's love and favour through Christ, and have his infinitely valuable sacrifice imparted to them, and are interested in all the superabundant blessings secured by it, shall enjoy a glorious freedom from sin and death, and reign honourably in grace and glory, in union to and in fellowship with Jesus Christ. 18. But notwithstanding such circumstantial differences, the manner of conveying Adam's guilt and Jesus' righteousness is the very same in substance; for as by one offence of Adam, sin, and through it condemnation to death, spiritual, temporal, and eternal, came upon all his natural posterity, so, by the righteousness of our one Mediator and Surety Jesus Christ, and by that alone, pardon of all sins, past, present, and to come, and an acceptance unto life, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, came to all who accepted Christ. 19. For as by the influences of Adam's sin of eating the forbidden fruit, all his natural posterity are legally charged with it, and so judicially constituted sinners, and being condemned as such, are brought under the punishment of an unholy and sinful nature, prone to all evil, so, by the impartation of Christ's holiness of nature, obedience of life, and sacrificial sufferings, all the world is put into such relations with God that it becomes possible for him to save all who believe in Christ. 20. For God never gave the law, moral or ceremonial, to mankind in expectation of their obtaining justification and life by it; but the covenant of work was made with Adam, and the entrance of sin was occasioned by it, as an intended mean of glorifying the exceeding riches of his grace; and the moral law was afterwards solemnly published, and the ceremonial established, in order to manifest the dreadful nature and effects of man's fall; but in his infinite, free, universal, and unparalleled love, favour, and mercy, God took occasion, from the extensive spread, outrageous prevalence, and high aggravations of sin, to exert and manifest the most illustrious, extensive, and superabounding power of his grace, in pardoning not only the first, but all transgressions, if only those who committed them would repent of their sins and trust in Christ. 21. That as sin, through the offence of Adam, had prevailed and cruelly tyrannized over mankind, triumphantly rendering them obnoxious to temporal, spiritual, and eternal death, so the free favour and mercy of God might prevail and triumph over sin, however powerful or aggravated, in pardoning and subduing it, and spreading abroad the blessings of salvation among sinful men, saving them through a life of faith to God here, and immediate and eternal enjoyment of him hereafter, through the sacrifice and by the mediation of Jesus Christ.

Ver. 11. Not only so. That is, not only shall we be saved from wrath to come, but we now joy in God himself, because we have a present salvation through his Son. C.

Ver. 12. For that, or, 'inasmuch as all have sinned'—that is, in Adam. 1 Co. 15. 22—'for Adam's sin was in a legal sense credited to his posterity as to himself' (R. Haldane). And if any sceptical objector ask, How could these things be so? it is replied, Was not Adam's life as truly the life of every one of his posterity as it was his own? Were not his posterity as truly in him when he received and violated the commandment of God, as Levi was in Abraham when he paid tithes to Melchisedec? These two facts must silence, even though they fail to convince, the sceptical philosopher or the erring Christian. C.

Ver. 14. Even over them, &c. That is, over infants, the only class who 'have not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression;' that is, against a declared, known, and positive law, either revealed in words or written in the conscience. See Haldane.

REFLECTIONS.—Thrice happy is the state into which believers are brought by the gospel! A delightfully free justification, peace with God, spiritual establishment, comfort, and well-grounded hopes of eternal felicity, come to us through Jesus' person and blood. And all things amazingly work together for our spiritual and everlasting welfare. Transcendent and unbounded is the love of God manifested in Jesus' obedience and death for us, who were so unholy, wicked, and wretched. And certain and full is our everlasting salvation through him. Since all mankind are descended from Adam, who partook of the forbidden fruit and thereby brought his posterity under the condemnation of the law, God in his mercy gave his Son, who kept the law and thereby made it possible to save all who believe in Christ And much greater and more effectual are the blessings brought in by Jesus, our new federal head, to all who believe, than all the loss and want entailed by Adam on his natural posterity O my soul, contemplate, believe, admire, and share these glories, these blessings of redeeming grace!

