REFLECTIONS.—Behold, as in a figure, Jesus Christ, the child of heaven, advanced by his Father to his right hand, and invested with all power in heaven and in earth! There he rejoices in his God, and in his glorious victories of salvation, and makes intercession for the conquest and ruin of all evil, and for the abundant happiness of his people.—Great and blessed is the believer's hope in the divine relations and perfections; and infinite is the condescension and kindness of God towards man: so mean, so unsubstantial, so transitory! Certainly then there shall come a day in which God will redeem his people out of all their deep waters of trouble, and justly reward his and their enemies. O what a mercy is it to receive, out of the hand of a reconciled God, children endowed with every corporeal and mental accomplishment, garners replenished with useful stores, thriving flocks and herds, and a safe and quiet commonwealth! Yet it is not in earthly enjoyments, but in God himself, as our God and our ALL IN ALL, that solid and everlasting happiness consists.

PSALM CXLV. Ver. 1. The speaker engages 'to bless and praise the name of his God and King every day, for ever and ever,' ver. 1, 2. And surely he who knows that every day he will be so able and inclined must be Jesus, 'the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.' C.

Ver. 3. Greatness. From comparing the structure of this psalm with He. 1. 10, it would appear, that in this verse the Father addresses the Son, whose 'mighty works' in creation, providence, and redemption, he expounds and extols before angels and men. Greatness can but be comprehended by viewing works made and upheld, enemies restrained and subdued, and obedient subjects ruled and employed. C.

Ver. 9. Lest any should impiously misinterpret these gracious

20 The[t] LORD preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy.

21 My[t] mouth shall speak the praise of the LORD: and let [u]all flesh bless his holy name for ever and ever.[5]

PSALM CXLVI.

1 The psalmist voweth perpetual praises to God. 3 He exhorteth not to trust in man. 5 God, for his power, justice, mercy, and kingdom, is only worthy to be trusted.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] Praise[a] the LORD, O my soul.[2]

2 While[b] I live will I praise the LORD: I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being.[3]

3 Put[c] not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help.[4]

4 His[d] breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.

5 Happy[e] is he that hath the God of Jacob[5] for his help, whose hope is in the LORD his God;

6 Which[g] made heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that therein is; [h]which keepeth truth for ever;

7 Which[i] executeth judgment for the oppressed; which [j]giveth food to the hungry. The[k] LORD looseth the prisoners:

8 The[l] LORD openeth the eyes of the blind:[6] the LORD [m]raiseth them that are bowed down: the [n]LORD loveth the righteous:

9 The LORD [p]preserveth the strangers; he relieveth the fatherless and widow: but the [q]way of the wicked he turneth upside down.[7]

10 The[r] LORD shall reign for ever, even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLVII.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God for his care of the church, 4 his power, 6 and his mercy: 7 to praise him for his providence: 12 to praise him for his blessings upon the kingdom, 15 for his power over the elements, 19 and for his ordinances in the church.

PRAISE ye the LORD: [a]for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely.

2 The[b] LORD doth build up Jerusalem: [c]he gathereth together the outcasts of Israel.

3 He[d] healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds.[1]

4 He[e] telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names.

2 Praise[b] ye him, all his angels:[2] praise ye him, all his hosts.[3]

3 Praise[c] ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light.

4 Praise[d] him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters that be above the heavens.

words, let it be carefully noted that sin is no work of God: and that where it reigneth unto final impenitence mercy is clean gone. Ps. 77. 8. 103. 17. He. 10. 28. Ja. 2. 13. C.

REFLECTIONS.—O the infinite greatness, the unbounded grace, and everlasting preciousness of a God in Christ! Happy are they who spend their time and their eternity in the enjoyment and praises of him! How delightful is it to tell our neighbours, to tell our posterity, that which our eyes have seen, and our hearts have believed, concerning this God, who is LOVE; and to tell how this God shall be our God for ever! And it is delightful to behold and praise our exalted Redeemer, who fills heaven and earth with his kindness.

PSALM CXLVI. Ver. 1. The Son, as Prophet of the church, first calls upon all, and then upon that 'reasonable soul' which he took when he 'became flesh' to praise Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit. C.

Ver. 5. Strangers. Those who confess that they are 'strangers and pilgrims on the earth,' 'who desire a better country, that is, an heavenly,' He. 11. 13—16. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they whose God is the Lord, and whose praises never end! But the greatest on earth appear as insignificant nothings before God, or even to a gracious heart. Nothing on earth is properly a man's property but his grave. But though in man there be no help, no ground of hope, our God-man is mighty to save; and hope in him knows no disappointment. Be stirred up, therefore, my soul, to depend on him, who is my almighty Maker, my faithful and promise-performing Friend, my kind and righteous Protector, my bountiful Provider, my omnipotent Deliverer, my gracious Enlightener, my seasonable Restorer, my perpetual Preserver, and the just Punisher of all evil:—my King, my God, and my ALL.

PSALM CXLVII. Ver. 1. The grammar of the psalm, as seen in the phrase 'our God,' ver. 1, 5, 7, discovers the speaker to be the church in her collective and corporate capacity, calling upon her several members to the delightful work of praise—a work pleasant to the heart of those engaged in it, and comely in the eyes of saints and angels. C.

Ver. 2. The Lord doth build up Jerusalem. All the works ascribed to the Lord, throughout the psalm, are works that he is always doing. Accordingly, after every siege and demolition God, by his providence, immediately proceeded to build up Jerusalem again, his architectural witness to all nations: and 'the outcasts of Israel' he has always continued to gather, temporally, into separate and cohesive communities; and spiritually, into one body and temple in Christ Jesus. Ep. 4. 11—16; 1 Pe. 2. 5. C.

Ver. 13. Bars of thy gates. The principal gates of the spiritual Jerusalem are profession and baptism, Ac. 8. 37, 38: and the principal bars—'trying the spirits,' 1 Jn. 4. 1—3; condemnation of error, 1 Ti. 4. 7; 2 Ti. 2. 16; Tit. 1. 10, 11; avoidance of the abetters of false doctrine and schism, Ro. 16. 17; 1 Th. 3. 6; 1 Ti. 6. 3—5; and excluding from church membership the erroneous and profane, 1 Co. 5. 4—13; Tit. 3. 10. C.

Ver. 16. Snow like wool. Not only is water when changed into snow rendered in appearance 'like wool,' but by a wonderful provision in its structure it acts as wool in protecting plants, and even living bodies, from the destructive influence of the cold. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How good and great must God be

5 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for[a] he commanded, and they were created.

6 He[g] hath also stablished them for ever and ever:[4] he hath made a decree which shall not pass.

7 Praise the LORD from the earth, [h]ye dragons, and all deeps:

8 Fire,[i] and hail; snow, and vapours; stormy wind fulfilling his word;

9 Mountains,[j] and all hills; fruitful trees, and all cedars;

10 Beasts,[k] and all cattle; creeping things, and flying fowl;[5]

11 Kings[l] of the earth, and all people; princes, and all judges of the earth;

12 Both[m] young men and maidens; old men and children:

13 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for[n] his name alone is excellent;[6] his glory is above the earth and heaven.

14 He[o] also exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints; even of the children of Israel, a people [p]near unto him. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLIX.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God for his love to the church, 5 and for that power which he hath given to his saints.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] Sing[a] unto the LORD a new song,[2] and his praise in the congregation of saints.[3]

2 Let[b] Israel rejoice in him that [c]made him: let the children of Zion be joyful in their King.[4]

3 Let[d] them praise his name in the [5]dance: let them sing praises unto him with the timbrel and harp.

4 For[e] the LORD taketh pleasure in his people: [f]he will beautify the meek with salvation.

5 Let[h] the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud [i]upon their beds.[6]

6 Let[i] the high praises of God be in their mouth,[7] and a [k]two-edged sword in their hand;

7 To[l] execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people;

8 To bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron;

9 To[n] execute upon them the judgment [8]written: [o]this honour have all his saints. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CL.

An exhortation to praise God with all kinds of musical instruments.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] Praise[a] God in his sanctuary: praise him in [b]the firmament of his power.[2]

2 Praise him [c]for his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness.

3 Praise[d] him with the sound of the trumpet:[3] praise him with the psaltery and harp.

4 Praise him with the timbrel and [4]dance: praise him with stringed instruments and organs.

5 Praise[e] him upon the loud cymbals: praise him upon the high-sounding cymbals.

6 Let[g] every thing that hath breath praise the LORD. Praise ye the LORD.

in himself, when his greatness, wisdom, power, and goodness are so manifested in all his works. And when he so observes and provides for all his creatures, how impossible is it that his ransomed children should be overlooked or starved! Much of God is to be seen in all around us—in luminaries, in animals, in crops, in seasons, in human persons or societies; but, above all, in his church and in his word. If these be abused by us, it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for us.

PSALM CXLVIII. Ver. 1. In the heights. The highest regions of heaven, where the glory of God is most brightly exhibited, and the mysteries of his government—unspeakable in earthly language—are audibly expounded and proclaimed, 2 Co. 12. 2–4. C.

Ver. 7. Dragons. This word is generally interpreted 'sea-monsters'—an unmeaning phrase. The word is generic, and that it sometimes signifies wild beasts seems probable from Mal. 1. 3. That it also is applied to the whale, seems certain from its description as one of the mammalia, La. 4. 3, and from its property of holding its breath and violently emitting it, Je. 14. 6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How great and good must God appear to his people, when their minds are so overcharged with their debt of praise! And indeed, had the praises of God but due room on earth, it would much resemble heaven. But none are more deep in the debt of praise than faithful men; sometime afar off, but now brought near to him by the blood of his Son!

PSALM CXLIX. Ver. 2. Israel. They that have obtained a 'new name,' who wrestle with God in prayer, and prevail, by faith, in the name of Jesus, Ge. 32. 24, 28; Ho. 12. 3, 4; Ju. 14. 13. C.

Ver. 3. Dance. The word translated dance signifies a pipe, or some other fistular instrument of music, and not any mode of marching or saltation. C.

Ver. 6. Two-edged sword. The two-edged sword of the Word—the law of fire and the gospel of grace, Ep. 6. 17; He. 4. 12; De. 33. 2; Ac. 20. 24; Tit. 2. 11. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold here Jesus and his gospel church chiefly in her millennial state. He and his people mutually rejoice in one another:—while they praise him, he imparts the blessings of salvation to them; and while he goes forth in his chariots of salvation, conquering sinners by his grace, or in his chariots of judgment, to oppose his Jewish, heathen, and anti-christian enemies, by their prayers and influence they work together with him.

PSALM CL. Ver. 1. The first verse marks the place where the Lord is to be praised—the sanctuary on earth, the firmament above. C.

Ver. 2. The second verse assigns reasons for praise—God's mighty acts, and the multitude of his acts. C.

Ver. 3–6. The remaining portion of the psalm calls first upon instruments of every construction, and finally upon everything that breathes, to praise the Lord. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who dwell in God's house above—they are always praising him on the highest key! And happy are they who are on the way to it—they have always matter, and often a heart, for praise.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Hebrew title of the Book of Psalms is 'Praises;' because the praise of God as Creator, Upholder, and Governor—as Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier—constitutes their principal subject. The Greek title, whence our English name, 'Psalms,' is derived from the Septuagint, and describes these sacred compositions as accompanied by musical instruments. And this accompaniment was in accordance with the law of Moses, Le. 23. 24, &c., and the ritual appointed by divine revelation in the days of David and Solomon, 1 Ch. xvi.

But while praise is justly due to God as Creator, Upholder, and Governor of the world, much more is it due to him as Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier. And as God the Father is made known and glorified by the Son—and as the Spirit glorifies both Father and Son, by taking 'the things of Christ and showing them' to believers—so it was to be expected that Christ, the beloved Son of God, the Messiah, the Saviour of sinners, would furnish the chief subject of praise in the heart and the songs of the church. Accordingly we have seen that the Psalms are full of Christ—the church on earth strictly imitating the church in heaven, in asserting that 'worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing;' and in ascribing 'blessing, and honour, and glory, and power unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever.'

The Psalms constitute the great storehouse of prayer in every mood and condition of the spirit. 'Is any merry—let him sing psalms.' Is any sad—they will teach him to cry from the depths of affliction. Is any persecuted—they will furnish him with petitions for a refuge and deliverance. Is any in want—they will lead him to the Friend of the poor and needy. Is any in sickness—they will lead him the way to the true Physician. Is any dying and in misery—they will show him the path of life, ending in fulness of joy at the right hand of the Eternal. And all this they do, because they are the spiritual revelations of the 'supplications, strong crying, and tears' of Jesus in the days of his flesh; and therefore furnish to his disciples the model and the material of their prayers of faith.

The writers of some of the Psalms are known, and the Jews enumerate ten. But this is of little importance—for that the author of all was the Spirit of God, we have the fullest evidence. Thus, independently of that heavenly character which bears witness of their heavenly origin—we have, in the New Testament, more frequent attestations of their divine origin, than for any other book of the whole Scripture collection. They are at least fifty times quoted by our Lord or his apostles. And besides furnishing to our Lord the most powerful of his arguments against the unbelieving Jews, they also furnished him the words in which, upon the cross, he both prayed and expired.

According to the Masoretic copies and the Syriac version, the Psalms are divided into five books: the first extending from Ps. i.–xl.—the second from Ps. xli.–lxxii.—the third from Ps. lxxiii.–lxxxix.—the fourth from Ps. xc.–cvi.—and the fifth from Ps. cvii.–cl. The first four of these end with 'Amen and Amen;' the last with 'Hallelujah.' This division was very ancient, as it evidently existed before the Septuagint translation.

Most of the Psalms have titles prefixed, which by some, as ancient traditionary expositions of the contents, are held in high esteem, and considered as endued with a kind of canonical authority. But some of the highest authorities amongst the ancient Christian writers—as Augustine and Theodoret—have freely admitted that these titles have often no relation to the body of the psalm, and seldom contribute anything to the discovery of the meaning. In their great obscurity all are agreed; and conjectural meanings are so various that they cease to be of value. These titles have accordingly been retained, partly out of respect to those that, in any degree, value them; and partly as mere relics of antiquity, esteemed not for any intrinsic worth, but as samples and memorials of the works of other times.

That the Psalms are occasionally prophetical of Christ no Christian can overlook or deny. That but few, however, are thus prophetical of him, has been an opinion extensively circulated and received—the number of such specially prophetic psalms being ordinarily confined to Ps. ii. xvi. xxii. xl. xlv. lxviii. lxxii. lxxxvii. cx. and cxviii. But were the correctness of this meagre enumeration admitted, still the real relation of the Psalms to Christ remains unsettled. For the real question is, not how many psalms are prophetical, but how many are descriptive of Christ, and proved to be descriptive of him, because they apply accurately to him, and however they may be strained by the efforts of 'accommodation,' still utterly refuse to become applicable to any other. Could we conclude with Origen, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Augustine, Ambrose, Euthymius, and others of the ancient Christian writers, that David was the author of all the Psalms—or admitting, as is commonly believed, that other inspired authors wrote a part of the collection—yet could we accurately ascertain how many were composed by David—and it is upon all hands admitted that he composed a large portion—we would then be able, upon David's own authority, or rather upon that of the Spirit speaking by him, greatly to extend, if not to universalize, the prophetic boundaries of the Psalms. For that the psalms written by David himself were prophetic we have David's own authority, which, as Horsley observes, may be allowed to overpower a host of modern expositors. For thus king David at the close of his life describes himself and his sacred songs: 'David the son of Jesse said, and the man who was raised up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel said, The Spirit of Jehovah spake by me, and his word was my tongue,' 2 Sa. 23. 1, 2. It was the word, therefore, of Jehovah's Spirit which was uttered by David's tongue. But it should seem the Spirit of Jehovah would not be wanting to enable a mere man to make complaint of his own enemies, to describe his own sufferings just as he felt them, and his own escapes just as they happened. But the Spirit of Jehovah described, by David's utterance, what was known to that Spirit only, and that Spirit only could describe. So that if David be allowed to have had any knowledge of the true subject of his own compositions, it was nothing in his own life, but something put into his mind by the Holy Spirit of God; and the misapplication of the Psalms to the literal David has done more mischief than the misapplication of any other parts of the Scriptures among those who profess the belief of the Christian religion. (See Horsley on the Psalms, vol. i. p. 14.) Nor do we hesitate to express our firm conviction, that a right interpretation of the Psalms, whereby Christ is so clearly discovered in his person, his offices, his passion, his victories, his glories, and his judgment, will bring a light, a comfort, and a joy to the heart of the believer, unknown while darkness lay upon this blessed portion of the Sacred Volume. C.

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS,

And the two immediately following, were penned by Solomon, the renowned king of Israel. Its Hebrew name MISCHLIM imports sentences well pressed together, and powerful to command our assent and regulate our conduct. Teaching by such proverbs, or short substantial sentences, was a very ancient, and is a very plain, profitable, and easy method of instruction. These Proverbs of Solomon are not a mere collection of the wise sayings which had been uttered before his time, but are the inspired dictates of the Holy Ghost to him; and are often quoted or alluded to as such in other inspired books. This book comprehends: (1) A preface; consisting of manifold exhortations to the study and improvement of true wisdom, and of warnings to avoid connections or intimacy with wicked persons, whoredom, rash suretiship, sloth, &c. ch. i.–ix. (2) The Proverbs themselves; published from the beginning, x.–xxiv., or copied out by the direction of Hezekiah, xxv.–xxix. (3) The appendix; containing the prophecy of Agur, and the directions of his mother to him, xxx. xxxi. As the Book of Psalms is calculated to make our hearts warm towards God in holy and pious affections, the scope of this is to make our face shine before men in a prudent, discreet, honest, and useful conversation; which is a no less necessary part of religion. And no book in the world, in so small a compass, affords us such a complete body of rules for directing our personal and relative behaviour.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. The choice, divine, substantial, instructive, and governing, but sometimes darkly expressed, sentences of the incomparably wise and inspired Solomon. 2. Framed by the Spirit of God to teach men true and solid wisdom in things pertaining to God and their neighbour, to enable them to discern sin and duty, and to receive and profit by whatever good instructions or advices are given them: 3. To incline and persuade them readily to hearken to such instructions as direct them to live in a wise, candid, upright, and virtuous manner; 4. That those who are unskilful, rash, and incautious, may become circumspect, prudent, and discreet in their conduct: 5. And those who are wise in the matters of time and eternity, may become still more wise and prudent; and be able, with great advantage, to govern themselves and others; 6. And be capable of finding out the meaning of the wise, though dark, sayings of God or men, and profitably to apply them to themselves, or explain them to others.—7. It is necessary that every one who desires true wisdom should begin with, and chiefly study, the saving knowledge of God, and live under a holy awe in the love, worship, and service of him; as, without this, all other knowledge is vain and useless; and, for want of it, wicked men, who prefer trifles to things of infinite importance, pour contempt on the wisest instructions that can be given them. 8, 9. And, next to the fear of God, it is necessary, my dear young men, that you reverence, honour, and obey your parents, and gladly receive and earnestly practise their instructions, as things of inestimable value, which will render you more amiable and honourable than all the gay adorning on earth. 10. And, in order to promote the fear of God and regard to parental instructions, see that with the utmost circumspection and earnestness you avoid all unnecessary fellowship with wicked persons, and all hearkening to their flattering enticements. 11–15. If, in the most courteous manner, and by every argument drawn from profound secrecy, sure success, immense profit, and good fellowship, they would seduce you to robbery, or any other wickedness, abhor their counsels and flee from their company: 16. For, being set on mischief themselves, if they once entangle you, they will perpetually hurry you from one horrid crime to another. 17. And while they lay snares for others whom they reckon rash and inconsiderate, themselves, like silly birds, rush into courses, of which the dangerous issue might be easily perceived: 18. And, in the end, all their pains and cunning to undo others bring ruin upon themselves from the hand of God and men: 19. And all unrighteous methods of procuring wealth but issue in the destruction of the procurers.—20–23. While you shun and abhor the enticements of the wicked, listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, who, in his word and ordinances of the gospel, in the most public, affectionate, earnest, and importunate manner, calls you, however simple, ignorant, foolish, or even scornful, to forsake your wicked courses, and turn to him by faith and repentance, to receive his Spirit, freely given, and believe his words divinely manifested

PALMYRA ROAD--LEADING FROM DAMASCUS TO TADMOR, THE CITY SOLOMON BUILT IN THE DESERT. [PROVERBS, i: 1.]—Solomon inherited from his father David a vast kingdom. His dominion stretched from the river Euphrates to the Mediterranean Sea, south to the river of Egypt, and north to near where the city of Aleppo now stands. Damascus was within his territory, and he built Palmyra, called Tadmor, in his day. This is a city in the wilderness, and that Solomon built it we learn from I. Kings, ix: 18, and II. Chronicles, viii: 4. Tadmor is between the Euphrates and Hamath, and is situated in an oasis of the desert. The celebrated Queen Zenobia had her capital and home in Palmyra. She built up a mighty kingdom which rivaled and defied the Roman power. She was captured and brought to Rome by the emperor Aurelian, A. D. 273. We give here as illustrating this first chapter of Proverbs, written by Solomon, a picture of a road leading out from Damascus to Tadmor, the city he built.

6 To[g] understand a proverb, and the interpretation;[7] the[h] words of the wise, and their dark sayings.

7 ¶ The[i] fear of the LORD is the [8]beginning[9] of knowledge: but fools despise wisdom and instruction.[1]

8 My[j] son, [k]hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother:

9 For[l] they shall be an ornament[2] of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck.

10 ¶ My son, [m]if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.

11 If they say, [n]Come with us, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent without cause;

12 Let[p] us swallow them up alive as the grave; and whole, as those that go down into the pit:

13 We[q] shall find all precious substance, we shall fill our houses with spoil:

14 Cast in thy lot among us; let us all have one purse:

15 My son, [r]walk not thou in the way with them; [s]refrain thy foot from their path:

16 For[t] their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood:

17 (Surely[u] in vain the net is spread [3]in the sight of any bird:)[4]

18 And[v] they lay wait for their own blood; they lurk privily for their own lives.[5]

19 So are the ways of every one [w]that is greedy of gain; which taketh away the life of the owners thereof.

20 ¶ Wisdom[6] crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets;[7]

21 She crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates: in the city she uttereth her words, saying,

22 How[y] long, ye simple ones,[8] will ye love simplicity? and the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge?

23 Turn[z] you at my reproof: behold, I [a]will pour out my Spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you.

24 ¶ Because[b] I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded;

25 But ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof:

26 I[c] also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh.

27 When[d] your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you:

28 Then[e] shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me:

29 For[g] that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the LORD:

30 They[h] would none of my counsel; [t]they despised all my reproof:

31 Therefore[i] shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own [9]devices.

32 For[k] the turning away[1] of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them.

33 But[l] whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil.

9 The direct declarations of the Spirit of God in this passage fully accord with the facts of history. The Jewish nation is a sufficient proof. They rejected and despised the divine counsels and warnings for centuries; but at length judgment came. It should be observed also that the teaching of the New Testament is in this in entire harmony with that of the Old. Witness our Lord's judgments on Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, and Paul's sweeping statement in Ro. 1. 28—'And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind.'—P.

unto you. 24–29. But in the most solemn manner he warns you, that if you persist in despising his gracious calls, instructions, and offers, his righteous judgment shall overtake and ruin you and your nation, in the most unexpected, fearful, complete, and remediless manner;—and that, while your most rueful cries for deliverance shall be disregarded, your own counsels and contrivances shall render you inexpressibly miserable, and your occasional escapes, and even prosperity, shall, by encouraging your folly, pride, and wickedness, prove means of hastening and aggravating your ruin; 33. While they who hearken to his instructions, and believe on his name, shall, by his watchful providence, be marvellously protected, comforted, and eternally saved.

Ver. 1. The Hebrew word rendered 'proverb,' literally signifies 'likeness' or 'comparison.' It originally involved, therefore, the idea of a simile, but it had given to it at an early period a wider signification. It came to denote 'such short, pointed sayings, as do not involve a comparison directly, but still convey their meaning by the help of a figure. From this stage of its application it passed to sententious maxims generally, many of which, however, still involve a comparison. Such comparisons are either expressed, or the things compared are placed side by side, and the comparison left for the hearer or reader to supply. Next we find it used of those longer pieces in which a single idea is no longer exhausted in a sentence, but forms the germ of the whole, and is worked out into a didactic poem. Many instances of this kind occur in the first section of the Book of Proverbs.' The title therefore which is here given by the author or compiler to the whole of this book is appropriate, expressing very well its general character. P.

Ver. 2–4 form a general introduction to the whole book, explaining briefly its nature, and stating its object. The object was, to impart wisdom, not merely theoretical, but practical; such wisdom, in fact, as will enable man to understand what he is himself, what God is, what he owes to God, what is necessary for his salvation, and how he is to live, and speak, and think in the world. P.

Ver. 5. A wise man will hear. Right hearing is the great mark and duty of God's children. It is the great remedy against idolatry: 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord,' De. 6. 4. It is the special claim of Jesus: He that hath ears to hear, let him hear,' Mat. 13. 9. It is the special claim of the Spirit: 'Let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches,' Re. xxvii. It is the great principle of the spiritual life: 'Hear, and your soul shall live,' Is. 55. 3. It is the great channel of faith: 'Faith cometh by hearing,' Ro. 10. 17. C.

Ver. 7. The fear of the Lord. 'Doth not perfect love cast out fear?' True, but not the fear of God. It casteth out the fear of condemnation, Ro. 8. 1: it triumphs over the fear of death, 1 Co. 15. 57; but it implants and cherishes the fear of reverence for the majesty, the holiness, and the mercy of God. C.

Ver. 11. Innocent. The sinners do not call their contemplated victims innocent in the sense of guiltless, for that would detract from their enticement; they call them innocent in the sense of simple, unwarlike.—Without cause. Whose religion, instead of bringing safety and profit, renders them an easy prey. The speech of the bandits of the desert preparing to watch and plunder the caravans: the principle of avarice stimulating to dishonesty and cruelty in every form and in every generation. O believer, beware of covetousness, and be content with such things as thou hast, Lu. 12. 15. C.

Ver. 18. Robbery generally leads to murder, and experience proves that murderers seldom escape undetected and unpunished; so that the plotter against his neighbour is really ensnaring himself, and toiling for his own ruin. C.

Ver. 23. I will pour out my Spirit. Christ, 'in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge,' Col. 2. 3, here promises to pour out that Spirit which alone can make the letter of the word effectual, and the soul wise to salvation. C.

Ver. 26. How can a merciful Saviour thus 'laugh and mock' at the 'calamity and fear' of sinners? Just because they are still impenitent sinners. The devil is even now as much a 'liar and a murderer' as he was in the beginning of his rebellion, and his hosts 'believe and tremble,' but they never desire to love. Even so, the 'carnal mind' abideth 'enmity against God,' and hates the Judge while it writhes beneath the judgment. C.

Ver. 32. Turning away of the simple, &c. 'The turning away' to worldly ease, carnal indulgence, and spiritual sleep.—Prosperity of fools, &c. Because they think not of death, of judgment, of eternity; and are promising ease to their bodies, till their souls are demanded of them.—Note, Rebel not in adversity, for 'whom the Lord loveth he chastenedh.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—The inspired oracles of God are calculated to convey the most solid and precious instruction in the things both of time and eternity: and it is necessary and profitable that all, even the wisest, should carefully search them, particularly in the days of youth, in which the faculties are most quick, the temptations most numerous, and our conversation, for time and eternity, just forming. Deep regard to God and to parental admonitions are highly necessary in those who desire true wisdom. But there can be no solid knowledge or prudence where the heart is not changed, believes not on Christ, and loves not God as in him. With amazing earnestness and craft do sinners seduce others, particularly young and simple ones, into fellowship with them in sin. It is necessary, therefore, to be always impressed with the awe of God's omniscience and just judgment, that no temptation of secrecy or of gain may tempt us to wickedness: and to avoid the society of the wicked if we choose to escape their ruin. But with what infatuation do men, more stupid than birds, rush into danger when fairly warned! and in ruining others, they but ruin themselves in a more miserable manner: and however secrecy or power may protect them from men, the judgment of God overtakes them. Their cruelty and avarice hurry them and their companions into lasting misery and woe. Alas! how great is their folly, who, for a perishing world, destroy an immortal soul; and for a momentary pleasure, plunge themselves into everlasting woe! But great is the compassion of Jesus to such rebellious sinners: in the most earnest and open manner he pleads with them, in the ordinances of his grace, to promote their eternal salvation. Condescending are his offers and invitations of mercy, pointed to the most unworthy and wicked; and precious and necessary the benefits which he offers. But inexcusable is their guilt, and dreadful their ruin, who obstinately refuse them. Rejected of God in their misery, even their ease and prosperity harden and ensnare them, and aggravate their woe! But blessed above all with salvation and rest are those who receive them, and listen to his gracious voice.

CHAPTER II.

1 The study of wisdom tendeth to promote godliness, 10 and safety from evil company, 20 and to direct men in good and salutary ways.

MY son, [a]if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee;

2 So that [b]thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding;

3 Yea, [c]if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice[1] for understanding;

4 If[d] thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures;

5 Then[e] shalt thou understand the fear of the LORD, and find the knowledge of God.

6 For[g] the LORD giveth wisdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding.

7 He layeth up [h]sound wisdom for the righteous: he is a [i]buckler to them that walk uprightly.

8 He [j]keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints.

9 Then[k] shalt thou understand righteousness, and judgment, and equity; yea, every good path.[2]

10 ¶ When[l] wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul,

11 Discretion[m] shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee;

12 To[o] deliver thee from the way of the evil man, from the man that speaketh [p]froward things;

13 Who[q] leave the paths of uprightness, to walk in the ways of darkness;

14 Who[r] rejoice to do evil, and delight in the frowardness of the wicked;

2 This verse is more immediately connected with ver. 5, and follows like the latter, as a result of the diligent search after wisdom. Righteousness is that adherence to strict law and justice which characterizes every act of God's government, and ought to characterize the doings of his people. Judgment embraces those punishments inflicted upon sinners, and those judicial acts done in vindication of the divine character, and in defence and for the promotion of God's kingdom. Equity embraces the whole scheme of redemption and of grace, with the whole sphere of Christian work and duty.—F.

3 What profundity of wisdom is requisite to guard the intellect, the heart, and the senses against the various forms of temptation! False philosophy assails us with its insidious but superficial speculations. Malice and envy and slander assail us, trying our tempers, and going far to ruin our influence. Pleasure, wealth, fame assail us, and in their train follow lust and passion. Divine wisdom alone, aided by divine grace, can enable weak mortals to resist and overcome all their enemies.—F.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1–5. And for your excitement and encouragement, know assuredly, my children, that if you entertain, receive, and lay up in your heart the instructions and directions which I now give you; if you earnestly study, and importunately pray for, the enjoyment of Jesus Christ, and of all true and spiritual wisdom and knowledge in him, as infinitely more precious, useful, and desirable than all the treasures on earth, then you shall, by the influences of the Holy Spirit, happily obtain your desire, and be enabled and directed to know, obey, fear, love, worship, and serve God in a proper and truly acceptable manner. 6–9. For as wisdom and every other blessing is the free gift of God, he in his Word hath revealed, and by his Spirit bestows it upon men, and gives them a true and spiritual knowledge of himself and his ways. He hath in store, and is always ready to bestow upon such as ask it, true, solid, and substantial wisdom. And while he instructs and directs, he, by his almighty providence, infallibly preserves from soul-ruining mischiefs such as walk in a sincere, candid, and upright manner. He guides and enables the lovers of holiness to persevere in their integrity according to the rules of his Word, and preserves them from being drawn aside from it or endangered in it. And in seeking wisdom from him, you shall come to understand his righteousness and wisdom in all his administrations, and be enabled to imitate him in everything truly holy and virtuous. 10. And if Jesus Christ, the spiritual knowledge of divine things, and the power of practical godliness, have once been admitted to your heart and into your affections, 11-15. These will tend to preserve you from the crafty and ruinous seduction, either of subtle men, who, having apostatized from everything good, walk and delight in the perplexed ways of vice, and in making others as wicked as themselves, drawing them aside, and entangling them in courses directly contrary to their own true interest, safety, conscience, or reason; 16. Or of light and lewd women, unworthy to be reckoned Israelites, who set themselves, by all the arts of flattery, to decoy such as you into whoredom; 17. Perfidiously alienating their affections and persons from their own husbands, and disregarding the solemn vows made to them at marriage; 18. And who really love no one, but promote the death and eternal damnation of all such as cultivate any familiarity with them. 19. Very few who are once ensnared into their impure embraces are ever, by the grace of God, recovered to a penitent, chaste, and virtuous life on earth, or to everlasting glory in heaven.—20–22. And, moreover, while you are preserved from the ruinous infection of these wicked seducers, you shall be enabled to follow the example of the holy patriarchs and prophets; and, in consequence of this, shall happily dwell in this promised land of Canaan, and inherit the spiritual and everlasting felicity prefigured by it.—While these wicked seducers and their followers shall, after a short-lived flourish of prosperity, be furiously driven from this land and earth, and cast into the woe and depths of hell.

Ver. 4. Pearls are brought up from the depths of the sea; gold is washed from the earth and sands; silver is dug from the deep and dark mine; gems are extricated from the solid rock; the relics of antiquity are separated from rubbish and ruins—and shall the unsearchable riches of Christ be expected on the surface, as the reward of the indolent, or the discovery of accident? No. The believer searches in study of the Word, in study of the ways of Providence, in study of his own heart, in the depths of sovereign grace and eternal love—and discovers those treasures that lie hid from the wise and prudent, but which God by his Spirit reveals unto babes. C.

Ver. 9. Understand righteousness. It should never be forgotten that there is but one righteousness that can ever be discovered, 'the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe,' Ro. 3. 10, 22. C.

Ver. 12. Men, evil in heart and froward in speech; for in the heart originate all evil things, and out of the abundance of an evil heart the mouth speaketh, Mat. 12. 34. C.

Ver. 17. A woman who has violated her marriage vow is here exhibited. Faithless to God, faithless to man—the perjured wanton is at once the original and the emblem of all that is most seductive, dangerous, and deadly. But to view the passage as a mere warning against a wicked woman, were to narrow it far within the limits of its full meaning. She is the emblem of that heathen idolatry by which the spirit is seduced from God, and immersed in sensuality: and she is the emblem of that seductive apostasy in the nominal Christian church which is called Babylon —with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and whose judgment, though it linger, will come in one hour, Re. 18. 9, 10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With remarkable diligence should we attend to all the exercises of true religion. The Lord is ready to bless such as are diligent with great success; and usually bestows upon them remarkable instruction, satisfaction, and protection. There is need of real religion to season and rule our heart; and of God's special preservation and our utmost caution while we live in this world, where men of corrupt principles, and women of treacherous and corrupt practices, so greatly abound. In their sinful courses such are generally obstinate, active, and crafty. Ensnaring are their enticements, and dangerous and ordinarily ruinous their connections: and few, once entangled in their wickedness, ever seriously repent, or turn to Jesus Christ for life and salvation. Happy then are they who are delivered from them, and enabled to walk as truly pious and circumspect. Godliness has the promise of this life and of that which is to come. Even now the saints alone have a blessed portion on earth; and at last they only shall inhabit the new earth, into which no wicked person shall ever enter.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1, 2. Let me therefore again entreat you, my dear children, to receive, and rivet in your judgment, memory, will, and affections, the counsels and commands which I now give, that you may practise them in your lives: thus shall your temporal life be long, healthful, and prosperous; be attended with a pleasant life of grace here, and followed by an eternal life of glory hereafter. 3, 4. And while you live by a cordial, constant, and assured faith in the mercy and faithfulness of God, pledged in his Word, study always, as your great honour, to imitate him in kindness, compassion, and uprightness: thus shall you be highly respected and honoured, and shall prudently order your affairs both before God and men. 5, 6. Always, by faith in his spiritual promises and relations, depend wholly on God for strength, direction, and success in your undertakings, and never upon your own knowledge or carnal prudence. In every undertaking believe and depend on his overruling power, observe his directions, and implore and wait for his favour and blessing, and he shall guide you in all

5 ¶ Trust[h] in the LORD with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding.

6 In[i] all thy ways acknowledge him,[5] and he shall direct thy paths.

7 ¶ Be[j] not wise in thine own eyes: fear the LORD, and depart from evil.

8 It[k] shall be health[6] to thy navel,[7] and marrow[8] to thy bones.

9 ¶ Honour[l] the LORD with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase:

10 So[m] shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.

11 ¶ My[o] son, despise not the chastening of the LORD; neither be weary of his correction:

12 For whom the LORD loveth he correcteth, even as a father the son in whom he delighteth.

13 ¶ Happy[p] is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding:[9]

14 For[q] the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold.

15 She[r] is more precious than rubies; and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her.

16 Length[s] of days is in her right hand; and in her left hand riches and honour.

17 Her[t] ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace.

18 She is [u]a tree of life to them that [v]lay hold upon her; and happy is every one that retaineth her.

19 ¶ The[x] LORD by wisdom[1] hath founded the earth, by understanding hath he [2]established the heavens;

20 By his knowledge [y]the depths are broken up, and [z]the clouds drop down the dew.

21 ¶ My son, [a]let not them depart from thine eyes; keep sound wisdom and discretion:

22 So[b] shall they be life unto thy soul, and grace to thy neck.[3]

23 Then[c] shalt thou walk in thy way safely, and thy foot shall not stumble.

24 When[d] thou liest down, thou shalt not be afraid; yea, thou shalt lie down, and [e]thy sleep shall be sweet.

25 Be[g] not afraid of sudden fear, neither of the desolation of the wicked, when it cometh.

26 For[h] the LORD shall be thy confidence, and shall keep thy foot from being taken.

27 ¶ Withhold[i] not good[4] from them to whom it is due,[5] when it is in the power of thine hand to do it.

28 Say[j] not unto thy neighbour, Go, and come again, and to-morrow I will give, when thou hast it by thee.

29 ¶ Devise[k] not[6] evil against thy neighbour, seeing he dwelleth securely by thee.

30 Strive[l] not with a man without cause, if he have done thee no harm.

31 Envy[n] thou not the oppressor,[7] and choose none of his ways.

32 For[o] the froward is abomination to the LORD: [p]but his secret[8] is with the righteous.

33 ¶ The[q] curse of the LORD is in the house your proceedings, and bring them to a happy issue. 7, 8. Never indulge a conceit of your own knowledge or wisdom, as if it were sufficient to direct you in the easiest matters: but under the influence of a holy and filial awe of and regard to God, avoid with care whatever he has forbidden in his law: as that is the way to promote the health, strength, and comfort of both soul and body in time and eternity. 9, 10. In just gratitude to God, who has bestowed all that you have upon you, make conscience of employing your estates in works of piety, for the maintenance of his worship, and of charity to his poor, and of justice to all men: so shall his blessing abundantly increase them in everything useful and comfortable. 11, 12. Never overlook or contemn the afflictions which you meet with, as if they were trifles, or happened by chance; and never grow weary of them as an intolerable burden, or take any unlawful course to remove them; but kindly receive and submit to them as the corrections of a kind and gracious Father, in which he manifests his distinguished love to and care for your souls. —13–18. Thrice happy is the man who through much tribulation, and with much care and pains, obtains the enjoyment of Jesus Christ, and the spiritual wisdom and knowledge that is in and by him. This is infinitely preferable to everything gainful, comely, precious, or profitable on earth. By this we are secured in all the real blessings of this present life and of that which is to come. In cleaving to Jesus, and walking in his ordinances and laws, the most delightful comforts and pleasures, the most blessed tranquility of mind and conscience, the most happy success of affairs, and eternal rest with God in glory, are to be enjoyed. Immortal, quickening, and invigorating is the satisfaction enjoyed by every one who earnestly embraces his person, receives his instructions, and steadfastly walks in his ways. 19, 20. And no wonder that Jesus Christ, and the spiritual wisdom and knowledge that are hid in him, should be so profitable, pleasant, and comfortable, when by him, and in the exercise of his infinite wisdom, God formed, founded, and settled the heavens, and earth, and seas, and all that is therein, and makes the fountains to pour forth streams for the nourishment of animals, and the clouds to drop down dews and rains for the nourishment of plants, corn, and grass. 21–26. Be it therefore your earnest care to fix these my instructions in your heart, and to keep them always before your eyes, as the means of obtaining true and profitable knowledge and prudence. You will find them infallible promoters of true life, and honour, and comfort, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. By means hereof, you, by the blessing of God, shall prosper in your labours, and be kept from falling into sin or danger; and under his protection you shall enjoy the most safe and pleasant rest and refreshment. No reports of sudden and approaching danger, or of desolating judgments, appointed for or effected by the wicked, need in the least terrify you; for the Almighty JEHOVAH, in whom you have placed all your trust and confidence, shall support, protect, and preserve you from danger. 27, 28. Never delay the payment of just debts, or the giving to the Lord, or to the poor, beyond the first opportunity afforded you, as you know not if ever Providence will give you another. 29. Never contrive mischief against any: especially against such as depend on your equity and kindness. 30. Never be quarrelsome and contentious: and especially to such as have done you no injury. 31, 32. Never let the prosperity and wealth of oppressors tempt you to wish yourselves in their condition, or to imitate them in their injurious conduct; for wilful and obstinate oppressors are infinitely detested and hated of God; but his secret counsels and comforts are vouchsafed to such as walk uprightly and honestly. 33. Evil-doers, however great, and all that they have, are under the destructive influence of God's curse; but good men, being under the influence of his favour and blessing, may be happy in the meanest condition upon earth. 34. God will certainly at last expose proud mockers of religion and virtue to scorn and contempt; but will render such as are meek and humble highly respected and honoured. 35. And though persons truly wise unto salvation may for a time be abusively reproached and contemned, yet they shall, in the most free and fixed manner, enjoy honour from God and men at last; whereas contempt and misery are all the promotion that wicked men, ignorant of God and regardless of their true interest, shall ever attain.

Ver. 2. The fifth is the first commandment with promise; which ever in this life receives a literal fulfilment, as far as it serves for God's glory and the good of his people: also a spiritual fulfilment; for believers always count their days by the continuance of goodness and mercy; and their life has become truly long from their 'desire to depart and be with Christ.' But hereafter the promise is fully realized in all the blessings of life and immortality. C.

Ver. 5. Trust in the Lord. Trust in the Lord's word, whatever hath been thy own previous opinion; trust in his will, whatever hath been thy previous inclinations; trust in his promise, whatever hath been thy own previous experience; and trust in his guidance, whatever may be thy doubts, difficulties, or fears. C.

Ver. 16. Some think this description of temporal blessings is confined to the Jewish, and not literally extended to the Christian dispensation. This, with the exception of the promise of possessing Canaan, is an unfounded distinction: 'for godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is,' 1 Ti. 4. 8. The true meaning of the verse lies in referring its promise to the gift of eternal life, and the acquisition of the 'unsearchable riches of Christ.' C.

Ver. 17. Ways of pleasantness. A way is rendered pleasant, (1) by health to journey and enjoy; (2) by the smoothness of the path; (3) by the beauty of the prospect; (4) by the safety of the country; (5) by the agreeableness of companions; (6) by the prospect of a cheerful and happy rest and welcome at the end: all these meet when Jesus is 'the way.' C.

Ver. 22. Life unto thy soul. The life of the body is supported by food, digestion, and nutrition, which eventuate in health and enjoyment. The life of the soul is supported by the bread that cometh down from heaven; is accompanied with 'hunger and thirst after righteousness,' which is followed by 'growth in grace,' and eventuates in 'the peace of God' with 'joy unspeakable and full of glory.' C.

Ver. 25. Be not afraid of sudden fear. 'Sudden fear,' or what is commonly called a panic, with 'rumours of wars,' 'fire portents and omens,' are continually disturbing the minds of men. But by all, the believer in Jesus remains unmoved. His Redeemer liveth—his sins are forgiven—he is accepted of God—he inherits the promises. Jesus is with him in the ship, and he trembles not in any storm that his Father may commission to try his faith. C.

Ver. 32. His secret is with the righteous. This does not signify any secret information that God gives to the one, while he withholds it from the other for the grace of God hath appeared unto all men, teaching them that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, they should live soberly, righteously, and godly; but it signifies God's residence in the hearts of believers, which this world can neither see, imagine, nor admit; and that secret comfort which he administers to them by his promises and Spirit, in the midst of all the public trials of which they are partakers, and of the wicked: but [r]he blesseth the habitation of the just.

34 Surely[s] he scorneth the scorners: but he giveth grace unto the lowly.

35 The[t] wise shall inherit glory: but shame shall be the promotion of fools.[9]

CHAPTER IV.

1 Solomon, to persuade obedience, 3 showeth what instruction he had of his parents, 5 to study wisdom, 14 and to shun the path of the wicked. 20 He exhorteth to faith, 23 and sanctification.

HEAR, ye[a] children,[1] the instruction of a father, and attend to know understanding.

2 For I give you [b]good doctrine, forsake ye not my law.

3 For[c] I was my father's son, tender and only beloved in the sight of my mother.[2]

4 He[d] taught me also, and said unto me, Let[e] thine heart retain my words: keep my commandments, and live.

5 ¶ Get[g] wisdom, get understanding: forget it not; neither decline from the words of my mouth.

6 Forsake her not, and she shall preserve thee; [h]love her, and she shall keep thee.

7 Wisdom is the [i]principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding.

8 Exalt[j] her, and she shall promote thee: she shall bring thee to honour,[3] when thou dost embrace her.

9 She shall give to thine head [k]an ornament of grace: [l]a crown of glory shall she deliver to thee.[5]

10 Hear, O my son, and receive my sayings; and [t]the years of thy life shall be many.

11 I have taught thee in the way of wisdom; I have led thee in right paths.[6] that secret acquittal which he reports to their consciences, in the midst of all the public calumnies they may be condemned to undergo. C.

Ver. 34. Giveth grace unto the lowly. It does not signify that God gives grace to men who have become lowly, previous to grace, or without grace, by a mere effort of unrenewed nature, but that he first gives lowliness, which is a grace of the Spirit, and then, where he has already sown the seed, continues to water and give the increase. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Real religion has a glorious and blessed tendency to render men happy in themselves, and blessings to all around them. And those who neglect and despise it are in general mean-spirited, foolish, and self-ruining wretches, dishonourers of God, and plagues to mankind. But great is the shame that the professors of religion so little conform their lives to the excellent rules thereof, that they so little exemplify them in their behaviour and conduct. And comely would the church of God appear if that regard to God's law, faith in him, devotion, resignation to his will, diligence in his work, and that truth, mercy, equity, peacefulness, humility, and prudence towards men, required in his Word, were duly exercised.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1–3. My dear young friends, attend to and receive these affectionate, wholesome, and profitable instructions which I give you: and while you live, earnestly practise the same. They are the very same which I myself, as a darling son, and intended successor on the throne, received from my pious and affectionate father David. 4–9. He, in the most careful and earnest manner, instructed me in my childhood, and begged me to fix his instructions and directions in my heart, and practise them in my life, as the means of attaining true and lasting felicity. He earnestly recommended to me the getting of Jesus Christ, and the true knowledge and fear of God in him, and cleaving thereto, as the grand and effectual means of preservation from sin and danger, and of obtaining happiness and honour both in time and eternity.* 10–13. As you wish to live long and prosperously, receive, and observe in your practice, these my instructions. I do not direct you into paths of folly, fraud, or perverseness, but into a course of wisdom, integrity, and virtue; in which you may prosecute business without any entangling difficulties, and with ease, despatch, and certain success. Carefully fix these instructions in your mind and heart, and persevere in the practice of them, as on this your happiness in time and eternity depends. 14–19. With the utmost care and abhorrence avoid the company and course of wicked men, and every temptation thereto; and with the greatest speed and earnestness flee from it if you have been entangled; for such is the malignity of their dispositions, that they can take no rest till they execute their villanous intentions, and are perpetually disturbing themselves in order to ruin others. They neither have, nor desire, any other provision to live on than what they get by unjust and violent courses. And while good men daily grow in knowledge, grace, and holiness of conversation, till they arrive at perfection, wicked men, amidst gross ignorance, error, confusion, crimes, and wretchedness, rush on heedlessly till they are plunged into everlasting misery. 20–27. And in order to retain in heart, and practise in life, these my excellent instructions, which are a source of lasting and complete happiness to all who improve them aright, watch over your heart, and keep your mind, conscience, will, affections, thoughts, and desires, with uncommon earnestness, as from these do originally issue the eternal happiness or misery of mankind. Resolutely shun all impure or wicked discourse; and never let any corrupt, false, filthy, idle, passionate, or scornful communication proceed from your lips. Let your mind and thoughts be fixed only upon the right paths of holiness and virtue, that you may walk in them without ever turning from them; and never let your eyes, by fixing on improper objects, seduce you into sin or danger. Before you fix upon any action, carefully examine whether it be agreeable to God's law, and answerable to the end for which you intend it; and let every step you take in life be rightly ordered, according to the rule of his Word. And, by shunning extremes on every hand, labour to avoid everything offensive or injurious either to God or men.

* Whether David's words end here, or reach farther, perhaps to the end of chap. 12., we do not certainly know.

Ver. 18. Even the private path of the just (the believer justified by faith, Ro. iii.) is as the shining light. It shineth more and more before God, in faith and love; more and more before men, in diligence and zeal; more and more before the church, in knowledge and edification; more and more before God, in humility and holiness. C.

Ver. 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence. Keep it with the diligence of a guardian, that would fence it against intrusion or assault; with the diligence of a servant, that would attend to its necessities and requirements; with the diligence of a steward, keeping all accounts of expenditure and gain; and with the diligence of a physician, attending to its symptoms, and prescribing for its diseases; and with the diligence of a friend, taking equal pleasure in bearing with its infirmities, sympathizing with its sorrows, relieving its necessities, and participating in its joys. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is the greatest honour, as well as duty, of parents carefully to instruct their children: and it may be infinitely useful after both instructors and instructed are laid in the dust. Unspeakably excellent is Jesus Christ, his grace, and holy religion. Multitudes of powerful reasons engage us to remember and cleave to them: and to love, delight in, or exalt them. Yet how apt are our corrupt hearts to ensnare us into fellowship with wicked persons or practices, or even to render us intent on, and delighted in, the most cruel and barbarous conduct! But wide is the difference in time, and especially in eternity, between the way of holiness and that of iniquity. While the saints gradually grow up in grace here, and live in endless felicity hereafter, the wicked blindly rush forward into everlasting misery. Great circumspection, care, diligence, and watchfulness are therefore necessary in denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and in living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present evil world.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1, 2. And, my children, what I am just going to say requires your particular and most serious consideration, that you may be able to preserve yourselves from the most subtle and dangerous deceits, and, by your pious and prudent discourses and admonitions, prevent the ensnarement of others. 3–6. For, astonishing are the arts, and inconceivable the enchanting flatteries, of whorish women, as if nothing but the most pure and exquisite pleasures were to be enjoyed in fellowship with them: but dreadful is the real issue thereof, in the impairing of men's health, strength, estates, and reputation; and in remorse of conscience, wretched death, and endless damnation. And to prevent your repentance and escape from their snares, they will turn themselves into ten thousand forms, that they may work on your several humours. 7–14. Let me, therefore, with the utmost affection, earnestness, and solemnity, beseech you to avoid such women, and all, even the most distant, approaches to familiarity with them, as a dangerous, an infernal plague; lest you forfeit your credit, and sacrifice your vigour of life to base and cruel wretches, who labour to ruin you to every intent, and for ever; and lest your wealth, and the fruit of your care and labour, should by their means be transferred from you to others; and when your substance is gone, and your body pining to death, under horrible diseases, you should have nothing left you but inexpressible torment of conscience, reflecting upon the faithful admonitions of parents and teachers which you have contemned, and the miseries you do, and must for ever, undergo. 15–19. And to prevent your having the smallest inclination to the base and polluting pleasures of whoredom, marry; and in a wife, wholly your own, enjoy and rest contented with the pure, chaste, and honourable pleasures of the marriage state. Take pleasure in having children by her, sporting in the streets, or dispersed into families. Have children by her alone, and which you are sufficiently certain are really your own. Make your wife happy, by an affectionate cleaving to her only: and take pleasure in her innocent and delightful company. While you live together, let her always be amiable in your eyes; cherish her with the most tender affection; and in her embraces, and tender regard, always take such satisfaction as to prevent your affections in the least fixing upon another in her stead. 20, 21. And when you can so fully, pleasantly, securely, constantly, innocently, and honourably enjoy such pleasures in a pious and affectionate wife, why risk everything dear, to enjoy the base, dishonourable, destructive, and damning pleasures of whoredom—especially when the all-seeing God witnesses your most secret conduct, and will quickly reward or punish you according to the nature of it? 22, 23. Nor shall whoremongers and adulterers long escape his insupportable justice;—their own guilt and lust shall for ever bind and hold them fast under the power of his wrath. To punish their contempt of former instructions and warnings, God shall abandon them to impenitence, and permit them madly to rush forward, through increasing crimes, into endless damnation.

Ver. 2. Knowledge. The knowledge of the evil of sin in time and eternity: the knowledge of God in Christ, reconciling the world to himself; the knowledge of regeneration, whereby men are renewed in heart, speech, and behaviour; the knowledge of glory, into which fornicators and adulterers can never enter. C.

Ver. 6. Movable. Like the shifting sands at the estuary of rivers, that move in a storm, and destroy many vessels before their new positions can be sufficiently ascertained. But let it never be forgot, that whilst this wicked and seducing woman is a real character, she is also an emblem of heathen idolatry and Christian apostasy; that like her, lead the soul away from God, and promising life, lead down to the ways of destruction and death. See note on ch. 2. 17. C.

Ver. 19. The loving hind and pleasant roe. The affection of many quadrupeds and birds—nay, of some animals of the deep—for their young, presents an instructive lesson, and often a killing reproof, to rational, immortal, and accountable beings. But however great the evil and the shame, when human beings become unfaithful to one another—how much greater when the harlotry of error seduces the church from her Saviour—when 'the ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know, God's people do not consider?' Is. 1. 3. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is shameful and shocking that mankind should be inclined, nay, so much inclined, to a sin so base, so beastly, and ruinous, as whoredom.—That even in the sex where modesty ought to shine with distinguished lustre, wretches should be found who impudently entice to it! Surely it must be very absurd to prefer the pleasures of it, attended with miseries innumerable, to the innocent, the sanctified joys and honours of the marriage state! But no wonder that they who atheistically discredit the omniscience and justice of God, and live thoughtless of their future account, should proceed to the most infamous lengths in wickedness. Yet let them remember, that in the most miserable manner, correspondent to their sins, they shall at last be hurried into endless fire!

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1–5. And that no occasion may be given for family contentions or ruin, let me admonish you to beware of all rash engagements in suretiship, especially for such whose honesty or ability you know not; but if you have rashly entangled and 9 How[e] long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?

10 Yet[g] a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep:

12 ¶ A[h] naughty person, a wicked man, walketh with a froward mouth.

13 He[i] winketh with his eyes, he speaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers;[7]

14 Frowardness[j] is in his heart, [k]he deviseth mischief continually, he soweth[8] discord:

15 Therefore[l] shall his calamity come suddenly; suddenly shall he be broken without remedy.

16 ¶ These six things doth the LORD hate; yea, seven are an abomination unto him:[9]

17 A[n] proud [1]look, [o]a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood,

18 An[p] heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, [q]feet that be swift in running to mischief, 19 A[r] false witness that speaketh lies, and him[s] that soweth discord among brethren.

20 ¶ My[t] son, keep thy father's commandment, and forsake not the law of thy mother:[2]

21 Bind them continually upon thine heart, and tie them about thy neck.

22 When[u] thou goest, it shall lead thee; when thou sleepest, it shall keep thee; and when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee.

23 For[v] the commandment is a lamp;[3] and the law is light; and reproofs of instruction are [z]the way of life:

24 To [y]keep thee from the evil woman, from the flattery [4]of the tongue of a strange [5]woman.

25 ¶ Lust[z] not after her beauty in thine heart; neither let her take thee with her eyelids:

26 For by means of a whorish woman a man is brought to a [a]piece of bread; and the adulteress[6] will [b]hunt for the precious life.[7]

27 Can a man take [c]fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burnt?

28 Can one go upon hot coals, and his feet not be burnt?

29 So [d]he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife; whosoever toucheth her shall not be innocent.[8]

30 Men do not despise[9] a thief, if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry:

31 But if he be found, he shall restore sevenfold; [e]he shall give all the substance of his house.

32 But whoso committeth adultery with a woman lacketh [1]understanding: [g]he that doeth it destroyeth his own soul.[2]

33 A[h] wound and dishonour shall he get; and his reproach shall not be wiped away.

34 For[i] jealousy is the rage of a man: therefore he will not spare in the [j]day of vengeance.

35 He will not regard any ransom;[3] neither will he rest content, though thou givest many gifts.

enslaved yourself by such obligations, endeavour, as quickly as possible, by every humble and persuasive method you can think of; nay, struggle as for life, to disengage yourself, by pressing the debtor to pay what he owes, or the creditor to acquit you of your bond.—6–11. Meanwhile, never indulge yourself in sloth, and want of provident care; but learn, from those puny insects the ants, to labour diligently in your calling, and carefully improve every opportunity of honestly providing for yourself and your family: and remember that, if that inclination to idleness and sloth, so common to mankind, be indulged by you, whether in greater or smaller degrees, unexpected and at last extreme poverty shall irresistibly come upon you. 12–15. Remember too, that it is the property of persons vile and wicked to accustom themselves to profane, blasphemous, proud, passionate, lewd, or reproachful discourse, or by signs made with their eyes, feet, or fingers to stir up others to mischief. The heart of such being filled with perverse inclinations, they are perpetually contriving mischief, and stirring up hatred and contention among their neighbours: but suddenly shall their villany and wickedness issue in their irretrievable infamy and ruin. 16–19. And indeed proud looks, lying tongues, murderous hands, hearts given to mischievous contrivances, feet given to a speedy execution of injurious designs, perjured persons, and sowers of discord among friends or neighbours, are distinguished objects of God's indignation.—20–22. Let me therefore again press you to attend to, highly esteem, and carefully practise, those divine instructions which have been tendered to you by your parents. This will be of great use to direct, preserve, and comfort you in your whole labours of life. 23, 24. For the law of God, as a lamp, guides in adversity, and, as the light of the sun, directs and comforts in prosperity; and the reproofs of his Word are excellent means of preserving from ruin, and leading to true happiness; and are particularly useful to preserve from being deluded by the flattering speeches and enticements of lewd women, those sinks of wickedness and plagues of mankind. 25–29. As you regard your temporal or eternal welfare, never gaze on the beauty or fine attire of such: never let their wanton and enticing looks engage you to the most distant desire after their dangerous embraces; for if once they insnare you, they will never quit their hold till they have reduced you to extreme beggary, or to a miserable and ignominious death. You may more safely take fire into your bosom, or walk upon burning coals, than intermeddle, however privately or transiently, with a whorish woman, particularly if either party be married. 30–33. If one merely steal to fill his hungry belly, he is not exposed to shame or punishment; and if it be found that he has stolen more, it is only required that he should make complete restitution according to the law, which may perhaps amount to all that he is worth. But he who commits adultery with a woman can have no necessity for it, but acts through mere folly and wickedness, and so exposes himself to the loss of his life by the magistrates, as well as to eternal damnation from the hand of God. He exposes himself to bloody quarrels, and renders himself irrecoverably infamous. And though the civil magistrate should wickedly spare his life, yet it is exposed to the fury of a justly enraged husband, who will regard no penitential submissions or entreaties, and accept no gifts as the ransom of it.

Ver. 1. This is a passage of great practical difficulty. Does it, by implication, altogether forbid the aid of suretiship to friends? This cannot be; for in many instances such suretiship is indispensable. Does it, then, covertly condemn merely such 'rash and inconsiderate engagements as arise from an undue facility of temper, rather than from a deliberate calculation of duty?' Such covert insinuation of a principle is inconsistent with the plainness of Scripture. With great deference, the following slight and well warranted change in the translation is suggested:—'My son, if thou be surety to thy friend,' see Ge. 24. 54. This makes the object of the passage to be a warning against any neglect of a friend's interest (for which we have become accountable), from any undue presumptuous draft upon his friendship—a most necessary warning; for in practice there are many who will neglect their own interests, and the interests of their best friends, for the sake that may result from their attention and liberality to strangers. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Greatly advantageous, even to the outward interests of persons, families, and nations, is an exact obedience to God's commandments. And it is sinful and foolish to ruin our estates or families by engaging for other people's debts: but infamously wicked are those debtors who exert not themselves to the utmost to relieve their sureties. Great care ought to be taken of our outward property. In respect of it we are but God's stewards, and ought to lay it out and bring it in according to his directions. The amazing instinct which God hath given to some animals, and their conduct, shame the slothful of mankind. Such sluggards are very averse to be roused to their work, spiritual or temporal. If one degree of indolence be denied them, they would gradually enjoy a lesser: but poverty in a quick, irresistible, and ruinous manner, comes to such at last. With alarming earnestness do sinners practise iniquity, and make every power of their soul, or member of their body, instrumental therein. And many things in heart, in lip, in life, are detested by God, which are overlooked as almost innocent by

CHAPTER VII.

1 Solomon persuadeth to a sincere and kind familiarity with wisdom. 5 In an example of his own experience, he showeth 10 the cunning of a lewd woman, 22 and the desperate simplicity of a young wanton. 24 He dissuadeth from such dangerous courses.

MY [a]son,[1] keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee.

2 Keep[b] my commandments, and live; and my law [c]as the apple of thine eye.

3 Bind[d] them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart.

4 Say[e] unto wisdom, Thou art my sister; and call understanding thy kinswoman:

5 That[f] they may keep thee from the strange woman, from the stranger which flattereth with her words.

6 ¶ For[2] at the window of my house[3] I looked through my casement,

7 And beheld among the simple ones, I discerned among the youths,[4] a young man [h]void of understanding,[5]

8 Passing through the street near her corner; and he [i]went the way to her house,

9 In[j] the twilight, in the evening,[6] in the black and dark night:

10 And, behold, there met him a woman with the [k]attire of an harlot,[7] and subtile of heart.

11 (She[l] is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house:

12 Now[m] is she without, now in the streets, and lieth in wait at every corner.)

13 So [n]she caught him, and kissed him, and with an impudent face said[8] unto him,

14 I have peace-offerings with me;[9] this day have I paid my vows:

15 Therefore came I forth to meet thee, diligently to seek thy face, and I have found thee.

16 I have decked my bed with coverings of tapestry, with carved works, with [p]fine linen of Egypt.

17 I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon.

18 Come, let us take our fill of love until the morning; let us solace ourselves with loves.

19 For the goodman[1] is not at home, he is gone a long journey:

20 He hath taken a bag of money with [2]him, and will come home at the day appointed.[3]

21 With[q] her much fair speech she caused him to yield, with the [r]flattering of her lips she forced him.

22 He goeth after her straightway,[4] as an ox goeth to the slaughter, or as a fool to the [s]correction of the stocks;[5]

23 Till[t] a dart strike through his liver; as a bird hasteth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life.

24 ¶ Hearken[u] unto me now therefore, O ye children, and attend to the words of my mouth:

25 Let[v] not thine heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths:

26 For she hath cast down many wounded; yea, many [s]strong men have been slain by her.

27 Her[w] house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The fame, 6 and evidence of wisdom. 10 The excellency, 12 the nature, 15 the power, 18 the riches, 22 and the eternity of wisdom. 32 Wisdom is to be desired for the blessedness it bringeth.

DOTH not [a]wisdom cry? and understanding put forth her voice?[1]

2 She standeth in the top of high places, by the way in the places of the paths:

3 She crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in at the doors:

4 Unto[b] you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of man.

5 O[c] ye simple, understand wisdom; and, [d]ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart.

6 ¶ Hear, for I will [e]speak of excellent things; and the opening of my lips shall be right things.

7 For[e] my mouth shall speak truth; and wickedness is an abomination to my lips.[2]

8 All the words of my mouth are in righteousness; there is nothing [h]froward[3] or perverse in them.

9 They[i] are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge.

10 ¶ Receive[j] my instruction, and [k]not silver; and knowledge rather than choice gold.

11 For[l] wisdom is better than rubies; and men. With what ardent love ought we to regard the word of God as our enlightening instructor and regulating law! It is necessary to receive, retain, and improve it as a powerful mean to preserve us from fleshly lusts, which war against both body and soul. But terrible and fatal snares are the flattering words and looks of whorish and light women. It is impossible to avoid destruction if once we are entangled by them. And it is shocking that so many indulge themselves in a crime so infamous and destructive.

1 Wisdom is here personified. She is represented as a great and universal teacher. In all places, at all times, under all circumstances, her lessons are within the reach of the thoughtful and attentive. The eternal Son is the grand revealer of divine wisdom. He is the universal Teacher. He teaches by various instruments and agencies —by the light of nature, by the inner conscience, by the dispensations of providence, and by the full and clear dictates of revelation. If men are ignorant, the fault is their own; it is because they wilfully shut their eyes and stop their ears.—P.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1–5. My dear young friends, let me again press upon your consciences to lay up my advices and instructions in your judgment, heart, and memory; and carefully, tenderly, and readily to observe and practise them. Make yourselves familiar with Jesus Christ, and his spiritual instructions, as the most powerful means of preservation from the ensnaring arts and flatteries of whorish women, which is a privilege of infinite importance. 6–9. For, from my own window I observed a thoughtless young fop sauntering under night in the streets, and in a stately manner walking towards a corner which these infamous strumpets used to haunt. 10–20. There, one dressed in a light and whorish manner, and extremely skilled in the arts of enticement, —one extremely talkative, ready to brawl with her husband, given to idle visiting, and gadding about to places of dissipation and concourse, —met him, caught him in her arms and kissed him, and in an impudent manner told him that, being a devout lady, she had that very day been offering thank-offerings to God; and being to feast upon her share of the flesh thereof, she had solicitously sought him to take a part of it, and had happily found him; —and that she had decked and perfumed her bed in the most engaging manner, —in which they might riot all night in exquisite pleasures, without any danger, as the silly fellow called her husband was gone a long journey, had a great deal of business to transact, and would not return till the full moon. 21–23. Notwithstanding his showing some aversion at first, she, by her fair pretences and flattering speeches, quickly compelled him to follow her, as willingly, and no less stupidly, than an ox goeth to the slaughter, or a madman to the stocks,—never thinking of anything but pleasure, till the enraged husband sheath his sword in his bowels, or the judgments of God accomplish his irretrievable ruin!—24–27. Let me therefore beseech you, my dear young men, whom I unfeignedly regard, diligently to observe and practise these warnings which I have repeatedly given you. Never indulge the smallest inclination towards such women; never listen to their enticements; never indulge the smallest fellowship or familiarity with such; never hope to be safe in, or to return from, such courses; for many, even of those noted in valour and wisdom, have been totally ruined in reputation, estate, body, and soul by such women; and fellowship with them is the certain road to a miserable death and eternal damnation.

Ver. 14. Peace-offerings. The law of God, De. 12. 6, 7, adjudged the greater part of the peace-offering to the offerer as a feast for himself and his friends. And here, by a perverse interpretation, the beneficence of religion is made a cloak and incentive to sin.—Note. And let every Christian note it well: to turn all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it.

12 ¶ I[n] wisdom dwell with prudence,[4] and find out knowledge of witty inventions.

13 The[o] fear of the LORD is to hate evil: pride,[p] and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate.

14 Counsel[q] is mine, and sound wisdom: I am understanding; [r]I have strength.[5]

15 ¶ By[s] me kings reign, and princes decree justice.

16 By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth.

17 I[t] love them that love me; and [u]those that seek me early shall find me.

18 Riches[v] and honour are with me; yea, durable riches and righteousness.

19 My[x] fruit is better than gold, yea, than fine gold; and my revenue than choice silver.

20 I[y] lead[6] in the way of righteousness, in the midst of the paths of judgment;

21 That I may cause those that love me [z]to inherit substance; and I will fill their treasures.

22 ¶ The[a] LORD possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old.[7]

23 I[b] was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was.

24 When there were no depths, I was brought forth; when there were no fountains abounding with water.

the grace of God into licentiousness is a constant inclination in man, and a constant temptation of Satan. Let believers watch and pray that they follow neither. C.

Ver. 18. It is thus that by the misapplication of words, the world, the flesh, and the devil continue to seduce and destroy. Love is an attribute, a name for God himself: yet, under this name, the seducer covers her own perjury, her victim's lewdness, and the disregard and enmity of both to God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is necessary to love, search, and meditate on God's law day and night; and to make it the constant food of our heart and standard of our life. Then should we find therein the most sanctifying virtue. Magistrates and ministers should carefully inspect the people committed to their charge! And there is need of frequent and fervent prayers to God for our friends and neighbours, as we know not in what guilt fearful temptations may involve them if not overcome. The devil quickly finds business for idle and unseasonable saunterers, especially if young. And when women are once addicted to flaunting, loose, and gaudy apparel, and to wheedling in love matters, and are extremely talkative, and given to an unsettled and dissipated course, it will require no great pains to make harlots of them. Terribly base and impudent these women become who have thrown off the restraints of modesty peculiar to their sex. And sad is the case when husbands and wives are glad to be rid of one another's company. It is shameful, wicked, and ruinous, when Satan and his abominable agents or lusts are, in days of youth, preferred to Jesus Christ and his grace. But fearful and speedy destruction, from the crime itself, or from the hand of God or man, awaits the whorish adulterer. Surely then we should be solicitous to improve the falls and miseries of others, as a warning for us to take heed, lest, in the same thoughtless and inconsiderate manner, we hurry ourselves into everlasting ruin.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1–11. And why, to your ruin, should you listen to the flattering enticements of whorish women, when Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, by himself and his messengers, in the most open and earnest manner, calls you, and every one of mankind, even the most simple and foolish, to the study of true and spiritual wisdom;—to listen to, consider, and believe the excellent, pure, holy, substantial, faithful, precious, and infinitely useful oracles of his Word: 12–31. And in order to enforce his call, and recommend his instructions, represents himself as the infinitely wise God, the source of all wisdom and prudence; the infinitely Holy One, who detests everything proud, polluted, or perverse;—and the Almighty God, able to execute all his purposes, and by whose deputed authority all the magistrates on earth govern their subjects;—the infinite lover and rich rewarder of all that seek him, particularly in youth;—the inexhaustible portion and unerring guide of all those who receive him by faith:—the eternal and only begotten Son of JEHOVAH, appointed to be our Mediator;—the almighty Maker of all things in heaven and earth;—and who, from his infinite and peculiar love to mankind, took a distinguished pleasure in forming the earth as a theatre, whereon he should appear, save, and hold intimate fellowship with the sons and daughters of Adam. 32–36. On account of all which excellencies and kindness he, in the most earnest and condescending manner, entreats and charges you to hear, receive, and practically observe his instructions, attend his ordinances, and receive himself in them, as the free gift of God, and as the only mean of true and everlasting happiness;—and warns you, that if you refuse and hate him, you will infallibly and eternally ruin yourselves.

Ver. 1. He that would understand this, and similar passages, may consult Is. 11. 2, 3, where he will find the seven gifts of the Spirit enumerated as the endowments of Christ. And as every attribute of God is but a name for his being—so the forth-putting of every separate attribute is but an account of the actings of his being in that special view. According, 'wisdom and understanding' are here both used as titles of Christ—wisdom, to indicate his full comprehension of the interests and means of the house of God: understanding, to indicate his adequacy to sustain their weight, care, and management. C.

Ver. 5. Ye simple. This word is applied either to that singleness of heart that rejects the world and is persuaded of God, Ro. 16. 19, or that singleness of heart that rejects God and follows the world, Pr. 14. 15. Singleness is the original idea in both cases—the nature of that singleness is explained by its peculiar attributes, as it occurs. C.

Ver. 9. He that hath understanding, is not necessarily he that is learned: but he in whose heart the Word of God has been sown as a seed of life, and who has resisted and overcome the efforts of Satan to take it away, Mat. 13. 19. To such a one all the words of God are plain, because it is written, 'If any man will do his (the Father's) will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God,' Jn. 7. 17. C.

Ver. 12. Prudence implies foresight, forethought, and preparation for coming events. It is an attribute of God, Ep. 1. 8; and, rightly understood, a precious grace of the Spirit in man, Is. 52. 13.—Witty. This word is here used in the sense of ingenious, skilful. To the Spirit of God all human ingenuity is to be attributed, Ex. 31. 2, 3, the administration of whose gifts are all in the hands of Christ, the eternal Wisdom. C.

Ver. 18. Were further proof required that the WISDOM here speaking is Christ, it would here be furnished: none but he is righteous, Ro. 3. 10; 1 Jn. 2. 1; none but he has righteousness, Ro. 3. 22. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How public, earnest, and extensive are the calls of the gospel! Infinitely excellent is that Jesus Christ and his salvation therein exhibited and offered, and that religion which is therein prescribed. And happy, in the blessings of time and eternity, are those persons, families, and nations in which the knowledge of Christ and his truths prevail and reign! They are enriched with the fruits of his mediation, and filled with all the fulness of God. But is it not infinitely amazing, that God's eternal Son, the Creator and Preserver of all things, should have, from everlasting, entered into the room of, and fixed his thoughts, his delights upon, the children of men? Surely then he deserves our strictest attention, our earliest and strongest affection. And just and righteous is the sorest punishment which can be inflicted upon those self-ruiners who refuse him, and neglect and despise the ordinances of his grace. Let me consider this great Apostle and High-priest of my profession, this great ALL and IN ALL. Let my heart seek him early, earnestly, and above all things else. Let me love him, who first loved me, with my whole heart, soul, mind, and strength. Let me rejoice and delight in him as my exceeding joy, and all my consolation. Let me carefully attend his ordinances, watching daily at his gates, at the posts of his doors; and if I find him who is the great God my Saviour, and the eternal life, my pains will be infinitely more than rewarded.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1–5. And why enter the ruinous house or covet the ensnaring entertainment of a harlot, when the infinitely wise Jesus Christ, who is made of God unto us wisdom, hath framed, for his fellowship with men, a glorious church on earth and in heaven, fully supported by divine perfections, purposes, oracles, and offices; and hath prepared his own crucified self, his word, ordinances, and eternal felicities,

CHAPTER IX.

1 The discipline, 4 and doctrine of wisdom. 13 The custom, 16 and error of folly.

WISDOM [a]hath [b]builded her house, she hath hewn out her [c]seven pillars;[1]

2 She[2] hath killed her beasts;[2] she hath mingled her wine; she hath also furnished her table;

3 She[3] hath sent forth her maidens: [d]she crieth upon the highest places of the city,

4 Whoso[4] is simple,[3] let him turn in hither: as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him,

5 Come, [e]eat of my bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled.[4]

6 Forsake[5] the foolish, and live; and go in the way of understanding.

7 He[6] that reproveth a scorner getteth to himself shame; and he that rebuketh a wicked man getteth himself a blot.

8 Reprove[7] not a scorner, lest he hate thee: rebuke[8] a wise man, and he will love thee.

9 Give[9] instruction to a wise man, and he will be yet wiser: teach a just man, and he will increase in learning.

10 The[10] fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom; and the knowledge of the Holy is understanding:

11 For[11] by me thy days shall be multiplied, and the years of thy life shall be increased.

12 If[12] thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thyself:[5] but [f]if thou scornest, thou alone shalt bear it.

13 ¶ A[13] foolish woman is clamorous; she is simple, and knoweth nothing.

14 For[14] she sitteth at the door of her house, on a seat in the high places of the city,

15 To[15] call passengers who go right on their ways:

16 Whoso[16] is simple, let him turn in hither; and as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him,

17 Stolen[17] waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret[6] is pleasant.

18 ¶ But he [g]knoweth not [h]that the dead are there; and that her guests are in the depths of hell.[7]

It is a refuge from the world's vanities, and away from its persecutions and a scene, for the acquisition of divine truth. Wisdom is Jesus Christ our great King; the temple is his true church: the seven pillars are the emblems of perfection and stability; the food and the wine represent Christian ordinances and teaching.—P.

for the nourishment and satisfaction of sinful men; and in the gospel, by his faithful prophets, apostles, and ministers, earnestly invites and beseeches even the most weak, wicked, and besotted sinners of mankind to come by faith, and freely partake of his nourishing, strengthening, delightful, and satisfactory fulness and blessings? 6–12. Earnestly he admonishes you to avoid all unnecessary intimacy with wicked persons, as you regard your temporal or eternal happiness; as by it you cannot, even in attempting their reformation, justly expect to profit them, but may be sure of procuring hatred and infamy to yourselves;—and to cultivate familiarity with wise and serious persons, whom you may both profit and be profited by;—and to study true and experimental godliness, as the proper mean to render you truly happy in this world and in that which is to come; and solemnly warns you that you yourselves must reap the inexpressibly important fruits of your attention to or scornful rejection of his instructions.—13–18. And remember, as before God, that nothing more effectually renders men despisers of Christ and his blessings than fellowship with light and lewd women, or false teachers; who, ignorant of everything spiritually good, and extremely talkative, artfully and impudently seduce simple persons, who intend no such thing, to imagine that forbidden pleasures are peculiarly delightful. And, alas! few of those tempted by them seriously consider, that by such pleasures multitudes have already lost their lives, and are entered into the everlasting torments of hell.

Ver. 8. Reprove not a scorner. Why not reprove a scorner? Because Providence does not show that he is prepared to bear reproof. But deal with him in meekness; and pray for him in thine heart; and thus, and in this true and holy sense, become 'all things unto all men, that thou mayest save some,' 1 Co. 9. 19–22. C.

Ver. 16. Whoso is simple. The seducer here employs the language of Wisdom, ver. 4, even as Satan employed the language of Scripture in his temptation of our Lord, Mat. 4. 6.—Note, It has ever been the custom of error and heresy to employ, nay, to extol Scripture language; while inwardly, often rejecting its authority, and always perverting its meaning. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What great things Jesus Christ has done, and still does, for our salvation! O how unwilling is he that we should perish! Gloriously formed, and well supported and established, are his promise and church. Rich are his gospel provisions—his own flesh and blood, nay, all the fulness of God. And free and unencumbered with legal qualifications are his gospel calls. How absurd, insolent, and foolish are the scornful refusers thereof! For certain and just is their aggravated and everlasting ruin. And it is impossible to have fellowship with Christ, in grace or glory, and yet live in intimacy with wicked men. There is need of the utmost care, both in giving and taking reproofs. Fidelity in reproofs is the surest evidence of genuine friendship. None are too wise to learn, nor too good to amend. And they who rage at rebuke prove the weakness of their own understanding, as well as the want of grace. But, alas! what manifold temptations, suited to the taste of our corrupt hearts, are presented to us by Satan and his emissaries, to keep or draw us from Jesus Christ! And too many, through ignorance of and inattention to the danger, comply therewith. But however sweet the pleasures of sin be in the mouth, they are bitter in the belly; they issue in endless torment and anguish.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1. It is a great comfort to parents to see their children profiting by their instructions and examples, and growing up in wisdom, piety, and virtue. But it is a grief and burden to them when they are foolish, stubborn, and profligate. 2. Ill-gotten riches afford no solid comfort in life, but draw on a wasting or poisoning curse: but Jesus' glorious love, and a holy, just, and merciful conduct, procure safety and deliverance from the greatest dangers. 3. The Lord, who has all fulness in his hand, will always grant necessary supplies, for both soul and body, to them who are justified in Christ and live in a just and merciful manner. But he will deprive the wicked of their ill-gotten possessions by some stroke of his providence, or remove them from it by death. 4. Negligence and sloth, and even fraudulent methods of gain, bring men to poverty; but active diligence tends to enrich men both in temporals and spirituals. 5. To seize upon and improve opportunities of obtaining spiritual or temporal things, particularly in the time of youth, is a mark of true wisdom: but he that slothfully neglects them, brings misery and shame upon himself and his parents. 6. The justified in Christ are, to their everlasting honour and safety, blessed in him with all the blessings of time and eternity: and outward blessings often attend the just and merciful on earth. But their own iniquity shall violently overwhelm and confound those who wickedly defraud and oppress their neighbours. 7. The pious and virtuous shall, at least after death, be remembered with honour and praise, men blessing God for their good example and useful conversation; but wicked livers shall either be forgotten or remembered with abhorrence. 8. They who are truly wise will thankfully receive and practise laws from God or good advices from men: but self-conceited persons, who will not learn of others, but love to hear themselves talk, shall bring themselves into contempt, sin, and misery: nay, into hell. 9. He who in dealing with God and men walks in candour, simplicity, and godly sincerity, is safe under the divine protection in his way to eternal life, and avoids manifold miseries and snares in this world; but he who indulges himself in hypocrisy towards God, and in inconstancy and deceit towards men, shall be detected and made a public reproach. 10. He who under pretence of kindness betrays his neighbour, and by signs mocks him or tempts others to injure him, is a common grievance, and shall at last become miserable; but a noisy and perpetual talker ruins himself by his words, and deserves to be beaten for his impertinence. 11. Good discourse always tends to the profit, comfort, and refreshment of those that receive it; but wicked men, to their own ruin, pour forth virulent and mischievous language; or, if their language be fair, it but conceals the mischief which they intend to effect when opportunity serves. 12. Where there is hatred in the heart, almost everything, however innocent, will be used to raise quarrels or disturbances: but love overlooks affronts and injuries, pacifies the mind of the injured, and composes contentions for which too much ground had been given. 13. Where wisdom abounds in the heart, the discourse of the lips will be sensible and edifying; but nothing but sore afflictions here, or the torments of hell hereafter, can bring obstinate fools to any serious reflection. 14. They who know the value of true wisdom labour to enlarge their knowledge, and to keep it up till they have proper opportunities for using it: but fools rashly blab out what tends to their own or others' ruin. 15. Riches make men confident and secure, and even protect them against manifold injuries in this world; whereas poverty depresses men's spirits, and exposes them to injury and abuse. 16. The industry of the righteous in outward things issues in the comfortable maintenance of himself and others; and his care for his soul issues in life spiritual and eternal: but whatever a wicked man has by inheritance, or by his own acquirement, hardens him in sin, and is abused to gratify his sinful lusts. 17. He is in the way to eternal life who receives, lays up in his heart, and practises the instructions of God's Word, and readily regards advices, and even reproofs, given him by others: but he who neglects to give reproof, encourages men in their mistakes; and he who refuses to take and improve instructions and reproofs, obstinately rushes upon his own destruction. 18. He who conceals his hatred by great professions of friendship before one's face, and he who artfully vents slander behind one's back, is, with all his cunning, an impious fool in God's reckoning, and his wickedness shall be publicly exposed. 19. Even in much speaking there are ordinarily to be found words idle or wicked. It is therefore prudent to be sparing in our words, and to consider well both when, and where, and what, and how we speak. 20, 21. Prudent and pious discourse is pure and substantial: it edifies, instructs, and nourishes the hearers: but the heart of the wicked, being only evil, and that continually, is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; nothing good can proceed from it; but they persist and perish in the devices of their own foolishness, neither knowing nor caring to know the way of life and peace. 22. It is not men's anxious labour and care that make them rich, either in temporal or spiritual things; but the blessing of God upon their lawful endeavours confers riches, and enables to enjoy them comfortably, without pressure of guilt, tormenting fear, or perplexing care. 23. Senseless sinners take pleasure in, and make a jest of, the most horrid impieties they can commit: but they that are wise carefully avoid mischief, and all sporting with it or delighting in it. 24. The miseries which wicked men fear under the awakenings of conscience shall come upon them; and whatever blessings the righteous desire and pray for shall be granted them in due season. 25. However the wicked may bluster for a while, and threaten to overthrow everthing that stands in their way, they quickly and terribly ruin themselves and rush into misery: but the righteous, being built on Christ the Rock of Ages, and fixed in piety and virtue, stand fast for ever. No storm can shake their confidence, or deprive them of their durable and immovable felicity. 26. As vinegar sets the teeth on edge, and smoke is vexatious to the eyes, so sluggish, negligent, and dilatory persons vex and provoke them who send or employ them in any important business. 27. A religious observance of God's laws, and preserving of our body in temperance, soberness, and chastity, tends to prolong our life: but wickedness of itself, and by God's righteous judgments on account of it, brings on diseases, and hastens the sinner to his grave and to hell. 28. The hope of the godly, founded on Jesus' promise and blood, brings delight and satisfaction to the soul, and issues in everlasting felicity; but the hope of the wicked shall issue in disappointment and eternal misery. 29. Upright walking in Christ, and the exercising of piety and virtue, increase a person's strength for duty and courage in it: but the workers of iniquity shall be plagued with terrors and overwhelmed in misery. 30. Nothing so establishes persons or families in a relation to Christ as their righteousness, and a course of piety, justice, and mercy: but the wicked, however successful they may be for a time, shall never be able to fix themselves in their prosperity, but be rooted out from the enjoyment of it. 31. The godly, out of the good treasure of their heart, bring forth good discourse, which tends to make the hearers wise unto salvation: but he that uses his tongue to abuse, cozen, or raise dissension, or to blaspheme God and spread error, shall, in the end, have it silenced in hell. 32. The righteous know, and accustom themselves to speak things truly useful and edifying; but the wicked abandon their lips to falsehood, flattery, fraud, and calumny, or such like subtle but detestable arts of doing mischief.