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1, 2. But if our justification thus wholly depend upon the free grace of God through the impartation of Jesus' righteousness, and God's free favour superabound where sin had abounded, should we thence take encouragement to continue in and more eagerly practise wickedness, that God's grace may be the more illustriously displayed in pardoning and saving us? Nothing could be more detestable and horrid, or even more unnatural, to a renewed heart; for though we cannot be justified by our own works, yet how could we, who are delivered from the guilt and dominion of sin, and whose affections are mortified to it, in any consistency with our state and character, or any sense of duty or gratitude, or with any conscience, hope, or peace, allow ourselves to continue in or practise any known iniquity? 3. Know ye not that our baptism with water, by the authority and into the profession, faith, and obedience of Jesus Christ, signified and sealed our spiritual union to him, as members of his mystical body; and the mortification as well as the remission of our sin, through the influence of his death; and our federal obligation to concur with the end of his death, to redeem us from all iniquity? 4. It is therefore not only incumbent on us to be conformable to Christ's death in the crucifixion of our sinful lusts, but to give continued proofs thereof, in conformity to his lying in the grave; that as he was raised from the dead by the glorious power and operation of his Father, and in order to receive with him the reward of his glorifying him on earth, we, by virtue derived from him as our living and quickening Head, being quickened to a spiritual and heavenly life, should, with freedom, constancy, and in a progressive manner, daily live in all holy obedience, from new principles and motives, and by a new rule, and to new ends—the praise and glory of God. 5. For if, as is represented in baptism, we are so united to Christ as our mystical Head that we receive from him gracious influences to render us conformable to him in his death, by the mortification of sin and separation of our souls from it, we shall certainly receive influences from him as our risen Saviour to enable us to live like him in holiness, till we are admitted into immediate fellowship with him in his heavenly glory. 6. For from the principles of the gospel we know that the subtle corruption of our nature derived from Adam, and spread into all the members of our body and faculties of our soul, is mortally wounded through Jesus Christ's death, he having died for this very end, that its whole frame, power, and authority should be gradually but powerfully mortified, subdued, and utterly destroyed, that from this very time we should never willingly yield ourselves to its inclinations and influence, or serve its interests and designs. 7. For whosoever is thus dead to the reign and love of sin, through conformity to his crucified Head and Saviour, is freed from its domineering power and command over him, and is delivered from all allowed inclinations and desires to serve it. 8. Now if, through the merits and influence of Christ's death, we, by virtue of union to and fellowship with him, are thus conformed to him in an effectual death unto sin, we are assured, from God's Word and by his Spirit, that, through virtue derived from him as our risen Redeemer, we shall be enabled to live a spiritual, holy, and heavenly life here, till we are raised to an eternal life of immediate fellowship with him hereafter. 9, 10. For we are certain that Christ, our risen and exalted Head, will never more die, or be obnoxious to death; but having, by his one death on the cross, fully because of our faith in Christ, pardoned our sins, he is raised from the dead to a life heavenly, immortal, and divine, wholly calculated to promote the glory of his Father's perfections. 11. If he then, by dying once, made possible the pardon of sin through faith in him, and so destroyed the power of it, that he now lives in eternal honour to the glory of God, it becomes you to reckon yourselves dead, and actually to be dead, to the reign, love, and practice of sin, through union to and fellowship with him; but spiritually alive in your hearts and affections, loving and serving God in thought, word, and deed, as under the power of gracious principles and influences derived from him as our common Saviour and Lord. 12, 13. Take heed therefore that ye never suffer sin so to prevail in either your souls or your frail, corruptible, and mortal bodies, as to make you yield any voluntary obedience to the corrupt desires and solicitations of those sinful lusts which still remain in you, or at any time to make you willingly employ your bodily members, or the affections of your souls, as instruments of warfare against God, or of serving the cause or gratifying the perverse inclinations of sin; but with full consent, and without reserve, give up your whole selves, soul and body, to God through Christ, your only rightful Sovereign, to whom all your obedience is due, that ye may therein act as persons delivered from condemnation and quickened by his regenerating Spirit; and cheerfully employ all the members of your body and powers of your soul as instruments of warfare with sin, and of serving God in holiness and righteousness. 14. To encourage you in which, know assuredly that, however your inward corruptions may trouble, perplex, and wound you, and strive for the mastery in you, yet they shall never regain their allowed and uncontrolled power over any who accept Christ; for ye are not now under the covenant of works, which, however severely it forbids and condemns for sin, affords no pardon of it or effectual assistance against it; but ye are under the covenant of grace, which secures full forgiveness of, redemption from, and assistance against sin, and affords every powerful motive and help to holy obedience; and under the influence of God's sin-subduing and heart-sanctifying favour; and under the government of a gracious principle of grace implanted in your hearts. 15. Now nothing can be more contrary to the perfections of God, the design of the gospel, or your gracious character and state, than to pervert such a gracious deliverance and state as an encouragement to sin. 16. Ye cannot but know that it is impossible for you to divide your chosen services between opposite governors, but ye must be the proper servants of whatever you voluntarily give up yourselves to the habitual obedience of, whether it be to sin, the service of which is deadly, and issues in eternal death, or whether it be to holiness in the obedience of faith, for bringing forth the fruits of righteousness to the glory of God. 17. But blessed be God that though all of you who are real Christians were once the voluntary servants and slaves of your sinful lusts, ye have, by his almighty and gracious influences, and through your faith in Jesus Christ been made to receive and obey those evangelical doctrines and commands which have been communicated to you by Christ and his ministers, and which, by their powerful impression on you, have formed you after his own image. 18. And being set at liberty from the tyrannical dominion and lordship of sin in your wills, affections, and conversation, ye have through your faith in Christ, ye have been brought to holiness which God has implanted in your hearts in conformity to his own righteous law. 19 In condescension to your weak capacities, enfeebled by the present frailties of nature and remains of a sinful nature, I use this common similitude of master and servant, and I affirm that, as in your unregenerate state ye resigned and employed all the members of your body and powers of your soul in the voluntary service of unclean, unrighteous, and ungodly principles and habits of sin, which cruelly reigned and tyrannized over you, and rendered you more guilty, vile, and miserable, by adding sin to sin,—so ye should now, when brought into a state of grace, act up to the dignity, obligation, and holiness of your character, earnestly employing all your members and faculties in the exercise of your faith in Christ, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world. 20. For when ye were the willing servants and slaves of your sinful lusts, ye were wholly estranged from and disaffected to every principle of holiness, insensible of all obligations to piety or virtue, and even pleased with an unrestrained inclination to wickedness. 21. But what real profit, honour, or satisfaction did ye ever find, or could you expect to find, in your former sinful courses? Were they not attended with remorse, defilement, reproach, trouble, disappointment, loss, and mischief to yourselves? And are ye not now filled with holy confusion, self-abasement, and shame in every review of them, as things foolish and unworthy, highly ungrateful, offensive, and dishonourable to God, and no less ruinous and destructive to your own souls and bodies in time and eternity? 22. But now that, by the mighty power and grace of God in assisting you by his love in Jesus Christ and giving other principles and habits to you, ye are set at liberty from the reign and love of sin, as well as from the guilt of it, and made the willing and obedient servants of God in Christ, ye grow in grace, and bring forth the fruits 23 For [j]the wages of sin is death; [k]but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

CHAPTER VII.