Ver. 1. This is the commencement of the second great division of the book. It is different in structure from the first division. The latter is made up of parables and proverbs of considerable length; while the former consists wholly of brief, pointed sentences, each of which consists generally of two antithetical members, embodying one idea. Most of them are figurative, being based on some comparison, both in language and in idea. It is probable that, though all these proverbial sayings were at one time or another uttered by Solomon, yet most of them were of much older date. His diligent study had made him familiar with the wisdom of the ancients, and his powerful memory retained it. In the end he either wrote the proverbs out himself under divine guidance, or he employed others to do so. Most of these proverbs are examples of antithetic parallelism, the second clause containing the contrast to the first. Each verse is, as a rule, complete in itself, and embodies a perfectly intelligible sentiment. There is in each a truth clearly and sharply enunciated, and a lesson which is almost forced upon the heart. P.

Ver. 6. For the original meaning of blessing, see note on Ge. 1. 22, 28. And such blessings, spiritual, 'the just,' the justified by faith, enjoy in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Ep. 1. 3—even the blessings of the election of grace, the adoption of children, the pardon of sin, acceptance in the Beloved, inseparable union with their exalted Head, the revelation of grace, and the eternal inheritance of unfading glory. C.

Ver. 12. Hatred stirs up strifes that are at rest; but love covers them over, so that they sleep and are not remembered. And it is not to small or few offences that this gentle office is extended: love covereth all, even the 'multitude of sins,' 1 Co. 13. 7. C.

Ver. 15. Wealth. Not the wealth of money, for that, by tempting cupidity, is often the cause of ruin; but the wealth of faith, of good works, 1 Ti. 6. 18; Ja. 2. 5, and spiritual wisdom, ver. 14. These constitute the 'strong city' of the rich believer, in which the poverty here described has neither lot, inheritance, nor defence. C.

Ver. 21. This is true, naturally and spiritually. A little instruction in mechanics and agriculture may almost miraculously multiply the food of a country; while the words of truth and com-

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1. All manner of injustice and fraud is extremely hateful and detestable to God, the governor of the world: but strict equity in the whole of our commerce one with another is highly pleasing to him. 2. Haughty conceit of ourselves, and insulting of others, draws along with it the utmost contempt and disgrace; both God and men take pleasure to mortify and expose the proud; but such as, having learned of Christ, live under a deep sense of their own weakness and unworthiness, find favour with men and acceptance with God. 3. When men sincerely practise what God has revealed to them, they may expect his Spirit to direct them in their duty and to their eternal felicity: but the obstinate adherence of sinners to their own lusts and imaginations, and their opposition to Christ and his laws, shall hurry them into certain and everlasting destruction. 4. Riches, heaped up by extortion or covetousness, are of no avail to deliver us from the wrath of God, or even the rage of men, when the time of punishment is come: but righteousness hath a promise of life annexed to it; it prevents those sins which would expose us to God's judgments or man's punishments; it secures against the sting of temporal, and prevents eternal death. 5, 6. Being made righteous in Christ, and sanctified by his grace, and studying a sincere and impartial observance of God's laws, are effectual means to secure direction in duty and deliverance from evil; but the wicked shall perish by those very impious and evil courses by which they hoped to secure or exalt themselves. 7. In death wicked men find all their projects and hopes utterly destroyed. Whatever they thought to accomplish by their riches, their power, or their friends, perishes together with them, while they themselves launch forth into eternal misery. 8. The righteous are frequently in an unexpected manner delivered from their perplexing troubles; and the wicked, who perhaps brought them into them, are plunged into those very miseries themselves. 9. By flatteries, false doctrines, and artful seductions, hypocrites draw their neighbours into sin, and thereby into ruin. But through knowledge of Christ and his Word shall the righteous be guarded against their wiles, and preserved from the destruction which they intended. 10. It is matter of general gladness when wise and godly men prosper and are advanced, because they use their power and wealth for the benefit of all around them; and great is the joy when wicked men, who, as plagues and curses where they dwell, corrupt their manners, and draw down the wrath of God upon them, are cut off. 11. By God's blessing upon the upright, and by their prayers, advices, and kindness, all around them are profited: but the wicked, by their blasphemies, errors, evil counsels, and maxims, corrupt men's manners, and ruin their welfare. 12. It is common for self-conceited fools to despise their neighbours, to reproach them as weak, or to render them ridiculous; but a prudent man, whatever he thinks, avoids speaking to the reproach of others; as, beside the wickedness of contemning others, none is so mean as to be insensible of it, or incapable of finding means of resentment. 13. They who make a trade of carrying tales from one to another, never stick at treacherously discovering the secrets which have been intrusted to them; but a faithful friend conceals, not only what has been intrusted to him, but everything else that could tend to his neighbour's prejudice. 14. Where prudent counsel is wanting, nations and private affairs go to wreck: but where many wise counsellors unite in their deliberations, every precaution will be taken, every danger prevented, and the most proper methods used to insure success. 15. He who stands bound for the debts of another man, especially one whose ability and honesty are unknown to him, is in great danger to be ruined in his estate: and the way to be secure in that point is to avoid and hate all such engagements. 16. Remarkable and increasing grace and virtue in a woman will engage affection and respect when all other accomplishments fade and decline; and strong men hold fast the wealth which they have acquired. 17. He who is kind and bountiful to others, secures to himself a gracious reward from God: but he who is covetous, hard-hearted, and cruel, brings trouble on himself and his relations. 18. Whatever wicked men do to render themselves rich, easy, or honoured, will disappoint their expectation; but they who exercise themselves in true piety and virtue, shall infallibly obtain the blessed reward of their works in time and eternity. 19. As holiness and virtue promote true happiness here and hereafter, so the more eagerly a man pursues an evil course, the more is he bent upon his own destruction. 20. Hypocrites, who live in enmity and opposition to God and his law, while they pretend much piety, kindness, equity, and candour, are of all men the most odious to him: but they who, being renewed by his grace, walk before him in truth, equity, simplicity, and godly sincerity, are, and shall for ever be, the objects of his special favour and delight. 21. Though wicked men should do their utmost attempt to strengthen themselves by leagues and associates, they shall never be capable of protecting themselves from the just punishment of their sin: but the righteous, and often their children for their sakes, though deserted of all men, shall be delivered by God himself from everything ruinous. 22. As a golden jewel is very ill placed in the snout of a swine, which is still rooting in mires and dunghills; so beauty is ill bestowed upon a woman who, void of good sense, modesty, and virtue, loves to employ herself in perpetual talkativeness, and wallow in filthy lusts and whorish pleasures. 23. The righteous habitually desire, and shall obtain, solid and substantial blessings to themselves and others; but wicked men wish for mischief on others, and hope to execute their wrath and malice upon them; which in the end will only bring more fearful and lasting ruin upon themselves. 24, 25. They who, from a right principle, are remarkably liberal to the poor and to pious institutions, shall find their stock proportionably increased for their real advantage; and while they refresh and support others with their bounty, God shall reward them with prosperity of soul, in grace or comfort, or even with the enjoyments of this present world: but the pinching hand of avarice prevents enjoyment, or brings down the curse of God upon our substance. 26. He who, in a time of scarcity, hoards up corn to raise the price, shall be hated and cursed by mankind: but good wishes and commendations from men, and blessings from God, shall attend him who then opens his granaries and sells it at a moderate price. 27. He who earnestly sets himself to contrive and do good to others, shall obtain favour with God and men: but he who makes mischief his business shall draw upon himself the evil which he designs against his neighbour. 28. He that anxiously grasps for, and trusts in, riches as his surest support and defence, shall find them a broken reed to pierce him through with many sorrows, and shall fall to decay as a withered leaf: but the righteous, who are united to Christ by faith, and walk in all holy and just conversation, shall receive, out of his fulness, abundant supplies of quickening and fructifying grace, and shall thrive and prosper in their concerns. 29. He who by his passion, prodigality, covetousness, and ambition troubles his family, may for a time make a great bustle and stir, but it will issue in disappointment, disgrace, and poverty; and the fool, who knows not how to manage, and who lives without thought, shall be reduced to want, and forced to serve, if not sell himself to, a wiser neighbour. 30. A good man's graces, prayers, instructions, and examples are a mean of quickening, comfort, and prosperity to others around: and he that by instruction, prayer, or the like, draws men from Satan to the knowledge, faith, and obedience of Christ, shows forth true and heavenly wisdom. 31. If God will not pass his own favourites without proper correction for their sins in this world, who can justly expect that the obstinate and contemptuous breakers of his law shall escape the just punishment of their many crimes?

Ver. 3. Integrity literally signifies entireness. The love of God, united with the love of our neighbour—and that measured by the love of self—constitutes this entireness, this completeness of principle, which guides the believer in every way, however dark, intricate, or dangerous: and never is acquired by man as a sinner, but by the revelation of the love of God in Christ, which constrains him first to love God, and then his neighbour as himself. C.

Ver. 9. This fact was awfully exemplified by the scribes and Pharisees, that 'generation of vipers, hypocrites,' by whom speedy and terrible vengeance was brought down upon the nation whom they deceived. C.

Ver. 10. In the multitude, &c. This is a proverb frequently perverted, as if it means, that in the multitude of talkers and 17 The[a] merciful man doeth good to his own soul: but he that is cruel troubleth his own flesh.

4 These are noble sentiments; and they prove that those grand virtues which are usually supposed to be the results of the milder and more perfect religion of Jesus, were thoroughly understood and inculcated by the sages of the Old Testament. We often hear of Christian charity, and Christian benevolence, and Christian love, as if these had never been known previous to the advent of our Lord. They are as old as creation. They be at the foundation of Bible truth. There is no difference between the moral code of the Old Testament and that developed in the New.—P.

Ver. 21. This verse is generally interpreted of the confederacies of wicked men, ratified by hand joining in hand, as a manner of swearing. The interpretation of the judicious Brown Paterson, 'from hand to hand,' from one generation to another, seems greatly preferable, as in strict conformity with the following clause. C.

Ver. 22. Personal beauty is one of the gifts of God, and, like all his other gifts, may be employed for his glory and the good of the creature upon whom it is bestowed. But to this end it must be guided by discretion—a judgment formed in the light of divine truth on the origin and fading nature of the gift, and the accountability of the possessor for its use or abuse. Without this discretion, it is but like a costly ornament bestowed upon the swine, which degrades it by its unclean propensities—and 'returns, even from being washed, to its wallowing in the mire.' C.

Ver. 29. He that troubleth his own house, &c. This proverb is mainly directed to those who can govern their tongue and temper in public, but who lay aside this restraint, and forget 'the law of kindness' in their own houses. They shall inherit the wind—calms uncertain, and the storms destructive. C.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. He who loves reproofs, advices, and instructions, will become wise and intelligent; but he who declines, hates, and is enraged at rebukes for his faults, is under the power of his brutish passions; and there is little hope that he will ever know or act like a man. 2. The man who, being united to Christ, is clothed with his righteousness, and sanctified by his grace, and deals kindly and bountifully with others, shall be more and more favoured and blessed of God; but he whose thoughts are bent on wickedness shall be condemned to suffer the just punishment of his iniquity. 3. No man, however subtle or powerful, shall be able to establish his own or his family's greatness by wicked methods: but the righteous, being rooted and grounded in the rock Christ, though shaken by manifold storms of trouble, shall remain unmovable in a flourishing state. 4. A pious, prudent, active, chaste, and affectionate wife is a singular ornament and honour to her husband: but one that is graceless, lazy, foolish, prodigal, peevish, boisterous, and wanton, shames him when abroad, and torments him at home; and, like an incurable disease, vexes his heart, hastens him to his grave, wastes his substance, and ruins his family. 5. The thoughts and designs of good men are managed with piety, equity, candour, and truth; but the contrivances of the wicked are carried on with fraud, dissimulation, and falsehood. 6. Wicked men, by their consultations with one another, and by their reproach and perjury, study to undo their opposers; but they who are sincerely good will labour, by their advice, testimony, recommendation, or request, to deliver such innocent persons from their snares. 7. God himself not only defeats the ruinous projects of the wicked, but totally destroys and extirpates them and their families: whereas he continues and establishes the persons, properties, and families of the just. 8. Not earthly science, honour, or riches, but spiritual wisdom, and a prudent management of his affairs, by fair and honest means, will render a man highly and lastingly honoured, and commended of God and of all good men. but he who indulges his obstinate corruptions, hates and opposes his duty, and labours by wicked means to accomplish his ends, shall bring himself into present and everlasting contempt. 9. Far happier is he who, making no pompous show in the world, lives within the bounds of his income, though it should hardly afford him a single servant, than he who shows away with a great deal of elegance, equipage, and attendants, when he can hardly get necessary subsistence, without running into debt, or some other shameful and miserable shift. 10. Good men have implanted in their hearts a tender concern for the welfare and life of the brute animals, much more for that of their servants and neighbours: but the nature of the wicked is so cruel, that the very kindnesses which they affect to show are maliciously designed and ruinous. 11. Diligent industry in lawful callings shall, through the blessing of God, afford men a competent portion of temporal things; but idleness and bad company mark a man foolish, and lead him into desperate, impoverishing, and ruinous courses. 12. Wicked men desire, approve, and practise deceitful arts for ruining others, and wish to be secure in so doing: but the piety and justice from which righteous men's actions proceed, bring forth glory to God, maintenance and blessings to themselves, and much benefit and advantage to others around. 13. Wicked men are often brought into trouble by their own rash speeches, treasons, perjuries, lies, and calumnies: but the righteous, by the providence of God, and even by their prudent discourse, avoid and escape from many difficulties, in which otherwise they had been entangled. 14. A man shall receive abundant blessings from God, as the reward of that good which he has done by his pious and profitable discourses or works. 15. Fools are so self-conceited, that they consult nobody, but hold right whatever they think or do themselves: but wise men, distrusting their own judgment and abilities, wisely ask and take advice or instruction of others. 16. Fools, having no command of their passions, are no sooner provoked, than rage and fury appear in their countenance, words, and actions; but prudent persons conceal that displeasure which would tend to their disgrace, and overlook the shameful provocation given them, rather than dishonour themselves by resenting it. 17. He who, especially when called to be a witness, boldly and freely speaks the truth, and nothing else, shows himself an honest man, and does justice to his neighbours: but he who conceals truth, forges lies, or attests falsehoods, shows himself a deceitful and mischievous villain. 18. Some, by false accusations, calumnies, and bitter reproaches, wound the reputations, spirits, or estates of their neighbours, and make discords and divisions among them: but good men, by their prudent speeches, will labour to heal men's reputations, compose their disputes, and comfort and edify their souls. 19. Constant adherence to strict truth in his speeches establishes a man's credit, and what he says can never be disproved; but a liar, though he may be at first believed, is soon after found out and confuted; and he is moreover apt to contradict himself, and blast his reputation for ever. 20. They who plot mischief shall, to their great vexation, be disappointed in their expectations, and even fall into that evil which they intended for others; but they who by their counsels labour to promote the piety, peace, and happiness of others, shall have lasting joy and comfort for their reward. 21. Let the wicked plot as they will, nothing shall befall the righteous, but what tends to their spiritual and eternal advantage; but the wicked shall be quite overwhelmed with inward plagues and outward calamities. 22. Lies and liars are remarkably hated and abhorred of God; but they who, in their speeches and whole conduct, act in truth, fidelity, and candour, are beloved, and shall be blessed by him. 23. A prudent man conceals the knowledge he has, except when called by Providence to use it for the benefit of others, and even then makes no boasting ostentation of it; but a fool, through thoughtlessness, rashness, or ambition to be esteemed wise, proclaims his own weakness and ignorance. 24. Diligent and prudent activity in honest callings is the way to obtain riches, honour, and authority; but laziness and villany render men poor and enslaved. 25. Anxious cares about the things of this world, griefs for disappointments and troubles, convictions of sin, and fears of hell, depress the most magnanimous spirit, and make it to pore disconsolate over its wretchedness: but good instruction and advice from friends, and especially the promises of God powerfully applied, revive and make it glad. 26. In his state of union with Christ, justification and adoption, in his inward graces, and his exercises of holiness, and in his abundant happiness, a righteous man is more excellent than his neighbour; but the way that the wicked takes to render himself great or happy only deceives and disappoints him, and issues in misery. 27. Lazy wretches cannot endure to prosecute their own schemes for obtaining earthly enjoyments; or what they have deceitfully obtained never affords them any real comforts, but, as it were, slips through their fingers, or rots at their side, or is taken from them: but the wealth and honour, which is obtained by an honest diligence, is extremely valuable and lasting, being blessed of God. 28. In receiving Christ as our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, and walking in him, there is a real possession of life spiritual, and a certain prospect of life eternal; nor is there a single act of piety or virtue that tends to make a man miserable.

4 The[g] soul of the sluggard desireth, and

Ver. 14. The fruit of his mouth. A word of instruction, reproof, comfort, or kindness is sure to be, sooner or later, in some form repaid—and though never acknowledged by the world, will not be forgotten of God. In another sense also the proverb is fulfilled: the man who establishes a character for truth and intelligence, is sure to find his remuneration in character and employment, ver. 17, 19. C.

Ver. 21. No evil. No real, permanent evil. Troubles, pains, and even distresses, he may feel, but there is nothing really evil that is not superseded by the enjoyment of eternal blessedness. C.

Ver. 26. More excellent. 'More successful' (A. Williams). But as there is none righteous but Jesus, Ro. 3. 10, 22, the words either describe him who is 'fairer than the sons of men,' or the man who is made righteous by faith in Jesus, and whose excellency lies in the imputation of righteousness, and the renewal of his nature by the power of his Spirit. C.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1. Wise children will reverently receive, obey, and submit to their parents' instructions, advices, and corrections; but there is no hope of him who laughs and scoffs when he is admonished or chidden for his faults. 2. He who lays himself out in instructing, advising, and comforting others, or in other edifying discourse, shall be regarded by men and rewarded by God: but evil speakers shall be forced to endure those miseries which they brought upon others. 3. He that carefully bridles his tongue, thinks well before he speaks, and takes heed to utter nothing improper or unseasonable, preserves himself from much trouble and danger: but he who is extremely talkative, throwing out everything that comes into his head, is in the ready way to be ruined, both by God and by man. 4. Nothing, neither riches, nor learning, nor honour, nor happiness, is to be gotten by mere sluggish desires, without diligent endeavours; but they who, in a dependence upon God, industriously use proper means, shall have sufficiency of outward things, and abundant comforts in Christ, both here and hereafter. 5. A righteous man not only carefully avoids, but hates, all manner of falsehood in heart, word, and deed; but a wicked man continues to impose upon others, till his detected falsehoods and villanies render him evidently odious to God and detested by men, as a stinking carcass; and so contemptible that he dare not show his face for shame. 6. They who have Jesus' sacrificial life in them, and his grace accepted by them, and who study uprightness and equity in their whole conduct, shall be preserved sound in the faith, steadfast in the obedience of the gospel, unmoved by Satan's temptations or the world's frowns or smiles; but the wicked man, and all his wicked contrivances, shall be overthrown by their own iniquity. 7. Some, in their pride and vanity, make a great show of wealth, wisdom, or grace, when they are worth nothing: while others, by their garb or their speeches, conceal their abundant riches, knowledge, or grace. 8. Riches are so far from rendering men truly happy, that they tempt others to rob or accuse them, that their lives may be saved by huge sums of money; whereas the poor is reckoned so inconsiderable, that nobody thinks it worth while to rob, accuse, or even rebuke him. 9. The holiness, comfort, and prosperity of the righteous continues in its brightness and glory: but the small appearance of comfort and happiness which the wicked enjoy in this world will quickly be extinguished in endless misery. 10. Pride is the principal, and often the sole, cause of quarrels and contentions, and of the continuance of them: the opinionated cannot bear contradiction; the aspiring, a rival; the self-willed, opposition: but they who piously consult their God and their Bible, and prudently advise with their discreet neighbours, transact things in quietness and peace. 11. Wealth gotten by fraud, gaming, theft, oppression, or the like, having the curse of God upon it, shall quickly be wasted: but that which is gotten by honest industry and diligence shall continue and increase. 12. The delay of that which a man eagerly expects renders his mind very uneasy; but when he enjoys what he long desired and looked for, it is sweet, satisfactory, and reviving. 13. He who despises God's word, or the advices of his faithful friends, shall quickly be ruined: but he who reverently submits himself to and obeys God's commandments shall be rewarded. 14. The instructions of a good man, and much more the doctrines of God's Word, refresh, comfort, and enliven the soul, and preserve from those pernicious principles and destructive practices by which many are insnared. 15. A prudent, pious, and regular behaviour is most amiable and acceptable to all men: but the behaviour of lawless and wicked persons, like a rough way, is very ruinous to themselves, and offensive to God and good men. 16. Prudent persons undertake nothing but with due deliberation, and what they understand: and manage their affairs with knowledge and discretion: but fools discover their weakness, by rashly meddling with matters out of their reach. 17. Unfaithfulness in discharging his trust, or delivering his message, will bring a wicked servant, ambassador, or minister into shame, condemnation, and misery: but he who acts faithfully procures safety and advantage both to his master and himself. 19. It is a high satisfaction to enjoy what we desire, especially spiritual blessings and comforts: but foolish sinners hath nothing: but the soul of the diligent shall be made fat.

5 A[h] righteous man hateth lying: [i]but a wicked man is loathsome, and cometh to shame.

6 Righteousness[j] keepeth him that is upright in the way: but wickedness overthroweth the sinner.[2]

7 There[k] is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing:[3] there[l] is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches.

8 The[m] ransom of a man's life are his riches: but the [n]poor heareth not rebuke.

9 The[o] light of the righteous [p]rejoiceth: [q]but the lamp[5] of the wicked shall be put out.

10 Only[r] by pride cometh contention: but with the well-advised is wisdom.

11 Wealth[s] gotten by vanity shall be diminished: [t]but he that gathereth by labour[6] shall increase.

12 Hope[u] deferred maketh the heart sick: but [v]when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life.[7]

13 Whoso[x] despiseth the word shall be destroyed: [y]but he that feareth the commandment shall be rewarded.[8]

14 The[z] law of the wise is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death.

15 Good[a] understanding giveth favour: [b]but the way of transgressors is hard.

16 Every[c] prudent man dealeth with knowledge: but a fool [d]layeth open his folly.

hate to forsake their lusts and sinful practices, even as means of receiving the choicest benefits. 22. By gaining his estate in a just and upright manner, and by doing good with it while he lives, and by earnest instruction of and fervent prayers for his family, a good man takes the surest course to fix his estate upon them for many generations: but the sinner leaves a curse entailed upon his wealth: and, by the righteous providence of God, it is quickly transferred from his family to one that is truly pious and virtuous. 23. Poor men, by their diligent labour and industry, many times abundantly provide for themselves and family, and even grow rich; while others, who are rich, are reduced to poverty, through their ignorance, rashness, injustice, oppression, deceit, &c. 24. That fond affection which restrains parents from duly correcting their children when they do amiss, is a real and ruinous hatred, a sinful withholding from them a mean, appointed by God, for their amendment and happiness: but parents who truly love their children will study, by early and Christian corrections, to prevent their fixing in evil habits or customs. 25. A righteous man never wants satisfaction, because his desires are moderate, and he lives in a temperate use of God's blessings; God gives him a competency, a heart to use it, and contentment in it: but wicked men, insatiable in their desires, and extravagant in the abuse of their plenty, shall be indigent in the midst of abundance, or reduced to the distresses of poverty.

Ver. 3. As a little helm governs the largest ship, so does the tongue govern the man: and as he that governs the helm guides the ship, he that can govern the tongue can command the man: and in doing so, he 'keepeth his life'—his life of faith in Jesus, of peace with God, and of joy in the Holy Ghost, and hope of glory. C.

Ver. 6. Righteousness. Not his own righteousness, for that has no existence beyond the name, Ro. 3. 20; but the 'righteousness of God which is, by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all, and upon all them that believe,' Ro. 3. 22. C.

Ver. 7. Maketh himself poor. A man may, in the natural sense, 'make himself poor,' as in educating and providing for his family, and thereby he is made truly rich. He may also make himself comparatively poor by deeds of beneficence, and be in the sight of God 'rich in good works,' 1 Ti. 6. 18. But, in the spiritual sense, the passage is most completely verified: for the man that, by grace, 'maketh himself poor in spirit,' is, in return, enriched with possession of the kingdom of heaven, Mat. 5. 2. C.

Ver. 8. The poor heareth not rebuke. The poor in the world, and the poor in spirit, are like some humble plant, in a valley far below the storms of the higher regions: they hear them not. The one might be happy, if he valued the peace of his station: the other is really so, for he enjoys the peace of God. C.

Ver. 14. The law—the word and doctrine of the wise—which teaches to depart from the ways of sin and death, is a fountain of spiritual comfort and peace, springing up to life eternal, Jn. 4. 14. C.

Ver. 15. A man of 'good understanding' will do a favour when in his power; but the way of transgressors is hard; that is, unkind, offensive, violent. C.

Ver. 19. He that would accomplish good, must often pass 'through bad report,' and labour after his object with much self-denial—but Providence will repay him in the end with the sweet satisfaction of good attained, as well as intended. But fools will never sacrifice present indulgence for future hopes: self-denial, repentance, and godliness are their 'abomination'—'their god is their belly—their end is destruction,' Phi. 3. 19. C.

Ver. 24. Let parents beware of misunderstanding this precept. 'The rod' does not signify merely the 'rod' of punishment, but also the 'rod' of a dignified authority; of a habitual, temperate, and chastened restraint. C.

CHAPTER XIV. Ver. 1. A virtuous wife, by her piety, prudence, good economy, and the like, supports and advances her family in honour, happiness, and wealth: but a wicked imprudent wife, by her pride, prodigality, idleness, carelessness, or otherwise, will quickly reduce a happy family to poverty, disgrace, and ruin. 2. By a universal regard to piety and virtue, men manifest the fear and holy reverence of God implanted in their heart: but by an obstinate rebellion against his laws, and eager study to gratify their sinful lusts and passions, they discover their profane contempt of his Majesty. 3. The insolent, calumniating, and contemptuous speeches of proud men are very injurious and wounding to others, and often at last prove a scourge to themselves: but the prudent, peaceable, and pleasing words of wise men, neither offending God nor men, secure them in safety. 4. They who would have plenty must be content with the diet that labour makes; or if the tillage of the fields be neglected, famine must follow; but laborious tillage will issue in great plenty. 6. Proud self-conceited scoffers at what is holy and serious are never like to profit by their studies, or to come to the knowledge of divine truth; whereas they who humbly, and dependently on God, apply themselves to search out truth, quickly attain to the knowledge of whatever is necessary and useful. 7. It is proper to flee from the company of such persons as discover the corruption of their heart in the vanity or wickedness of their words. 8. Prudent men chiefly study to know how to act in their own calling and religious course; but wicked men employ their knowledge and wit to deceive others. 9. Insensible of the evil, malignity, and danger of sin, wicked men harden themselves in it, please themselves with their own and other men's sins, sport themselves in the commission or recollection thereof, and so provoke God to wrath against them; but they who are afraid of, hate, and avoid sin, truly love and regard their neighbours, and obtain favour with God and man. 10. No one can know what another inwardly suffers in worldly griefs and vexations, or in troubles of conscience; neither can they share with him in his inward joys, particularly those of a spiritual nature. 11. The stately houses, wealthy and honoured families of the wicked, shall in wrath be reduced to ruin and misery, and their hopes of eternal happiness issue in everlasting despair; whereas the poor and unsettled family of the truly pious shall flourish and become illustrious. 12. There is need strictly and impartially to try courses and customs: for prejudice, self-flattery, affected ignorance, and the like, make many things seem lawful and good which are really sinful and ruinous. 13. Immoderate joys and pleasures are ordinarily mingled with and issue in inward vexation and anguish: and the diverting of inward convictions and important duties by carnal mirth will quickly issue in the weepings and wailings of eternal despair. 14. He who even in heart revolts from God and his ways, shall be fearfully overwhelmed with the punishment of his sin; but a good man, who steadfastly cleaves to the Lord, shall enjoy great comfort in the testimony of a good conscience, and in keeping God's commands. 15. Weak half-witted persons believe every idle story and plausible pretence, and thereby are drawn into evil: but prudent men examine things before they trust to them or practise them. 16. A wise man, when warned of his error or danger, fears to displease God or to provoke his wrath, and immediately starts back from the sin to which he was tempted, or in which he had involved himself: but a fool rages against those that reprove, warn, or threaten him, and goes on resolutely in sin, fearless of any danger. 17. He who is soon angry involves himself in rash and imprudent words and actions, for which he is to be pitied: but a man who conceals his wrath, and deliberately contrives how to take a cruel revenge, deserves to be hated and abhorred. 18. Inconsiderate sinners hold fast their wickedness, and delight in it, as their portion and inheritance, till they feel the woful effects of it: but the prudent, to their remarkable honour and influence, increase in spiritual understanding. 19. Even in this world the wicked are often obliged to stoop and submit to the righteous, and implore their favour and relief: and at the last day, the debasement of the wicked, and exaltation of the righteous, shall be complete. 20. If a man fall into poverty, his neighbours, who once professed great friendship, will forsake and disregard him: but if a man grow rich, many, who before took no notice of him, will pretend great affection to him, and even the greatest will offer him their favour. 21. He who overlooks and contemns his poor neighbour provokes God to punish and render him miserable: but he who compassionately relieves the poor shall be blessed by God on that account. 22. They who contrive mischief against their innocent neighbours miss their end and ruin themselves: but they who study to do men real good shall be graciously and faithfully rewarded by God. 23. Industrious labour in any lawful calling will bring in some gain: but talkativeness and proud boasting tend only to make men beggars. 24. Riches are a singular ornament and advantage to wise men who know how to use them, because thereby they have the greater opportunities of doing good: but riches only render foolish men's folly the more notorious, because they have thereby the greater opportunities of doing mischief and wickedness. 25. An upright witness will, at all hazards, avow the truth, to save the lives or characters of such as are falsely accused: but deceitful men will boldly pour forth lies and calumnies to destroy the innocent. 26. They that fear God may be confident of his protection to themselves and their posterity in times of danger. 27. A holy regard to God, and obedience to his law, will issue in men's solid and eternal comfort, and preserve them from those sinful courses in which many are ensnared to their own destruction. 28. Kings ought to cherish their subjects; for on their number, wealth, and power, their own honour depends; and if they be wasted by unnecessary wars, or forced by oppression into other countries, it will prove the ruin of the kingdom. 29. He who under great provocations can maintain a calmness of temper, discovers much wisdom and grace: but he who is hastily inflamed by reproaches and ill-usage, exposes his corruption and folly, and makes it apparent to every one. 30. Nothing more conduces to health and happiness than a mind renewed by God's Spirit, freed from the dominion of sinful lusts, quiet, gentle, and contented: but envy, and such like fretful passions, torment men's spirits, waste their bodies, and hasten them towards hell and the grave. 31. He that defrauds or oppresses the poor, or withholds the relief which their circumstances require, forgets and even practically blasphemes God who makes them poor, and engages himself to defend and relieve them: but he who hath any due respect to God will show pity to the poor, and labour to supply them. 32. In death the wicked is suddenly and irresistibly driven away from all his beloved hopes and enjoyments in his sinful state; and often, in the very act of sin, and always on account of it, into everlasting misery: but the righteous, being united to Christ, clothed with his righteousness, and sanctified by his indwelling Spirit, has, even in trouble and death, well-grounded hopes of eternal felicity. 33. Prudent men study to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ, without making unseasonable or ostentatious demonstrations of it: but foolish men expose themselves by their eager desire to vent their minds in every company. 34. Religion and virtue, equity and kindness, through the blessing of God, increase the glory, power, and wealth of a nation: but rebellion against God, or injuring of mankind, disgraces and ruins societies. 35. A prudent, active, and faithful minister of state cannot but be dear to a wise king: and one who by his ill management disgraces his government, and brings all things into confusion, cannot but be the object of his wrath.

Ver. 1. The wise woman, by her prudence and management, godly example, and instruction, raises her family either in riches or character, or both; while the foolish, by her vanity, extravagance, and neglect, brings ruin upon herself, her husband, and her children. This truth applies to churches as well as to families. C.

Ver. 6. Those that would not strive, Lu. 13. 24, 25, and the 'foolish virgins' who neglected, Mat. 25. 8–12, all sought to enter and were refused. The first, because they did not strive; and when forced to come near, they still stood without, and would not enter by Christ the door, Jn. 10. 9; and the 'foolish virgins' came without light, without Christ 'the true light,' Jn. 1. 4, 9, and were therefore justly rejected and condemned, Jn. 3. 19. C.

Ver. 12. If a man judge by temporal advantages, and not by eternal interests, if he follow human authority in preference to divine truth—if he obey the impulse of passion instead of reason and conscience, all his ways will seem right when seen by these false lights, but their seeming will not change their nature—they will terminate in spiritual and eternal death. C.

Ver. 14. A good man shall be satisfied from himself. How can a man be satisfied from himself? Not from himself, as a branch bearing fruit by its own power; but from himself as a branch in Christ the living vine, and bearing all his fruit because of this union, Jn. 15. 5: not from himself as a mine, natively producing silver, gold, or gems; but from himself as an earthen vessel which God has enriched with his heavenly treasures, 2 Co. 4. 7. C.

Ver. 19. The evil bow before the good. Sooner or later this event is always realized; and the temporary exceptions never hath understanding: but that which is in the midst of fools is made known.

34 Righteousness[a] exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people.[1]

35 The[b] king's favour is toward a wise servant: but his wrath is against him that causeth shame.

CHAPTER XV.

A SOFT[a] answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words[1] stir up anger.

2 The[b] tongue of the wise useth knowledge aright: [c]but the mouth of fools [d]poureth out foolishness.

3 The[e] eyes of the LORD are in every place, [f]beholding the evil and the good.

4 A[g] wholesome tongue[2] is a tree of life:[3] but perverseness therein is a breach in the spirit.

5 A[h] fool despiseth his father's instruction: but he that regardeth reproof is prudent.

6 In[i] the house of the righteous is much treasure: but in the revenues of the wicked is trouble.

7 The[j] lips of the wise disperse knowledge: but the heart of the foolish doeth not so.

8 The[k] sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the LORD: [l]but the prayer of the upright is his delight.

9 The[m] way of the wicked is an abomination unto the LORD: [n]but he loveth him that followeth after righteousness.

10 [o]Correction[4] is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way; and he that hateth reproof shall die.

11 Hell[p] and destruction are before the [5]LORD; how much more then the hearts of the children of men?

12 A[q] scorner loveth not one that reproveth him; neither will he go unto the wise.

13 A[r] merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance: but by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken.

14 The[s] heart of him that hath understanding seeketh knowledge: [t]but the mouth of fools feedeth on foolishness.

15 All[u] the days of the afflicted are evil: [v]but he that is of a merry heart hath a continual [6]feast.

16 Better[w] is little with the fear of the LORD, than great treasure, and trouble therewith.

17 Better[x] is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox, and hatred therewith.

really weaken or contradict the general rule. It is now verified in every righteous judgment by an upright judge upon earth: it will finally be completed by the Judge of the quick and the dead. C.

Ver. 30. A sound heart. A sound heart is a heart restored to spiritual health by Jesus, the only physician of the soul, Mat. 9. 22; and its principal symptoms are faith, hope, and love—a 'conscience void of offence,' because 'sprinkled from dead works,' which contributes as much to relieve bodily sufferings, and promote bodily health, as to remove spiritual trouble and promote peace and enjoyment. C.

Ver. 33. Wisdom will neither 'cast its pearls before swine, nor give that which is holy to the dogs,' and must therefore often rest and wait for opportunities. But the vanity that is in the heart of fools is always seeking occasions for display, and cares nothing about others if it only can glorify itself. C.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 1. Mild, submissive, and yielding answers pacify anger and wrath: but sharp, contemptuous, and impertinent language increases passion, or kindles it up where it was not before. 2. A wise man gives profitable instructions, and understands how to speak in a seasonable and prudent manner: whereas fools, by the worthless stuff they utter, and by their indiscreet and confused manner of expressing their thoughts, only manifest their own folly. 3. The infinite knowledge and observance of God extends everywhere, and to every person or action, thought, or disposition, whether good or bad. 4. Wholesome and profitable discourses instruct the ignorant, comfort the grieved, heal breaches, cure contentions among neighbours, and soften the exasperated; but corrupt, proud, passionate, and erroneous discourse disturbs the peace, and corrupts the temper and manners, of both speakers and hearers. 5. Inattention to the instructions, advices, and reproofs of superiors, manifests and issues in the greatest folly; but he who willingly receives rebukes, and carefully observes them, shows himself wise, and prudently consults his own welfare and happiness. 6. A truly pious, just, and merciful man is really very rich; as, however little of this world's wealth he may possess, he has all things working for his real advantage, and God's blessing on what he has, and is contented with it: but vexation and trouble embitter the revenues of the wicked. They are gotten with anxiety, enjoyed under a curse, employed in the service of sin, and tend to their ruin. 7. Wise men tender good instructions, advices, and reproofs to all around them: but foolish men, having their heart filled with ignorance and lust, impart nothing valuable. 8. All the external devotions and most liberal almsgivings of wicked men, are so far from recommending them to God's favour, that they are abhorred by him as but the vile gratifications of their own pride, legality, or other lusts; but the most humble prayers and meanest services of those united to Christ, which are performed in faith and dependence on him, and sincerely aiming at his glory, are exceedingly acceptable to him, and issue in much comfort to themselves. 9. The whole designs, contrivances, thoughts, words, and actions of wicked men are abominable to the Lord; and this renders their religious services corrupt and hated: but he loves such as, having Jesus' sacrificial life in their souls, do, in their thoughts, affections, and endeavours, earnestly study to perfect holiness in his fear. 10. Such as dislike faithful reproof, for their apostasy from the ways of the Lord, shall be severely punished; and at last, if they continue haters of admonition and advice, shall certainly be lost. 11. The state of the dead and lost, and every other thing unknown to us, are perfectly known to God. How exact then must be his knowledge and observance of the dispositions, purposes, and thoughts of men! 12. Mockers of God and religion shun the admonitions of their conscience, and hate such as reprove them; and even avoid the company of wise, religious, or virtuous persons, lest they should meet with their reproofs or advices. 13. When the conscience is graciously purged and quieted, and the mind comforted, it issues in outward health and cheerfulness: but grief and sorrow, seizing on the heart, disturb, weaken, and dispirit it, and make a man a burden to himself and to all around. 14. Such as are truly wise, and inwardly instructed by the Spirit of God, earnestly study to obtain more solid knowledge: but persons void of true understanding gape after, and relish nothing but frivolous, vain, and unprofitable things. 15. All the days of persons discontented under their afflictions are grievous and miserable: but they who have their conscience graciously quieted, their heart joyful in God, and content with their lot, have more true and perpetual comfort and satisfaction than can be enjoyed in the most delicious banquet on earth. 16. A very small share of earthly enjoyments, attended with real grace and true holiness, is better than the largest abundance of wealth with the disquiet, confusion, and anxious care which usually attend it. 17. The meanest fare, attended by the mutual love of friends, is far preferable to the most sumptuous entertainment attended with hatred and contention. 18. Hasty, passionate, and furious persons are apt to quarrel for very trifles, and so disturb the most peaceable company: but those who are humble, meek, and patient, instead of raising strife themselves, will labour to compose it when it has been raised by others. 19. A slothful man is apt to fancy or pretend a great many unconquerable difficulties in the way of his duty: but a good and active person looks on his way as easy and plain, notwithstanding a few trifling hindrances. 20. Nothing so much rejoices the hearts of pious parents as to see their children grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord: but foolish children requite their mothers' fond indulgence by irreverent carriage towards them; and by despising their commands, instructions, advices, or reproofs, and so making them contemptible. 21. They who are void of grace, sense, and consideration, take pleasure in doing the most empty, absurd, and wicked things: but such as are truly knowing and wise study for their own pleasure and comfort, as well as for the honour of God, to conduct their thoughts, words, and actions in a regular, sincere, and holy manner. 22. Without prudent counsellors, and for want of due deliberation, the most important designs and projects often miscarry: but where, by prudent consultation, difficulties are foreseen and provided against, men's purposes succeed to their wish. 23. Ready, pertinent, and seasonable advice is an honour and comfort to him who gives it, especially when the good success of it is found, and it is very profitable to him who receives it. 24. Holy and gracious persons, in the pursuit of everlasting life, set their affections and hopes on things above, have their conversation in heaven, and eye the glory of God in everything they do, that they may escape sinful pollutions, horrid dangers, and everlasting destruction. 25. God takes pleasure to debase the proud, demolishing their stately houses, overturning their families, and ruining their honours and wealth: but he will preserve poor widows who have no helper in their rights, against every insolent or covetous invader. 26. The Lord abhors the thoughts, inclinations, purposes, and contrivances of wicked men: but the hearts of the godly being purged by his blood and Spirit, their prayers, and edifying instructions, advices, and reproofs are pleasant to him and his people. 27. They who hasten to be rich, and with anxious care labour for worldly enjoyments, not only harass all around them, but weary themselves, and plague their families, and bring the curse of God on what they have: but he who hates bribes and other unlawful methods of gain, shall have a competent portion of the good things of this world, and comfort and prosperity in it. 28. A good man avoids answering before he is asked, and studies to say nothing but what is pure, profitable, suitable, and seasonable: but a wicked man is apt, in a rash and forward manner, to speak what is unsuitable, sinful, and hurtful. 29. The Lord utterly dislikes wicked persons, and refuses to regard their prayers: but he is ever willing and ready to hear the prayers of the godly offered to him in faith, and is their sure and present help in time of work or warfare. 30. It is a remarkable pleasure to behold the manifold works of God: and the good report of a given and offered Saviour, and of reconciliation to God and eternal salvation, or even a good report of ourselves or neighbours, affords inward satisfaction and comfort. 31. They who with pleasure listen to and improve wholesome instructions, tending to promote their spiritual or eternal life, increase in wisdom, and shall be qualified to give good instruction to others. 32. Such as refuse or contemn proper instructions or reproofs undervalue their own soul, neglect the means of its safety, and, for the sake of some outward and perishing thing, wilfully ruin it: but he who delights to be taught and admonished, increases in solid, soul-comforting, and saving knowledge, wisdom, and prudence. 33. A holy awe of God, and real regard to his way, disposes us to the study of true wisdom and knowledge, and is a certain mark of it; and humility and patient submission in a low condition is the best preparation for honour and preferment.

Ver. 6. In the house of the righteous is much treasure. That is, (1) Christ the righteous, who has hid in him 'all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge;' (2) the righteous, through faith in Christ, having all the treasures of divine wisdom, faith, hope, charity, communicated by his Word and Spirit; (3) of temporal treasures, the righteous always possesses contentment, which is inseparable from godliness, and is 'great gain;' while he possesses that industry of hand which arises from freedom of spirit, and is the fruitful parent of all earthly prosperity. C.

Ver. 8. The prayer of the upright is his delight. 'The upright' are those who are not ashamed to look up with 'boldness to the throne of grace for grace to help them;' and their prayer a 'delight to the Lord,' because it renounces all the righteousness of the creature, and altogether relies upon the 'righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ.' C.

Ver. 27. He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house. By needless and distracting cares and toils, by transfusing the spirit of covetousness into his children, and by all the retributive consequences of that chicanery and oppression which covetousness is sure to generate, and Providence sooner or later to punish. C.

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 1. Every right inclination, thought, or purpose in the heart, and all right management of our words, come through an active faith in God. 2. Ignorance and self-conceit make men often to think themselves faultless and holy in their conduct, when the Lord, who searches and judges the intentions and frame of the heart, finds it quite otherwise. 3. Commit whatever works you undertake to the direction and management of God in his providence, and implore his blessing therein, so shall your honest desires be accomplished. 4. God made and would bring men to his own service, and for the manifestation of his glorious perfections; yea, even the wicked to be instruments of his righteous will, and at last the objects of it, by continuing in their impieties. 5. When men are inwardly proud on account of their gifts, honours, or wealth, God sees them, and will certainly punish them in their pride. 6. By God's exercise of his mercy and faithfulness in giving his Son, and fulfilling his promises, men's iniquity is expiated, pardoned, and subdued; and even by their exercise of mercy, equity, and fidelity, the punishment of sin in outward calamities is often prevented. And by the fear of God implanted in the heart, and a continued holy regard to his law, men hate, watch against, and avoid sin; and so escape the fearful consequences of it. 7. When a man makes it his habitual and earnest endeavour to receive Christ, and walk in him soberly, righteously, and godly, the Lord, or his God reconciled in Christ, inclines even those who were his foes to become his friends. 8. A small estate honestly gotten and cheerfully enjoyed, is preferable to vast incomes heaped up by oppression and kept without hospitality. 9. A man's mind fixes its end, contrives the means, and perhaps reckons upon the success; but the Lord determines the event, and orders every motion and step taken towards it. 10. The edicts, commands, and decisions of kings ought always to be directed by the unerring law of God; and their decisions ought to be so just and exact, that no man may be wronged thereby. 11. The Lord requires that, even in our private dealings, everything, even the smallest, should be managed with the most scrupulous integrity and equity. 12. Kings, being in the most exalted station, ought to be distinguished patterns of piety and virtue, and to countenance it in others, as the only security of their throne. 13. Kings ought highly to value and love sincere and faithful advisers, who truly inform them of what tends to their own and their kingdom's welfare. 14. The wrath of a king is almost as terrifying as a message of death, and, especially in despotic governments, often issues in death to its object: but virtuous and prudent courtiers will pacify it, and make a reconciliation. 15. The favours and gracious smiles of a prince are extremely reviving and comfortable, and fruitful of expected happiness, especially to such as he had been formerly incensed against. 16. But real religion, and a solid understanding to discern between good and evil, are preferable to all the wealth that kings can bestow or industry procure. 17. It is the constant aim and endeavour of upright men to decline everything that is evil, and to follow that which is good: and by heedful care of their thoughts, words, and actions, their souls and bodies are, through the grace and providence of God, preserved from destruction. 18. Pride and haughtiness are the ordinary forerunners of debasement and misery, and the means of bringing it on men. 19. It is better, in imitation of Christ and his dear saints, to submit to the meanest condition, and patiently to bear injuries, than to partake of victories, spoil, and wealth along with the proud. 20. They who understand business thoroughly, and manage it prudently and discreetly, bid fair to have good success; but it is only by trusting in God that true and everlasting happiness can be obtained. 21. They whose heart is well furnished with experimental knowledge of God's Word, take the proper method to obtain a high reputation for wisdom and prudence; and if they can with eloquence and clearness communicate their instructions, it will greatly tend to the edification of others. 22. Spiritual knowledge and grace are the beginning and earnest of eternal life, are comfortable to him who enjoys them, and useful to others: but the learning of fools is frivolous and vain; and even their instructions do but render men foolish. 23, 24. The enlightened mind of a wise man instructs him to speak judiciously and pertinently, gives weight of evidence to what he says, and renders it pleasant to the hearer, as a honeycomb is to the mouth, and nourishing and strengthening as marrow is to the bones. 25. Many are highly pleased with their own ways, even when they are such as tend to their ruin, spiritual, temporal, and eternal. 26. He that, prompted by his wants, labours in worldly employments, procures his own preservation in life: whereas he who labours in plaguing others, will find even every evil word tend to his own hurt. 27. Wicked men, with great pains, contrive and labour to do mischief, as if treasures could be gained by it: and their lying, slanderous, and insolent speeches are very injurious, painful, and destructive. 28. Persons of a perverse, passionate, and contentious spirit raise dissensions among those who are inclined to live at peace; and they who secretly defame, backbite, detract, and whisper about false stories, make breaches between the kindest neighbours and dearest relations. 29, 30. Such as are eager to do mischief, or live by violence and rapine, not content to do wrong themselves, entice others to become their companions, and then lead them into the most pernicious courses. With profound study they contrive the ruin of others; and 6 By[i] mercy and truth iniquity is purged;[5] and by the fear of the LORD men depart from evil.

7 When[j] a man's ways please the LORD, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.

8 Better[k] is a little with righteousness, than great revenues without right.

9 A[l] man's heart deviseth his way: but the LORD directeth his steps.

10 A[m] divine sentence[6] is in the lips of the king: his mouth transgresseth not in judgment.

11 A[o] just weight and balance are the LORD's: all the weights[7] of the bag are his work.

12 It[p] is an abomination to kings to commit wickedness: for the throne is established by righteousness.

13 Righteous[q] lips are the delight of kings;[8] and they love him that speaketh right.

14 The[r] wrath of a king is as messengers of [9]death: [t]but a wise man will pacify it.

15 In[t] the light of the king's countenance is life; and his favour is as a cloud of the latter rain.

16 How[u] much better is it to get wisdom than gold? and to get understanding rather to be chosen than silver?

17 The[v] highway of the upright is to depart from evil: [x]he that keepeth his way preserveth his soul.

18 Pride[y] goeth before destruction; and an haughty spirit before a fall.

19 Better[z] it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud.

20 He that handleth a matter[1] wisely shall find good; and whoso [a]trusteth in the LORD, happy is he.

21 The[b] wise in heart shall be called prudent; and the sweetness of the lips increaseth learning.

22 Understanding[c] is a well-spring of life unto him that hath it: [d]but the instruction of fools is folly.

23 The[e] heart of the wise teacheth[2] his mouth, and addeth learning to his lips.

24 Pleasant[g] words are as an honey-comb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones.

25 There[h] is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of [3]death.

26 He that [4]laboureth, [i]laboureth for himself; for his mouth craveth it of him.[5]

27 An[j] ungodly man[6] diggeth up evil; and in his lips there is as a burning fire.

28 A[k] froward man soweth[7] strife; and a whisperer separateth chief friends.

29 A[l] violent man enticeth his neighbour, and leadeth him into the way that is not good.

30 He[m] shutteth his eyes to devise froward things; moving his lips he bringeth evil to pass.

31 The[o] hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found [p]in the way of righteousness.

32 He[q] that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; [r]and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city.

33 The[s] lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the LORD.[8]

CHAPTER XVII.

BETTER is [a]a dry morsel,[1] and quietness therewith, than an house full of [2]sacrifices[3] with strife.

2 A wise servant shall have rule over [b]a son that causeth shame, and shall have part of the inheritance among the brethren.

[*] This doubtless refers to the manner in which execution was, and still is, in the East, performed upon persons who were high enough to incur the immediate wrath of the king. This may be explained by an account of the usage in Persia. When the king has determined on the death of a governor of a province, an order for his execution is made out, sealed with the royal signet, and consigned to an officer appointed for the purpose. This man rides post. Then, presenting himself to the principal person of the place, he shows the royal mandate, and forces the individual to accompany him, and lend his assistance. then, by their advice, or giving of the sign, it is furiously effected.—33. Events appear fortuitous, as the lot which is cast into the lap of a garment or into a hollow vessel: but all things are regulated by exact law; and nothing, at least in nature, happens but according to his eternal mind, and by the particular regulation of his will.

Ver. 1. Various changes of translation have been proposed in this verse, all tending to say that 'man hath the disposing of the heart,' but the answer, or power to answer with the tongue, is from the Lord. But by whatever authorities supported, these changes are certainly to be rejected; for surely the thoughts of the heart are as much in the hand of God as are the answers of the tongue. The translation of Holden is to be preferred: 'The deliberations of the heart in man, and the utterance of the tongue, are from Jehovah.' C.

Ver. 4. The wicked for the day of evil. It does not mean that God created the wicked on purpose to condemn them eternally. God created man upright, and for his own glory; man, by the abuse of his free will, 'fell from the estate wherein he was created,' and the finally impenitent God hath appointed to a righteous sentence in the day of final judgment.' 'The evil day for the evil-doer.' C.

Ver. 10. Such a sentence is ever in the lips of Christ the King in Zion; and such should ever be in the lips of earthly kings, who, whether they know it and regard it or not, reign by him and for him, and stand accountable as stewards at his awful throne of judgment. C.

Ver. 12. The throne is established by righteousness. A throne may be upheld by unjust war, usurpation, and oppression; but can be established in peace, prosperity, and permanence by righteousness alone. C.

Ver. 15. A cloud of the latter rain. 'The cloud of the latter rain,' promising gentle showers, was considered as the promise of an abundant harvest. C.

Ver. 21. Graceful, unaffected, and earnest speech will induce others to listen and learn.—Note. While speech, both in thought and manner, is truly a gift, it is the duty of every Christian to improve what he possesses, so as to commend the truth first to the ear, and then to the heart of men. A careless utterance, with an ungainly and offensive action, are, in public instructors, not always mere defects, but may be sins—sins of neglect, which cannot be palliated, and should not be defended. C.

Ver. 26. Work was prescribed to man even in innocence, Ge. 2. 15, but toil was inflicted as a curse on sin. Yet such is the mercy of God that want, by its imperative demands upon industry, and even toil, counteracts a thousand greater evils that abundance and luxury would infallibly entail. C.

Ver. 31. Way of righteousness. That is, following and longing after Jesus, the Lord our only righteousness. C.

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 1. The meanest fare, enjoyed in peace with God and our neighbour, and with quietness in our own mind, is better than the most sumptuous cheer, attended with brawling, contention, and strife. 2. A pious and prudent servant ought to be preferred to a foolish and wicked child, and deserves a share of the inheritance in a family. 3. As gold and silver are tried and purified in the fire, so the Lord, who searches the hearts of all men, proves and refines his own people from their sinful dross in the furnace of affliction.—6. It is an honour to parents to have a numerous posterity walking in holiness and virtue; and it is the honour of children to have pious and prudent ancestors.—8. Presents and bribes appear so lovely and tempting, that few can refuse them, or decline gratifying the desire of the giver. 9. Overlooking of injuries, and mutual forbearance, is the best way to preserve and increase friendship and love: but repeating old faults breaks the strictest bonds of friendship, and makes an irreconcilable separation.—11. Some men are so wilful and refractory, that, shaking off all reverence to God and their superiors, they are wholly and irreclaimably bent on mischief; they must therefore be cut off by some exemplary punishment. 12. It is less dangerous to meet a bear in the heat of his rage, than a furious fool in the pursuit of his unruly passions and desires.—14. When men begin a quarrel, it gradually becomes more and more violent and extensive, till it is with difficulty made up: it is best therefore to check and stifle all contentions in the beginning. 16. In his mysterious providence, God gives to many foolish persons natural abilities, worldly substance, and opportunities of learning wisdom; and yet gives them no sense or inclination to desire it. 17. A true friend continues constant in his affection and usefulness, however our circumstances alter: and a brother, who deserves the name, is especially kind and helpful in a time of adversity. 18. He is extremely foolish whose kindness hurries him into rash suretiship for the debts of others, especially when they are suspected of knavery. 19. He certainly loves wickedness who accustoms himself to brawling and contention: and he who carries himself proudly, scornfully, and contemptuously towards others, lives above his estate, and builds sumptuous houses, hurries himself into ruin; and breakers of the public peace open wide the flood-gates to all impiety. 20. A man of wicked devices, which he resolves to accomplish by any means, shall find himself deceived in his expectations of good: and a false, deceitful, and self-inconsistent tongue will prove the ruin of its owner. 22. Nothing more conduces to health than solid quietness of conscience, and a moderate cheerfulness of spirit: but excessive sadness and grief waste the body, and dry it up to a mere skeleton. 23. Many wicked persons, who would refuse an open bribe, will willingly enough take bribes or presents secretly, in order to influence them to give counsel or judgment contrary to law and equity. 24. A pious and prudent man has his mind fixed upon the unerring oracles of God, and has his sense and wisdom at hand to guide and govern him; but a foolish one has his thoughts always wandering and roving about impertinences, and is never in 25 A[g] foolish son is a grief to his father, and bitterness to her that bare him.

26 Also[h] to punish the just is not good, nor to strike princes for equity.

27 He[i] that hath knowledge spareth his words; and a man of understanding is of an excellent spirit.[2]

28 Even[j] a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise; and he that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of understanding.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THROUGH desire[a] a man having separated himself, seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom.[1]

2 A[b] fool hath no delight in understanding, but that his heart may discover itself.[2]

3 When[c] the wicked cometh, then cometh also contempt, and with ignominy reproach.

any fixed or serious temper.—27. The more wise and knowing a man is, he is the less apt to be talkative, speaking only what is fit and necessary; and his wisdom renders his mind and temper humble, calm, temperate, and dispassionate. 28. So great a virtue it is to be duly silent, that if even a foolish person restrain his lips from rash and impertinent talk, he is for the time reckoned a wise and intelligent person.

Ver. 5. It is the poor man who is referred to in both clauses of this verse; consequently the second clause might be translated as follows:—'He that rejoiceth at his adversity (the adversity of the poor man) shall not be held innocent.' How often does one hear the remark made in regard to those who have fallen from affluence to poverty, 'He deserves it.' 'It is a righteous judgment upon his pride, or his folly,' &c.! It is such observations, and the spirit which prompts them, that are here condemned. P.

Ver. 7. Excellent speech becometh not a fool. Bandits often talk highly of generosity—the desert-robber deifies hospitality—gamesters speak of debts of honour—the murderous Pharisees talked scrupulously of the Sabbath—the monks of the dark ages, while they absorbed half the riches of Europe, extolled the virtue of poverty—and popes, while domineering alike over the vassal and his lord, called themselves, in high-sounding and affected humility, 'the servants of the servants of God.' Such is 'excellent speech' in the lips of 'fools,' who demonstrate their folly by affecting to admire some solitary, convenient, and advantageous virtue, while professedly immersed in open and destructive vice. C.

Ver. 14. Leave off contention in argument about vain, useless, and irrelevant matters, before strife be 'meddled with' at all; for the beginning of strife—not matter of argument, but of temper—is the breaking down of a water-mound, that you may easily demolish, but may be totally unable to repair. C.

Ver. 17. The love of brother to brother is a natural feeling. Except where sin or passion interfere to overcome or deaden natural affection, a man will never see a near relative wronged without making an attempt to defend him. It is not only the duty of a kinsman to help his kinsman in trouble, but it is the inherent and natural tendency of his mind. Instinct, in fact, prompts to it. P.

Ver. 23. The sorrows inflicted upon fathers and mothers by foolish children are not here (and in ver. 21) enumerated as evils in which the parents have no share; but as warnings against the neglect of a wise and godly education, and against the infusion of vanity, self-conceit, and pride into the hearts of children, whereby so many parents literally convert them into fools. C.

Ver. 27. A man of understanding is of an excellent spirit. And being of an 'excellent spirit,' he is contented to listen to what he hears; to feed upon his own thoughts, and not to intrude his opinions until love and duty absolutely require him to speak. C.

CHAPTER XVIII. Ver. 1. While self-conceited persons seek to distinguish themselves by their high pretences to wisdom, and inconstant ones seek but never find satisfaction, they who have a true desire of knowledge disengage themselves from all avocations, in order to study true wisdom. 2. A vain man studies knowledge or even religion, for no other end but to make a show with it. 3. Wherever wicked men come, they bring their contempt of God and reproaching of religion along with them, which will at last issue in contempt and misery to themselves. 4. A wise man's words, as deep waters, flow calmly, and contain the deep mysteries of God: and his heart, being full of wisdom, is ever sending forth streams of instructive, refreshing, quickening, and fructifying influences to all around him. 5. It is exceeding great wickedness to pervert justice, and, through favour or interest, to connive at and acquit the wicked, or to give the cause against a righteous man through prejudice or partiality. 6, 7. Fools, by meddling in other men's quarrels, or by speeches irritating others against them, procure mischief, and even lasting and eternal ruin to themselves. 8. The slanders and reproaches of tale-bearers, however covered over with pretences of sorrow, and however greedily they be received by the hearers, like mortal and incurable wounds, pierce to and rankle the very heart. 9. Idleness and prodigality are nearly allied, and both issue in the ruin of the persons guilty of them. Negligence about our soul is as fatal as open and avowed ungodliness. 10. Jesus Christ, and all the perfections, promises, and providences of God in him, are an impregnable defence and satisfaction to all such as by faith flee to him: no enemy then can ever hurt them. 11. It is only in his own conceit that the rich man's wealth appears a mean of remarkable safety either here or hereafter. 12. Pride in prosperity, forgetfulness of God, and despising of others, are certain means and forerunners of destruction: and humility, meekness, and patience, in a low condition, are the best preparation for honour and preferment. 13. He who, to show his quick parts, or through a forwardness of temper, answers to a matter before he hears it fully and understands it, shames himself, and manifests his folly. 14. A manly spirit, especially if encouraged and supported by the influences of the Holy Ghost, will bear up under manifold and sore calamities of an external kind: but if the spirit be wounded with melancholy dejection, and a sense of God's wrath, how insupportable is the case, till Jesus, by his blood and grace, give relief! 15. Prudent persons, by diligent meditation, and by attentive listening to instruction, labour to increase more and more in wisdom. 16. There are few men so mean, base, or wicked, but large gifts and presents will procure their release from prison, nay, bring them into favour with great men, or even to the honour of waiting upon princes. 17. They who are first in representing their case, ordinarily make it to appear right, and even prepossess the judge in their favour; but by diligent search into their allegations, their neighbours often find innumerable mistakes in their representations. 18. In waters, and the well-spring of wisdom as a flowing brook.

6 A[o] fool's lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for strokes.

7 A[h] fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul.

8 The[i] words of a tale-bearer[3] are as wounds,[4] and they go down into the innermost parts[5] of the belly.

9 He[j] also that is slothful in his work is brother to him that is a great waster.

10 The[k] name[6] of the LORD is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe.[7]

11 The[l] rich man's wealth is his strong city, and as an high wall in his own conceit.[8]

12 Before[m] destruction the heart of man is haughty; and before honour is humility.

13 He[o] that answereth a matter[9] before he heareth it,[1] it is folly and shame unto him.

14 The[p] spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity;[2] but[q] a wounded spirit who can bear?

15 The[r] heart of the prudent getteth knowledge; and the ear of the wise seeketh knowledge.

16 A[s] man's gift maketh room for him, and bringeth him before great men.

17 He[t] that is first in his own cause seemeth just: but his neighbour cometh and searcheth him.

18 The[u] lot causeth contentions to cease, and parteth between the mighty.

19 A[v] brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city; and their contentions are like the bars of a castle.[3]

20 A[w] man's belly shall be satisfied with the fruit of his mouth; and with the increase of his lips shall he be filled.

21 Death[y] and life are in the power of the tongue; and they that love it shall [z]eat the fruit thereof.

22 Whoso[a] findeth a wife findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favour of the LORD.[4]

BETTER is[a] the poor that walketh in his integrity, than he that is perverse in his lips, and is a fool.[1]

2 Also, [b]that the soul be without knowledge, it is not good; and he that [c]hasteth with his feet sinneth.[2]

3 The[d] foolishness of man perverteth his way; and his heart fretteth against the LORD.

some cases, where the parties contending are very powerful to maintain their pretensions, and the reasons strong on both sides, the referring of the determination to God by the lot is the proper method to put each into quiet possession of that which falls to his share. 19. No contentions are so sharp and obstinate as those between near relations and long-continued friends. It is easier to take strong cities, or to bow or break the strongest iron bars, than to make a reconciliation. 20. Great care ought to be taken about our words; for, according as they are wholesome, good, and edifying, or are bad and unsavoury, shall be our temporal or eternal reward for them. 21. Much evil, or much good, necessarily issues from the right or wrong use of our tongues: and as men love and accustom themselves to good or bad discourse, shall be their reward or punishment; nay, ordinarily, they who love to talk much shall suffer by it. 22. To be provided with a pious, prudent, and active wife is a great blessing, and a singular instance of God's favour. 23. Not boldness, but modest entreaties and doleful supplications, become those who are poor and miserable: but rich men are too apt to be so elated with their outward circumstances, as to return haughty and harsh answers. 24. Such as have friends must study to behave towards them in a friendly manner, in doing them all good offices possible: and sometimes friends are found that will be more constant and faithful in helping us in the day of affliction than our nearest relations.

Ver. 1. Through desire of real knowledge, a man having separated himself from secular business, seeks, not some solitary department of study, but expatiates over all subjects, as did Solomon; for by the student of real knowledge, every subject is found to lead to the knowledge and the love of God, and in that all wisdom lies. C.

Ver. 3. When the wicked cometh into notice, office, or power, then cometh, it may be, the adulation of fools and flatterers—but the contempt of wise men, with an ignominious end to his vain pretensions, and the reproach of those he has injured, deceived, or betrayed. C.

Ver. 16. The invariable custom in Asiatic countries in approaching superiors is to present a gift. Here it is to be viewed as the emblem of that name and righteousness with which alone the sinner can find access to the throne of grace. C.

CHAPTER XIX. Ver. 1. A poor, honest, and upright man is much more happy and honourable, than a rich wicked man that makes no conscience either of speaking or acting in a wise or gracious manner. 2. When a man is ignorant, not knowing what to follow or what to avoid, he cannot become holy or happy. And he who in a rash and unadvised manner pursues his purpose, cannot fail to commit many sinful blunders. 3. When a man's ignorance and wickedness have made him miscarry, he often blames the providence of God, and frets and murmurs against him. 4. When men grow rich, they are sure to have many courting their favour, and professing themselves their hearty friends; but when they become poor and need friends, even those who were formerly kind turn their backs on them. 5. False witnesses and private calumniators shall at last, however slowly, meet with the due punishment of their wickedness. 6, 7. Multitudes will court the favour of the great and liberal who can enrich or advance them; but everybody is apt to desert and contemn the poor who need and beg their assistance. 8. He that receives Christ learns the true knowledge of God; and he who strictly practises the direction of his Word, shows a real regard to his own soul, and shall obtain the spiritual and eternal blessings which he needs.—10. Not plenty, prosperity, or pleasure, but rather stripes, are fit for fools: and much less is it proper for slaves to be able wantonly to domineer over princes and men of great wealth or honour. 11. It is an evidence of great wisdom to be slow to anger: and it is a great honour kindly to pass over injuries, and return good for evil. 12. The frowns and wrath of a king are very terrible to his subjects, and make them apprehensive

[3] He lives, he feasts upon the desire and plan and perpetration of iniquity.—C.

* The antithesis in this verse is not well brought out in the present rendering. Probably the true meaning is as follows: —'The desire of a man (that which he longs for when in distress or poverty) is his relief (the assistance or alms calculated to satisfy his wants or save him from impending calamities); but (still the poor man (who is thus forced to beg and pray for help) is better (even though he should fail to obtain and continue to suffer) than the liar. The moral is, poverty is to be preferred to lies.—C.

CHAPTER XX.

WINE is[a] a mocker, strong drink is [1]raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.

2 The[b] fear of a king is as the roaring of a lion; whoso provoketh him to anger sinneth against his own soul.[2]

3 It[c] is an honour for a man to cease from strife: but [d]every fool will be meddling.

4 The[e] sluggard will not plough by reason of the cold;[3] therefore[g] shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing.

5 Counsel[h] in the heart of man is like deep water: but a man of understanding will draw it out.

6 Most[i] men will proclaim every one his own goodness:[4] but[j] a faithful man who can find?

7 The[k] just man walketh in his [5]integrity; [l]his children are blessed after him.

8 A[m] king that sitteth in the throne of judgment scattereth away all evil with his eyes.

9 Who[o] can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin?[6]

10 [p]Divers weights,[7] and divers [8]measures, both of them are alike abomination to the LORD.

11 Even[q] a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right.

12 The[r] hearing ear, and the seeing eye, the LORD hath made even both of them.

13 Love[s] not sleep, lest thou come to poverty; open thine eyes, and thou shalt be satisfied with bread.

14 It[t] is naught, it is naught, saith the

of ruin; but the tokens of his favour greatly refresh and invigorate their spirits. 13. An ignorant, headstrong, and impious son is a plague and grief to his parents; and a contentious wife is a gradual ruin to her family, so perpetually vexing her husband that he can scarcely live with her. 14. Persons may have houses and riches left them by parents; but a prudent wife is not obtained, even by diligent care, without the peculiar direction and blessing of the Lord. 15. Sloth and idleness sink the mind into a dull stupidity and unconcern, and thereby reduce men to extreme beggary and want. 16. He who carefully keeps the commandments of God as the rule of his life, secures the welfare of his own soul: but he that lives at random, led only by his own brutish inclinations, shall be miserable in time and in eternity. 17. He who compassionately relieves the necessities of the poor really enriches himself; as what he gives is but lent to the Lord, and shall be repaid, with large interest and increase of blessings, upon him and his posterity. 18. Children ought to be faithfully corrected before they are fixed in evil habits and customs; nor ought their cryings or entreaties make parents abate the necessary severity towards them. 19. Men given to passion and fury bring themselves into great mischiefs: and if we extricate them out of one danger, they will quickly involve themselves in another. 20. To listen to instruction, and kindly receive reproofs, or even corrections, is the proper way to attain much solid and lasting wisdom and experience. 21. Many are the purposes and contrivances of men, and they often lay them with great care: but it is only the will of the Lord which is able to bring to pass whatsoever is best. 22. A desire to do good to others is a real kindness to them, though it be not in our power to effect it. And a poor man who would fain do us good, is better than one who promises much and does little. 23. True godliness, and a religious care to please the Lord in all things, increase a spiritual life, and issue in life eternal. They afford the most satisfying comfort in God's favour, produce the most agreeable contentment with our lot, and are an excellent preservative both from sin and from suffering. 24. Sluggards are so much given to laziness and idle sauntering, that they can hardly be persuaded to take their meat or do the most necessary and easy things. 25. Incorrigible sinners, and particularly scoffers at religion and despisers of reproof, ought to be severely punished, as a warning to such as are inconsiderate; but such as are wise and prudent will need no more but a gentle reproof to make them learn their duty and practice accordingly. 26. Children, who by their debaucheries waste their father's substance and deal unkindly with their mother, disgrace their parents, and at last render themselves infamous and miserable. 27. Great care ought to be taken to avoid listening to false doctrine, sinful advice, or even idle and frothy language, as it tends to make us wander from the true doctrines of Christ and practice of holiness. 28. An impious witness, whose conscience is so hardened that he can swear to anything, laughs at all law and justice, and even at the threatened judgment of God upon perjured persons: and the mouth of the wicked utters the most false, sinful, and mischievous speeches with greediness. 29. But terrible judgments shall certainly be inflicted upon those that scoff at conscience and religion; and indelible marks of God's displeasure shall be inflicted on those who slight good instructions.

Ver. 2. He that hasteth with his feet sinneth. He that hasteth with his feet, without judging by his head—who, more forward than thoughtful—must end in sin. C.

Ver. 3. Fretteth against the Lord. The elephant, the rhinoceros, the lion, and the tiger are often inclosed within cages. When wild they fret and strive, but soon learn that resistance is vain and submission good: but unrenewed man, less wise than 'the beasts that perish,' fretteth against the Lord, and striveth to the end against his Maker. Grace alone can teach him to say, 'Let the Lord do what seemeth him good:' 'Thy will be done on earth as in heaven.' C.

Ver. 7. The word 'hate' must evidently be understood in the comparative sense of Lu. 14. 26. And where poverty arises from idleness, indiscretion, or wastefulness, the coldness of brethren and friends, so far from being criminal, may be a righteous judgment and retribution. In other cases, however, it may indicate a criminal want of sympathy; and in the case of Christ Jesus our Lord, was exhibited in the highest form of guiltiness. Had our Lord come in riches, splendour, and earthly pride, the Pharisees would have worshipped him whom they bought and crucified. C.

Ver. 13. Dropping. The dropping of water through the flat roofs of eastern houses must have been a common occurrence. It would bring (1) a disagreeable noise; (2) defilement of furniture and dress; (3) in the end rottenness; (4) disease. C.

Ver. 19. An ill-tempered man will, in the end, come to punishment: for though his friend deliver him again and again, he will at last offend beyond all power of apology or intercession. C.

Ver. 22. Kindness. The most amiable quality is kindness. With it a man of inferior mental attainments is esteemed; without it the highest accomplishments can never secure esteem or confidence. C.

Ver. 24. His bosom. Rather 'in the dish,' meaning that out of which the Orientals eat with the hand. See Mat. xxiii. The meaning is the slothful, even when his hand is filled with opportunities and means of success, will not lift up his hand to provide for his own support. C.

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 1. Immoderate drinking of wine, or other intoxicating liquors, exposes men to the jest and detestation of others; it makes themselves abusive and scurrilous, mocking even at sacred things, and renders them like fools, sots, or madmen, furious, tumultuous, and quarrelsome: while it seems to exhilarate the spirits, it deceitfully drowns both reason and conscience, and tends to the ruin of both soul and buyer; but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth.

15 There[u] is gold, and a multitude of rubies: but the lips of knowledge are a precious jewel.

16 Take[v] his garment that is surety for a stranger;[w] and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.

17 Bread[y] of deceit[z] is sweet to a man; but afterwards his mouth shall be filled with gravel.

18 Every[a] purpose is established by counsel; and with good advice make war.

19 He[b] that goeth about as a tale-bearer revealeth secrets; therefore meddle not with him that flattereth[1] with his lips.[2]

20 Whoso[b] curseth his father or his mother, his lamp[3] shall be put out in obscure darkness.

21 An[c] inheritance may be gotten hastily[4] at the beginning; but the end thereof shall not be blessed.

22 Say[d] not thou, I will recompense evil; but wait on the LORD, and he shall save thee.

23 Divers[e] weights are an abomination unto the LORD; and a false balance[5] is not good.

24 Man's[g] goings are of the LORD; how can a man then understand his own way?

25 It[h] is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy, and after vows to make inquiry.

26 A[i] wise king scattereth the wicked, and bringeth the wheel[6] over them.

27 The[j] spirit of man is the candle[7] of the LORD, searching all the inward parts of the belly.

28 Mercy[k] and truth preserve the king; and his throne is upholden by mercy.

29 The[l] glory of young men is their strength; and [m]the beauty of old men is the gray head.[8]

30 The blueness of a wound cleanseth away evil;[9] so[o] do stripes[1] the inward parts of the belly.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE king's[a] heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water:[1] he turneth it whithersoever he will.

2 Every[b] way of a man is right in his own eyes: [c]but the LORD pondereth the hearts.

3 To[d] do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the LORD than sacrifice.[2]

4 An[e] high look,[3] and a proud heart, and the ploughing[4] of the wicked,[5] is sin.

5 The[g] thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteousness; but of every one that is hasty, only to want.

6 The[h] getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death.[6]

7 The[i] robbery of the wicked shall destroy them;[7] because they refuse to do judgment.

8 The[j] way of man is froward and strange: [k]but as for the pure, his work is right.

9 It[l] is better to dwell in a corner of the house-top,[8] than with a brawling woman[9] in a wide house.[1]

10 The[n] soul of the wicked desireth evil: his neighbour findeth no favour[2] in his eyes.

11 When[o] the scorner is punished, the simple is made wise; and when the wise is instructed, he receiveth knowledge.

12 The[p] righteous man wisely considereth the house of the wicked: [q]but God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness.

13 Whoso[r] stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard.

14 A[s] gift in secret pacifieth anger; and a reward in the bosom strong wrath.

15 It[t] is joy to the just to do judgment: [u]but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.

16 The[v] man that wandereth out of the way body. 2. The just wrath of a king is terrible: and they that offend him, by exasperating language or behaviour, expose themselves to temporal and lasting ruin. 3. It is honourable to avoid contention to the utmost, and to get out of it as quickly as possible, by confessing our own faults, and forgiving those of our neighbours: but foolish and wicked persons are always ready to begin or maintain quarrels. 4. Such as, through indolence and self-indulgence, neglect their business in its proper season, may expect beggary and misery; while they who are diligent enjoy abundant felicity. 5. Some men, through their reservedness of temper, and others through deep design, conceal their intentions: but persons of great sagacity will discover them, or even by their artful insinuations make themselves to declare them. 6. Most men will boast how friendly, humane, charitable, and generous they are: but it is hard to find one answerable in deeds to his trust, his relation, his promises, or pretences. 7. Justified and gracious persons, by their practice, manifest the sincerity of their heart and profession; and their children are blessed of God and regarded by men on their account. 8. A king who makes it his business to execute judgment and justice faithfully, effectually suppresses crimes and impieties by his strict inspection of affairs. 9. No man on earth is perfectly free from sin in heart or life, nor can he make himself so. 10. To buy with larger weights or measures, and sell with lesser ones, and all other injustice, is extremely detestable to God. 11. Men's continued practice is the surest mark of their disposition, and by that the future conversation of young persons may be guessed at; and yet they, even children, often strangely conceal their vices. 12. All our natural faculties and senses, and the right use of them, are from God, and therefore ought to be employed for his glory. 13. Immoderate sleep, or other slothfulness, wastes our time and draws on poverty and want: but watchful care and diligent labours are the means of obtaining everything necessary. 14. Some, while they buy goods, will dishonestly and falsely cry them down, and yet afterwards boast of their good bargain and cheating the seller. 15. Wise and gracious speeches, proceeding from a wise and understanding heart, are more valuable than all the gold, pearls, or precious things on earth. 16. Never trust him, without a proper pledge, who rashly becomes surety for everybody, strangers and harlots not excepted; for he will quickly be reduced to beggary. 17. Gains, honours, and pleasures, acquired by unrighteous courses, may at first be extremely agreeable to men; but they will at last produce anguish of conscience, pangs of repentance, or torments of despair. 18. Deliberation with ourselves, and consulting with others who are prudent, is the way to obtain success in our undertakings, especially in matters of importance and danger. 19. It is always necessary to suspect flatterers, and to turn a deaf ear to tale-bearers, who, by treacherously revealing the secrets which others have intrusted to them, labour to insinuate themselves into our confidence, and then betray us. 20. Slighters, revilers, abusers, and wishers of mischief to parents, bring fearful and lasting ruin on themselves and posterity, however they may prosper for a time. 21. Many, by unrighteous courses, quickly become rich: but the foundation being laid in rapine, extortion, or fraud, it shall quickly waste away, or prove a curse to such as enjoy it. 22. Never revenge injuries received; but commit thy cause to God who judges righteously; wait patiently in the use of lawful means for the fulfilment of his promises, and he will vindicate and deliver thee in his own time. 23. Injustice, even in the smallest things, is so extremely abominable to God, that it cannot be too much hated or avoided. 24. Men's thoughts, words, and actions are all directed by God to his own ends: and none can certainly know beforehand what will be the issue of them. 25. A sacrilegious converting of what pertains to God to our own private use, and studying how to be loosed from the obligations of solemn vows, terribly ensnare men's souls, and bring certain ruin upon them. 26. Pious and prudent magistrates exert themselves to discourage and terrify the wicked, and punish them with proper severity. 27. The rational soul and conscience, especially when renewed by the Spirit of God, act as his deputies; discovering, judging, accusing, or approving whatever passes within us, according as it is contrary or conformable to God's revealed will. 28. Bounty and clemency, joined with justice and faithfulness to their of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead.