1 No law hath power over a man longer than he liveth. 4 But we are dead to the law. 7 Yet is not the law sin, 12 but holy, just, good, 16 as I acknowledge, who am grieved because I cannot keep it.

KNOW ye not, [a]brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,[1]) [b]how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he[2] liveth?

2 For [c]the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband.

3 So[d] then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: [e]but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

4 Wherefore,[3] my brethren, [f]ye also are become dead to the law[4] by the body of Christ; that [h]ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, [i]that we should bring forth fruit unto God.

5 For when we were [j]in the flesh, the motions[5] of sins, which were by the law,[6] did[k] work in our members, to bring forth fruit unto death.

6 But[l] now we are delivered from the law, that being dead[7] wherein we were [s]held; [n]that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter.[9]

7 What shall we say then? [o]Is the law sin? God forbid. [p]Nay, I had not known sin but by the law: for I had not known lust,[1] except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet.

8 But sin, [q]taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence. [r]For without the law sin was dead.

9 For [s]I was alive without the law once: but [t]when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died.

10 And the commandment, [u]which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death.

11 For[v] sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me.

12 Wherefore [x]the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good.

13 Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. [y]But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which of righteousness and holiness in this world, the final issue and perfection of which is an honourable and everlasting blessedness graciously bestowed in the world to come. 23. For death, in all its hideous forms, spiritual, temporal, or eternal, is all the wages allotted by the law of God, or which can be procured by all our labours and sufferings in the service of sin; but that everlasting life which consists in the immediate and full enjoyment of and conformity to God, which is the issue of holiness in heart and practice, though not indeed the proper wages of it, is the transcendently free gift of God bestowed on us, because we through the influence of the Holy Spirit repent of our sins and exercise faith in Jesus Christ, our only, and appointed, and well furnished Saviour and Lord.

Ver. 5. Planted. Christ, as the seed of life, was 'planted' in the grave, whence, as the tree of life, he arose, and is now planted in paradise, Re. 22. 2. Believers were planted with him in death, and shall with him spring up to spiritual newness of life. See 1 Co. 15. 42–44. C.

Ver. 6. Our old man. All that is derived from Adam 'is crucified:' for all believers die with Christ on the cross, as they were all represented by him as their Savior Ep. 1. 22; Col. 2. 9 C.

Ver. 7. The word here translated 'freed' occurs fifteen times in this epistle, and twenty-five times in other parts of the New Testament; and except in one other instance, where it is translated 'righteous,' it is uniformly rendered 'justified,' which sense should certainly be retained in this place. C.

Ver. 15. Not under the law. Rather, 'not under law:' any law, whether natural or revealed as a covenant of works, not merely commanding and requiring, but judging and condemning us as sinners, ch. 3. 19, 20.—Under grace—as a covenant of promise, pardon, acceptance, and spiritual help, Ep. 2. 12–19: He. 4. 16. C.

Ver. 16. Obedience. Not obedience to law for production of righteousness, for that is plainly impossible (ch. 3. 20), but 'obedience to faith' (ch. 1. 5; 16. 19), submission to the doctrine of the gospel (ch. 2. 8), in accordance with the passages where the expression elsewhere occurs, as Ac. 6. 7; Ga. 3. 1; 2 Th. 1. 8: 1 Pe. 1. 22; Ro. 10. 3, comp. with 16. 'Obedience to Christ,' 2 Co. 10. 5, which obedience conducts to the righteousness of Christ, produces the fruits and works the works of righteousness—see ver. 14, 18, 19—righteousness being personified as a master. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Groundless and very injurious is every charge of lawlessness on the doctrine of the free justification of sinners through the great sacrifice of Christ. Nothing is more detestable to a renewed heart than to continue in sin because grace does, or that it may, abound. For though our good works do not procure, yet they necessarily follow our justification by faith; and to indulge ourselves in sin, or to neglect the study of holiness, is a flat contradiction to all the signification and engagements of our baptism, and is absolutely inconsistent with our character, privilege, or duty, as members of Christ, and partakers of his grace and glory. Yea, delightful, excellent, and useful are the effects of regenerating grace. What dying to sin! what spiritual quickening to our holy and heavenly life! What a holy, comfortable, and edifying walk before God, from new principles and ends, and after the new pattern of Christ, and by virtue derived from his death and resurrection! There is need then to examine ourselves fully, whether sin or holiness have the ascendency in our hearts and lives. It is shameful to be less for the Lord Christ after our conversion than we were for sin before it. And all the blessed deliverances from sin ought to render it and its service detestable to us.—Alas! what confusion and wrath follow upon sin! But abundant, eternal, and free is the redemption which comes to us through Jesus Christ.