17 He[w] that loveth pleasure[3] shall be a poor man: he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich.[4] word, are principal means of securing the government of princes, and entailing their kingdom on their posterity. 29. Strength, vigour, and courage render young men respected, but gravity, wisdom, and experience are the peculiar ornaments of the aged. 30. Severe corrections are necessary to restrain or reclaim some stubborn and obstinate tempers, and to purge out those corrupt affections which are lodged in the heart.

Ver. 6. Generosity is much more common than fidelity: ostentation of generosity more common still. Fidelity to man is not uncommon in the sense of honesty; but in the sense of love, admonition, rebuke, and prayer, how seldom is it to be found! Above all, while men glory in their generosity with the gifts of God, who is faithful in service to the Giver? C.

Ver. 10. This is not confined to mere commercial integrity, but embraces all relative duties, whether between ourselves and our neighbours, or ourselves and God. Take one of the latter, as one of the most neglected, because spiritual and invisible. We expect gratitude of men for all our kindness: do we similarly weigh and measure our gratitude to God? We ask forgiveness of him daily for all our trespasses; do we employ the same weight and measure towards them that trespass against us? C.

Ver. 16. Never place confidence in a thoughtless fool who pledges his word, character, or credit for a stranger who has inveigled him. Above all, never trust an abandoned libertine, who, being 'joined to an harlot,' is dissevered from Christ, 1 Co. 6. 15, 16; and who, careless about his own soul, will never be faithful to your interest farther than he is bound by ties of law, and constrained by its compulsions. C.

Ver. 27. The thoughts of the natural man are chiefly directed to 'what he shall eat and what he shall drink,' Lu. 12. 22, 30: nay, his 'god is his belly,' Phi. 3. 19. But the spirit of the renewed man is the candle of the Lord, searching out and mortifying all the deeds of the body that the soul may live. C.

Ver. 30. The blueness of a wound, &c. Some wounds do occasionally assume a bluish tinge; but it is always an unhealthy symptom, and unfavourable to healing. The word 'blueness' should rather be rendered suppuration, which brings the description into accordance with the ordinary process of healing. C.

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 1. The wills, inclinations, and purposes of kings and others, are entirely under the eye and observation of God: and he would turn them into right paths as surely as the gardener or husbandman manages his canals of water. 2. Men, through their self-love, often fancy their own purposes and works to be extremely right; while the Lord, who perfectly knows their hearts, observes them to be very defective or sinful. 3. Uprightness of heart, and holiness and virtue of life, are more pleasing to God than the most pompous devotions or the most liberal benefactions or alms. 4. Not only the insolence, pride, and ambition of wicked men are criminal before God, but all their natural, civil, and moral actions, and all their worldly greatness and prosperity lead to sin; and all they do is sinful in its principle, manner, and end. 5. Prudent contrivances and laborious industry are the proper means of plenty and affluence: but hasty resolutions, precipitant measures, and unjust methods involve men in trouble and loss. 6. The getting of wealth by lying, flattery, calumny, or perjury, is a beguiling and unprofitable course, however much used by such as walk in ways leading to destruction; and the wealth thus obtained is as unsubstantial and transient as heaps of chaff or clouds of smoke before the wind. 7. The injuries which wicked men do to others, in rendering their families poor or desolate, shall, in most ruinous punishments, be returned upon their own heads, because they are wilfully bent upon their unjust dealings. 8. The whole temper and course of a wicked man are contrary to the law and nature of God, and odious to him: but they whose consciences are washed in Jesus' blood, and their hearts renewed by his grace, walk in good works, acceptable to God and profitable to men. 9. Better is it to live poorly and solitary in the open air, exposed to all the injuries of the weather, or to be thrust into some little corner, than have a spacious house and numerous family governed by a contentious wife, whose perpetual scolding and brawling, on the smallest occasion, is more intolerable than thunder, lightning, or blustering winds. 10. A wicked man's heart desires to be ever doing mischief, and to have others falling into it: nor will he spare good or bad, friend or foe, if, by reproof or otherwise, they stand in the way of his covetousness, ambition, or other lusts. 11. When obstinate scoffers at the laws of God and men are punished in providence or by the magistrates; others, particularly such as they have seduced, will bethink themselves what they are doing: and wise men will improve instructions and admonitions, to render themselves wiser and better. 12. While righteous magistrates search the houses of the wicked for ill-gotten goods, and in order that they may be duly punished and deprived of power to do further mischief, godly men, in order to deter them from like courses, consider the judgment and ruin which God brings on the wicked for their sins. 13. They who refuse to help the poor in distress shall be reduced to misery themselves, and have none to pity or help them. 14. Presents, especially if secretly and prudently given, have a powerful influence to appease angry and wrathful men. 15. The execution of justice, and the practice of holiness and virtue, are a pleasure to the righteous; but are a terror and burden to the wicked, whom God and the magistrates shall concur to destroy. 16. He that will not live according to the directions of God's Word, but follows the conduct of his own lusts and passions, shall, after all his extravagances, be for ever fixed in hell. 17. Voluptuous persons destroy their own pleasures by wasting their estates; and they who are given to costly and delicious feeding can never thrive. 18. Wicked men often fall into the very miseries which they had prepared for the godly; and in times of common calamity are often severely punished that the righteous may be delivered. 20. True wisdom enables men to procure what is necessary for their families, and to enjoy it with satisfaction; but foolish persons lavishly waste what they neither know how to get or how to live without. 21. They who make it their business to receive and improve Jesus Christ and his righteousness and grace, in a life of holiness and virtue, shall find every new-covenant blessing in time and eternity. 22. Wise men, by their prudence, kindness, and perseverance, can effect the most difficult enterprises, and do more than others who have much more strength. 23. Restraint of the tongue from impure, false, profane, rash, injurious language, greatly preserves men from troubles, embarrassments, and miseries. 24. Pride, insolence, and outrageous words only render men infamous and contemptible. 25, 26. The slothful man is killed by an insatiable desire after that which he has not and will not labour for; but pious and diligent persons have enough for themselves, and also wherewith to relieve others. 27. All the appearances of devotion and piety about unrenewed persons being hypocritical, proceeding from a wicked principle, done in a wicked manner, and to a wicked end, are abominable to God. 28. The testimony, character, and soul of a false witness shall quickly be ruined: but he that speaks nothing but what he knows to be true, is fixed and invariable in his attestations. 29. Impenitent sinners refuse to blush at their abominations, and obstinately resolve to go on in them; but sincere saints carefully conduct their thoughts, words, and actions by the rule of God's Word. 30. No projects, however wisely laid or prudently conducted, can defeat or alter the purposes or counteract the providence of God. 31. Neither horses, chariots, nor powerful armies can obtain victories, or even protect their owners: but all safety and salvation are of and through faith in Christ himself.

Ver. 7. The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them. There are two views of the subject. 1. Several nations live by robbery, and reckon it an honourable employment. Yet, in the end, all such communities, like the piratical Algerines and murderous Thugs, are brought to destruction. (2) There is a robbery of God when he is defrauded of that worship, honour, and glory that are due to his name, which must finally terminate in the destruction of the guilty, Mal. 3. 9. C.

Ver. 13. Not 'he that stoppeth his ear at the importunity of the poor' is condemned, for that importunity is often the result of vice, idleness, or fraud; but he that disregards 'their cry' when it arises, as in a child, from want or pain that they cannot supply or relieve. C.

Ver. 22. Never did the world appear in a more hopeless state than a little before the dawn of the blessed Reformation. The human mind was enslaved to authority and tradition—an authority without charter from God, a tradition without name, till manufactured on emergency. The consciences of men were prostrate before the shrine of the confessional; their spirits were terrified into cowardly submission by the fires of an imaginary purgatory; and the walls of spiritual Babylon were high, as unto heaven. Yet those walls were scaled, and this city was taken, not by 'power nor by might,' but by a few 'wise men'—men 'made wise unto salvation' by the Scriptures 2 Ti. 3. 15; and strong and victorious by the Spirit of truth, and love, and holiness. C.

CHAPTER XXII. Ver. 1. A good character.

4 By[v] humility,[4] and the fear of the LORD, are riches, and honour, and life.

5 Thorns[g] and snares are in the way of the froward: he that doth keep his soul shall be far from them.

6 Train[h] up[5] a child in the way[6] he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it.

7 The[i] rich ruleth over the poor; and the borrower is servant to the lender.[7]

8 He[j] that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity; and the rod of his anger shall fail.[8]

9 He[k] that hath a bountiful eye[9] shall be blessed; for he giveth of his bread to the poor.

10 Cast[l] out the scorner, and contention shall go out; yea, strife and reproach shall cease.

11 He[m] that loveth pureness of heart, for the grace of his lips[1] the king shall be his friend.[2]

12 The[o] eyes of the LORD preserve knowledge; and he overthroweth the words[3] of the transgressor.

13 The[p] slothful man saith, There is a lion without, I shall be slain in the streets.[4]

14 The[q] mouth of strange women is a deep pit: he that is abhorred of the LORD shall fall therein.

15 Foolishness[r] is bound in the heart of a child; but the [s]rod of correction shall drive it far from him.

16 He[t] that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want.

17 Bow[u] down thine ear, and hear the words of the wise, and apply thine heart unto my knowledge:

18 For[v] it is a pleasant thing if thou keep them within thee;[5] they shall withal be fitted in thy lips.[6]

qualifying men to be useful for God in their generation, and the noted respect and friendship of those among whom we live, are more honourable and comfortable than all the riches of the world. 2. The rich by their wealth and the poor by their labour are mutual supports of each other, and ought to live together in harmony and kindness, as the same Lord made them both, and appointed them their respective conditions. 3. Prudent men foresee calamities or temptations when approaching, and use proper means for securing themselves; but foolish and inconsiderate persons go on securely in their sins and are ruined. 4. True humility and real godliness are the certain way to honour and happiness in this world and in that which is to come. 5. Wicked men meet with much trouble and danger in their sinful ways: but he that takes proper care of his soul shall be preserved therefrom, and enjoy manifold blessings. 6. Let children be carefully instructed in the truths and accustomed to the ways of God as early and earnestly as possible, and they will retain the impression, and practise the same, as long as they live. 7. Rich men domineer over the poor; and they who borrow are obliged to depend on the will and pleasure of the lender. 8. He whose common practice is to do mischief shall be paid in his own coin, with misery and trouble; and at length his power of wronging others shall be taken from him. 9. They who compassionately observe the wants of the poor, and cheerfully relieve them, shall be largely rewarded of God. 10. The removal of graceless persons, who seem all good counsels, from a society, is an excellent mean to compose the contentions therein, and to prevent strifes and mutual reproaches for the future. 11. He that loves and practises sincerity and plain-heartedness, will recommend himself even to princes, by the piety, pleasantness, and candour of his discourse. 12. God, in his providence, carefully preserves his own oracles and ordinances among men, and provides for, preserves, and honours all who through faith are made wise unto salvation: but he overrules the counsels and designs of the wicked and perfidious. 13. Slothful persons imagine mighty hinderances in the way of their duty, where there are none, or at least very few. 14. Nothing is so dangerous, so eternally dangerous, as the ensnaring flatteries of whorish women, and the enslaving influence of fleshly lust. If a man be ensnared by them, nothing but infinite mercy and power can prevent his utter and everlasting destruction. And seldom are any, who have not provoked the Lord by former wickedness, permitted to fall into these snares. 15. False opinions and bad inclinations adhere so closely to the minds of children, that not only instructions and reproofs, but even seasonable and duly severe chastisements, must remove their obstinate folly. 16. He that by violence or fraud oppresses the poor to enrich himself, or gives to the rich what he took from the poor, or what he should give to relieve their wants, shall himself be reduced to want and beggary. 17. Attend diligently, and consider seriously, the counsels and precepts of wise men, and particularly those given in this book. 18. For it will afford thee great satisfaction heartily to embrace, thoroughly to digest, and faithfully to preserve them in thy mind: and by these means thou wilt be qualified to instruct others in them. 19. Men who are quick and dexterous, but prudent, in despatching whatever business is committed to them, are in a fair way to be preferred to some honourable employment in the service of their prince.

Ver. 7. The rich ruleth over the poor. This should not generate either tyranny in the one, or envy in the other. It is an arrangement of Providence for mutual good: the child that obeys is as much blessed as the parent that rules. And so, where rich and poor alike fear God, the poor is as happy as the rich. C.

Ver. 15. The rod of correction. Be it never forgotten by parents, that 'the rod' signifies not exclusively an instrument of punishment, but authority and power; and that 'correction' consequently is not confined to corporal punishment, but extended to every means by which the mind may be corrected by wise precept, godly example, or rational restraint. C.

Ver. 16. Giveth to the rich. Giveth bribes to the rich, as is common in eastern despotisms, to induce them to overlook and countenance his oppressions. The whole history of the pashalics of Western Asia is a striking commentary upon this important doctrine of sacred political economy. C.

Ver. 17. From ver. 17–21 there is either a preface to a new division of the book of Proverbs, or a conclusion from the foregoing instructions. The latter view seems most congenial to ver. 19, 20. C.

Ver. 27. This is a warning against dishonest suretiship, by them that have 'nothing to pay.' The deducible rule is the only one consistent with Christian integrity, viz. that no man should be surety for another beyond what he is able and, if need be, willing to pay for him. C.

CHAPTER XXIII. Ver. 1. When you are honoured with a seat at the table of a great man, remember that you are in danger if you take not heed to your behaviour, considering what and how you eat, what and how you speak, and to whom. 2. And avoid, as you would avoid death, every approach to intemperance and folly in language, as well as excess in eating and 6 Eat[h] thou not the bread of him that hath an [a]evil eye, neither desire thou his dainty meats:

7 For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he: Eat[i] and drink, saith he to thee; but his heart is not with thee.

8 The morsel which thou hast eaten shall thou vomit up, and lose thy sweet words.[5]

9 Speak[k] not in the ears of a fool; for he will despise the wisdom of thy words.

10 Remove[l] not the old land-mark;[6] and enter not into the fields of the fatherless:

11 For[m] their Redeemer is mighty; he shall plead their cause with thee.

12 Apply[o] thine heart unto instruction, and thine ears to the words of knowledge.

13 Withhold[p] not correction from the child; for if thou beatest him with the rod, he shall not die.[7]

14 Thou shalt beat him with the rod, and shalt deliver his soul from hell.

15 My[q] son, if thine heart be wise, my heart shall rejoice, even mine:[8]

16 Yea, my reins shall rejoice [r]when thy lips speak right things.

17 Let[s] not thine heart envy sinners: [t]but be thou in the fear of the LORD all the day long.

18 For[u] surely there is an end;[9] and thine expectation shall not be cut off.

19 Hear[v] thou, my son, and be wise, and guide thine heart in the way.

20 Be[w] not among wine-bibbers; among riotous eaters of flesh.[1]

21 For[y] the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty; and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags.[2]

22 Hearken[z] unto thy father that begat thee, and despise not thy mother when she is old.

23 Buy[a] the truth, and sell it not; also wisdom, and instruction, and understanding.

drinking; and so much the more if thou art given to such weakness. 3. Never show a fondness for delicate provision; for it often betrays men into excess, or into some indecent unwarrantable behaviour. 4. Never labour immoderately with heart or hand to obtain riches; and never depend on thy own prudent management, but on God himself, for the success of thy undertakings. 5. Never set thy mind or affections upon riches, nor pursue with eagerness what perhaps thou canst never attain; for if thou dost, they may suddenly and irrecoverably be taken from thee, and become witnesses against thee before God, with respect to thy guilt in pursuing or abusing them. 6. Never receive an obligation from a sordid, covetous, and churlish wretch; and never let the best cheer tempt thee to accept of his invitation to a feast: 7. For he is to be judged of by the disposition of his heart, not by his fair words. And while he flatters and urges thee to eat, he has no real kindness for thee, nor in the least wishes thee to make use of his provision. 8. When thou seest his sordid carriage, it will make thee repent thy tasting of his dainty meats, or paying any regard to his kind but deceitful compliments. 9. The wisest counsels and reproofs, addressed to fools and scorners, will be but contemned and trampled under their feet. 10, 11. Never encroach upon the property of the fatherless or others who have no help in man: for the Almighty God will take their part, redress their grievances, and revenge the injuries done to them. 12–16. If parents carefully instruct and correct, and children seriously regard and receive their instruction, and submit to their correction, it will greatly promote the happiness and comfort of both. 17, 18. Never envy the prosperity of sinners; but study to live in favour and in humble fellowship with God. Thus shall thy troubles quickly have an end, and the expected blessings of eternity be enjoyed by thee, while the prosperity of sinners shall be turned into everlasting misery. 19–21. Carefully study true wisdom, and let thine heart be exercised in faith and holiness. Avoid all intimacy with intemperate persons; for they and their slothful brethren will quickly reduce themselves to outward and even eternal misery. 22–25. Pay the utmost regard to the instructions, reproofs, and good example of parents: spare no pains or cost to know, embrace, and hold fast the truths of God; to find out and walk in the true way of salvation, and to grow in the knowledge of Christ, and never part with it upon any account. Thus shalt thou be a remarkable blessing and comfort to thy parents. 26–28. Receive my counsels with thy whole heart, that it may be filled with and fixed on a God in Christ; and carefully observe and follow my directions and example. Thus shalt thou be delivered from whorish women, by whose enticements multitudes are seduced into manifold wickedness and irrecoverable ruin. 29–35. Carefully avoid all drunkenness, and every occasion of or temptation to it, as it occasions bloody quarrels, inflames fleshly lusts, and animates to whoredom: it fills the mouth with obscene, rude, profane, or senseless discourse; it renders the head stupid and giddy; it hardens men in wickedness; and, in fine, issues in misery both here and hereafter.

Ver. 6. Niggardliness and hospitality are not unfrequently combined in the same person. This hospitality, however, originates not in kindness, but in ostentation. With such contradictory characters form no intimacy: what is essentially evil cannot come to good. C.

Ver. 23. Buy the truth by the expenditure of attentive hearing, earnest prayer, diligent study, unreserved obedience, devoted zeal, cheerful self-denial—in all 'looking unto Jesus,' and depending upon the promise and gift of his teaching Spirit, whom he has freely promised to all who 'ask.'—Sell it not to appetites, to indolence, to vanity, to pride, to covetousness—whereby Satan ever seeks to 'catch away' the seed of truth from the heart, Mat. 13. 19. C.

CHAPTER XXIV. Ver. 1. Never envy the prosperity of wicked men, nor desire any intimacy or connection with them. 2. For they contrive and labour to ruin others that themselves may become rich and great; and by lies, calumnies, and the like, they labour to undo them: but such conduct will at last bring destruction upon their own head. 3–6. True godliness, attended with prudence and diligence, is the proper method to procure estates, raise families, get wealth, strength, or victory. 7. Solid knowledge, and serious and sensible discourse, are above the reach of foolish inconsiderate persons; nor can they judge or advise to any purpose in public concerns. 8. b 2 Ki. xviii.-xx. 2 Ch.xxix.-xxxii.

1 This is the commencement of the third division of the book. The proverbs in this division resemble to some extent those in the second; but there are noticeable differences. The verses in the second division consist generally of two antithetical members; in this division the two members are parabolic rather than antithetical. We notice a parallelism similar to that which characterises Hebrew poetry. The proverbs, too, as a rule, are longer; sometimes they extend to two, three, and even more verses. There is also a topical connection in some of them, which is not observed in the proverbs of the second division. Another characteristic is that they are directed to the whole body of the people, whereas the former were chiefly designed for the young.—P.

is there in it: and the door ought to be held as ignominious and detestable. 9. The inclination to and contrivance of evil is sin; but he that makes a sport of sin, and contemns reproofs for it, ought to be abhorred by every person. 10. To give up all for lost, and be discouraged from duty, in the time of distress, is a great evidence of weakness in knowledge, wisdom, courage, and grace. 11, 12. If, pretending that thou didst not know their case or how to relieve them, thou neglectest to exert thyself for the deliverance of persons who, by hatred, envy, or false accusations, are in danger of losing their life, remember that God, who knows all the secrets of thy heart, who preserves thy soul in life, and observes all the motions of it, will severely punish thee, and give thee up to similar distress. 13, 14. As the most delightful satisfaction and nourishment are found in eating of honey, especially that pure part of it which drops from the comb, so shall solid and spiritual wisdom and knowledge be pleasant and profitable to thy soul, issuing in abundant present and eternal happiness, answerable to and even far exceeding thy most enlarged expectations. 15, 16. To attempt by craft or violence to ruin the righteous, even under their affliction, is as vain as it is malicious: for though they may frequently fall into sin, when they repent the Lord again raises them up: but wicked men, refusing to repent of sin, are plunged into irretrievable ruin. 17, 18. Never rejoice, no, not in heart, when any private enemy of thine falls into sin or trouble, lest the Lord be thereby provoked to deliver him, and plunge thee into the miserable condition from which he is recovered. 19, 20. Never envy the prosperity of wicked men, nor be enticed to follow their impieties on account of it; for whatever may be their appearance, they can have no real happiness here, nor anything but eternal misery hereafter: and often their blaze of outward prosperity is quickly extinguished, and either they or their seed reduced to wretchedness even in this life. 21, 22. Always reverence, worship, and obey God as thy own God in Christ; and be humbly obedient to magistrates, as his deputies on earth. Never have anything to do with those who appear fond of novelties, either in religion or in civil government; for unexpected and inconceivably dreadful calamities shall unavoidably and violently seize upon such, and upon their associates. 23. If thou wouldest be and appear wise, abhor it as a thing extremely sinful and ruinous, to regard persons in judgment on account of anything else but the merits of their cause. 24. Whoever, contrary to evidence, pronounces a wicked man innocent, or a bad cause to be good, exposes himself to the curses and detestation of men, and the fearful judgment of God. 25. But they who labour earnestly to check vice by the just punishment of evil-doers, shall have satisfaction in their own mind, and shall be remarkably blessed of God, and prayed for and commended by men. 26. Every person will highly honour and dearly love him who speaks the plain, naked, edifying, and seasonable truth, whether as a judge, a witness, or private person. 27. Never undertake or begin any weighty affair withdeliberate thought and sufficient preparation. 28. Never rashly or groundlessly affirm or insinuate anything to the hurt of thy neighbour's character: and never entice any one to believe or say ill of him. 29. Never, either in heart, word, or deed, revenge the injuries done to thee. 30-34. And from the misery and want which others have brought upon themselves, by their negligence, sloth, or misspending of time, learn earnestly to avoid these things, as ruinous to thy outward estate, as well as to the spiritual and eternal happiness of thy soul.

Ver. 30-32. I went by the field of the slothful . . . and received instruction. 'There is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves,' Job 34. 22. Do as they may, they are detected even by the eye of man. Thorns, nettles, and broken walls whisper the story of their owner's indolence, and point out the invisible spectre, poverty, as he advances in the guise of a hungry traveller, and discover the gleaming of those resistless arms with which he will soon destroy his thoughtless and self-devoted victim. C.

CHAPTER XXV. Ver. 2. It is the glory of God that his counsels are unfathomable, and his works, either of creation and providence, so mysterious, that the wisest on earth cannot comprehend their nature, reason, or ends: but it is the honour of kings diligently to search the Scriptures, thoroughly to examine intricate causes, and dive into plots and conspiracies, or fully to display the reasons of their actions. 3. But vulgar minds can no more judge of the secret reasons of statesmen, than they can perfectly search and measure the heavens and the earth. 4, 5. As silver, when purified from its dross, may be framed into whatever vessels the founder pleases; so kingdoms may be established in the most virtuous and happy forms, when wicked persons are removed from the counsels and company of kings. 6, 7. Never ambitiously affect or thrust thyself into courts, or any places or stations that belong not to thee; for it will be more honourable and satisfying to be invited to them, than to be disgracefully thrust from the honours which thou hast arrogated to thyself, and that in the presence of the prince unto whom thou hast approached too near. 8–10. Never enter into any contention till thou hast well considered the goodness and weight of thy cause, and how to manage it, lest in the issue thou be plunged into perplexity and covered with shame. And, if it be possible, make up matters privately, even where thy cause is good. And never let anger or hatred provoke thee to discover thy neighbour's secrets in order to disgrace him, lest such as hear of it not only reproach thee for thy perfidiousness, but even retort upon thee such shameful conduct, which will render thee infamous through life. 11, 12. A wise instruction, advice, reproof, or word of comfort, seasonably and properly given, is comely, valuable, and ornamental: and scarcely can anything be more ornamental in life than a ready and humble hearkening and submitting to wise and seasonable reproof. 13. Cold drink or air in harvest is not more grateful and refreshing to the reapers, than good servants or ambassadors are to their masters, by their speedy despatch of the important business committed to them, and faithful report of their success. 14. It is extremely empty and deceiving to boast of graces, virtues, or abilities which we have not, or to promise what we cannot or care not to perform. 15. By patient submission and expectation princes are most readily pacified and persuaded: and humble, soft, and affectionate language bows the most stiff and hardened tempers, and overcomes even stubborn resolutions to the contrary. 16. Created comforts and pleasures are very agreeable if used in due moderation; but otherwise they lose their relish and plunge us into guilt and trouble. 17. To maintain a friendly intercourse with our neighbours is dutiful and pleasant; but too many, too long, or unseasonable visits render us disagreeable and disliked. 18. Slander and a bearing false witness are most dangerous and murderous means of destroying our neighbour. 19. Confidence in an unfaithful person in the time of trouble will, to our great anguish and grief, entirely disappoint us of help or relief. 20. As taking away clothes in winter increases our sense of cold, and vinegar irritates nitre, so unseasonable mirth renders a sad heart still more sorrowful. 21, 22. In time of need always render good for evil; and kindly bestow necessary supplies on such as have injured thee: thus shalt thou soften their rage, slay their hatred, and gain their affections; and the Lord shall reward thee with blessings, while he fearfully punishes them if they continue obstinate. 23. As the north wind in many countries dispels clouds and prevents rain, so frowns and rebukes check reproachful slandering and lying. 24. It is better to live cooped up in a corner, exposed to all the injuries of the weather, than in a large family and stately palace with a contentious, brawling, and scolding wife. 25. Good and certain news from a far country, where our friends and fortunes are, is expected with impatience, heard with delight, and believed and thought on with refreshing pleasure; but especially the gospel, which brings from God the blessed tidings of pardon, peace, grace, and salvation. 26. When righteous men are decoyed into scandalous sins, or are degraded from their influence and authority, and oppressed and persecuted, it is as hurtful to a church or nation as if the public fountains were corrupted and poisoned. 27. To hunt after worldly applause and honours, however sweet they be to corrupt nature, is extremely disgraceful and dangerous. 28. And to be furious and passionate renders us useless and miserable.

Ver. 1. Men of Hezekiah. Who the 'men of Hezekiah' were is unknown; and in such cases conjecture is useless. Nor would the knowledge be of any value, for the object of the record is not to give authority to these proverbs, but to remind the wise men of one generation to preserve and copy out for circulation the wisdom of a foregoing generation.—Note, It is thus God has given grace to the Protestant churches to multiply and circulate so many millions of copies of the Holy Scriptures in almost all languages of the earth. C.

Ver. 9. In perfect accordance with that precept of our Saviour, 'If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone,' Mat. 18.15.—Every confidential secret implies a trust; and he that reveals it, even to his most intimate friend, thereby teaches that friend to divulge it to another, and is thus most likely to be brought to shame as an idle babbler or unfaithful steward. C.

Ver. 11. Holden and others interpret the passage of oranges, citrons, and such golden or precious fruit, produced at feasts in baskets of silver network. But as it contains no mention of taste, the reference seems rather to be to figures of fruit of gold, interspersed amongst branches and leaves of silver, according to the gorgeous style of eastern palaces. C.

Ver. 13. As the cold of snow in the time of harvest. The snow of the lofty Hermon supplied, throughout the heat of summer and toil of harvest, snow for cooling either wine or water—the most reviving of all cordials under a burning sun. C.

Ver. 17. No wise man can be much in his neighbour's house; for any man will find useful employment in his own. And he that imposes himself upon others, because he is weary of himself or of his duty, will soon become a weariness and a nuisance to others. C.

Ver. 20. As vinegar upon nitre. Vinegar poured on the nitre of the ancients (carbonate of soda) causes an instant ebullition in the form of tears. And so does the ill-timed mirth of the fool bring new sorrows from the heavy heart. C.

Ver. 22. Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, &c. And so extract love from his angry heart, and purify him from his enmity, as 'coals of fire' extract metals from the hard rock, and clear away the dross with which they are commingled. 'The Lord shall reward thee' with thine enemy's conversion, or the peace of thine own conscience. C.

Ver. 28. A righteous man, tempted by fear or hope, to flatter and become subservient to the wicked, is sure to trouble his own peace of mind, if not finally to corrupt his principles. Peter trembling before a servant maid, and accommodating his speech to a rude and blasphemous soldiery, is a striking exemplification of this proverb. C.

CHAPTER XXVI. Ver. 1. Dignity and authority are very ill placed in the hands of foolish and wicked men, who know not how to use them, but will do mischief to themselves and others by them. 2. Causeless curses and imprecations can hurt the innocent no more than the birds that fly over their heads. 3. Obstinate, stupid, and refractory sinners, like beasts, must, by sharp punishments, be restrained from evil, and excited to good. 4. Answer not an ignorant and impertinent fool in his own brawling and reproachful manner, so as to imitate his impertinence. 5. Answer a proud conceited fool with such strength and evidence of reason as may render him sensible of his folly, and check his pride. 6. He who employs fools or rakes in any important business, deprives himself of the advantage he might have expected, and brings much inconvenience and mischief upon himself. 7. As dancing or walking by a lame man would but manifest his lameness, so the pretences of fools to wisdom do but render them the more ridiculous. 8. Honour bestowed upon fools is very unstable and useless, if not mischievous. 9. Grave, holy, and wise sayings upbraid fools for their impertinence and wickedness, however insensible they may be of the sharpest rebukes. 10. God, and even wise princes, punish sins of ignorance and wilful wickedness in a wise, just, and suitable manner. 11. Foolish sinners quickly, and often shamelessly, return to the very sins for which they have been sharply punished, and of which they have before repented, as grievous and hurtful. 12. There is more hope of the amendment of a sottish man, than of one who is so wise and virtuous in his own conceit that he thinks himself above instruction. 13. They who have no mind to labour, never want pretences for their idleness; and their sluggish fancy represents to them the most improbable and insuperable difficulties. 14. It is almost a toil for such to turn themselves on their bed; and though they seem busy, they do nothing to the purpose. Though they move in the formal round of external duties, they are never a whit nearer to heaven. 15. Pretending cold, or inability, they can scarcely apply to any work; and it is almost a burden for them to take their meat. 16. But though they take no pains to acquire knowledge, they look upon themselves as perfect miracles in wisdom, and treat with absolute contempt every argument that can be used to convince them of their mistakes and danger. 17. It is extremely dangerous to engage in other men's quarrels and disputes, which do not belong to us. 18, 19. To wrong our neighbours, by either word or deed, and then pretend that it was in jest, discovers us to be stupidly insolent and diabolically mad. 20. A proper discouragement of tale-bearers, whisperers, and slanderers, is an effectual mean to prevent contentions, or even to extinguish such as are begun. 21. It is also necessary to avoid contentious persons, who, by their provoking language, kindle up or inflame quarrels, even as one inflamed coal or piece of wood kindles another. 22. The wounds given to men's characters, business, and spirits, by calumnies slyly and secretly spread, are extremely painful and hurtful, and sometimes will scarcely admit of a cure. 23. Malicious and angry language corresponds very well with an envious and wicked heart; and notwithstanding their fine show, scarcely anything is more detestable than affectionate words when used to cover hatred and enmity of heart; nor will the dissimulation pass long undetected. 24–26. Nothing is more common in the world than dissembled professions of regard and affection; and yet nothing more base, and in the end more hurtful and ignominious, to the user. 27. They who labour to destroy their neighbours, whether by fraud or violence, involve themselves in the very mischiefs which they had intended for others. 28. Liars and slanderers chiefly hate those whom they have slandered, fearing that they may avenge themselves; and also those who confute their slanders. And flat-

'crers ruin men by drawing them into proud, rash, and pernicious courses.

Ver. 2. As wandering will never bring the bird home, and as crying will never bring the swallow to rest, so the curse without a cause will never light upon the head of the innocent object of the curser's enmity. C.

Ver. 19. If there be one practical advice more important than another, it is this: 'Never speak a word but in truth—be always in earnest;' a loose jest may 'set the table in a roar;' no harm may be meant; but no good is intended: it is therefore sin. And as a firebrand, thrown at random, may destroy a splendid palace, so may a thoughtless jest ruin a fair reputation.—Note, Children, look to a God of truth—speak words of truth—never jest at the expense of truth—be always in earnest. C.

Ver. 23. Silver dross is ordinarily lead, with which the cheapest kinds of earthenware are covered by the potter while immersed in a burning furnace. 'Burning lips' are not 'lips breathing warmth of affection,' but 'words that burn' up reputations (see ver. 24), and which are often covered over, and even ornamented as with 'silver dross.' Yet as a 'potsherd' shall they be dashed to pieces, when men 'by their words shall be justified, and by their words shall be condemned.' C.

CHAPTER XXVII. Ver. 1. Never boast what thou wilt be, or do, in any future period; for thou knowest not what changes Providence may make in a very short time. 2. Never commend thy own excellencies or works; but leave that to others who cannot be suspected of partiality. 3, 4. The anger, cruelty, and rage of foolish men are very intolerable, crushing, and hard to be appeased; but an envious desire of revenge is still more dangerous, as it lies hid, increases daily, and is more and more exasperated, till it find opportunity to vent itself in the intended mischief. 5. To tell men plainly of their faults, and rebuke them freely when need requires, is a more valuable piece of friendship than the strongest inward affection. 6. Just and seasonable reproofs, however severe, ought to be cheerfully received when they proceed from true love and faithful regard: but the most tender and abundant expressions of kindness from an enemy ought to be suspected as false and treacherous. 7. Rich men are apt to be unsatisfied with, or even to nauseate, the most delicious enjoyments: but poverty disposes men to a ready and thankful reception of the smallest blessings, though mixed with care and labour. 8. When men, by levity or discontent, change their country, trade, or office in which Providence had placed them, they ordinarily expose themselves to manifold dangers and inconveniences, but rarely mend their condition. 9. The kind conversation and prudent counsels of affectionate friends are extremely refreshing and comfortable. 10. Nay, such friends are more to be depended on in a time of distress than our nearest relations. 11. My son, improve these instructions to make thee truly wise and good; which will at once comfort my heart, and enable me to refute such as charge me with want of due care about my children. 12. Prudent men foresee the approach of calamities, and take proper methods to avoid them; but inconsiderate persons, deceived by others, securely rush forward till they are ruined. 13. Never trust, without a sufficient pledge, a man that is so foolish and rash as to be surety for persons whom he knows not, and even for harlots. 14. Extravagant and flattering commendations of a friend or benefactor are rather a disparagement than an honour, as it is a shame to have connection with such silly sycophants. 15. A contentious and brawling woman is a continued plague and a destructive ruin to her husband, family, and estate: 16. For it is quite impossible to conceal her infamous bawling humour, or to make her hold her tongue. 17. By mutual conversation friends quicken the wit, enliven the affection, strengthen the judgment, and animate the activity of one another. 18. Such servants as faithfully defend their master's person and reputation, and labour to preserve and promote his wealth, ought to be rewarded by him, and shall be honoured of God and men. 19. There is a surprising likeness in the tempers and dispositions of men, both among saints and sinners; and most are inclined to carry themselves towards others as they do towards them. And they who are remarkably sagacious can penetrate far into the inclinations and designs of others. 20. It is impossible to satisfy the corrupt desires of men: the more they are indulged the more they crave: and nothing but the fulness of God can satisfy the desires of an immortal soul. 21. Nothing more effectually tries a man than high commendations. If he be light, vain, frothy, and easily puffed up by them, it discovers his emptiness: but if under them he be humble, modest, and sensible of his own defects, it manifests him truly valuable. 22. Some are so hardened and stupified in their sinful courses, that no reproofs or corrections can make them a whit better. 23-27. Masters should look after the management of their worldly affairs themselves, and not leave all to servants; for without due care and diligence, the richest estates will soon come to nought: whereas by a proper care of the hay, grass, herbs, and flocks which Providence bestows, they may enjoy a most comfortable livelihood for themselves and families.

Ver. 26. Eastern women may be literally called hidden, whether in the tent in the desert, or the harem in the city. But the unsanctified contentious woman, who has not received of the Lord that ornament of a 'meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price,' 1 Pe. 3. 4, can no more have her folly hid than the wind can be restrained from blowing, or ointment on the hand from betraying its presence by its odour. C.

Ver. 29. The pestle and mortar were used for separating grain from the husk long subsequent to the introduction of mills; and in some European countries are still used for the formation of a substitute for what, in Britain, is called 'pearl-barley.' The image admirably illustrates the inseparability of folly from a fool. C.

CHAPTER XXVIII. Ver. 1. Guilt makes men cowards but conscious integrity makes men courageous, and proceed with undaunted resolution in the most hazardous undertakings. 2. To punish the wickedness of nations, God permits them to fall into factions or murder their sovereigns; but a prince of remarkable piety for thy food, for the food of thy household, and for the maintenance[4] for thy maidens.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

General observations of impiety and religious integrity.

THE wicked[a] flee when no man pursueth: but [b]the righteous are bold as a lion.

2 For[c] the transgression of a land many are the princes thereof: [d]but by[1] a man of understanding and knowledge the state thereof shall be prolonged.[2]

3 A[e] poor man that oppresseth the poor[3] is like a sweeping rain, which leaveth[4] no food.[5]

4 They[g] that forsake the law praise the wicked: but such as keep the law contend with them.

5 Evil[h] men understand not judgment: but they that seek the LORD understand all things.

6 Better[i] is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.

7 Whoso[j] keepeth the law is a wise son: [k]but he that is a companion of riotous men[6] shameth his father.

8 He[l] that by usury and unjust gain[7] increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.

9 He[m] that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, [n]even his prayer shall be abomination.

10 Whoso[o] causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way, he shall fall himself into his own pit: but [p]the upright shall have good things in possession.

11 The[r] rich man is wise in his own conceit:[8] but [s]the poor that hath understanding searcheth him out.

12 When[t] righteous men do rejoice, there is great glory: but when the wicked rise, a man is hidden.[9]

13 He[u] that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.

14 Happy[v] is the man that feareth [1]alway: [w]but he that hardeneth his heart shall fall into mischief.

15 As[x] a roaring lion, and a ranging bear; so is a wicked ruler over the poor people.

16 The[y] prince that wanteth understanding is also a great oppressor: [z]but he that hateth covetousness shall prolong his days.

17 A[a] man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit; let no man stay him.

18 Whoso[b] walketh uprightly[2] shall be saved: but he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once.

19 He[d] that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread: but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough.

20 A[e] faithful man shall abound with blessings: [g]but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be [3]innocent.[4]

21 To[h] have respect of persons is not [5]good: for, for a piece of bread that man will transgress.

22 He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye,[6] and[i] considereth not that poverty shall come upon him.

23 He[j] that rebuketh a man, afterwards shall find more favour than he that flattereth with the tongue.

24 Whoso [k]robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression; the same is the companion of a destroyer.[7]

25 He[l] that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife: [m]but he that putteth his trust in the LORD shall be made fat.

26 He[o] that trusteth in his own heart is a fool: [p]but whoso walketh wisely, he shall be[8] delivered.

and prudence is extremely useful for settling or preserving a state. 3. A needy man placed in power, and squeezing from the poor that little which they have, is a most ruinous scourge to a nation. 4. Apostates from the ways of God are the most forward in encouraging men in wickedness, and commending them for it: but they who resolutely observe God's law, do what they can to reform or punish them. 5. Unregenerate men have no solid or experimental knowledge of what is right or wrong: but they who study God's Word, and depend on his instructions, understand whatever is necessary to salvation. 6. A poor man, who acts honestly and uprightly in all he does, is far happier, and more useful and commendable, than a rich pretender to virtue, who obstinately and craftily practises vice. 7. He is an honour to his parents, as well as to himself, who studies the law of God, and observes the rules of piety and sobriety there prescribed: but he that associates himself with rakes, drunkards, and gluttons, and spends his time and money in sensual pleasures, is a shame and vexation to them. 8. God often translates the wealth, gotten by covetousness and oppression, from the gatherers into the hands of such as are merciful and benevolent. 9. The very prayers and other religious services of them who obstinately live in their sins are, in God's view, an abominable and hypocritical prostitution of his ordinances, since it appears as if they thus intended to make him a partner in their wickedness. 10. They who by their persuasion, example, or cunning contrivances seduce upright men into sinful and dangerous practices, shall themselves irrecoverably fall into that very mischief which they intended for others: but they who live in simplicity and godly sincerity shall enjoy the blessings of grace here and of glory hereafter. 11. Rich men, being courted and complimented by every one, are apt to imagine themselves extremely wise: but sensible and religious persons, however poor, quickly discern their emptiness and ignorance. 12. It is an honour and happiness for a nation when pious and prudent men are advanced to places of power and trust: but when the wicked are exalted, the persons, lives, and estates, especially of good men, are in danger, and they are obliged to conceal them. 13. He that conceals, extenuates, or defends his sins, exposes himself to severe punishments: but he who through faith in Christ confesses and forsakes them, shall be graciously blessed by God and honoured by men. 14. Happy is he who lives under the constant awe of God's perfections, and under a jealousy of his own evil heart and a fear to do evil: but he that obstinately and presumptuously goes on in his sinful courses shall irrecoverably and eternally perish. 15. How cruel and terrible a plague is a tyrannical ruler! His subjects, unable to resist, are harassed by oppression, and terrified with fears of still greater evils.—17. Murderers shall never be able to escape the judgment of God; but shall hurry themselves into sudden and irretrievable destruction, without any one to help or pity them. 18. Real godliness, strict honesty and integrity, are the sure road to safety, honour, and happiness: but fraudulent sinners, obstinate in their wickedness, shall quickly involve themselves in the depths of misery. 19, 20. They who believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and candour in their dealings, shall have abundant blessings from God and honours from men: but they who hasten to be rich, render themselves execrable by their base and fraudulent methods. 21. When judges have accustomed themselves to respect persons in judgment, the most insignificant bribe will make them disregard both law and equity, and favour an unrighteous cause. 22. He that hastens to be rich envies everybody who has more than himself, covets whatever he sees, and grudges to part with the most necessary expense or alms; and never seriously thinks how quickly God may take him from his wealth, or it become a curse to him, so that through his money he corrupts himself. 23. They who in an honest and friendly manner reprove a man for his faults, will afterwards have much more of his favour and regard than they who flatter him in his sins. 24. They who snatch all that they can from their parents are as bad as common robbers, and are in a fair way to associate themselves with such. 25. A man of a proud, insolent, and ambitious spirit involves himself in perpetual quarrels, and has no satisfaction in what he enjoys; nay, many times wastes his estate in contentions: but he who, trusting in the Lord to redress his grievances, patiently bears injuries, lives comfortably and happy. 26. Nothing is more foolish than to rely wholly on our own wisdom and ability, or to trust in our own heart, which is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: but he who walks according to the counsels of wise men, and the directions of God, shall escape, or be delivered out of, manifold dangers and troubles. 27. He who kindly and cheerfully relieves such as are in want shall 27 He[o] that giveth unto the poor shall not lack: but he that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse.

28 When[r] the wicked rise, men hide themselves: but when they perish, the righteous increase.

1 Observations of public government, 15 and of private. 22 Of anger, pride, thievery, cowardice, and corruption.

HE [a]that, being often reproved,[1] hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

2 When[b] the righteous are in authority,[2] the people rejoice: but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn.

3 Whoso[c] loveth wisdom rejoiceth his father: but[d] he that keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance.

4 The[e] king by judgment establisheth the land: but he that receiveth gifts[3] overthroweth it.

5 A[g] man that flattereth his neighbour spreadeth a net for his feet.

6 In[h] the transgression of an evil man there is a snare: [i]but the righteous doth sing and rejoice.[4]

7 The[j] righteous considereth the cause of the poor: but the wicked regardeth not to know it.

8 Scornful[k] men bring[5] a city into a snare:[6] but[l] wise men turn away wrath.

thereby increase his own estate: but he that avoids taking notice of their miseries draws upon himself the curse of God and of men. 28. When wicked men are increased in number, and advanced in authority, good men are obliged to hide themselves from their tyranny and persecution: but when God casts down the wicked, the righteous take courage, and openly show themselves; and their numbers are increased under pious and prudent governors.

Ver. 5. They that seek the Lord understand all things. They know more about all things, than worldly men know about any one thing, for they 'know that all things work together for good to them that love God.' C.

Ver. 7. Shameth his father. Shames him for neglecting his education—for not restraining him in time—or, notwithstanding all his care, breaks his heart by his incorrigible follies. C.

Ver. 11. It is the special duty of the rich to give their children a good education, both in secular and religious knowledge; for if the well-educated poor once discover any inferiority in the rich, contempt for their ignorance, and the disorganization of society, is sure to follow.—Note, A true religious education can alone teach the rich kindness and the poor gratitude. C.

CHAPTER XXIX. Ver. 2, 4. Where justice is impartially executed, and liberty and property secured, the nation grows great and happy; but bribery and oppressive taxes ruin a state. 5. Flatterers artfully draw men into wickedness and ruin. 6. In the wicked course of sinners, one sin draws on another and its attendant plagues; but the godly, by walking in Christ, obtain solid and lasting joy and comfort.—8. Obstinate sinners and scornful men, by laughing at all things serious, sacred, or civil, throw nations and cities into the most ruinous disorder; but pious and prudent rulers, by their prayers and piety, avert the deserved judgment of God, and by their wise conduct divert the fury of men. 9. It is to no purpose to spend reasonings or reproofs upon incorrigible fools; for in whatever manner they appear to take them, they will still persist in their folly and wickedness. 10. Blood-thirsty men direct their murderous malice especially against godly magistrates or other valuable persons; but such as are truly virtuous labour to defend and promote the welfare of such. 11. Fools inconsiderately speak out whatever comes into their head; but wise men think well before they speak, and only utter what they know and as the opportunity requires. 12. If a ruler hearken to lies, flatteries, or false accusations, his whole court will quickly become so wicked, that it will be hard to find an honest man in office. 13. Poor men who want estates, and rich men who get or increase their estates by fraud, are connected together in this world, and the Lord, without distinction, allows to both his light of nature, or revelation, and blessings of providence, as is good in his sight. 14. Kings who faithfully administer justice to their subjects, and set themselves to protect and help the poor, take the most proper course to gain their subjects' affection, and to continue their kingdom to many generations. 15. Careful instructions and reproofs, and prudent corrections, are of great use to render children wise, prudent, and pious: but children left to follow their own inclinations prove a disgrace and plague to parents, particularly to their indulgent mothers. 16. When wicked men are increased in number and advanced in dignity, presumptuous wickedness abounds more and more: but the righteous ought not to be discouraged, as they shall quickly see their downfall. 17. Children carefully brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, bid fair to be a help and comfort to their parents. 18. Where men want the oracles of God and ordinances of the gospel, they cannot but live wickedly on earth and be miserable in eternity: but great is the present and future happiness of such as, renewed by his grace, strictly observe his laws. 19. No persuasion, reproofs, or threatenings will avail with some refractory and slavish-minded servants; nothing but blows will make them regard what is said or attend to their duty. 20. It is more easy to instruct and reform the most weak and ignorant, than to rectify what is amiss in a rash, heady, and self-conceited manager of his affairs. 21. If servants, who continue long in a family, be too much indulged or favoured, they are apt to behave with as much boldness and freedom as if they were children; or even to domineer over them, and labour to disinherit them. 22. Passionate persons are apt to quarrel and contend about trifles, and to fall into a multitude of sins, in word or deed, both against God and men. 23. Proud, saucy, and ambitious behaviour renders men contemned, hated, and miserable; but meekness and humility procure useful and lasting honours. 24. Partnership with thieves or fraudulent persons, endangers both soul and body, and is apt to involve men in perjury. 25. An immoderate fear of men ensnares us into much guilt and mischief: but he that puts his whole confidence in God shall be preserved from them. 26. Multitudes court the favour of princes and other great men: but it is God alone who determines the lots of men here and hereafter. 27. There is a stated antipathy between the righteous and wicked; their natures, tempers, counsels, and ends being the very reverse of each other.

Ver. 1. Hardeneth himself by seeking excuses or palliations for his sin; or even false interpretations and doctrines to defend his evil courses. He 'shall fall without remedy,' as the carcasses of the unbelievers fell in the wilderness, to whom God sware in his wrath, they should not enter into his rest, He. 3. 11. C.

Ver. 4. He that receiveth gifts. According to the margin, 'a man of oblations.' The true meaning seems to be: a king who supports justice and equity in the fear of God, establishes his kingdom; but he who substitutes for these 'weightier matters of the law,' mere 'legal oblations,' ceremonial observances, overthrows it. This was literally exemplified and fulfilled by the rulers of the Jews in the days of our Lord. See Mat. 23. 23, 38. C.

Ver. 12. The ruler that 'hearkens to lies,' is either he that will bear nothing but flattery, or he that will credulously receive false accusations, and will indulgently neglect to judge for himself. All his servants will soon be wicked: for godly men will fly from him; and wicked men will gather around him, as vultures to the carcass of the dead. C.

Ver. 13. The deceitful man, who overreached him, oppressed him, and made him poor.—The Lord lighteneth both their eyes. The enriched to see, if he would, better riches than he has gained; the poor, to seek better than he has lost. C.

Ver. 19. Even 'a servant' will not be corrected by (mere hasty) words, see ver. 20: example, authority, and religious principle must all be brought to bear upon him. C.

Ver. 24. That the Jewish judges adjured the accused is evident from the case of our Lord, Mat. 26. 62–64. The verse accordingly means, that the 'partner' (the accomplice) of the thief hears such an adjuration; yet, bound by a false and diabolical principle, misnamed honour, 'bewrayeth not the matter,' and is thereby guilty of perjury, to the ruin of his soul. C.

1 Agur's confession of his faith. 7 The two points of his prayer. 10 The meanest are not to be wronged. 11 Four wicked generations. 15 Four things insatiable. 17 Parents are not to be despised. 18 Four things hard to be known. 21 Four things intolerable. 24 Four things exceeding wise. 29 Four things stately. 32 Silence in case of error the way to prevent wrath.

THE words of Agur the son of Jakeh, even the[a] prophecy: the man spake unto Ithiel, even unto Ithiel and Ucal,[1]

2 Surely[b] I am more brutish than any man, and have not the understanding of a man.

3 I[c] neither learned wisdom, nor have the knowledge[2] of the holy.

4 Who[d] hath ascended up into heaven, or descended? [e]who hath gathered the wind in his fists? who hath bound the waters in a garment? who hath established all the ends of the earth? what[g] is his name, and what is his son's name, if thou canst tell?[3]

5 ¶ Every[h] word of God is [4]pure: [i]he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him.

6 Add[j] thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar.

7 ¶ Two things have I required of thee;[5] deny me them not[6] before I die:

8 Remove[k] far from me vanity and lies; give me neither poverty nor riches; [l]feed me with food [7]convenient for me:[8]

9 Lest[n] I be full, and deny thee,[9] and say, Who is the LORD? [o]or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain.

10 Accuse[p] not[1] a servant unto his master, lest he curse thee, and thou be found guilty.[2]

11 ¶ There is a generation that [q]curseth their father, and doth not bless their mother.

12 There is a generation that are [r]pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness.

13 There is a generation, O how [s]lofty are their eyes! and their eyelids are lifted up.

14 There is a generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw-teeth as knives, to [t]devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men.[3]

15 ¶ The horse-leech hath two [u]daughters, crying, Give, give. There are three things that are never satisfied, yea, four things say not, It is enough:[5]

16 The[v] grave; and the barren womb; the earth that is not filled with water; and the fire that saith not, It is enough.

17 ¶ The[w] eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley[6] shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it.

18 ¶ There be three things which are too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not:

19 The[x] way of an eagle in the air; [y]the way of a serpent upon a rock; the way of a ship in the midst[7] of the sea; and [z]the way of a man with a maid.

20 Such[a] is the way of an adulterous woman; she eateth, and wipeth her mouth, and saith, I have done no wickedness.

21 For three things the earth is disquieted, and for four which it cannot bear:

22 For[b] a servant when he reigneth; and a fool when he is filled with meat;

23 For[c] an odious woman when she is married; and an handmaid [d]that is heir to her mistress.

24 ¶ There be four things which are [1]little upon the earth, but they are exceeding wise:[8]

25 The[e] ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in the summer;

26 The[h] conies are but a feeble folk, yet make they their houses in the rocks;

27 The[i] locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands;[9]

28 The[j] spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces.

29 ¶ There be three things which go well, yea, four are comely in going:

30 A lion,[1] which is strongest among beasts, and turneth not away for any;

31 A greyhound;[2] and an he-goat also; and a king, [k]against whom there is no rising up.

32 If[l] thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thyself, or if thou hast thought evil, [m]lay thine hand upon thy mouth.

33 Surely the churning of milk bringeth forth

* Of Agur, Jakeh, Ithiel, and Ucal, nothing is historically known, and conjecture is useless. Nor is it generally so important to know what a man was, as to know his sentiments—his principles of action. Agur signifies stranger or gathered; Jakeh, ready obedience; Ithiel, God with me; Ucal, power. —C. The fourth great division of the book begins with this chapter. It is different from all the others. Its author is different, and its style and subject are different. In the words of Agur we have, as Dwight says, a succession of beautiful little pictures illustrating great moral truths. The style is not so dignified, nor is the language so pure and archaic in character, as the early portions of the book. —F.

courses, braving all dangers—then deceitfully 'reposing on her shadow' in port, as if she had never felt the wind or been tossed upon a wave.—The man secretly desiring, and, undeterred by coldness or repulse, ardently wooing and winning the maid of his choice; and in the exercise of chastened and holy affections, not only conscious of no guilt, but fully assured of a blessing: these four are the emblems of the adulteress. As the eagle she on her prey descends; as the serpent she glides and poisons her victim; as the ship in the storm she is tossed by passions, yet seems ever in the calm of smiles and blandishments; and with all the ardour of youthful devotedness seeking the object of its hallowed affections will she pursue her guilty courses, and, by aid of a hardened conscience (her substitute for innocence), will she 'feast, and wipe not mouth, and say, I have done no wickedness.'—And woe to the lamb when the eagle soars! and woe to the callow bird when the serpent glides! and woe to the sailor-boy who trusts the calm and never foresees the storm! and woe to the man who yields his peace and salvation to the persevering lures, the deceitful smiles, and the hardened conscience of an adulteress! REFLECTIONS.—Let me thus always think meanly of myself, and highly of my God and Saviour, and of his works and Word: and be a good savour of Christ to all around me. Earnestly should I covet further degrees of holiness, but be regardless as to the comforts and enjoyments of this life, and content with such things as I have. Let me never be a busybody in other men's matters, but heedfully watch against the temptations incident to my own condition. Let me never be an idle spectator of what is around me: but whatever evil I observe, let me avoid, hate, and mourn over it; and whatever good I observe, even in animals, let me, in a Christian manner, imitate the same. If I have proudly involved myself in sin, humbly should I repent of it, and always avoid contention before it be meddled with. Nothing is to be got by pride, passion, or ill language but bloodshed and damage.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 Lemuel's lesson of chastity and temperance. 6 The afflicted are to be comforted and defended. 10 The praise and properties of a good wife.

THE words of king Lemuel, the prophecy[1] that his [a]mother taught him.[2]

2 What,[b] my son? and what, the son of my womb? and what, the son of my vows?

3 Give[c] not thy strength unto women, nor thy ways to that which destroyeth kings.

4 It[d] is not for kings, O Lemuel,[3] it is not for kings to drink wine, nor for princes strong drink;

5 Lest[e] they drink, and forget the law, and pervert[4] the judgment of any of the afflicted.[5]

6 ¶ Give[g] strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy hearts.[6]

7 Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more.[7]

8 Open[h] thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all such as are appointed to destruction.[8]

9 Open thy mouth, [i]judge righteously, and plead the cause of the poor and needy.

10 ¶ Who[j] can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.[9]

11 The[k] heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil.[1]

12 She[l] will do him good, and not evil, all the days of her life.

13 She[m] seeketh wool and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands.

14 She[o] is like the merchants' ships, she bringeth her food from afar.

15 She[p] riseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens.[2]

16 She[q] considereth a field, and buyeth [5]it: with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

17 She[r] girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms.

18 She perceiveth[4] that her merchandise is good: [t]her candle goeth not out by night.

19 She[t] layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

20 She[u] stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth[5] forth her hands to the needy.

21 She is not afraid of the snow for her household; for all her household are clothed with scarlet.[6]

22 She[v] maketh herself coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple.

23 Her husband is known [w]in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

24 She[y] maketh fine linen, and selleth it; and delivereth girdles unto the merchant.

25 Strength[z] and honour are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come.

26 She[a] openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

27 She[b] looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.[7]

28 Her[c] children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.

29 Many daughters have done [8]virtuously, but thou excellest them all.

30 Favour[d] is deceitful, and beauty is vain: but [e]a woman that feareth the LORD, she shall be praised.

31 Give[g] her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates.

CHAPTER XXXI. Ver. 1. Of Lemuel nothing more is known than what is here recorded: and where there is nothing certain, conjecture is of no service. The word signifies 'God with them;' and if rulers did but know and always feel by whom, and for whom, and to whom they reign, it would ever be the best description of that high office to which 'the powers that be are ordained of God.' C.

Ver. 22. Silk. Rather, linen. It is doubtful if silk was known in Western Asia till long after the time of Christ. C.

Ver. 26. This passage is a beautiful description of a good wife, given of the Lord, but its real excellency lies in being an emblem of the church, opening 'her mouth with wisdom,' and knowing nothing by her ministers but 'Jesus Christ and him crucified.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—What blessings might mothers be to families, churches, and nations, would they but carefully educate their children! And it is unnatural and irreligious when they do otherwise. When princes are given to whoredom and drunkenness, and regardless of the poor or of the exact administration of justice, they are but a plague to the nation which they govern. With great care and circumspection ought all, especially such as bear rule in church or state, to make choice of their yokefellows in marriage. And it is a great blessing to themselves, and all their connections, if Providence direct them aright. But it is absurd and ruinous when wealth, beauty, or parentage are preferred to real virtue and religion, in the choice of wives or husbands. What a scandal to human nature is it when wives become the plague, the reproach of families! or when such as are virtuous and prudent are abused by husbands, unfaithful, drunken, imperious, cruel, outrageous, or churlish!—But infinite is the mercy that God, by his grace, has formed all who accept Christ into a living church, which, as the spouse of his Son, are made to answer this amiable and glorious description.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

Solomon, we are told (1 Ki. 4. 32), composed no less than three thousand proverbs. As we count them, in modern verses, this collection does not contain so many. The conclusion therefore is, that many have been allowed to pass into oblivion, and that we possess but a part. If it be so, this is in no way to be wondered at in the case of Solomon, since we are told (John 20. 30) that, even in the case of 'a greater than Solomon,' 'many other miracles' are stated to have been wrought, which were not specifically recorded by the evangelist. Next to the book of Psalms, the Proverbs of Solomon are most frequently quoted in the New Testament; and that, be it well observed, not merely as a treasury of moral precepts, but as a direct revelation of JESUS as the wisdom of God and the power of God.

If considered merely as a collection of moral precepts for the regulation of fathers, mothers, children, and servants in families—or of kings, magistrates, and subjects in states—it contains more true practical wisdom than all the philosophers of Greece Rome, and more modern times, have ever been able to produce. Nor can there be any question that the ancient and most distinguished philosophers of Greece borrowed the principles of their moral doctrines from these proverbs; and have, in two respects, surpassed the modern deistical moralists; first, in the superiority of their moral code; and, secondly, in the honesty wherewith they acknowledged the source from which they were borrowed.

The book of Proverbs seems naturally divisible into five parts:—1. The first nine chapters containing various instructions and excitements to the study of the true wisdom—the knowledge of JESUS CHRIST, 'the wisdom of God, and the power of God.' 2. From x.–xxii. 16, which contains what is properly called the Proverbs. 3. From xxii. 17—xxv. inclusive, containing paternal instructions, speaking as unto children. 4. Extends from xxv.–xxix. inclusive, consisting of detached moral precepts, and is distinguished by having been 'copied out' by 'the men of Hezekiah.' 5. Includes xxx. xxxi.; the former containing the prayer and instructions of Agur to Ithiel and Ucal: the other addressed to Lemuel by his mother.

The whole, if considered as a mere literary and philosophical monument of the Hebrews, in the days of their prosperity, would place them as far above 'Greek and Roman glory,' as the sun, in his brightness, is above a flickering and 'sickly taper;' while, independent of all external evidences, the height, the depth, and immaculate purity of their morals, present an internal illustration of their divine origin, which no candid mind can possibly resist.—C.

THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

To warn others, Solomon here (1) Represents the vanity and vexation which adhere to all created enjoyments; particularly to those in which men ordinarily look for happiness; as human learning and policy, sensual delights, honour, power, and riches, or an empty profession of religion, ch. i.–vi. (2) Prescribes remedies against that vanity and vexation which attend those things; viz. sitting loose to them; enjoying them moderately, but never expecting much from them; acquiescing in the will of God concerning us in every event; remembering God in the days of our youth; and continuing all our life in his fear and service, with an eye to the future judgment, ch. vii.–xii. But in both parts the demonstrations of the vanity of things, and the prescriptions of remedies, are somewhat mixed.

[This book has been frequently represented as 'Solomon's penitential discourse, composed a little before his death; in which he recants and laments' his follies and departures from God. From whom, or at what time, this opinion originated in the Christian church, we are unable to say: nor is it of any importance to ascertain its origin. To say the least of it, it is altogether unsupported by any scriptural authority.' It is also unsupported by any traditional Jewish authority. For the Talmudical writers ascribe the book, not to Solomon, but to Hezekiah; Kimchi, to the prophet Isaiah; while Grotius considers it to have been composed by order of Zerubbabel. Jahn refers it to a period posterior to the Babylonish captivity, and Zirkel to the times of Antiochus Epiphanes; and Jerome informs us, that, on account of some imaginary contradictions, the Jews, after the captivity, were averse to receiving it into the canon of Scripture, till more mature consideration convinced them of their error. That Solomon was the author, is apparent from internal evidence; especially from ch. 1. 12, 16; 2. 4, 6; 12. 9, 10. Of the Christian reader we ask specially that, when entering upon the study of it, he would lay aside all preconceived and unauthorized opinions about the date and object of the book, and come to examine it in a prayerful and teachable spirit. And this matter is more peculiarly necessary than may at first sight appear: for as he that views a landscape through a coloured glass, sees every object tinged with some colour that belongs not to the object, but to the glass; so he that commences the study of this book, under the impression that it is a record of Solomon's personal experience, retractation, and penitence—nay more, a kind of death-bed renunciation of the follies by which his wisdom had been stained—comes with a principle of interpretation that he brings to no other book; that is, an unauthorized determination about what the writer must intend, and not a simple inquiry into the meaning of what he actually says.

In humbly entering upon the interpretation of this book, we therefore cast away every opinion, however current and however supported, about the date and object of this book; and, by the grace of God, seek to ascertain the mind of the Spirit as revealed in its contents. C.]

CHAPTER I.

1 The Preacher showeth that all human courses are vain: 4 because the creatures are restless in their courses, 9 they bring forth nothing new, and all old things are forgotten, 12 and because he hath found it to be so in the studies of wisdom.

THE words of [a]the Preacher,[1] the son of David, king of Jerusalem.

2 Vanity[b] of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities; all is vanity.[2]

3 What[c] profit hath a man of all his labour which he taketh under the sun?

4 ¶ One[d] generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: [e]but the earth abideth for ever.

5 The[f] sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and hasteth[3] to his place where he arose.

6 The[h] wind goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north; it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his circuits.

7 All[i] the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full: unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again.[4]

8 All[l] things are full of labour; man cannot utter it: [k]the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.[5]

2 The first two chapters of this book bear the aspect of a personal confession, the record of the writer's experience. The great burden of it is vanity—the vanity of everything earthly. He searches after happiness, but his search is vain. He searches after wisdom, but he only finds sorrow: for the utmost limit of human wisdom is the grave. The conclusion he arrives at is, that man ought to be contented, so far as this life is concerned, with the calm, prudent, and rational enjoyment of such things as are placed within his reach.—P.

6 Hengstenberg translates: 'No remembrance have they of old; nor shall they who are to come have any remembrance of those that shall come after.' A fond dream of this world, he remarks, is to possess the immortality of renown. Even this barren consolation is here taken away, and so a conclusion is made to the development of the thought contained in ver. 3, that man has no profit of all the labour which he taketh under the sun.—P.

14 I[r] have seen all the works that are done under the sun; and, behold, all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

15 That[s] which is crooked cannot be made straight; and that which is wanting[8] cannot be numbered.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 2. Vanity—a vapour, emptiness, an object destitute of real good, a statement destitute of truth—an idol, because destitute of that life and power which its ignorant worshippers ascribe to it. C.

Ver. 4. For ever. This earth abideth through 'all generations,' and 'we, according to God's promise, look for new heavens and a new earth,' 2 Pe. 3. 13, so that the earth literally 'abideth for ever.' C.

Ver. 9. There is no new thing under the sun. There is nothing new in nature, in moral principles, in sciences, or in arts. New discoveries are but the adoption of principles already in full operation in nature, or the revival of things forgotten. New combinations and applications, however, of old principles there may be, and this is the utmost novelty that human ingenuity may claim. C.

Ver. 13. I gave my heart to seek, &c. Not by vain philosophy, falsely called wisdom; but by that which begins in the 'fear of the Lord,' and embraces all that is revealed of the 'manifold wisdom of God' in Jesus Christ, Ps. 111. 10: Ep. 3. 10. C.

Ver. 15. A world where everything crooked, inconvenient, annoying, adverse, could be made straight—and where everything wanting in wishes, desires, accomplishments, possessions, could be obtained—would not be suited to the present fallen state of man. God has therefore in mercy, while he inflicted the curse, suited this 'sore travail' as a check to the natural and a discipline to the renewed man. C.

Ver. 17. Madness—sometimes applied to great and unreasonable anger: more frequently to persons who understand and can discourse well upon all subjects but one. And such ever is the mere intellectual and moral man, wise upon all subjects but one, the knowledge of God in Christ, 1 Co. 1. 18–24; 2 Co. 5. 19, 20. C.

Ver. 18. The reason of this is that human wisdom can only demonstrate the vanity of all earthly things. It proves that pleasure is short-lived, that fame soon passes away, that wealth cannot prolong life, that no source of human enjoyment is or can be lasting. The more man knows of these things—the more he reflects upon them, if he have no higher source of happiness, the more miserable must he become. P.

REFLECTIONS.—How feelingly a true penitent, from his own experience, preaches that vanity and vexation which attend created enjoyments! All things indeed in nature concur to manifest this humbling truth, though it is very hard to convince most men of it: for, notwithstanding the perpetual flux, returns, and oblivion with which created things are marked, we are too apt to be resting in them. Neither our own observation nor experience, nor the dictates of the Spirit of ing, Lo, I am come to great estate, and have gotten [u]more wisdom than all they that have been before me in Jerusalem; yea, my heart had great[v] experience[g] of wisdom and knowledge.

17 And[x] I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly: I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit.

18 For[y] in much wisdom is much grief; and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow.

CHAPTER [h] II.

1 The vanity of human courses in the pursuits of pleasure. 12 Though the wise be better than the fool, yet both have one event. 18 The vanity of human labour, in leaving it they know not to whom. 24 Nothing better than joy in our labour; but that is God's gift to the good only.

I SAID[a] in mine heart, Go to now, [b]I will prove thee with mirth; therefore enjoy pleasure: and, behold, this also is vanity.

2 I[c] said of laughter, It is mad; and of mirth, What doeth it?

3 I[d] sought in mine heart [1]to give myself unto wine,[2] (yet [e]acquainting mine heart with wisdom,) and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven all the days of their [3]life.[4]

4 I[g] made me great works; I [h]builded me houses; [i]I planted me vineyards:

5 I[k] made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits:

6 I[l] made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

7 I[m] got me servants and maidens, and had servants[5] born in my house; [n]also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

8 I[o] gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: [p]I gat me men-singers and women-singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as musical instruments,[6] and that of all sorts.

9 So[q] I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 And[r] whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them; I withheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labour; and this was my portion of all my labour.

11 Then[s] I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do; and, behold, [t]all was vanity and vexation of spirit, and [u]there was no profit under the sun.

* This is no Epicurean assertion, insinuation, or objection, as some imagine. There is literally nothing better for a man than thus to eat, drink, and enjoy. (1) There is nothing better for his health and strength of body. (2) There is nothing better for his soul: for if he 'enjoy good' in his eating and drinking, both have been 'sanctified by the word and prayer,' 1 Ti. 4. 5; and both he has used to the 'glory of God,' doing 'all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ,' 1 Co. 10. 31. But are not immortality and glory better? Ro.2.7. Yes, yes, undoubtedly; but immortality

12 ¶ And [z]I turned myself to behold wisdom, and madness, and [7]folly:[8] for [a]what can the man do that cometh after the king? even that which hath been already done.[9]

13 Then I saw [b]that wisdom[1] excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness.

14 The[c] wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also [d]that one event[2] happeneth to them all.

15 Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it happeneth even to me;[3] and [e]why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity.[4]

16 For[f] there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is, in the days to come shall all be forgotten: and [g]how dieth the wise man? as the fool.

17 Therefore[h] I hated life; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: [i]for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

18 ¶ Yea, I hated [k]all my labour which I had taken[5] under the sun; because [l]I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me:

19 And who knoweth [m]whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have showed myself wise under the sun. This is also [n]vanity.

20 Therefore I went about [o]to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.[6]

21 For[p] there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he leave[7] it for his portion. This also is vanity, and a great evil.

22 For[q] what hath man of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the sun?

23 For[r] all his days are sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.

24 ¶ There[s] is nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink, and that he should make his soul[8] enjoy good in his [9]labour. This also I saw, that [t]it was from the hand of God.

25 For[u] who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

26 For[x] God giveth to a man that is good in his sight[1] wisdom, and knowledge, and joy:

God, are credited by us. Take heed, my soul, never more to esteem or desire them as God; never more depend on or delight in them as thy God. If, by all my labours for human knowledge, I can neither satisfy my mind, rectify my nature or lot, nor amend the world, let me study to know Christ and him crucified; thus shall I be changed into the same image from glory to glory. And let this knowledge, which is eternal life, be the chief object of my pursuit.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. Enjoy pleasure. Not sinful pleasure, for then could not wisdom remain, see ver. 9; but the legitimate pleasures derived from useful labour, permanent improvements, and the social intercourse of well-ordered society. C.

Ver. 3. To lay hold on folly. That childish pursuit of toys and amusements, to the rejection of more important objects and pursuits—and which must be seized and examined 'as it flies,' because ever changing in object and fashion. C.

Ver. 8. The last clause some are disposed to translate 'wives and concubines,' a sense to which the words may be strained; but which the wisdom claimed in this inquiry, ver. 9, could by no means tolerate. C.

Ver. 11. How is the joy of ver. 10 to be reconciled with the vexation of ver. 11? Simply thus: all this joy, so far as derived from all his labour, was, when examined by the light of wisdom, nothing but vanity, because it had no real profit; and nothing but vexation, because inseparably mingled with disappointments. C.

Ver. 17. Therefore I hated life. But not with the hatred of a selfish misanthrope or exhausted sensualist, for where then had been wisdom? ver. 9; but with the hatred of a well-instructed and experienced believer, according to the word of our Lord, Lu. 14. 26; Jn. 12. 25. C.

Ver. 23. And a merciful dispensation it is, though arising out of the curse; for the heart, when it findeth 'no rest in the night,' is thereby instructed to draw near to Jesus, who alone can give it rest, Mat. 11. 28. C.

Ver. 25. The best Hebrew MSS. concur with the evident sense of the passage, in reading for 'more than I'—'without him,' that is, without God's gift. C.

A GLIMPSE OF SOLOMON'S POOLS. [ECCLESIASTES, ii : 6.]—"I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees." There are three of these pools, and above them is a large building which we see in the picture, a sort of half castle and half tavern, which is said to be of Saracenic origin. To the west of this there is a spring, which, in connection with three others, supplies the pools with water. These pools are partly excavated in the rocky bed of the valley, and partly built of large stones. They are so arranged that the bottom of each pool is higher than the top of the one next below it. In this way it is possible to fill every pool with water. According to Josephus, there was a city near Bethlehem which had gardens and rivulets of water, to which Solomon was in the habit of taking a morning drive. These pools are about three miles southwest of Bethlehem.

but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather, and to heap up, that [h]he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

CHAPTER III.

1 By the necessary change of times, vanity is added to human travail. 11 There is an excellency in God's works. 16 But in for man, God shall judge his works there, and here he shall be like a beast.

TO every[a] thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven:[1]

2 A[b] time to be born,[2] and a time to die: a[c] time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted:

3 A[d] time to kill, and a time to heal: [e]a time to break down, and a time to build up:

4 A[g] time to weep, and a time to laugh: a time to mourn, and a time to dance:

5 A[h] time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together;[3] a [i]time to embrace, and a time to refrain[4] from embracing:

6 A time to get,[5] and a time to lose: a time to keep, and [k]a time to cast away:

7 A [l]time to rend,[6] and a time to sew: [l]a time to keep silence, and a time to speak:

8 A[n] time to love, and a time to hate: a time of war, and a time of peace.

9 What[o] profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth?

10 I[p] have seen the travail, which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it.[7]

11 ¶ He[q] hath made every thing beautiful in his time: [r]also he hath set the world[8] in their heart, so that [s]no man can find out the work that God maketh from the beginning to the end.

12 ¶ I[t] know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and [u]to do good in his life.

13 And[v] also that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.[9]

REFLECTIONS.—Numerous are the contrivances of men to find that in creatures which they should seek, and can only find, in God himself. But how vain and vexing are their diversified, their unnumbered, their utmost attempts! Till our souls return to God in Christ, as our ALL and IN ALL, they will be always like birds wandering from their nests. Thrice happy are they to whom God gives grace to take all things from him; to enjoy him in all things, and all things in him; and to use all things for his glory, and as means of attaching their heart to him and his ways.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1–11. However disjointed, useless, and afflictive the events of Providence may appear to us, God has connected them together in the most amazing beauty and harmony, and orders the season of each as tends most to advance his glory and the good of the people. And whatever worldly wisdom men may have, they will never be capable of comprehending the astonishing extent of the mysteries which God exhibits to their view in his works of creation and providence. 12, 13. It is therefore best in itself, and a benefit from God, to use worldly enjoyments moderately, and to improve them for the advantage of others. 14. God, in his wisdom and providence, seeks to train and discipline men in righteousness, and therefore we ought not to quarrel with but kindly submit to his pleasure. 15. In every age God, by new returns of things, governs the world with great uniformity of appearances. 16, 17. The very power which he has bestowed upon men as a remedy for grievances, is often used to oppress and injure the innocent; and therefore there must be a future general judgment by God himself, in which all things shall be rectified, by clearing the innocent, rewarding the righteous, and condemning the wicked. 18–21. Affected with these views, I wished that God would make men, particularly those who haughtily oppress others, to consider how mean and brutish they are, and to ponder the nature of that immortal soul which chiefly distinguishes them from beasts, whose life entirely vanishes in death.

Ver. 1. 'A time for every purpose,' unfavourable as well as favourable to the man that thinks to get profit of his labour; that is, solid, abiding satisfaction, which he can call, and keep as his own: the one stands at all times over against the other, Ec. 7. 14. C.

Ver. 2. A time to plant, &c. Among the horrors of war is the destruction of woods. A great man who had been at much pains to ornament a wild mountain district with buildings and trees, exclaimed when all had been destroyed, 'I care nothing for the house—I can soon raise a new one; but the trees! the trees! when will they be grown again?'—Note, How grateful should a people be when a land continues to enjoy peace and advance in improvement! This also is of God. C.

Ver. 8. A time to hate. Not a time permitted to hate, but which the carnal mind so perverts, Tit. 3. 3. C.

Ver. 11. More correctly, 'He hath also set eternity in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God doeth from the beginning to the end.' Luther remarks on this passage: 'Man cannot hit upon the work which God does; that is, no man can know beforehand the hour which is ordained above; and however much he may plague himself, he can never know when it will begin or come to an end. It behoves us therefore to say, O Lord, to thee belongs the supreme direction, in thy hand it rests entirely to order and settle everything in the future; under thy control is my life and my death; so long as I need my life, so long thou givest it. And inasmuch as in respect of them no care or thought is of any use, I will not then in regard to other gifts, using them as they come; care and anxiety I will cast to the winds, and commit all to thee.' F.——Everything beautiful. Among the innumerable evidences of the being and goodness of God, is the beauty which he has so widely diffused. The heavens, the earth, the plants, the birds, the beasts, the insects, the fishes; the eye of affection, and the smile of friendship—all are beautiful—so suited not merely for being, but for well-being, that it is impossible for any but the fool, Ps. 14. 1, to observe them, and remain insensible to the perfections of the Maker of all. C.

Ver. 17. God shall judge the righteous and the wicked. From the present unequal distribution of good and evil, some philosophers have attempted to deduce the doctrine of a future judgment; while others have replied, that if the distribution have continued unequal through so many thousand years, there is therefore the more reason to conclude it will so continue for ever. In the face of this incapacity on the one hand, and sophistry on the other, revelation shows it to be not a questionable inequality of good and evil, but the long-suffering of God with sinners; and establishes the doctrine of future judgment upon his word of truth, and attributes of wisdom and justice. C.

Ver. 22. Rejoice in his own works. True joy in a man's own works lies (1) In the humble acknowledgment that he is 'an unprofitable servant,' Lu. 17. 10, for joy ariseth not from a proud assertion of merit. (2) In discovering that while his own works produce no righteousness, a believer is 'justified without the deeds of the law,' Ro. 3. 28. (3) In finding that, in all he has wrought, not he but grace has been the real worker, 1 Co. 15. 10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—We live in a world of changes; but all things outside man's will are governed by God's will. It is absurd then to choose it for our portion, or to take up our rest in it. Readily should we believe, that whatever God has given us is best for us, accommodate ourselves to it, and wait with patience for the full unravelling of what seems intricate and perplexed. Yea, to be entirely satisfied with God's providential disposals is highly necessary, as they neither can [illegible] their oppressors there was power, but they had no comforter.

2 Wherefore[a] I praised the dead which are already dead more than the living which are yet alive.

3 Yea,[c] better is he than both they which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun.[2]

4 ¶ Again, [d]I considered all travail, and every right [3]work, [e]that for this a man is envied of[4] his neighbour. This is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

5 ¶ The[g] fool foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh.

6 ¶ Better[h] is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit.

7 ¶ Then I returned, and I saw vanity under the sun.

8 There is one alone, and there is not a second; yea, he hath neither child nor brother: yet[i] is there no end of all his labour; neither is his eye satisfied with riches; neither saith he, For[j] whom do I labour, and bereave my soul of good?[5] This is also vanity, yea, it is a sore travail.

9 ¶ Two[k] are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour.

10 For[l] if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up.

11 Again, [m]if two lie together, then they have heat: but how can one be warm alone?

12 And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him; and [o]a threefold cord is not quickly broken.

13 ¶ Better[p] is a poor and a wise child than an old and foolish king, who[6] will no more be admonished.[7]

CHAPTER V.

1 Cautions against abuse in divine service, 8 against murmuring at oppression. 9 The vanity of riches. 18 Joy in riches is the gift of God.

KEEP thy[a] foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear [b]than to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil.

2 Be[c] not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing[1] before God: for God is in heaven,[2] and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words [d]be few.

3 For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and [e]a fool's voice is known by multitude of words.[3]

4 When[g] thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; [h]for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed.[4]

5 Better[i] is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.

6 Suffer[j] not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; neither say thou before [k]the angel,[5] that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and [l]destroy the work of thine hands?

7 For[n] in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities:[6] but[o] fear thou God.

8 ¶ If[p] thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not at the [7]matter: [q]for he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and [r]there be higher than they.

9 ¶ Moreover,[s] the profit of the earth is for all: the king himself is served by the field.

10 He[t] that loveth silver shall not be satis-

be altered. And let us study to answer his end in his providences, which is to make us truly religious. Amidst all the changes which we either feel or fear, let us believe and acknowledge the inviolable steadiness of his government. Let us constantly live in the faith of his future judgment of the world, that no oppression may sink our spirits, and no power nor honour render us proud, mischievous, or impious. Let us always maintain a deep sense of our own meanness, stupidity, and unruliness before God; and study to use whatever God gives us for our own comfort, and for the real benefit of others.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. From viewing the various works and judgment-seats of men, and the common graves of all living things, 'I returned' to examine the oppressions produced in these works, and legalized by the imperfect administration of human justice; and I found the oppressed and the oppressor alike comfortless.—Note. The books of Judges, of Kings, and of the Prophets abundantly testify, that when a people are oppressed, it is by God's judgments upon their sins: while the examples of Pharaoh, Jeroboam, Belshazzar, and others, equally testify that the oppressor is judicially given over to his own ways, that he, in his turn, may become a warning to others in power. C.

Ver. 9. Almost all great works have been accomplished by two united spirits. Moses and Aaron, Joshua and Caleb, David and Jonathan, Elijah and Elisha, are striking examples in the Old Testament; and our Saviour is recorded in the New Testament to have sent his disciples 'two and two,' with his divine message of salvation. C.