---

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1–3. I now appeal to all of you who know the law of nature or revelation, that no man can be bound by any law longer than he lives under it, or stands related to it; and that, however strictly the law of marriage binds a wife to abide with and perform all necessary duties to her husband whilst they both live, yet if he die she is fully delivered from that obligation, and may even be married to another man, as freely as if she had never had any connection with her deceased husband. 4. In like manner, my dear Christian brethren, ye, through Christ's fulfilment of the law in your stead by his obedience unto death, are perfectly delivered from all connection with it as a covenant, requiring personal righteousness in order to justification before God, justifying you for your good works, or condemning you for your sins,—in order that, in a state of spiritual marriage, union to, and fellowship with him, as your risen Husband and Saviour, and by a principle of spiritual life derived from him, ye may bring forth fruits of holiness to the glory of God, acceptable to him through Jesus Christ. 5. For while we, Jews or Gentiles, were in our carnal, unconverted state, under the full power and influence of our natural corruption, which works so much by our bodies, the violent passions thereof, irritated by the purity of the precepts and severity of the curses of the broken law of works, powerfully employed all our members and faculties in incessant labours of wickedness, greatly dishonouring to God and eternally ruinous to ourselves. 6. But now, the law in that form being dead to us through Christ's complete fulfilment of all its demands in our stead, we are delivered from all its requirements of perfect obedience in order to justification, and its rigorous sentences of condemnation on account of sin, that through union to and fellowship with him, we might, from new principles, motives, and ends, under the influence of his Spirit, cordially and spiritually serve God in all holiness of heart and life, and not with mere ceremonial and external devotions and virtue. 7. But let none imagine that because subjection to the law as a covenant retains us in our sinfulness, and deliverance from it promotes gospel holiness, therefore its moral precepts are causes of rather than checks to sin. With detestation of the thought, I can, from my own experience, affirm that my conscience had never been convinced of the sinfulness of the secret workings of irregular desires, and the first motions of inordinate affections, unless I had found that the law had forbidden all impatience, discontent, envious grudging, or uneasy and irregular inclinations to worldly enjoyments. 8. But though the holy law thus discovers and forbids the most secret operations of wickedness, and never gave me any proper occasion of sinning, yet the reigning corruption of my heart basely took occasion from the strictness and severity of the law, and, through my own natural enmity against God, wrought in me all manner of sinful inclinations and desires after that which is forbidden; for as long as I continued without any true sense of the spirituality, holiness, strictness, and extent of the divine law, sin, and especially heart-sins, appeared to me quite trifling and harmless, without any power or danger. 9. Nay, I then imagined myself in a good state, deserving of, and able and inclined by my good works to recommend me to, God's favour; yea, able to entitle to, and prepare myself for, eternal life. But when the Holy Ghost applied the commandments closely to my conscience, as reaching to my inmost thoughts, principles, views, and desires, as well as to my words and actions, I could not but be convinced of inconceivable multitudes of sins, and degrees of their aggravation, beyond what I had ever thought of, and of my just exposure to divine wrath on account of them. And while I lost all hopes of eternal life by my own performances, and my conscience condemned me to eternal death for my sins, my inward corruption, irritated by the holiness and severity of God's law, raged more and more against him; and this increased my spiritual death in sins, and my danger of eternal ruin. 10. And thus I found God's holy law, as a covenant of works, which was originally framed for a mean of men's justification and eternal happiness through Adam's perfect obedience to it, a tremendous instrument of condemning me to death—temporal, spiritual, and eternal; and, through my own indwelling lusts, a mean of increasing my spiritual death, and alienation from and enmity against God. 11. For my inward lusts, impatient of restraint, took occasion from the strict holiness of its commands and awful severity of its threatenings, to rage against both the is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful.

14 For we know that the law is [s]spiritual: but I am [t]carnal, sold under sin.

15 For[h] that which I do, I allow[2] not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I.

16 If then I do that which I would not, [i]I consent unto the law that it is good.

17 Now then [d]it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

18 For I know that [t]in me, (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: [g]for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not.

19 For[k] the good that I would, I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do.

20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

21 I find then a [l]law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me.

22 For [j]I delight in the law of God after [k]the inward man:

23 But I see [l]another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members.

24 O[m] wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this [u]death?[3]

25 I[p] thank God,[4] through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then, [q]with the mind I myself serve the law of God;[5] but with the flesh the law of sin.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 They that are in Christ, and live according to the Spirit, are free from condemnation. 5, 13 What harm cometh of the flesh, 6, 14 and what good of the Spirit: 17 and what of being God's child, 19 whose glorious deliverance all things long for, 29 was beforehand decreed from God, 38 What can sever us from his love?

THERE is[a] therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who [b]walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

2 For[c] the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the [d]law of sin and death.

3 For what the law could not do, [e]in that it was weak through the flesh, [f]God, sending his own Son in the likeness[1] of sinful flesh, and for sin,[2] condemned sin in the flesh:

law and the Lawgiver; and thus insensibly drew me into the commission of many forbidden evils, and so increased my inward corruption, and enlarged the sentence of my condemnation to death; while the law, further applied to my conscience, convinced me that all my hopes of recommending myself to God's favour were utterly groundless. 12. Since therefore the moral law gives no occasion to, but discovers, forbids, and condemns every sin, it must be acknowledged an intrinsically pure, holy, just, right, and true, good and excellent, eternal and unchangeable, rule and standard of all holiness and righteousness, everyway becoming the holy, righteous, and good God to enjoin, and intelligent creatures to obey, for his glory and their own advantage. 13. Nor is this holy law the cause of the mischief and death which comes upon mankind. Nay, from this representation of it, derived from my own experience, it is evident that sin, therein showing itself a most malignant and destructive evil, by a vile abuse of the law, produced in me what was wicked, and brought me under a righteous and manifest sentence of condemnation and death,—that thus rising up in desperate opposition to the holy law of God, it might be made to appear infinitely odious, unreasonable, and injurious, directly contrary to him and pernicious to men. 14. For though I, and all those who have felt its thorough convictions, are certain that this law of God is pure and spiritual, reaching not only to external words, actions, or appearances, but to the thoughts, dispositions, principles, motives, and ends of our heart, and requiring both internal and external obedience to be performed in a spiritual manner; yet, alas! notwithstanding all the powerful influences of God's grace which I have experienced, such are my deficiencies, and such the remains of corruption in me, that I am quite ashamed of myself, as inexpressibly carnal, and too often employed by my sinful lusts, as if I were still their slave, sold into their hands by Adam's fall and my own former consent. 15. I am indeed far from allowing myself in any known violations of God's law; but, alas! I too often, through sloth or inadvertence, neglect or unprofitably perform the duties which I am desirous of observing and persevering in, and am, to my great grief, drawn into the commission of those sins which I habitually and determinately abhor. 16. If then I have a supreme, fixed, and habitual aversion to those sins which I commit in opposition to God's holy law, I thereby manifest that I am so far renewed in heart, that I approve of it as right in all points, even to the condemning of myself. 17. And through this change which God's grace hath made in me, it is no longer my whole self, or even my better part, my renewed judgment, will, and affections, that inclines to transgress the law, or to commit what it forbids, but it is the remaining sinful tendencies of my nature, which I disallow and abhor, that would transgress. 18. For I know, by sad experience, that in my sinful nature, considered in itself, nothing spiritually good has any residence; and even though the principles of grace imparted to me by regeneration be wholly inclined to that which is good and holy, yet, through the power of fleshly nature and concurring temptations, and the want of a lively exercise of faith on Christ's person and fulness, I cannot perform holy duties in that spiritual and vigorous manner in which I resolve and sincerely desire to do them. 19. For while by faith I am kept from gross vices, and have an unfeigned respect to all his commandments, yet I do not attain that universal conformity to them which I aim at, and too frequently fall into sins of infirmity which I really hate and detest. 20. Since then these sinful falls are contrary to the reigning bent of my heart, I must insist on it, to the honour of God's work of grace in me, to the honour of his holy, just, and good law, and to the just reproach of sin, as an unreasonable violation of it, that it is not my whole or renewed self that knowingly and willingly does the abominable things which God hates, but it is owing to those remains of my sinful corruption of nature which I do not oppose, watch, pray, and labour against so much as I ought. 21. I therefore find an evil principle of sin so powerfully working in me by suggestings, sinful allurements, and prevailing insinuations, that often, when I am essaying to perform holy duties, some bad motion or influence presents itself in opposition to my unfeigned endeavours, and unawares draws me into something unlawful. 22. For certain I am, that so far as my soul is renewed by the grace of God, I have the greatest delight and noblest satisfaction in all the precepts of God's law as right and good, and cordially desire to yield them the most perfect obedience. 23. But, alas! notwithstanding all my experience of God's grace, I feel in me a powerful principle of sinfulness residing in my whole man, and peculiarly working in my sensitive passions and appetites, and earnestly opposing all the holy aims and endeavours of that governing spiritual principle of grace divinely implanted in my judgment, conscience, and will, and sometimes prevailing to render me its unwilling captive, and involve me in acts of wickedness. 24. And, alas! how vile, loathsome, and miserable am I in myself on this account! O when shall an almighty and infinitely gracious God deliver me from this detestable and deadly system of indwelling lusts which dwell in and overspread my whole nature, and render me so loathsome and inactive before him, and which, but for his mercy, would certainly issue in my eternal destruction! 25. But blessed be his name, through Christ, that, by his deep love and the working of his grace in me, I am already delivered from the guilt and dominion of sin, and have an assured hope of a complete deliverance from all the defiling remains of it at last, through the obedience, suffering, and intercession of Jesus Christ, your and my Lord and Saviour. So then, to sum up all in a few words, so far as I am renewed by the grace of God, with settled judgment and choice, and with full approbation, resolution, and consent, I devote my whole man to God; and as his willing servant yield an unfeigned and unreserved obedience to his law; but so far as the disallowed sinful tendencies prevail in me, I am brought under the influence of sinful lusts, and led shamefully to serve their abominable interests and demands.

Ver. 14. Sold at the fall for a promise never fulfilled, and seized as a slave, whom none but Jesus can set free.—Note, Of whom speaks the apostle? Of himself, as a renewed believer, evidently, for the following reasons:—(1) He had been once, in his own view, alive, but now knew that he was dead, ver. 9-11. (2) He had acknowledged the law and commandment holy, just, and good, ver. 12. (3) He had discovered sin to be 'exceeding sinful,' ver. 13—an acknowledgment and conclusion to which the unregenerate never arrive. (4) He allowed not, and he hated sin, ver. 15; but the unrenewed 'take pleasure in sin and sinners,' ch. 1. 32. (5) He delighted in the law of God, ver. 22, a delight the unregenerate never feel. (6) The law of his mind warred against sin, ver. 23; the mind of the unregenerate is 'enmity against God.' (7) He felt his wretchedness, and longed for deliverance, ver. 24; the unregenerate never desire more than continuance in sin with pardon. (8) With his mind he served God, ver. 25; but the mind of the unrenewed is not and cannot be rendered subject to the will of God, ch. 8. 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Marvellous, but certain, glorious, and full, is our deliverance from the broken law of works, by our union to Christ and interest in his righteousness, whereby he fulfilled it for us. And this deliverance powerfully promotes the renovation of our heart and the reformation of our life. It is impossible to obtain either justification or even true sanctification by the broken law. And sharp convictions by it make fearful work on men's hearts and consciences. Jesus and his grace find unrenewed sinners in a most deplorable condition. And dreadful is the nature of sin, which perverts even the holy law of God, and convictions by it, as an occasion of strengthening and enraging wicked lusts. Alas! what fear and weakness are found with the best on earth! what a plague and burden is this to believers, and what a hindrance to holiness! But marvellous and merciful is the creation and preservation of gracious habits and holy principles amidst so much sinful tendency. And it is a certain mark of divine grace governing the soul when the sense of evil tendency occasions such heavy sighs and mournful groans to God. The battle may be sore, but victory, through Jesus Christ, will come at last. May the Lord hasten it to my soul in his time!