Ver. 16. 'There is no end to all the people, to all by whom he is made a leader: but they that come after shall not rejoice in him.' That is, the popularity even of the son, not of an old and foolish, but of a young and wise king, may soon pass away: such is the instability of human opinion, and the vanity of human praise. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Into what a hell hath sin turned our earth! Men are often proud of transforming themselves into devils for tormenting their brethren. Often, through want of help and comfort, a man's life is made worse than death or non-existence. And desperately wicked are men when even right and useful works do but rouse their envy. But great is the mercy that God, with whom every right work is accepted, will be our final Judge. Let me then be diligent in business, and work the work of God while it is called to-day. Sloth of any kind tends to make men poor and miserable. But unhappy are they who are selfish and covetous; and who, without any temptation, deny themselves the comforts of life, and make themselves slaves to business. It is absurd to covet all to themselves, when friendship and social connections are much more calculated to their help, comfort, and improvement. Kings are often but a plague to themselves and their restless people; and tottering honours are rather burdens than advantages.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1. Keep thy foot. An allusion to uncovering the feet in the sanctuary of God's presence, Ex. 3. 5. The emblem of putting off earthly thoughts and defilements, as it is written, 'Having these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all pollution of the flesh and of the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.' C.

Ver. 6. Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin. Let no rash vow of your lips become the occasion of tempting you to any of the works of the flesh, such as covetous regrets after what you have vowed, or proud rivalry in religious offerings with your richer neighbours. See 1 Jn. 2. 16; Ga. 5. 19. C.

Ver. 9. The profit of the earth is for all. The poor often enjoying, through an eager and healthy appetite, more than the rich who never knew hunger. So equally does God distribute his favours, and so many the compensations for human wants, ver. 12. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Fearfully are men subjected to vanity; it enters not only into all their outward possessions, but even into their worship! Great need have we to take heed to our hearts, to our lips, and to our whole behaviour, in our religious performances, that they may not become means of dishonouring God and destroying ourselves. But, alas! often are they performed in a foolish and inconsiderate manner, our minds being no more serious in them than in an idle dream; and vows are often rashly made, and no less readily broken, in the view of Jesus and his angels and ministers. Very necessary is the constant faith and deep impression of God's greatness and omniscience, and the future judgment, to make us serious and cir-died with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase. This is also vanity.

11 When[u] goods increase, they are increased that eat them: [v]and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?

12 The[x] sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep.

13 There[y] is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, [z]riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.

14 But[a] those riches perish by evil travail:[8] and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

15 As[b] he came forth of his mother's womb, naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand.

16 And this also is a sore evil, that in all points as he came, so shall he go: and [c]what profit hath he that hath laboured for the wind?[9]

17 All[d] his days also he eateth in darkness, and [e]he hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness.[1]

18 ¶ Behold that which I have seen: [f]it is good and comely[2] for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun all the days[3] of his life, which God giveth him; for it is [h]his portion.

19 Every[i] man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice[4] in his labour; [j]this is the gift of God.

20 For[k] he shall not much remember the days of his life;[6] because [l]God answereth him in the joy of his heart.[7]

CHAPTER VI.

1 The vanity and misery of riches without use. 3 Of children, 6 and old age without riches. 7 The vanity of sight and insatiable desires. 10 The conclusion of vanities.

THERE is[a] an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men;

2 A[b] man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honour, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it. [c]This is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

3 ¶ If[d] a man beget an hundred children, and live many years, so that [e]the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and [g]also that he have no burial;[1] I say, that [h]an untimely birth is better than he:

4 For[i] he[2] cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness.

5 Moreover, [j]he hath not seen the sun, nor known any thing: this hath more rest than the other.

6 Yea, [k]though he live a thousand [3]years twice told, yet [l]hath he seen no good: [n]do not all go to one place?

7 ¶ All[o] the labour of man is for his mouth, and yet the appetite[4] is not filled.

8 For[p] what hath the wise more than the fool?[5] what hath the poor, that [q]knoweth to walk before the living?

9 Better[r] is the sight of the eyes than the wandering of the desire.[6] This[s] is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

10 ¶ That[t] which hath been is named already, and it is known [u]that it is [7]man; [v]neither may he contend with him that is mightier than he.[8]

11 Seeing there be [w]many things that increase vanity, what is man the better?

12 For [x]who knoweth what is good for man in this life, all the days of his vain life[9] which he spendeth as [y]a shadow? [z]for who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?

CHAPTER VII.

1 Remedies against vanity are, a good name, 2 mortification, 7 patience, 11 wisdom. 23 The difficulty of getting wisdom.

A GOOD[a] name is better than precious ointment; and [b]the day of death than the day of one's birth.

cumspect in our worship, and for enabling us to behold, or bear up under, oppression and persecution. God makes the highest to live on the same simple things as the poorest. There is very little to profit or please, and much more to hurt and vex in riches, than we commonly think. The rich man's servant often enjoys more benefit by his wealth than the rich man himself, while he suffers none of the vexation! Nay, the covetous miser gets no comfort in his wealth, and it is swept away, so that his children never come to the possession of it. Much happier is he who receives whatever he has as God's free gift, and uses it to his glory. Little is he concerned at the evils which befall him in life when God favours him with solid comfort.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 7, 8. Whatever wealth men gain by their labour is only available for meat, drink, or the like; but can never satisfy their soul, or even their avarice. And in respect to sensual gratification, fools may be as happy as the wisest; and even a poor man, who has common sense and prudence, may, by his industry, render himself and family as happy as the richest. 9, 10. A comfortable enjoyment of that which we have is far preferable to an insatiable desire and restless pursuit after that which we have not.—And, let our condition be what it may on earth, we shall still remain poor frail creatures, subject to manifold miseries: and it will be the utmost wickedness and madness to complain of our lot, or strive with God to get it rectified.

Ver. 2. If 'God giveth him not power to eat,' why doth he, by his Word and Spirit, 'yet find fault?' Because this denial of power to enjoy is not an evil disposition infused, but a judicial sentence passed upon his covetousness—the warning, if he repent not, of another sentence when he will lift up his eyes being in torments. C.

Ver. 6. Do not all go to one place? Not all spirits, of whom here there is no mention; but all bodies that must return to one thing, the dust; to one place, the grave. C.

Ver. 8. What hath the poor that knoweth to walk among the living? He sees the world, ver. 9, in all its beauty; and though he live on charity, yet if his desires be subdued to his station, he has more enjoyment in the mere sight of mountains, and hills, and fields, and fair dwellings, than their owner can obtain if subject to 'wandering desires.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Men's riches are often a remarkable curse to them, and render them really more unhappy than the poorest. It is wretched to have wealth and yet no heart to use it for our necessary accommodations in life. And empty are all earthly enjoyments, which can afford no satisfaction to a soul. How unhappy do some men make themselves by the insatiable nature of their own lusts! And yet it is very hard to draw them from a sinful attachment to earthly things, or to persuade them to use them aright; and especially to bring them to receive the almighty Saviour, and his unsearchable riches, for their everlasting treasure and portion.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1. A good reputation is of more advantage for rendering us useful and happy than all the riches, pleasures, and honours of this world: and the day of death, which frees men from the miseries of this world, is preferable to the day of birth, which introduces into a life in which the enjoyments do not sufficiently balance the evils of it. 2–6. It is far safer and more profitable to attend occasions of mourning and faithful reproof, which conduce to make men thoughtful of death and eternity, and render them wise unto salvation; than of revelling, mirth, and folly, which seduce men into heedless dissipation. 7. Grievous oppression will provoke even wise men to unseemly rage and behaviour; and bribes received will corrupt the judgment and pervert the affections of the best. 8. We ought more to regard how a thing turns out at last, than what promising appearances it has at first. 10. In bewailing the evils of our times, we ought carefully to avoid all murmuring at the dispensations of Providence, as if they were not equal. 11. When rich

2 ¶ It[c] is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart.

3 Sorrow[d] is better than laughter: for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better.

4 The[e] heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; [e]but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth.

5 It[h] is better to hear the rebuke of the wise, than for a man to hear the song of fools:

6 For [i]as the crackling[1] of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of the fool.[2] This also is vanity.

7 ¶ Surely [j]oppression maketh a wise man mad; [k]and a gift destroyeth the heart.[3]

8 Better[l] is the end of a thing[4] than the beginning thereof; and [m]the patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit.

9 Be[o] not hasty in thy spirit to be angry: for anger resteth in the bosom of fools.

10 Say[p] not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these? for thou dost not inquire wisely[5] concerning this.[6]

11 ¶ Wisdom is good [q]with an inheritance;[7] and by it there is profit to them that see the sun.

12 For[r] wisdom is a defence,[8] and money is a defence; but the excellency of knowledge is, that[s] wisdom[9] giveth life to them that have it.

13 Consider the work[t] of God: for [t]who can make that straight which he hath made crooked?

14 In[u] the day of prosperity be joyful, [v]but in the day of adversity consider: God also hath [w]set[2] the one over against the other, to the end that man [x]should find nothing after him.[3]

15 All[z] things have I seen in the days of my vanity: there is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness, and [a]there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedness.

16 Be[b] not righteous over-much; neither make thyself over-wise:[4] why[c] shouldest thou destroy[5] thyself?

17 Be[d] not over-much wicked;[6] neither be thou foolish: [e]why shouldest thou die before thy time?[7]

18 It[f] is good that thou shouldest take hold of this; yea, also from this withdraw not thine hand: [h]for he that feareth God shall come forth of them all.

19 Wisdom[i] strengtheneth the wise more than ten mighty men which are in the city.

20 For[j] there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not.

21 Also[8] take[k] no heed unto all words that are spoken, lest thou hear thy servant curse[9] thee:

22 For[l] oftentimes also thine own heart knoweth that thou thyself likewise hast cursed others.

23 ¶ All[m] this have I proved by wisdom:[1] I said, [n]I will be wise; but it was far from me.

24 That[p] which is far off, and exceeding deep, who can find it out?

25 ¶ I[q] applied mine heart[2] to know, and to search, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things, and to know the wickedness of folly, even of foolishness and madness:

26 And[r] I find more bitter than death the woman[3] whose heart is snares and nets, and her hands as bands: whoso pleaseth God[4] shall escape from her; but the sinner shall be taken by her.

27 Behold, this have I found, (saith [s]the Preacher,) counting one by one, to find out the account;[5]

28 Which yet my soul seeketh, but I find not: [t]one man among a thousand[6] have I found; but a woman among [u]all those have I not found.

29 Lo, this only have I found, [v]that God hath made man upright; [z]but they have sought out many inventions.

men are truly wise, they may do much good to others with their wealth in this world. 12. For both wisdom and wealth may be laid out for our protection and safety; but it is true piety and prudence that promote spiritual comfort and eternal happiness. 13, 14. To prevent murmuring, we ought carefully to observe how wise, just, and powerful God's operations are, and consider ourselves incapable of changing, even the most afflictive events of Providence, to our liking. In the time of prosperity we should therefore acknowledge God's goodness, and enjoy the benefit of it; and in the day of adversity we ought to consider the nature, author, and end of our afflictions, so as to make a good use of them: for God has disposed them in such variety, that none might be able to foresee future events in his particular lot. 15. I have often observed the most pious men sorely afflicted, and apparently miserable in this world; and the most wicked long enjoy an outward prosperity. 16–18. It is therefore necessary that men should avoid all needless scrupulosity and rash zeal not warranted by God's Word, lest it bring them into unnecessary troubles;—and especially should we avoid, with the utmost care, presumptuous sinning, lest, however he bear with others, it should provoke God quickly to cut us off, and send us to hell in our wickedness.—It is of great use to receive heartily and practise carefully this advice: for it is the true fearer of God who, by a circumspect regard to his law, shall escape both the extremes and their evil consequences. 19, 20. True piety and prudence tend more to direct, help, and protect men, than all human helps; even though the best are liable to manifold failings.—24. Human wisdom may judge of things present and obvious, but not of things future and mysterious. 25. I attempted a most careful and comprehensive search into God's providences, and men's counsels, conduct, and sinfulness; 26. And with grief and shame, I find that nothing more effectually entices and fixes men in guilt and ruin than a whorish woman. It is only by the remarkable mercy of God, and the most earnest and watchful piety, that one can either avoid or escape from her temptations: and often it is that those who have otherwise offended him are ruined by her influence. 27, 28. Here and there a truly honest man may be found among my courtiers: but a modest, plain-hearted, humble, and sincere woman have I not found among all my thousand wives and concubines.

Ver. 1. Precious ointment. Many ingredients were of very great value among the Jews, as appears from Jn. 12. 3, where a single pound was estimated at about £9. 13s. 6d. British. Taking then a Roman penny at 7¾*d.* or 7¼*d.* for the daily wages of a labourer, Mat. 20. 12, 13, and comparing it with modern wages in the neighbourhood of cities, the price of the ointment will be greatly increased.—Note, There is no name really good but that of a 'son of God,' 1 Jn. 3. 1; and to such a one, but to no other, the day of death is better than the day of his birth, Job 3. 3. C.

Ver. 15. Solomon prophetically foresees, and in this verse describes, Christ the only Son of man that ever had righteousness, ver. 20: Ro. 3. 10: and, by necessary consequence, the only one that could perish in 'his righteousness.' The second clause of the verse foresees and describes Antichrist, 2 Th. 2. 8. C.

Ver. 16. Be not righteous over-much. Be not a justifier over-much—that is, a self-justifier. Ro. 1. 17; 3. 22, 26; 5. 18, 19, 21; 10. 4; 1 Co. 1. 30 will discover what is the only true and sufficient righteousness; while Lu. 18. 9–14; Ro. 10. 3; Phi. 3. 5 will discover the basis of that 'over much' righteousness upon which Pharisees built of old, and upon which the Romanists have raised their acts of supererogation—works even beyond what were necessary for the workers' own salvation, and therefore applicable to the salvation of others. C.

Ver. 28. The 'one man' found, being perfect Christ; the woman sought is a perfect church. See Ga. 4. 26, 27, 31; Re. 12. 1, 6, 14–17. This scriptural interpretation, ch. 8. 1, of Solomon's parabolic inquiry, presents no splenetic record of his own experience; no harsh and more than questionable sentence on the relative intellectual and religious attainments and character of the sexes; consequently no unfilial stricture upon his own mother; no cruel and unfounded satire on half the population of the earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—A truly good character is very valuable, and ought to be sought for and maintained with the greatest care. Happy is the death of those who die in the Lord! Let us then live much in the serious consideration of our last end. Christian reproofs are highly requisite to make us grave and serious,

CHAPTER VIII.

2 Kings are greatly to be respected. 6 The divine providence is to be observed. 12 It is better with the godly in adversity, than with the wicked in prosperity. 16 The work of God is unsearchable.

WHO is[a] as the wise man? and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing? [b]A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine,[1] and the [2]boldness[3] of his face shall be changed.

2 ¶ I[c] counsel thee to keep the king's commandment, and that [d]in regard of the oath of God.

3 Be[e] not hasty to go out of his sight: stand not in an evil thing; [f]for he doeth whatsoever pleaseth him.

4 Where[h] the word of a king is, there is power; and who may say unto him, What doest thou?

5 Whoso[i] keepeth the commandment shall feel no evil thing; [j]and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment.[4]

6 ¶ Because[k] to every purpose there is time and judgment, therefore the misery of man is great upon [5]him.[6]

7 For[l] he knoweth not that which shall be: for who can tell him when it shall be?[7]

8 ¶ There is no man that hath power [m]over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no discharge[8] in that war;[9] neither[o] shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

9 All[p] this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another [q]to his own hurt.

10 And[r] so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from [s]the place of the holy,[1] and [t]they were forgotten in the city where they had so done. This is also vanity.

11 ¶ Because[u] sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

12 ¶ Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that [v]it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him:

13 But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which [x]are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

14 There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; [y]that there be just men, unto whom it happeneth according to the [z]work of the [3]wicked: again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the [a]work of the [3]righteous. I said, that this also is vanity.

15 ¶ Then[b] I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun, than [c]to eat, and to drink, and to be merry; for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.

16 ¶ When[d] I applied mine heart to know wisdom, and to see the business that is done upon the earth; (for [e]also there is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes;)[4]

17 Then I beheld all the work of God, [f]that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun; because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it: yea farther, though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Like things happen to good and bad. 4 There is a necessity of death unto men. 7 Comfort is all their portion in this life. 11 God's providence ruleth over all. 13 Wisdom is better than strength.

amidst so much folly and so many flashes of vain mirth as take place in the world. The very worst of things effectually work for the good of the saints. And a humble and patient resignation to the will of God makes us easy under the most grievous adversity and oppression. Christian wisdom and prudence tend greatly to our direction, safety, happiness, and strength. —They teach us to view God's hand in all that befalls us; to accommodate ourselves to every providence as it comes; and neither to be offended with the prosperity of the wicked nor the adversity of the godly in this life; to guard against all extremes: and, under a deep sense of our own faults, to carry ourselves mildly toward others who are overtaken in a fault. How short-sighted are the wisest of mortals with respect to the most important objects! But great is the mercy if they are brought to see their own leading follies and crimes, and, by the sight thereof, are led to repentance, to a deep sense of the riches of God's grace, and to search out the sinfulness of their heart and nature, till they apprehend themselves utterly vile before God.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1. How few are truly wise, and can rightly take up or expound the words or works of God? And yet it is wisdom that renders a man truly honourable, mild, and majestic. 2. The laws of a king ought to be obeyed, not only from fear of the penalty, but from regard to God, whose deputy he is, and to the oath of allegiance sworn to him by the name and in the presence of God, as witness and guardian of it. 3. We must behave ourselves submissively; and never, through passion or discontent, withdraw from his service or cast off our allegiance; for, his power being so great, it is very dangerous to contend with him. 4. A king has power to enforce his commands; and none can oppose him without apparent danger. 5. He who prudently complies with the king's pleasure in lawful things, shall avoid the trouble and danger which he would otherwise incur. And it will require wisdom to direct in what time and manner we may deal with him to the best advantage. 6. For through inattention to the proper time and to proper direction in managing matters, men bring much trouble upon themselves: 7. For they are generally ignorant what things are to happen, and of the time in which what they expect will come to pass. 8. None, neither by force nor entreaty, nor by wickedness, are capable of preventing the removal of their soul from this world in one way or another, so it becomes all to be ready. 9. I have observed that rulers by their management often bring guilt and ruin upon themselves. 10. I have observed wicked rulers, notwithstanding the greatest funeral pomp, quickly forgotten in the very city in which they had often, in God's name, administered judgment. So vain and perishing are all the pomp and power of the greatest. 11. Because God in mercy sometimes delays to punish open transgressors of his law, hardened sinners, in a most presumptuous manner, abandon themselves to all manner of mischief and wickedness. 12. But though the sinner's days of reprieve, or even of prosperity, should be prolonged for a time, yet it is only they who truly fear God and walk in his ways that will be happy at last. 13. Wicked despisers of God shall not enjoy the true comforts of life, and shall be quickly hurried into misery here or hereafter. 14. It is, however, afflicting that some eminent saints are reproached, persecuted, and distressed in this world, while some ringleaders in wickedness meet with kind usage and remarkable prosperity. 15. This makes it evident, that nothing is more proper than soberly and thankfully to enjoy what God in his providence bestows upon us in this world, as all the reward that we can gain by our labour. 16, 17. It is best to refrain from curious inquiries into the reasons, ends, and meaning of God's dispensations; for after the most diligent, curious, and persevering search, I find they will still remain unsearchable to men.

Ver. 2–5. That 'the king' was a title of Messiah familiar in the days of Solomon, is obvious from Ps. 2. 6; 22. 1, 4, 6; 45. 1, 6; 96. 6, &c.: and there are such characteristics in this passage as clearly prove that Jesus is 'the King' whom Solomon prophetically honours. Thus in ver. 3, 'He doeth whatsoever pleaseth him.' Now this neither David, nor Solomon, nor Darius, Da. 6. 14, nor indeed the most despotic monarch on earth, ever could effect: then, to Solomon's King none may say, 'What doest thou?' But never was there an earthly king without some one honest enough, or bold enough, or factious enough, to question his acts. Above all, he who keepeth the commandment of Solomon's King 'shall feel no evil,' a lot which no earthly king enjoys himself, nor can bestow upon any of his subjects. But all these things the King in Zion can do, and all these blessings his subjects enjoy. C.

Ver. 9. This hurt arises (1) From the mental perturbation that every ungodly and unkind superior must experience. (2) From that human retaliation which the injustice of despotic rule so often provokes. (3) From these judgments which an all-wise and merciful God who suffers long, does yet in justice finally bring down upon the wicked. C.

Ver. 10. Wickedly ruled 'to their own hurt'—raised, as they imagined, imperishable monuments of their fame—died, and were forgotten—leaving nought but a new proof that 'all is vanity.' C.

Ver. 13. This is no libertine insinuation, as some imagine, but, when scripturally interpreted, a plain statement of an important truth. There is no doubt a 'laughter of fools,' and 'the end of that mirth is heaviness,' Pr. 14. 13: but there is also a mirth which forms an essential or concomitant part of God's worship, Ps. 100. 1, 2; Ne. 8. 6, 9–12; Ja. 5. 13: and it is of that mirth, with the thankful and temperate use of what men 'eat or drink,' that Solomon here speaks. C.

God: [c]no man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them.

2 All[d] things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good, and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.[2]

3 This[e] is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all, [g]yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, [h]and after that they go to the dead.

4 ¶ For[i] to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: [j]for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

5 For[k] the living know that they shall die: but [l]the dead know not any [3]thing, [m]neither have they any more a reward; [o]for the memory of them is forgotten.

6 Also[p] their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

7 ¶ Go[q] thy way, eat thy bread with joy,[4] and drink thy wine with a merry heart;[5] for God now accepteth thy works.[6]

8 Let[r] thy garments be always white;[7] and let thy head lack no ointment.

9 Live[s] joyfully[8] with the wife whom thou lovest all the days of the [t]life of thy vanity, which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity: [u]for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun.

10 Whatsoever[v] thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; [z]for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

11 ¶ I[y] returned, and saw under the sun, that

The sense is, When the occurrences of life are regarded in the light of human reason only—from the stand-point of feeble short-sighted man, then the righteous and wicked appear to be dealt with in exactly the same manner. Both suffer, both die. Sceptics conclude from this that the providential dealings of a just God cannot extend to human acts. But the object of the sacred writer here manifestly is to raise man to a higher stand-point. He is to look to another state—an eternal home and reward for the righteous, in heaven. The words of this passage bear a close analogy to the words of Paul in 1 Co. 15. 19.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—What excellency in himself—usefulness among neighbours—honour among friends—and courage among enemies—the true knowledge and fear of God give to a man! But it is foolish and sinful to disregard the laws of our rulers; to be forward in finding fault with their administrations; to persist in faults pointed out to us; or to neglect proper methods of obtaining redress of our grievances. Subjection to magistrates is highly necessary, not only for conscience' sake, but even for avoiding their wrath and securing our own comfort. Certain and irresistible in themselves, though uncertain in their circumstances, are troubles and death to sinful men. But when we see wicked men prosper while the godly are oppressed, there is need of patience and of looking by faith to the unseen, the eternal issue of things! and, in the meanwhile, to make the best use we can of what we meet with, and leave it to the Lord to comprehend and manage his own mysterious works.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1. No man knoweth either love or hatred, &c. No man can tell from prosperity that God loves him, nor from adversity that God hates him. Yet let no one ignorantly say, We have then no means of ascertaining whether God loves us or not. No one can so imagine when he reads Jn. 14. 23. 1 Jn. 3. 13, 19, 21; 4. 13, 16. C.

Ver. 2. The 'one event' that is common to all is death, see last clause of ver. 3; and 'this evil under the sun' exists as a perpetual memorial of the fall of man, an awful warning of 'the judgment to come'—a dungeon of darkness (sorrow) to the wicked, and a door of hope and joy to the children of God. C.

Ver. 4. A living dog is better than a dead lion. The 'dead lion' was the guardian emblem of the throne of Solomon, 2 Ch. 9. 18, 19, and although 'the like were not made in any kingdom,' yet 'a living dog,' though an unclean and despised animal, would by his mere barking or assault have done more to guard the monarch than the twelve dead lions by which the ascent of Solomon's throne was protected. C.

Ver. 5. The memory of them [the dead] is forgotten. Is this consistent with fact? Is the memory of a great man ever forgotten? Yes, always. The memory of a good or a bad man's actions may be preserved in history and trumpeted by fame: but the memory of every man—the memory of personal affection—the only real memory of the man—is altogether forgotten—his children cease to weep for him—and his grandchildren perhaps knew him not. C.

Ver. 10. 'What a life I have spent in laboriously doing nothing!' was the melancholy reflection of a learned man on his death-bed. And so must it be with the most diligent, if he do not embrace the four departments to which Solomon directs the intellectual and active energies—work, device, knowledge, wisdom. Time spent in bodily works but trains an animal; time spent in artful devices but fosters a serpent; time spent in worldly knowledge but collects a library: it is, when neglecting neither of these, man 'applies his heart to wisdom,' that he puts forth 'all his might,' and fulfils, through grace, the great ends of his creation. C.

Ver. 11. Chance. The meaning of this much-abused word may be found by contrasting the end of ver. 11 with the end of ver. 12, where 'evil time' and 'suddenly' are expository of 'time and chance.' Chance therefore signifies, not what is below or above the direction of Providence, but what comes unexpectedly and suddenly upon thoughtless ignorant men. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a great mercy to believers that they, and all their works, are in the hand and under the influence of God, their reconciled Father. Yet how often does he use them with as much severity in this world as if they were the most profligate sinners! Great is the mercy that there is an eternity at hand, when Providence so little distinguishes the righteous here in their condition either in life or in death. Remarkable are the advantages which men have in this life for bettering their states, tempers, or hopes. But quickly death puts an end to them all! to all opportunities of preparing for eternity; and to all our intimacies, enjoyments, or affections in this world. What need then have we soberly to relish the comforts of this life, relative to our spirits, our food, our raiment, and our relations. Quickly should we work out our salvation with fear and trembling while we have opportunity, as we know not how soon our soul may be required of us. Carefully should we acknowledge God, and depend on him for direction in all our paths, as without his assistance we can obtain nothing good, but must fall into misery and ruin. Yet how stupid are most men, who neither regard wisdom itself, nor those who thereby do them the greatest services! It is necessary that we should always act from regard to the authority of God, and from a principle of love, as men may perhaps disregard the best works that we can do for them. But much more useful are wise discourses than all the noisy harangues which fools admire. And even one impenitent and presumptuous sinner is often a great plague to a family, a church, or nation.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1. A little imprudence or wickedness much hurts the character of one who has been reckoned uncommonly wise. 2. A wise man's understanding and inward abilities are always in readiness to direct him in his work: but a fool is unready in all he does, and knows not how to manage his affairs. 3. Nay, even in the most ordinary business his weakness appears, and he plainly discovers his folly to every one. 4. If the magistrate takes offence at thee, never desert thy station or employment, or withdraw thy subjection: but by submissive and patient carriage endeavour to pacify him. 5-7. Very often, to the great hurt of the subjects, magistrates employ, as their deputies and agents, persons of a weak or mercenary spirit, while persons of ability and true dignity are overlooked and contemned. 8. Both prince and people have need to beware of innovations; for he that endeavours to ensnare and ruin another shall thereby perish himself: and he that passes his due bounds to wrong others, brings unexpected mischief upon himself. 9. He that rashly attempts things too high and hard for him shall be hurt by it; and he that deals with men of stubborn tempers endangers himself. 10. If a man do not use proper means for his work, it will cost him so much more labour and pains. Wisdom is therefore necessary and profitable to direct in the choice and use of means. 11. As unenchanted serpents are disposed to bite, so rash and talkative persons are sure to do mischief with their words unless they be wisely prevented. 12. Wise men's words being pious, friendly, and profitable, procure them favour: but foolish, slanderous, and sinful speeches suddenly and irrecoverably ruin a man. 13. A fool at the first talks in a useless and impertinent manner; and at length he grows insolent and abusive, sticking at nothing wicked or malicious. 14. A fool pours forth his incoherent babblings, and pretends to know everything secret or future; and no one can tell what he will say next, or what mischief his foolish speeches may produce. 15. Fools find their work tedious and wearisome, because they want sense and prudence to manage the most ordinary business, even where the rules are ever so plain. 16. It is a great misery to a nation when their magistrates are ignorant, wilful, and unexperienced, and minding their sensual pleasures when they should be employed about the business of their office. 17. But happy is that nation whose magistrates are of truly excellent dispositions and endowments, and who use the enjoyments of life, not to satisfy inordinate lusts, but to fit them for their business. 18. Through sloth and indolence, estates, families, and nations are gradually reduced to wretchedness and ruin. 19. Even feasting affords but a very slight and transient pleasure; but a plentiful estate procures every outward advantage: we should therefore beware of spending it in luxury. 20. It is neither lawful nor safe to contemn, reproach, or wish evil to magistrates, however secretly, as it may be very quickly and surprisingly discovered to them.

Ver. 1. Folly. Solomon means by folly, (1) Childishness, Pr. 22. 11, that is, waywardness of temper, being easily disturbed; preference of toys to things of real value; and preference of amusement and self-will to learning and due control. (2) Want of prudent forecast, Pr. 13. 14. (3) Deceitfulness, Pr. 14. 8. (4) A hasty temper, Pr. 14. 29. (5) Pleasure in other men's folly, Pr. 15. 21. (6) Rejecting good advice, Ec. 4. 13. When folly is employed to designate the highest criminality, as De. 22. 21; Jos. 7. 15; Ho. 2. 10, it can easily be reduced to one or more of these heads. C.

Ver. 2. The wise man honours his heart; that is, his affections and their objects, by placing them at his right hand, the position of honour. The foot degrades all that he should hold dear. C.

Ver. 9. That is, he that doeth these things fraudulently and violently, as in digging a pit, or breaking a hedge, ver. 8. C.

Ver. 11. This translation is founded on the general opinion of 'serpent charming' by music being a reality and not a juggling imposition: a matter still undecided. May not the verse be translated, 'Surely the serpent will bite without hissing' (that is to give warning of danger); 'and a enchanter is no better?' C.

Ver. 16. Either really a child, a minor, under a selfish regency, living in luxury, and abusing their power; or one of those who are always children, and never attain to the majority of intellect, because never acquainted with the Son of God, who alone can make men free, Je. 8. 32, 36. C.

Ver. 20. Solomon warns against an uncharitable thought, because it would soon break out into a voice, and certainly be discovered. And thus he admonishes, not for the sake of a factious loyalty, but because he that frets himself into cursing the king will speedily be in danger of cursing his God. See Ja. 8. 21.—Note, The bird is most probably a reference to the use of carrier pigeons for speedy and secret missives. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Men of character have need to be careful, lest they should inadvertently ruin it. Many are extremely ill qualified for the business they take in hand; and imprudently expose their own folly and wickedness. But it is very dangerous when either rulers or subjects leave their proper stations and attempt violent changes of the public settlement. Vain and imprudent talking is often attended with the most hurtful consequences. It is necessary then to have our words always with grace, seasoned with salt. An imprudent management of their business frequently robs men of both the comfort and the benefit thereof. But it is a great mercy for nations when rulers and subjects do all diligently and prudently attend to their proper work, and act according to their station, neither doing nor speaking evil, but provoking one another to love and to good works.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1, 2. Cheerfully lay out thyself to bestow the necessaries of life upon the poor, who are entirely unable to requite thee; and so God shall plentifully reward thee for it in this life, or in that which is to come. And however great the number of needy objects be, bestow that which is necessary upon them all, according to thine utmost ability; for the opportunity of liberality may soon be lost to thee, and an evil time may quickly come, in which thou wilt infinitely need God to be the supplier of thy own wants. 3, 4. He bestows plenty upon men, in order that with it they may do good to others. And however undeserving the objects be on whom they religiously bestow their charity, they shall not lose their reward.—They that withhold it till every objection be answered, will never bestow it. 5, 6. As thou knowest knowest not whether shall prosper,[3] either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.

7 ¶ Truly[i] the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun:

8 But[n] if a man live many years, and rejoice in them all; [o]yet let him remember the days of darkness, for they shall be many. All that cometh is vanity.

9 ¶ Rejoice,[p] O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: [q]but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.[4] not how the human soul is created or united to the body, or operates in and on it, nay, nor even how the child is formed in the womb, even so thou knowest not how God may deal with thee, or thy estate: and therefore neglect no opportunity of doing or receiving good; and without any curious prying into futurity, leave it entirely to God to recompense thee. 7, 8. Life and its comforts are desirable: but let men enjoy created comforts as long as they may, the lasting period of troubles, death, and eternity will infallibly succeed, and manifest the emptiness and insufficiency of all outward enjoyments. 9, 10. Whatever temptations young persons may have to indulge their own foolish and wicked inclinations and fancies, let them remember, with the deepest concern, that God will, in his awful judgment, call them to account for every part of their conduct. Let them take care to prevent those perplexities and miseries which sinful indulgence will at last bring upon them; for all the empty and short-lived pleasures of youth can never in the least balance the dangers of inexpressible and everlasting misery.

10 Therefore[r] remove sorrow[5] from thy heart, and put away evil from thy flesh: [s]for childhood and youth are vanity.

Ver. 1. Cast thy bread upon the waters. Some interpret thus: 'Cast thy bread-corn (seed) upon the waters,' as rice is said to be sown in Egypt; others, 'Sow thy bread-corn (seed) before the coming of the waters,' that is, before the rainy season. But as the word translated waters signifies multitudes, may not the meaning rather be, 'Cast thy bread (give forth thy spiritual instruction) before the face of the multitudes?' See Mat. 5. 1, as contrasted with the portions or more specific instructions prescribed in the second verse. C.

Ver. 3. The clouds of heaven water alike the desert and the garden, obeying chemical laws: and if a tree fall toward north or south, there it abides, obeying mechanical laws: how surely then should the intellectual and spiritual man obey the laws of his condition, and fulfil these beneficent purposes for which God has endowed him? C.

Ver. 9. This is no irony, as some have imagined: it is a simple and beautiful lesson. 'Rejoice in thy youth;' not in thy follies and lusts, 2 Ti. 2. 22. 'Let thy heart,' thine own conscience, and not vain companions, 'cheer thee' in thy course. 'And walk in the ways of thine heart'—thy conscience—not in the way of evil advisers: 'and in the sight of thine eyes'—not in the darkness of them that close their eyes, lest they should see, Mat. 13. 15. 'And know thou, God will bring thee into judgment'—the judgment, not of condemnation, but of 'Well done, good and faithful servant,' Mat. 25. 23. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a plain, profitable, and important duty is that of giving to the poor! Nothing is a more certain mean of making men rich. No objections, drawn from our right to what we have, from the narrowness of our circumstances, from the discouragements which we have already met with in it, or from our not knowing how it can be made up to us, ought to make us neglect so much as one opportunity of charity. But, above all, it is most sinful and foolish for either old or young to indulge their lusts, and live unconcerned about Jesus Christ and his salvation, when heavy troubles, an important death, an awful judgment, and an endless eternity are before them, and they know not how near!

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. Now, in youth, seriously think of, believe in, and serve the Divine Persons, who made, preserve, and redeem men, before the disquieting and disqualifying infirmities of old age come upon you: 2. Before the comforts of life, which render it agreeable, be withdrawn, and the powers of your mind and senses of your body be rendered almost useless, and the calamities of old age rise successively one after another: 3. When your head, arms, and hands shall shake, through weakness or palsy; your once strong shoulders stoop, and your legs and thighs bow under their weight; your teeth be generally lost, and your eyes sunk in their sockets and become dim; 4. Before your lips be but a little opened to eat or talk, because of the loss or looseness of teeth; before you be incapable to walk in the streets; your rest broken, and every little noise awaken you; your lungs fail, your voice become inharmonious and harsh, and your ears dull and regardless of music; 5. Before you, unable to climb, become afraid to mount or move on high, nay, are afraid of falling in the common way; before your hair become white; the least noise or weight become burdensome, and the lightest food load your stomach; and there be no inclination to or delight in former pleasures, because you draw nigh to the grave and the other world, when your friends shall lament their loss, and the hired mourners publicly pour forth their pretended sorrows;—6. Remember your Creator, before the union between your soul and body be loosed, or the pith of your back and nerves be weakened; the vessel in which your brain and animal spirits are contained be rendered unfit for use; your veins and arteries, which convey the blood and vital spirits, be rendered unfit to convey them any more from the right or left ventricles of your heart; 7. And your body be laid in the grave, to moulder into dust, and your soul appear to be judged before God who formed it.—11. The words of the prophets, and other holy men of God, are fitted to excite men's attention, awaken their conscience, and quicken their affections; and to make a powerful and lasting impression on their hearts, and so settle and establish them in the truth;—being inculcated by zealous teachers of the church, sent and qualified by Jesus Christ, the alone Head of his church.

Ver. 3. Keepers. The hands become more or less paralytic. Strong men—the vertebræ of the upright youth shall bend. The grinders—the teeth, a name by which the double-teeth are familiarly known. Those that look out of the windows—the optic nerves and humours of the eye. C.

Ver. 5. Afraid of ascents, because of debility. 'The almond-tree shall flourish'—the hair shall become white as the almond-blossom: or rather, shall fall off. 'The grasshopper' or locust, almost light as air that needs not his support, and instantly flies away. 'Desire' of food, company, music, fair prospects, &c. C.

Ver. 11. In ver. 10 the Preacher bears testimony to the purity and truth, that is, the plenary inspiration of the book which he is now completing. In ver. 11 he takes in a wider range. He testifies to the perfection of 'the words of the wise,' that is, of the whole of the sacred books then in existence. They are as goads, piercing sharp and deep. The second clause of the verse is not so clear. It is probable that there is here an example of that parallelism which is characteristic of Hebrew poetry, and that this clause corresponds with the preceding. Its meaning may be: 'The participators in the collection:' i.e. those who wrote or compiled the collection of sacred books, 'are as nails driven in.' The last clause of the verse states the origin of both the sacred books and the sacred writers: 'they are given by one Shepherd,' by the Lord. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Necessary and pleasant is an early acquaintance with Christ and his ways. But very absurd and dangerous are delays of spiritual concerns till old age, which may never be seen, and is a season very improper for commencing such care. Thrice happy are they who encounter the unnumbered infir-

12 And further, by [r]these, my son, be admonished: of making many books there is no end; and much study[7] is a weariness of the flesh.

13 ¶ Let us hear the conclusion of the whole [8]matter; [t]Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.[9]

14 For [u]God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

mities and troubles of old age, and the fears and pangs of death, in the full assurance that Jesus loved them, and gave himself for them! But, alas! how difficult is it to persuade us of the emptiness of all created things! This truth needs to be inculcated a thousand times over. Nor will that avail, unless the Holy Ghost inscribe it on our heart. It is necessary then that all preachers should be sent and qualified by Christ and his Spirit; and that, by every possible mean, they should labour to fix the truths of God in the consciences, understandings, affections, and memories of their hearers. And let us, in our religious course, attend chiefly to the principal points; and always act under the awe, and in the faith and hope, of the last judgment.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

The most common view of the Book of Ecclesiastes represents it as 'a philosophical inquiry after the summum bonum, or chief good of man; in which Solomon states the various opinions on the subject, the result of his own dear-bought experience in search of the respective enjoyments of human wisdom and human folly.' Without altogether excluding this view, others think Solomon's main design was to 'prove the immortality of the soul, or rather the necessity of another state after this life, by such arguments as may be deduced from reason and experience.'

Now, in all this, it is not a little remarkable—it is not a little lamentable—that it never seems to have occurred to the learned authors of these opinions, that Christ and his church formed any direct object of Solomon's investigation! Yet how strange if the wisest man could have written a book in which the 'Wisdom of God' obtained no place!

'Much of the obscurity, it has been observed, which is generally admitted to exist in the book of Ecclesiastes, arises from not attending to the train of argument proposed by Solomon, which difficulty the ordinary division of chapters and verses is supposed to have contributed to increase' (Horne's Introduction).

Now that, like other portions of Scripture, the book of Ecclesiastes contains some or many things 'hard to be understood,' cannot be denied. But has not its peculiar obscurities arisen from neglecting the beams of 'the Sun of Righteousness' shining so brightly in all its pages, rather than from any inattention to the mere train of a philosophical argument? That Ecclesiastes is a book of argument is admitted; but not in any other sense than that in which the Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews are books of argument. That is, the statements, illustrations, and conclusions are never of man, but from the Spirit of God.

If by 'wisdom' is to be understood anything less than the knowledge that 'God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself,' 2 Co. 5. 19, then, indeed, is the book of Ecclesiastes not only obscure, but often unintelligible. But if the 'wisdom' sought and commended by Solomon be the knowledge of 'Christ, the wisdom of God,' then the obscurity of the book becomes illuminated, and 'he may run that readeth it,' Hab. 2. 2.

Another source of its obscurity may be found in the principle of interpretation ordinarily adopted—a principle neither warranted by anything in the book itself, nor by authority of any other book of Holy Scripture. This principle is the assumption that the book 'was written by Solomon in his old age, after he had repented of his sinful practices; and when, having seen and observed much, as well as having enjoyed everything that he could wish, he was fully convinced of the vanity of everything but piety towards God' (Horne's Introduction). Now, that Solomon wrote the book at an advanced period of his reign, is obvious from ch. 2. 4–11; but though all his recorded labours terminate in 'vexation,' there is not one single reference to any special 'sinfulness' in his pursuits—an omission totally inconsistent with the genius of Scripture, which never fails in the most direct acknowledgment and condemnation of the sins of its chiefest characters. Had the book, therefore, been a confession of sin and retractation of error, these must have furnished its most plain and prominent statements. Sin would have been called sin, and not mere 'vanity and vexation of spirit;' for these words, however strong and expressive, come far short of that self-abasement and abhorrence which the consciousness of sin against God must produce, whenever his Spirit leads the sinner to repentance. The conclusion, therefore, is inevitable—Ecclesiastes is neither an acknowledgment nor retractation of sin in the inspired author, but an illustration of the insufficiency of all 'treasures on earth' for the purpose of inducing men to 'lay up their treasures in heaven,' to 'set their affections on things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.'

But the chief source of obscurity may be detected in two principles that would reduce light itself into darkness,—the first, taking words in a sense the writer never intended,—the second, interpreting by figures of speech that he never employed. Examples of the first may be found in the meaning attached to 'good' in ch. 2. 24, and 3. 13, &c., where the real good intended is commonly referred to unlimited sensual indulgence; and the second is exemplified ch. 11. 9, where a plain and godly admonition is commonly interpreted as a bitter irony.

In the preceding notes these arbitrary principles of interpretation have been altogether rejected; and, in subordination to the teaching of the Spirit, the book has been treated as its own expositor.—C.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON

Could not be a nuptial hymn composed in honour of any of his wives; for it was not composed till after the tower of Lebanon was built, ch. 7. 4; and so not till about twenty years after his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter. Many of the emblems used in it—as to be made a keeper of the vineyard, to have a head like Carmel, a nose like the tower of Lebanon, eyes like fish-pools, teeth like a flock of sheep, and to be terrible as an army with banners, &c.—if applied to a fine lady, are absurd to the last degree: but if the whole be understood of the union and fellowship between Christ and his people, it will appear most exalted, instructive, and animating. The name of God is not found in it, more than in Esther; nor could the continued allegory of the book well admit of it. But the agreement of its matter and language with other passages of Scripture—as Is. 54. 5; 62. 4, 5; Ho. 2. 19, 20; Mat. 25. 1–10; 9. 15; 3. 9; Ro. 7. 4; 2 Co. 11. 2; Ep. 5. 32; Re. 19. 7; 21. 2, 9; and especially with Ps. xlv.; its majestic style; its efficacy on the consciences of men for promoting their spiritual comfort and holiness; the sincerity of the bride in acknowledging her faults; and in fine, the general reception of it by the Jewish and Christian churches; sufficiently prove it inspired of God. To such as read it with a carnal and wanton mind, it will be the savour of death unto death: but to such as, acquainted with fellowship with Christ, peruse it with a spiritual and heavenly frame, it will prove a savour of life unto life, a counterpart of their gracious experience. It is a dialogue; in which the speakers are Jesus Christ, the blessed Bridegroom of souls; the church, which is his body and bride, and every particular saint in it; and the daughters of Jerusalem or Zion, who are either nominal professors of the true religion, or at best young and weak converts. The scope of it is to represent Christ and his people's mutual esteem of, desire after, and delight in one another. And as the bride denotes either the church in general, or a particular believer, the members, &c., attributed to her must have different significations assigned them, according as the one or the other is understood.

[The title of this book, 'THE SONG OF SONGS,' is generally understood to assert its eminence amongst or superiority over all other songs. Some eminent Hebraists, however, are disposed to translate the title 'The Series of Songs;' and this seems more consonant to the modesty of the sacred writer, who would be very unlikely to assume any special eminence, also to that equality which divine inspiration implies amongst the books of Scripture, as well as to the structure of the book itself, which changes so rapidly its speakers, time, place, and objects.

The ancient Jews, without exception, considered it a book divinely inspired, and inserted it in their sacred writings. By our Lord it was consequently authorized, when he exhorted the Jews to 'search the Scriptures;' and by Paul, when he affirmed that 'all Scripture is given by inspiration of God.' With the full conviction of its divine origin, it was newly translated into Greek, in the second century, by three eminent Christian divines; and in the third, it was inserted by Origen in his Hexapla, who also wrote some discourses explanatory of its sacred meaning.

Notwithstanding this concurrence, its divine authority is said to have been questioned in the fifth century by Theodore of Mopsuestia; and occasionally, down to the present day, various objections against its inspiration have been started by Christian divines. Now, without questioning either the objects or the principles of these objectors, it is not a little to be lamented that their learning has been so misapplied. For if the reception of the book by the Jewish church, and its approbation by our Lord and his apostles, be not, to a Christian, sufficient evidence of its divine authority, any higher evidence it must be impossible to obtain; and if this evidence is to be rejected in the case of one book, there is no ground for its sufficiency in the case of any other.

The objections to the divine authority of this book have arisen, as in the case of Ecclesiastes, from assuming an unauthorized principle of interpretation, and pronouncing the book a mere marriage song, and consequently unfitted for religious instruction. But again, whereas in Ecclesiastes, a book confessedly didactic, the ordinary and natural application of words has been rejected—in the Song of Solomon, a book confessedly written in similitudes or parables, the emblematic application of words has been rejected.

The Christian disciple will, however, make light of these cavils, and calmly repose upon the authentication of the book derived from Christ and his apostles And while so reposing, he will find a treasury filled to overflowing with the unsearchable riches of Christ. He will be led into a banqueting-house of boundless hospitality; he will mingle with a company of purity and love; he will traverse gardens of loveliest flowers and sweetest odours; he will repose beneath trees with coolest shade and ripest fruits; thence will he climb the Lebanon heights of contemplation, and gaze upon the lovely land that lies beneath his feet, the land of his inheritance and his home, where Christ is the King, saints the subjects, and love the law; where the subjects themselves are kings and priests unto God, clad in the robes of the Lamb's immaculate righteousness, and crowned with the diadem of his unfading glory.

Some eminent interpreters have considered this book as a sacred drama extending through seven days, and have divided it into scenes, each of a day's continuance. Others have concluded it to be a succession of idyls, or little poems, with no connection of time, place, or person: but merely possessing some common object as their only principle of union.

In the following notes these principles of interpretation will be diffidently—on account of their authors—but firmly rejected, from their want of any but conjectural authority. The principles of interpretation adopted will be (1) The grammatical, including the singularity, or plurality, or sexes of the speakers. (2) Change of place. (3) Change of time. (4) Change of objects. (5) Change of sentiment or action. (6) The parallel—comparing spiritual with spiritual, explaining what here is unknown by what is elsewhere acknowledged. By following these natural principles, the book will be found a succession of beautiful, impressive, and instructive emblems of natural pictures, representing spiritual originals—an outward form of what is earthly, fabricated for little children, but with an inward spirit of what is only intended for perfect men. C.]

CHAPTER I. Ver. 2. Blessed Jesus, upon whom I have been meditating, by thy Word and Spirit give me intimate fellowship with thee in thy ordinances, and full assurances of thy friendship: for the manifestations of thy redeeming love are more pleasant, reviving, and strengthening to my soul than any created enjoyments. 3. Such is the pleasant and powerful influence of thy mediatorial excellencies, offices, relations, and fulness of spirit and grace, that sincere and holy souls cannot but love thee with their whole heart. 4. By thy almighty influence direct and bring me into the nearest enjoyment of thyself, that I, and others excited by me, may pleasantly comply with thy alluring power, and follow hard after thee in the paths of duty.—Jesus, the King of his church, has already brought me into the most ravishing nearness to and spiritual intimacy with himself; therefore will we rejoice in him as our ALL and IN ALL; we will think of, believe, and extol his love above all created delights: for every candid and sincere professor heartily esteems, loves, and delights in thee. 5. In myself, and in respect of manifold infirmities, scandals, reproaches, and persecutions, I am deformed; but in my Head Christ, and as clothed with his righteousness, and endued by his Spirit, gifts, and graces, I am truly comely, O ye nominal professors and weak believers:—I am outwardly mean, but inwardly rich and glorious. 6. Look not therefore upon me with disdain, disaffection, or delight in my distresses, nor stumble at religion on account of them; for sore persecutions, tribulations, and temptations are befallen me: hypocritical professors, false teachers, and my own inward corruptions, enraged at my connection with Christ, and my cleaving to him, have oppressed me with the basest drudgery, and entangled me in carnal cares and secular affairs, which have hindered me from, or retarded me in, the due improvement of my own office, opportunities, gifts, and graces. 7. But, O all-compassionate Redeemer, whom I love with my whole heart, and above everything else, discover to me, by thy Word and Spirit, which is thy true church, and which are those assemblies wherein thou art remarkably present, and to whom thou affordest spiritual support and consolation amidst all their scorching persecutions and troubles: for why should I, whom thou hast redeemed, and who have sincerely devoted my whole self to thee, be left to associate myself with empty professors, false teachers, and inward idols, who, notwithstanding their pretences of friendship, are thy enemies and rivals on earth!

CHRIST. 8. O ye excellent ones of the earth, beautified with my salvation, righteousness, and grace, and whose church state is adorned with my ordinances, if your knowledge of duty be still indistinct, inquire after, observe, and follow the example of the saints in former and present ages; and let weak believers and young converts, with their weak or languishing graces, carefully attend my public ordinances dispensed by my faithful pastors. 9. And be encouraged in my love; for, notwithstanding the weakness which you feel, and the self-deformity which you discover, I your Redeemer and Husband have, and will render you comely and active, and will give you sufficient strength and courage to withstand and conquer your spiritual enemies, if you will only be faithful. 10. Whilst your church state is beautifully adorned by divine oracles, ordinances, gifts, and graces, professors, and ministers, your particular conversation before the world appears beautifully marked with a variety of precious and holy qualities, and your faith, by which you are united to my person as your Head, is precious and glorious in itself, and is productive of every good word and work. 11. And I, my Father, and the blessed Spirit will for ever continue and increase these spiritual ornaments in true believers.

BELIEVERS. 12. O that we may enjoy these blessed and ornamenting operations of thy grace! For, whilst thou, Jesus, dost converse familiarly with us in thine ordinances, how pleasant are thy promises and truths to our heart, and how vigorous and active, and acceptable to thee, are our implanted graces. 13. And, even during the night of trouble or time, how delightfully art thou, our beloved Husband, found in the public and private ordinances of thy grace, and art entertained by the most cordial embracements of our faith and love! 14. O what an inexpressibly delightful and precious system of excellencies, fountain of graces, source of blessings, repository of promises, treasure of pardoning, healing, comforting, nourishing, quickening, and refreshing influence, art thou to our heart!

SUPHENIAH ROAD—A SCENE IN THE MOST BEAUTIFUL CITY OF KING SOLOMON'S DOMINIONS. [Song of Solomon, i:1.]—The above is a picture of a road in Supheniah, a suburb of Damascus. This is given here because it illustrates a scene in the dominion of Solomon. Damascus was one of the wealthy and beautiful cities in his kingdom. In passing from Jerusalem to Palmyra, the city Solomon built in the wilderness, Damascus would be on the direct route, and in going to Palmyra to-day tourists usually start from Damascus. In the respect that Damascus and Palmyra occupy oases in the midst of surrounding deserts, they are alike. There would be no Damascus were it not for the Abana river. The stream breaks through a gorge in the Lebanon mountains a few miles above the city, and at once begins a warfare with the desert. For 25 miles the conflict between the river and the burning sands of Syria is expressed in a luxurious and tropical vegetation.

9 I have compared thee, [w]O my love, [x]to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.

10 Thy[e] cheeks are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold.

11 ¶ We[y] will make thee borders of gold with studs of silver.

12 ¶ While[z] the King sitteth at his table, my spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof.

13 A[a] bundle of myrrh is my well-beloved unto me; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.[7]

14 My beloved is unto me as a cluster of [8]camphire[9] in the vineyards of En-gedi.

15 Behold,[b] thou art fair, my love;[1] behold, thou art fair; thou hast doves' eyes.[2]

16 ¶ Behold,[c] thou art fair, my beloved, yea, pleasant: [d]also our bed is green.[3]

17 The[e] beams of our house are cedar, and our rafters[4] of fir.

CHRIST. 15. How comely and glorious is my church, as endowed with ordinances, and reformed by my Word and Spirit; and how adorned with intelligent, sincere, peaceful, peace-proclaiming, and faithful pastors, who search into gospel truths, and watch over, direct, and go before every individual member of it. And how certainly, and eminently comely, is every believing soul clothed with my righteousness, and endowed with my grace! How quick and discerning their spiritual understanding! How chaste, sincere, and single their affections, without the least glance of spiritual whoredom!

BELIEVERS. 16. But, blessed and divine Husband, what is all my derived comeliness in respect of thine, in thy person, offices, relations, and grace? How delightful are all these to my heart! How pleasantly glorious is thy promise, and the ordinances of thy gospel, for the conversion and consolation of souls, and for rendering them fruitful in good works! 17. And strong, durable, and lasting is thy church, in which I am honoured to dwell, and consists of such parts and members as keep the faith; and permanent are all her oracles, ordinances, and offices.

Ver. 2. The word me shows that the bride 'the Lamb's wife,' Re. 21. 9, is the first speaker; thy, addressing her, shows that the virgins, the church in her state of waiting and progress, reply. See Mat. xxv. C.

Ver. 5. I am black as the tents of Kedar—an humble acknowledgment of sin, in which words the bride speaks; but comely as the curtains of Solomon, a recognition of the sin, but an assertion of the beauty of faith and repentance, in which words the virgins speak. C.

Ver. 6. Look not upon me, &c. She speaks as a village maiden, accustomed, as all village maidens are in the East, to work in the vineyards: and so exposed to the burning sun that her skin was dark when compared with the fair daughters of Jerusalem. Though tanned with the sun she was still beautiful. What a noble figure of the church! Bearing the marks of the world's toils and persecutions: yet showing on every feature the lineaments of heaven. P.

Ver. 7. There is here a new picture, changing from a banqueting-house to a shepherd gone after his flocks. 'Why should I be as a stranger by the flocks of thy companions?' Why should I, as a stranger, follow any teacher, any spiritual feeder, but my Lord? C.—Eastern shepherds always lead their flocks to some shady spot, if possible beside a fountain, and leave them to rest there for one or two hours during the fierce noonday heat. This is a favourite time for the shepherds themselves to meet with their friends and to recline under shade of tree or rock. P.

Ver. 9. I have compared thee, O my partner. Not for personal accomplishments, but for coolness and beauty of ornaments: 'even the ornaments of a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of Heaven, of great price.' C.

Ver. 10. The maidens of Palestine wear an ornament composed of gold coins strung together in a row so as to overlap like scale armour. It passes over the head, down each cheek in front of the ear, and is fastened under the chin. Instead of coins, thin discs of gold and silver were used in ancient times. They also wear numerous chains of gold or silver round the neck. The words of the text are therefore descriptive of a maiden decked in her ornaments. It is also worthy of note that fully caparisoned horses have their bridles covered with little plates of the precious metals, and have also numbers of chains and amulets strung round their necks. How graphic therefore are the words, 'I have likened thee, O my love, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots!' P.

Ver. 14. Camphire. The camphire is a plant, the Lawsonia inermis of botanists. Of the dried leaves an unguent is made, called henna, with which the females of Syria and Egypt dye their nails. Its flowers have a sweet perfume, and eastern maidens often place bunches of them in their bosoms. The plant is still found at Engedi. P.

REFLECTIONS.—How precious and pleasant Christ is to believing souls! Ardently do they pant after further communications of his grace; sensible that they can do nothing of themselves, but Jesus must do all in them and for them. He takes the sweetest delight in speedily answering their prayers, and satisfying their souls with his loving-kindness; though often, amidst his kind visits, their outward state is such as lookers-on are apt to stumble at. With what pain and grief do lively saints lament the want of frequent and intimate fellowship with him and his people in the ordinances! But he is ready to direct and comfort them in this condition. He has done, and will do, for them the most amazing things, in furnishing them with his righteousness, his grace, and his glory. All their life, their strength, their grace, their comfort, their happiness come from him. His heart is full of high esteem and unbounded affection for them. And, through familiar fellowship with him, they receive and enjoy his comforting, sanctifying, and blessed influence.

CHAPTER II. CHRIST. 1. I am indeed glorious in my person as God-man, and in my mediatorial relations, estates, and works; and am infinitely comely, refreshing, and medicinal to every believing soul. 2. And partaking of my comeliness, righteousness, and grace, thou, my church, art incomparably more excellent and useful than all the societies, and true believers than all the persons on earth.

BELIEVERS. 3. But infinitely more my beloved Jesus excels angels and men in everything gracious, glorious, and operative. Often have I, under the covert of his righteousness, love, power, and providence, fearless of danger from heaven, earth, or hell, believingly viewed, admired, and applied to my soul, his person, offices, and relations, with all the pardon, peace, acceptance, adoption, sanctification, comfort, and endless glory, which flow therefrom! 4. Powerfully has he admitted me to partake of his fulness, in the most ravishing manner, in his Word and ordinances. And the manifestations of his love have effectually protected me from enemies, and encouraged and animated me to my spiritual work and warfare. 5. Ye ministers and fellow-professors, often have I needed your sympathy, direction, and comfort, under my sad perplexity and desertion. But, oh! if you could now help me to bear up under these ravishing discoveries and communications of Jesus' love! Oh for further and unspeakably more enlarged enjoyment of him, to strengthen me for supporting under, and improving what I have; 6. But why do I ask your assistance? While I enjoy the true, the delightful, and intimate embraces of an incarnate God, and have the joys of his promise imparted to my soul, his word, power, and grace marvellously uphold, delight, and invigorate my heart. 7. I therefore charge you, my fellow-professors, by everything kind, pleasant, or delightful, that ye disturb not my fellowship with him, nor do, nor cause me to do, anything which may provoke him to withdraw this sensible visit of his love. 8. Lo! though he had withdrawn, yet I now hear his voice, in the ministry of his Word and motions of his Spirit. Behold, he comes removing and triumphing over every hindrance of my fellowship with him! 9. Behold, in the most lively, lovely, and affectionate manner, he comes forward in the influence of his grace, and unto an actual assumption of our nature! Behold he, the substance of all our ceremonies, manifests his glorious and gracious excellencies, through them, and vouchsafes some obscure and transient glimpses of himself in every ordinance! 10. In what a heart-melting manner he said to my soul, Rouse up thyself from thy partial deadness, sloth, and security, and disentangle thyself more fully from the snares of the world and thy own lusts. Exercise thy faith in the most active, bold, and assured degree, in partaking of the most delightful fellowship with me: 11. For all impediments, arising from the wrath of God, the guilt or dominion of sin, or from terrible troubles, are now removed. 12–14. Now are come the days of power and times of love, in which the dispensations of the gospel are attended with almighty influence, and multitudes are, to their everlasting joy and comfort, converted to me, and rendered fruitful in good works. Arise, therefore, my poor, meek, chaste, but often persecuted bride; let no despondency, no sense of thy unworthiness, deter thee from approaching my presence in prayer and other holy duties: for both thy person and services are accepted by me, and are inexpressibly amiable in my sight. 15. And while ecclesiastical rulers take pains, both by doctrine and discipline, to free my church from false teachers, even those who time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land;[9]

13 The[w] fig-tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. [x]Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away.

14 ¶ O[y] my dove, [z]that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, [a]let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely.

15 Take[a] us the foxes, the little foxes,[1] that spoil the vines: for our vines have [b]tender grapes.

16 ¶ My[c] beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth among the lilies.

17 Until[d] the day break, and the shadows flee away, turn,[2] my beloved, and be thou [e]like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains [3]of Bether.[4] have but begun to vent their errors and irregularities, as they greatly mar her purity, peace, order, and beauty, and are especially apt to mislead weak believers, let every one be careful to search out, and mortify his own inward lusts, as these, if indulged, break up the work of grace in their hearts.—16. This kind inviter is my glorious Husband and Mediator, given of God to, and accepted by, me; and I am his by the Father's goodness, his own love and conquest, and by my surrender of myself to him. And O the infinite delight he takes in his people, and to converse with them in his ordinances! 17. Till the gospel day, in its pleasant light and powerful influence, break, and the shadows of Jewish ceremonies flee away; nay, till the day of perfect glory dawn, and all the shadows of desertion, temptation, and trouble are fled; do thou, blessed Jesus, often surprise me with the discoveries of thy glory and communications of thy grace, notwithstanding whatever hindrances, guilt, and wickedness are found with me.

Ver. 1. 'I am a wild rose of the fields, a lily of the valleys.'—Such a humiliating description as every self-examining believer will give of himself in comparison with the attainments of others. C.

Ver. 3. Judea is not celebrated for the apple, but its citrons were reckoned superior to those of all other lands; and the citron is therefore most probably the fruit-tree of this emblem. C.

Ver. 7. I charge you. This cannot be any form of adjuration, which would be both superstitious and impious. The reference is to the timidity of the startled gazelle, and the fleetness with which it escapes when disturbed in its slumbers. Spiritually, it inculcates 'praying, waiting, and watching,' for the Lord's coming in providence and grace. C.

Ver. 10-13. From verse 10 to 13 is presented one of the most beautiful emblems of Christ, by his Word and Spirit, inviting the soul of a believer, or the whole church, to arise from sleep, Ro. 13. 11, and follow him. C.

Ver. 14. The emblem here changes to a scene descriptive of the safety of the believer, or the church—defended as by a rock, and hid in the 'secret places of the precipices.' C.— In this verse the dove—not the turtle-dove, but the pigeon—is the emblem selected. Its favourite haunts are the clefts of the rocks, and the retired recesses of the steep stair-like ravines. From these its soft cooing is heard during the spring season. P.

Ver. 16. He feedeth among the lilies. 'Let him feed [his flock] among the lilies.'—The emblems of believers, adorned with grace and endowed with righteousness without their own merit, Ro. 3. 20–28; 4. 4–6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—O the unbounded glory and infinite usefulness of Jesus Christ, and the glory and usefulness of his people as connected with him! What must be the immediate enjoyment of God and the Lamb, when the imperfect and mediate enjoyment on earth is sometimes so transporting! Unhappy for ever is that heart which would change one hour's fellowship with Christ for all the pleasures, honours, and riches on earth. Tenderly should it be managed, and carefully improved and maintained. A small thing may interrupt it; and with the greatest reluctance and grief should the believing soul mourn over its want. Strong as death must be the love of our Redeemer, which makes him come to his people over every mountain of distance, darkness, wrath, provocation, and pollution. How earnest and affecting are his invitations to familiar intercourse with himself! And what a change in the world is made by his oracles, ordinances, and influence! But wicked ministers in a church, and carnal lusts in a heart, are our greatest plagues, and should be carefully removed. And the assured faith of our relation to Christ will make us effectually to long and cry for frequent and familiar fellowship with him.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. In time of desertion and trouble, and of a secure and slothful frame, in prayer and other private ordinances, I endeavoured to regain the sensible communications of Jesus' love: I persevered therein, but without any discernible success. 2. Stirring up myself therefore to a more active and lively frame of spirit, I attended the public ordinances of his worship, in order to obtain communion with himself. I often repeated my endeavours, but met with nothing but disappointments and discouragements. 3. Faithful ministers, who with care and labour inspect the souls of men, were often directed to speak pointedly to my case, which encouraged me to open it to them in familiar conversation, and beg their assistance in furthering my fellowship with him. 4. Not resting in duties and ordinances, by faith I essayed still more earnest and immediate application to Jesus himself. He graciously vouchsafed me his sensible presence. Then my heart clave to him by a lively exercise of faith, and by the most ardent and resolute affection. I carefully avoided everything which tended to disturb our fellowship or provoke his withdrawment; and not only laboured to get intimate enjoyment and full assurance of his love to myself, but to have his promised presence in the church and the public ordinances thereof. 5. I therefore again charge you, my fellow-professors or saints, to avoid everything which may in the least tend to mar my intercourse with him.

DAUGHTERS OF JERUSALEM. 6. What amazing persons are those who, separated from the world in affection, and delivered from former troubles, mount up heavenward in faith, in love, in spiritual-mindedness, and in holy desires and conversation;—all acceptable to God through Jesus' merits and intercession, and endowed with the manifold and precious graces of his Holy Spirit!

BELIEVERS. 7, 8. Nay, admire not us, nor the glories which we have freely received from Christ; but behold that new covenant of grace, and that familiar fellowship with him, which are the causes of everything amiable in us, and in which we are watched over and protected, amidst all our dangers, by almighty perfections, attendant angels, and vigilant ministers. 9, 10. Behold how, according to his deep compassion and universal love, he has not only assumed our nature in the most precious and useful form, but has formed a new covenant, and a gospel dispensation,—reared on stable, precious, and supporting promises,—founded in the unchangeable and everlasting love and purpose of God, in which men are protected by his righteousness and royal power; and his unbounded love makes everything proper, refreshing, and supporting for the members of his church, in order to transport them, in fellowship with him, through this world into the heavenly state! 11. Go forth then, my fellow-professors, from your unregeneracy, your self-righteousness, your filthy lusts, your carnal cares and sluggish frames; and with earnestness, faith, love, and wonder observe Jesus, our Prince of Peace, not only crowned by his Father with the highest glory and honour, but even by all the true members of his church, in their acceptance of him, and submission to him, as their Husband, Saviour, and Lord; particularly in that day of power, and time of love in which, to his inexpressible satisfaction, they are united to him by faith.

Ver. 1. 'In the night.'—That state of comparative darkness in which the believer and the whole church are still surrounded. See Ro. 13. 11, 12.—I sought him in his Word for direction, and in his promises for support.—I found him not. The seeker does not say, I believed him not, but 'I found him not;' because for more exercise of faith and faithful seeking, he calls the soul (the church) to add to private contemplation and prayer the observance and use of Christian converse and public ordinances. See ver. 2. C.

Ver. 6. The emblem here changes to the arrival of a traveller coming out of the wilderness, not like the wayworn Israelites when they emerged from its solitudes, but as a beauteous and beloved bride borne in splendour, and escorted by the mighty.—Note, The Hebrew shows the traveller is a female. C.

Ver. 9. A chariot. Rather, 'a throne,' as the mention of pillars seems to require, and as the word may be translated, 'King Solomon made himself a throne'—the emblem of the King of Zion enthroned in glory, the reward and production of his humiliation unto death, Phi. 2. 5–11. C.

Ver. 10. Its inside strewed over with love-mottoes (after the manner of the East) by the daughters of Jerusalem, the emblems of those records whereby believers have witnessed Christ's love to them, and their love to Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In this world the clearest days of intimate fellowship with Christ are suddenly turned into nights of desertion, trouble, ignorance, and sloth. But precious and dear is Jesus to lively saints;—nothing can content them without his presence and favour; and they count no labour nor suffering too hard to obtain it. Great is his love to them. He is loath to contend long with his people lest their spirit should fail before him. And an hour, a minute of his presence, richly rewards all their pains and sorrows in seeking for it. Promising is the appearance when the Word preached pointedly touches the heart and conscience of hearers, and leads them to careful inquiries concerning Christ. And remarkable fellowship with him effectually animates to an earnest wrestling in behalf of the church and public interests of religion. What extensive honour believers procure to themselves from all around them by an earnest care to maintain fellowship with him, and to follow him in a gracious, upright, and heavenly conversation! But if distinguished saints be so admirable and lovely, how much more is Christ himself and his covenant! With great care ought we to labour to have the heart and eyes of all around us fixed on him: for great indeed is his love, that he should take pleasure in espousing to himself poor, guilty, polluted, diseased, wretched, and mischievous sinners of mankind.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1–5, 7. Behold how glorious is the state of my church decked with ordinances, officers, and saints! How comely is she when ministers, her lights, or eyes, are intelligent, modest, humble, and holy, walking in all godly simplicity!—when converts, rooted in me as their Head, grow up in grace and perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord—feeding on the rich pastures of my Word, and surrendering themselves acceptable sacrifices to God!—How comely is she when ministers, who prepare spiritual nourishment for others, are sound in their doctrine, holy in their conversation, harmonious and meek in their behaviour, and active and successful in winning souls to me!—when their ministrations mark the soundness of their hearts!—when their dwelling on redemption through my blood, as their principal theme, renders themselves and their ministrations lively and pleasant; and when, with modesty, singleness, prudence, and order they, and other rulers, govern the flocks committed to their care!—when they, as superior to others in station, and as means of connecting them with Christ, and of conveying their spiritual nourishment, are upright, steady, and strong, and do watch over the church, and actively improve the whole armour of God for her defence and honour!—and when her various oracles, ordinances, and officers are remarkably useful for supplying the souls of men with the nourishing milk of God's Word!—But especially how fair and comely are believers, with respect to their personal capacity, when justified by active faith, and adorned with every spiritual grace!—when their spiritual knowledge, faith, and affection are sincere, single, humble, and seasonably discovered!—when their conversation in thought, word, and deed, notwithstanding many imperfections, is orderly and pure, manifesting a heart nourished in the pastures of the gospel!—when, by repeated acts of faith and meditation, they improve their spiritual provision; and their zeal for God is uniform, pure, and moderate, animating them to a fruitfulness in good works, and in winning others to me!—when their prayers and converse are profitable and pleasant, discovering the soundness of their heart, animated, and furnished by, and accepted through my blood!—when there is much secret and holy blushing on account of remaining defects!—when their faith, which unites them to me, furnishes with and really improves the whole armour of God for their defence from spiritual enemies, as the worthies of God formerly experienced!—when, feeding upon the doctrine of the prophets and apostles, they, to my inexpressible pleasure, abound in faith and love towards me, and in care to instruct and edify others!—How completely perfect are they in their justification, in the extent of their sanctification, and in my purpose and favourable acceptation. 6, 8. Till not only the gospel dispensation, but even the glorious millennium, and the resurrection to everlasting life, come, I, according to thy request, ch. 2. 17, will continue to bestow my special presence and influence in my church, which is rendered so delightful by my ordinances, and by the precious graces, prayers, and praises of my people.—Let therefore every one spiritually espoused to me there attend, and hold intimate fellowship with me, setting their affections on things above; forsaking the most excellent creature-satisfactions for my sake, shunning the intimacy of carnal, covetous, and violent men, and even the fellowship of superstitious, erroneous, and persecuting churches. 9, 10. O redeemed soul, partaker of the same human nature with me, begotten and adopted of my Father, and spiritually betrothed to my person, how, even with the weakest acts of thy faith, and the smallest degree of sincere grace and holy obedience, hast thou claimed, attracted, encouraged, and coupled my heart to thee! How incomparably acceptable and delightful is thy love, and that sweet fragrancy flowing from thy manifold graces! 11. How delightful thy prayers and praise! Thy instructing, reproving, and comforting discourse marks what sweet and nourishing truths and experiences are lodged in thy heart, and how delightful and attractive is thy holy and benevolent conversation! 12–14. My church is a delightful garden, separated from the world, set apart to the service of God, digged by gospel ministrations and influences, and especially protected by my providence, by the rules of order contained in my Word, and a medicinal spring of gospel truth hid from the view of a carnal world! And when purged of scandalous persons, her converts planted in the new kingdom do flourish more fragrant, delightful, precious, and useful, more numerous and different in circumstances, than all the fruit-bearing trees and spices of an orchard!—Yea, every particular believer is a garden set apart in beautiful order, and with infinite care and labour, to the service of God; and has in him the Holy Ghost and a principle of grace, as a well of water springing up into everlasting life: and in the most pleasant manner are their various gifts and graces exercised to my honour, their own advantage, and the edification of others.

BELIEVERS. 15. Blessed Jesus! great source and bestower of all life here or hereafter, it is to thy influences alone that we owe all our comeliness, fragrancy, and fruitfulness! let them run more abundantly into our hearts, that, by the exercise of thy grace, we may be rendered more useful to water and refresh others around! 16. And since we are thine, as well as under our own care, prevent everything tending to mar our fruitfulness; and let the Holy Ghost, in his convincing and sin-mortifying as well as in his comforting influences, stir up and quicken our hearts to a lively exercise of those gifts and graces with which we are endowed. And do thou, O Jesus, manifest thy presence in thine ordinances, and accept of and delight in those graces and good works which are wrought in us by faith in thyself.

Ver. 1. My love—'my Partner.' 'Thine eyes are doves' (see ch. 1. 15) behind thy vail.'—'Thine hair as a flock of goats.' They must have seen the beautiful hair of some of the Asiatic goats who would appreciate this comparison. C.

Ver. 2. None is barren. 'None is companionless,' an allusion to the correspondence of the upper and lower teeth, upon which both their beauty and utility so much depend.—Note, Personal beauty, like the other gifts of God, is good, and may, if not abused, be used for most gracious purposes. The details of personal beauty form, accordingly, most appropriate emblems of those gifts of the Spirit wherewith Christ adorns the believer and his bride the church. C.

Ver. 4. Reference may here be made not merely to the natural granates, with pleasant fruits; camphire,[7] with spikenard;

16 ¶ Awake,[y] O north wind; and come, thou south; blow upon my garden,[8] that [d]the spices thereof may flow out. [e]Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits.

7 This single passage should have convinced any commentator that this book had no reference whatever to Solomon the son of David; for it is utterly impossible that the most salloined vanity could compose and publish such a personal panegyric: but as an emblematic description of Messiah it well comports in glory with that exhibited to John the Divine, Re. 1. 13–16.—C.

6 I[p] opened to my beloved; [q]but my beloved had withdrawn himself, and was gone; [r]my soul failed when he spake: [s]I sought him, but I could not find him; I called him, but he gave me no answer.

7 The[t] watchmen that went about the city found me, they smote me, they wounded me; the keepers of the walls took away my vail from me.

9 ¶ What[v] is thy beloved more than another beloved, [v]O thou fairest among women? what is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?

symmetry and stateliness of the neck; but to the costly chains and ornaments of gold which it was customary to wear in great profusion round the neck. David's armoury tower was graceful in the style of its architecture; and it was hung round with golden shields and polished armour. P.

Ver. 6. The emblem here changes, and the speaker retires to Lebanon, the mountain from which he speaks in ver. 8. The emblem represents Christ inviting the believer (the church) to lofty ascents of contemplation and extended views of providence and redemption. C.

Ver. 9. One of thine eyes. 'One glance of thine eyes!' that language of humility, purity, devotedness—which nothing but the eye can speak. C.

Ver. 11. Lebanon. Whiteness and incense—the one meaning from its snowy top; the other from the fragrant plants that adorned its sides. C.

Ver. 12. 'A garden is inclosed, my sister espoused: a spring is shut up.' This garden, &c., not being the emblem of the bride herself, but of the protected beauties and comforts of her residence. C.——Fountains shut up and sealed, that is, so covered and inclosed as to be secure against all inspection, are not uncommon in Palestine. There is one at Solomon's Pools. It is in an artificial subterranean chamber, the entrance to which is closed, and a subterraneau channel conducts its waters into one of the great pools. P.

Ver. 15. A well of living waters. The emblem of the Word of Christ springing up continually in streams of life from the believer's heart and gospel ordinances, Jn. 4. 14. Streams from Lebanon. The emblem of the 'good and perfect gifts that come down from the Father of lights,' Ja. 1. 17. C.——Perennial streams are very rare in Palestine, but they abound in Lebanon. Their waters are limpid, sparkling, and of icy coldness. The streams and fountains of Lebanon are proverbial throughout Syria as emblems of luxury and pleasure. P.

REFLECTIONS.—What infinite love Jesus bears to all people! He puts upon them his own comeliness, when they exercise a living faith in him. Earnest is his desire of their company: and soon shall they be with him where he is, to share his happiness and honour! Never, but when he went to suffer, did he say, Let these go their way. They are a good savour of Christ to all around or above them. And when they rightly behold their own comeliness in him, it effectually humbles them, and makes them ascribe all the glory to him, and to cry for more abundant supplies of his sanctifying influences. Surely it is the greatest honour for them, as his peculiar property, to keep themselves entirely for his service.

CHAPTER V. CHRIST. 1. At thy request, believing soul, I vouchsafe my special presence in my church and ordinances. I have with pleasure observed thy lively preaching, and cordial application of my precious and soul-nourishing truths. I have particularly observed and accepted the graces and services of believers. Let them also feast abundantly on my gospel provision, and take the comfort of their graces and works, as evidences of their faith and great salvation.

BELIEVERS. 2. Alas! the dull and lukewarm frame in which Jesus often finds his churches when he comes to bless them! And how slothful and secure my animal nature had made me, even while my spiritual endeavoured to hear and entertain him! Amidst much deadness and unconcern, I felt some impressions made upon my heart by his Word, Spirit, and rod; while he, in the kindest manner, besought me to exercise my faith and love, and to remove whatever hindered his most intimate approaches, as he was closely related to me, had suffered much for me and from me, had waited long for my opening to him, and was much grieved with my neglect of him! 3. In the most pitiful manner I evaded compliance with his kind invitations, as a thing I was not at present fitted for, and which I could not do without crossing my corrupt inclinations and troubling my flesh. 4. By the immediate power of his Spirit, Jesus touched my heart through his Word, and kindly stirred up my affections to a concern for my former slighting of him, and to an earnest desire after his presence. 5. Repenting of my former stupidity and indifference, and actuated by his influence, I prepared myself to entertain his visit; my faith and other graces put themselves into active and vigorous motion for the removal of everything that tended to hinder his access to my soul. 6. Notwithstanding my vigorous actings of faith upon his self-giving promises, and panting desires after him, I did not obtain any sensible manifestations of his presence. My heart was then filled with pain, grief, and shame at the remembrance of his slighted invitation. I carefully attended his ordinances, public and private, in order to seek and find him: but met with nothing but frowns and disappointments. 7. When ministers touched my case in their discourses, they but raised my hopes and increased my anguish: by their harsh reproofs, calumnies, and persecutions, they wounded and distressed my soul. They whose duty it is to prevent everything tending to disturb the peace and edification of the church questioned the truth of my profession, and charged me with the vilest hypocrisy. 8. O! my fellow-professors, I beg and charge you, that if this my Lord Jesus allow you any sensible intimacy with himself, you will represent to him the distressed case of my soul, and entreat him speedily to visit me, who earnestly desires him, and am at the point of death for want of his sensible presence.

DAUGHTERS. 9. Distressed, but precious and lovely saint, what means this so solemn charge? What singular and transcendent excellency is in this Jesus, the beloved of thy heart?

BELIEVERS. 10. Boundless and incomparable is his excellency! A glorious Godhead and a suffering manhood, a holiness of heart and life, and a bloody suffering, a glorious exaltation, and a humble debasement, mercy towards his people, and judgment against unbelievers, concur to render him in every respect a miracle of beauty! He is infinitely more dignified, kind, rich, and glorious, than all the ten thousands of created beings in heaven and in earth; and, as the great standard-bearer, he goes forth, attended by angels and saints, conquering and to conquer. 11. In his divine nature, and as he is the Head of government and influence to all people, he is pure, precious, substantial, glorious, useful, enriching, and unchangeable! Lasting and immutable is his comeliness! Beautiful, mysterious, and majestic are his well-connected purposes and providences! And ever fresh and comely those societies of saints which are rooted and grounded in him! 12. Pure, penetrating, pleasant, beautiful, and comforting is his all-seeing knowledge and his tender pity and care! 13. Delightful the manifestations of his love, glory, and grace! His words are gracious and comfortable, continually refreshing, quickening, and supporting to the souls of his people! 14. Perfect, glorious, and lasting, and all managed with infinite skill, are his munificent liberality, almighty power, and marvellous works, particularly of grace! Sincere, lasting, and wisely ordered for the good of all people, are his great purposes of love, his tender bowels of mercy and compassion, and his sympathizing intercession! 15. Sufficient and wisely exerted are his strength and power to bear or act in the work of our redemption!

14 His[e] hands are as gold rings set with the beryl; [f]his belly is as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires:

15 His[h] legs are as pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold; [i]his countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars:

16 His[j] mouth is most [k]sweet; [k]yea, he is altogether lovely.[4] This[l] is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem.

Skilfully contrived, and firmly fixed on the precious and durable foundations of his grace, are the dispensations of his providence! Elevated, stately and pleasant, always verdant and refreshing, is the full manifestation of him in all his excellencies! 16. Pleasant is his Word and the sensible communications of his love! Nay, all that is in his person, offices, relations, names, blessings, and ordinances is inexpressibly desirable; and nothing is truly desirable but as in or connected with him. This, this, O fellow-professors, is my spiritual husband, and my constant and sympathizing lover and benefactor.

Ver. 1. This verse complies with the closing invitation of the preceding chapter, and represents Christ delighting in the feast of his church, and inviting all that follow him to participate in his joy. Jn. 3. 29. C.

Ver. 2. Open to me, my sister. The emblem of our Lord standing at the door and knocking, and waiting for the opening of the closed door, Re. 3. 20. C.