5 For[i] they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; [j]but they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit.

6 For to[k] be carnally minded[3] is death; but to[l] be spiritually minded[4] is life and peace:

7 Because[m] the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

CHAPTER VIII.—Ver. 1. Since the grace of God, through Christ Jesus, thus delivers all true believers from the guilt and dominion of sin, in order to their being in due time freed from all the remainders of it, it is evident that, even in this imperfect world, there is no sentence of condemnation to God's wrath standing against them who are vitally united to Christ as members of his mystical body, and who, though attended with many lamented and condemnable infirmities, do, in the general tenor of their conversation, act, not according to the dictates and inclinations of their corrupt nature, but according to the inspired Word of God, the suggestions, directions, assistance, and pattern of the Holy Ghost, and according to the nature and inclinations of that principle of grace imparted to faith. 2. For through the promise of grace perfectly fulfilled by Christ, and through the gospel applied by the powerful influence of the Holy Ghost to my conscience, I am delivered from the law of works, which is the strength of sin and binds over unto death, and have a new principle of grace imparted to my heart, in opposition to the sinful and destructive principle of natural sinfulness. 3, 4. For when the covenant of works, which required perfect obedience as the only condition of eternal life, and pronounced a curse for the very smallest transgression, had, not indeed of itself, but through our sinfulness and inability, rendered the justification of fallen men by their own works absolutely impossible, God, in his infinite wisdom and grace, appointed and manifested in our world his own only begotten Son, personally united to our nature in all the debased and distressing circumstances thereof, and, by rendering him an atoning sacrifice for sin, revealed its nature, and sufficiently testified his displeasure against it, in order that all righteousness, in obedience to the precepts of the law, or satisfaction to its penalty, being fulfilled by him as our loving Savior, might be imparted to our persons and applied to our consciences, who by his grace have our stated and habitual conversation towards God and men, not under the influence or according to our natural principles of sinful corruption, but according to the dictates and influences of the Holy Ghost, and the nature and bent of these gracious principles which he has imparted, and seeks to uphold, actuate, and assist in our souls. 5. For whatever men profess, they who are under the direction, dominion, and influence of indwelling sinfulness, habitually consult, relish, pursue, and delight in worldly, sensual, and sinful things, answerably to their carnal and unrenewed appetites; but they who are under the dominion and influence of the Holy Ghost dwelling in their hearts, and of the gracious principles imparted by him in regeneration, think of, are devoted to, contrive, relish, follow after, and delight in those things which are of a spiritual and heavenly nature, answerable to their renewed inclinations and the dictates and influences of the Holy Ghost. 6. Nor is their condition less different than their course; for to have the prevailing bent and delight of the heart turned towards worldly, sensual, and sinful objects, and to live and act accordingly, is in its own nature a spiritual death in trespasses and sins, which deserves, tends to, and naturally issues in eternal death. But to have our mind frequently, delightfully, intently, and transformingly employed about spiritual things, under the dominion and influence of the Holy Ghost, and of infused spiritual principles of grace, is in itself a spiritual life, fills the soul with inward activity, peace, and comfort, and is the certain earnest of and preparation for everlasting life and peace in the immediate enjoyment of God. 7. But this happy temper and privilege we cannot possess unless by faith our heart is changed; for the whole bent of an earthly and unregenerate heart is in direct opposition to, and inveterate and malicious enmity against, God, his perfections, will, authority, and government, and all conformity to him or spiritual enjoyment of him; and such is its desperate malignity, that it cannot of itself come into a subjection to or compliance with the spiritual and righteous demands of his holy, just, and good law. 8. It is therefore manifest that they who are in their natural state under the power and dominion of carnal principles and corrupt affections, are, while they continue so, utterly incapable of doing anything spiritually good and acceptable to God, or of being in Christ discharged from condemnation or accepted to eternal life. 9. But ye, brethren, are not under the dominion of your sinful, and in part remaining corruption, but under the direction and government of the Holy Ghost, and of implanted principles of grace, as is manifest from the abiding residence and operation of the same in you. Nevertheless, if any of you are not partakers of the inhabitation, renewing, and sanctifying operations of that Spirit who proceeds from, resides in, and is sent and given by Christ, ye cannot possibly be of the number of his children, or, continuing such, be owned by him as his, or adjudged to eternal life at the last day. 10. But if Christ has, by his Spirit, taken up his abode in you, as his members spiritually united to him, your bodies indeed must die, because of the divine sentence passed against sin, and because of the carnal nature in you; but your souls are already made spiritually alive, and shall for ever live in blessedness and glory, through the sacrifice of Christ, wrought out for and imparted to you, and by means of that true principle of holiness which is thus given you, to make you live to God here and meet for the enjoyment of him hereafter. 11. And if that blessed Spirit who, together with the Father and Son, raised up the dead body of Jesus Christ from the grave, dwell in you, by peculiar relation, fixed inhabitation, and quickening and sanctifying operation, God, who raised up your anointed Saviour, Head, and Representative, will, in virtue of, and in conformity to, his resurrection, raise up your dead bodies at the last day to a glorious and immortal life by the same almighty operation of his Spirit. 12. Since therefore, my dear brethren in Christ, all mischief and ruin are conveyed to us by sin, and all the blessings we enjoy or hope for are conveyed to us by the Holy Ghost, we can be under no obligation or reasonable inducement to follow the pernicious motions or obey the unrighteous demands of our sinful natures, but are under the strongest obligations to the good Spirit of God, and have the strongest motives to live answerably to his holy dictates and influences. 13. And if any of you, contrary to your Christian character and professions, habitually indulge yourselves in fulfilling your sinful lusts, ye must, notwithstanding all your notions, pretences, or external privileges in religion, as persons who have no real union with or interest in Christ, fall short of eternal life, and be plunged into everlasting misery; but if ye, as true believers, vitally united to Christ by virtue derived from him, in the gracious influences and assistances of his Spirit, resist, subdue, and crucify your corrupt affections, principles, and practices, ye shall, according to the gracious establishment of the gospel, for ever live with him, soul and body, in heaven. 14. For all they who are conducted, assisted, and governed by the light and influence of God's Spirit in their minds, wills, affections, and conversation, and they only, as the children of God, are entitled to everlasting life by their adoption, and prepared for it by faith in Christ, making sure their regeneration. 15. For ye have not received the Holy Ghost in order to subject your souls to such servile fears as resulted from the darkness and terror of the legal dispensation, or from legal convictions of your sinfulness and misery before your conversion; but, according to the light, liberty, and joy of the New Testament dispensation, ye have been made partakers of him in his most comfortable and emboldening operations, by which we and other believers are enabled, with holy reverence, affection, fervour, importunity, confidence, and freedom, to address God in our worship, as our reconciled Father in Christ. 16. And in this assured pouring out of our hearts to God through Christ, the Holy Ghost, by working gracious dispositions in us, and by shining upon his own work, doth, in and by his word, assist and concur with our consciences in witnessing that we are truly the adopted and regenerated children of God. 17. And if we be thus his children, we are necessarily and irrevocably entitled to the rich and glorious inheritance of everlasting life, happiness, and holiness, answerable to our high dignity and relation; and in, and through, and together with Christ our Saviour, Head, Father, and elder Brother, are heirs of God himself, and all that he is, or has, as our everlasting portion; and all our sufferings in this world for his sake, and in conformity to him, shall but promote and issue in our exalted and eternal enjoyment of God, in and together with him. 18. For, after an impartial and careful examining and balancing all accounts, under God's infallible direction, I compute, and am fully satisfied, that all the afflictions we can meet with in this world, or endure for the sake of Christ and his cause, are so we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.[9]

18 For I reckon that [a]the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

19 For the [b]earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God.

20 For[h] the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope;

21 Because the creature itself also [i]shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

22 For we know that [j]the [k]whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.

A.M. cir. 4064. A.D. cir. 60.

[9] Suffering, therefore, must be a part of the Christian's preparation for heaven. It is like medicine to the diseased man, a painful necessity. It cannot be dispensed with. The conflict between the natural and the spiritual, between sin and holiness, between truth and error, is a life conflict. Christ himself experienced it: so must all those who are his.—P.

short, light, and trivial, as to deserve no comparison with that amazing glory and happiness which shall be publicly allotted to and bestowed upon us in the last judgment. 19–22. Nay, such is the transcendent glory of that liberty and happiness which we, the humble and faithful children of God, shall then enjoy, that all the irrational creatures in this lower world, with order and earnestness answerable to their nature, long for it, that, by their sharing therein, they may be completely and finally delivered from all that vanity, disgrace, disorder, or pain, which has by the curse been introduced among and upon them on account of man's first and other sins. 23. And while they thus long for deliverance from their present vanity and misery, we, who have accepted the Holy Ghost in his sanctifying, sealing, and comforting operations, as pledges, earnests, evidences, and securities of our future full enjoyment of the heavenly inheritance, are, notwithstanding our peace and joy in believing, exceedingly troubled: and with secret groanings under the pressure of our remaining sinfulness and affliction, earnestly long for and desire, assuredly hope, and patiently wait for the full enjoyment of all those exalted privileges and blessings belonging to us as faithful children of God, and in which our bodies, raised to an immortality, shall, together with our souls, share in the most honourable and transporting fellowship with God. 24, 25. For at present we have not the actual possession of our full salvation, but only the assured hope of enjoying it in some future period; and hoping for it as a thing unseen and unenjoyed, we, patiently bearing our troubles, and humbly resigning ourselves to God's will as to the time of its manifestation, wait for it with cheerfulness, firmly expecting that, in due time, we shall be fully delivered from all evil, and crowned with everlasting happiness in heaven. 26, 27. And as this delightful hope encourages and supports our patient waiting under all our griefs and burdens, so doth the Holy Ghost himself, by his concurrent direction, support under our manifold weaknesses and imperfections, which would otherwise carry us into unseasonable and impatient desires of deliverance; for by our remaining ignorance, selfishness, carnality, and perturbation of spirit, we neither know what to pray for, as most conducive to God's glory and our good, nor are capable of ordering our requests in a duly believing, spiritual, fervent, holy, humble, submissive, and steady manner: but the Holy Ghost suggests to us proper requests, and enables us to offer them up, with such vehement pantings and breathings of soul, in an admirable mixture of faith and patience, importunity and hope, as no words can sufficiently express. But though we cannot fully express those strong inward desires of our heart, the all-seeing and heart-searching God accurately and kindly observes and approves, and is ready to answer, whatever we aim at and desire under the influence of his own Spirit, who always directs and assists to pray according to his will and word; such prayers must therefore certainly be answered in due season. 28. And for our further comfort under all our present tribulations and groanings, we believers know, from God's pity, promises, relations, and affections to us through Christ, and from our own and others' experience, that all persons, things, and events, however bad or afflictive in their own nature, tendency, or appearances, shall, under the influence of the overruling wisdom, power, and grace of God, work together to promote the spiritual and eternal advantage of all those who sincerely love God as their chief good and highest end, having been, by repentance and faith in Jesus Christ, converted to him according to, and in prosecution of, his eternal disposition of love to them. 29, 30. And this indeed is the original source of all that good which we enjoy or hope for; for all who repent of their sins and accept Christ as their Savior, he determined in due time to render conformed to his Son in holiness, needful suffering, and eternal glory, that he might have the honour of being the prime Ruler and Chief of countless millions of ransomed men; and whom he thus predestinated to holiness, sufferings, and honours, he, in the execution of this, aids constantly by the Holy Spirit, and unites them with him; and all who by implicit faith in Jesus Christ determine to lead new lives through his aid, he pardons, accepts, and entitles to eternal life, through the righteousness of Christ; and whom he thus justifies, he, by his Holy Spirit, sanctifies and comforts in this world, and at last admits to the full and immediate enjoyment of himself in heaven, in, with, and conformed to Christ. 