Ver. 3. Two excuses easy to be understood by those who observe that it is not Christ personal but Christ representative that now knocks for admission, see Mat. 25. 40, 45. And when the hungry, the thirsty, the naked, the stranger, and the imprisoned have knocked and called, how few will be able to plead that they have never hesitated to rise, and never invented a plausible excuse for neglecting to open the door! C.

Ver. 7. The watchmen that, by their faithful preaching of the truth, found out, detected, the lately negligent, but now aroused and anxious seeker; they smote, they wounded the conscience, and they took away the veil of every plausible excuse. C.

Ver. 16. He is altogether lovely. Independent of its inspiration and its emblematic object, this description must present to the eye of an unprejudiced artist an imagery of most unequalled range, the product of a mind fraught with universal information. Its chief topics of comparison are (1) Colours; (2) Officered armies, ver. 10; (3) Precious metal; (4) Ornithology, ver. 11, 12; (5) Botany, ver. 13; (6) Jewelry, ver. 14; (7) Architecture; (8) Landscape, ver. 15; (9) Attractive eloquence, ver. 16. Every province of nature and art thus furnishing its tribute to the 'King, the 'Lord of all!' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Quickly, when entreated, does Jesus come to comfort the hearts and supply the wants of his people; and brings with him for their refreshment the fulness of promises, grace, and joy. Enlarged appetites after spiritual blessings are necessary for gospel hearers. But it is strange that even saints should refuse his gracious visits, for which they had earnestly prayed and patiently waited. Hard is the heart that remains untouched by his affectionate calls; base is the temper which renders men careless about him and his influences; and shameful and frivolous are the best excuses which can be made for evading his visits. It is indeed impossible for people wholly to exclude him from their heart; and they procure for themselves great grief and toil by neglecting to entertain his offered kindness. But it is base for ministers to act imprudently and unTenderly towards those whose spirits the Lord has wounded. More dutiful and profitable is it to strive in prayers for one another. And how pleasant when, even under desertion, saints maintain the most exalted view of Jesus' person and fulness, and the most assured faith of their interest in them; and when even curious inquiries concerning him draw forth the warmest commendations of him!

CHAPTER VI. DAUGHTERS. 1. Precious saint, tell us where we may hope to find this thy beloved Saviour, that we may, after thy example, and in holy fellowship with thee, more heartily than ever seek him.

BELIEVERS. 2. Jesus, my beloved, is always present in his church, and is especially conversant in those assemblies where the graces of the people are most eminent; taking pleasure in and increasing their grace and comforts, and delighting to convert, and afterwards glorify, all who accept him. 3. And notwithstanding all my miscarriages, the mutual relation between him and me is as full and firm as ever; and he still delights himself in the assemblies of his people.

CHRIST. 4. In respect of oracles, ordinances, officers, and order, thou, my church, art extremely beautiful in my view, and terrible to enemies around. And in respect to real righteousness, glorious grace, and holy conversation, thou, O particular believer, art transcendently comely, and thy assured faith and fervent prayer overcome every opponent. 5–7. Such was my delight in the vigorous actings of thy faith and love, and in thy importunate prayers, that I could no longer absent myself; and being returned, I assure thee, for thy comfort, that thy holy thoughts and gracious exercise, thy unfeigned and operative faith, thy spiritual meditations, thy regular and active zeal, thy humility and self-abasement, together with all thy privileges, and everything belonging to my church, are as precious and comely as ever. 8, 9. Whatever beauties there be in earthly courts, there are none comparable to a true saint. In the one true church, nay, in one heavenly-begotten soul, there is more real comeliness than in all the world beside; all those of principal esteem, in either church or state, are disposed to express their approbation of it. 10. Gradual was the increasing light and glory of the church in her patriarchal, ceremonial, and gospel periods. Gradual and diversified is the growing comeliness and glory of every believer who truly turns to the light: they shine as the morning light, going on to perfection. In their borrowed and imperfect holiness they show fair as the moon; and in their genuine righteousness shine clear as the meridian sun; and, armed with the whole armour of God, they are terrible to every opposer. 11. Such is my regard to my church that, even while absent from thee, I was occupied among my outwardly mean but inwardly glorious and hidden ones, carefully observing if her fruitfulness in saints and in good works was answerable to her new-covenant soil, and how her various members did thrive in the advanced progress or weak beginnings of grace. 12. And thy vigorous actings of faith and fervent supplications took such hold of me, that I was constrained, as in a surprising transport of affection, speedily to return to thee in loving-kindness and in tender mercies. 13. Notwithstanding every former offence, return, therefore, my perfect and peaceable one, by faith and repentance, to thy wonted familiarity with me, that I and my Father, and blessed Spirit, and ministering angels may, with pleasure and satisfaction, behold thy beauties. However mean and worthless thou art in thy own eyes, yet how pleasant is it for me to behold Jews and Gentiles united into one society of saints, and to contemplate heavenly graces and holy duties withstanding and conquering the remains of inward corruptions, temptations, and fears!

Ver. 1 O thou fairest. This character of superlative female beauty, like the panegyric on male beauty, ch. 5. 10, &c., should have led every expositor to see that the book was never intended for any daughter of Eve; to any one of whom it had been the grossest flattery, alike degrading to the deceiving utterer and the credulous listener. But how literal the description when applied to her who is adorned by the Spirit with 'the beauty of holiness!' C.

Ver. 5. Turn away thine eyes. That is, thine eyes suffused with tears from seeking and suffering, ch. 5. 6, 7; see Ps. 116. 8. C.

Ver. 8. This is no enumeration of Solomon's family establishment, as it does not accord with the account in 1 Ki. 11. 3. It is an emblematic classification of the church, in which queens, concubines, and virgins are exactly equivalent to the triple classification, 1 Jn. 2. 12–14, fathers, young men, children. C.

Ver. 9. That is, the church in its progressive tripartite condition on earth, saw and praised the church in its glorified and perfected condition in heaven, as the most wondrous monument of the wisdom and grace of its Lord. C.

Ver. 11. The speaker in the first person from ver. 4 has been the bridegroom; and after the question, ver. 10, he resumes ver. 11. This must be the key, ver. 12, in which, not the bride, but the bridegroom speaks, saying, 'or ever I was aware'—before I had time for farther inquiry—'my soul,' my strong affection, 'set me on the chariots of my willing people'—the people promised to Christ 'in the day of his power,' Ps. 110. 3, and whom 'the love of Christ constraineth' carries along with him, to judge and live, 2 Co. 5. 14. C.

Ver. 13. Shulamite. The Hebrew feminine of Solomon: 'the peaceful and the perfect.' —The company of two armies. The word Mahanaim is applied to the two bands into which Jacob divided his family, also to the two hosts of angels that he saw, Ge. xxxii.; and may well represent the two bands of 'Jews and Gentiles' in the church, Jn. 10, 16, and the correspondent 'ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation,' He. 1. 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The believer's hearty commendations of Christ are glorious, when blessed by him, to return, that we may look upon thee. What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies.[9]

CHAPTER VII.

1 A further description of the church's graces. 10 The church professeth her faith and desire.

HOW beautiful[a] are thy feet with shoes, O prince's[b] daughter! [c]the joints of thy thighs are like jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman:

2 Thy[d] navel is like a round goblet, which wanteth not [1]liquor: [e]thy belly is like an heap of wheat set about with lilies:[2]

3 Thy[g] two breasts are like two young roes that are twins:

4 Thy[h] neck is as a tower of ivory; [i]thine eyes like the fish-pools in Heshbon by the gate of Bath-rabbim: [j]thy nose is as the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus:

5 Thine[k] head upon thee is like [3]Carmel,[4] and [l]the hair of thine head like purple: the King is held[5] in the galleries:

6 How[m] fair and how pleasant art thou, O love, for delights!

7 This[o] thy stature is like to a palm-tree, and[p] thy breasts to clusters of grapes.

8 I said, [q]I will go up to the palm-tree, I will take hold of the boughs thereof: now also thy [r]breasts shall be as clusters of the vine, and the [s]smell of thy nose like apples;[6]

9 And[t] the roof of thy mouth like the best wine for my beloved, that goeth down [7]sweetly, causing the lips of those that are asleep[8] to speak.[9]

10 ¶ I[u] am my beloved's, and his desire is toward me.

11 Come,[v] my beloved, let us go forth into the field; let us lodge in the villages:

12 Let[z] us get up early to the vineyards; let [w]us see if the vine flourish, whether the tender grape appear,[1] and the pomegranates bud forth: there will I give [x]thee my loves.[2]

13 The [y]mandrakes[3] give a smell, and at our gates are [b]all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The love of the church to Christ. 6 The vehemency of love. 8 The calling of the Gentiles. 14 The church prayeth for Christ's coming.

OH that [a]thou were as my brother, that sucked the breasts of my mother! when I should find thee without, I [b]would kiss thee; yea, I should not be despised.[1]

2 I[c] would lead thee, and bring thee into my mother's house, who would instruct me: I [d]would cause thee to drink of spiced wine of the juice of my pomegranate.[2]

3 His[e] left hand should be under my head, and his right hand should embrace me.

4 I[g] charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, that ye stir not up,[3] nor awake my love, until he please.

make others inquire after him. And it is prudent for deserted saints frequently and boldly to recognize the mutual relation betwixt Christ and their soul. Great is the mercy that, though he often for a time deserts a particular child, he never totally forsakes his church and ordinances, and often does much good while it is little perceived. How sweet and often surprising are the returns of his sensible presence! For unchangeable is his esteem of, love to, desire after, and delight in all people amidst all the changes of his countenance and providence. Engaging, honourable, and awful are the beauties of holiness when they shine in churches, ordinances, and saints. And unbounded is Jesus' care about all people, and to have them fruitful in graces and good works. He daily seeks to return them his sensible favours, and to see them cordially united among themselves, and valiantly contending with their spiritual enemies.

CHAPTER VII. 1–6. Thou, O my visible church, art adorned with ministers shod with the animating preparations of the gospel of peace;—ministers fixed in the most noted station, and contributing to thy inward health and fruitfulness;—strong in grace, and confirmed in the truth, and set for the defence of the gospel;—inteligent in the mystery of Christ, and sagaciously watching against thy spiritual foes.—Thou art also adorned with manifold oracles and ordinances, for the spread of my honour, the communication of my influences, and edification of my people.—How beautiful, O heaven-born soul, are thy affections and conversation, through the powerful influence of gospel truth! Glorious are thy inward principles of holiness, and first motions to good, wrought in thee by the Holy Ghost! Thy gracious desires are supplied with nourishing influences from above! Plentiful provision, and fruitfulness in holiness, is obtained by the digesting of my word in a particular application of it! Living on the breasts of inspired oracles and instituted ordinances, how glorious and attracting are the exercises of thy faith and love, and of thy holy endeavours to edify others! A sure and precious defence is thy unfeigned and vigorous faith! Clear and distinct is thy spiritual understanding in the matters of God! Wonderful is thy gracious sagacity in discovering truth, and discerning between good and evil: and attended with courage and watchfulness, especially against the most near, constant, and malicious enemies! Grounded in my blood, and effectually productive of good works, is thy towering hope supported by thy faith! And acceptable in me is even the very smallest part of thy holy principles or practices! 7. So affecting is thy beauty, bestowed by myself, that I cannot but regard thy fellowship, and take pleasure to look on, and abundantly delight in thee.—When the whole of thy graces and holy conversation is considered in connection, how comely, flourishing, victorious, and heavenly is the appearance! And how cordial and cheering to me are thy affection and kind entertainment; 8, 9. In my purpose I resolved, and in my promise I have sought, to manifest myself to my church, in converting nominal members, and vouchsafing my kindest fellowship to real saints.—This shall qualify thee to edify others, and give pleasure and satisfaction to me. Revived, refreshed, and comforted, by my influences, thy gracious discourse shall quicken and awaken others to taste of my love, and to open their mouths in my praise.

BELIEVERS. 10. O the inexpressible comfort which I enjoy in the faith of Jesus' relations, and in the intimations of his love to my soul! 11, 12. Beloved Redeemer and husband, let me, retiring from the hurry and cares of this present world, have the most ravishing and permanent fellowship with thee! Let me, without delay, not only have a deep concern for the spiritual prosperity of the church, but have an intimate and distinct knowledge of the condition of my own heart, and see whether my graces be weak or strong, flourishing or languishing. In this our retired communion will I discover the sincerity and fervency of my affection to thee. 13. While the precious, savoury, and medicinal truths of the gospel are to many a savour of life unto life; and while lively believers all around me begin to flourish and spread their heavenly influence; the inward graces of my heart show themselves in lively exercises; and everywhere new degrees of grace, and new acts of holiness, are added to the former: all which are, at thy command, set apart for promoting thine honour and service!

Ver. 1. Shoes. The shoes or sandals are noticed first, as the emblem of 'the feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace,' Ep. 6. 15.—The joints of thy thighs, &c. 'The mouldings of thy limbs are as ornaments, the workmanship of a skilful hand.' C.

Ver. 4. Heshbon was the capital of Sihon; and amidst its ruins a beautiful pool of water still exists. But is not the meaning of the emblem to be found rather in the meaning of the words, which abides, than in any work of art that might soon be destroyed? Heshbon signifies thought; Bath-rabbim, the house of the mighty; that is, 'Thine eyes are pools bright depths of intelligence and power.' C.

Ver. 5. 'Thy braided hair is like the royal purple festooned around the ceilings.'—Note, The word here translated galleries is also ch. 1. 17. translated rafters: it has also been translated ringlets. The precise meaning of the word is uncertain; but, from its relation to beams (ch. 1. 17), and the fact that eastern ceilings are generally of boards, it has here been rendered ceilings. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Extensive are the beauties of holiness in the church and people of God, and fixed and uniform in the substantials thereof. What delight Jesus takes in the persons and services of his followers! He is ready to hold the most intimate fellowship with them. And with ravishing pleasure they glory in him, and in his love towards them. When inwardly warmed by his love, how ready are they to relinquish everything else, in order to have familiar intercourse with him! And a deep concern for the church of Christ, and exact observation of our inward condition, effectually promotes our endeavours to honour him.

CHAPTER VIII. BELIEVERS. 1. Blessed Redeemer, O that that happy period were come, in which thou shalt assume our nature, and be a member of our visible church, and, in consequence thereof, admit us to the most intimate fellowship with thee! Then, without regard to reproach or persecution, should I openly profess my reverence, subjection, and affection to thee. 2. Instructed by thy Spirit, I should spread abroad the knowledge of thee in the extended gospel church, and all my gifts and graces should be employed to serve and glorify thee. 3. O the infinitely transporting, the intimate, the endearing, the strengthening and supporting fellowship that I should enjoy with thee! Nay, already the believing views of it fill my soul with the joys of my Lord! 4. Let me therefore once more charge you, my fellow-professors, to do everything in your power to continue this my delightful communion with Jesus Christ, and do nothing to interrupt it.

DAUGHTERS. 5. What admirable person is this, who, forsaking all worldly things for Christ, and delivered from her distressed condition, mounts up heavenward, by faith resting on him to bear her up under every burden, and forward through every duty and difficulty?

BELIEVERS. O Jesus, animated by thy own delightful influence, I have, by importunate prayers, obtained the most sensible manifestations of thy love; as others, in whose hearts thou art formed by faith, have also done. 6, 7. O let thy most endeared esteem, remembrance, and love of my soul, appear remarkably in all thy dispensations towards me: for so vehement and irresistible is my desire after intimate fellowship with thee, that nothing else can afford me satisfaction: no, not death and the grave are so dreadful to me as the fears of thy withdrawment! Kindled by thy love shed abroad in my heart, my love to thee melts all my inward powers, and burns up my corruptions. No affliction, temptation, desertion, or persecution can extinguish or abate it. Would the richest on earth tempt me from thee, with all his wealth, nay, with ten thousand worlds, I would utterly contemn and abhor the proposal. 8. But, Lord, we have many fellow-sinners, whom thou didst die for; particularly among the Gentiles, who enjoy no ordinances, and are yet unripe for their spiritual marriage, being destitute of faith and love; what shall we do to promote their conversion, when the offers of thy grace shall be made to them?

CHRIST. 9. When, according to my unchangeable purpose, they shall accept me as their foundation, I and my Father and blessed Spirit will endow them with manifold gifts and graces, and render them, in their hearts and church state, a firm tower and beautiful temple and palace for God. When the door of access to me shall be opened to them in the gospel, and the door of their heart opened to receive me, we, notwithstanding their insignificancy, weakness, troubles, and temptations, will thoroughly beautify, strengthen, and protect them.

BELIEVERS. 10. Indeed, blessed Redeemer, by thy infinite favour, I have been united to thee, and stand firm on thee as my foundation, and am come to some maturity and perfection in grace. 11. Thou, Lord Jesus, the infinitely wise and wealthy Prince of Peace, hast secured by thy blood, planted and purified by thy grace, sown with thy Word, and protected and managed by thy providence, the large vineyard of thy church. This thou hast committed to the care of thy gospel ministers, that they, by instructions, warnings, reproofs, and censures, might endeavour to their utmost to render the members fruitful in the works of righteousness, to thy praise and glory. 12. And, while the whole concerns of it are under thy special care, I have in charge the vineyard of my own heart, to watch over, defend, purge, and render fruitful in holy habits and exercises. Thou, Jesus, must have the principal honour of all that I am, have, or can attain to, and thy faithful ministers their subordinate share of my love and regard.

CHRIST. 13. Believing soul, who lovest and frequentest the assemblies of my people, and ordinances there dispensed, thy fellow-members regard and listen to thy instructions and warnings for their edification. Let me, when withdrawn from thee, particularly in my bodily presence, often hear thy prayers and praises, and the publication of my gospel in the world.

BELIEVERS. 14. And, O my blessed Husband and Saviour, not only maintain frequent and familiar intercourse with my soul, and with thy church on earth, in the instituted ordinances of thy worship, but hasten, hasten thy glorious appearance without sin unto our salvation;—when we shall be caught up to meet thee in the air, and shall, in one complete body, enter that happy, that eternal state, in which God shall be ALL in ALL.

Ver. 2. I would cause thee, &c. 'Thou shouldest accustom me to give thee spiced wine, with the juice of pomegranates.' C.

Ver. 5. I raised thee up. I revived thee, when left a helpless infant under the citron-tree. See Eze. 16. 4–8. In this reply the BELOVED speaks. C.

Ver. 6. For love is strong. 'Yea, love is strong,' &c. This is the reply of the Beloved who supports.—Jealousy, 'burning love'—cruel, rather, 'inexorable'—vehement flame, rather, 'the dissolving fire of Jehovah.' C.

Ver. 8. The grammar of the passage suggests that the 'daughters of Jerusalem,' who speak (ch. 1. v.), who are still present (ch. 8. 4), are here the solicitous projectors for the welfare of the 'little sister.' This emblem has been expounded of the Gentile church—but it seems much more natural to understand by it such as are yet 'weak in the faith,' Ro. 14. 1; 15. 1; 1 Co. 3. 2; Ep. 4. 13. C.

Ver. 10. This has generally been considered as the answer of the 'little sister,' exemplifying full and instantaneous 'growth in grace.' But as the grammar will not warrant any change from the speaker in the first person (ver. 1, 2, 4) and the speaker in the first person (ver. 10), this must be understood as the language of the bride, encouraging the 'little sister' by her own experience of grace and attainments in faith. C.

Ver. 11. Baal-hamon, ruler of multitudes.—The keepers represent the rulers and instructors of the churches in their multitudes.—A thousand. As the annual rent for a vine seems to have been ordinarily a piece of silver, Is. 7. 23, the emblem indicates that return of 'fruit of the Spirit,' Ga. 5. 22, which is ever due in correspondence to privileges. C.

Ver. 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens. It is impossible by the grammar to distinguish the speaker in ver. 13 from the speaker in ver. 14; and as in ver. 14 she calls to the listener, my Beloved, the speaker is the bride calling to her Redeemer, 'Even so, come, Lord Jesus!' Re. 22. 17, 20. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How kind, how marvellous is it, that God's only begotten Son, the brightness of his glory, has, by his assumption of our nature, become our brother, and will for ever continue bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh! And great is the mercy, that to him the gathering of the Gentiles hath and shall be! It is pleasant to remember past experiences of his love in the assured expectations of others still more sweet! And delightful is the frame, ardent the desires, and fervent the prayers, when a soul is overwhelmed with the consolations of Christ! Importunate intercession for the spiritual welfare of others often produces remarkable fellowship with him. Extensive revenues of holy thoughts, words, and deeds are due from every member of the church to Jesus Christ. And they who give him his due, will give his ministers theirs. But how strongly Christ and his people's hearts must be knit one to another! They cannot live but as it were in mutual intercourse. Soon will he come to take them to himself in glory; and, in the believing view of it, their waiting spirits cry, 'Even so, come, Lord Jesus.'

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

Three points present themselves to the Christian reader and student in the preceding book:—

I. Was this book received into the canon of Holy Scripture, and sanctioned by our Lord and his apostles? To this there can be but one answer—it was.

II. Are there, in the New Testament, any such evident references as form a key to its interpretation? Such evident references may be found, Mat. 21. 33, when comp. with Song 8. 11; Ep. 5. 27, comp. with Song 4. 1, 7; Ep. 6. 15, comp. with Song 7. 1; Re. 3. 20, comp. with Song 5. 2. Other references have been suggested, but these are so evident as not to admit of question.

III. Are there such quotations of passages of Scripture parallel to or identical with the Song of Solomon, by which its spiritual import can be unquestionably established? The answer to this question is easy and direct. (1) By referring to He. 1. 8 there is found a direct address from God the Father to God the Son. (2) That address is quoted from Ps. 45. 6. (3) It is impossible to overlook the complete parallelism, nay identity, of that psalm with the scenery and character of the Song of Solomon. Therefore, by following the scriptural plan—comparing spiritual with spiritual, and the natural law of all interpretation—rising from what is plainly stated, granted, or ascertained, to what is less plain, questioned, or yet unknown, there can be no difficulty in coming to the conclusion, that the Song of Solomon forms a succession of emblems whereby the mutual love and union between Christ and his church are described for the instruction and comfort of believers.

That the Song of Solomon is capable of ready and great perversion, by 'men of corrupt minds,' is undoubted. For, whilst 'to the pure all things are pure,' so to the impure all things are impure. And such is the state of the carnal mind, that just in proportion as any object is good, in like proportion may it be perverted to purposes of evil. Thus—just in proportion as a medicine is powerful to restore, may its improper administration render it powerful to destroy. And thus grace, in its every form, may be turned into licentiousness. But is the sufferer, therefore, to be deprived of a powerful medicine?—or is the physician who discovered and prescribed it to be pronounced an evil-doer? Is the sinner, therefore, to be deprived of access to pardon; and the God of all grace and consolation to be disrobed of his attribute of mercy? No. And neither is the church of God to be deprived of some of the brightest pages in the divine Word, because eyes that have 'loved darkness' cannot perceive their beauties.

To those who have observed what a prominent place love to Jesus holds in the New Testament (see for example, Jn. 14. 23; 1 Co. 16. 22; 2 Co. 5. 14), and to those who have experienced and rejoiced in 'the assurance' of that love—the Song of Solomon will ever furnish a subject of study, at once most delightful and profitable.—C.

The various modes of interpreting this remarkable and extremely difficult book may be classified under three heads:—The Literal, the Typical, and the Allegorical.

1. The Literal makes the book a simple story related in the form of a dramatic poem. The facts of the story are given by Dr. Ginsburg as follows:—'A village girl, the daughter of a widowed mother of Shulam, is betrothed to a young shepherd, whom she met whilst tending the flock. Fearing lest the frequent meetings of these lovers should be the occasion of scandal, the brothers of the Shulamite employ her in the vineyard on the farm. Whilst on the way to this vineyard she one day falls in with the cortége of King Solomon, who is on a spring visit to the country. Struck with her beauty the king captures her, conveys her to his royal pavilion, then conducts her to Jerusalem in great pomp, in the hope of dazzling and overcoming her with his splendour, and eventually lodges her in his harem. But all is in vain. True to her virtuous love, she resists all the allurements of the exalted sovereign, spurns all his promises to elevate her to the highest rank, and in the midst of the gay scenes assures her humble shepherd, who followed her to the capital, that her affections are sacredly and inviolably pledged to him. Solomon, convinced at last that all his advances are in vain, allows her to quit the royal residence. Hand in hand the two faithful lovers return to her native place, and on their way home visit the tree under which their love-spark was first kindled, and there renew their vows of constancy and fidelity. On their arrival they are welcomed by their companion shepherds, and she is rewarded by her brothers for her exemplary virtue.' It is said that the object or moral of this charming story is 'to teach a lesson of practical righteousness by the record of an extraordinary example of virtue in a young maiden in humble life who encountered and conquered the greatest temptations from the most exalted personage in the land.' The theory is attractive, and the arguments employed in defence of it are not without weight; but I think the thoughtful student of God's Word, and especially such as have studied the genius of oriental poetry and imagery, will see that there is something higher and nobler in this book, than such a moral lesson. And, besides, I cannot see that the various parts of the book can be made at all to harmonize with such a simple and detailed story. In my mind the imagery is too sublime, the descriptions of far too elevated a character, to be applied even by an eastern poet to any mere narrative of real life.

2. The Typical theory of interpretation adopts as a basis the historical truth of the narrative, making the bride either Pharaoh's daughter, or some maiden of Palestine, whom Solomon had loved and married; but then this bride typified the church, and Solomon typified Christ, while the whole story was designed to represent in prophetic imagery the love subsisting between Christ and his church—a love mutual, indissoluble, and eternal. The great difficulty in the way of this theory is to establish the historical character of the narrative. A type must be a fact; and the narrative here has all the characteristics of ideality as distinguished from reality. No writer, however poetical, would describe ordinary events in such language as is employed in ch. 2. 1–4, 14; 6. 10–12; and no writer, even in the East, would put such language in the mouth of a virtuous maiden as we find in ch. i. ii. viii.

3. The Allegorical interpretation of the book seems to me to be the only possible and true one. The poem is conceived in the loftiest style of eastern imagery. Incidents of real life, events of everyday occurrence, customs which still prevail in the East form a groundwork, but they are all idealized and spiritualized, so that they may more strikingly exhibit to the pure and spiritual mind, grand divine truths. The leading image is common in Scripture. Human love in its purest and holiest type—that of husband and wife—is the symbol of the love of Christ and his church, of God and his people. Thus Isaiah says, 'Thy Maker is thine husband: the Lord of hosts is his name,' ch. 54. 5; and still more clearly: 'For thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married. . . . As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee,' ch. 62. 4, 5. The forty-fifth Psalm greatly resembles this book in style and imagery. So also the same imagery is common in the New Testament: 'I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ," 2 Co. 11. 2. The whole bearing and force of that beautiful passage in Ep. 5. 22–33 rest upon this same figure. The apostle John too, in the last book of the Sacred Canon, appears to embody the very idea of the Song of Solomon, when he records his glorious vision: 'And I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.'

This is substantially the system of interpretation which was adopted generally by the Jews, and is developed in the Talmud. By them, of course, God is represented as the Beloved, and the people of Israel the loved one. In the early Christian church, the same view was taken, and was held almost universally until impugned by Erasmus. It appears to me to be in accordance with the analogy of Scripture, and with the genius of eastern poetry. The whole structure of the composition, too, discursive, yet having a subjective coherence, tends to the same conclusion. There is in it no sustained plot, no crisis of a story. It consists of expressions of most devoted affection, with reference to localities and ever-changing scenery, all adapted to call forth new emotions, and to exhibit unalterable love. Viewed in this light, interpreted in this manner, it is one of the purest and noblest portions of Holy Writ. It lifts the mind into an ideal world of spiritual communion with God in Christ. It shows us his tenderness, his watchful care, his devoted unceasing attachment to his people in all their waywardness, temptations, sorrows, and persecutions, such as we can see nowhere else. It shows us that friends and kindred—the nearest and dearest, may desert us in the hour of trial, but God will not and cannot, for love binds him to us and us to him by a tie that is indissoluble.

Yet, still, holy, pure, and comforting as this book is to the man whose nature the Spirit of God has mastered, the profitable reading of it by the ordinary Christian is confessedly difficult. Each one knows his own heart, and can best review his own feelings. But in this western land, where we are not accustomed to the gorgeousness of eastern imagery, or the nature of eastern life and manners, we need watchfulness, prayer, and a heart completely under the control of the sanctifying Spirit, if we would derive from this book those noble lessons which God intended it to embody and impart.

It is sometimes said that the Song of Solomon is not quoted or referred to in the New Testament, and that therefore it cannot have that high spiritual significancy which I have above advocated. In reply I quote the words of Hengstenberg:—'The New Testament is pervaded by references to the Song of Songs, and all of them are based on the supposition that it is to be interpreted spiritually. Proportionally no book of the Old Testament is so frequently referred to, implicitly or explicitly, in the New Testament, as this one; and we cannot but be surprised at the superficiality or the prejudices of those who have asserted that the Song of Songs is never quoted in the New Testament.' The following passages afford ample proof that its language and spirit were constantly before the mind of our Lord and his apostles, Mat. 6. 28–30; 13. 25; 24. 42, 21. 33; 26. 6–13; Mar. 14. 3; Lu. 12. 35–37; 13. 31, 32; 7. 38; Jn. 6. 44; 7. 33, 34, 12. 3; 21. 16; 3. 29; 2. 1–11; Ep. 5. 27.—P.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET

ISAIAH,

Who continued prophesying about sixty years with small success, ch. 1. 1; 53. 1. He was not the most ancient of the sixteen prophets; but his predictions, containing so much of Christ in them, are now placed first in order. The first thirty-nine chapters, except iv. xi. xii. xxvi. xxxii. xxxv. consist chiefly of divine indictments for sins and denunciations of judgments; the last twenty-seven, of promises relative to the deliverance from Babylon and to the gospel church. In ch. i.–iii. v. vii. ix. xxii. xxiv. xxvii. 7–11; xxviii.–xxx. 1 17; xxxi. 1–3; lix. lxv. lxvi. is represented the ingratitude, unfruitfulness, idolatry, profaneness, female pride, oppression, drunkenness, perversion of judgment, &c., of the Hebrews; and the terrible punishments thereof by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Romans, &c., are predicted. In ch. vii. 5–9; viii. 4, 21, 22; ix. 8 21; xvii. is predicted the ruin of the kingdom of Syria and Israel, and the calamities of the Philistines, xiv. 29 31; of the Moabites, xv. xvi.; xxv. 10; of the Egyptians and Ethiopians, xviii.–xx.; of the Arabians, xxi. 13–17; of the Edomites, xxi. 11. 12; xxxiv.; of the Tyrians, xxiii.; of the Assyrian army under Sennacherib, x. xiv. 24–27; xvii. 12 14; xxvii. 1; xxix. 5–8; xxx. 27–33; xxxi. 4–9; xxxiii., which is accomplished, xxxvi. xxxvii.; of the Chaldeans, xiii. xiv.; xxi. 1–10; xliii. 10; xlv. 1–4; xlvi. 1, 2, 11; xlvii. With those charges of guilt and predictions of judgments are intermingled many precious promises of the redemption and glorious kingdom of the Messiah; as i. 18, 25, 27; ii. 2 5; iv. 2 6; vii. 14; viii. 14; ix. 6, 7; xi. xii. xxv.–xxviii. 16. From xl. to the end, the deliverance of the Jews from Babylon and the vanity of idols are frequently hinted; but the incarnation, service, and glory of the Messiah, the erection of the gospel church, the calling of the Gentiles, the rejection and future restoration of the Jews, are the principal subjects. And on account of his clear and striking representations of Jesus Christ and his blessings, and of the gospel church, this prophet has been frequently styled a fifth evangelist.

[Isaiah, if not the first of the noble band of Old Testament prophets, yet belonged to the first cycle or group. His writings were commenced in the reign of Uzziah, B.C. 808 757, and were continued during the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and down to the close of the reign of Hezekiah, B.C. 698. From the commencement of his prophecies to the close must thus have been more than half a century. He was a contemporary of Hosea, Joel, Amos, Jonah, and Micah. Nothing certain is known of his genealogy or his private life. From his dress, which appears to have resembled that of Elijah, it might perhaps be concluded that he belonged to one of the transjordanic tribes, ch. 20. 2, or to some remote village in the wilderness of Judah. He resided, however, during his public ministry, in Jerusalem, and near the temple; and he appears to have been held in the highest respect by the princes of the land, and to have exercised much influence in the affairs of the nation. In sublimity of style, purity of diction, and clearness of prophetic delineation of the person, character, and work of the Messiah, Isaiah stands pre eminent among Old Testament writers. He has been truly called the 'evangelical prophet.' P.]

* In reading this and the subsequent prophets, great attention must be paid to rule x in chap. ii. of the Introduction, relative to the fulfilment of the same prophecy in different periods; and to history of nations in chap. iv.

CHAPTER I.

1 Isaiah complaineth of Judah for her rebellion. 5 He lamenteth her judgments. 10 He upbraideth their whole service, 16 and exhorteth to repentance. 21 He bewaileth their wickedness. 25 He promiseth grace, 28 and threateneth destruction to the wicked.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 2. Ye heavens and earth, and all that dwell therein, with astonishment know and bear witness that I have marvellously raised up, privileged, preserved, protected, and advanced this Jewish nation; and yet they have, on occasions and in ways unnumbered, perfidiously violated my covenant, and rebelled against my commandments. 3. Brutishly ignorant and inconsiderate of everything important, they scarcely pay me and my ordinances the regard that cattle do to their owners and their stables. 4. Alas! the whole nation is polluted with, and guilty of, the most shocking and multiplied abominations! Unlike to their pious ancestors, they tread in the wicked steps of their immediate parents: they wax worse and worse themselves, and labour to render their posterity still more and more wicked. Revolting more and more from the service and worship of JEHOVAH their God, they have provoked his fearful indignation against themselves. 5. Further punishment of their sin with temporal calamities would but render them still more outrageous and obstinate in wickedness. Already corruption hath infected all ranks, the rulers and the ruled, without any proper means used to prevent it; and misery and distress have overwhelmed the whole nation. 7–9. The Israelites, Syrians, Assyrians, or others, have already, by fire and sword, desolated the whole country of Judah; and Jerusalem alone remains, and that in great danger and distress: and were it not from regard to a few righteous persons still left among us, the whole nation had been utterly destroyed by God in accordance with just law. 10–15. Be therefore assured, saith God, ye detestable monsters of wickedness, that, while ye indulge yourselves in your sinful courses, all your ceremonial services, however solemn and expensive, and even your prayers, amounting to nothing more than legal dissimulation, are utterly abominable, and do but more and more provoke me to wrath. 16 20. By faith applying the word, the blood, the Spirit of Jesus, for your effectual purification from sin, repent of and turn from your vices; and conscientiously exercise yourselves in the contrary virtues of piety, equity, and kindness.—In so doing, you shall not only find your most grievous iniquities, the murder of the Messiah not excepted, fully and freely forgiven, but enjoy a safe and happy continuance in your country. But if you remain obstinate in your evil ways, your destruction, by the sword of your enemies, is inevitable. 21 24. Jerusalem, once so famed for a faithful adherence to the laws and worship of God, and for the justice and integrity of its magistrates and people, has now apostatized to idolatry and every other form of wickedness, and is filled with murders of innocents, saints, and prophets, and even of the Messiah. The practices of all ranks are quite corrupted and their principles depraved, and even the oracles of God debased, by false glosses and human traditions. Magistrates, and other great men, are ringleaders in wickedness, conniving at, or protecting men in, dishonesty; giving sentence according as they are bribed; and suffering the poor, fatherless, and widows, who have nothing to give, to be oppressed without redress. Therefore shall JEHOVAH manifest his almighty power, which has been so long employed in acts of mercy to Israel, in utterly destroying these monsters who desperately hate and oppose him, and are a burden to his Spirit. 25–27. Part of the nation shall nevertheless be preserved, and remarkably reformed by his power and grace. Magistrates and ministers, as in the days of Joshua and David, shall be and bruises, and putrifying sores: they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment.[6]

7 Your[o] country is desolate, your cities are burnt with fire: your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, as overthrown by strangers.[7]

8 And the daughter of Zion[8] is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, as a besieged city.

9 Except[p] the LORD of hosts had left unto us [q]a very small remnant, we should have been as [r]Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah.

10 ¶ Hear[s] the word of the LORD, [t]ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah:

11 To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices[u] unto me? saith the LORD: I am full[9] of the burnt-offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats.[1]

12 When [v]ye come to appear[2] before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts?

13 Bring[w] no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; [x]the new-moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity,[3] even the solemn meeting.

14 Your new-moons and your appointed feasts my soul [y]hateth: they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them.

15 And[a] when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers,[4] I will not hear: your hands are full of [5]blood.[6]

16 ¶ Wash[b] you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; [c]cease to do evil;

17 Learn to do well; [d]seek judgment, [7]relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.

18 Come[e] now, and let us reason together, saith the LORD: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

19 If[g] ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land:

20 But[h] if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword: for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.[8]

21 ¶ How is the [i]faithful city become [j]an harlot![9] it was full of judgment: righteousness lodged in it; but now murderers.

22 Thy[k] silver is become dross, thy wine mixed [l]with water:

23 Thy[m] princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves: every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards: they [n]judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them.

24 Therefore, saith the Lord, the [o]LORD of hosts, the [p]mighty One of Israel, Ah, [q]I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies:

25 And [r]I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely[1] purge[t] away thy dross, and take away all thy tin:

26 And I will [u]restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counsellors as at the beginning: afterward thou shalt be called, [v]The city of righteousness, The faithful city.

27 Zion [w]shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts[2] with righteousness.

28 ¶ And the [x]destruction[3] of the transgres-

active, upright, and faithful, and the people famed for righteousness in their dealings with men, and for their adherence to the covenant and worship of their God. Thus, through God's righteous execution of judgment upon the wicked and chiefly through the glorious righteousness of his Son, shall his true worshippers, Jews and Gentiles, be delivered from corruption and misery. 28–31. But dreadful and general shall be the ruin of obstinate sinners, who continue in their rebellion against God, and contempt of his worship and Son. Their idols and groves, instead of preserving them, shall add to their confusion and misery.—Deprived of every delight and every enjoyment, they and their idols shall, in the most easy, irresistible, and remediless manner, be destroyed by the sure judgment of God, procured by their sins.

Ver. 2. 'It is Jehovah that speaketh:' 'I have magnified and exalted children,' raised them to eminence in literature, arts, science, agriculture, commerce, and power. C.

Ver. 7. This passage cannot be regarded as literally applicable to any period during the life of Isaiah. It is prophetic rather than historical. It predicts a state of things which must inevitably result from sin and rebellion against God. The judgments are so certain that the prophet speaks of them as if already executed. The language is fearfully graphic, and the curse most terrible and comprehensive.—The country, fields and vineyards, plains and mountains, a desolation. The cities, including every inhabited spot, burned. The land, in all its produce and fruits, eaten up by strangers, and left like a wilderness. P.——Your country is desolation. The period to which this prophecy refers is not stated, but it cannot be referred to the reign of Uzziah, which was prosperous (2 Ch. xxvi.), but may well accord with that of the idolatrous Ahaz, 2 Ch. xxviii. C.

Ver. 8. Cucumbers of various kinds are in great repute in the East as articles of food, and consequently liable to depredations. Zion, in her ruined state, is compared to those temporary huts provided to protect the watchmen of the gardens, either in the heat of the day or dews of the night.—Note. Even the most prosperous countries have many ruins—objects of continual attraction to the traveller, the painter, or the poet. But there is scarcely a ruin in any land that is not a memorial of God's judgments against the kings and nobles, and churches and people, of other days—and a warning to those of present days to 'flee from the wrath to come.' C.

Ver. 10. In all countries, and in all ages of degeneracy, there has been a constant effort at mutual recrimination between 'rulers and people;' the rulers charging the people with insubordination and want of economy, the people charging the rulers with misgovernment and extravagance. Under the ominous names of rulers of Sodom, and people of Gomorrah, God rebukes and threatens both. C.

Ver. 12. Who hath required this? He does not mean, Who has required sacrifice; but, Who has required sacrifices from such impure worshippers? C.

Ver. 16. Wash you, make you clean. That is, 'in the blood of the Lamb,' Re.7.14. Neither is there cleansing or salvation in any other. C.

Ver. 18. White as snow that fell from heaven and never was trodden on or stained. White as wool that has been cleansed in water from all impurity. C.

Ver. 23. Gifts. 'Bribes.' The common and abiding curse of all eastern despotisms, in which justice is bought and sold as a common article of traffic; and one of the most portentous symptoms of degeneracy and signs of judgment that can ever infect any individual church or nation. C.

Ver. 25. The meaning is, that God himself, by his judgments, and the sanctifying power of his Spirit, would thoroughly purify his people, removing evil rulers, corrupt judges, and false principles, and developing righteousness and purity in heart, intellect, and social life. P.

Ver. 26. Spiritually this prediction has certainly been fulfilled, for the apostle expressly says, 1 Co. 5. 12: 'Do not ye judge them that are within?' See also 1 Co. 6. 1–5. But as the judgments were temporal, is there not reason to conclude that the blessing will also be temporal; and that Israel restored may yet literally have 'judges as at the first, and counsellors as at the beginning?' Lord, remember thy covenant, and hasten the time! C.

Ver. 30. 'The mention of trees and gardens, as places of idolatrous worship, suggests a beautiful comparison, under which the destruction of the idolaters is again set forth. They who choose trees and gardens, in preference to God's appointed place of worship, shall themselves be like trees and gardens, but in the most alarming sense. For, in answer to the vain question why they should be ashamed and confounded for their oaks and gardens, ye yourselves shall be like an oak fading, decaying in its leaf, and like a garden which has no water,—a lively emblem, to an oriental reader, of entire desolation' (Alexander). P.

REFLECTIONS.—Prophets and ministers must always declare that will of God which themselves have seen and believed: and God often much diversifies the opportunities which he gives them to declare it. In the most awful manner both heaven and earth attest the importance of what he speaks, and the equity of what he inflicts. How horrid is ingratitude, notwithstanding mercies innumerable received! And shocking is the ignorance and thoughtlessness which are sometimes found among professors of the truth. When heinous corruptions become universal, inveterate, and highly aggravated, what can be expected but ruinous judgments, in which every act and form of wickedness will be resented! But desperate is their case who are hardened by both mercies and judgments, and to whom God ceases to be a reprover. It is a great mercy for a nation, universally ripe for ruin, to have yet a small number of eminent saints. Thrice happy are they who are of the number, and are by true faith preserved from going to hell with the multitude. The greatest enemies to the power of godliness are often the most rigid observers of the form; and men will flee to their most costly devotions for relief, while they cleave to the sins which are the cause of their misery. But nothing is more abominable to God than indulged hypocrisy in our devotions. Indulged sin is so odious sors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the LORD shall be consumed.

29 For [a]they shall be ashamed of the oaks which ye have desired, and ye shall be confounded for the gardens that ye have chosen.[4]

30 For [c]ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water.

31 And [b]the strong shall be as tow, and the maker of it[5] as a spark, and they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them.

CHAPTER II.

1 Isaiah prophesieth the coming of Christ's kingdom. 6 Wickedness is the cause of God's forsaking his people. 10 He exhorteth to fear, because of the powerful effects of God's majesty.

THE word[a] that Isaiah the son of Amoz saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem.

2 And [b]it shall come to pass in the last days, that [c]the mountain of the LORD's house shall be established[1] in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations[2] shall flow unto it.

3 And many people shall go and say, [c]Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he[3] will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for [b]out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

4 And [d]he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: [e]and they shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks:[2] nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

5 O house of Jacob, [f]come ye, and let us walk in the light of the LORD.[3]

6 ¶ Therefore thou hast [g]forsaken thy people the house of Jacob, because they be [h]replenished from[4] the east,[5] and are soothsayers like the Philistines, [c]and they please[6] themselves in the children of strangers.

7 Their[p] land also is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures; their [q]land is also full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots:

8 Their[r] land also is full of idols; they worship the work of their own hands, that which their own fingers have made:

9 And [s]the mean man boweth down, and the great man humbleth himself: therefore [7]forgive them not.[8]

10 ¶ Enter[t] into the rock, and hide thee in the dust, for fear of the LORD, and for the glory of his majesty.

11 The [u]lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the [v]LORD alone shall be exalted in that day.

12 For [w]the day of the LORD of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up, and he shall be brought low;

13 And upon all the [y]cedars of Lebanon that are high and lifted up, and upon all the oaks of Bashan,[9]

14 And [z]upon all the high mountains, and upon all the hills that are lifted up,

15 And upon every high tower, and upon every fenced wall,

16 And upon [a]all the ships of Tarshish, and upon all pleasant pictures.[1]

17 And[b] the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low; and the LORD alone shall be exalted in that day.

18 And[c] the idols he shall utterly abolish.[2]

19 And they shall go into the [d]holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth,[3] for fear of the LORD, and for the glory of his majesty, when [e]he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.

20 In that day a man [f]shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold,[4] which they made each one for himself[5] to worship, to the moles and to the bats;[6]

21 To [h]go into the clefts of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, for fear of the LORD, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.

22 Cease[i] ye from man,[7] whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?

* There can be no doubt that the cedars are the prophetic emblems of exalted rank, the oaks of power, &c. Still the predictions will be literal, for the wanton destruction of trees for camp-fires, rendering a country bare and desolate, is at all times a conspicuous memorial of the miseries of continued war.—C.

to him, that it renders all our prayers hateful in his sight.—What an extensive and laborious work is the real exercise of godliness! God, by the most gracious pardons, and the most full though merciful rewards, encourages us to it: and graciously he warns men before he strikes them with his judgments. But, alas! nothing is too horrid for apostate professors to commit. And injustice to men, especially the poor, marks magistrates and others as the detested enemies of God, whom he can easily destroy. Reformation and redemption are truly the work of God through the blood of his Son. In his great mercy he redeems believers, when the bulk by their choice perish in their sin. And no ruin is more certain and dreadful than of those who obstinately refuse and apostatize from Christ.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 2–5. In the apostolic and spiritual periods, the firmly established and never to be changed gospel church shall, in all kingdoms, be erected in the most visible manner, and people shall, by the faith and profession of Jesus Christ, enter into it as members. They shall earnestly stir up one another to attend upon the ordinances, and learn and embrace the doctrines of salvation, which began to be published at Jerusalem. And under conviction, conversion, and gracious government, Jesus Christ shall introduce spiritual peace and holy exercises, and even civil concord and virtuous industry, among the nations where murderous wars and idleness had long prevailed. —And may you, Jews, excited by your own preachers and by the Gentiles, cheerfully join yourselves, and partake of these blessed oracles, instructions, and comforts of the Lord Jesus Christ. 6–9. Provoked by their confederacies, and by their mingling themselves with the heathen; their imitation of the Chaldeans on the east and Philistines on the west in magic and divination; and by their insatiable heaping up of wealth, multiplication of horses and chariots, and of idols, and the worship thereof by all ranks,—the Lord has rejected the Jewish nation, and will not suffer them to escape unpunished. 10–17. Notwithstanding all the possible efforts they may make to escape his indignation, the Lord shall through his active providence find them, however high in station, mighty in power, abundant in wealth and trade, or comely in appearance. 18–21. Convinced of the vanity of their idols, they shall renounce them, or, desperately fleeing from the judgments of God, shall cast them from them.

Ver. 2. The last days. The meaning and commencement of the 'last days' is fixed by Peter, Ac. 2. 16–21, by means of the prophetic marks delivered by Joel, ch. 2. 28–32, within which days Joel places the restoration of the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, ch. 3. 1. C.

Ver. 4. This prediction from ver. 2–4 is in exact correspondence with that in ch. 1. 26, 27. But the first prediction commences with the period when the country was overrun by enemies, and utterly impoverished and ruined, ch. 1. 7–9; whereas this prediction commences a little farther back, when this land was yet 'full of silver and gold,' no end of their treasures, no end of their chariots, ch. ii.; but rapidly advances to the same period of ruin, first in prophecy, ch. 2. 12–17, and in fulfilment, ch. 3. 1–8. C.

REFLECTIONS.—No dispensations of grace must be looked for after that which we at present enjoy. No oppression can hinder the flourishing of the church when the Lord rises up for her help: and no darkness nor error can hide her when Jesus manifests forth his glory. No remarkable fellowship with Christ must be expected but in the way of going upward. And it is comfortable that, amidst the present corruptions and contentions in the Christian church, we may look back-

VIEW FROM THE MOUNT OF BEATITUDES—SHOWING WHERE CHRIST DELIVERED THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT. [Isaiah, ii:3.]—"And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Looking from the Mount of Beatitudes toward the east, we see beneath our feet Lake Galilee, the most beautiful body of water in the world, and then rising gloomy and solemn above it and beyond it, the mountains and hills which make up the Gadarene country. Mount Hermon to the north is in full view, and the whole horizon we take in from this point is filled with points connected with the history of modern civilization. Here was uttered the sermon, which by common consent of the human race, is put down as the wisest that ever fell from the lips of man. Here was the scene of the famous victory of Saladin over the Crusaders on July 5th, 1187.

CHAPTER III.

1 The calamities coming upon Judah because of sin. 9 The impudence of the people. 12 The oppression and covetousness of the rulers. 16 The judgments which shall be for the pride of the women.

FOR,[1] behold,[a] the Lord, the LORD of hosts, doth take away from Jerusalem and from Judah the stay and the staff, the whole stay of bread, and the whole stay of water,

2 The[b] mighty man, and the man of war, the judge, and the prophet, and the prudent, and the ancient,

3 The captain of fifty, and the honourable man,[2] and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator.[3]

4 And I will give [c]children to be their princes, and babes shall rule over them.[4]

5 And[d] the people shall be oppressed, every one by another, and every one by his neighbour: the [e]child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient, and the base against the honourable.[5]

6 When a man shall [f]take hold of his brother, of the house of his father, saying, Thou hast clothing, be thou our ruler, and let this ruin be under thy hand:

7 In that day shall he swear,[6] saying, I will not be an healer;[7] for in my house is neither bread nor clothing: make me not a ruler of the people.

8 For [h]Jerusalem is ruined, and Judah is fallen; because [i]their tongue and their doings are against the LORD,[8] to provoke the eyes of his glory.[9]

9 The[j] show of their countenance doth witness against them; and they declare their sin as Sodom, they hide it not: [k]woe unto their soul! for they have rewarded evil unto themselves.

10 ¶ Say[l] ye to the righteous, that it shall be well with him; for they shall eat the fruit of their doings.

11 Woe[m] unto the wicked! it shall be ill with him; for the reward of his hand shall be [1]given him.[2]

12 ¶ As for my people, [c]children are their oppressors, and women rule over them. O my people, they which lead thee[3] cause thee to err, and destroy[4] the way of thy paths.

13 The [p]LORD standeth up to plead, and standeth to judge the people.

14 The LORD will enter into judgment with the ancients of his people, and the princes thereof: for ye [q]have eaten[5] up the vineyard; the spoil of the poor is in your houses.

15 What mean ye that ye [r]beat my people to pieces, and grind the faces of the poor? saith the Lord GOD of hosts.

16 ¶ Moreover, the LORD saith, Because [s]the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched-forth necks and wanton eyes,[6] walking and mincing[7] as they go, and making a tinkling with their feet:

17 Therefore the LORD will [t]smite with a scab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and the LORD will discover[8] their secret parts.

18 In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments[9] about their feet, and their cauls,[1] and their round tires[2] like the moon;[3]

19 The chains,[4] and the bracelets, and the mufflers,[5]

20 The bonnets, and the ornaments[6] of the legs, and the head-bands,[7] and the tablets,[8] and the ear-rings,

21 The rings, and nose-jewels,

22 The changeable suits of apparel,[9] and the mantles, and the wimples,[1] and the crisping-pins,[2]

23 The glasses,[3] and the fine linen,[4] and the hoods,[5] and the vails.[6]

24 And it shall come to pass, that instead of sweet smell there shall be stink;[7] and instead of a girdle a rent;[8] and instead of well-set hair baldness;[u] and instead of a stomacher a girding of sackcloth; and burning instead of beauty.

25 ¶ Thy[v] men shall fall by the sword, and thy mighty[9] in the war.

26 And [w]her gates shall lament and mourn; and she, being desolate,[1] shall [x]sit upon the ground.

CHAPTER IV.

In the extremity of evils, Christ's kingdom shall be a sanctuary.

AND in that day seven women [a]shall take hold of one man, saying, We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by thy name,[1] to take away[2] our reproach.[b]

2 ¶ In [c]that day shall the [d]branch of the LORD be beautiful and glorious,[3] and [e]the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that [f]are escaped of Israel.[4]

3 And it shall come to pass, that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, [h]shall be called holy, even every one that is [i]written among the living[5] in Jerusalem;

4 When the LORD shall have washed away the[j] filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof, [k]by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning.[6]

5 And the LORD will create upon every dwelling-place of mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a [l]cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night: for upon[7] all the [m]glory shall be a defence.[8]

6 And there shall be a [n]tabernacle for a shadow in the day-time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain.

CHAPTER V.

1 Under the parable of a vineyard God justifieth his severe judgments on his people. 8 His judgments upon covetousness, 11 upon riot, 13 upon impiety, 20 and upon injustice. 26 The executioners of God's judgments.

NOW will[a] I sing to my [b]well-beloved a song of my beloved [c]touching his vineyard. My well-beloved hath a vineyard [1]in a very fruitful hill:[2]

2 And[d] he fenced it,[3] and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made[4] a wine-press therein: and he [e]looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth [f]wild grapes.

3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, [h]judge, I pray you, betwixt me and my vineyard.

4 What[i] could have been done more to my vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?

5 And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: [j]I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden[5] down:

6 And[k] I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

7 For [l]the vineyard of the LORD of hosts is

2 This chapter is made up of a parable and an explanation. The parable is brief, but beautiful and graphic. To the Israelites, living among the vineyards on the hill-sides of Palestine, it must have been exceedingly striking. None could fail to see its force and appropriateness. The prophet explains it at great length, and enforces in a solemn and pathetic manner its great lessons.—P.

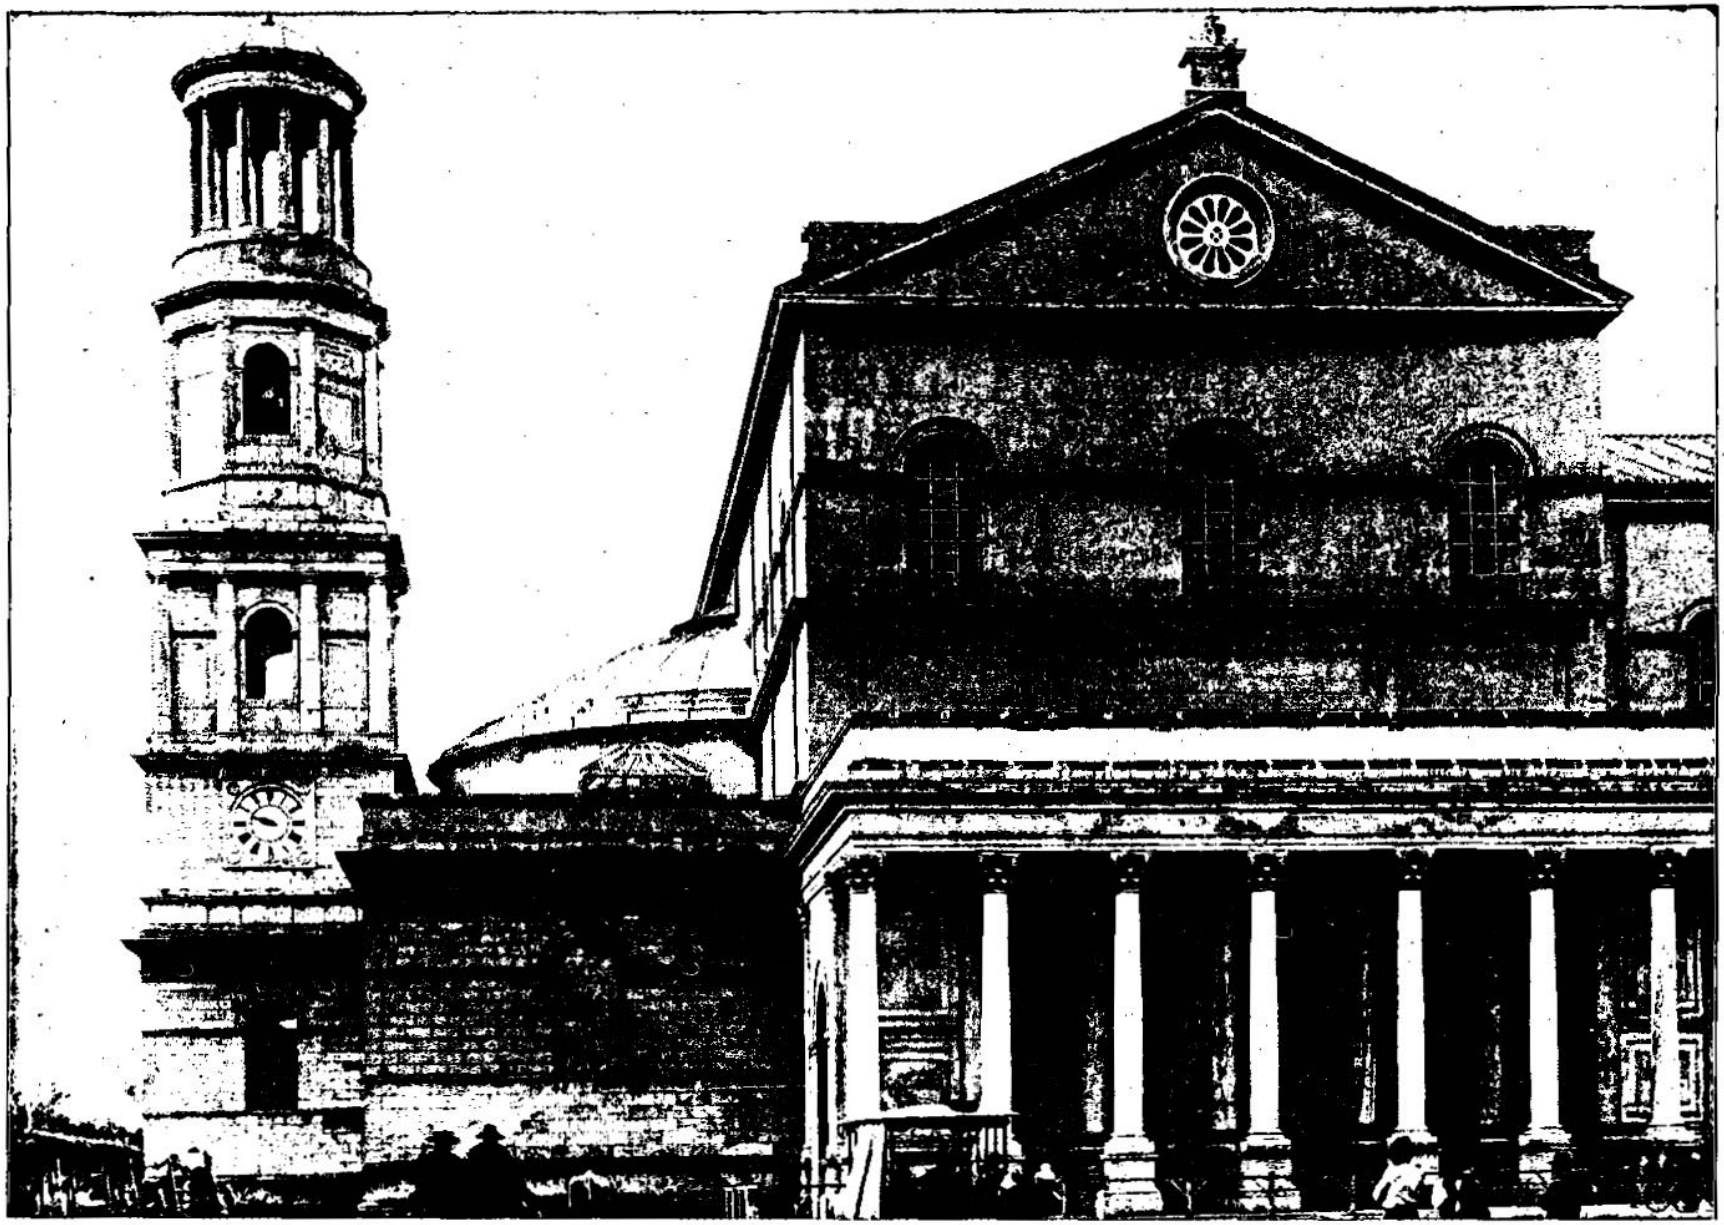
is enough to see that riches and arts were grievously abused, and that the pride and vanity of dress, being idolatry, were grievously punished by personal degradations and national ruin. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the most diversified shapes can God punish sin and show the emptiness of creatures. And sins unrepented of certainly prove ruinous at last. But nations are evidently near to the most fearful destruction when all ranks and sexes are abandoned to and impudent in sinning; or when folly and weakness are at the helm of government; when popular tumults dare to interrupt the administration of justice; and when those who ought to be distinguished blessings in church or state have become the principal plagues.—What a remarkable difference God puts between the righteous and the wicked! And who can either withstand or escape the judgment which he appoints to them? With great faithfulness and courage ought ministers therefore to give both saints and sinners their portion. At what expense of money, care, and time do many, especially women, hang out before the world the infallible tokens of their emptiness, pride, and wicked inclinations! And often by their wickedness they bring to themselves, shocking disgrace, abominable appearances, loathsome diseases, pinching poverty, and desolating judgments.



CHAPTER IV. Ver. 2–4. Not only shall the fields yield abundant increase, but Jesus Christ shall shine forth in his glory; bring forth for, and communicate to, his chosen people, whom he has reserved for himself, the precious fruits of spiritual and eternal blessings:—while they, refined in the furnace of his judgments, justified by his blood, and sanctified by his Spirit, shall be remarkably sound in their principles, and holy in their hearts and conversations. 5, 6. And as the Lord by his pillar of cloud and fire protected, refreshed, and guided the Israelites in the wilderness, so shall he by his blood, his power, his care, his glory displayed, protect his church.

Ver. 1. In that day. What is meant by 'that day?' Looking backward in the prophecy, ch. 2. 2 introduces 'the last days' [see note], within which period again and again recurs 'that day.' It occurs ch. 2. 11, 12, 17, 20, characterized as 'the day of the Lord of hosts,' comp. ch. 6. 1, 3. with Jn. 12. 41, as the time 'when the Lord shall shake terribly the earth,' which generally signifies the land of Judea—'when the LORD alone shall be exalted,' the day when 'a man shall cast his idols to the moles and to the bats'—and in ch. 3. 7, 18, 25, when a man, on account of the universal poverty, shall refuse to become a ruler—and the 'bravery' of female apparel shall be utterly taken away. Farther, it is characterized, ch. 3. 25; 4. 1–3, by the destruction of men and unprotected state of women—and by blessings to them that are 'escaped'—and by the terrible judgments inflicted by the Gentiles on account of the unfruitfulness of Israel. Now, does it not hence appear, that 'that day' is not any one day or period in which all these events meet (for that is impossible), but any day or period within the 'last days,' marked by its own specific event, whether past or future? C.—This verse should be connected with the previous chapter. The social result of the great slaughter of the men of Israel recorded in ver. 25 above is here indicated by a bold figure. In that day, when the males of the nation would be almost exterminated, seven women would solicit one man in marriage, and that under the most humiliating conditions. They would provide for themselves, they would not ask of him either food or clothing, only his name, and the honourable position of wives. It is a sad and graphic picture of the misery the Israelites were entailing upon themselves by their sins. P.

Ver. 2. Branch of the Lord. The word 'branch' is one of the epithets applied to the Messiah in the Old Testament. See Je. 23. 5; 33. 15; Zec. 3. 8; 6. 12. The figure is beautiful and appropriate. Christ was a noble shoot from a royal though decayed family. 'The branch of the Lord' is Christ; and the joys and blessings of his future kingdom are here described. P.

REFLECTIONS.—How often women's high decking, to procure themselves marriages, issues in contempt and impudence! But let the much-despised Jesus and his fulness be ever precious to my soul.—Let his gracious election of me to everlasting life be manifested in the sanctification of my nature and practice. Amidst manifold pollutions of my heart and nature, let me depend for effectual purification on his power and blood. And amidst every danger let him, and JEHOVAH as reconciled in him, be our protection and comfort.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1–6. God's people, the Jews, were placed in the fruitful land of Canaan, from whence he had cast out the hardened heathens. They were the chosen offspring of Abraham, fenced about by a covenant of peculiar protection, blessed with the knowledge of the true religion, and with a temple, altar, and the manifold ordinances thereof, and with every other external means of rendering them fruitful in good works. Instead of yielding the fruits of righteousness to the praise of the glory of God, as might have been expected, they abandoned themselves to errors and immoralities; wherefore he will give up them and all that they have to be seized and destroyed by their enemies. Their country shall be rendered desolate, without either ministers or magistrates to take care of them, and their fields quite barren and cursed. Errors, and immoralities too, shall everywhere abound among them, and all spiritual and comfortable influences shall be restrained.—14, 15. Multitudes of their nobles and merry revellers shall be hurled into the depths of death and damnation; and persons of every rank shall be debased or ruined. 16. But God shall manifest the glory of his power, holiness, justice, and truth, in the righteous punishment of these incorrigible sinners. 17. And while the poor who fear his name shall enjoy the fruits

EXTERIOR OF ST. PAUL'S—A BEAUTIFUL CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN THE CITY OF ROME, SAID TO STAND NEAR THE SPOT WHERE ST. PAUL WAS PUT TO DEATH. [Isaiah, iv:4-6.]—In the three verses referred to above Christ is represented as cleansing, guiding, and preserving the church. The Lord is represented as creating upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud of smoke by day, and the shining of a flame of fire by night. There is to be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day time from the heat, and for a place of refuge and for a covert from storm and from rain. Without fear and without doubt the church may go forth in the discharge of its duty, relying upon the everlasting truth that God shall keep it safely. His mountains are to be round about Jerusalem henceforth and even forever more. The candlestick is not to be removed from out of its place. St. Paul's Church in Rome is but the continuation in modern times of the church which Isaiah referred to as the tabernacle in his day. This church stands just outside the walls of Rome.

the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant:[6] and [t]he looked for judgment, but behold oppression;[7] for righteousness, but behold a cry.

8 ¶ Woe unto them [u]that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth!

9 In mine ears,[8] said the LORD of hosts, Of[9] a truth many houses [v]shall be desolate, even great and fair, without inhabitant.

10 Yea, ten[1] acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah.[2]

11 ¶ Woe[w] unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink;[3] that continue until night, till wine inflame them![4]

12 And[x] the harp and the viol, the tabret and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts: but they regard[5] not the work of the LORD, neither consider the operation of his hands.

13 Therefore my people [y]are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge;[5] and their honourable men are famished,[6] and their multitude dried up with thirst.

14 Therefore[z] hell[7] hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure: and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth,[8] shall descend into it.

15 And [a]the mean man shall be brought down, and the mighty man shall be humbled, and the eyes of the lofty shall be humbled:

16 But the LORD of hosts [b]shall be exalted in judgment, and God that is holy[9] shall be sanctified in righteousness.

17 Then [c]shall the lambs feed after their manner, and the waste places of the [d]fat ones shall strangers eat.

18 ¶ Woe[e] unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart-rope:

19 That say, [f]Let him make speed,[1] and hasten his work, that we may see it: and let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come, that we may know it!

20 ¶ Woe unto them that call evil good,[2] and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!

21 Woe unto them that are [g]wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight![3]

22 Woe[d] unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink:

23 Which[e] justify the wicked for reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him!

24 Therefore as the fire[4] devoureth the stubble, and [g]the flame consumeth the chaff, so [h]their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust: because they have cast [i]away the law of the LORD of hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel.

25 Therefore[i] is the anger of the LORD kindled against his people, and he hath stretched forth his hand against them, and hath smitten them: and [k]the hills did tremble, and their carcasses were torn[5] in the midst of the streets. For [l]all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

26 ¶ And [m]he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and [n]will hiss unto them from the end of the earth: and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly:

27 None[o] shall be weary nor stumble among of the land, the estates of the wealthy wicked shall be given to others. 18, 19. Dreadful shall be the ruin of those who are so set upon their wickedness that they spare no expense nor labour to commit it, and scornfully defy JEHOVAH to ruin them by his threatened and purposed judgments. 20. And of those who approve and plead for what is wicked; and condemn, hate, disparage, and persecute what is good: 23. Or accuse and condemn the righteous as guilty; 24, 25. Therefore sudden and utter destruction shall seize upon them. 26-30. Easily determined by the providence of God, the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Romans shall rapidly, and with great success, fury, and cruelty, invade and waste their country; while both heaven and earth shall seemingly concur to render the condition of the inhabitants utterly desperate.

Ver. 1. Now will I sing. Who sings this 'song of loves?' Isaiah the prophet; as will appear from the commencement of ch. vi., where he evidently continues to speak, as here, in the first person. That it is in allusion to Ca. 8. 11 there can be no doubt. C.

Ver. 2. The following circumstances are worthy of special note. '1' The soil fruitful; the position a hill, Mat. 5. 14. '2' Fenced by providential care, holy laws, and vigilant inspection. '3' Stones carefully raised from the soil and gathered out: worldly obstructions removed, such as Egyptian bondage, Philistine invasion, heathen persecution, &c. '4' Planted with the choicest vine—the revelation of Jesus, Jn. 15. 1. '5. A tower for watch and defence: the revealed Word—the glorious headship of Christ over all things to the church—a standing ministry and gospel government. 6 A wine-press—reproof, correction, warning, exhortation, example, promises, with godly and holy discipline—all acting upon conscience in 'terrors of the Lord'—fears and hopes as needful. C.

Ver. 4. Brought it forth wild grapes? The choice vine would not bear wild grapes—some other plant must therefore have sprung up, as the tares among the wheat, Mat. 13. 27, 28. The plant called 'wild grapes' is generally supposed to be a species of the deadly-nightshade which grows profusely in Egypt and Palestine. C.

Ver. 8. It is worthy of solemn note, that covetousness of a field seems to have been the immediate temptation by which Satan entered and possessed the heart of Judas, Ac. 1. 18. C.

Ver. 12. They regard not, &c. Men commonly estimate sin only by its results in the amount of ostensible and immediate injury it brings upon themselves or others: God estimates it by its principle and root—forgetfulness of God, and its ultimate consequences, ruin, sometimes slow, but always certain, in time, and misery inevitable in eternity. C.

Ver. 16. Exalted and sanctified. Angels and men shall honour him for the righteous judgment he has executed, and acknowledge that he is holy in all his works and ways. C.

Ver. 17. Shall the lambs feed. God's people, who are as lambs, young, and unprotected, shall yet feed safely in green pastures, 'after the manner' of lambs, following their own spirit, without any enemy to affright or devour.—Shall strangers eat. Those Gentiles that were 'aliens and strangers' shall inherit the blessings that Israel has forfeited, Ro. 9. 30; 11. 17, 24; Ep. 2. 11, 12. C.

Ver. 18. Those who have read concerning the worship of Juggernaut in the East Indies, and the drawing of the idol's car by a rope grasped and pulled by the pilgrims, will perceive an apt illustration of this verse. C.

Ver. 23. The most remarkable example of this perversion of justice is to be found in the trial and condemnation of our Lord; and many subordinate examples in the cruel martyrdom of Christ's faithful witnesses by Jews, heathens, and nominal Christians. C.

Ver. 25. Hills did tremble. This may be an allusion to the great earthquake in the days of Uzziah, Am. 1. 1; Zec. 14. 5. Josephus relates that this earthquake was so violent as to divide a mountain to the west of Jerusalem, and carry one-half to a distance of five hundred paces. The hills may also be employed as emblems of men of exalted rank, destroyed in the disastrous overthrow of their country. C.

Ver. 26. Hiss. The original signifies to hiss, whistle, or shriek. Cyril states that, in his time, it was customary to collect bees by a shrill whistle, either to take them afield or to bring them home; and it is still said to be employed for the same purpose in Lithuania and Muscovy, countries abounding with bees. See Nature Displayed, vol. iii. p. 23, 12mo edition. C.

Ver. 30. In that day. That day here evidently means a day differing in its circumstances from each of the preceding days so named. Its special characteristic is invasion by a warlike people, ardent for war, admirably accoutred, fierce, ravenous, and irresistible—characteristics that seem fully to describe the Roman armies by whom the Jewish state was finally overturned under Titus, and by whom the people and the movable property of the whole land was borne off as the prey of the conquerors. C.

REFLECTIONS.—All the privileges that we enjoy, whether temporal or spiritual, ought to be viewed as coming from God. And highly favoured are those whom he renders his visible church, and on whom he bestows the ordinances and influences of his grace. But how highly criminal and provoking is it to God if, instead of eminent piety and virtue, they abandon themselves to the most abominable errors and corruptions! Corrupt professors will often go the most fearful lengths in impiety and vice when left to their own hearts' lusts. Nothing is so base, so horrid, but they will become shameless and bold in it. But the most terrible woes are annexed to presumptuous sinning: and awfully correspondent to men's sins are the divine punishments thereof! While God glorifies himself and protects his people, the disdainful imprecators of his judgments are often answered by the rapid, terrible, and ruinous execution thereof. Let the British nation tremble, lest this chapter, which so plainly exhibits the mercies of God to them, and their sins against him, should have its threatenings verified in their utter destruction!

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1. Christ's train, or skirts, may denote his glorious influences filling his manhood or his church. 2. The winged seraphim, or burning ones, may denote angels, zealous, active, and humble them; none shall slumber nor sleep; neither shall the [f]girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken:

28 Whose[g] arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent; their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind:

29 Their[h] roaring shall be like a lion, they shall roar like young lions; yea, they shall roar, and lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it.

30 And in that day they shall roar against them, [i]like the roaring of the sea: and if one look unto the land, [k]behold darkness and sorrow,[6] and [7]the light is darkened in the heavens thereof.[8]

CHAPTER VI.

1 Isaiah, in a vision of the Lord in his glory, 5 being terrified, is confirmed for his message. 9 He showeth the obstinacy of the people unto their destruction. 13 A remnant shall be saved.

IN the[a] year that king Uzziah died I [b]saw also the [c]LORD sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his [1]train[2] filled the temple.

2 Above it [d]stood [e]the seraphims: each one had six [g]wings; with twain he covered his [h]face, and with twain he covered his [i]feet, and with twain he did [j]fly.

3 And one cried[k] unto another,[3] and said, Holy,[l] holy, holy is the LORD of hosts: [m]the whole earth is full of his glory.[4]

4 And the posts of the door[5] moved[o] at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with [p]smoke.

5 ¶ Then said I, [q]Woe is me! for I am undone;[6] because I am a man of [r]unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the [s]King, the LORD of hosts.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Ahaz, being troubled with fear of Rezin and Pekah, is comforted by Isaiah. 10 Ahaz, having liberty to choose a sign, and refusing it, hath Christ promised for a sign. 17 God's judgments are prophesied to come upon Judah by Assyria.

AND it came to pass in the days of [a]Ahaz the son of Jotham, the son of Uzziah, king of Judah, that Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah the son of Remaliah, king of Israel, [1]went up toward Jerusalem to war against it, but could not prevail against it.[2] attendants of God, and his instruments in the dispensations of Providence; or zealous, active, and humble ministers of Christ. Their covering their face denotes their inability to comprehend the glorious nature and mysteries of God; their covering their feet imports their being ashamed of their best services before God. 6, 7. The live coal taken from the altar, denotes the powerful, quickening, and heart-inflaming word of the gospel, as coming from and through Jesus as our atoning sacrifice. 9, 10. Go, warn this people of their dreadful danger in using the outward means of grace to their own hurt: go, and with the utmost diligence instruct, exhort, rebuke, and threaten them; though abandoned by me to their own lusts, they will abuse all thy pains to render themselves more stupid, careless, unteachable, and obstinate, and so effectually prevent their own forgiveness, conversion, repentance, or reformation. 13. Yet notwithstanding the wretched case to which the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, and Romans shall reduce the nation, a remnant shall be found who shall, in due time, gladly seek the Lord. See introduction, ch. iv. sec. xviii.

2 And it was told [b]the house of David, say-

Ver. 1. Many commentators think this chapter should be placed first, as they conceive the foregoing prophecies must have been delivered at least as late as the reign of Ahaz. That they describe the days of Ahaz there can scarcely be a doubt: but that they were not delivered till then there is no reason to conclude. In ch. 1. 1 they are expressly called 'a vision,' the nature of which is to describe things future as if they were actually accomplished: because they were visibly represented to the eyes of the prophet. The word also in this verse seems to affirm that the previous vision was in an earlier part of the reign of Uzziah. C.

Ver. 2. Seraphims. Derived from a word signifying 'to burn,' a phrase currently applied to love, zeal, eloquence, and intense delight: thus, 'ardent love, ardent zeal,'—'words that burn,' 'did not our hearts burn,' are everyday expressions. In either or in all of these modes may the seraphs burn, or even in some other, to us, still unrevealed. C.

Ver. 5. The King. 'The King' foretold, Ps. 2. 6. 'The King' described, Ps. 45. 1. 'The King of glory,' Ps. 24. 10. By which familiar name the prophet acknowledges the LORD OF HOSTS. That the prophet in the vision saw Christ in human form there can be no doubt, when the passage is deliberately compared with Jn. 12. 41. C.

Ver. 7. It will be observed that the live coal is taken from the altar. It was therefore part of the sacrificial fire. When it touched his lips his iniquity was taken away. There is therefore the idea of atonement. The meaning of the symbol is that the virtue of the sacrifice is imparted: an atoning work is completed. The great sacrifice of Christ, and its application to his people by the quickening power—the baptism by fire—of the Spirit of God, is here beautifully symbolized. P.

Ver. 10. Make the heart of this people fat, &c. That is, there are a people so unclean that the Lord, for punishment of their sin, delivers them over to judicial deafness and blindness; and commissions the prophet, by the preaching of the truth, to execute this righteous sentence upon a people who loved lies. See note on the hardening of Pharaoh's heart, Ex. 4. 21. C.

Ver. 13. 'And yet in it shall be (left) a tenth; and it shall recover, and serve for pasture; as the elm and the oak, which, when they cast their leaves, have the sap in them: so an holy seed shall be the sap thereof,' (Slack. De Dieu.)—Teil-tree. Supposed the lime-tree. C.——Yet, after all the trials and desolations, a tenth, a very small and feeble remnant, shall remain in the country; and even this tenth shall be given up to destruction ('shall return to be eaten'), but not to utter destruction, for even as the oak and terebinth when cut down and but stumps remain, have still vitality in them, so shall the small remnant of the holy seed, the people of Israel, be. P.

REFLECTIONS.—O the infinite, the awful, the amiable glories of our Immanuel. Thrice happy are his servants, who stand in his presence, and triumph in his praise! And blessed be God that his glory has, or shall fill the whole earth; and that faithful ministers and established angels vie with one another in his work. —Clear views of JEHOVAH'S perfections effectually humble the very best of men, and make them to look on themselves, and all around them, as inexpressibly mean, loathsome, and guilty. And God, by such deep humiliation, prepares men for great honours! Thrice happy are those ministers whom God has prepared for their work by the most humbling views of his glory, and the most powerful applications of his heart-cleansing and quieting promises! Great is the importance of a call to the ministerial office. And, alas! infinite is the hazard of such as without this, for the sake of honour or gain, treacherously pretend to be the ambassadors of Christ! But how dreadful is it when the clearest call, and the most faithful execution of it, do but issue in the aggravated wickedness and ruin of the hearers! Not the best of gospel ministrations can avail with sinners without the blessing of God and the almighty operation of his Spirit. And if spiritual judgments begin, we may look for temporal to follow.—But blessed be God that, for his own love and the preservation of the world, he finds faithful a remnant of real saints who, though in winters of adversity seem dead, yet again revive as the corn, grow as the lily, and bring forth fruit to his glory.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 4. Rezin and Pekah, and their armies and kingdoms, are called tails of smoking firebrands, because, notwithstanding their present ing. Syria is [3]confederate with Ephraim:[4] and his heart was [a]moved, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind.

3 Then said the LORD unto Isaiah, Go forth now to meet Ahaz, thou, and Shear-jashub[5] thy son, at the end of the [b]conduit of the upper pool, in the highway[6] of the fuller's field;[7]

4 And say unto him, [c]Take heed, and be quiet; fear not, neither[8] be faint-hearted for the two tails[9] of these [d]smoking[1] firebrands, for the fierce anger of Rezin with Syria, and of the son of Remaliah.

5 Because[k] Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have [e]taken evil counsel against thee, saying,

6 Let us go up against Judah, and vex it,[2] and let us make a breach therein for us, and set a king in the midst of it, even the son of Tabeal:[3]

7 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [f]It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass.

8 For[k] the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus is Rezin; and within threescore[l] and five years[4] shall Ephraim be broken, that it be not a people.[5]

9 And [m]the head of Ephraim is Samaria, and the head of Samaria is Remaliah's son. [g]If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established.[6]

10 ¶ Moreover,[7] the LORD spake again unto Ahaz, saying,

11 Ask[p] thee a sign of the LORD thy God; ask it either in the depth,[8] or in the height above.

12 But Ahaz said, [q]I will not ask, neither will [r]I tempt the LORD.

13 And he said, Hear ye now, [s]O house of David, Is it a small thing for you to [t]weary men, but will ye [u]weary my God also?

14 Therefore[9] the LORD himself shall give you a sign; [v]Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call[x] his name Immanuel.

22 And it shall come to pass, for the abundance of milk that they shall give that he shall eat butter: for butter[2] and honey shall every one eat that is left in the land.[2]

23 And it shall come to pass in that day, that every place shall be, where there were a thousand vines at a thousand silverlings,[3] it shall even be [f]for briers and thorns.[4]

24 With[5] arrows and with bows shall men come thither;[6] because all the land shall become briers and thorns.

25 And[h] on all hills that shall be digged with the mattock there shall not come thither the fear[7] of briers and thorns; but it shall be for the sending forth of oxen, and for the treading of lesser cattle.

threatening to destroy all before them, they themselves were quickly to be extinguished in ruin. 7–9. The power of Syria and Israel shall never be advanced further than at present: and by the twenty-second year of Manasseh shall the Israelites be wholly carried captive. 15. And as a child partaking of a real manhood, he shall live on common fare. 16. Within two years shall the present kings of Syria and Israel be both cut off. 18. The Egyptians are represented as blood-sucking flies, and the Assyrians as stinging and all-collecting bees, in allusion to the swarms of those insects in Egypt and Assyria. 19–25. Roused by the providence of God, and rewarded with spoil, they shall overspread the whole country, and cut off persons of all ranks, high and low, and render the once so fertile country a waste and uncultivated soil, for briers and thorns, and the residence of robbers and wild beasts, few persons or tame cattle being left therein.

Ver. 6. Tabeal. Who Tabeal was, and who his son was, is unknown; it is most probable, however, that he was some factious pretender to the throne of Judah, and related to the blood royal, either of Ahab or of Pekah. C.

Ver. 12. Ahaz here affects humility and piety: but in reality possesses neither, for as the Lord had directed him to ask the sign, though humility would have acknowledged unworthiness, piety would gratefully have accepted the offered evidence. C.

Ver. 13. Ye weary the patience of men by your maladministration: will ye weary God also, by neglect of opportunities, distrusting his promises, and abusing his ordinances? C.

Ver. 14. Behold, the virgin shall conceive. This prophecy could not be intended for Hezekiah, who was now a young man; neither can it be applied to any of the sons of Isaiah, for none of them ever ascended the throne, as this child of promise evidently did, ch. 9. 7.

Ver. 16. Before the child shall know. That is, before the child, when born, shall know to distinguish between good and evil, "the land which thou hatest (Syria and Israel) shall be forsaken of both her kings." And for within the lowest period allowed for intellectual development was all fulfilled; for Isaiah prophesied about 740 B.C.; and Tiglath destroyed Syria, 2 Ki. 16. 9. and slew Rezin, about 738 B.C.—Hoshea slew Pekah, the king of Israel, about 737 B.C., 2 Ki. 15. 30 (Maitland's Script. Chron.)—And thus, within a period of about three years, was all this denunciation fulfilled. C.

Ver. 18. See note on ch. 5. 26. Roberts, however, asserts that the ancient Asiatic nations never kept bees in hives, or under any artificial management, as Cyril's statement implies. Still Cyril's description of customs in times so near his own, seems evidence preferable to any deduction from mere modern observation. C.

REFLECTIONS.—To what alarming terrors, what murderous and destructive invasions and wars, does sin expose men! And while judgments ordinarily begin at the house of God, one guilty nation is made the scourge of another, and then quickly perishes itself! Severe, seasonable, free, and often unasked, are God's interposals for the relief and comfort of men. And if he be on our side, we need not fear the most furious adversaries. No plot, no attempt to frustrate his promises, can fail to issue in the sudden ruin of its authors. And the most proud and boastful are ordinarily the least successful in their enterprises. But faith in his promise is necessary to the establishment of our heart while they rage or reign. What kindness God shows to some wicked men for the sake of their ancestors, though with specious pretexts of regard they often refuse the favours of God, that they may depend on an arm of flesh! But with earnestness and boldness ought we to avouch the Lord for our God, when others refuse their claim. Amidst the deepest distress, infallible are the securities, and strong the consolations, which are derived from Jesus Christ and his connections with us. God easily finds instruments fitted to execute his judgment upon obstinate sinners. And none are more readily chosen by him than those whom we have idolized, and confided on, in his stead. Yea, alas! terrible is the judgment that falls at last upon corrupt professors. Their barrenness under the means of grace, and fruitfulness in wickedness, curse, blast, and desolate the very earth on which they live!

DAMASCUS FROM SALAHIYEH, THE HEAD OF SYRIA. [ISAIAH, vii : 8.]—Damascus is, beyond any doubt, the most attractive city as to its natural features to be found in the East. There is more in Damascus that takes hold of the imagination than in any other city. To its natural features, which are so rare and remarkable as to lift it out of classification with other places, is added its great antiquity and its wonderful historic interest. These render a time of sojourn here a perpetual delight. The population, the rivers, divided in channels, flowing through part of the city, coffee gardens, people from the desert mingling with rich merchants in their flowing gowns, all together make up a picture such as the eye never beholds elsewhere.

"Damascus, daughter of Abana's stream,
How beauteous still are thy enchanting bowers;
Thy gardens that with fruits unnumbered teem,
The perfumes that exhale from loveliest flowers
Thy native charms defy the gliding hours,
But mar, alas, the work that man hath made."

A STREET IN NAZARETH—WHERE MARY, THE MOTHER OF JESUS, LIVED, AND WHERE CHRIST WAS BROUGHT UP. [Isaiah, vii:14.]—"Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." Nazareth, where Mary, the mother of Jesus, lived, and where Christ was brought up, is dearer to the Christian heart than any other place on earth, except Jerusalem. It was a small and obscure village in the Old Testament times, and is not even mentioned by name, nor even by the historian Josephus. Yet, from the fact that Christ was brought up here, it receives an interest and a significance which have led pilgrims to visit it for the past 2000 years. According to ancient records, it never rose to distinction until the time of the crusades. It was then made the seat of a bishopric. It is now the chief town of this district. It is also larger and more prosperous than in any former period of its history.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 In Maher-shalal-hash-baz, he propheseth that Syria and Israel shall be subdued by Assyria. 5 Judah likewise for their infidelity. 9 God's judgments shall be irresistible. 11 Comfort shall be to them that fear God. 19 Great afflictions to idolaters.

MOREOVER, the LORD said unto me, [c]Take thee a great roll,[1] and write in it with a [2]man's [3]pen[4] concerning Maher-shalal-hash-baz.[5]

2 And I took unto me faithful witnesses to record, [b]Uriah the priest, and Zechariah the son of Jeberechiah.

3 And I went unto[6] the prophetess; and she conceived, and bare a son: then said the LORD to me, [c]Call his name Maher-shalal-hash-baz:

4 For[d] before the child shall have knowledge to cry, My father, and my mother, the riches of Damascus, and the spoil of Samaria, shall be taken away before the king of Assyria.[7]

5 ¶ The LORD spake also unto me again, saying,

6 Forasmuch as this people [e]refuseth the waters of [g]Shiloah that go softly, and [h]rejoice in Rezin and Remaliah's son;

7 Now therefore, behold, [i]the LORD bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria and all his glory: and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks.

8 And[j] he shall pass through Judah; he shall overflow and go over; he shall reach even to the neck;[8] and the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy [k]land,[9] O[l] Immanuel.

9 ¶ Associate[m] yourselves, O ye people,[1] and[2] ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries: gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces.

10 Take[o] counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand: [p]for God is with us.

11 ¶ For the LORD spake thus to me with a strong hand,[3] and [q]instructed me, that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying, 12 Say[r] ye not,[4] A confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; [s]neither fear ye their fear,[5] nor be afraid.

13 Sanctify[t] the LORD of hosts himself; and let him be your [u]fear, and let him be your dread.

14 And he shall be for [v]a sanctuary; but for a [x]stone of stumbling, and for a rock of offence, to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

15 And [y]many among them shall stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken.

16 Bind[z] up[6] the [a]testimony, [b]seal the law among [c]my disciples.

17 And I will [d]wait upon the LORD, that [e]hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for him.

18 Behold,[g] I and the children whom the LORD hath given me are for [h]signs and for wonders in Israel from the LORD of hosts, which dwelleth in mount Zion.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 6, 7 may either relate to the Israelites, who despised the now weak family of David; or to those Jews who despised their own governors, and, not content with their own weak armies, insisted upon calling in the Assyrian troops, and who rejected Christ.—The Assyrians are called the waters of the river, because they came from the river Euphrates in great multitudes, and wasted and destroyed the nations and countries whithersoever they came. 8. The Assyrian army ravaged the whole land of Judea in a rapid and resistless manner (where Immanuel was born, lived, and died), up to Jerusalem the capital. 9, 10. The Syrians, Israelites, and other enemies of God's church, may consult, confederate, collect, and march armies as they will, Immanuel her King shall make their attempts to issue in their own ruin. 12–15. Neither depend on the confederacy of Judah with the Assyrians or Egyptians, nor be terrified at the confederacy of the Syrians and Israelites, or any other, against Judah, but glorify the Lord, by a believing dependence on, holy fear, and sincere worshipping of him; so shall he protect and comfort you, while multitudes of your brethren, through their rejection of him and his Messiah, shall be insnared and ruined. 16–18. While but a few believers will understand, cleave to, and improve God's revelations, I will, by faith, look for the fulfilment of them in the Lord's gracious return to and favour towards his people, and in the manifestation of his Son. And, lo, I and my son and disciples, as well as Jesus Christ and his people, are, and will be, amidst the admiration of some, and the derision of others, God's appointed pledges and tokens of his infallible fulfilment of his promises and threatenings.—19, 20. Should not we, in our distress, seek to our infinitely gracious, wise, and powerful God! Should we, who are living, apply for relief to dead idols or men, instead of the living God? No: God's Word is the sole standard of our direction, instruction, and comfort; and if any direct otherwise, it is owing to their being destitute of all saving knowledge. 21, 22. And instead of prospering, they and their followers shall be driven from their dwellings, famished with hunger, and filled with anguish, till they curse their king for calling in or rebelling against the Assyrians; and their idols for disappointing their hopes, and the true God for inflicting his judgments. And whether they look towards heaven or earth, they shall see nothing but perplexity and trouble, and thus be reduced to despair.

Ver. 1. Roll. When the ancients wrote either upon parchment or the Egyptian papyrus, their custom was to roll up the document; and this practice was evidently before the mind of the translators. The word, however, does not come from a root signifying to roll, but to make clear by rubbing or polishing. It therefore signifies a tablet of polished metal, marble, or wood. C.

Ver. 6. The fountain of Shiloah, or Siloam, is situated in a deep cave at the eastern base of Mount Moriah. Its waters flow with a gentle murmuring current through a subterranean channel, and fall into a large open pool on the southern slope of Moriah. This fountain was an emblem of the quiet, peace, and security of Israel under the beneficent rule of Jehovah; and it is brought into strong contrast with the rushing torrent of the Euphrates, which is made to represent the conquests and desolations of the armies of Assyria. P.

Ver. 8. Wings. Probably a reference to the Assyrian standard, which was a bird; or the prophet views Assyria as a bird of prey, hovering over the devoted country, and ready to descend upon its victim. C.

Ver. 11. Spake to me with a strong hand. That is, when his hand was strongly urging me on to do his work—when I was fully and irresistibly under the influence of divine inspiration. A prophetic impulse is frequently represented in the Word of God as being produced by the laying of his hand on the prophet. Thus in Eze. 3. 14 and 2 Ki. 3. 15. P.

Ver. 13. The Lord of hosts, whom the prophet saw in vision, ch. vi., is evidently the LORD JESUS CHRIST, 'God manifest in the flesh,' and to him this prophecy is applied throughout the New Testament. And HE, and not Isaiah, is the speaker in this prophecy. C.

Ver. 14. An alternative is set before the people in ver. 13 and 14. If they would acknowledge the Lord, if they would fear and venerate him, then would he be to them a sanctuary, a place of refuge and perfect security. If, on the other hand, they would not fear or acknowledge him, then would he be to them as a rock against which they would be dashed, and as a snare in which they would be entrapped. P.

Ver. 16. Bind up, rather, engrave. Seal: but, at the same time, note that this binding up and sealing show that the contents are 'hid from the wise and prudent' of this world, till God be pleased to reveal them 'to babes,' 'among my disciples'—the disciples of Messiah. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the importance of the oracles of God! Thrice worthy to be written in our heart!—But what changes, troubles, and wars, sin exposes men to in this world! Quickly they, who disturbed and spoiled others, are plagued in their turn. And who knows for what havoc the wealth, or the children we dote on, may be reserved. Men never refuse God's comforts, but they take up with ruinous plagues instead of them. Thrice happy is it, in days of distress, to be the property and people of the blessed Immanuel, and to have him the uplifter of our head, when the waters of trouble swell to the neck! To have him on our side, and his promise for us, will effectually crush every attempt that hell and earth can make against us.—But an almighty power is necessary to enable the best avoid fashionable evils, and disregard the fear and help of men, and depend only upon Christ! Safety, holiness, and honour are fully to be found in him, but in him alone! For, alas! fearful is their destruction who reject and are offended in him! Great is the mercy, that in the worst of times he has so fixed his oracles in his church and in his people's hearts! And with pleasure may those who have experienced the power thereof, wait for him, notwithstanding the most terrible troubles around, and loads of reproach upon them. Though God hide himself, and afflict his church, he will never leave her. But, alas! great is the folly and guilt, and tremendous the ruin, of those who consult with devils, with lusts, with wicked men, instead of Jesus and his Word, which is confirmed by his oath, and ratified in his blood!

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1–7. The distress of Judah, under the Assyrian ravages or the Chaldean captivity, shall not be so dismal and lasting as the captivity of the ten tribes. They shall quickly be surprised with a glorious deliverance, a vast increase, amazing consolations, and perfect freedom from bondage: for God, to pave the way for the incarnation and kingdom of his Son, shall, not by the common forms of war, but by a fearful plague, destroy their Assyrian or other enemies. And as God has debased Canaan by the repeated invasions of heathen troops, so he will glorify it by the unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: [z]should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?[27]

20 To[a] the law and to the testimony:[8] if they speak not according to this word,[9] it is because there is no light[1] in them.

21 And [b]they shall pass through it, hardly bestead and hungry: and it shall come to pass, that, when they shall be hungry, they shall fret[a] themselves, and curse their king and their God, and look upward.

22 And[c] they shall look unto the earth; and behold trouble and darkness, dimness of anguish; and they shall be driven to darkness.

CHAPTER IX.

1 What joy shall be in the midst of afflictions by the birth and kingdom of Christ. 8 The judgments upon Israel for their pride, 13 for their unpenitency. 18 and for their wickedness.

NEVERTHELESS the [c]dimness shall not be such as was in her [b]vexation, when [1]at the first he lightly afflicted the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali, and afterward did more grievously afflict her by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, in Galilee of the nations.

2 The[c] people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined.

3 Thou hast [d]multiplied the nation, and not[2] increased[e] the joy: they joy before thee [g]according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide the spoil.

4 For thou hast [h]broken[3] the yoke of his burden, and the staff of his shoulder, the rod of his oppressor, as in the day of [i]Midian.

5 For[4] every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood; but this shall be [j]with burning and fuel of fire.

6 For [k]unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and [l]the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name [m]shall be called Wonderful, [n]Counsellor, [o]The mighty God, [p]The everlasting Father, [r]The Prince of Peace.

7 Of[s] the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it [t]with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. [u]The zeal of the LORD of hosts will perform this.

8 ¶ The LORD sent [v]a word into Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel.

9 And all the people shall [x]know, even Ephraim, and the inhabitant of Samaria, that [y]say in the pride and stoutness of heart,

10 The[z] bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones; the sycamores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars.[5]

11 Therefore the LORD [a]shall set up the adversaries of Rezin against him,[6] and join[7] his enemies together;

12 The[b] Syrians before, and the Philistines behind; and they shall devour Israel with open mouth.[8] For[c] all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

13 ¶ For the people [d]turneth not unto him that smiteth them, neither do they seek the LORD of hosts:

14 Therefore the LORD will cut off from Israel [e]head and tail, branch and rush, in one [g]day.

15 The ancient and honourable, he is the head; and the [g]prophet that teacheth lies, he is the tail.

16 For[h] the leaders of this people[1] cause them to err; and they that are led of them[2] are destroyed.[3]

17 Therefore[i] the LORD shall have no joy in their young men, neither shall have mercy on their fatherless and widows: for every one is an [j]hypocrite and an evil-doer, and every mouth speaketh folly.[4] For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

18 ¶ For wickedness [k]burneth as the fire: it instructive and comforting gospel ministrations of his Son and his apostles. Multitudes shall be converted to Christ, and great shall be their spiritual joy, freedom, and victories over their lusts, through the influence of the Holy Ghost; for the Son of God, born in our nature, and given to us, having all power given him in heaven and in earth, shall manifest himself in his wonderful excellencies, offices, and relations, in the erection and government of the gospel church; JEHOVAH'S love to him and the people, and his everlasting love, shall secure the accomplishment of this.—8–10. The Lord has denounced a threatening against the Israelites, the accomplishment of which they shall quickly feel, who proudly boast that, though the Assyrians have demolished their houses, they will build better ones. 11, 12. The Lord shall stir up the Assyrians, together with the enlisted Syrians on the east, and the Philistines on the west (who had lately assisted them against Judah), and they shall make an almost utter end of them: and after all, the judgments of God shall be further inflicted upon them. 14. The Lord will destroy multitudes of all ranks. 18. Their outrageous wickedness has fitted them for ruin, and shall be punished in the destruction of both small and great. 19–21. Amidst their terrible distress they shall restlessly plunder, oppress, and murder one another.

Ver. 1. 'But there shall not hereafter be darkness in the land which was distressed' Lowth.. 'For as in the former time, he debased the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali; so, in the latter time, he will make glorious the way of the sea, along the Jordan, even Galilee of the nations.' Boothroyd.—The concluding verses of the eighth chapter describe a time of almost universal trouble and darkness. The first verse of ch. ix. indicates a change. Light would dawn in due season. It would shine principally on the dark regions of Zebulun and Naphtali, which were much exposed to foreign invasion. The dawn of the new light is connected with the birth of the child promised in ver. 6, 7. The second clause of ver. 1 may be thus translated: 'And afterward did more grievously afflict the country of the sea-coast, the coast of the Sea of Galilee, Perœa, Galilee of the Gentiles.' The ultimate and perfect fulfilment of this prophecy was in the time of our Lord, when he preached and laboured on the shores of the Galilean lake. P.

Ver. 3. Not increased the joy. Eleven of Kennicott's, and six of De Rossi's MSS., for 'not increased' read 'is increased:' which these high authorities, and the sense of the passage, seem to require. Lowth translates it 'increased their joy.' C.

Ver. 4. His burden. The grammar of the passage seems to refer this deliverance, not to the nation, but to 'the Prince,' ver. 6, who 'in all their affliction had been afflicted.' See ch. 63. 7; 63. 9; Ps. 25. 16; Col. 1. 24.—Staff of his shoulder. The staff whereon eastern slaves still continue to bear burdens. C.

Ver. 5. 'For the greaves (the leg armour) of the warrior in the battle, and the garments saturated with blood, shall be for burning, even fuel for the fire.' That is, dealt with as things accursed of God, as were the spoils of Jericho, Jos. 6. 17—emblematic of the blessed time when men shall be cleansed from covetousness (see Jas. 7. 21), and 'shall learn war no more.' C.

Ver. 6. The everlasting Father. Or, 'Father, author of the future or everlasting age,' the Christian dispensation Lowth. C.

Ver. 8. This is evidently a new subject—a word of warning and judgment to a portion of God's people—called Jacob as heirs of promise in hope, Israel as mighty princes in possession. It lighted as an arrow from the bow, as a javelin from the arm of a mighty warrior. C.

Ver. 17. The universality of corruption in the days of Noah afforded the chief argument to the world against the power of his preaching. And that one alone, or a very few, should be right, and all others, the whole world, with a two or three disregarded exceptions, should be wrong, to the natural man seems impossible. The same argument was urged against our Lord and his apostles. The same argument was urged against the reformers, and the same argument will continue to be urged so long as men are pleased to 'follow a multitude to do evil.' C.

Ver. 19. The wrath of the Lord of hosts. Many have expressed much dissatisfaction at the ascription of wrath to God. They do so on the ignorant, at least the thoughtless supposition, that there can be no wrath but sinful wrath. Alas! do these objectors neither see, nor know, that whether it come from the east or from the west, 'evil pursueth sinners?' And the holy principle of the divine mind and government, by which that evil is righteously inflicted upon the guilty, is all that the Scriptures mean when they speak of the 'wrath of the Lord.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—God ordinarily tries men with lesser judgments before he inflicts such as are more severe. But it bodes well to a place when God sends to it the light of the gospel. And no load of adversity is so heavy, but Christ's presence can alleviate and his power deliver from it. Thrice happy are those ignorant sinners whose minds he enlightens in the knowledge of himself! They may enjoy much solid and spiritual joy, freedom, and victory, even when they weep and lament. Unbounded are the excellencies, high the dignities, sweet the relations, and savoury the names of that Immanuel whom God has freely given to us sinful shall devour the briers and thorns, and shall kindle in the thickets of the forest; and they shall mount up like the lifting up of smoke.

20 And[n] he shall snatch[6] on the right hand, and be hungry; and he shall eat on the left hand, and they shall not be satisfied: they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm.

men! O the infinite zeal of JEHOVAH to honour his Son, and to promote the welfare of his church! Rejoice in these things, my soul! —and again rejoice.— God shall make every opposer effectually to know the power of his wrath. But those ripen fast for ruin who continue proud and impenitent under great distress; and whom neither cords of love can draw, nor afflicting rods can drive, to their duty. Hypocrisy towards God, and villany towards men, ordinarily meet together. And none are in God's sight more abominable miscreants than unfaithful ministers. But general concurrence in wickedness issues in general calamities upon all ranks. And often they, whom we make our partners in sin, or in whom we have trusted, are made the distinguished instruments of our ruin.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1–4. Dreadful shall be the punishment of you Hebrews, who make unjust laws, and pass unjust sentences, and who obstruct the course of justice, that such as are poor cannot have right done them. What will ye do when the Lord shall punish your nation by the desolating ravages of the Assyrians? Who will then assist you, or secure your power and wealth for you? Revolted from me, and deprived of my help, ye shall be rendered more miserable than others who are taken captives or murdered.—5–11, 13 15. And dreadful shall be the ruin of the Assyrians, whom I have now appointed to punish you Jews for your hypocrisy and profaneness, by pillaging your country, and murdering and enslaving many of you. The Assyrian monarch, ignorant of my providence, merely intends to gratify his own lust of dominion; and boasts that as he, by his own wisdom and bravery, has conquered many powerful nations already, and seized on their wealth, he will do the same to Jerusalem, let her God do what he can to resist him; since therefore he, who is merely an instrument in my hand, thus insults me, 12, 16–19. Whenever I have sufficiently chastised my own people of Judah, I will punish his pride, and by a fearful plague cut off most of his huge army in one night, commander and commanded together. 20 33. Then, as well as at the deliverance from Babylon, and in the gospel periods, shall the Jews be weaned from their carnal dependencies on Assyrians, Egyptians, or others; and shall, by faith and repentance, return to their Almighty God and Saviour. And notwithstanding the vast numbers of Hebrews, a mere remnant shall survive the repeated desolations of their country, wherewith I have determined to punish them. 24–27. Fear not, therefore, ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, when the Assyrians shall ravage your land, and, like Pharaoh at the Red Sea, threaten to swallow up your whole nation. Quickly will I remove the tokens of my anger from you, in destroying the Assyrian army by a fearful stroke, similar to that by which the Egyptians were destroyed in the Red Sea, or the Midianites destroyed by Gideon. And in that day, from regard to my promise of royalty with David, from regard to king Hezekiah, and chiefly from regard to the Messiah, will I completely deliver you from all subjection to them. 28 34. The Assyrians shall indeed, to the great terror of the nation, march up almost to the very walls of Jerusalem: but there will I, the almighty Conductor of armies, cut off by death most of Sennacherib's captains and valiant troops, and reduce his forest-like multitude to a despicable remnant.

Ver. 5. 'Woe to the Assyrian!' Rosthroyd appointed to execute judgment —God overruling his blind ambition, ver. 7, to effect his correctional purposes upon ungrateful and idolatrous Israel. C.

Ver. 11. Several ancient eastern monarchs, as Cambyses, king of Persia, have been most zealously opposed to idol-worship. And it seems most probable that this zeal, if not the principle, was at least the pretext, for undertaking the invasion of Israel. C.

Ver. 14. My hand hath found . . . the riches of the people. Wars have often been waged for mere purposes of spoliation and robbery. Even in modern times, when civilization is supposed to have effected a wonderful march of improvement, nations have been stripped of their noblest monuments of art to adorn the capital and minister to the vanity of a conqueror. But let nations beware of indulging the spirit of vainglory, boasting, or covetousness: the God that chastised Israel, that humbled Assyria, and annihilated Babylon, still sits in heaven, and rules amongst the children of men. As one gathereth eggs that are left. Not forsaken, but left for a time by a bird flushed from her nest.— Peeped. But though the timid bird, moved by instinctive love, will flutter the wing, open her mouth, peak, and peep, chirp, in anxiety for her eggs or callow young; no man, no nation, was found bold enough to offer the shadow of resistance to my victorious progress! Such is the soliloquy of victorious pride—blind to the fall it must soon experience from a Providence disregarded or denied. C.

Ver. 19. The glory of the forest is already consumed, ver. 18; and the rest, instead of being as rising copse-wood, that supply by multitude of shoots the absence of full-grown trees, shall be so thinly scattered that a very child could number them. C.

Ver. 20. That day. That is, upon the day 'when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon Mount Zion and upon Jerusalem,' ver. 12; a day of which the believer anticipates the dawn, when 'the Sun of Righteousness will truly arise with healing in his wings.' C.

Ver. 22, 23. Though Israel, because of idolatry, have been exposed to consumption as a spring exhausted by the heats of summer, yet in God's day of merciful visitation, they shall be as a spring that is replenished from a higher source, and overflows in pure and cooling streams. C.

Ver. 27. Because of the anointing of Jesus, the Messiah, to the office of Prophet, Priest, and King of Israel and the Gentiles, and the anointing of his people by the Holy Spirit, whereby they are regenerated and sealed till the day of salvation. C.

Ver. 28. The prophet here describes in language of great beauty and graphic power the approach of the Assyrian conqueror to Jerusalem, spreading terror all around; until, at length, having reached the Holy City, the Lord in his might strikes the proud conqueror to the earth. It is probable that the description is ideal rather than historical; but it is not on this account the less accurate in its topographical details. Every stage is marked. The army is represented as leaving the great postoria road near Bethel, and turning eastward to Ai. Advancing to Michmash, the baggage is left behind, and the troops thus disencumbered cross the wild ravine to Geba. Ramah, situated half a mile westward, 'is afraid.' Gibeah of Saul, which lies on the top of a hill in front, 'is fled,' for the terrible foe is in sight. The army cor-that heweth therewith? or shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it? as if the rod should shake itself against them that lift it up,[4] or as if the staff should lift up [5]itself, as if it were no wood.[6]

16 Therefore[b] shall the Lord, the Lord of hosts, send among his fat ones leanness; and under his glory he shall kindle a burning like the burning of a fire.[7]

17 And[c] the light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame: and it shall burn and devour his thorns and his briers in one day;

18 And[d] shall consume the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field, both soul and body:[8] and they shall be as when a standard-bearer fainteth.

19 And the rest of the trees of his forest shall be few,[9] that a child may write them.

20 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that [e]the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob, shall [f]no more again stay upon him that smote them; but [h]shall stay upon the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, in truth.

21 The[i] remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, [j]unto the mighty God.[1]

22 For[k] though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet a remnant of[2] them shall return: [l]the consumption decreed shall overflow with[3] righteousness.

23 For the Lord God of hosts [m]shall make a consumption, even determined, in the midst of all the land.

24 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, [o]O my people that dwellest in Zion, [p]be not afraid of the Assyrian: he shall smite thee with a[s] rod, and shall lift up his staff against thee,[4] after[r] the manner of Egypt.[5]

25 For[s] yet a very little while, and the indignation shall cease, and mine anger in their destruction.

26 And[t] the Lord of hosts shall stir up a scourge for [6]him, [u]according to the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb: [v]and as his rod was upon the sea,[7] so shall he lift it up after the manner of Egypt.

27 And it shall come to pass in that day, [w]that his burden shall be taken away[8] from off thy shoulder, and his yoke from off thy neck, and the yoke shall be destroyed [x]because of the anointing.

28 ¶ He is come to [z]Aiath, he is passed to [a]Migron; at Michmash he hath laid up his carriages:[9]

29 They are gone over the passage: they have taken up their lodging at [b]Geba; [c]Ramah is afraid; [d]Gibeah of Saul is fled.

30 Lift up thy voice,[1] O daughter of [e]Gallim; cause it to be heard unto [g]Laish, O poor [h]Anathoth.

31 Madmenah[i] is removed; the inhabitants of Gebim gather themselves to flee.

32 As yet shall he remain at [j]Nob that day: he shall [k]shake his hand against [l]the mount of the daughter of Zion, the hill of Jerusalem.

33 Behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts, [m]shall lop the bough with terror: and the high ones of stature shall be hewn down, and the haughty shall be humbled.

34 And he shall cut down [o]the thickets of the forests with iron, and Lebanon shall fall by [p]a mighty one.[2]

This verse contains a threatening of the punishment that should come upon the Assyrian for his insolence and pride, and the remainder of the chapter is mainly occupied with the details of that punishment. God had employed the Assyrians as his instruments in executing his judgments upon the Jews. They were therein the rod, the correction, that he used; they were corrected to their work. But they threatened to do more than God had appointed them to do. He therefore will punish them for that insolence and pride. ‖ him, the spirit [a]of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge, and of the fear of the LORD;

3 And [d]shall make him of quick understanding[2] in the fear of the LORD: and [e]he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears:

4 But [f]with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove[3] with equity for the meek of the earth:[4] and he shall [h]smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.

5 And [i]righteousness shall be the [j]girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

6 The[k] wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

7 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

8 And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice'[5] den.

9 They[l] shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for [m]the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea.

10 ¶ And[o] in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek; and [p]his rest shall be glorious.

11 And it shall come to pass in that day, that[q] the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from [r]Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from [s]Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

12 And he [t]shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall [u]assemble the outcasts of Israel, and [v]gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners[6] of the earth.

13 The[x] envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim.[7]

14 But[y] they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the west;[8] they shall spoil them of the east[9] together: they shall lay their hand upon Edom and [1]Moab; [z]and the children of Ammon shall obey [2]them.[3]

15 And the LORD [a]shall utterly destroy the tongue[4] of the [b]Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven [5]streams, and make men go over dryshod.[6]

16 And[c] there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; [d]like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

CHAPTER XII.

A joyful thanksgiving of the faithful for the mercies of God.

AND in[a] that day thou shalt say, O LORD, I will praise thee: [b]though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me.

2 Behold, [c]God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the LORD JEHOVAH is my strength and my song; he also is become my salvation.

3 Therefore[d] with joy shall ye draw [e]water[1] out of the wells of salvation.

4 And in that day shall ye say, [f]Praise the LORD, call upon his name,[2] declare his doings among the people, make mention that [h]his name is exalted.

5 Sing[i] unto the LORD; for he hath done excellent things: [j]this is known in all the earth.

6 Cry[k] out and shout, thou inhabitant[3] of Zion: for [l]great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee.

Ver. 4. Smite the earth. That is, men who 'are of the earth, earthly,' 'who mind earthly things.'—Slay the wicked. That is, judicially deliver over wicked nations to destruction by the hands of nations generally as wicked as themselves, but who nevertheless execute God's righteous purposes of judgment. C.

Ver. 9. A good rule of prophetic interpretation requires that the destructive animals here enumerated should be understood as emblems of men of like evil dispositions. The rule is this—when a particular prophecy commences emblematically, the remainder is to be interpreted emblematically. Some have, nevertheless, interpreted ver. 6–9 literally, as foreshowing changes yet to be effected in the dispositions and habits of animals of prey—a speculation upon which, however pleasing, it is better not to dogmatize. The Lord knoweth. Not that any direct evil can result from the expectation and belief of such a change: the danger lies in the indulgence of a spirit of speculation which may soon terminate in an attempt to be wise 'above that which is written.' C.——In this verse the strong and striking figures of the preceding passages are resolved into literal expressions. With such a key as is here afforded to the meaning, no rational and thoughtful critic can mistake the real sense of ver. 6–8. To interpret them literally, as if the influence of true religion would change the physical organization and natural instincts of beasts, is not only an outrage on common sense, but it is opposed to the true principles of interpretation. Ver. 6 can no more be interpreted literally than ver. 5. The whole passage is a highly figurative and graphic representation of the change that will be produced in human society by the reign of the Messiah. Love shall fill every heart, and beneficence shall characterize every act. P.

Ver. 10. His rest shall be glorious. His church glorified by the possession of his Word of truth, his ordinances, promises, and Spirit. See Ps. 132. 14; Col. 1. 27. C.

Ver. 11. The Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people. So called as somewhat similar to the first deliverance from Egypt. See ver. 16. C.

Ver. 12. This glorious prophecy stretches away onward into an indefinite and probably still distant future. It embraces the Jews alone—the natural, and not the spiritual Israel. It shows that the remnant of them shall be gathered into the Messiah's kingdom; but whether the remnant or residue of the nation then existing, or the remnant according to the election of grace, cannot be determined. The countries here enumerated are to be understood as the representatives of all those lands into which the Jews have been or shall be scattered. God's providence and grace will reach them everywhere, and draw them in again. P.

Ver. 15. Tongue. The same word is translated bay, Jos. 15. 2; 18. 19.—River. Most probably not the Nile, but the Euphrates: for though the Nile is called 'seven-streamed,' the title is poetical rather than literal. C.

Ver. 16. The general meaning of this whole chapter is that when the kingdom of the Messiah shall be finally and fully established, the Jews shall be gathered into it; all men shall be subject to the church: all obstruction and opposition shall be removed from the spread of the gospel: and universal peace and love shall prevail. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Come, my soul, behold the Lamb of God! Behold how he assumes my nature; is conceived and born of the Virgin, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and laid in the manger! Behold him filled with the Holy Ghost above measure, and qualified to save his people to the uttermost, and avenge himself of his enemies! Behold how his almighty grace transforms the most outrageous sinners into the most amiable saints! See his gospel rapidly spreading in the earth, and his power and glory revealed in the hearts of men. See him in prophecy conquering all opposition, removing every impediment, slaying the enmity, and making of Jews and Gentiles one new man, so making peace! Let me believe, let me plead, let me hope, let me rejoice, that he who has begun to fulfil these great and precious promises, will perfect the same in believers.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. 'Taking occasion from the reference to Egypt and the exodus in the close of the preceding chapter, the prophet now puts into the mouth of Israel a song analogous to that of Moses, from which some of the expressions are directly borrowed. The structure of this psalm is very regular, consisting of two parts, in each of which the prophet first tells the people what they will say, or have a right to say, when the foregoing promises are verified, and then addresses them in his own person in the usual language of prediction': Alexander. P.——That day. The day of the second recovery of Israel from bondage, ch. 11. 12—a day yet future, but not doubtful: for God is faithful who has promised.—Thine anger is turned away. This comfortable word indicates the termination of all the series of judgments described, ch. 5. 25; 9. 12, 17, 21; 10. 4. C.

Ver. 4. His name. Whatever name, at any time, God has given of himself. See Ex. 34. 5; Ps. 8. 1. C.

Ver. 6. Inhabitant. 'Thou woman inhabitant'—the emblem and title of the church, no longer a woman hid in the wilderness, but restored to her Lord's house in Zion. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How far the glories and comforts of the New Testament church exceed those of the Old! The great forgiveness, through Jesus' blood, inflames the heart, and tunes the lips to praise. Nor ought JEHOVAH'S frowns to untune our soul. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. O the inexpressible pleasure of enjoying a reconciled God as our ALL and IN ALL! If he be ours, we may safely

CHAPTER XIII.

1 God musstereth the armies of his wrath. 6 He threateneth to destroy Babylon by the Medes. 19 The utter desolation of Babylon.

THE burden[1] of[a] Babylon, which Isaiah the son of Amoz did see.[2]

2 Lift[b] ye up a banner upon the high mountain, exalt the voice unto them, shake the hand, that they may [c]go into the gates of the nobles.

3 I [d]have commanded my sanctified ones,[3] I have also called my mighty ones for mine anger, even them that rejoice in my highness.

4 The[e] noise of a multitude in the mountains, like as[4] of a great people; a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together: the[f] LORD of hosts mustereth the host of the battle.

5 They come from [h]a far country, from the end of heaven, even the LORD, and the weapons of his indignation, to destroy the whole land.

6 ¶ Howl[i] ye; for the [j]day of the LORD is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.

7 Therefore [k]shall all hands [5]be faint,[6] and every man's heart shall melt:

8 And they [l]shall be afraid: pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them; they shall be in pain as a woman that travaileth; [m]they shall be amazed[7] one at another;[8] their faces shall be as flames.[9]

9 Behold, [o]the day of the LORD[1] cometh, cruel[p] both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it.

10 For [q]the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof, shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine.

11 And I will punish [r]the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and [s]I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible.

12 I [t]will make a man more precious than [u]fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir.

13 Therefore[v] I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the LORD of hosts, and in the day of his fierce anger.

14 And [z]it shall be as the chased roe, and as a sheep that no man taketh up: they shall every man turn to his own people, and flee every one into his own land.

15 Every[y] one that is found shall be thrust through; and every one that is joined unto them shall fall by the sword.

16 Their children also shall be dashed to pieces before their eyes; their houses shall be spoiled, and their wives ravished.

17 Behold, I will stir up [z]the Medes against them, which shall not regard silver; and as for gold, they shall not delight in it.[2]

18 Their bows also shall [a]dash the young men to pieces; and they shall have no pity on the fruit of the womb; their eye shall not spare children.

19 ¶ And Babylon, [b]the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew[3] Sodom and Gomorrah.

The division includes ch. xiii.—xxiii. trust him with all our happiness, all our work, all our care. If he be our strength, no foe can hurt us. If he be our salvation, eternity is too short to speak his praise. Great is the happiness, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, which we may by faith draw from his perfections, his Christ, his promises, and ordinances! And thrice happy is the church when her members know him and his mighty works, and with one mind, and one mouth, glorify him!

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1. Prophecies of heavy, oppressive, and ruinous judgments are often called burdens; and those denounced against Babylon also often relate to Antichrist. 2, 3. Assemble the forces to their respective standards.—Order them to present themselves to the noble captains of Media and Persia, and to break into the houses of the noble Chaldeans. I have stirred up, and by my providence separated and strengthened these Medes and Persians, to execute my judgments upon Babylon, and to perform the most gallant actions, which will illustrate my honour and greatness. 6, 9. The day of the Lord, or of the wicked, denotes the period of his awful judgments upon them. 10. The whole country of Chaldea shall be filled with horror, and their princes and nobles degraded or murdered. 12. Men fit to bear arms shall become very rare; or the Medes and Persians shall refuse every ransom of their lives. 13, 14. Because of their wickedness, the whole nation shall be quite unhinged and ruined. The Chaldeans shall flee for their lives; but none shall dare to harbour them. All their auxiliaries shall run away, and leave them to shift for themselves. 19. Babylon, once the so large, glorious, and impregnable capital of Chaldea, shall be utterly destroyed in the most wrathful manner.

Ver. 1. Burden. 'Oracle' Boothroyd. But the word burden, denoting the heavy judgment that Babylon was doomed to bear, seems best calculated to convey the meaning of the prophet. See Ge. 4. 13. C.

Ver. 3. Sanctified ones. 'My enrolled warriors' Lowth. There can be little question of the preference due to this translation.—That rejoice in my highness. 'Them that rejoice in their own dignity' (Boothroyd.. C.

Ver. 4. In the mountains. Media and Persia, from which countries Cyrus drew his armies against Babylon, were mountainous countries, and are described as such in contrast with the low-lying plain upon which Babylon was built. C.

Ver. 5. End of heaven. There is not here, as some have foolishly objected, any astronomical error—such as that heaven and earth meet at a particular point. From Ps. 19. 6 it appears that the 'ends of heaven' signify the sun's apparent daily and annual course, and whoever considers the wonderful collection of adventurers from all nations that are gathered to armies, but especially to eastern armies, where mercenary foreigners often constitute their greatest strength, will find little difficulty in understanding how literally and truly the prophet here speaks. C.

Ver. 10. 'Stars, constellations, sun, and moon,' are all emblems of the various ruling powers of kingdoms, especially of the Babylonish empire, whose wise men were remarkable for their astronomical skill, and therefore fully prepared to understand and appreciate their impact. C.

Ver. 11. World. The men who are not only in, but of the world. See Jn. 17. 11, 14, 16. The world that by wisdom knew not God, 1 Co. 1. 21. C.

Ver. 12. Such will be the depopulation of 'Babylon the Great,' that a man will scarcely be found at any price, either for service or defence. See ch. 4. 1: 1 Sa. 2. 1. C.

Ver. 13. Astronomers can both calculate and explain certain irregularities or shakings that literally take place in the visible heavens. To a people skilled in astronomy as the learned Babylonians were, the heavens shaken, and the earth removing from her orbit, would therefore be perfectly intelligible and familiar emblems of thrones overturned, nobles degraded, armies disbanded, commerce forsaken, fields laid waste—a kingdom desolate. C.

Ver. 15 Whether they flee singly for secrecy, or in companies for mutual help, all the Babylonians shall be cut off. C.

Ver. 17. The Medes, inhabiting a mountainous and forest country, were at this time a people so rude that they neither understood the use nor value of gold or silver money. Hunting was hitherto their chief employment; and their weapons for the chase their most valued property. C.

Ver. 21. Satyrs. Literally, 'hairy ones. In Le. 4. 24 the word is translated goat; but in 2 Ch. 11. 15 it is translated devils, demons being worshipped, most probably, under the form of goats. The whole of this prophecy, as may be seen exemplified in Newton, Keith, &c., affords one of the plainest and most irresistible attestations to the divine origin of the Bible. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how oppressive and destructive are the judgments of God upon guilty nations, or even the threatenings thereof! Nor is there any destruction on earth but comes because of sin. He sets apart the instruments of justice, as well as those of his grace. He can raise mighty armies by his call or by his nod; and with alacrity they march, under his encouraging direction, to execute his judgments. How dreadful is it when the terrors of a guilty conscience are added to the heavy judgments of affliction! The hearts and hands of the mightiest fail them, when JEHOVAH appears against them in his judgment; and all helpers desert when a nation gives itself to ruin. Into what savage devils has sin transformed men, especially when they serve in conquering armies! But God is righteous in returning men's cruelties upon themselves. He has exhibited the most terrible marks of his indignation against sin on persons, cities, and nations. And the ruins of places, once famous and wicked, attest his infinite holiness, equity, foreknowledge, and faithfulness, and the divine authenticity of his Word.

CHAPTER XIV. Ver. 1–3 not only predict that the Jews, attended by many Gentile proselytes and Chaldean slaves, should return to their own land from Babylon; but that they, and multitudes of Gentiles, in the apostolic and coming periods, shall coalesce into one gospel church. 4–11. Not only the neighbouring nations, but the very dead and damned, shall, in their respective forms, insult the disgraced and ruined king and princes of Babylon. 12. Proud as a devil, shining as an angel, and possessed of distinguished glory and majesty among the nations, how art thou debased and ruined! Notwithstanding thy ambition and boasts to raise an empire wide as the heavens, and to sit like JEHOVAH in his temple and heavenly mansions, thou shalt be debased into contempt, death, and 20 It[c] shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there:

21 But[d] wild beasts[4] of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures:[5] and [6]owls[7] shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there.

22 And the wild beasts[8] of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses,[9] and dragons in their pleasant palaces: and [e]her time is near to come, and her days shall not be prolonged.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 God's merciful restoration of Israel. 3 Their triumphant insultation over Babel. 24 God's purpose against Assyria. 29 Palestina is threatened.

FOR the[a] LORD [b]will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land: and [c]the strangers shall be joined with them, and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob.[1]

2 And the people [d]shall take them, and bring them to their place; and the house of Israel shall possess them in [e]the land of the LORD for[e] servants and handmaids: and they shall take them captives, whose captives they were;[2] and they shall rule over their oppressors.

3 ¶ And it shall come to pass in the day that [h]the LORD shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve,

4 That thou shalt take up this proverb[3] against the king of Babylon, and say, How hath the[i] oppressor ceased! the [4]golden city[5] ceased!

5 The[j] LORD hath broken the staff of the wicked, and the sceptre of the rulers.

6 He [k]who smote the people in wrath with a continual stroke,[6] he that ruled the nations in anger, is [l]persecuted,[7] and none hindereth.

7 The [m]whole earth is at rest, and is quiet: they[o] break forth into singing.

8 Yea, the fir-trees[8] rejoice at thee, and the cedars of Lebanon, saying, Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.

9 [p]Hell[9] from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the [1]chief ones[2] of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

10 All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou also [q]become weak as we? art thou become like unto us?

11 Thy[r] pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols: [s]the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee.

12 How[t] art thou fallen from heaven, O [3]Lucifer,[4] son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, [u]which didst weaken the nations!

13 For thou hast [v]said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above [w]the stars of God: I will sit also upon [x]the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north:

14 I[y] will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High.

15 Yet[z] thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.

16 They that see thee [b]shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, [c]Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms;

17 That made the world as a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof; that opened not the house of his prisoners?[5]

18 All the kings of the nations, even all of them, lie in glory, every one in his own [6]house.[7]

19 But[a] thou art cast out of thy grave like an abominable branch,[8] and as the raiment of those that are slain, thrust through with a sword, that go down to the stones of the [9]pit; as a carcase trodden under feet.

20 Thou shalt not be joined with them in burial, because thou hast destroyed thy land, and slain thy people: [d]the seed of evil-doers shall never be renowned.

21 Prepare slaughter for his children [g]for the iniquity of their fathers; that they do not rise, nor possess the land, nor fill the face of the world with cities.

22 For[h] I will rise up against them, saith the LORD of hosts, and cut off from Babylon the name, and remnant, and son, and nephew, saith the LORD.

23 I[i] will also make it a possession for the bittern,[1] and pools of water; and I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the LORD of hosts.

24 ¶ The[j] LORD of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand:

25 That[k] I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot: then shall his yoke depart from off them, and his burden depart from off their shoulders.

26 This is the purpose that is purposed upon [l]the whole earth; and this is the hand that is stretched out upon all the nations.

27 For the LORD of hosts hath [m]purposed, damnation. 18, 19. Other kings lie interred in their stately tombs; but thou shalt lie unburied, as a rotten stick or polluted cloth which none cares to touch. 24-27. I have determined, in my infinite purpose, to destroy the Assyrian army before Jerusalem; my almighty power shall, without fail, accomplish it. 29-31. O Philistines, though David and Uzziah, who smote you, be dead, and Ahaz his grandson weakened or dead, Hezekiah his son shall ravage your country: and while God shall take care of the poorest Jews, they, and afterwards the Assyrians or Chaldeans, shall, with great unanimity and fury, destroy your nation. 32. And by their ambassadors the neighbouring nations shall be informed, that to the power and care of God alone the stability and safety of Jerusalem and the church, however poor, is entirely owing.

2 He is gone up to [d]Bajith, and to Dibon, the high places, to weep: Moab shall howl over Nebo,[e] and over Medeba: [f]on all their heads shall be baldness, and every beard cut off.

3 In their streets they shall gird themselves with[h] sackcloth: [i]on the tops of their houses, and in their streets, every one shall howl, weeping abundantly.[3]

4 And [j]Heshbon shall cry, and Elealeh: their voice shall be heard even unto Jahaz: therefore

Ver. 9. Hell. Sheol sometimes signifies the grave, but is more generally applied to the state and region of the dead. Here the kings of conquered nations are represented as rising from the stately couches upon which in several eastern countries it is still the custom to bury the dead, and taunting the monarch of Babylon on his entrance into their dreary abode. C.

Ver. 13. If, in expounding Scripture, the meaning of words and phrases is to be drawn from Scripture, then 'the mount of the congregation,' by comparison with ch. 10. 32, will be Mount Zion in Jerusalem: and 'the sides of the north,' by comparison with Ps. 48. 2, will be the city of Jerusalem, which lay to the north of Mount Zion. The search after exposition from other than Scripture sources, has led some to imagine that the 'sides of the north' meant the north-pole; and 'mount of the congregation,' the imaginary residence of the Chaldean gods: but there is no scriptural ground for such a conjecture. C.

Ver. 22. Son and nephew. 'Son and grandson:' accordingly, Evil-Merodach the son, and Belshazzar the grandson, of Nebuchadnezzar, were both cut off by violent deaths in the flower of their age. C.

Ver. 24. This is no 'fragment of a distinct prophecy;' but is, with the three following verses, a sequel to the prophecy of Syrian or Assyrian invasion (see ch. 9. 12; 10. 5; 14) and from ver. 28 to the end there is still a sequel to the prophecy of the Philistine auxiliaries by whom the Assyrians should be joined, ch. 9. 12, to devour Israel with open mouth.' C.

Ver. 26. Upon the whole earth. That is, upon both Jews and Gentiles: the judgments upon the Jews being the emblems or specimens of judgments upon all unfaithful churches; and his judgments upon Assyria and Babylon, emblems or specimens of his judgments upon every cruel and proud nation. C.

Ver. 29. Whole Palestina. Palestine was divided into five states, and the prophecy is addressed to their federal capacity. The judgments of Palestine are the emblems or specimens of the divine judgments upon churches or nations who cherish a spirit of unkindness or unreasing hostility to their neighbours.—Out of the serpent's root shall come, &c. Uzziah had subdued the Philistines, 2 Ch. 26. 6, 7: 28. 18: in the days of Ahaz his son, they threw off the yoke; but Hezekiah, the grandson, again subdued them, 2 Ki. 18. 18, the emblem and specimen of the final victory of original truth, after an age of apparently successful rebellion and hopeless apostasy. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How strangely nations rise and fall in the scales of God's providence! But a pleasant aspect, towards the saints, have all the clouds of wrath that hang over their adversaries. And the overthrow of nations directs men to Jesus and his church. Great is the instability of earthly honours, power, or wealth. Such as were masters one day, are often slaves to their slaves the next.—All our salvation must be ascribed to the rich and gracious mercy of God. It is his blessed grace and our free-will, that can bring us to the inheritance incorruptible and undefiled. And ever certain, however slow, is the deliverance of his saints, his church, from all their griefs, fears, and toils. But to what fearful misery and disgrace are proud and powerful oppressors reduced at the last! Neither power nor wealth profit in the day of his wrath. Both God and men take pleasure in humbling and debasing the proud. But if haughty tyrants sink to ruin—to suffering—with such cruel derision—in what fearful forms shall devils and lost heathens welcome to hell the proud despisers of Jesus Christ! Great is the misery which the wickedness of parents entails upon their impenitent posterity, and the marks of wrath which sinners fix upon the spots where they lived. Stable, and infallibly executed, are the purposes of God. And it is vain for his enemies to hope for exemption from ruin; for if one foe be cut off, he can raise up a worse. But, amidst all the commotions on earth, fixed is his church, and safe the poorest of her members. JEHOVAH is her founder, foundation, protector, and refuge.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 2. Joshua spared Moab by divine command, because the people were the descendants of Lot, De. 2. 9, but they made most unkind returns. Moab caused one of Israel's greatest sins, Nu. 25. 3: Eglon king of Moab oppressed Israel eighteen years; pride, bloodshed, and idolatry filled up the measure of her guilt. This prophecy against her is the emblem and specimen of God's judgments upon the unkindness and quarrels of churches and nations of cognate descent. C.——Moab was situated on the eastern shore of the Dead Sea. It extended from Heshbon on the north to the borders of Edom on the south, and on the east lay the great desert of Arabia. It is a high table-land, and though in parts rocky, the soil is rich and the pasture luxuriant. It was on Mount Nebo, near its northern border, that Moses died. P.

Ver. 3. On the tops of their houses. The roofs of eastern houses lay almost universally flat: the people lived much upon them—a mild climate inviting to the open air. C.

Ver. 5. 'Her fugitives shall flee unto Zoar, to Eglath the third' (Lightfoot, Eglath-Shelashiah being the proper name of a place.—'For the steep of Luhith with weeping they ascend; yea, in the way to either Horon they raise a wail of destruction.' C.

Ver. 6. Nimrim was a town in the plain of the Jordan at the foot of the mountains of Moab, a short distance north of the Dead Sea. In the midst of the ruins is a copious fountain. The region round it is abundantly watered, and is celebrated for the luxuriance of its pastures. When the waters of Nimrim would fail, it would be a certain sign of general desolation. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Destruction and anguish in tremendous triumph follow sin through impenitent cities and nations. Sudden and unexpected ruin awaits haughty transgressors. And to call on idols or creatures when God is our enemy is but to add to our anguish. The wealth which men eagerly gain but invites the invader, tempts the robber, and endangers the owner. It increases the owner's care and grief, while it assists his enemy to destroy him, and if hardened sinners escape one judgment, they prepare for another. But if such be the case of a ravaged nation, alas! the terrors, the torments, the howlings spoiler: for [s]the extortioner[8] is at an end, the spoiler ceaseth, the oppressors[9] are consumed out of the land.[1]

5 And [h]in mercy shall the throne be established:[2] and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle[i] of David, judging and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness.[3]

6 ¶ We have heard[4] of the [j]pride of Moab; he is very proud: even of his haughtiness, and his pride, and his wrath: but his lies[5] shall not be so.[6]

7 Therefore shall Moab [k]howl for Moab; every one shall howl: for the foundations[7] of Kir-hareseth shall ye mourn;[8] surely they are stricken.

8 For [l]the fields of Heshbon languish, and the vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen[9] have broken down the principal plants[1] thereof, they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness; her branches are stretched out,[2] they are gone over the sea.[3]

9 Therefore[n] I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer the vine of Sibmah: I will water thee with my tears, O Heshbon, and Elealeh; for the shouting[4] for thy summer fruits, and for thy harvest is fallen.

10 And [o]gladness is taken away, and joy out of the plentiful field; and in the vineyards there shall be no singing, neither shall there be shouting: the treaders shall tread out no wine in their presses; I have made their vintage shouting to cease.

11 Wherefore [p]my bowels shall sound like an harp for Moab, and mine inward parts for Kir-haresh.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when it is seen that Moab [q]is weary on the high place, that [r]he shall come to his sanctuary to pray; but [s]he shall not prevail.

13 This is the word that the LORD hath spoken concerning Moab since that time.[5]

14 But now the LORD hath spoken, saying, Within three years,[6] as the years of an hireling, and the glory of Moab shall be contemned, with all that great multitude; and the remnant shall be very small and feeble.[7]

13 This passage and the parallel in Je. 48. 32, are rendered obscure by the reference to 'the sea.' Jeremiah says, 'Thy plants are gone over the sea, they reach to the Sea of Jazer.' What sea is here meant? Some say it was a broad pool or lake: but there is no lake in that district, nor the word here would scarcely be applied to a mere pool. We learn from Nu. 32. 1 that the country round Heshbon and Jazer was called 'the land of Jazer.' That land must have extended to the shore of the Dead Sea. May not that sea therefore have been called by the inhabitants of the district 'the Sea of Jazer,' just as the northern lake was called Tiberias and Gennesaret?—C.

1 This is a striking and graphic figure. The people of Ephraim, that is, the northern tribes of Israel, shall be swept away from the land, just as the harvest-man sweeps away the grain from the harvest-field. Not even a remnant would be left; for they would be gathered up as the gleaner gathers ears of corn. The valley of Rephaim, is a fertile upland plain lying just south of Jerusalem on the road to Bethlehem. It took its name from the gigantic aborigines who in primitive times occupied that part of Canaan.—P.

1 Syria and Israel are threatened. 6 A remnant shall forsake idolatry. 9 The rest shall be plagued for their impiety. 12 The woe of Israel's enemies.

THE burden[1] of Damascus. [a]Behold, Damascus is taken away from being a city, and it shall be a ruinous heap.

2 The[b] cities of Aroer are forsaken; [c]they shall be for flocks, which shall lie down, and [d]none shall make them afraid.

3 The[e] fortress also shall cease from Ephraim, and the kingdom from Damascus, and the remnant of Syria: they shall be as the glory of the children of Israel, saith the LORD of [2]hosts.

4 And in that day it shall come to pass, [g]that the glory of Jacob shall be made thin, and the fatness of his flesh shall wax lean.

5 And [h]it shall be as when the harvest-man gathereth the corn, and reapeth the ears with his arm; and it shall be as he that gathereth ears in [3]the valley of Rephaim.

6 ¶ Yet[i] gleaning grapes shall be left in it, as the shaking of an olive-tree, two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough, four or five in the outmost fruitful branches thereof, saith the LORD God of Israel.

7 At[k] that day shall a man look to his Maker, and his eyes shall have respect to the Holy One of Israel.

8 And he shall not look to the altars, the work of his hands, neither shall respect that which his fingers have made, either the groves or the images.[4] in woe. Who shall abide with devouring fire? Who shall dwell with everlasting dispair.

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 1. Send ye the lamb—your acknowledgments of tribute to the king, see 2 Ki. 3. 4, and so, either by repentance avert the threatened judgment, or secure a home and protection against the day of national calamity. The main object of this prophecy is to exhort Moab to look for and submit to Messiah the ruler on his appearing. See ver. 5. C.—Sela. Sela is unquestionably the celebrated city Petra, afterwards the capital of Edom. It is situated in a deep and wild ravine, or rather cluster of ravines, in the midst of a mountain-range of red sandstone. Its rock-hewn temples, tombs, and palaces are still the wonder and admiration of travellers. Sela was not in Moab; but it seems probable that on the occasion the prophet here refers to the fugitive Moabites had taken refuge in the ravines of Edom, and they are exhorted to send from thence their tribute, and the tokens of their submission. The words rendered 'from Sela to the wilderness' may either signify, as they are translated in the Vulgate, 'from Sela of the wilderness,' or, as interpreted by Vitringa, 'from Sela towards the wilderness to,' &c.; that is, from Sela towards the wilderness that leads to Jerusalem. The great wilderness in Hebrew Midbar, which is the word here used, of Judah lay between the border of Edom and Jerusalem, and through it lay the direct and indeed the only road. P.

Ver. 9. To 'weep with those that weep' is a distinguished Christian duty, not only of perpetual obligation, but for the discharge of which the world affords continual opportunities. Our Lord wept over Jerusalem, leaving us an example of the sympathy with which we should regard, not only our friends, but our enemies, in their sorrows. C.

Ver. 13. That time. What time? When it was seen that he had become 'weary of his idolatry on his high places,' ver. 12, and had come to his sanctuary, not in the piety of faith, humiliation, and penitence—but in the superstitious throes of despair, to offer his unacceptable, because his compelled, petitions. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How unwilling is God that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance! Injustice towards God or men is a ready mean for depriving us of all we have. Never do any protect or cherish the people of God in their distress but he remarkably rewards them in kind.—Nor is it ever wise to stand aloof from them; for though they fall, they shall quickly arise: though now they wither, anon they shall flourish in glory and honour. When sin abounds, rage against the church flames, and pride towers, destruction and anguish are at the door; and carnal mirth shall quickly be turned into weeping and wailing. And when God rises up to punish the guilty, no idol can help, avert, or defer his stroke.

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 3–5. The Syrians shall be in as despicable and ruined a condition as the Israelites; and the glory and multitude of Israel shall be exceedingly diminished, like one dying of a consumption. And being ripe for ruin, the Assyrians shall make a clean riddance of them, as reapers in harvest do of the fields of standing corn. 9–11. The cities of the Israelites shall stand as high heaps in the country, forsaken by the inhabitants, as they were by the Canaanites in the days of Joshua or Barak. Because they have forsaken their God, Saviour, and Protector, nothing shall thrive with them; but after all their care to strengthen their state, the Assyrians shall seize everything they have, and carry them into a miserable and lasting captivity. 12–14. But notwithstanding all their vast multitudes, fury, noisy ravage, and blasphemous boasting, God, by his just rebuke, shall destroy the Assyrian army before Jerusalem, and make the small remains thereof flee homeward with the utmost terror and precipitation.

Ver. 1. Damascus is taken away. The inhabitants of Damascus were taken away captive by Tiglath-Pileser, 2 Ki. 16. 9: and to what ruinous condition it was then reduced, and how long it remained so, history gives no information. It has, however, still continued a city of great note and importance; but that fact forms no contradiction to the prophecy, as it is evident from ver. 3, that by 'being a city,' the prophet meant the capital city of a Syrian monarchy. But to that estate it never returned for since the death of Rezin, its last king, the country around Damascus has always continued a mere province of some of its conquerors. These have successively been Sennacherib, whose capital was Nineveh (2 Ki. 19. 36). Nebuchadnezzar, the generals of Alexander, Judas Maccabeus, the Romans, the Saracens, the Crusaders, Tamerlane, the Mamelukes, the Turks, lately the Egyptians, from whom, by aid of England, it has again been wrested by the Turks. C.

Ver. 2. Aroer. For Aroer, on the Arnon, the Septuagint, followed by Boothroyd, reads for ever; but there appears no sufficient authority for the change. The verse is a prediction of the destruction of Moab. See Burckhardt's Syria, p. 364. C.

10 Because[n] thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the rock of thy strength, [o]therefore shalt thou plant pleasant plants,[6] and shalt set it with strange slips:

11 In the day shalt thou make thy plant to grow, and in the morning shalt thou make thy seed to flourish; [p]but the harvest shall be a heap in the day of grief and of desperate sorrow.[7]

12 ¶ Woe[q] to the multitude[8] of many people, which[r] make a noise like the noise of the seas; and to the rushing of nations, that make a rushing like the rushing of mighty[9] waters!

13 The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters: [s]but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing[1] before the whirlwind.

14 And, behold, at evening tide trouble; and before the morning he is not. This[t] is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us.

WOE to the [a]land shadowing[1] with wings,[2] which is [3]beyond[4] the rivers of Ethiopia:[5]

2 That sendeth [b]ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters,[6] saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled,[7] to a people [c]terrible from their beginning hitherto; [d]a nation [4]meted out and trodden down,[9] whose land the rivers have spoiled![11]

3 All[e] ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when [5]he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.

4 For so the LORD said unto me, I will take my rest, and I will consider in my dwelling-place[2] like[h] a clear heat upon herbs,[3] and like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest.

5 For [f]afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, and the sour grape is ripening in the flower, he shall both cut off the sprigs with pruning-hooks, and take away and cut down the branches.

6 They[i] shall be left together unto the fowls of the mountains, and to the beasts of the earth: and the fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them.

7 ¶ In[k] that time shall the present be brought unto the LORD of hosts of a people scattered and peeled,[4] and from a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden under foot, whose land the rivers have spoiled, to [l]the place of the name of the LORD of hosts, the mount Zion.

2 And[d] I will set the Egyptians against the Egyptians:[3] and they shall fight every one against his brother, and every one against his neighbour; city against city, and kingdom against kingdom.

3 And [e]the spirit of Egypt shall fail[4] in the midst thereof; and I will destroy[5] the counsel thereof: and they [g]shall seek to the idols, and to the charmers, and to them that have familiar spirits, and to the wizards.

4 And the Egyptians will I give over[6] into the hand of [7]a cruel lord;[8] and a fierce king shall rule over them, saith the Lord, the LORD of hosts.

5 And the waters shall fail from [h]the [9]sea, and the river[1] shall be wasted and dried up.

6 And they shall turn the rivers far away, and the brooks of [2]defence shall be emptied and dried up:[3] the reeds and flags shall wither.

7 The paper reeds by the brooks, by the mouth of the brooks, and every thing sown by the brooks, shall wither, be driven away, and be no more.[4]

8 The fishers also shall mourn, and all they that cast angle into the brooks shall lament, and they that spread nets upon the waters shall languish.

Light boats made of papyrus were commonly used in Egypt. They were propelled with great swiftness upon the mighty Nile.—C.

Ver. 8. This prediction began to be fulfilled when many of the survivors of the captivities of Salmaneser and Esarhaddon turned from idols to the true God, 2 Ch. 30. 10, 11. 35. 18, and it continues to be fulfilled in the gleanings that are still gathered to Christ. C.

Ver. 14. The multitudinous host of Sennacherib seems to have been immediately in the eye of the prophet, of whom the angel of the Lord smote 185,000 in one night, 2 Ki. 19. 35. But similar destruction is predicted against all the spoilers and robbers of Israel: a prediction amply verified in the overthrow of the Babylonian, Grecian, and Roman powers, mainly on account of their cruelty to the people of God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Companions in wickedness are soon made partners in punishment. Nor can the strongest fortifications defend from God's almighty wrath. Sin fearfully sickens and consumes persons and societies. And when nations are ripened by it, easily and extensively God strips them of their numbers, glory, power, and wealth. But thrice happy is it when the destruction of many is rendered instrumental for the conversion of a remnant to Christ, and when the loss of outward things makes us look off from them all to God himself. Alas! how professors, by their forgetfulness of God, ruin themselves and their country, and turn their most noted outward comforts into real plagues! But puny and empty nothings before God are the mightiest armies of his adversaries. He triumphs over those in his judgments who triumph over his people in their wickedness. And short-lived are the terrors or troubles of believers. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. Let them therefore treasure up past experiences as a ground of future confidence in the like temptations.

CHAPTER XVIII. Ver. 4. God's being like a clear heat, or a cloud of dew, may either be understood of his afflicting or of his comforting them. 5, 6. Before they can ripen their designs, they will bring to themselves destruction, and by their wickedness bring eternal woe to their souls.

Ver. 2. Vessels of bulrushes. That the Egyptians employed vessels of bulrushes, coated with bitumen, is evident from Ex. 2. 3, as well as from general history. And it appears their Ethiopian neighbours employed them likewise. C.—Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation 'stretched out and levelled,' to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto 'the dread of neighbouring nations,' a nation 'that measureth out' its fields after each inundation and then 'treadeth down' its seed with the foot of the husbandman, whose land the rivers have 'nourished.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—No place can protect sinners from a just God. No furious rage, which may render them a terror to their neighbors around, can hinder him from finding them. His providential interpositions ought carefully to be remarked: and when dangers are most alarming, he is often nearest to defend and save us. No rage of his enemies can ever disturb his

PALM TREES AND PYRAMIDS—THE PYRAMIDS OF CHEOPS IS REPRESENTED BY SOME AS BEING THE ALTAR OF THE LORD, REFERRED TO IN THESE VERSES. [Isaiah, xix:19-20.]—"In that day there shall be an altar of the Lord in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord. And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord of hosts in the land of Egypt." In a curious book entitled "A Miracle in Stone," Dr. Joseph A. Seiss claims that the 19th and 20th verses of this chapter refer to the great pyramid of Egypt. He says that the altar and the pillar in these verses refer to one and the same thing, that the verses refer to some specific and telling monument, and that all their terms most fully apply to this marvelous hand-made mountain of stone. He thinks the location of the pyramids corresponds to the teachings of the text that the great pyramid is the hub of Egypt's curved shore line, and so is in the midst of the land and at the border between Palestine and Egypt.

11 ¶ Surely the princes of [j]Zoan are [k]fools, the counsel of the wise counsellors of Pharaoh is become brutish: how say ye unto Pharaoh, I am the son of the wise, the son of ancient kings?

12 Where are they? [9] where are thy [l]wise men? and let them tell thee now, and let them know what the LORD of hosts hath purposed upon Egypt.

13 The princes of Zoan[1] are [m]become fools, the princes of Noph[2] are deceived; they have also seduced Egypt, even they that are [3]the stay[4] of the tribes thereof.

14 The[5] LORD hath mingled a perverse spirit[6] in the midst thereof: and they have caused Egypt to err in every work thereof, as a drunken man [o]staggereth in his vomit.

15 Neither[p] shall there be any work for Egypt, which the head or tail, branch or rush, may do.

16 In that day shall Egypt be [q]like unto women; and it shall be afraid and fear, because of [r]the shaking of the hand of the LORD of hosts, which he shaketh over it.

17 And [s]the land of Judah shall be a terror[7] unto Egypt: every one that maketh mention thereof shall be afraid in himself, because of the counsel of the LORD of hosts, which he [t]hath determined against it.[8]

18 ¶ In [u]that day[9] shall [v]five cities[1] in the land of Egypt speak the language[2] of Canaan, and swear[w] to the LORD of hosts; one shall be called, The city of destruction.[3]

19 In that day shall there be [x]an altar to the LORD in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the LORD.

20 And it shall be [y]for a sign and for a witness unto the LORD of hosts in the land of Egypt: for [z]they shall cry unto the LORD because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a saviour,[b] and a great one, and he shall deliver them.

21 And[c] the LORD shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the LORD in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall vow a vow unto the LORD, and perform it.

22 And the LORD [d]shall smite Egypt; he shall smite and heal it: and they shall return even to the LORD, and he shall be entreated of them, and shall heal them.

23 ¶ In that day shall there be [e]a highway out of Egypt to Assyria; and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria; and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.[4]

24 In that day [g]shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land;

25 Whom the LORD of hosts shall [h]bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance.

CHAPTER XX.

A type prefiguring the shameful captivity of Egypt and Ethiopia.

IN the year that [a]Tartan came unto [1]Ashdod, (when Sargon[2] the king of Assyria sent him,) and fought against [b]Ashdod and took it;

2 At the same time spake the LORD by Isaiah[3] the son of Amoz, saying, [c]Go and loose the [d]sackcloth from off thy loins, and put off thy shoe from thy foot. And he did so, walking naked[4] and barefoot.

3 And the LORD said, Like as my servant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoot three years for a sign and wonder upon Egypt and upon Ethiopia;

4 So[e] shall the king of Assyria lead away the Egyptians prisoners,[5] and the Ethiopians captives, young and old, naked and barefoot, even [f]with their buttocks uncovered, to the shame[6] of Egypt.

5 And [h]they shall be afraid and ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory.

6 And the inhabitant of this isle[7] shall say in that day, [i]Behold, such is our expectation, whither we flee for help to be delivered from the king of Assyria: and how shall we escape?

It must have been a place of great strength, as it stood the longest siege on record, having been besieged by Psammitichus king of Egypt for twenty-nine years. At present it is a miserable village of some fifty huts rather than houses.—C. Its site is now covered with gardens and orchards, among which a few columns and large building stones are here and there seen. These are the only remains of the royal city of Ashdod. The situation is beautiful, and the surrounding plain is not surpassed for fertility in Palestine.—P.

repose. Often he seems to have forgotten his people when he is just ready to work their deliverance. And while he is all-sufficient for the protection, quickening, and comfort of the people, he will not save them unless they repent and accept Christ.

CHAPTER XIX. Ver. 1. God's riding upon a swift cloud denotes his coming speedily and irresistibly to execute fearful judgments. 2. After the death of Sethon the country was divided into twelve petty governments; all which, after a long civil war, Psammitichus subdued. It may also relate to the civil war between Amasis and Pharaoh-Hophrah, &c. 4. God shall give them up to the tyranny of Psammitichus, Nebuchadnezzar, the Persian kings, &c. 13–17. Infatuated by their giddy tempers, the princes shall follow pernicious counsels, and lead the subjects into ruin. Neither shall any, high or low, do anything proper for their relief, but shall be quite dispirited and terrified by the threatenings and judgments of God. The report of the destruction of Israel and ravage of Judah by the Assyrians, and the overthrow of Judah by the Chaldeans, or the prophecies uttered in the land of Judah, shall throw the Egyptians into the utmost consternation and fear of the like miseries. 18–23. Nevertheless their terrible and long-continued distresses shall at last issue in the conversion of a great many of them, even in the city of their idols, to the Christian faith; and they shall make a solemn and open profession thereof, and shall, through Jesus Christ, avowedly worship the true God everywhere in the country. After God has, by his angel's cutting off Sennacherib's army, and by Alexander's victories, delivered them from their Assyrian and Persian oppression, Jesus, the infinitely mighty Saviour, shall deliver them from Satan and their lusts, and their heathen abominations. By God's wonderful providences they shall be gradually brought to the saving knowledge of, and openly worship him, and solemnly and candidly devote themselves to his service. And in the apostolic, and especially the millennial period, they, and the eastern nations, who had warred with and oppressed them, and the Jews, who had sinfully courted and been sadly oppressed by both, shall harmoniously embrace the gospel, and unite in the service and distinguished favours of God.

Ver. 1. The idols of Egypt shall be moved. Egypt was anciently either the parent or the great patroness of idolatry. The remains of her idols, even till this day, are of the most gigantic stature. But truly they have been moved, for they are often mutilated, or thrown down, or even carried away into distant lands—memorials at once of the greatness and the littleness of man. His greatness of power in executing works so truly wonderful; and his littleness of understanding in worshipping them as gods. C.

Ver. 7. The paper reeds by the brooks. The papyrus (whence the English word paper) from which were manufactured rolls for writing, cordage, baskets, boats, &c. C.

Ver. 18. The city of destruction. The slightest possible change of the first letter makes it either the 'city of destruction' or the 'city of the sun.' 'City of destruction' seems the most probable reading, as 'city of the sun' seems heathenish rather than scriptural: and is expressively emblematic of that ruin from which the gospel delivers sinners who have destroyed themselves. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God pours the greatest contempt on men's idols; on everything which they inordinately loved or trusted. At his will created comforts concur

POMPEY'S PILLAR—RAISED IN HONOR OF DIOCLETIAN. [Isaiah, xix: 23.]—"In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria; and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria." In the verse quoted from Isaiah, Egypt is represented as going to Assyria, and the Assyrians as coming to Egypt. What is true of Egypt and Assyria has been true of Egypt and many other surrounding nations. There was a Persian dynasty in Egypt, a Macedonian dynasty, and a Roman dynasty. Pompey's pillar may be taken as a monument which stands for this universal relation of Egypt with other nations. This was erected by Pompey, a Roman prefect, in honor of Diocletian some little time after A. D. 302. It is made of granite brought from Aswan. The shaft is about seventy feet and the whole monument, including its pedestal, is a little over one hundred feet high.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 The prophet, bewailing the captivity of his people, seeth in a vision the fall of Babylon by the Medes and Persians. 11 Edom, mourning the prophet, is moved to repentance. 13 The set time of Arabia's calamity.

THE [1]burden[2] of [c]the desert of the sea. [b]As whirlwinds in the south pass through; so it cometh from the desert, [c]from a terrible land.

2 A grievous[3] vision is declared unto me; the[d] treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously, and the spoiler spoileth.[4] Go[e] up, O Elam: besiege, O Media; all [g]the sighing[5] thereof have I made to cease.

3 Therefore [h]are my loins filled with pain; pangs have taken hold upon me, as the pangs of a woman that travaileth: I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it.

4 My heart panted,[6] fearfulness affrighted me: [i]the night of my pleasure hath he turned[7] into fear unto me.

5 Prepare[j] the table, watch in the watch-tower, eat, drink: [k]arise, ye princes, and anoint the shield.

6 For thus hath the Lord said unto me, Go, set a [l]watchman, let him declare what he seeth.

7 And he saw [m]a chariot with a couple of horsemen, a chariot of asses, and a chariot of camels; and he hearkened diligently with much heed:

8 And he cried,[8] A lion:[9] my lord, [o]I stand continually upon the watch-tower in the day time, and I am set in my ward whole nights;[1]

9 And, behold, [p]here cometh a chariot of men, with a couple of horsemen. And he answered and said, [q]Babylon is fallen, is fallen; and [r]all the graven images of her gods he[2] hath broken unto the ground.

10 O[s] my threshing, and the corn[3] of my floor: [t]that which I have heard of the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, have I declared unto you.

11 ¶ The[u] burden[4] of Dumah. He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman,[5] what of the night?[6] watchman, what of the night?

12 The watchman said, [v]The morning cometh, and also the night: [x]if ye will inquire, inquire ye: return, come.[7]

13 ¶ The[y] burden upon Arabia. In the forest[8] in Arabia shall ye lodge, O [z]ye travelling companies of Dedanim.

14 The inhabitants of the land of [a]Tema brought[9] water to him that was thirsty, they prevented with their bread him that fled.[1]

15 For [b]they fled [2]from the swords,[3] from the drawn sword, and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war.

16 For thus hath the Lord said unto me, Within a year, according to the [c]years of an hireling, and all the glory of [d]Kedar shall fail:

to aggravate our ruin, and created supporters fail or fight against us. Fomenters of faction, cruel tyrants, and infatuated and giddy princes are the greatest plagues to nations. And when one sinner or sinful society is cut down, it becomes survivors to consider and tremble. If men persist in their wickedness, God is determined to destroy them. But strange, and often unaccountable to us, are his providential dispensations. He often deals most sharply with those for whom he has the greatest mercies in reserve. Deeply he wounds in order that he may graciously heal. He bereaves men of all that they have in this world, that he may give them his gospel, his grace, his ordinances, his Christ. He seeks constantly to form intelligent, devout, and harmoniously bold societies of believers out of those whom Satan had singularly besotted, sin corrupted, and miseries depressed. And it is comely when the servants of the same God, purchased by the same blood of his Son, and begotten by the same Spirit, lay aside all their animosities, and with one heart, one mind, and one mouth glorify God!

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 1. The word Tartan signifies 'general' or 'commander in chief,' and it is probable it is the official title of the first military officer of Assyria rather than a proper name.—Sargon was one of the greatest of Assyrian kings. He reigned between Shalmaneser and Sennacherib, and was the father of the latter. He ascended the throne in B.C. 721, and appears to have reigned about fifteen years. His various expeditions are recorded on the Assyrian monuments. He is only mentioned by name in this passage of Scripture; but he may be 'the king of Assyria' intended in 2 Ki. 17. 6. P.

Ver. 3. Three years. Probably he so walked only three days, a day for a year, according to prophetic rule, Nu. 14. 34. Eze. 4. 6. C.

Ver. 5. And they. That is, the Jews who trusted to Egypt and Ethiopia for help against Assyria, and who disregarded seeking help of God, shall now be afraid of similar calamities, and be ashamed of their unbelief and ingratitude. C.

Ver. 6. Isle. The Hebrew word here translated 'isle' has various shades of meaning. Generally it means 'land' as opposed to water. Then it signifies 'coast,' and then 'isle.' In this passage it should be rendered 'coast.' The reference manifestly is to Philistia, which lay on the coast of the Mediterranean. P.

REFLECTIONS.—O what need of a self-denying humility in the ministers of Christ! They know not to what apparently hard service he may put them. Into what pitiful condition men's wickedness plunges them! Alas! the dreadful nature of slavery and captivity to inward lusts! How created confidences shame pain, and ruin us at last! But thrice happy are those who in time flee from them all to the never-disappointing Jesus Christ!

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 1, 2. Dreadful calamities shall come upon Babylon on the river Euphrates, which shall reduce it to a desert and fen. Irresistibly they come from Media and Persia, between which and Babylon the wilderness is inhabited by fierce savages. The revolted Medes and Persians shall furiously revenge upon the Chaldeans all their treachery and cruelty to other nations, and shall relieve the enslaved Jews and others from their bondage. 3–5. To their infinite consternation and anguish, their nights of reveling and mirth, and their luxurious feasting, shall be quickly turned into ruinous wars, and into horrid scenes of murder. 6–9. For lo! within view of their watchmen, Darius and Cyrus march forward, with their armies of Medes and Persians, well furnished with everything necessary to destroy Babylon and her multitude of idols. 10. This either represents the afflicted Jews as having this prophecy delivered to them for their comfort, or the Chaldeans as threatened with terrible destruction after they had miserably destroyed the Jews and others. 11, 12. To the affrighted Edomites no other information can be given than that a night of dreadful calamities, by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, &c., shall follow their present respite and prosperity. Nor is there any method to escape it, but by a penitent turning to God and his people.

Ver. 1. The desert of the sea. The waters around Babylon are called sea, and the fertile plain is threatened with being turned into a desert—a threatening now literally realized during centuries. C.

Ver. 2. Elam. Elam was a son of Shem, and founder of a great nation. The country of Elam lay on the east bank of the Tigris, and bordered on the Persian Gulf. It embraced the more modern countries of Persia and Susiana; and in this passage it may be regarded as equivalent to Persia. Its capital was Susa, and one of its early monarchs was Chedorlaomer, who is mentioned in Ge. xiv. P.

Ver. 3. I was bowed down, &c. Isaiah, and not a Babylonian, is the speaker; for to Isaiah was the vision declared, ver. 1, 6. C.

Ver. 4. This cannot be the speech of a Babylonian, but of the prophet speaking of the pleasure which a body weary with toil, and a spirit weary with heavy and vexing thoughts, finds in the sleep of the night. C.

Ver. 5. Anoint the shield. This anointing has been interpreted of oiling the shields, that darts might more readily fly off. But this is an unsupported interpretation. Neither seems it proper to derive the interpretation from some obscure or imaginary custom of anointing shields, never adverted to in Scripture. Is not the shield rather the emblem of a chief chosen and appointed by the princes for the defence of his country in its imminent dangers? C.

Ver. 7. This ought rather to be translated: 'And he saw cavalry, horsemen two abreast, riders on asses, and riders on camels.' The Hebrew word rendered 'chariots' sometimes signifies 'riders,' as in 1 Sa. 8. 4. ic. 18. The Persians used both asses and camels in their armies for riding; and they were accustomed to advance in pairs, two abreast. P.

Ver. 10. O! my brethren, the sowing and harvest of the Lord, whom I have laboured to thrash out of your chaff, and winnow into clearness: lo! I have declared unto you the whole revelation of God! C.

Ver. 11. Dumah. In the midst of the Arabian desert, about 250 miles east of Edom, is an ancient town called by Arab geographers Dumah, but by the modern Bedawin el-Jauf, 'the belly,' probably on account of its features and position. A tradition exists that it was founded by Dumah, the son of Ishmael. It stands in a circular valley, and is encompassed by a ridge of sandstone hills. It still contains about 3000 inhabitants. P.

Ver. 13. Dedanim. Two Dedans are mentioned in Scripture; one descended from Cush, Ge. 10. 7, the other from Abraham by Keturah, Ge. 25. 3. It is the descendants of the latter who are referred to here. Their chief settlements were in Arabia, near the eastern border of Idumea. They seem to have been largely engaged in transport trade, carrying wares from central and eastern Arabia and Persia to the marts of Phœnicia and Egypt, Eze. 26. 20; 38. 13. P.