31. If then the infinitely wise, unchangeable, and almighty God be thus our certain, fast, and steady friend, and all his perfections, purposes, promises, and operations, be on our side, what ground have we of confidence, comfort, and wonder! and how little reason to fear the malicious, crafty, and powerful attempts of our most malicious and inveterate enemies! 32. For if God, in infinite love to us, cheerfully and freely appointed his only begotten Son our surety, brought him into our nature and place in law, and without the least abatement exacted from him all the obedience and suffering due from the world, that we, through his atoning sacrifice of himself in our stead, might be saved in him with an everlasting salvation, how is it possible that he should not, along with this unspeakable and leading gift, freely bestow upon us whatever gracious blessing promised in his word is needful for either our soul or body? 33. And since we are accepted in Christ, our sins atoned for by him, and our persons justified in him, how is it possible that any can fix a law charge of guilt upon us, notwithstanding the fearful sinfulness and transgressions which we have reason to mourn over, since it is God himself, whose judgment is always according to truth, who has accounted and pronounced us absolved from guilt, accepted and entitled us, as righteous, to eternal life? 34. And however intent our enemies, and however ready our own conscience may be to condemn us, yet who can subject us to the curse of God's law, to our eternal destruction? Christ has sacrificed himself to save us from our sins; has fulfilled the righteousness demanded by the law in our stead, and in receiving the reward of his work, has risen again for our justification; yea, is exalted to his Father's right hand, to exercise a universal dominion for our advantage, and publicly to absolve and adjudge us to eternal life at the last judgment: and to manifest his own friendship, and secure our continuance in favour with God, he, as our righteous Advocate, pleads the merit of his atoning blood for us in his prevalent intercession, that we, through faith, may be eternally saved. 35–37. It must therefore be impossible that distresses or tribulations of soul or body, or the most permanent and murderous persecutions for his sake, can alienate Christ's heart from us, or ours from him, or exclude us from a share in the saving designs, fruits, and manifestations of his great love.—Nay, through his merits and mediation, and overruling influence, we are, and shall be, safely, successfully, and triumphantly carried through them all; and they are rendered remarkably useful to try and exercise our graces, wean our hearts from this world, ripen us for heaven, and sweeten the thoughts of it to us. 38, 39. For, from the unchangeableness of God's nature, perfections, purposes, covenant, and promises, and of the merit and efficacious intercession of Christ, I am infallibly assured that nothing, however distressing, entangling, or powerful, either in this world or in that which is to come, shall ever be able to cut us off, or set us at a distance, from that infinite love of God the Father which is fixed upon and manifested to us, and performs all things for us, in and through Christ; and nothing but our own unbelief can lead us from the sincere love to him as our God in Christ.

Ver. 1. In Christ Jesus. United to him by faith, which is the work of the Spirit; 'in' him, as a branch in the vine (Jn. 15. 5), enjoying a common life; as a member in the body, obeying a common will, Ep. 1. 22.—Who walk not after the flesh. Who do not seek justification by fleshly ordinances, Ga. 3. 3; Phi. 3. 3; Ac. 21. 21, even as Paul himself walked before his conversion; or who have renounced and crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts, ch. 6. 6; Ga. 2. 20; 5. 24; 6. 14. C.

Ver. 2. This verse gives a reason for the general statement made in the first clause of ver. 1. The law, i.e. the influence exerted by, or the power of, the Spirit of life—the Holy Spirit, who is the author and sustainer of divine life in the soul—freed me—me Paul he is here giving his personal experience of the power of grace—in Christ Jesus being united to him by faith, I dwelling in him and he in me—from the law i.e. the influence or power of sin and death. The reasoning of the apostle in this chapter is close, and, though somewhat involved in construction, is most powerful and convincing. P.

Ver. 3. The last clause of this verse is very indefinite in our version. The Greek may be interpreted in two ways:—1. 'God having sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and, by an offering for sin, condemned sin' i.e. removed its sting, which is death, and also its power, in the flesh.' This interpretation gives the Greek phrase the same meaning which it has in He. 10. 18, and in the Septuagint rendering of Le. 4. 3. 2. '. . . And on account of sin;' joining the phrase immediately with having sent, and making it express one object for which Christ came. He came on account of sin, i.e. to remove it, by dying as an atoning sacrifice, and overcoming its power by his divine power I prefer the latter meaning. P.

Ver. 16. This 'witness' the Spirit bears first in heaven, when we 'cry Abba,' 'our Father who art in heaven.'—This 'witness' he also bears in our hearts, for 'he that hath the Son hath the witness in himself,' 1 Jn. 5. 10. C.