Ver. 14. Temah. Tema, now called Teyma, is a small town and district east of Idumea, and not far distant from Dumah. P.

REFLECTIONS. Alas! what desolations in populous nations, what alteration in fruitful soils, does sin produce! Quickly they, who treacherously spoiled and murdered others, meet with the same fate. And often the most dreadful ruin comes upon sinners when they are most secure and self-confident. How useful and informing are God's faithful ministers! and what insight they ought to have into the mind and work of God! It is very necessary to discern the signs of the times; and to consider earthly prosperity as but a common inlet to fearful calamities; that we may improve the present hour for returning to God. Kindness to distressed neighbours is ordinarily, by Providence, rewarded with similar reliefs. But how empty is that glory which can be diminished or ruined! Let therefore the Lord alone be my everlasting light, wealth, and honour.

CHAPTER XXII. Ver. 1–3. The heavy judgments of Jerusalem, which is surrounded with moun-17 And the residue of the number of archers,[4] the [e]mighty men of the children of Kedar, shall be diminished: [g]for the LORD God of Israel hath spoken it.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 The prophet lamenteth the invasion of Jewry by the Persians. 8 He reproveth their human wisdom and worldly joy. 15 He prophesieth Shebna's downfall, 20 and Eliakim's advancement in his room.

THE burden[1] of [a]the valley of [2]vision. [b]What aileth thee now, that thou art wholly gone up to the house-tops?

2 Thou[c] that art full of stirs, a tumultuous city, a joyous city: [d]thy slain[3] men are not slain with the sword, nor dead in battle.

3 All[e] thy rulers are fled together, they are bound by the archers:[4] all that are found in thee are bound together, which have fled from far.[5]

4 Therefore said I, [f]Look away from me; I will weep bitterly,[6] labour not to comfort me; because of the spoiling of the daughter of my people.

5 For [g]it is a day of trouble, and of treading down, and of perplexity by the Lord GOD of hosts in the valley of vision, breaking down the walls, and of crying to the mountains.

6 And [h]Elam bare the quiver with chariots of men and horsemen, and Kir uncovered[7] the shield.

7 And it shall come to pass, that thy choicest valleys[8] shall be [i]full of chariots, and the horsemen shall set themselves in array at[9] the gate.

8 ¶ And [j]he discovered the covering of Judah, and thou didst [k]look in that day to the armour of [l]the house of the forest.

9 Ye[m] have seen also the breaches of the city of David, that they are many; and ye gathered together the waters of the lower pool:

10 And [n]ye have numbered[1] the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses have ye broken down to fortify the wall.

11 Ye made also a ditch between the two walls for the water of the old pool: but [p]ye have not looked unto the maker thereof, neither had respect unto him that fashioned it long ago.

12 And in that [q]day did the Lord GOD of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, [r]and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth:

13 And behold, [s]joy and gladness, slaying oxen and killing sheep, eating flesh and drinking wine: let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die.

14 And it was [t]revealed in mine ears by the LORD of hosts, [u]Surely this iniquity shall not be purged from you till ye die, saith the Lord GOD of hosts.

15 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD of hosts, Go, get thee unto this treasurer, even unto [v]Shebna, which is over the house, and say,

16 What hast thou here?[2] and whom hast thou here, that thou hast [z]hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he[3] that heweth him out a sepulchre on high, and that graveth an habitation for himself in a rock?[4]

17 Behold, the LORD[5] will carry thee away with a mighty captivity,[6] and will [y]surely cover thee.

18 He will [x]surely violently turn and toss thee like a ball into a large country:[7] there shalt thou die, and there the chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy lord's house.

19 And [a]I will drive thee from thy station, and from thy state shall he pull thee down.

20 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will call my servant [b]Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah:

21 And I [c]will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and I will commit thy government into his hand; and he shall be a [d]father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah.

22 And the [e]key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open.[8]

23 And I will fasten him as [g]a nail in a sure place; and he shall be for [h]a glorious throne to his father's house.

24 And they [i]shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house, the offspring and the issue, all vessels of small quantity, from the vessels of cups, even to all the vessels of [j]flagons.

25 In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, shall the nail[2] that is fastened in the sure place be removed,[3] and be cut down, and fall; and the burden that was upon it shall be cut off: for the LORD hath spoken it.

tains, and favoured with God's revelations and ordinances. Ye inhabitants, what is become of all your former security and confidence when ye made light of God's threatenings, that ye are gone to the house-tops to view the approaching army, or to hide yourselves? There is now nothing but doleful outcries and confusion, instead of the wonted shouts of mirth. The men of war die by famine and pestilence, or by their own fears. The rulers have fled; but being overtaken, they and others are chained for prisoners. 6. The Persians and Medes served in the Assyrian and Chaldean armies. 8 14. When Sennacherib had dismantled the fortified cities of Judah, he provided armour, repaired your walls, or built new ones, pulling down part of the houses for that purpose, and conveyed all the water into the city; but ye never applied, by prayer or fasting, to God who formed your city, but instead thereof, spent the little time you had reason to expect, in profane revelling and mirth; which impudent contempt of God and his judgments shall never be forgiven you. 15-19. And you, Shebna, what property or relations have you, a foreigner here, that you should build a stately palace or tomb for yourself? Behold, God shall, in an irresistible manner, drive you into captivity, and overwhelm you with shame and contempt. In a distant country thou shalt live and die obscurely; and your stately chariots and other

3 And by great waters the seed of Sihor,[6] the harvest of the [d]river, is her revenue; and she is [e]a mart of nations.[7]

4 Be thou ashamed, O Zidon; for the sea[8] hath spoken, even the strength of the sea, saying, [g]I travail not, nor bring forth children, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins.

5 As [h]at the report concerning Egypt, so shall they be [i]sorely pained at the report of Tyre.

6 Pass[j] ye over to Tarshish; [k]howl, ye inhabitants of the isle.

7 Is this your [l]joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days? her own feet[1] shall carry her afar off[2] to sojourn.

8 Who[m] hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth?

9 The LORD of hosts hath purposed it, to stain[3] the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honourable of the earth.

10 Pass through thy land as a river,[4] O daughter of Tarshish: there is no more strength.[5]

11 He[o] stretched out his hand over the sea; he shook the kingdoms: the LORD hath given a commandment against the [p]merchant city,[6] to destroy the strong holds[7] thereof.

12 And he said, [q]Thou shalt no more rejoice O thou [r]oppressed virgin,[8] daughter of [s]Zidon, arise, pass over to Chittim;[1] there also shalt thou have no rest.

13 Behold[2] the land of the Chaldeans: this people was not till [t]the Assyrian founded it for them that dwell in the wilderness: they set up the towers thereof, they raised up the places thereof; and he brought it to ruin.[3]

14 Howl,[t] ye ships of Tarshish: for your strength is laid waste.

15 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that Tyre shall be forgotten [u]seventy years, according to the days of [v]one king: after the end of seventy years shall Tyre sing[4] as an harlot.[5]

16 Take an harp, go about the city, thou harlot that hast been forgotten: make sweet melody, sing many songs, that thou mayest be remembered.

17 And it shall come to pass, after the end of seventy years, that the LORD will visit Tyre, and she shall turn to her hire, and shall commit fornication[6] with all the kingdoms of the world upon the face of the earth.

18 And [w]her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the LORD: it shall not be treasured nor laid up; for her merchandise shall be for them that dwell before the LORD, to [x]eat sufficiently, and for durable clothing.

He shall be established in his office; and by his prudent carriage shall procure respect to himself and his relations: all of whom, from the highest to the lowest, shall be advanced by him, and own their dependence on him. 25. But you, Shebna, who now appear so firmly fixed in honour, shall then be disgraced and ruined, and all your dependants along with you.

Ver. 8. He discovered the covering of Judah. This expression has been interpreted to 'take away the veil,' an allusion not likely to be applied to Judah. Is it not rather a military allusion, signifying, 'he has passed the fortresses of the frontier,' the exterior lines of defence? C.

Ver. 15. Shebna. All that is known of Shebna is contained in ch xxxvi. xxxvii.; 2 Ki. 18, 19: but from the threatenings here denounced he appears to have been a leader in the epicurean rout that occupied the place of repentance towards God. C.

Ver. 23. I will fasten him, &c. In eastern houses there are many pins or pegs fastened in the walls for the suspension of vessels, &c. In reference to this custom, Eliakim is characterized by his capacity, ver. 24, of attending to the greatest amounts and the minutest details—one of the highest practical qualifications of a truly great mind: nothing too great for its capacity, nothing too little for its condescension. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How unbounded is the knowledge of God! Not a motion in our course, not a word in our tongue, not a thought in our heart, but he knows it long beforehand! How severe are God's corrections of his own professed people! Pious men, and especially faithful ministers, will be distinguished patterns of grief for public calamities, and of eyeing the hand of God therein. In times of peace many things lie quite neglected. And even in danger, many mind nothing but external means of relief, atheistically overlooking God himself. Nor can the best of rulers reform the hearts of their subjects. Luxury leads to infidelity. But how dreadful is it when professors riot in revellings and mirth, when God is calling them to uncommon humiliation for sin! Alas! such luxurious feasts and frothy songs issue in everlasting damnation! It is very rash for court favourites to pride themselves in their station, or to tyrannize over others. God may suddenly displace and debase them. Preferment is only honourable when it is obtained unsought for, and when it is wholly improved to the glory of God and the benefit of mankind. It is a great mercy for churches and nations to have men prudent, active, and faithful in the principal places of government, especially after almost everything has been mismanaged by others. And above all, infinite is the mercy of JEHOVAH, in setting up Jesus Christ a Saviour to restore what he took not away; and that he has intrusted him with the whole concerns of his own glory and of our eternal happiness!

CHAPTER XXIII. Ver. 1–5. Those concerned in the ships of Cilicia, the south parts of Spain, and other sea-ports, shall grievously bewail the extensive destruction of Tyre, as the harbours and places of entertainment and commerce there shall be all destroyed by the Chaldeans or Greeks, and part of the inhabitants carried captive; of which they shall be informed by the people with whom they trade. There shall be nothing but mournful silence and desolation in Tyre, which had been lately filled with mariners, merchants, and goods: filled with the corn and other commodities of Egypt; and resorted to by all the trading nations of the known world. Zidon, her parent and neighbouring city, shall be quite overwhelmed with confusion, because Tyre, long the mistress of the sea, instead of sending forth her colonies, shall be bereaved of her inhabitants. And the ruin of Tyre shall be no less alarming to the Egyptians and other neighbouring nations than the destruction of Egypt by Moses, or by the Ethiopians or Assyrians, &c. 6, 7. Notwithstanding her antiquity, and wonted gaiety and mirth, the inhabitants of Tyre shall, in great anguish and grief, leave their own country, and flee for shelter to Lesser Asia, Spain, or the north of Africa. 8, 9. Nor shall all their glory and wealth be able to prevent their ruin, since God has determined to pull down their pomp and magnificence as a warning to others. 10. Their fortifications and armies being ruined, the inhabitants of Tyre, long supported by their sea trade, shall be glad, in multitudes, swiftly to flee from their country never to return. 11, 12. It is God who, to the terror of the nations around, permits the Chaldeans or Greaks to destroy it; and though never conquered since it was founded by the Zidonians, it shall now be destroyed. Nor shall the inhabitants, carried captive to Chaldea or Greece, or who flee to other places, obtain there any fixed safety or quietness. 13. Nor need the Tyrians think the ruin of their city impossible. The Chaldeans, so anciently formed into a nation by Nimrod, and lately re-established by Baladan, an Assyrian prince, shall, after all their fortification of Babylon their capital, and their conquest of nations, bring them, and then be brought themselves, to ruin. 15–17. And after the Tyrians have been deprived of their trade for seventy years, answerable to the continuance of the Chaldean monarchy, they shall find again their wonted liberty; and they shall, by every engaging art, draw the nations to trade with them as formerly. 18. At last the Tyrians shall, in the apostolic age, be converted to the faith of Christ, and shall employ their power and wealth to promote his glory, and plentifully support his ministers and members.

Ver. 1. Tarshish. 'Tarshish' is a name common to Tarsus in Cilicia, some portion of India or Africa situated on the Indian Ocean, or of Spain; which last probably is the country here meant. See ver. 6. C.——Chittim. The Chittim were a people descended from Javan, Ge. 10. 4. Cyprus was probably their original seat. Its chief town was Citium, which is radically identical with Chittim. The Greeks afterwards occupied Cyprus, but seem to have been called Chittim. They established colonies far and wide throughout the Levant. From them Macedon—Ma Keti, 'the land of the Keti or Chittim'—derived its name. They also settled in Italy. P.

Ver. 3. The seed of Sihor, the harvest of the river, is her revenue. Grain from the banks of the Nile, 1 Ch. 3. 5. The river, most probably the Euphrates, as the channel of Indian commerce. C.

Ver. 4. Tyre. Ancient Tyre was situated on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, about 23 miles south of Sidon: New Tyre, on an island, about half a mile from the land: for upwards of 300 years it was justly considered the commercial capital of the world. Ver. when at the height of prosperity, its destruction was foretold by Ezekiel, Eze. xxvi.–xxviii., as well as by Isaiah. Yet how unlikely was its ruin! It was a place of prodigious strength, so that it successfully withstood Shalmanezer, king of Assyria, during a siege of five years; and was not taken by Nebuchadnezzar till after a siege of thirteen years. The island city had walls 150 feet high; but was taken by Alexander after a siege of seven months, and reduced to a state of utter ruin. It subsequently recovered a portion of its prosperity; but has long been what Ezekiel foretold, 'as the top of a rock, a place to spread

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 The deplorable judgments of God upon the land. 13 A remnant shall joyfully praise him. 16 God in his judgments shall advance his kingdom.

BEHOLD,[a] the LORD maketh[1] the earth empty; and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down,[2] and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof.

2 And it shall be, [b]as with the people, so with the priest;[3] as[c] with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so with her mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him.

3 The[d] land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled: for the LORD hath spoken this word.

4 The earth mourneth, and fadeth away; the world languisheth, and fadeth away; the haughty people[4] of the earth do languish.

5 The earth also is [e]defiled under the inhabitants thereof, because they [g]have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.

6 Therefore[h] hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore[i] the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left.[5]

7 The[j] new wine mourneth, the vine languisheth, all the merry-hearted do sigh.

8 The mirth [k]of tabrets ceaseth, the noise of them that rejoice endeth, the joy of the harp ceaseth.

9 They shall not drink wine with a song; strong drink shall be bitter to them that drink it.

10 The[l] city of confusion[6] is broken down: every house is shut up, that no man may come in.

11 There[m] is a crying for wine in the streets; [n]all joy is darkened, the mirth of the land is gone.

12 In[p] the city is left desolation, and the gate is smitten with destruction.

13 ¶ When thus it shall be in the midst of the land among the people, [q]there shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning grapes[7] when the vintage is done.

14 They[r] shall lift up their voice, they shall sing[8] for the majesty of the LORD, they shall cry aloud from the sea.

15 Wherefore [s]glorify ye the LORD in the [9]fires,[1] even the name of the LORD God of Israel [t]in the isles of the sea.

16 ¶ From[u] the uttermost part[2] of the earth have we heard songs, even glory to the righteous.[3] But I said, [v]My leanness,[4] my leanness, woe unto me![5] the[x] treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously; yea, the treacherous dealers have dealt very treacherously.

17 Fear,[y] and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth.

18 And it shall come to pass, [z]that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for [a]the windows from on high are open,[6] and the foundations of the earth do shake.

19 The[b] earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly.

20 The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the [c]transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, that [d]the LORD shall punish[7] the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth.

22 And they shall be gathered together as

Ver. 1. The Lord maketh the earth empty. The earth here signifies the land of Israel, as is evident from its inhabitants being guilty of breaking the 'everlasting covenant,' &c., ver. 5. Yet the judgments that originate there extend to all the nations, ver. 4. For when 'the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin there, 'what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?' 1 Pe. 4. 17. C.

Ver. 17. Fear. It is important to observe that while those who fear God, fear none but him; those who refuse to fear God are never delivered from fear. The mightiest nations, even in time of profound peace, are always afraid of one another—fear, under the name of panic, is always at intervals smiting the heart, and paralyzing the arm of commerce: and there is an undefined sense of fear, an instinctive prophesying of impending calamities, and a certain 'fearful looking for of judgment,' from which no sinner can escape so long as he neglects the 'great salvation.' C.

Ver. 22. Shall they be visited. 'They shall be found wanting' (the marginal reading) is to be preferred, as the whole process in the judgment of all nations, Mat. 25. 45, is not so much the commission of sin, as the want of grace and works of love. C

REFLECTIONS.—What a world of sinning and suffering we live in! What a theatre of disappointments, dishonours, confusions, sorrows, and deaths! No rank, no place, nothing escapes the fearful effects of sins curse: and if men avoid one misery, they but fall into another. Nor are any more wretched than treacherous apostates from God and rejecters of his Son. Nevertheless, God in the worst of times finds a remnant who believes; and often makes the most terrible calamities an introduction to the most remarkable displays of his mercy and grace. In transcendent wisdom did God bring in the accursed Gentiles to his church, when he rejected the seed of Abraham his friend. And in true compassion will Jesus hereafter, nets upon.' Jamieh estimates the present inhabitants of New Tyre at about 4000. The ancient city is a total ruin. C.

Ver. 15. Seventy years. From the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar till its restoration as a kingdom by Darius Hystaspes, in gratitude for their naval services, was just seventy years 'according to the days of one king,' or 'one kingdom.' that of Babylon; and from the first year of Nebuchadnezzar till Babylon was taken by Cyrus, was just seventy years—the whole period allotted by Providence to the Babylonian monarchy. C.

Ver. 17. Is not the last clause of ver. 17, beginning 'and she shall turn,' &c., to be read as a parenthesis, and united to ver. 16, and the first clause of ver. 17 to be read as the preface to ver. 18? And is not the whole a promise already in part fulfilled by the early conversion of Tyre to the Christian faith; and of blessed days to come, of which the past is the emblem, and the prophecy the security? C.

REFLECTIONS.—The wealthiest on earth are quickly reduced to poverty, and the most noisy traders to silence. And earthly friends can give but little help in our distress, however deeply they be concerned on account of it. When God pursues, there is no fleeing from our misery: and the more secure we lived, the more grievous will be our fall. There is no fixed, no solid rest but in Jesus Christ and in fellowship with him:—What a mercy is it if an afflicting God do not draw out his wrath to all generations,—to eternity! And if he turn back our captivity, he can bring back our lost prosperity. But earthly wealth often seduces men's souls into spiritual whoredom. Happy therefore are they whose troubles lead them to the knowledge of God, and whose trade regained is devoted to the service of Jesus Christ! Let him be my merchant, my wealth, my strong city; and I, and all I have, be HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

CHAPTER XXIV. Ver. 13–15 Such as in faith persevere shall cordially and publicly acknowledge God's great power and goodness in their preservation, and praise him in the countries where they sojourn. And your duty is to own his power, justice, and mercy, and to trust in him, and patiently wait for deliverance in every fiery trial, and in every country, however remote. 16 may either signify that, though once the whole land of Israel was filled with shouts of praise to a righteous and promise-performing God, yet there is now nothing but desolation, murder, pillage, and captivity instead thereof; or that, though the Gentiles are in multitudes assembling to Christ and his worship, yet the Jewish nation reject him, and are rendered miserable on that account. 19, 20. The country is rendered desolate, and the inhabitants know not which way to turn themselves, and are tossed about from one place to another. 21, 22 may perhaps represent the final ruin of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Romans, Antichristians, Turks, and other enemies of the people of God, as well as of the Jewish great men. 23. The glorious reign of Christ in his church, particularly in the apostolic, spiritual, and eternal periods, will obscure the lustre of all earthly grandeur and authority, and the greatest potentates shall stoop to him.

CHURCH OF THE COLUMN, ATHENS—ONE OF THE FIRST CITIES IN EUROPE WHERE ST. PAUL PREACHED THE GOSPEL, AND A CITY NOW FILLED WITH CHRISTIAN CHURCHES. [Isaiah, xxv:6-9.]—"And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wine on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Above is a picture of the Greek Church of the Column in Athens, Greece. The above prophecy of Isaiah is connected with the year B. C. 704, but is thought to refer to the church of the future. Just two years before the date of this prophecy, or B. C. 714, Hippomenes rendered himself execrable in the eyes of Athenians by his cruelty in exposing his own daughter to be devoured by horses. Now, through the influence of the church to which Isaiah referred in his prophecy, Athens is a Christian city.

prisoners are gathered[8] in the pit,[9] and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited.[1]

23 Then the [a]moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the LORD of hosts shall reign[g] in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients, gloriously.[2]

CHAPTER XXV.

1 The prophet praiseth God for his past judgments, 6 for his saving benefits, 9 and for his victorious salvation.

O LORD,[a] thou art my God; I will exalt thee, I will praise thy name: for thou hast done wonderful things; thy counsels of old are [b]faithfulness and truth.

2 For[c] thou hast made of a city an heap; of a defenced city a ruin: a palace of [d]strangers to be no city; it shall never be built.

3 Therefore[e] shall the strong people glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

4 For[g] thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.[1]

5 Thou[h] shalt bring down the noise of strangers,[2] as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low.

6 ¶ And[i] in this mountain[3] shall the LORD of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of [j]wines on the lees well refined.

7 And[k] he will destroy[4] in this mountain the face of [l]the covering cast[5] over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations.[6]

8 He will [m]swallow up death in victory; and the Lord GOD will [n]wipe away tears from off all faces; and the [p]rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the LORD hath spoken it.

9 And it shall be said in that day, Lo, [q]this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the LORD: [r]we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.

10 For in this mountain [s]shall the hand of the LORD rest, and Moab[7] shall be trodden [8]down under him, even as straw is trodden down for the dunghill.[9]

11 And[t] he shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim: and he shall bring down their pride together with the spoils of their hands.

12 And the fortress of the high fort of thy walls shall he bring down, lay low, and bring to the ground, even to the dust.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 A song inciting to confidence in God, 5 for his judgments, 12 and for his favour to his people. 20 An exhortation to wait on God.

IN that[a] day shall this song be [b]sung in the land of Judah: We have [c]a strong city; [d]salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

2 Open[e] ye the gates, that the righteous nation which [g]keepeth the truth[1] may enter in.

3 Thou wilt keep him [h]in perfect [2]peace,

1 A song inciting to confidence in God, 5 for his judgments, 12 and for his favour to his people. 20 An exhortation to wait on God.

IN that[a] day shall this song be [b]sung in the land of Judah: We have [c]a strong city; [d]salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

2 Open[e] ye the gates, that the righteous nation which [g]keepeth the truth[1] may enter in.

to the amazement of all beholders, draw both Jews and Gentiles to himself; and at last, for the eternal manifestation of his glorious perfections, translate his whole kingdom to the celestial mansions above.

CHAPTER XXV. Ver. 1–5. All the desolations which thou hast made in the cities of the heathen are the execution of thy purposes and fulfilment of thy word: and thereby shall the stoutest of thine enemies be obliged to acknowledge thy almighty power and strict justice. And as thou hast formerly protected and comforted thy people when furiously assaulted and distressed by their powerful enemies, thou shalt continue, with infinite ease, to baffle the most furious attempts of thine adversaries, and to reduce them and their posterity to ruin. 6–9. In Judea, but chiefly in the firmly-founded and wide-spread gospel church, shall the Lord exhibit, offer to, and bestow on sinful men of all nations, the spiritual and eternal blessings of his new kingdom, feast them on the flesh and blood of his Son, remove their ignorance and guilt, redeem them from death, comfort them against grief, remove the tokens of his anger, and enable them to triumph in himself and his salvation. 10–12. And while he dwells with, delights in, and protects believers, he shall everywhere, and with infinite ease, utterly destroy all those who reject Christ.

Ver. 1. I will exalt thee. Who is the speaker of these words? Isaiah, or some other? Is not the speaker 'the Lord of hosts,' 'manifest in the flesh,' 'before his ancients gloriously?' Comp. Ro. 15. 9 with Ps. 18. 49. See also ch. 26. 19, 20, where none but Messiah can be the speaker. C.

Ver. 2. Made of a city an heap. The last city mentioned by the prophet is in ch. 24. 10, 'the city of confusion,' which is Babylon. Babylon natural being long a shapeless ruin—a heap—the emblem of the ruin to which Babylon mystical is yet to be reduced.—A palace of strangers. Babylon is called 'a palace of strangers,' because of the rich and princely visitors drawn by interest or curiosity to visit and reside in it; or of its warlike enemies drawn by cupidity and ambition to invade and take possession of it. C.

Ver. 6. A feast. The gospel is frequently represented under the emblem of a feast, Mat. 8. 11; Lu. 14. 16; 22. 29, 30.—Fat things—the emblem of abundance and prosperity, Ge. 41. 26, 29. —Wines—wine, the emblem of the restorative power of the gospel promises, Is. 45. 1, 2.—On the lees—refined mechanically by rest, and chemically by mutual agency of the parts, from all turbid and feculent mixture, the emblem of a church purified from 'all false doctrine, heresy, and schism.' C.

Ver. 7. The vail that is spread over all nations. I will remove the 'vail of Moses' from the Jew, and enable him to see Christ in all the sacrifices, the only 'end of the law for righteousness;' and I will remove the vail of prejudice and antipathy through which the Gentiles have hitherto looked upon the Jews. C.

Ver. 11. 'And he,' not the Lord, but Moab, 'shall spread forth his hands in midst thereof, as the swimmer stretcheth out his hands to swim;' - that is, Moab shall struggle as a drowning man: - 'but God shall bring down his pride, and the capacity of his hands together.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Thrice blessed is that people whose God is the Lord; and who have all his persons, perfections, purposes, promises, threatenings, and works engaged in their behalf! It is wicked, mad, and self-ruinous for the mightiest powers of hell or earth to injure them, or to attempt their destruction. Why then should not their lips be filled with his praise and honour all the day, who is so much to them, has done, does, can, and will do so much for their salvation in time and eternity? What a ground of grateful praise is it, that in Judah's land, on Calvary's mount, Jesus prepared himself, and all the fulness of God in him, to be our abundant provision! He finished transgression, and made an end of sin. He, through death, destroyed death and him that had the power of it, and secured an infinite fulness of light, life, and salvation for believers. What ground of praise is it that, in the gospel, he sets before sinners of the Gentiles all the fulness of God in himself, for our present and everlasting nourishment! And why not rejoice in him for that he has pledged his infallible promise, that heathenism, Popery, and everything sinful and ruinous, shall give place to his glory filling the whole earth, and to his being in heaven our everlasting ALL and IN ALL.

CHAPTER XXVI. Ver. 1, 2. As God fortified and protected Jerusalem from Sennacherib's army, and by their destruction gave his people access to celebrate their solemn feasts, so shall he firmly found and fortify his gospel church, that no power of hell or earth shall ever prevail against her; and multitudes of persons, accepting Christ, sincere and steady in their profession, and holy in their conversation, shall be added as her members. 5, 6. Not only Nineveh, Babylon, and Rome, but heathenism, Mahometanism, and Popery, shall be extirpated, and the gospel planted instead thereof, even by weak instruments. 7. God makes the way of his people plain and clear, and he directs, judges, and approves their conduct. 8, 9. Lord, even under thy heavy chastisements, we have patiently served thee and waited for deliverance, and have earnestly desired, meditated on, and comforted ourselves in thy grace, power, and faithfulness, and the former manifestations thereof. 9–11. Adversity is an ordinary mean of stirring up men to consideration and necessary duties; but whether thou prosper or punish obstinate sinners, they blind and harden themselves under both mercies and judgments. No ordinances, patterns, nor providences can move them to duty: but they shall at length feel thy judgments, and be filled with shame for their spiteful behaviour towards thy people. 12–14. Thou who hast afflicted us, wilt render us happy and prosperous, even as thou hast already vouchsafed great mercies and deliverances to us. Many heathen powers have tyrannized over us; but by thy favour and help we will own thee alone for our God, trust in thee for and give thee the praise of all our deliverances. Thy providence hath effectually and irrecoverably destroyed all our oppressors. 15–18. Both the Jewish nation and the Christian church have been exceedingly enlarged and extended; but notwithstanding our prayers in trouble, and painful attempts, all has been hitherto useless: the wicked still continue numerous and whose mind[3] is stayed on thee: [t]because he trusteth in thee.

4 Trust[l] ye in the LORD for ever: for [k]in the LORD JEHOVAH is everlasting strength:[4]

6 The[n] foot shall tread it down, even the feet of the poor, and the steps of the needy.

7 The way of the just is [o]uprightness: thou, most[p] upright, dost [q]weigh the path of the just.

8 Yea, in the [r]way of thy judgments, O LORD, have we [s]waited for thee; [t]the desire of our soul is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee.

9 With my soul [u]have I desired thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early: for [v]when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness.

10 Let[x] favour be showed to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness: [y]in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly, and will not behold the majesty of the LORD.

11 LORD, when [z]thy hand is lifted up, they will not see: [a]but they shall see, and be ashamed for their envy at the people; yea, [b]the fire of thine enemies shall devour them.[5]

12 ¶ LORD, [c]thou wilt ordain peace for us: for thou also hast [d]wrought all our works in us.[6]

13 O LORD our God, [e]other lords beside thee have had dominion over us: but [f]by thee[7] only will we make mention of thy name.[8]

14 They[h] are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise: therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish.

15 Thou[i] hast increased the nation, O LORD, thou hast increased the nation: thou art glorified: thou hast [j]removed it far unto all the ends of the earth.

16 LORD, [k]in trouble have they visited thee, they poured out a prayer[9] when thy chastening was upon them.

17 Like[l] as a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out in her pangs; so have we been in thy sight, O LORD.

18 We[m] have been with child, we have been in pain, we have as it were brought forth wind; we have not wrought any deliverance in the earth, neither have [e]the inhabitants of the world fallen.[1]

19 Thy[p] dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead.

20 ¶ Come, my people, [q]enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for [r]a little moment, until the indignation be overpast.

21 For, behold, the LORD [s]cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: [t]the earth also shall disclose her blood,[2] and shall no more cover her slain.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 The cave of God over his vineyard. 7 His chastisements differ from judgments. 12 The restoration of the dispersed.

IN that[a] day the LORD, with his sore, and great, and strong sword, shall punish [b]leviathan the piercing[1] serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent; and he shall slay [c]the dragon that is [d]in the sea.

2 ¶ In that day sing ye unto her, [e]A vineyard of [f]red wine.[2] powerful. 19. The Jewish nation, seemingly dead under the Assyrian ravages, the Chaldean captivity, and present dispersion, shall again revive and flourish. The gospel church shall be restored, after her decays, by the influence of a preached gospel: and at the last day every believer, through union to Jesus Christ, shall be raised to everlasting life. 20, 21. But as terrible troubles must come for the punishment of the wicked and the manifestation of their wickedness, it is necessary that every saint, by faith, repentance, and prayer, flee to God for protection, lay hold on his promises, and depend on his perfections and providences, till that time of fearful calamities be over.

Ver. 1. A strong city. The church is the city of God, Ps. 48. 1: He. 12. 22. including the idea of compactness, Ps. 122. 3, or close fellowship and mutual dependence—rights of citizenship, Ep. 2. 19—riches of commerce—thrones of judgment, and walls of defence. C.

Ver. 2. The gates. The gate of doctrine in principle, precept, and promise—and the gate of baptism into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Mat. 28. 19, 20. —Keepeth the truth. There is no rational characteristic of the true church but keeping the truth as it is in Jesus, in profession of doctrine and power of godliness, Ja. 1. 18. C.

Ver. 7. More literally, 'the way for the just is smoothnesses' (made even); 'smooth the highway of the just thou orderest.' C.

Ver. 9. In the night. During the dark period of national calamity. See Ps. 30. 5. C.

Ver. 10. Will not behold the majesty of the Lord. The Jews could see no majesty in Jesus, mainly because he did not assume the forms of human pride, but came 'meek and lowly.' They would not acknowledge his power even when he cast out devils; they would not believe his witness, even when he rose from the dead. C.

Ver. 12. God works all his people's working, (1) by subduing their enmity, Ro. 8. 7; (2) by giving them the will, Phi. 2. 13; (3) by furnishing the power, He. 13. 21; and (4) by prospering their undertakings, Ge. 39. 3. C.

Ver. 15. Thou hast removed [the nation], &c. This is not a prophecy of the removal of Israel from Canaan, nor their scattering among all nations, but of the final enlargement of the kingdom of the Christ, when 'the heathen shall be his inheritance, and the ends of the earth his possession.' C.

Ver. 19. Messiah, who was originally revealed as the seed of the woman, came in a body prepared, that he might do the will of his Father in the suffering of death; and so be crowned with glory and honour in the victory of the resurrection. Messiah must here be the speaker, as the prediction is true of him and not of another. Which reference of the passage to him is still farther confirmed by ver. 20, in which the speaker addresses Israel as their king, saying, 'Come, my people.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Truly blessed are they who have fled to Jesus Christ for refuge, and are encompassed by his promises and infinite perfections! No Christian character can be formed without a steadfast and exact adherence to God's truths. Truly righteous, upright, and humble saints are an inestimable blessing to nations and churches. Steady faith in God's perfections and promises produces much solid peace and composure of mind. If we trust in him firmly, we shall find ground to praise him constantly. And if we by faith put our strong enemies in his hand, he will easily bring them down. If with ardent desires we wait for him in every ordinance and providence, we shall quickly find him to our comfort. And the earlier and more earnest our supplications are, they will be the more graciously answered. Alas! how hardened are many hearts, that neither mercies can melt nor judgment awaken them! But it is good for us to draw near to God and renounce all his rivals! Whatever discouraging providences he may exercise us with for a while, confusion and ruin will overwhelm all his and our enemies at last. Let us therefore be sober, and hope to the end for his salvation. He quickens dead souls, revives dead churches, and will at last quicken our dead bodies, and make them like unto his glorious body. Under manifold troubles and injuries let us possess our souls in patience. The Judge stands at the door. Our afflictions, however sharp, will soon be over; and our protection in them, under the shadow of the Almighty, is both safe and sweet. But what awful discoveries will God make of men's sins when he rises up to punish them!

CHAPTER XXVII. Ver. 1. Tyrannical oppressors, strong, furious, crafty, and mischievous, are likened to leviathans, serpents, dragons, &c., especially if they dwelt near such animals, as the kings of Assyria, Egypt, and Babylon did. 2, 3. The reformed Jewish nation and gospel church is likened to a vineyard bringing forth the choicest vines; because, being planted, watered, and protected by God, they abounded in good works. 4. Though I was angry with them, mine anger is turned away through Christ: but if hypocrites in the church, or profane persons without it, offer to contend with me, they may expect to be quickly destroyed. 5, 6. Jews and true church members shall, as reconciled through Christ, be firmly settled, and shall increase in numbers and glory. 7–9. Nor will God afflict his own people in the same wrathful and ruinous manner as he does their heathen or antichristian eneevery moment: lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day.

4 Fury[i] is not in me: who would set [j]the briers and thorns against me in battle? I would go through[k] them, I would burn them together.

5 Or [l]let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me; and he shall make peace with me.

6 He[l] shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root: Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit.

7 ¶ Hath he smitten him, as he smote those[4] that smote him? or is he slain according to the slaughter of them that are slain by him?[5]

8 In[n] measure, when it shooteth forth,[6] thou wilt [o]debate with it:[7] he[8] stayeth his rough wind in the day of the [p]east wind.

9 By[q] this, therefore, shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged; and this is all the fruit to take away his sin; when [r]he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk stones that are beaten in sunder, the groves and images[9] shall not stand up.

10 [s]Yet[1] the defenced city shall be desolate, and the habitation forsaken, and left like a wilderness: there [t]shall the calf feed, and there shall he lie down, and consume the branches thereof.

11 When [u]the boughs thereof are withered, they shall be broken off: [v]the women come and set them on fire; for it is [w]a people of no understanding:[2] therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will show them no favour.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the LORD shall [x]beat off[3] from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and ye shall be [y]gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the [z]great trumpet[4] shall be blown, and they shall come which were [a]ready to perish [b]in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and [c]shall worship the LORD in the holy mount at Jerusalem.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 The prophet threateneth Ephraim for their pride and drunkenness. 5 The residue shall be advanced in the kingdom of Christ. 7 He rebuketh their error, 9 their untowardness to learn, 14 and their carnal security. 16 Christ, the sure foundation, is promised. 18 Their security shall be tried. 23 They are incited to the consideration of God's discreet providence.

WOE to [a]the crown of pride, to the [b]drunkards of Ephraim, whose [c]glorious beauty is a fading flower, which are[1] on the head of the fat valleys of them that are overcome[2] with [3]wine!

2 Behold, the LORD hath [d]a mighty and strong one,[4] which, as a tempest of hail, and a destroying storm, as a flood of mighty waters overflowing, shall cast down to the earth with the hand.

3 The crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim, shall be [e]trodden under feet:[5]

4 And the glorious beauty which is on the head of the fat valley shall be [g]a fading flower, and as [h]the hasty[6] fruit before the summer; which, when he that looketh upon it seeth, while it is yet in his hand he eateth[7] it up.

5 ¶ In that day shall the LORD of hosts be [i]for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, unto the residue[8] of his people,

6 And for [j]a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that [k]turn the battle to the gate.[9]

7 ¶ But[1] they also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way: the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink, they are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment.

8 For all tables are full of vomit and filthiness, so that there is no place clean.[1]

9 ¶ Whom[n] shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand [2]doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts.

10 For[o] precept must be[3] upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little:

mies; but will so mitigate their troubles as that they may be able to bear them; and make them means of stirring them up to repentance and reformation, particularly in detesting and destroying their idolatrous altars, groves, and images. 10, 11. Nevertheless to punish the stupidity and blindness of the present generation, and their imitators in wickedness, the defenced cities shall be laid desolate, and the palaces become pastures for flocks and herds. The whole country shall be exposed to the ravage of the most weak and contemptible enemies. 12, 13. By the providence of God, and proclamation of Cyrus, the Jews shall be brought back to their own land from Chaldea and from Egypt, and shall build the temple and restore the worship of God at Jerusalem. In the latter days they shall be gathered from the east and west, north and south, and shall embrace the Christian faith, and from every quarter shall God, in the apostolic and millennial periods, gather men to the church and worship of Jesus Christ.

Ver. 1. The book of Revelation describes a period during which 'the woman,' the emblem of the persecuted church, hides herself in the wilderness, Re. 12. 6, 14, which well corresponds to the admonition, Is. 26. 20. At the same time (Re. 12. 9; the dragon, the old serpent, is cast out, which well accords with the prophecy in the text—the destruction of leviathan, 'the dragon that is in the sea.' C.

Ver. 4-6. The VINEYARD replies—'I have no wall for my defence! O that I had a defence of the thorn and the brier!' JEHOVAH speaks—'Against them should I march in battle, I should burn them up together. Ah! let her rather take hold of my protection!' The VINEYARD replies—'Let him make peace with me, peace let him make with me!' JEHOVAH speaks—'They that come of the root of Jacob shall flourish' (Lowth.. C.

Ver. 9. By this fatherly chastisement shall Jacob's children be purged of their evil inclinations; and all the fruit, ver. 6, of my tending and watering shall be the removal of idolatry, the national sin that has hitherto most easily entangled them. C.

REFLECTIONS.—No enemy is too strong for God to deal with; and his remarkable deliverances tune his people's hearts to praise him. Being infinitely dear and precious to him, his church can never fail, nor any true member miss the joy of faith. He, as reconciled in Christ, delights to reconcile the world to himself, and bless men with all spiritual blessings in him: but it is infinitely hazardous to set ourselves in opposition to him. Never are our troubles on earth so sharp, but it is a mercy that they are not heavier; and when God inflicts one sore judgment he ordinarily restrains another. Whatever the saints lose in their troubles, their enemies lose more in the end. Troubles must either destroy the sin or the sinner. And if mitigated troubles be merciful, sanctified ones are much more so. How provoking to God and ruinous to men is ignorance of God under the means of knowledge and grace! But how marvellous is it that, by the most terrible outward calamities, he should pave the way to remarkable mercies, and that the ruin and scattering of nations should introduce a gathering to Jesus Christ and his worship, nay, to his heavenly mansions! And notwithstanding all the opposition of hell and earth, no faithful soul shall come short either of grace here or glory hereafter.

CHAPTER XXVIII. Ver. 1-4. The proud state and drunken nation of the Israelites shall quickly be robbed of their present transitory power and honour. The Assyrians, furiously invading their country, shall irresistibly, easily, and suddenly reduce them to debasement and misery, lay desolate their country, and seize on their wealth. 5, 6. But the kingdom of Judah shall be marvellously preserved and continued in their relation to God; their magistrates shall be endowed 11 For with [p]stammering lips,[4] and another tongue, will he speak[5] to this people.

12 To whom he said, [q]This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: [r]yet they would not hear.

13 But[t] the word of the LORD was unto them precept upon precept,[6] precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; [u]that they might go, and fall backward, and be [v]broken, and snared, and taken.

14 ¶ Wherefore [w]hear the word of the LORD, ye[x] scornful men, that rule this people which is in Jerusalem:

15 Because ye have said, [y]We have made a covenant with death,[7] and with hell are we at agreement; [z]when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us: for we have made [a]lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves:

16 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold,[a] I lay in Zion for a foundation [b]a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: [c]he that believeth shall not make haste.[8]

17 ¶ Judgment[d] also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet; and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding-place.

18 And [e]your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it.[9]

19 From[g] the time that it goeth forth it shall take you: for morning by morning shall it pass over, by day and by night: and [h]it shall be a vexation only to understand the report.[1]

20 For [i]the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it; and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it.

[h] The Hebrew word rendered 'breadcorn' means 'bread,' then the grain from which bread is usually made; that is wheat. The latter signification it has here. The mode of threshing wheat is this:—It is spread out to the depth of two feet or more upon the circular threshing-floor. A yoke of oxen or horses is then attached to the threshing-instrument, and are driven round and round over the grain until the straw is reduced to powder. It is this process which is expressed by the Hebrew word translated 'bruised.' It does not mean that the grain is bruised, only the straw.—C.

B.C. cir. 726.

[1] Or, O Ariel, that is, the lion of God, 2 Sa. 23. 20, or altar, Eze.43.15,16.

[2] Zion is undoubtedly the place intended. See ver. 8. Ariel signifies 'the altar or lion of God.' It may have been named 'a lion,' in reference to the character of Judah, Ge. 49.9. But altar seems the proper idea in this place, as there is an immediate reference to sacrifice.—C.

[3] Or, of the city, i.e. Jerusalem, 2 Sa. 5. 7,9.

[4] That is, once the seat of true religion, victory, peace, and prosperity.—C.

21 For the LORD shall rise up as in mount [j]Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of [k]Gibeon, that he may do his work, his [10]strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act.[2]

22 Now, therefore, [l]be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong: for I have heard from the Lord GOD of hosts [m]a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth.[3]

23 ¶ Give[n] ye ear, and hear my voice; hearken, and hear my speech.

24 Doth the plowman plow all day to sow? doth he open and break the clods of his [11]ground?

25 When he hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not cast abroad the fitches,[4] and scatter the cummin, and cast in the principal wheat, and the appointed barley,[5] and the [6]rye, in their place?[7]

26 For his God [q]doth instruct him to discretion, and doth teach him.[8]

27 For [r]the fitches are not thrashed with a thrashing-instrument, neither is a cart-wheel turned about upon the cummin; but the fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cummin with a rod.

28 Bread[s] corn is bruised;[9] because he will not ever be thrashing it, nor break it with the wheel of his cart, nor bruise it with his horsemen.[1] with wisdom and prudence, and their armies with courage and valour to pursue the enemy. 7-13. But they too, their priests and prophets not excepted, are so stupified with drunkenness, error, and superstition, that there is no possibility of instructing them, however frequently the same things be repeated to them; therefore God shall send among them the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Romans, who shall instruct them by repeated and ruinous strokes. And since they have refused to hearken to God's promises, and the offers of his Son and salvation, as the only sure and effectual means of comfort and happiness, their refractory despising of his repeated invitations shall issue in their ruin. 14, 15. And because you, rulers of Judah, deride God's threatenings, and boast that, by confederacies and other political devices, you have secured yourselves and your nation from danger; 16. Behold God exhibits and offers to you his precious Christ, as the sole foundation of solid hope, and the only sure refuge in time of trouble, on whom whosoever believeth need take no unlawful means to escape or get out of trouble. 17-22. But such of you as reject him shall have all your vain hopes frustrated. The Assyrians shall certainly ravage the country: nor shall your confederacies and carnal politics in the least protect you from their fury. They shall quickly involve you in misery; nay, the very rumour of their approach shall fill you with consternation and anguish. None of your devices to which you have trusted will secure you, while, contrary to his usual method, God shall employ his almighty power for the destruction of a great part of his professed people; and if ye despise his threatenings, ye shall be enslaved by the Assyrians and others: for he has determined to accomplish, by sword, famine, pestilence, and captivity, the utter destruction of the Israelites, and of a great part of the kingdom of Judah. 27, 28. In the eastern countries, wheat was beaten out from the husk by drawing a kind of drag with iron wheels over it.

29 This[t] also cometh forth from the LORD of hosts, which is [u]wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working.[2]

Ver. 1. Woe to the crown of pride. Samaria was beautifully situated on a hill, and surrounded by a rich valley; and its position and splendour naturally suggested the idea of a crown upon the head of a monarch.—Drunkards. Not merely habitual drunkards from wine, but persons intoxicated with pride and self will beyond reasoning, and regardless of warning. C.

Ver. 2. With the band. Not beating off a few topmost gleanings, as in ch. 27. 12, but plucking the best and ripest 'with the hand.' C.

Ver. 9. To the drunkards it is impossible to communicate instruction, it can only be communicated to them who have been 'converted and become as little children,' Mat. 18. 3. C.

Ver. 13. The word of the Lord was 'precept upon precept,' that the rejection of it being manifest, his righteousness might be manifest also in his judicial deliverance of them to their own devices, wherein they should 'fall backward, be broken, snared, and taken.' C.

Ver. 15. For we have made lies our refuge, &c. Not that they admitted, either in thought or word, that they had adopted 'lies and falsehood' as their refuge and covering, but boasted of principles and practices which, though their sophistry, self-sufficiency, and idolatrous inclinations had persuaded them to be true and right, yet God, who seeth and knoweth all things, pronounced to be 'lies and falsehood.' C.

Ver. 16. The words of the scornful men are recorded in ver. 15. They mocked at the thought of death and judgment. In ver. 16 is the Lord's solemn response—'You trust in your own delusions; I lay a sure and everlasting foundation, on which he who places his confidence can rest with perfect safety. The Foundation I lay is the Messiah.' The meaning of the last clause of the verse is often misunderstood. The Septuagint renders it 'he that believeth shall not be ashamed.' The words are quoted three times in the New Testament, 1 Pe. 2. 6; Ro. 9. 33; 10. 11; and the quotations agree with the Septuagint. There is no error or discrepancy here; the Hebrew is metaphorical; in the Greek the metaphor is resolved. The sense of the passage is:—'He that resteth on Christ shall be so confident of security under every circumstance, that he shall never fly hastily from him; he shall never be ashamed of the trust he placed in him; he shall never be confounded through the desertion or failure of his Protector.' P.

Ver. 21. When David had humbly inquired of the Lord, by his command he smote the Philistines, and he and his men burned their forsaken images there, 2 Sa. 5. 20, 21. And when the defeated Philistines mustered their forces again, after similar inquiry, and similar command from the Lord, again David defeated them at Gibeon, and pursued them to Gazer, 1 Ch. 14. 16. C.

Ver. 25. Fitches. 'Vetches.' The word ketsach, translated fitches, occurs only in this verse. Jerome and others understand by it the gith, a plant that bears a black aromatic seed in an ovary like that of the poppy: it is still much used in the East to flavour cakes. Cummin. This is an umbelliferous plant resembling fennel. Its seeds are bitterish and aromatic, and furnish oil: it is still sown in Malta. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Pride and drunkenness render men a compound of beasts and devils; abominations to God, and plagues and monsters on earth. But whatever sinners are proud of is but fading. And nothing bids be heaviness and sorrow: and it shall be unto me as [6]Ariel.[7]

3 And[b] I will camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee.

4 And[c] thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper[8] out of the dust.[9]

5 Moreover [d]the multitude of thy strangers[1] shall be like small dust, and the multitude of the terrible ones shall be [e]as chaff that passeth away: yea, it shall be at an instant suddenly.[2]

6 Thou shalt be visited[3] of the LORD of hosts with[f] thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire.

7 And[h] the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night vision.

8 It[i] shall even be as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be that fight against mount Zion.[4]

9 ¶ [j]Stay[5] yourselves, and wonder; cry ye out, and cry:[6] they [k]are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink.

10 For[l] the LORD hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: the prophets and your rulers,[7] the [m]seers hath he covered.

11 And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book[8] that is [n]sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot; for it is sealed:

12 And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I am [p]not learned.

13 ¶ Wherefore the Lord said, [q]Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honour me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men:

14 Therefore, [r]behold, I will proceed to [s]do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work and a wonder: [t]for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.

15 Woe unto them that [u]seek deep to hide their counsel from the LORD, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?

16 Surely [v]your turning of things upside down[1] shall be esteemed as the potter's clay: for shall the work say of him that made it, He made me not? or shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, He had no understanding?

17 ¶ Is it not yet a [w]very little while, and [x]Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a [2]forest?

fairer to hurl men quickly into the depths of disgrace, poverty, and damnation, than pride and drunkenness. God faithfully honours and blesses the nation which conforms to the principles of righteousness. But thrice happy are those to whom Jesus Christ, and God in him, are their glory and crown. Base corruptions often continue, even amidst the most candid and zealous attempts towards reformation. But it is shameful and ill-boding when priests and prophets are partners in their stupidity, and ringleaders in superstition and wickedness. What multitudes obstinately live in ignorance or rejection of God's truth! But if they refuse to hear his word, he will make them feel his rod: and none shall feel it more certainly than proud scorners and obstinate refusers of Jesus Christ. How rich is the grace of God, in exhibiting Jesus as a Saviour to men, when they have eminently ripened themselves for his judgment! Eternally safe are they who trust in him, when all other refuges fail, when all carnal projects and self-righteousness prove lies in their right hand.—But what sovereignty, wisdom, holiness, and equity does God manifest in forming and timing every judgment which he inflicts!

CHAPTER XXIX. Ver. 1, 2. Jerusalem is called ARIEL, from the altar of burnt-offering which devoured the offerings sacrificed upon it.—Notwithstanding all their sacrifices and pretended devotions, both city and temple shall be brought into great straits,—and filled with fire, blood, and carcasses of men, a great sacrifice. 3, 4. By the enemies whom I shall appoint against you, your present haughtiness and scoffing shall be turned into great debasement, distress, and submission. 5-8 doth perhaps not only denounce the sudden destruction of their enemies by the fearful judgments of God, but also the ruin of the Jews' auxiliaries and armies, and their own terrible distress, while their enemies were quite insatiable in devouring and destroying. 9-12. With amazement ponder and bewail your condition, and cry for deliverance; for all ranks are besotted with corrupt principles, unsteadiness, and stupidity; and neither ignorant nor learned either understand or regard the warnings of God. 13-16. Because their religious devotion is merely in outward appearance, while the most abominable wickedness reigns in their heart, and merely an observance of the commands of Hezekiah, or the traditions of the elders, I will punish them with astonishing miseries, baffle all the deep-laid projects of their politicians, and give up their doctors to amazing stupidity. All their subtle devices, for perverting the order which I have fixed, shall be as easily altered as clay by the potter, and as ineffectual to accomplish their designs as clay without a potter. 17-21. Amazing changes shall happen on fields and nations: the long-barren Gentile world being converted to Christ, and rendered fruitful in good works, while the Jews shall be rejected because of their unbelief. The unconcerned and ignorant Gentiles shall be brought to the knowledge of God in Christ; and, amidst affliction and poverty, shall rejoice in himself and his favours; while their proud and powerful enemies, who watched for opportunities of doing mischief, and who hated reproof, and persecuted the prophets and ministers of God, and for a trifling consideration perverted justice, shall be destroyed. 22-24. And notwithstanding the distresses or rejection of the Jews, the church shall be gloriously enlarged, to the great comfort of the pious Jews and honour of God; and multitudes of the most wicked and obstinate opposers shall be converted, especially in the coming period.

Ver. 10. God pours out mercy—heedless sinners disregard and pervert it. God threatens judgments, but habitual sin, acting like an opiate on the body, has drugged their consciences into insensibility; they refuse to awake; they love to slumber and dream. Wherefore God gives them over judicially to their own ways, and is so said to 'pour out the spirit of deep sleep' upon them. Yet he pours out the spirit, not to induce them to sleep; but he gives them up to it as a punishment, because they refuse to awake. C.

Ver. 14. As the point of the finger applied to the eye can exclude the sun and the world, so one single erroneous opinion can exclude the Sun of Righteousness and eternity. The single principle of self-righteousness blinded the Pharisees in the days of our Lord. The same principle, alas! continues to blind the unreformed churches; and beneath its baleful influence 'wisdom still perishes—understanding is hid.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Formal hypocrites may go on long in a round of external duties; but dreadful and debasing is the judgment of God which awaits them, and which awaits the chastisers even of his provoking people. His judgments make the stoutest hearts to bow or to break. Fearful is their condition who are drunk with the love of pleasures, honours, or wealth, or with corrupt principles and prejudices; or who are so abandoned to spiritual stupidity, that the best means can neither enlighten nor awake them. Alas! how wicked, how villanous is it to approach God in outward forms of devotion while we hate him in our heart, and worship him only from regard to the authority of men! Absurd and fruitless is every scheme which is carried on independent of and in opposition to God. But thrice happy is it to have external calamities balanced with subsequent spiritual blessings; and that the casting away of the Jews has issued in the reconciling of the Gentile world to him;—and in some future period, how much more shall their fulness!

CHAPTER XXX. Ver. 1-5. Dreadful ruin shall overtake those Israelites and Jews who, without regarding my counsel, increase their wickedness, by taking unwarrantable methods for their own protection and deliverance. 6, 7. They send whole loads of presents upon asses and camels southward into Egypt, which will but hurt instead of helping them, and will soon be as miserable as themselves. But their only way to secure themselves is to stay at home, and trust in and words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity, and out of darkness.

19 The[e] meek also shall increase[3] their joy in the LORD, and [f]the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.

20 For [g]the terrible one is brought to nought, and the scorner is consumed, and [h]all that watch for iniquity are cut off:

21 That [i]make a man an offender for a word,[4] and lay a snare for him that [k]reproveth in the gate, [l]and turn aside the just for a thing of nought.

22 Therefore thus saith the LORD, who [m]redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, [n]Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale.

23 But when he seeth [o]his children, the work of mine hands, in the midst of him, they shall sanctify[k] my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel.

24 They[l] also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding,[5] and they that murmured[6] shall learn doctrine.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 The prophet threateneth the people for their confidence in Egypt, 8 and contempt of God's word. 18 God's mercies toward his church. 27 God's wrath, and the people's joy, in the destruction of Assyria.

WOE to[a] the rebellious children, saith the LORD, that [b]take counsel, but not of me; and that [c]cover[1] with a covering, but not of my spirit, that they may [d]add sin to sin:[2]

2 That[e] walk to go down into Egypt, and have not asked at my mouth; to strengthen themselves in the strength of Pharaoh, and to trust in the shadow of Egypt!

3 Therefore[g] shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame, and the trust in the shadow of Egypt your confusion.

4 For his[3] princes [h]were at Zoan,[4] and his ambassadors came to Hanes.[5]

5 They[i] were all ashamed[6] of a people that could not profit them, nor be an help nor profit, but a shame, and also a reproach.

6 The burden of the beasts of the south: into the land of trouble and anguish,[7] from whence come the young and old lion, the viper and fiery flying serpent, they [j]will carry their riches upon the shoulders of young asses, and their treasures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that [k]shall not profit them.

7 For the Egyptians shall help in vain, and to no purpose: therefore have I cried concerning this,[8] Their[l] strength is to sit still.

8 ¶ Now go, [m]write it before them in a table, and note it in a book, that it may be for the time to come[9] for ever and ever:

9 That [n]this is a rebellious people, lying children, children that will not hear the law of the LORD:

10 Which say to the [o]seers, [p]See not: and to the prophets, Prophesy not unto us right things: [r]speak unto us smooth things, prophesy deceits:

11 Get[s] you out of the way, turn aside out of the path, cause the Holy One of Israel to cease from before us.

12 Wherefore thus saith the Holy One of Israel, Because ye despise [t]this word, and trust in oppression[1] and perverseness, and stay thereon:

13 Therefore this iniquity shall be to you [u]as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall,[2] whose breaking cometh suddenly at an instant.

14 And he shall break it as the breaking of the potter's vessel[3] that is broken in pieces; he shall not spare: so that there shall not be found in the bursting of it a sherd to take fire from the hearth, or to take water withal out of the pit.

15 For thus saith the Lord GOD, the Holy One of Israel, [v]In returning[4] and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength; and [x]ye would not.

16 But ye said, No; for we will flee upon horses; therefore [y]shall ye flee: and, we will ride upon the swift; [z]therefore shall they that pursue you be swift.

wait upon God for his help. See ver. 15. 9 17. And since this rebellious and hypocritical people will disregard my admonitions, and require my prophets to forbear delivering my messages, unless they flatter their humours and lusts, they shall quickly find themselves, and their carnal confidences, all shattered to pieces. And since they refuse to stay at home, and turn to and trust in me, but will trust to their Egyptian allies, the Assyrians shall pursue and scatter them till only a few stragglers be left. 18–26. Nevertheless the Lord will wait for a fit season to deliver you, and will, in infinite wisdom, glorify his own perfections in working graciously for you. Notwithstanding Sennacherib's attempts, and the attempts of all your other enemies, ye shall safely dwell in Jerusalem; ye shall return thither from your Chaldean captivity; and in the latter days shall, to your inexpressible comfort and happiness, be converted to Christ and his church. And whatever adversities you may quickly suffer, you shall then have plenty of public ordinances and teachers, and be remarkably directed in all your ways. Ye shall, with the utmost detestation, relinquish your idolatries, and destroy every monument thereof. While your fields and hills produce plentiful crops of corn, grass, vines, &c., your nation shall bring forth multitudes of converts, and fruits of righteousness, to the glory of God. And while your proud enemies, Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, Antichristians, and Turks, are brought down, great and amazing shall be your refreshment, knowledge, comfort, and vigour. 27–33. For, behold, to your sudden and inexpressible joy, the Lord, in the execution of his purposes and predictions, will with great ease, but in a most terrible and sudden manner, destroy the Assyrian army in the valley of Hinnom, before Jerusalem, as a prelude of similar ruin to the rest of your adversaries.

Ver. 6. This verse should either begin a new chapter or paragraph, for there can be no reason for understanding the word burden in any sense but that of a heavy judgment denounced, as in ch. 13:1, &c. Beasts of the south. Not the beasts that carry southward, but the men of whom the ravenous lion and venomous reptile are the emblems. C.

Ver. 7. Their strength is to sit still. Not to sit still in idleness: but to sit still in the land of promised blessing, waiting in faith, hope, and prayer for the salvation of God. C.

Ver. 10, 11. The prophet does not mean that they used the very words of ver. 10, 11, but that their words, when rightly interpreted, had the meaning he assigns. C.

Ver. 14. Not be found . . . a sherd to take fire from the hearth. The culinary vessels in most Asiatic countries are generally of earthenware. Should the fire be extinguished, a potsherd carries a little borrowed fire: the want of even a potsherd is an emblem of the deepest poverty. C.

Ver. 18. And therefore. Yet 'notwithstanding' all your self-will and neglect of his counsel, 'the Lord will wait,' &c. C.

Ver. 19. Thou shalt weep no more. This refers to a time not yet arrived, and synchronizes with the blessed period foretold, Re. 21:4, when 'God shall wipe away all tears,' and 'there shall be neither sorrow nor crying.' C.

Ver. 21. Shall hear a word behind thee, &c. If ye 'turn to the right or the left to do evil,' and go for a moment astray, you will hear the voice of your teachers, who lately stood 'before your eyes,' ver. 20, now calling from 'behind you,' saying, 'Turn ye, turn ye,' 'this is the way, walk ye in it.' C.

Ver. 24. Some ancient paintings exhibit the Egyptian method of winnowing grain, either by lifting it and letting it fall through the air in front of the winnower or throwing it over his shoulder, as is still practised in some of the northern parts of Europe. In these paintings, each winnower is attended by an assistant, with a sheet shovel or scoop, to lift the grain into the fan, one species of which seems a light and broad tray with a short handle. Note, Though this prophecy may be considered literal for godliness is profitable unto all things yet it is chiefly to be regarded as emblematic of gospel tillage, gospel pasture, gospel labours, and abundance of grace, mercy, and peace. C.

Ver. 33. Tophet signifies a drum; which name is supposed to have been given on account of drums being used to drown the cries of the children that were there offered to Moloch. It was considered a striking emblem of the place of 'everlasting punishment.' The commencement of this prophecy lies in the destruction of the army of Sennacherib: its conclusion in the destruction of the 'man of sin'—'antichrist'—'the wilful king'—'whom the one; at the rebuke of five shall ye flee; till ye be left as a beacon[5] upon the top of a mountain, and as an ensign on an hill.

BARRACKS AT THE CITADEL, CAIRO—THE MOST INFLUENTIAL CITY OF EGYPT, AND SUPPOSED TO STAND IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD WHERE THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL LIVED IN EGYPT. [Isaiah, xxx: 1-3.] —"Woe to the rebellious children, saith the Lord, that take counsel, but not of me; and that cover with a covering, but not of my spirit, that they may add sin to sin: that walk to go down into Egypt, and have not asked at my mouth; to strengthen themselves in the strength of Pharaoh, and to trust in the shadow of Egypt! Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame, and the trust in the shadow of Egypt your confusion." We give a picture of the barracks at the citadel in Cairo. Standing upon this hill overlooking the most interesting city in Egypt, it is easy to see how true were the words of Isaiah quoted above. The strength of Egypt has always been its shame and the shame of all who have looked to her for help. The enormous wealth which from age to age has been extracted from the fertile soil of this ancient land has been used to corrupt and degrade the ruling class, and to oppress and make unendurable the lives of the laboring classes.

18 ¶ And therefore[6] will the LORD [b]wait, that he may be gracious unto you, and therefore will he be [c]exalted, that he may have mercy upon you; for the LORD is a God of [d]judgment: blessed[e] are all they that wait for him.

19 For the people shall [g]dwell in Zion at Jerusalem; [h]thou shalt weep no more: he will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; [i]when he shall hear it, he will answer thee.

20 And though the Lord give you [j]the bread of adversity, and the water of affliction,[7] yet shall[k] not thy teachers be removed into a corner any more, but thine eyes shall see thy teachers:

21 And [l]thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is [m]the way, walk ye in it, when ye [n]turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left.

22 Ye[o] shall defile also the covering of thy graven images of silver,[8] and the ornament of thy molten images of gold: thou shalt cast[9] them away as a menstruous cloth; thou shalt say unto it, Get thee hence.

23 Then[p] shall he give the rain of thy seed, that thou shalt sow the ground withal; and bread of the increase of the earth, and it shall be fat and plenteous: in that [r]day shall thy cattle feed in large pastures.

24 The oxen likewise, and the young asses that ear the ground,[1] shall eat [2]clean[3] provender, which hath been winnowed with the shovel and with the fan.

25 And [s]there shall be upon every high mountain, and upon every high[4] hill, rivers and streams of waters in the day of the [t]great slaughter, when the towers fall.[5]

26 Moreover, [u]the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days, in the day that [v]the LORD bindeth up the breach of his people, and healeth the stroke of their wound.

27 ¶ Behold, [w]the name[6] of the LORD cometh from far, burning with his anger, and the burden thereof[7] is heavy,[8] his lips are full of indignation, and [x]his tongue as a devouring fire:

28 And[y] his breath, as an overflowing stream, shall reach to the midst of the neck, [z]to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity:[9] and there shall be [a]a bridle[1] in the jaws of the people, causing them to err.

29 Ye[c] shall have a song, as in the [2]night when a holy solemnity is kept; and gladness of heart, as when one goeth with a pipe to come into the mountain of the LORD, to the Mighty One[3] of Israel.

30 And the LORD shall cause his glorious voice[4] to be heard, and shall show the lighting down of his arm, with the indignation of his anger, and with the flame of a devouring fire, with scattering, and tempest, and hailstones.

31 For through the voice of the LORD shall the Assyrian be beaten down, which [d]smote with a rod.

32 And in every place where the grounded staff[5] shall pass,[6] which the LORD shall [7]lay upon him,[8] it[e] shall be with tabrets and harps: and [9]in battles of shaking will he fight [9]with it.[1]

33 For [h]Tophet is ordained of old,[2] yea, for the king it is prepared: he hath made it deep, and large; the pile thereof is fire and [i]much wood: [j]the breath of the LORD, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 The prophet showeth the cursed folly of trusting in Egypt, and forsaking of God. 6 He exhorteth to conversion. 8 He showeth the fall of Assyria.

WOE to[c] them that go down to Egypt for help; and stay on horses, and trust in chariots, because they are many; and in horsemen, because they are very strong: [b]but they look not unto the Holy One of Israel, neither seek the LORD!

2 Yet [c]he also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back[1] his words: but will [d]arise against the house of the evil-doers, and against [e]the help of them that work iniquity.

3 Now the Egyptians are [g]men, and not God; and their horses flesh, and not spirit. When the LORD [h]shall stretch out his hand, [i]both he Lord will consume by the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy by the brightness of his coming,' 2 Th. 2. 8. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Men are too fond of trusting to human help in their distress, and too careless of that which is divine. But what is got without the Lord's leave cannot be of any real service, but hurt. The notorious wickedness of professors justifies God's severest judgments against them! It is infinitely criminal and hazardous for men to tempt God's ministers to unfaithfulness in delivering his messages. God frequently gives them up to delusion who incline to it; and punishes such as scoff at his admonitions with fearful, certain, and unavoidable ruin. There is no way of escaping his judgments but by a believing and penitent turning to himself. And if, notwithstanding thousands of provocations and judgments, he still waits to be gracious, earnestly ought we to wait and cry for his favours. Persevering faith and prayer always issue in substantial and lasting comforts. Great is the mercy to have an open access to Jesus Christ's ministers and ordinances, and to be directed in every step by God's teaching Spirit and a tender conscience. Detestable to exercised saints are their formerly beloved lusts, and precious are spiritual blessings. The relief of God's people, and the fall of the wicked, are marvellously connected. In his anger he blasts, overflows, sifts, bridles, beats, and burns up his most proud and powerful oppressors with the greatest ease! Having therefore received a kingdom that cannot be moved, let me have grace, wherewith I may serve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear; for our God is a consuming fire.

CHAPTER XXXI. Ver. 2, 3. As wise as you think yourselves, God will countermine all your subtle contrivances, and bring effectual ruin upon both you and your Egyptian helpers. 4, 5. Undismayed by all the noise, boasting, and blasphemy of the Assyrians, God shall, with almighty force, furiously encounter and devour them; but tenderly defend Jerusalem, as a bird doth its nest, or as the angel did the Israelites when he destroyed the Egyptians. 8, 9. By the immediate judgment of God shall the Assyrian army be generally destroyed; and Sennacherib himself, with the poor remains, terrified by the visible tokens of God's wrath, shall flee home to Nineveh his capital. God had his sanctuary and altar in Jerusalem, and there he appeared, like a fire, to defend his people, and consume his enemies.

Ver. 1. Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help. To go to Egypt for help was a direct and wilful breach of the divine law, De. 28 68, but the prophecy virtually denounces every unlawful means of seeking deliverance from danger—especially seeking the assistance of wicked men, upon the ground of any adoption of their principles or countenance of their practices. C.

Ver. 5. 'As the mother-birds fluttering over their brood, so shall JEHOVAH of hosts defend Jerusalem, protecting and delivering, springing over to her rescue.' And whoever has actually witnessed the courage of a mother-bird, whether domestic or wild, when called to the defence of her young, will not fail to admire the beauty and power of the image. C.

Ver. 9. The Lord, whose fire is in Zion, &c. Whose fire of the Spirit is in Zion, the seat of ordinances—and whose furnace of judgment is in Jerusalem, the seat of government. C.

that helpeth shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together.

4 For thus hath the LORD spoken unto me, Like[z] as the lion and the young lion roaring on his prey, when a multitude of shepherds is called forth against him, he will not be afraid of their voice, nor abase himself for the noise[2] of them: so shall the LORD of hosts come down to fight for mount Zion, and for the hill thereof.

5 As[a] birds flying, so will the LORD of hosts defend Jerusalem; defending also he will deliver it, and passing over he will preserve it.

6 ¶ Turn[t] ye unto him from whom the children of Israel have [u]deeply revolted.[3]

7 For in that day[4] every man shall [v]cast away his idols of silver, and his idols of gold,[5] which your own hands have made unto you for a sin.

8 ¶ Then[w] shall the Assyrian fall with the sword, not of a mighty man; and the sword, not of a mean man, shall devour him: but he shall flee from[6] the sword, and his young men shall be [7]discomfited.[8]

9 And he shall pass over to his stronghold[9] for fear,[1] and his princes shall be afraid of the ensign, saith the LORD, whose [x]fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem.[2]

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 The blessings of Christ's kingdom. 9 Desolation is foreshown. 15 Restoration is promised to succeed.

BEHOLD, a[c] king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment.

2 And [b]a man shall be as an hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place; as the shadow of a great[1] rock in a weary land.[2]

3 And[c] the eyes of them that see shall not be dim: and the ears of them that hear shall hearken.

4 The heart also of the rash[3] shall understand knowledge, and the tongue of the stammerers shall be ready to speak plainly.[4]

5 The[d] vile person shall be no more called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful.

6 For[e] the vile person will speak villany, and his heart will work iniquity, to practise hypocrisy, and to utter error against the LORD, to make empty the soul of the hungry, and he will cause the drink of the thirsty to fail.

7 The[g] instruments also of the churl are evil: he deviseth wicked devices to destroy the poor with lying words, even when the needy speaketh right.[5]

8 But[h] the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand.[6]

9 ¶ Rise up, [i]ye women that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters; give ear unto my speech.

10 Many days and years[7] shall ye [j]be troubled, ye careless women: for the vintage shall fail, the gathering shall not come.

11 Tremble,[k] ye women that are at ease; be troubled, ye careless ones: strip you, and make you bare, and gird sackcloth upon your loins.

12 They shall lament for [l]the teats, for the pleasant fields,[8] for the fruitful vine.

13 Upon[m] the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers, yea,[9] upon all the houses of joy in the [o]joyous city:

14 Because[p] the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; the [l]forts and towers shall be for dens for ever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks;

15 ¶ Until [q]the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and [r]the fruitful field be counted for a forest.

16 Then[s] judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field.

17 And[t] the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever.

REFLECTIONS.—Many wickedly go far for human help, and to no purpose, when they might have help from God at hand to infinite advantage. But the more we know of men we shall trust them the less; and the more we know of God we shall trust him the more. It is an atheistical disbelief of his all-sufficiency that ever makes us depart from him to depend on a creature: and when we do so, we may expect to have it ruined along with ourselves. But happy are believers whom God defends with infinite compassion and almighty power. His promises are an infallible ground of faith; his goodness ought to lead the greatest rebels against him to a kindly repentance; and every remarkable deliverance should be attended with remarkable reformation. But great is the ruin and the terror which await his implacable foes!

CHAPTER XXXII. Ver. 1–8. Hezekiah and his princes and officers shall govern in equity and wisdom; shall protect the oppressed, promote the instruction of the subjects in the laws of God, and treat every one according to his real character, bad or good.—Jesus shall erect and govern his church in the most righteous manner, and his apostles and ministers shall wisely dispense his ordinances. He shall protect, refresh, quicken, and comfort his people in all their tribulations. Such as have spiritual knowledge shall have it greatly increased; and even the inconsiderate shall be made to know, and the weak to declare, the things of God with great distinctness. Worthless, hypocritical, and mischievous oppressors shall be detected and debarred from offices or honours, while they who are liberal and upright shall be visibly blessed and prosper. 9–14. Terrible shall be the distress and anguish of those cities and wanton women, who, by their pride and vanity, provoked God to wrath; when, through the ravage of the enemy, neither milk, nor corn, nor wine shall be found, but the whole land be turned into, and for many years or ages continued, a desolate wilderness. 15–20. But when God shall pour forth his Spirit, mighty changes shall ensue, and great revivals in souls, in churches, and nations shall be wrought. The gospel shall be received, and righteous judgments executed everywhere. Great shall be the peace and real prosperity of true believers, even while the unbelieving Jews, or others, shall be fearfully destroyed. And great shall be the success of ministers in the conversion of multitudes to Christ.

Ver. 1. Of no king, except Messiah, could it ever be absolutely said that 'he reigned in righteousness;' this is therefore a prophecy of his accession and government.—Princes. The apostles of our Lord, who, during their lives, ruled the churches in holy judgment, as may be seen Ac. 15. 28, 29, and who, by their doctrines, decisions, and institutions, still continue to rule in word and discipline. C.

Ver. 2. The shadow of a great rock in a weary land. Not merely a shadow to protect from the heat, but the shadow of a great rock to defend from enemies. C.

Ver. 6. This description corresponds with the picture which our Lord draws of the scribes and Pharisees, Mat. 23. 14, 23. C.

Ver. 8. The liberal deviseth liberal things. This was accurately fulfilled in our Saviour's charge to his apostles, Mat. 10. 8, 'Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.' C.

Ver. 9. Women and daughters might, no doubt, be understood as emblematic titles for cities and villages; but the words may well be understood literally. In this view the warning seems specially directed to women, seeking to recall them to thoughtfulness and repentance; because society can never be meliorated and reformed, so long as mothers are sunk in indolence, infatuated by gaiety, careless of the instruction of their children, and indifferent to the welfare of the church. C.

Ver. 11, 12. 'Upon your loins, upon your breasts, mourn ye for the pleasant field, for the fruitful vine' (Lowth.). C.

Ver. 13. This prophecy may be seen awfully verified in the wretched condition of houses and fields in the Holy Land. C.

Ver. 14. For ever. Not 'for ever' in its unlimited sense; but 'for ever' 'until' (ver. 15) the Spirit be poured from on high.' C.

Ver. 17. There is no righteousness but what arises from the finished work of Christ. This 'work' was 'peace,' because Christ is our peace; 'the effect' is 'quietness' of conscience, Ro. 5. 1: and 'assurance of acceptance with God,' Ep. 1. 6, because it is certain that Christ the righteous, our Advocate, 1 Jn. 2. 1, and Head, Ep. 1. 22, 23, is not only always heard, Jn. 11. 42, but already accepted, He. 9. 14. C.

Ver. 19. Hail is the emblem of judgments, ch. 30. 30: forest, the emblem of the church renovated by the outpouring of the Spirit, ver. 15: the city, Ariel, ch. 29. 1, of which it is said, ch. 29. 3, 'Thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground,' &c. But after these disasters of 'hail,' and 'bringing low,' the people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in quiet resting-places.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Greatly beneficial are virtuous

18 And my people shall dwell in [u]a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting-places,

19 When it [v]shall hail, coming down on the forest; and the city shall be low in a low place.[2]

20 Blessed[x] are ye that sow beside all waters, that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass.[3]

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 God's judgments against the enemies of Zion. 13 The privileges of the godly.

WOE to [a]thee that spoilest, and thou wast not spoiled; and dealest treacherously,[4] and they dealt not treacherously with thee! when[b] thou shalt cease to spoil, thou shalt be spoiled; and, when thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee.

2 O LORD, [c]be gracious unto us; we have waited for thee: [d]be thou their arm every morning, our salvation also in the time of trouble.

3 At[e] the noise of the tumult the people fled; at the lifting up of thyself the nations were scattered.

4 And [f]your spoil shall be gathered like the gathering of the caterpillar: as the running to and fro of locusts shall he run upon them.

5 The[h] LORD is exalted; for he dwelleth on high: he hath [i]filled Zion with judgment and righteousness.

6 And [j]wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times,[2] and strength of salvation:[3] the[k] fear of the LORD is his treasure.[4]

7 Behold, their valiant ones[5] shall cry without; the ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly.

8 The[l] highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth: he hath broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities, he regardeth no man.

9 The[m] earth mourneth and languisheth; Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down;[6] Sharon is like a wilderness; and Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits.

10 Now [o]will I rise, saith the LORD; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself.

11 Ye[7] shall[p] conceive chaff; ye shall bring forth stubble: your breath, as fire, shall devour you.

12 And the people shall be as the burnings of lime; as thorns cut up shall they be burned in the fire.

13 ¶ Hear, [q]ye that are far off, what I have done; and ye that are near, acknowledge my might.

14 The[r] sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites: [s]Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

15 He that [t]walketh righteously,[8] and speaketh uprightly;[9] he that despiseth the gain of oppressions,[1] that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood,[2] and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil;

16 He[u] shall dwell on high:[3] his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks; bread shall be given him, his waters shall be sure.

17 Thine eyes shall see[4] the king in his beauty:[5] they shall behold the land that is very far off.[6]

18 Thine heart shall meditate [7]terror. [w]Where is the scribe? where is the [9]receiver?[1] where is he that counted the towers?[2]

19 Thou[x] shalt not see a fierce people, a people [y]of a deeper speech than thou canst perceive; of a stammering[3] tongue, that thou canst not understand.

20 Look[z] upon Zion, the city of our solemnities: thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken.

21 But [a]there the glorious LORD will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams;[4] wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby.

magistrates: but much more a gracious, a divine Saviour. Safely may the most guilty rest under his all-covering propitiation; and the most weak and oppressed under his powerful protection. Hopeful is the case when those who are ignorant are willing to be taught, and when everything is called by its own proper name; when persons are held in esteem, according to their real deserts; when they who are active in plotting or practising wickedness are disgraced; and they who are active in contriving or performing what is good are high in repute. But rarely any remarkable reformation happens, but some fearful judgment on the despisers and opposers thereof attends it. And how alarming at last to the sons and daughters of unconcern, gaiety, and mirth, are the terrible, the desolating, and the awful judgments of God! O what remarkable reformation God's Spirit, by the preaching of the gospel, can make among nations, and in ages the most corrupted! Great are the advantages, the solid satisfaction, and substantial comforts which are to be had in real fellowship with and likeness to God! And great is the honour of faithfully preaching the gospel, and abounding in works of charity.

CHAPTER XXXIII. Ver. 1, 3, 4. When God has punished the nations around by the Assyrians, all their ravage, oppression, and treachery shall be revenged on themselves. The destruction of their camp by the angel shall make the remainder to flee home with great precipitation; and the inhabitants of Jerusalem shall, in multitudes, gather up the spoil. 5, 6. While God shall thus exalt himself in the destruction of his enemies and deliverance of his people, he will bless Jerusalem with true religion and righteousness: and by the abounding of real piety, and by the wise and prudent administration of government, shall the nation be preserved, and even rendered wealthy, during Hezekiah's reign? 7 9. The Jewish soldiers shall be quite dispirited and vexed: their ambassadors, sent to supplicate terms of peace, shall return weeping on account of their unsuccessfulness. None shall dare to travel the country. Sennacherib shall disregard his treaty with the Jews; he shall scorn their strength, and reject their entreaties for peace. The country, even the most fertile and populous places, shall be rendered utterly desolate. 10 12. But when all hopes of deliverance to the Jews seem gone, I will exert my almighty power. I will render all the Assyrians' plots fruitless; and their rage against my people shall be revenged in their own sudden and fearful destruction. 13, 14. All around them shall be alarmed; and even the hypocritical Jews terrified, lest like judgments, or damnation in hell, should seize on themselves. 15–24. The righteous, who labour to avoid every evil, however gainful or pleasant, shall be safely preserved and abundantly supplied. They shall behold Hezekiah in health, prosperity, and glory, and freely travel through the whole of Canaan. Nay, they shall, by faith, behold Jesus in his glory and the heavenly felicities. They shall, with solemn awe, wonder how suddenly the Assyrian army is destroyed or fled, and how safe Jerusalem is; and how marvellously the Lord has protected his people, answerably to his relations to them; and how, while the Assyrian army is irrecoverably shattered to pieces, and their spoil gathered by the feeble Jews, Hezekiah and his subjects are delivered from their sickness and distress, and have the tokens of the Lord's favour restored to them.—N.B. It is easy to apply the above explication to the deliverance from the Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, Romans, or Antichristians.

22 For the LORD is our [b]judge, the LORD is our[c] lawgiver,[5] the LORD is [d]our king; he will save us.

23 Thy tacklings are loosed;[6] they could not well strengthen their mast; they could not spread the sail: then [e]is the prey of a great spoil divided; the lame take the prey.

24 And[g] the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 The judgments wherewith God revengeth his church. 11 The desolation of her enemies. 16 The certainty of the prophecy.

COME near,[a] ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people; let the earth hear, and all that is therein:[1] the world, and all things that come forth of it.

2 For[b] the indignation of the LORD is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed[2] them, he hath delivered them to the slaughter.

3 Their[c] slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcases, and the[d] mountains shall be melted with their blood.

4 And [e]all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree.

5 For [f]my sword shall be bathed in heaven:[3] behold, it shall come down [h]upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment.

6 The[i] sword of the LORD is filled with blood; it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for the LORD hath a sacrifice in Bozrah,[4] and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.

7 And [j]the unicorns[5] shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be soaked[6] with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness.

8 For it is [k]the day of the LORD's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion.

9 And [l]the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch.

10 It[n] shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever:[7]

11 But[o] the cormorant[8] and the bittern shall possess it; the owl also and the raven shall dwell in it: and he [p]shall stretch out upon it the line of confusion,[9] and the stones of [q]emptiness.

12 They[q] shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom, but none shall be there, and all her princes shall be nothing.

13 And[r] thorns shall come up in her palaces, nettles and brambles in the fortresses thereof; and it shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls.[2]

14 The wild beasts of the desert[3] shall also meet with the wild beasts of the island,[4] and the satyr[5] shall cry to his fellow; the screech-owl[6] also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest.

15 There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow; there shall the vultures also be gathered, every one with her mate.

16 ¶ Seek ye out of [t]the book of the LORD, and read; [u]no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate:[7] for [v]my mouth it hath commanded, and his spirit it hath gathered them.

7 In former days there was a large transit trade by caravans through Idumea. The Nabathæans who possessed it from the third century B.C. and onward were prince merchants. Now it is desolate. It is only at the risk of life any traveller can pass through it. Its transit trade is gone, and can never be renewed. Its rock-hewn temples and palaces are all desolate; its cities are waste without inhabitant. In this respect the words of the prophet have been fulfilled.—P.

Ver. 1. This is not an address to Sennacherib, Antiochus Epiphanes, the Romans, or Gog and Magog: but to every unprovoked spoiler of God's people. It is a mirror, not a picture—and in it, successively, every spoiler beholds his own image; and though he may 'go his way, and forget what manner of man he is,' the woe will fall wherever the guilt has been incurred. C.

Ver. 2. This is a prayer of the church, alarmed for her safety, but trusting in her Redeemer as 'mighty to save.'—Their arm. Whose arm? The arm, the strength and defence of those 'who sow beside all waters,' ch. 32. 20: for whom, as 'labouring in the word and doctrine,' the other members of the church thus fervently intercede. C.

Ver. 4. Your spoil. The address is to the unprovoked spoiler, ver. 1, whom the prophet compares to the caterpillar, the most ravenous and destructive of all living creatures, devouring many times its own bulk and weight of food in a day. Yet as that ravenous caterpillar devours the leaf, so shall a new spoiler, more destructive than his predecessor, spoil the spoiler of the people of God.—Shall he run. That is, the new spoiler, like locust bands, shall assail his predecessors. C.

Ver. 7. Their valiant ones. Ver. 5, 6 being taken as a parenthesis, the 'valiant ones' are the former spoilers upon whom the new spoiler, ver. 4, makes his tumultuous assault.—Ambassadors of peace. The messengers of the first spoiler attempting peace with the second. C.

Ver. 8. He hath broken the covenant. The new spoiler who had made a false peace with the messengers. C.

Ver. 17. They shall behold the land that is very far off. They shall see by faith, and seek in holiness, a country far off—'that is, an heavenly,' He. 11. 13–16. C.

Ver. 20. This address is to the Lord entreating a favourable regard: the reply is from God to his church. C.

Ver. 23. The address is to the ship, ver. 21, the emblem of an invading enemy, multitudinous as waters. C.

Ver. 24. The inhabitant of Zion, ver. 20, shall no more be sick, Re. 21. 4. The great Physician has healed all their souls, Mat. 9. 12. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Wicked men never hesitate at falsehood, fraud, or violence to accomplish their own ends. But the less men provoke them to do evil, the more they provoke God in doing it. And whenever they have filled up the measure of their iniquities, God will awake to punish them. There is no fear of a church or nation while a spirit of prayer continues in it. They who wait on God shall never be forsaken by him. Nay, he often in his kindness exceeds their expectations, and always exalts himself by the judgments which he executes. And where he reigns in the heart, real safety and wealth attend him! True knowledge of his grace is the great stability of the soul; and the fear of God is the Christian's best treasure. They who contemn God are often imperious and abusive to men. But the more hardened and prosperous they are, the nearer is their terrible destruction. The most secure sinners shall be alarmed at last, and made to see God's hand in his judgments. Eternal despair shall at last appear dreadful to the most scornful! But great is the mercy if God's judgments in Zion should awaken her hypocritical professors to flee from the wrath to come to the almighty, the all-saving Jesus Christ! Great piety and comfort, safety and peace, order, health, and forgiveness attend his gracious deliverances! And thrice happy they who have him for their ALL IN ALL.

CHAPTER XXXIV. Ver. 3–6. The mountains shall run down with large streams of the blood of slain persons. Dreadful shall be the confusion, desolation, and consternation everywhere; for my purposed judgments shall be executed upon the wicked who have given themselves to sin and persons of all ranks shall fall a sacrifice to their own sin. 11, 12. God finds the abominably wicked as with a line and plummet; and none shall be able to govern or help them. 16, 17. In the exact fulfilment of this prophecy shall the Spirit, power, and providence of God collect together, and preserve a succession of these doleful creatures, in these perpetually desolate habitations of wickedness.

Ver. 1. This prophecy is addressed to 'the kingdoms of this world,' and predicts a fearful political revolution, in which 'all rule and authority,' that stands opposed to 'God and his Christ,' shall be utterly, and for ever, subverted. It corresponds with the vision in Re. 19. 13–21. C.

Ver. 4. This dissolving and falling of the 'host of heaven' does not refer to the visible heavens and the end of the world (as will appear from the state that is to follow, ch. 36. 5–10, but to the dissolving and falling of all the political and ecclesiastical powers usurped by 'the beast and the false prophet,' Re. 19. 20. C.

Ver. 5. My sword . . . shall come down upon Idumea. It shall come upon Idumea as a commencement of the prophecy—a specimen and notice of the judgments to come. Nor is there any land, except that of Babylon, whose destruction seems so complete, or whose renovation seems so hopeless. Like judgments were foretold against both, and alike terrible to the nations that forget God should be their fulfilment. C.

Ver. 9. Emblems of an overthrow as complete as that of Sodom and Gomorrah: while it is not improbable that the description may have been literally realized in volcanic eruptions. C.

Ver. 10. Irby and Mangles, after the greatest difficulties, got a sight of the ancient capital, but were not able to pass through the land.—See Keith on Prophecy. C.

Ver. 17. They shall possess it. That is, the wild beasts and birds of prey and solitude shall possess the forests, rivers, and ruined cities. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is proper that sinners should listen to God's threatenings, as he can quickly make them

GENERAL VIEW OF RAMLEH — NEAR THE PLAINS OF SHARON. [Isaiah, xxxv.2.]—"It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon." From the top of the tower of Ramleh there may be had a magnificent view of the whole plain of Sharon, from the mountains of Judea and Samaria to the sea, and from the foot of Carmel to the sandy deserts of Philistia. It must have been some such point of view as this that Solomon had of the plain of Sharon when he sang of the roses of Sharon. Ramleh is three hours' ride from Joppa, on the great commercial thoroughfare from Egypt to Damascus. Ramleh is surrounded by fruitful gardens of the finest oranges. Here is the largest Latin Convent in Palestine, founded in 1420 by Philip of Burgundy. It is used as a home for Franciscan pilgrims.

17 And[v] he hath cast the lot for them, and his hand hath divided it unto them by line: they[w] shall possess it for ever, from generation to generation shall they dwell therein.

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 The joyful and flourishing state of Christ's kingdom. 3 The weak are encouraged with a view of the blessings of the gospel.

THE wilderness,[a] and the solitary place, shall be glad for them; and the desert [b]shall rejoice, and [c]blossom as the rose.

2 It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing; [d]the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; they[1] shall see the glory of the LORD, and the excellency of our God.

3 ¶ Strengthen[e] ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees.

4 Say to them that are of a fearful[2] heart, Be[f] strong, fear not; behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you.

5 Then the [h]eyes of the blind shall be opened, and [i]the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped.

6 Then shall the [j]lame man leap as an hart, and the [k]tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall [l]waters break out, and streams in the desert.

7 And [m]the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitation of dragons where each lay, shall be grass,[3] with reeds and rushes.

8 And [n]an highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called, The way of holiness; [p]the unclean shall not pass over it; [q]but it shall be for those:[4] the [r]wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.

9 No[s] lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there: but the redeemed shall walk there.

10 And the [t]ransomed of the LORD shall return, and [u]come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

[5] This is said in derision. It is a taunt, and a cutting one. The Jews thought they would be able to defend themselves, and by the aid of Egypt to drive off the Assyrians. Now they are told by the enemy at their very gate, that if two thousand horses were furnished to them, they could not place two thousand warriors upon them. The main strength of the Assyrian army was in its cavalry; they therefore looked with contempt upon the Jews, who could not furnish even a small troop.—P.

[6] Rabshakeh had, most probably, heard of some of God's warnings to the land, and as his manner was (ver. 7) to state his subject and reason upon it, inaccurately or sophistically, he here converts a warning to Judah into a warrant to Syria.—C.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 Sennacherib invadeth Judah. 4 Rabshakeh, sent by Sennacherib, by blasphemous persuasions solliciteth the people to revolt. 22 His words are told to Hezekiah.

NOW it[a] came to pass in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, that Sennacherib king of Assyria [b]came up against all the defenced cities of Judah, and took them.

2 ¶ And [c]the king of Assyria sent Rabshakeh from [d]Lachish to Jerusalem, unto king Hezekiah, with a great army: and he stood by the [e]conduit of the upper pool, in the highway of the fuller's field.

3 Then came forth unto him [f]Eliakim, Hilkiah's son, which was over the house, and [h]Shebna the scribe,[1] and Joah, Asaph's son, the recorder.

4 And Rabshakeh said unto them, Say ye now to Hezekiah, [i]Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What [j]confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

5 I say, sayest thou, (but they are but vain words,)[2] I have counsel and strength for [3]war: now, on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest [k]against me?

6 Lo, thou trustest in the [l]staff of this broken reed, on Egypt; whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that trust in him.

7 But if thou say to me, [m]We trust in the LORD our God: is it not he whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah [n]hath taken away, and said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar?

8 Now, therefore, give pledges,[4] I pray thee, to my master the king of Assyria, and [p]I will give thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.[5]

9 How then wilt thou turn away the face of [q]one captain of the least of my master's servants, and [r]put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

10 And am I now come up without the LORD against this land to destroy it? [s]the LORD said unto me,[6] Go up against this land, and destroy it.

feel what they are averse to hear. Terrible, but righteous, are the judgments which he inflicts, especially upon them who injure his people. And he can easily unite the curses of Sodom and Babylon upon such as refuse to take warning by their fate. It is madness to fix our hearts on earthly things when their end may quickly be so miserable. And let us here seriously consider how dreadful sin must be, the cause of all judgments—and hell, the perfection of them.

CHAPTER XXXV. Ver. 1–4. These fearful judgments shall issue in the great comfort of the church. Multitudes of barren, destitute, bewildered, and ungodly sinners shall be converted to Christ; and by beholding his glories revealed in the gospel shall abound in comfort, holiness, and virtue. The most weak and timorous shall be strengthened and encouraged by the views of their incarnate God and all-conquering and saving Redeemer. 5–7. While multitudes of benevolent miracles on the bodies of men are wrought by Jesus Christ and his apostles, multitudes of sinners shall be savingly enlightened, healed, strengthened, and comforted; and by the influence of the preached gospel, and the Spirit of God poured forth upon them, shall vast numbers of saints, and of good works, be found in places which had been the most noted habitations of wickedness and devils. 8–10. Jesus Christ, as the divinely appointed mean of salvation and holiness, and of all our access to God, shall be exhibited in the gospel; in whom as their way, not the unclean and obstinate sinners, but justified and regenerated men, however weak, shall walk, without erring from it. None can walk therein while under the reign of their unruly and mischievous lusts; nor can earth or hell hurt those believing ones who walk in it: but in attending Christ's ordinances, they shall at last arrive at the complete and everlasting happiness of the heavenly state.

Ver. 1. Wilderness. The emblem of the church. Re. 12. 14.—Shall be glad for them. For whom? Not for the creatures enumerated in the foregoing chapter, but for the 'weak hands, the feeble knees, the fearful hearts, the blind, and the lame, and the dumb,' described ver. 3–6. C.

Ver. 7. The parched ground. 'The glowing sand,' on which, by a peculiar action of the sun's rays, lakes of water are often so vividly represented as to tantalize the traveller with a vain hope, which the prophet declares will yet be spiritually realized. See Shaw's Travels.—All the curses pronounced upon Idumea, and realized upon it, as the commencement and specimen of the prophetic judgments, shall be reversed and replaced by the contrary mercies and blessings. C.

Ver. 8. A highway. Free access and passage denied in ch. 34. 10, the emblems of that spiritual intercourse and communion which God will yet promote amongst all churches and nations. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God can quickly make the most amazing changes on countries and nations, either in mercy or in judgment. Glorious things are said of our New Testament church, especially in her apostolical and millennial periods. And her extent, comfort, light, life, holiness, and safety inconceivably exceeds that of the old. Believing truly in Jesus Christ's person and fulness effectually quicken, fructify, and comfort the heart. And an assured faith of his approach is sufficient to silence every fear and doubt. How wise are God's bestowals of his Word and Spirit! and how effectual for the illumination, quickening, encouragement, strengthening, and sanctification of men! The grace of the gospel teaches men to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts; and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in his present world. Unspeakable is the joy and transcendent the happiness of ransomed men. Certainly and quickly that holiness, which is now

11 Then said Eliakim, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants in the [t]Syrian language; for we understand it: and speak not to us in the [u]Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

12 But Rabshakeh said, [v]Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that [w]they may eat their own dung and drink their own piss[7] with you?[8]

13 ¶ Then Rabshakeh stood, and [x]cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, Hear ye the words of the [y]great king,[9] the king of Assyria:

14 Thus saith the king, [z]Let not Hezekiah deceive you; [a]for he shall not be able to deliver you.

15 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the LORD, saying, The LORD will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

16 Hearken not to Hezekiah; for thus saith the king of Assyria, Make an agreement with me by a present,[1] and come out to me: and eat ye [b]every one of his vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern;

17 Until [c]I come and take you away to a land like your own land, [d]a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards.

18 Beware[e] lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The LORD will deliver us. [f]Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

19 Where are the gods of [g]Hamath[2] and Arphad?[3] where are the gods of Sepharvaim?[4] and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?

20 Who [h]are they among all the gods of these lands that have delivered their land out of my hand, [i]that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

21 But [j]they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

22 Then came [k]Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, that was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah [l]with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1 Hezekiah mourning, sendeth to Isaiah to pray for them. 6 Isaiah comforteth them. 8 Sennacherib, going to encounter Tirhakah, sendeth a blasphemous letter to Hezekiah. 14 Hezekiah's prayer. 21 Isaiah's prophecy of the pride and destruction of Sennacherib, and the good of Zion. 36 An angel slayeth the Assyrians. 37 Sennacherib is slain at Nineveh by his own sons.

AND it[a] came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and [b]went into the house of the LORD.

2 And he sent [c]Eliakim, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests covered with sackcloth, [d]unto Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, This day is [e]a day of trouble, and of [f]rebuke,[1] and of blasphemy:[2] for[h] the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.[3]

4 It[i] may be the LORD thy God will hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God, and will [j]reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore [k]lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is left.[4]

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say unto your master, Thus saith the LORD, [l]Be not afraid of the words that thou hast heard, wherewith the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, [m]I will send a blast upon [5]him; and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ So[o] Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah:[6] for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And [p]he heard say concerning Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, He is come forth to make begun in them, is graciously rewarded, and their sanctified sorrows are balanced with the everlasting joys of the Lord.

CHAPTER XXXVI. Ver. 1. Most part of this narrative will be found in the contemporary portion of the book of 2 Ki. xviii. and 2 Ch. xxxii. It is here repeated to show how history and prophecy reflect mutual light upon each other. C.

Ver. 2. Lachish. A city of Judah about 30 miles south-west of Jerusalem. On account of its idolatry, it was threatened with divine judgments, Mi. 1. 13, which fell upon it first during the invasion of Sennacherib, and more fully during that of Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Ki. 18. 17; Je. 34. 7. It continued a city till at least the fourth century of the Christian era; but since the occupation of Palestine by the Arabs, even its ruins have almost totally disappeared. C.

Ver. 6. Broken reed. The marshes of the river Nile abounding in reeds, 'the reed' became an apt emblem of Egypt. But, as the 'broken reed' is represented as 'piercing' the hand that leans on it, 'broken' must refer, not to a fracture in the reed itself, but to a fracture from the stem on which it grew. There is therefore some covert allusion to a change of dynasty, that rendered dependence upon Egypt more precarious than usual. C.

Ver. 7. Is it not he, &c. This is one of those accusations that malicious ignorance so readily prefers upon partial evidence. Hezekiah had certainly pulled down altars. Ignorant malice, without examination, pronounces them 'altars of Jehovah;' truth would have described them 'altars of devils.'—Note, It was thus the Reformers were accused of rending the 'seamless garment of Christ.' Now, that they did rend 'the synagogue of Satan' is unquestionable; but that they, in part and in commencement, delivered the 'church of Christ,' is certain. C.

Ver. 17. It is evident that the Israelites were about this time seized with a spirit of emigration, either with a view to a safer country, or, as the world calls it, to 'better their condition,' see ch. 30. 2; 31. 1; and that Rabshakeh takes advantage of this prevailing disposition to persuade them by flattering promises to an ignominious submission to a heathen power.—Note, It is thus by prospect of deliverance from a present danger, or by promise of a future advantage, that sinners continue to tempt the people of God to reject truth and embrace error, to forsake Christ and follow the world. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How quickly Providence fulfils some awful predictions! And people may meet with great distress in the way of their duty, in order that their faith may be exercised, their graces brightened, and their glory increased. Let us then always look out and prepare for it, and not wonder if our most impious and treacherous enemies for a time prevail against us, and both with threats and derision tempt us to faint in, or desert, the good ways of the Lord. Let us never marvel if pride intoxicate sinners, and make them talk big of themselves, their works, and wealth; or if they should pretend power equal to God, or a commission from him. If we maintain our confidence in God, and continue in his service, we need not fear the want of his protection. It is base to make appeals to the people while the affair is but debated between princes; or to take occasion from soft speeches to banter the more outrageously; or to talk of bettering men's condition when their ruin is really intended. How horridly insolent is it to compare JEHOVAH to an idol! or to imagine ourselves a match for his power! And though it be not always prudent to answer the blasphemy of railers, yet we ought always to be deeply affected with it.

CHAPTER XXXVII. Ver. 2. The doctrine of intercessory prayer runs through the whole Word of God. It was exemplified when Abraham prayed for the cities of the plain; when Aaron war with thee: and, when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, [q]Let not thy God in whom thou trustest[r] deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold,[s] thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands, by destroying them utterly; and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as [t]Gozan,[7] and [u]Haran,[8] and Rezeph,[9] and the children of [v]Eden which were in Telassar?[21]

13 Where is the king of [w]Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim,[y] Hena, and Ivah?

14 ¶ And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah [z]went up unto the house of the LORD, and spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah [a]prayed unto the LORD, saying,

16 O LORD of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest[b] between the cherubims, [c]thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; [d]thou hast made heaven and earth.

17 Incline[e] thine ear, O LORD, and hear; open[g] thine eyes, O LORD, and see; and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, LORD, [h]the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the nations,[2] and their countries, 19 And have cast[3] their gods into the fire: for[i] they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone; therefore they have destroyed them.

20 Now therefore, [j]O LORD our God, save us from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth [k]may know that thou art the LORD, even thou only.

21 ¶ Then Isaiah, the son of Amoz, sent unto Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [l]Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria:

22 This is the word which the LORD hath spoken concerning him; The [m]virgin, the daughter of Zion, hath despised thee, and [n]laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

23 Whom[o] hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the [p]Holy One of Israel.

ran with the censer between the people and the plague; when Job sacrificed for his children, and was directed to pray for his friends; when Paul prayed for the churches, and entreated them in turn to pray for him; and when James directs the sick to send for the elders of the church to pray over him both for health and forgiveness. It does not supersede private and personal prayer, as the case of Hezekiah shows, see ver. 15—20. Yet does it present (1) a more public testimony for God and his providence than secret prayer can furnish; (2) it excites him who is called to pray to godly sympathy with his brethren in distress; and (3) it reminds the believer of his only surety of salvation, the righteousness and intercession of Jesus his Redeemer and Advocate. C.

Ver. 7. I will cause him to fall by the sword. God did not command the sons of Sennacherib to assassinate their father; then would God have been the author of sin, which it is blasphemy to assert, but God judicially gave up his wicked sons to their own evil passions and devices, and to the will of Satan, whom they serve. C.

Ver. 9. Tirhakah king of Ethiopia. There can be no doubt that the name of Ethiopia was, in the days of Isaiah, given to Upper Egypt and the adjoining districts, see 2 Ch. 12. 2, 3; and it appears that Ethiopia at this period under Tirhakah, by profane historians called Taracus and Tearcon, had attained the supremacy. C.

when[i] they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.[2]

37 ¶ So Sennacherib king of Assyria [j]departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.[k]

38 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer [l]his sons smote him with the sword; and they escaped into the land of Armenia:[3] and Esar-haddon [m]his son reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

1 Hezekiah, having received a message of death, 4 by prayer hath his life lengthened. 8 The sun goeth ten degrees backward, for a sign of that promise. 9 His psalm of thanksgiving.

IN those[a] days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Set thine house in order:[1] for thou shalt die, and not live.[2]

2 Then Hezekiah [b]turned his face toward the wall, and prayed unto the LORD,

3 And said, [c]Remember now, O LORD, I beseech thee, how [d]I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect[3] heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight: and Hezekiah wept sore.[4]

4 ¶ Then[e] came the word of the LORD to Isaiah, saying,

5 Go, and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the [g]God of David thy father, [h]I have heard thy prayer, [i]I have seen thy tears: behold, I will [j]add unto thy days fifteen years.[5]

6 And [k]I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria: and I will defend this city.

7 And this shall be [l]a sign unto thee from the LORD, that the LORD will do this thing that he hath spoken;

8 Behold, [n]I will bring again the shadow of the degrees, which is gone down in the sundial of Ahaz, ten degrees backward.[6] So the sun returned ten degrees, by which degrees it was gone down.

9 ¶ The[o] writing of Hezekiah king of Judah, when he had been sick, and was recovered of his sickness:[7]

10 I said, [p]in the cutting off of my days, I shall go [q]to the gates of the grave: I am deprived of the residue of my years.

11 I said, [r]I shall not see the LORD,[8] even the LORD, in the land of the living: I shall [s]behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world.

12 Mine[t] age is departed, and is removed from me as a shepherd's tent: I have cut off like a weaver my life; [u]he will cut me off with pining sickness:[9] from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

13 I reckoned till morning, that, [v]as a lion, so will he break all my bones: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.[1]

14 Like[w] a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter; I did mourn as a dove: [x]mine eyes fail with looking upward: O LORD, [y]I am oppressed; undertake for me.

15 What[z] shall I say? he hath both [2]spoken unto me, and himself hath done it: [b]I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul.[3]

16 O Lord, [c]by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit: so wilt thou recover me, and make me to [4]live.[5]

17 Behold, for peace I had great [6]bitterness; but thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit[7] of corruption: for [d]thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.[8]

18 For [e]the grave cannot praise thee; death can not celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth.

19 The[g] living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day: [h]the father to the children shall make known thy truth.

o In the parallel passage in 2 Ki. xx. this psalm or song of thanksgiving is wanting. Whether it was originally composed by Hezekiah himself, or written by Isaiah and approved and sung by the king on his recovery, cannot now be known. The style is concise, and in places obscure.—P.
Alexander supposes that the word Jehovah is understood in the first clause of the very obscure verse, and the sense is, then he, I set Jehovah before me, i. e. I viewed him as present, I imagined or conceived of him as a lion, and asserted him to act as such, saying, As a lion he will crush all my bones.—P.

Ver. 21. Thou hast prayed against Sennacherib. The duty of praying for enemies by no means forbids praying against them, that is, against their evil designs. Had Hezekiah been bound to pray for Sennacherib without this limitation, he would, by necessary consequence, have been praying for the ruin of his kingdom, the captivity of his people, the overthrow of religion, and the establishment of idolatry: for all these designs were openly avowed by Rabshakeh. C.

Ver. 30. Some have supposed the first to have been the sabbatical, and the second the jubilee year. But that the sabbatical year and the jubilee coincided, seems probable, according to the computation of the Universal History. See Jennings's Jewish Antiquities, p. 358. Is it not likely that from the spring of the first year till the spring of the second, the Assyrian invaders had interrupted agriculture, and that God gives as a sign or evidence of his protection the unexampled fruitfulness of these two years, confirmed by his foretelling the precise period at which peace and prosperity were again to return? C.

REFLECTIONS.—The best way to baffle the malicious designs of enemies is to be driven to God and our duty by them. And the greatest ought to engage the prayers of Christ's ministers and saints in their favour. The more pinching our distresses, the more earnest ought to be our supplications. The weakest hopes of mercy should encourage, and the fearful reduction of God's people should excite, us to that duty. When we are ready to despair, God can eminently magnify his power and grace in our deliverance. God's proud enemies may hiss against his people, but they cannot hurt them. And they who attempt to terrify them from their holy profession will soon be made a terror to themselves. Those who delight in war shall have enough of it at last; and their terrors do but presage their ruin. Success ordinarily hardens men in their evil ways, and renders them more and more deliberate in blasphemy. Earnestness and liberty in prayer is of infinite importance in a time of danger. And believing views of God's leading characters powerfully encourage distressed minds. If he give us inward satisfaction in his promise, we may bear with every possible abuse from men. All our fears of great destroyers ought to drive us to the great God our Saviour: and while we plead his glory in our own behalf, he will quickly answer our prayers, and manifest that he takes all the injury done to us as done to himself. He will show himself at once a kind benefactor and almighty protector, who takes notice of all the motions, projects, and speeches of our enemies. And such as magnify themselves against him and his people do but render themselves contemptible. They will find that there is no standing before his judgments, when they come with his commission to destroy.

CHAPTER XXXVIII. Ver. 1. In those days. It appears from ver. 6, that Hezekiah's sickness was during the invasion, and before the miraculous discomfiture of the Assyrians. This event occurred in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah's reign, as he lived fifteen years after; and reigned, in all, twenty-nine years. C.

Ver. 3. And Hezekiah wept sore. The melancholy prospects of his family, of his country, and of religion, and not any mere dread of dying, must be looked to as the causes of Hezekiah's grief. Such godly sorrow is by no means inconsistent with the most decided resignation. Even Jesus wept at the sorrows he meant to relieve—he wept over Jerusalem in the prospect of its ruin; and, 'in the days of his flesh, he offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears,' He. 5. 7. C.

Ver. 8. The sun returned ten degrees. The sun, by an ordinary and necessary abbreviation of speech, here stands for the sunbeams. It is of no use to show how a certain condensation of the atmosphere might inflect the sun's rays backward. The whole was a miracle; and God alone can tell how it was effected. C.

Ver. 12. Mine age . . . is removed from me as a shepherd's tent. The shepherds of Palestine and the adjoining countries move their tents frequently from place to place in search of pasture and water—an apt emblem of the unsettled condition of man, who should always feel that here he has no continuing city, and therefore seek a 'city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.'—From day even to night wilt thou make an end of me. 'In the course of the day thou wilt finish my web' (Lowth). There are no phrases more common, or more expressive, than the thread or web of life. C.

Ver. 13. As a lion, so will he break all my bones. They must have felt the agony of certain forms of fever racking the bones, who would judge of the expressive and terrible accuracy of this description. C.

Ver. 14. I am oppressed with sorrow for my family, my country, and the church—overwhelmed with a feeling of my own unworthiness and incalculable mercies of my gracious God. C.

Ver. 18. They that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. 'They cannot hope for' any more discoveries of 'thy light and truth,' Ps. 43. 3, as the subject of consoling thought, Ps. 51. 6, and godly conversation, ver. 19. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Death being the common fate of mankind, every one ought seriously to prepare for it.

MOSQUE OF OMAR—STANDING ON THE SITE OF THE TEMPLE OF SOLOMON. [ISAIAH, xl : 9.]—"O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God." The Mosque of Omar stands upon the site of the Holy Temple that constituted the center of Jewish life and history and worship. It was in the temple that the Jews were taught the knowledge of one God, and by means of the rites and ceremonies and symbols of the temple they were trained into their conception of God and man's duty to obey him, that made them a peculiar people. It is a sad reflection that upon this historic place should now stand a place of worship dedicated to one God, it is true but where there is no longer taught that man is under obligation to love as himself his brother man.

20 The LORD was ready to save me: therefore we will sing my songs[g] to the stringed instruments, all the days of our life in the house of the LORD.

21 For Isaiah had said, [i]Let them take a lump of figs, and lay it for a plaister upon the boil, and he shall recover.

22 Hezekiah also had said, What is the [k]sign that I shall [l]go up to the house of the LORD?

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 Merodach-baladan, sending to visit Hezekiah because of the wonder, hath notice of his treasures. 3 Isaiah, hearing thereof, foretelleth the Babylonian captivity.

AT that[a] time Merodach-baladan,[1] the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present to Hezekiah: for he had heard that he had been sick, and was recovered.

2 And Hezekiah was [b]glad of them,[2] and showed them the house of his [c]precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his [3]armour,[4] and all that was found in his treasures: there was [c]nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah showed them not.

3 ¶ Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, [d]What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from [e]a far country unto me, even from Babylon.

4 Then said he, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, [h]All that is in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not showed them.

5 Then said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD of hosts:

6 Behold, the days come, [i]that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store until this day, shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

7 And [j]of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

8 Then said Hezekiah to Isaiah, [k]Good[5] is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken. He said moreover, For there shall be [l]peace and truth in my days.[6]

CHAPTER XL.

1 The promulgation of the gospel. 3 The preaching of John Baptist. 9 The preaching of the apostles. 12 The prophet, by the omnipotency of God, 18 and his incomparableness, 26 comforteth the people.

COMFORT ye,[a] comfort ye my people, [b]saith your God.

2 Speak ye comfortably[1] to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare[2] is accomplished, [c]that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the LORD's hand [d]double for all her sins.

3 ¶ The[h] voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, [f]Prepare ye the way of the LORD, make straight in the desert a highway for our God.

4 Every[j] valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and [k]the crooked shall be made straight,[3] and the rough places plain.[4]

5 And[l] the glory of the LORD shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: [m]for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

6 The voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? [n]All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field:

7 The[p] grass withereth, the flower fadeth:

But, most probably, the error lay in his good-natured desire to please the Babylonians, rather than to instruct the heathens; and in his greater alacrity to exhibit the temporal, rather than the spiritual, riches of his kingdom.—C.

And nothing can be more seasonable than fervent prayer in a time of great trouble; nor anything more pleasant than the testimony of a good conscience, washed in Jesus' blood. It is a relief to a distressed heart to unbosom itself to God, whose ears are open to its cry. Nor can pious souls take much pleasure in life or personal comforts, unless God's church be revived and comforted along with them.—God takes pleasure in showing his people the immutability of his counsels, that they may have strong consolation. And if one miracle served to confirm Hezekiah's faith, why do not thousands confirm ours in the glorious Redeemer? And why are we so careless of keeping memorials of our afflictions and deliverances, and of the working of our hearts under them, for the benefit of ourselves and others?—It is hard to keep the heart from despondency under sore and complicated troubles. God's providences indeed ought to affect our spirits with humility and constant fear; and in him alone should we hope for support and deliverance. Great is the kindness, the full forgiveness, that he manifests in delivering from the utmost extremity of trouble. And the opportunity of living to his glory ought to be our principal reason for esteeming or desiring life. Blessed are those parents whose great care is to inform their children concerning Jesus and his truths! No means of relief ought to be used without dependence on the power and kindness of God. And we ought as eagerly to thank him for our deliverances as ever we prayed for them.

CHAPTER XXXIX. REFLECTIONS.—It highly becomes us to rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep; and to honour them whom God delights to honour. They are often courted in prosperity who were contemned in adversity. Even men who hate God will caress his people on secular accounts; but often their kisses are deceitful. It is hard to be duly humble amidst great providential advancements. But to be fond of carnal respect marks very great weakness. And an intimacy or connection with the wicked usually proves a fearful plague in the issue. In showing to our friends what we are or have, pride is ready to start up, and we forget God the giver.—Ministers ought always to be plain, impartial, and faithful in their rebukes. And if God love us, he will find means to pull down our proud spirits, if not to take from us the things of which we are proud. Let me then never be fond of that which in the end may turn out vanity and vexation of spirit! Let me evidence the truth of my repentance by a cordial reception of faithful reproof, and a kindly submission to the chastisements of Providence. Let me reckon every moment's reprieve from hell or trouble a great mercy; and especially if God avert the storms of his judgment till I be entered into my eternal rest.

CHAPTER XL. Ver. 2. God punished the Jews in Babylon enough to answer the purposes of his glory, and more than he did many of the heathens; and in Christ he received the most abundant satisfaction to his justice; and bestows great and manifold blessings instead of punishments. 3–8. By the providence of God and proclamation of Cyrus everything shall tend to promote the return of the Jews from Babylon; and no human power shall, in the least, be able to hinder the fulfilment of his promises. And by the preaching of John Baptist shall the Jewish nation be prepared for the manifestation of the Messiah in his sufferings and glory; and all attempts of men to hinder the erection of his kingdom shall quickly be frustrated. 9–11. Let the Jews loudly triumph in God's powerful and tenderly-careful deliverance of them from Babylon, and conducting them back to their own country. And especially let the gospel church rejoice in the incarnation and mighty works of the great God our Saviour; his erection, nourishment, preservation, and government of her, and every one of her members, however weak and distressed. 21, 22. Do not even ye Gentiles know, by the light of nature, and by information derived from your ancestors, that JEHOVAH, the Creator and Governor of the world, is of such infinite perfection, that no image can represent him. 23, 24. He, with infinite ease, destroys the most powerful princes, and bereaves them of their power. 27, 28. Since God is so infinitely powerful, wise, and good, why should his own people ever distrust him, as if he disregarded their afflictions, or could not find out a way for their deliverance, or as if he neglected to redress their grievances? Know they not that he never becomes unable to help or take care of his people, and that there is no finding out the reasons of his dispensations? 30, 31. Whatever may become of persons of the greatest natural abilities, they who depend on the Lord for his assistance, and the performance of his promises, shall grow stronger in grace, and easily overcome every difficulty in the way of their duty.

Ver. 1. The second great division of the Book of Isaiah begins with this chapter. It is supposed to have been written towards the close of the prophet's life. It constitutes by far the most important part of his writings, and in some respects the most important part of the Old Testament. Its style is sublime; its subject the highest and holiest on which the human mind can dwell; its delineation of the work and character of the Messiah clear and full almost as the gospel narrative. It is this part of his writings which gives Isaiah a just title to the name 'evangelical prophet.' Professor Alexander has given the following clear summary of because the spirit[5] of the LORD bloweth upon it: surely [q]the people is grass.

8 The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: [r]but the word of our God shall stand for ever.

9 ¶ O Zion, that [s]bringest good tidings,[6] get thee [t]up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings,[7] lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, [u]be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, [v]Behold your God!

10 Behold, the Lord GOD will come [w]with[8] strong[9] hand, and his arm[1] shall rule for him; behold, [x]his reward is with him, and his work before him.[2]

11 He shall [y]feed his flock like a shepherd, he shall [z]gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall [a]gently lead those [3]that are with young.[4]

12 ¶ Who[c] hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure,[5] and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance?

13 Who[d] hath directed the Spirit of the LORD, or being his counsellor[6] hath taught him?

14 With whom took he counsel, and who instructed him,[7] and taught him in the path of judgment, and taught him knowledge, and showed to him the way of understanding?[8]

15 Behold, [e]the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance: behold, he taketh up the isles[9] as a very little thing.

16 And Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, nor[f] the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt-offering.

17 All nations before him are as [4]nothing; and they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity.

the leading points embraced in this division. A preliminary examination of them will help to prepare the reader for a full understanding of the various parts:—'1. The carnal Israel, the Jewish nation, in its proud self-reliance and its gross corruption, whether idolatrous or only hypocritical and formal. 2. The spiritual Israel, the true church, the remnant according to the election of grace, considered as the object of Jehovah's favour and protection, but at the same time as weak in faith and apprehensive of destruction. 3. The Babylonish exile and the restoration from it, as the most important intermediate point between the date of the prediction and the advent of the Messiah, and as an earnest or a sample of Jehovah's future dealings with his people both in wrath and mercy. 4. The advent itself, with the person and character of Him who was to come for the deliverance of his people not only from eternal ruin, but from temporal bondage, and their introduction into glorious liberty. 5. The character of this new condition of the church or of the Christian dispensation, not considered in its elements, but as a whole: not in the way of chronological succession, but at one view: not so much in itself, as in contrast with the temporary system which preceded it.' P.

——Comfort ye my people. The parties exhorted to give comfort are such as hear 'the voice in the wilderness,' ver. 3, and in faith of his coming, 'prepare in the desert a highway for their God.' —Note, It is thus the duty of believers to comfort one another, 1 Th. 4. 18. C.

Ver. 2. She hath received . . . double. Not double chastisement, for that is simply impossible, but the blessings of 'grace, mercy, and peace'—the double of all the miseries sin had brought upon her. C.

Ver. 4. The fulfilment of this prophecy began in the days of John the Baptist, and will, like the formation of a highway amidst forests, morasses, rugged mountains, and deep valleys, progressively advance to completion in God's good time. C.

Ver. 6. The voice said, Cry. That is, the voice of the Lord who had spoken, ver. 5. 'And he said,' that is, he that 'cried in the wilderness' said, 'What shall I cry?' C.

Ver. 7. This verse is liable to be misunderstood in its present form. The spirit of the Lord is not the Holy Spirit. Such an interpretation does not suit the passage. The literal rendering would be 'the breath of Jehovah;' and the figure is that of a person breathing upon the tender grass and delicate flower, and thus causing them to droop and die. The whole verse may be translated as follows:—'The grass is dried; the flower is faded; for the breath of Jehovah has blown upon it.—Surely the people is grass.' P.

Ver. 9. 'Ascend, O virgin daughter, into the high mountain, thou that bringest good tidings to Zion: exalt thy voice with strength, thou that bringest good tidings to Jerusalem.'—Note, The title 'virgin daughter,' ch. 37. 22, is inserted to express the feminine form of the Hebrew: and is in strict accordance with the custom of the Jewish women in celebrating victories. See Ex. 15. 20, 21: Ju. 11. 34; 1 Sa. 18. 6, 7.—Behold your God! It is not possible to imagine any stronger evidence that Jesus was 'God manifest in the flesh,' 'seen of angels,' and seen also of men. C.

Ver. 12. The object of the voice is twofold: (1) comfort to Jerusalem, (2) the preparation of the way of the Lord; and to remove all doubt that the Lord can bring comfort by his Spirit, and prepare the way for his people, see ver. 13, 26–31, the prophet here describes at length the almighty power.—Measured the waters. There is no fact more demonstrable than the perfect exactness of the proportion of water to dry land for all the uses of vegetables and animals. See Whewell's Bridgewater Treatise. —Meted out heaven. So exact is the measurement of the heavens, that astronomers have calculated where an undiscovered planet should be, and have thus been enabled to find it. See Herschel's Astronomy.—Comprehended the dust . . . in a measure. This fact follows from the relative extent of land and water, as already stated.—Weighed the mountains. Every planet takes its place and orbit in exact proportion to its weight: the earth is depressed at the poles and elevated at the equator in virtue of its weight and rotation; and, so far as known to man, every object on earth and in the heavens is literally 'weighed in a balance.' C.

Ver. 17. How can anything be less than nothing? The rhetoricians call it a hyperbole; but such a mode of speech seems unbecoming the Spirit of God. The Hebrew word signifies 'a defect.' The nations are worse than what is merely defective: besides being defective in righteousness, they are positively wicked. C.

Ver. 20. A graven image that shall not be moved. The smaller metallic images were carried about; the wooden images were nailed immovably to the walls, ch. 41. 7. C.

Ver. 24. How awfully has this truth been verified in the fall of every empire of antiquity, and the many revolutions of modern times! O that kings would be wise to acknowledge Jesus as their King and Lord! Ps. ii. C.

Ver. 31. They that wait. Who wait in faith, in patience, in watchfulness, in cheerfulness, in love—who wait as subjects bound, as servants bought, as friends invited, as children beloved. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's abundant consolations graciously follow his messages of terror and conviction; and he takes pleasure in the comfort and prosperity of his servants. How delightful is the real preaching of the gospel of Christ! It proclaims that forgiveness of sins, without which it is impossible to obtain any true comfort. God easily removes every bar out of his way in coming to us. And it is necessary that we lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, in our approaches to him. It is a happy token of deliverance when our hearts are levelled by his grace, and made to behold his glory! Human power is little to be feared when against us, or trusted to when on our side! But infinite is the power, the faithfulness, the duration of the truths of Christ. Happy tidings are those which relate to him and his salvation! and happy is the period when he comes and performs all in all in and for his church; when he manifests his activity, care, and tenderness in gathering sinners to himself, and in bearing and nourishing them up to eternal life! What empty nothings are all creatures in comparison of him! Why then should we not trust him in every difficulty, cleave to him under every discouragement, and revere him in the receipt of every favour! What image can ever truly represent the infinite JEHOVAH! What idol can deserve a comparison with the Almighty Maker of heaven and earth! It is weak and sinful to suspect that he has or can cast neither is weary? [v]there is no searching of his understanding.

29 He[w] giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength.

30 Even[x] the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall:

31 But [y]they that wait upon the LORD shall renew their strength; they shall [z]mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary, and [a]they shall walk, and not faint.

CHAPTER XLI.

1 God expostulateth with his people, about his mercies to the church, 10 about his promises, 21 and about the vanity of idols.

KEEP silence[a] before me, O [b]islands;[1] and let[c] the people renew their strength:[2] let them come near, then let them speak; let us come near together to judgment.

2 Who [d]raised up the righteous[3] man from the east, called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings?[4] he gave them as the dust to his sword, and as driven stubble to his bow.[5]

3 He pursued them, and passed safely;[6] even by the way that he had not gone with his feet.

4 Who hath wrought and done it, [e]calling the generations[7] from the beginning? I the LORD, the [f]first, and with the last; I am he.

5 The[h] isles saw it, and feared; the ends of the earth were afraid, drew near, and came.

6 They [i]helped every one his neighbour; and every one said to his brother, Be of good courage.[8]

7 So[j] the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith,[9] and he that smootheth with the hammer him that smote[1] the anvil, saying, It is ready for the sodering:[2] and he fastened it with nails, that it should not be moved.

8 But thou, Israel, [k]art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend.[i]

9 Thou [l]whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art [m]my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away.

10 ¶ Fear[p] thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: [q]I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness.

11 Behold,[r] all they that were incensed against thee shall be ashamed and confounded: they shall be as nothing; and they that strive with thee[3] shall perish.

12 Thou[s] shalt seek them, and shalt not find them, even them that contended with [t]thee: they that war against thee[5] shall be [u]as nothing, and as a thing of nought.

13 For I the LORD thy God will [v]hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee.

14 Fear[x] not, thou [y]worm Jacob, and ye [6]men of Israel; I will help thee, saith the LORD, and thy [z]Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel.

15 Behold, I will make thee a new sharp [a]thrashing-instrument having teeth:[7] thou [b]shalt thrash the mountains, and beat them small, and shalt make the hills as chaff.[8]

16 Thou shalt [c]fan them, and the wind shall carry them away, and the whirlwind shall scatter them: and thou [d]shalt rejoice in the LORD, and shalt glory in the Holy One of Israel.

17 When [e]the poor and needy seek [f]water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the LORD [g]will hear them, I the God of Israel [h]will not forsake them.

18 I will open [i]rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water.

19 I[j] will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah-tree, and the myrtle, and the oil-tree; I will set in the desert the fir-tree, and the pine, and the box-tree together;

20 That[k] they may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of the LORD hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it.

21 ¶ Produce[9] your cause, saith the LORD: bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob.

22 Let them bring them forth, and [l]show us what shall happen: let them show the former things what they be, that we may consider [l]them, and know the latter end of them: or declare us things for to come.

23 Show the things that are to come hereafter, [m]that we may know that ye are gods: yea, [n]do good, or do evil, that we may be dismayed, and behold it together.

24 Behold, [p]ye are of nothing,[2] and your work of nought:[3] an abomination is he that chooseth you.

25 I[q] have raised up one from the north, and he shall come: from the rising of the sun shall he call upon my name; and he shall come upon princes as upon mortar, and as the potter treadeth clay.

[r] This remarkable passage has been variously interpreted. Some think the 8th verse refers to the Messiah; others think Cyrus is intended; others suppose it must mean Abraham. Cesenius and some later German writers translate the passage in another way altogether. They maintain that the Hebrew word rendered 'righteous man,' or 'righteous one' cannot be so translated: that it can only mean 'righteousness;' and that it is not the object of the verb in the first clause but the subject of the verb in the second.—'Who hath raised up from the east? Righteousness shall call him to its foot; it shall give nations before him, and cause him to tread upon kings.'—P.

off his people. To them that wait on him, his infinite power and grace are a never-failing and abundant source of strength, quickening, and comfort.

CHAPTER XLI. Ver. 1, 2. Attentively hear my challenges, ye heathens; muster up all the arguments you can in your own defence. Who but myself called Abraham to his travels from his native country, enabled him to conquer the eastern kings, and his seed to conquer the Canaanites? Who besides me disposed and enabled Cyrus to execute my righteous judgments on the Chaldeans, and to grant deliverance to my people? Who raised up the all-conquering Immanuel, or enabled Saul the persecutor and other apostles irresistibly to conquer the nations to Christ by the preaching of the gospel? 4, 5. Who hath disposed of all the generations of mankind? Have not I, the eternal God? Observing with dread my wonderful works, the heathens have consulted together how to preserve themselves and their idols. 8-16. Ye Jews, being mine by special covenant, whom I originally brought from among your neighbours in Chaldea to Canaan, and notwithstanding your repeated rebellions, have never rejected, ye must not worship idols. Indulge 26 Who[r] hath declared from the beginning, that we may know? and beforetime, that we may say, He is righteous? yea, there is none that showeth; yea, there is none that declareth; yea, there is none that heareth your words.

27 The first shall say[t] to Zion, Behold, behold them:[5] and I will give to Jerusalem [u]one that bringeth good tidings.

28 For I beheld, and [v]there was no man; even among them, and there was no counsellor, that, when I asked of them, could answer[6] a word.

29 Behold,[w] they are all vanity; their works are nothing: their molten images are wind and confusion.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 The mission of Christ, graced with meekness and constancy. 5 God's promise to him. 10 An exhortation to praise God for his gospel. 18 He reproveth the people of incredulity.

BEHOLD my[a] servant, whom I [b]uphold, mine[c] elect, in whom my soul [d]delighteth: I[e] have put my spirit upon him; he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.

2 He[g] shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.[1]

3 A[h] bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking[2] flax shall he not quench:[3] he [i]shall bring forth judgment unto truth.

4 He [j]shall not fail nor be discouraged,[4] till he have set judgment in the earth: and [k]the isles shall wait for his law.

5 ¶ Thus saith God the LORD, [l]he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; he that spread forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein;

6 I the LORD [m]have called thee in righteousness, and will [n]hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give [o]thee for a covenant of the people,[5] for [p]a light of the Gentiles;

7 To [q]open the blind eyes, to [r]bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison-house.

8 I am[t] the LORD; that is my name: and my glory[u] will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images.

9 Behold, [v]the former things are come to pass, and [w]new things do I declare; [x]before they spring forth I tell you of them.

10 ¶ Sing[y] unto the LORD a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth, ye that go down to the sea, and all that is therein;[6] the isles, and the inhabitants thereof.

11 Let[z] the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice, the villages that [a]Kedar doth inhabit: let the inhabitants of the rock sing; let them shout from the top of the mountains.

12 Let[b] them give glory unto the LORD, and declare his praise in the islands.

13 ¶ The[c] LORD shall go forth as a mighty man, he shall stir up jealousy[7] like a man of war: he shall cry, yea, roar; he shall [d]prevail against his enemies.

14 I[d] have long time holden my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself: now will I [e]cry like a travailing woman; I will destroy and devour[8] at once.

15 I[e] will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools.

16 And[h] I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things [i]straight. These things will I do unto them, and [k]not forsake them.

17 ¶ They shall be [l]turned back, they shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods.

18 ¶ Hear, [m]ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see.

19 Who is blind, but [n]my servant? or deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind as he that is perfect,[2] and blind as the LORD's servant?

20 Seeing[o] many things, but thou observest not; opening the ears, but he heareth not.

21 The[p] LORD is well pleased for his righteousness' sake; he will magnify the law, and make [q]it honourable.[4]

22 But[r] this is a people robbed and spoiled;

no slavish or desponding fears, for I am your infinite ALL IN ALL; and I will strengthen, help, and uphold you by my almighty power, manifested in the righteous destruction of mine adversaries and deliverance of my people. All your enemies shall quickly be overwhelmed with confusion and ruin; for I will guide, strengthen, and keep you from falling. And however weak, despised, and oppressed you may be, I will enable you to subdue your most lofty, proud, and powerful adversaries, and make you to rejoice in and glorify me, as the author of all your privileges. 17-20. When poor indigent sinners are reduced to the most wretched condition, I will grant them comfort and relief; and will spread the gospel, and plant the ordinances thereof, and persons eminent for gifts and graces, among both Jews and Gentiles, in such a manner as will manifest my infinite power and holiness to every observer. 25-27. I foretell that Cyrus the Medo-Persian shall subdue the Chaldean and other empires. But which of your idols can manifest their true divinity by foretelling anything? It is only I, the eternal God, who can represent things future as if they were present, and enable prophets to foretell temporal or spiritual deliverances to my church.

Ver. 2. The righteous man. Abraham, who 'believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness,' Ro. 4. 3. C.

Ver. 5. The isles. The original word does not necessarily signify places surrounded by water, but places bordering on the sea.—Saw it. They saw God's power and judgment in the deliverance of his people, and judgment of idolatrous nations, as in the case of Abraham 'see note on ver. 2, the exodus and possession of Canaan, &c.—The ends of the earth were afraid. They were not moved to 'the fear of the Lord,' but to the fear of the Jews, and the overthrow of their beloved idolatry. C.

Ver. 6. They helped every one his neighbour. The nations associated against the truth, and in support of idolatry. See Ps. 83. 2-8, 12. C.

Ver. 9. Thou whom I have taken, &c. The address is here to Israel, as the 'seed of Abraham—taken from the ends of the earth—chosen, and not cast away;' consequently it is prophetic of an event yet to come, not descriptive of an event that is past. That event to come is the restoration of the Jews to the possession of their land, ver. 9, political power, ver. 11, 15, and the knowledge of Jesus the Holy One of Israel, ver. 16. C.

Ver. 11. That the destruction of their Babylonian and Syro-Grecian oppressors is the commencement of a series of events by which this prophecy will be accomplished, there can be no doubt —but the series does not conclude until the time of the national conversion of Israel to 'the truth as it is in Jesus,' ver. 16. C.

Ver. 15. The 'mountains and hills' are the prophetic emblems of those empires and kingdoms by which the Jews have been, or shall be, persecuted and oppressed, and which are doomed to fall, as a punishment for their infidelity, cruelty, and pride. C.

Ver. 17. The poor, are the 'poor in spirit,' Mat. 5. 3, the water, is the word of truth, 'springing up into everlasting life,' Jn. 4. 14. C.

Ver. 19. In the garden of Eden God himself planted 'every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food:' and put Adam into that garden 'to dress it, and to keep it.' And since that hour, wherever the Spirit of God renews the heart of man, that same Spirit renews the face of nature. So evident is this fact, that in several parts of Europe the progress of the Reformation can be traced by the progress of improvement in dwellings, plantings, and cultivation. C.

Ver. 21. Produce your cause. This is addressed to the confederate idolaters, ver. 6-8, and the nations by whom Israel was persecuted and oppressed, ver. 11, 12: and their gods are challenged to establish their claims to worship by any word of prophecy or any act of power, ver. 22-24. C.

Ver. 25. I have raised up one from the north. This has been interpreted as descriptive of Cyrus coming from Media, which lay north from Babylon. But is it not rather spoken of Messiah, who came with glad tidings to Jerusalem, ver. 27, from Nazareth in Galilee, in the north of the Holy Land? And is it not prophetic

SITE OF JOSEPH'S WORKSHOP—WHERE CHRIST IS SUPPOSED TO HAVE WORKED AS A CARPENTER. [Isaiah, xlii:1-4.]—"Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth; I have put my Spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street. A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth, and the isles shall wait for his law." Joseph's workshop is pointed out in Nazareth as standing upon the site of the ancient shop where our Savior labored as a carpenter. Through the Christian ages Nazareth has been growing in interest and importance. Antonnus Martyr visited Nazareth in A. D. 600, and speaks of the reverence with which the place was held at that time, and compares it to a paradise on earth.

they are all of them snared[5] in holes, and they are hid in prison-houses; they are for a prey, and none delivereth; for a spoil,[6] and none saith, Restore.

23 Who[q] among you will give ear to this? who will hearken, and hear for the time to come?[7]

24 Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the [r]robbers? did not [s]the LORD, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law.

25 Therefore[t] he hath poured upon him[8] the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle: and it hath set him on fire round about, yet [u]he knew not; and it burned him, yet he laid it not to heart.

CHAPTER XLIII.

1 The Lord comforteth the church with gracious promises. 8 He calleth the people to witness his omnipotency. 14 He foretelleth the destruction of Babylon, 18 and his wonderful deliverance of his people. 22 He reproveth the neglect of his service.

BUT now thus saith the LORD [a]that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O [b]Israel, [c]Fear not; for I have redeemed thee, I have [d]called thee by thy name; thou art mine.

2 When[e] thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.[1]

3 For I am the LORD thy God, [f]the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour: [g]I gave Egypt[2] for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.

4 Since thou wast [h]precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable, and I have loved thee: therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy life.[3]

5 Fear[i] not; for I am with thee; [k]I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west;

6 I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: [l]bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth;

7 Even every one that is called by my name: for I have [m]created him for my glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him.

REFLECTIONS.—The enemies of Jesus and the gospel may do their worst, it will but issue in their own confusion. The truths of the Bible will bear the strictest scrutiny. And since it is God who founds and protects the church, and assists her helpers, it is in vain for idolaters to unite in their efforts against her. But what fightings without, and fears within, have the people of God to encounter! Nothing but almighty power and grace can enable to conquer them, or can afford comfort under them. And seasonably does Jesus relieve his people in their extremity, and plant ordinances and true converts where he pleases. Be still then, my soul, and consider the insignificancy of every idol which thou hast put in JEHOVAH'S room. How late is their existence! how short-lived and uncertain their continuance! how limited their knowledge! how small their power, and unimportant their work! God forbid I should make that my god which did not make me out of nothing; and which cannot warn me of every danger, protect me from every enemy, and through eternity be my all-sufficient portion.—But let Jesus, and JEHOVAH in him, be my ALL IN ALL: my friend to love me at all times; my Companion to guide me to glory; my Helper to assist me in every work; my Captain of salvation to slay my foes, and make me in all things more than a conqueror; my Supplier and my Provision; my Comforter and my Consolation.—What have I to do any more with idols? Let me cast them to the moles and to the bats—cast them away as a menstruous cloth—as vanity and confusion.

CHAPTER XLII. Ver. 1–4. With wonder and love contemplate and believe on Jesus Christ, my eternal Son, whom I have appointed my Servant, as Mediator for the salvation of sinful men; whom I will assist in his work, and furnish with all gifts and graces without measure, that, in consequence of his finishing the undertaking, he may effectually spread the gospel tidings of his redemption among the Gentiles, and render them his peculiar people. Not with carnal contention or pompous ostentation, but in a meek, humble, and peaceful manner, shall he make his personal appearance, and erect his kingdom on earth. He shall not discourage the broken-hearted, nor cast off such as have but very weak grace, but shall encourage, strengthen, and deal kindly with them: and while he renders his word effectual, he shall judge every person uprightly and impartially. No difficulty shall in the least discourage him, nor hinder his finishing his work, or his spreading the gospel of men's salvation, erecting his spiritual kingdom among them, and subduing the opposers thereof. And all nations, particularly those along the coast of the Mediterranean and in the islands, shall readily embrace his truths, and become his obedient subjects.—5–9. I, the eternal JEHOVAH and almighty Creator, have called him to his work for the manifestation of my righteousness and faithfulness, and will conduct, assist, and preserve him in it. I set him forth as the Mediator, Surety, and Administrator of the promise of grace to men, that he may endue with saving knowledge, and may conduct to everlasting happiness, poor ignorant sinners of mankind, and deliver them from their spiritual thraldom to Satan and their lusts.—As I am being itself, and do give being to every creature, and fulfil every promise, I will, by him, through the gospel, abolish idolatry out of the world. I have already fulfilled multitudes of my promises, and now give you new promises of release from Babylon, and of redemption from sin, that, when they are accomplished, you may believe that I am the only true God.—13–17. After long forbearing to take judgment, I will, in the most sudden and certain manner, destroy the Chaldeans and other enemies of my church, and remove every hindrance of my glory and my people's salvation; and will enlighten, renew, and direct them as their need requires. 18–20. Attend ye careless, ignorant, and obstinate sinners: for none are so blind and obstinate as you my professed people, who reckon yourselves the only enlightened and righteous persons. Notwithstanding all my revelations given to you, and the wonderful works which I have wrought for you, ye never duly consider any. Notwithstanding all your pretences to hearken, ye never regard what is said. 21. While I, in the honourable fulfilment of my promises, have continued my favours to you, or will magnify my word in accomplishing my threatenings upon you, Jesus shall, by his complete righteousness, fulfill divine justice, and restore with advantage to the holy law whatever honour it had lost by men's sin. 22. For the obstinate disobedience of most of you, ye shall be rendered inexpressibly miserable by the Romans and others, and yet shall be so stupified as never to search out, or repent, of the sinful causes of your trouble.

Ver. 1. Judgment. The true interpretation of the divine law, whose typical sacrifices are all realized in Christ, so that the Gentiles are admitted as fellow-heirs with the Jews, and set free from any yoke of bondage to the rites of the ceremonial law, Ac. 15. 1, 22–29. Ep. 2. 11–19. Ga. 5. 1–6. C.

Ver. 3. The heart that, by reason of sorrow for sin, is as 'a bruised reed,' he will bind up and heal. The purpose of repentance that is ready to expire, like the 'smoking flax' in the lamp, he will not, in judgment, quench because of its smoke and offensiveness, but gently guard, till it kindles into a flame of love. C.

Ver. 4. 'The isles;' i.e. distant nations—nations which lie on the shores of the sea, and beyond the sea. 'They shall wait for and long for the blessings and civilizing influences of his law. The prophecy was fulfilled in the spread of Christ's gospel over the world. The fulfilment will reach away forward still into the distant future. P.

Ver. 7. Most probably an allusion to the cruel custom of putting out the eyes of prisoners, as illustrative of the cruelty of 'the god of this world,' blinding the mind of them who believe not, 2 Co. 4. 4. C.

Ver. 10. A new song. It is new, because it is the dictation of a new spirit, Eze. 11. 19, the outpouring of a new heart, Eze 18. 31. C.

Ver. 11. 'The wilderness,' or midbar, is a pastoral, as contradistinguished from an agricultural country. Arabia is chiefly referred to. Though most of its inhabitants were nomads, roaming about in tents from pasture to pasture, yet it had always a considerable number of towns. it has them still in the very heart of the so-called desert. To these towns reference is here made. P.—Kedar. Arabians dwelling in movable tents, Ps. 120. 5; and these are contrasted with 'the inhabitants of the rock'—the people of Petra, who had the most permanent habitations cut in the sides of the mountains. And in these places was the blessed gospel preached by Paul, Ga. 1. 17. C.—The word translated 'rock' is Sela, which is the ancient name of the 'rock city' of Petra, the capital of Idumea. It is probable that the word is here used as a proper name: and if so, the concluding clause of the verse is very expressive. Petra is situated in the very heart of the mountains; and some of its rock-hewn temples and houses are high up on the sides of the wild cliffs. P.

Ver. 14. At once the Lord overwhelmed the world by a flood: at once he destroyed Sodom: at once he smote the first-born in Egypt: at once he gave up Jerusalem to plunder, the temple to fire, and the remnant of the nation to death or exile. and at once he will smite Gog and Magog, and lay spiritual Babylon in ruins. C.

Ver. 15. The meaning is, that the mountain and hill sides, now covered with terraced vineyards and orchards, would be left desolate: that the streams, whose abundant waters irrigated and fortilized vast tracts of country, would be left completely dry: that the pools or cisterns, in which water was collected during the rainy season for the wants of man and beast, would be entirely exhausted. P.

Ver. 19. Who is blind but my servant? Who is this servant? Is he the servant upheld, even Christ? ver. 1; or is he Jacob, Israel personified? ch. 43. 22, comp. with ver. 10. Jacob is expressly called the chosen servant of the Lord, 1 Ch. 16. 13; see also Is. 44. 1, 2; 45. 4; 48. 20. Wherefore, considering how difficult, if not impossible, it is to apply blind and deaf to Messiah; and how easy, natural, and consistent with fact is their application to Jacob, it follows that of Jacob the passage is to be interpreted. C.

Ver. 20. Thou observest not. Observest them not—as evidences of the being, perfections, grace, and judgment of God.—Opening the ears. Opening the outward ears of others by the preaching of the law, but shutting his own inward ear against the love and the power of it. C.

Ver. 25. Knew not—considered not the real origin of his calamities; ascribed them to secondary causes and agents, and forgot to trace them to the righteous judgments of God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Infinite is the excellency of Jesus Christ! How dear to his Father and useful to men! How glorious the nature and end of his mediation! And with tenderness, fidelity, courage, and success, he executes it. Grand and irreversible is his commission; and his character is answerable to our infinite needs. What ground of gladness is this to sinners, the wildest Arabs and most distant islanders not excepted! And infinitely offensive to JEHOVAH, and ruinous to men, must be the rejection of him. By the most fearful shaking of nations does Jesus often introduce his 8 ¶ Bring forth [o]the blind people that have eyes, and the deaf that have ears.

9 Let[p] all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled: who among them can declare this, and show us former things? let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or [q]let them hear, and say, It is truth.

10 Ye are my [r]witnesses, saith the LORD, and my[s] servant whom I have chosen; that [t]ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: [u]before me there was no God formed,[4] neither shall there be after me.

11 I, even I, [v]am the LORD; and beside me there is no saviour.

12 I[x] have declared, and have saved, and I have showed, [y]when there was no strange god among you: [z]therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the LORD, that I am God.

13 Yea, [a]before the day was[5] I am he; and there is none that can deliver out of my hand: I will work, and who shall [b]let it?[6]

14 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, your Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel, [c]For your sake I have sent to Babylon, and have brought down all their nobles,[7] and the Chaldeans, whose cry is in the ships.[8]

15 I[d] am the LORD, your Holy One, the Creator of Israel, your King.

16 Thus saith the LORD, which [e]maketh a way in the sea, and a path in the mighty waters;

17 Which[g] bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army and the power; they shall lie down together, they shall not rise; they are extinct, they are quenched as tow.

18 ¶ Remember ye not [h]the former things, neither consider the things of old.

19 Behold, I will do a [i]new thing: now it shall spring forth; shall ye not know it? I [k]will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert.

20 The[k] beast of the field shall honour me, the dragons and the [l]owls:[1] because [m]I give waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, to give drink to my people, my chosen.

21 This[n] people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise.

22 ¶ But[o] thou hast not called upon me, O Jacob; but thou hast been weary of me, O Israel.

23 Thou[p] hast not brought me the [2]small cattle of thy burnt-offerings; neither hast thou honoured me with thy sacrifices: [q]I have not caused thee to serve with an offering, nor wearied thee with incense.

24 Thou hast bought me no [r]sweet cane[3] with money, neither hast thou filled[4] me with the fat of thy sacrifices; but thou [s]hast made me to serve[5] with thy sins, thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities.

25 I, even I, am he that [t]blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.

26 Put[u] me in remembrance: let us plead together: declare thou, that thou mayest be justified.

[8] The acts are described as past:—'I have sent,' 'I have brought.' It must not be concluded on this account either that the author is relating history, or that his language is incorrect. We find a similar mode of expression in nearly all parts of the prophetic writings. The certainty of the occurrence is so great that the events are mentioned as if they had already occurred. 'The events, although still future to the writer, are described as past, in reference not only to the purposes of God, but also the predictions of the prophet.'—P.

kindest favours. And with earnestness, power, and grace he convicts and calls sinners to himself. But, alas! how dreadful is it to have the god of this world blinding our minds and hardening our hearts, that the light of the gospel may not shine into them, nor the love of it captivate them to the obedience of faith! And fearful will be the issue when they who have the best means of grace, have them least blessed and profit the least by them.

CHAPTER XLIII. Ver. 1. God formed the Israelites into a church and state, redeemed them from their Egyptian and other enemies, and made them his peculiar people. 2. Whatever great troubles churches or saints endure, they are not hurt nor destroyed by them. 3, 4. God destroyed the Egyptians and others to advance the glory and happiness of the Israelites; and has and will destroy nations for the preservation of his gospel church. 5–7. God gathered the captive Jews from the different places of the Chaldean empire, and brought them to Canaan as his people; and, in like manner gathers believing sinners from all nations to Christ. 8–13. Let either the heathen idols or their votaries, who are almost as stupid and senseless, produce proofs of their foretelling such events, or else own me to be the only true God.—The several events, which I have foretold concerning you Jews and my Servant the Messiah, and which, by mighty power, I have performed, or will accomplish, are demonstrative evidences that I am the only true God. 14–17. In order to your deliverance from Babylon, I will send the Medes and Persians to destroy the Chaldean empire, and will remove all hindrances of your return. 19–21. Nay, the division of the Red Sea, and drowning of Pharaoh and his army in it, and other things which I have done for you, shall not be comparable to what I will do, in safely conducting you from Babylon, and re-establishing you into a glorious church for myself; and especially in spreading the gospel and the gospel church, and convicting multitudes of the most stupid and mischievous sinners by Christ for the manifestation of my glory. 22–24. But though I never required of you any services that were really burdensome, ye have neglected and been weary of my true worship; ye have not offered me sacrifices in obedience to my commands, or for my glory, but for some selfish respects; and have even grudged the expense of them, while ye were liberal in the service of idols; ye have abused my revelations, ordinances, and bounties of providence, to encourage you in wickedness, till I can no longer bear with you. 25. Nevertheless, merely for my own name's sake, I still offer you a full and free forgiveness of all your iniquities through the blood of my Son. 26. Let this my gracious pardon and promise be pleaded by you; or, if you think you have a righteousness of your own to plead upon, which I have not observed, point it out if you can. 27, 28. Ye cannot plead the merits of your ancestors or rulers in church or state, as all of them have been sinners, and most of them notorious transgressors. Yea, on that very account have I exposed your chief priests to contempt and ruin, and your whole nation to dreadful misery and ignominy.

Ver. 1. The fulfilment of this prophecy, in part at least, has been referred to the time of Shalmaneser, Sennacherib, or Cyrus: and it is possible the series of events included may have commenced at any of these periods, or even earlier, at the exodus: but it is evident from ver. 6, 7, that the great purpose of the prediction is still future—even the wondrous and (ver. 7) complete restoration of the Jews to their own land. C.——'The main object of this chapter,' says Alexander, 'is the true relation of Israel to Jehovah, and its application in the way both of warning and encouragement. The doctrine taught is, that their segregation from the rest of men, as a peculiar people, was an act of sovereignty, independent of all merit in themselves, and not even intended for their benefit exclusively, but for the accomplishment of God's gracious purposes respecting men in general. The inferences drawn from this fact are, that Israel should certainly escape the dangers which environed him, however imminent, and, on the other hand, that he must suffer for his unfaithfulness to God.' The last clause of the verse embodies a glorious and cheering truth. God claims Israel—Israel after the flesh as a type of the spiritual Israel, the church—he claims them as his own. He has redeemed them: they are therefore his by right of purchase. He has given them his name; he has adopted them; they are therefore his by right of sonship. P.

Ver. 10. Ye are my witnesses. Since the calling of Abraham the Jews have been the most prominent witnesses for God, and that partly by doctrine, partly by ritual worship, but chiefly by their being the principal exemplification of prophecy. And if there be any that can read the prophecies peculiar to the Jews in the Bible, and the completion of them in history, and still remain an infidel—'neither would he believe, though one rose from the dead.' C.

Ver. 14. Babylon proud of her walls, the Chaldeans 'boasting in their ships'—proud of their naval power and commercial wealth.—Note, Though not a prophecy concerning Britain, how much doth she need this record as a warning. How ready hath she been to boast of her 'wooden walls,' and the inexhaustible extent of her 'national resources!' And may the Lord defend her from her enemies, and increase her riches a thousand fold. But may the Lord preserve her from pride and self-confidence, and trusting in uncertain riches, to the forgetting of the living God. C.

Ver. 19. Is not the wilderness, with its inhabitants, the adverse and uncultivated Gentile world, whom, by conversion to Jesus, the Lord will render favourable to the restoration of his people? And it is a fact undoubted, that, just in proportion as the love of Jesus is revived in a church, in the same proportion is anxiety for the conversion of the Jews revived. C.

Ver. 25. I, for mine own sake. Every sinner hates God, Ro. 8. 7, and is therefore, as such, hateful to him, Ps. 5. 5. It follows that the salvation of a sinner cannot originate from any quality in the sinner himself; but in the mercy, compassion, love, and undeserved grace of God, Jn. 3. 16; Ro. 5. 8, 10; Ep. 2. 8. C.

REFLECTIONS.—O how grace much more abounds where guilt and ignominy had abounded! Thrice happy are those troubles which occasion the peculiar presence, supports, and comforts of a reconciled God! How important that relation which is the source and foundation of such divine favours! Happy are they whom God has chosen for himself! Neither opposition, guilt, nor distance shall be able to prevent their access to and enjoyment of him. But unhappy are they who stand in the way of their mercy. Incomparably better is JEHOVAH than any of his rivals, both enemies and friends being judges. And great and glorious things his people ought to attest concerning him in their profession and practice; for mighty are the things which he hath showed or done, or will do, for them! Marvellous is the change which his grace in the gospel 27 Thy[v] first father[5] hath sinned, and thy teachers[7] have transgressed against me.

28 Therefore I have [z]profaned the princes of the sanctuary,[8] and have given Jacob to the curse, and Israel to reproaches.

CHAPTER XLIV.

1 God again comforteth his church with gracious promises. 9 The vanity of idols, and folly of idol-makers. 21 God exhorteth Israel to trust in his mercy, and promiseth restoration by Cyrus.

YET now hear, [a]O Jacob my servant; and Israel, whom I have chosen:

2 Thus saith the LORD that [b]made thee, and formed thee from the womb, which will help thee; [c]Fear not, O Jacob my servant; and thou, Jesurun, [d]whom I have chosen.

3 For I will [e]pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground; I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring;

4 And they shall [f]spring up as among the grass, as willows by the water-courses.

5 One[h] shall say, I am the LORD's; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the LORD, and surname himself by the name of Israel.[1]

6 Thus saith the [i]LORD, the King of Israel, and his Redeemer the LORD of hosts; [j]I am the first, and I am the last; and [k]beside me there is no God.

7 And [l]who, as I, shall call, and shall declare it, and set it in order for me, since [m]I appointed the ancient people? and the things that are coming, and shall come, let them show unto them.

8 Fear[o] ye not, neither be afraid: [p]have not I told thee from that time, and have declared it? ye are even [q]my witnesses. Is there a God beside me? yea, [r]there is no God;[2] I know not any.

9 ¶ They[s] that make a graven image are all of them vanity; and their delectable[3] things shall not profit; and they are their own witnesses; [t]they see not, nor know; that they may be ashamed.

10 Who hath formed a god, or molten a graven image that is profitable for nothing?

11 Behold, all his fellows shall be [u]ashamed; and the workmen, they are of men: let them all be gathered together, let them stand up; yet they shall fear, and they shall be ashamed together.

12 The[x] smith with the tongs[4] both worketh in the coals, and fashioneth it with hammers, and worketh it with the strength of his arms: yea, [y]he is hungry, and his strength faileth; he drinketh no water, and is faint.

13 The carpenter stretcheth out his rule, he marketh it out with a line, he fitteth it with planes, and he marketh it out with the compass, and maketh it after the figure of a man, according to the beauty of a man; that it [z]may remain in the house.

14 He [a]heweth him down cedars, and taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth[5] for himself among the trees of the [6]forest: he planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it.

The last clause of the verse is a further development of the same idea.—P.

makes on hearts and nations. And every mercy received is but a pledge of another. Surely then we should, with the most ardent affections, show forth his praise! But, alas! by what fearful sins of omission and commission many professors provoke him, to their own and their neighbours' destruction! Yet transcendently tender are his gracious pardons. And hopeful is the case if, under a deep sense of our own and our fathers' iniquities, we supplicate for and receive them.

CHAPTER XLIV. Ver. 2. God formed the Jews into rational creatures, and into a church for himself: and forms believers, and renders them members of Christ's mystical body and gospel church. 3-5. I will publish my gospel, and pour out my Spirit in an abundant manner upon corners and persons destitute of them; that, being rooted and grounded in Christ, they may quickly grow in grace and good works, and may be determined solemnly to devote themselves to the faith, profession, and obedience of Christ, and the fellowship of his church. 7, 8. Which of the heathen idols can foretell, and in order accomplish, events as I have done, since the creation, or the taking of Israel into covenant with me? And why then do you fear that any of them should hinder me from fulfilling my present promises, when they have never been able hitherto to hinder the predicted events which have befallen you? 21-28. Consider, my people—whom I have chosen, because of faith, and will never forsake—the vanity of idols, and madness of their votaries, and the judicial blindness to which they are given up; and return to me, your Redeemer, by faith and repentance, in the view of my having graciously pardoned all your great and numerous transgressions. And let all the inhabitants of heaven and earth, and particularly the Gentiles, praise God for the deliverance of the Jews from Babylon, and the redemption by Jesus typified thereby. The God who hath promised is he who made and governs all things, who can easily frustrate the predictions of the Chaldean southsayers, and blast all the political designs of their statesmen; and who takes pleasure to fulfil that which he has foretold by his prophets concerning the rebuilding of the Jewish cities, and the removal of impediments out of his way, and drying up the Euphrates, that Babylon may be taken by Cyrus the Persian, whom he has appointed for releasing his people, and causing them to rebuild his temple at Jerusalem.

Ver. 2. Jesurun signifies upright—the proper characteristic of a renewed spirit, having 'a conscience sprinkled from dead works,' 'void of offence towards God and towards man,' and therefore enabled by grace to look up towards God, and stand upright, and not downcast or 'ashamed before him at his coming.' He. 9. 14: Ac. 24. 16: 1 Jn. 2. 28. C.

Ver. 4. And they shall spring up, &c. 'As grass among the waters' an image forcibly impressive in the Arabian or African deserts, where the traveler may journey many weeks, and never see grass except where he occasionally discovers a spring of living water. C.

Ver. 7. The meaning may be thus expressed: 'Who shall call events into existence as I, the Lord, have done, and announce them beforehand, and set them in order before me, since the time when I set apart this ancient people, Israel? Who will declare the things which are now approaching, or which shall take place hereafter?' The power, the wisdom, and the omniscience of God are here contrasted with the weakness and ignorance of man. P.—Ancient people. The history of nations, rightly read, is the history of divine providence—the development of the government and character of God. Therefore an 'ancient people' becomes to the pious and contemplative mind more interesting than a modern people, not merely as deeper studies of curiosity, but as clearer, because more varied, illustrations either of divine mercy or judgment. C.

Ver. 9. Their own witnesses. The idolater knows that he can make or destroy his idol, and is therefore a witness to himself that the idol has no power, and so cannot be God. C.

Ver. 12. If the workman who forms the idol become faint by the toil of making it, and must borrow strength from water, how weak must be the dead idol that cannot do what water can! The Rev. J. Williams states, that when the South Sea Islanders were engaged in making an idol, they strictly abstained from food and water, though the work sometimes continued three days. It is not improbable that a similar practice may have prevailed amongst the Jews during the period of their idolatry; and if so, it well explains the difficulty in this passage. C.

Ver. 13. The carpenter. The introduction of both the smith and carpenter presents, what is still common amongst heathens, a wooden idol covered with metallic plates. The whole description manifests an advanced state of the arts of metallurgy and carpentry, sadly contrasting with that spiritual stupidity into which idolatry had reduced a refined and civilized people. C.

Ver. 17. A man prostrate before an idol, and praying to it for aid and deliverance, is a melancholy evidence of human degradation. No doubt idolaters generally deny that they pray to the idol; but affirm that they use it as 'an aid to devotion,' and pray to the god it represents. But God rejects all such subterfuges, and detests the idol, as he condemns the idolater. C.

Ver. 18. He hath shut their eyes. Not by leading or inducing them to become idolaters—for then had he been the author of their sin—but by judicially giving them over to their own delusions, as a righteous punishment for their forgetfulness of his mercies. C.

Ver. 20. He feedeth on ashes. A diseased state of the stomach often produces such depravity of appetite as leads to eating of ashes, or even clay; by which destructive regimen, and self-chosen substitute for medicine, the disease is constantly rendered worse. And such is the condition of a heart deceived by false doctrine, led by youthful lusts, or chained by aged habits, labouring for that which is not bread, eagerly swallowing the lies of Satan, and rejecting Jesus the only Physician. C.

Ver. 24. It is surely impossible to read this verse, and compare it with Jn. v. 3; Col. i. 6; He. i. 2, and fail to see that the JEHOVAH of the Old Testament is Jesus in the New; and it is impossible to search both Old and New Testaments, without perceiving that JEHOVAH is the living and the true God. C.

Ver. 27. The drying up of a great river is one of the most improbable events. Yet, by cutting a new channel for the Euphrates, and draining off its waters, Cyrus was enabled to enter Babylon, and transfer the Chaldean power to the Medes and Persians. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Thrice happy are the people saved by the Lord in their manifold relations to him, and blessings received from him! Happy are they who are, both themselves and their seed, interested in the new kingdom! Infinite is the fulness of the Holy Ghost: and liberally God bestows upon him destitute, withered, and wretched men, His influences invite them truly to God, and render holiness, and the most solemn dedication of themselves to God, as a Saviour, Husband, and Governor, their delight! What madness is it to forsake JEHOVAH, the fountain of living waters, whose unbounded excellencies are unnumbered, and to choose or form an idol in his room! When men are given up to their own hearts' lusts they soon become sottish and diligent in sin! And unpardoned iniquities greatly interrupt our fellowship with God. But it is pleasant to return to him in the view of his full forgiveness and effectual redemption, and with thankful joys to contemplate what he is to us, and has 15 Then shall it be for a man to burn: for he will take thereof and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread; yea, [c]he maketh a god, and worshippeth it: he maketh it a graven image, and falleth down thereto.

16 He burneth part thereof in the fire: with part thereof he eateth flesh; he roasteth roast, and is satisfied; yea, he warmeth himself, and saith, Aha, I am warm, I have seen the fire:

17 And the residue thereof he maketh a god, even his graven image: he [b]falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and prayeth unto it, and saith, Deliver me, for thou art my god.

18 They[c] have not known nor understood: for he hath shut[7] their eyes, that they cannot see; and their hearts, that they cannot understand.

19 And none considereth in his heart,[8] neither is there knowledge nor understanding to say, I have burned part of it in the fire; yea, also I have baked bread upon the coals thereof; I have roasted flesh, and eaten it; and shall I make the residue thereof [d]an abomination? shall I fall down to the stock of a tree?[9]

20 He [e]feedeth on ashes: a deceived heart hath turned him aside, that he cannot deliver his soul, nor say, Is there not a lie in my right hand?

21 ¶ Remember[g] these,[1] O Jacob and Israel; for[h] thou art my servant: I have formed thee; thou art my servant: O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of me.

22 I[i] have blotted out, [j]as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins: [k]return unto me; for I have redeemed thee.

23 Sing,[l] O ye heavens; for the LORD hath done it: shout, ye lower parts of the earth: break forth into singing, ye mountains, O forest, and every tree therein: for the LORD hath redeemed Jacob, and glorified himself in Israel.

24 Thus[n] saith the LORD, thy Redeemer, and [o]he that formed thee from the womb, I am the LORD that maketh all things; that stretcheth forth the heavens alone; that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself;

25 That[p] frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that [q]turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish;[2]

26 That [r]confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his [s]messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, [t]Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built, and I will raise up the decayed [3]places thereof:

27 That[u] saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers;

28 That saith of Cyrus, [v]He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure: even saying to Jerusalem, [w]Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid.[4]

CHAPTER XLV.

1 God calleth Cyrus for his church's sake. 5 By his omnipotency he challengeth obedience. 20 He convinceth the idols of vanity by his saving power.

THUS saith the LORD to his [a]anointed, to Cyrus,[1] whose right hand I have [2]holden, [b]to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut:

2 I[c] will go before thee, and make the crooked

[e] It was under the rule and by express orders of Cyrus that Jerusalem was to be built after the captivity; and the second temple founded. It is here expressly stated that God's purpose in raising up Cyrus was to accomplish this great work of restoration and reconstruction. We are informed by Josephus that Cyrus was made acquainted with this remarkable prophecy, which had been written two centuries previously; and there can be no question that it operated powerfully upon his mind and ways in the providence of God, the instance of leading him to release and aid the Jewish captives.—F.

done, and will do for us! And even angels rejoice at the conversion of men. What pleasure God takes to disgrace false teachers, and to honour his ministers of truth! Easily he can retrieve the most forlorn condition, and find proper instruments for his work. And it is an honour for the greatest of men to be his agents in doing good to his people.

CHAPTER XLV. Ver. 1–3. I, the Lord, will assist Cyrus, and enable him to overthrow far greater armies than his own. I will dispirit and weaken his opposers; procure him entrance into Babylon and other fortified cities; remove all obstructions out of his way; and give him the wealth of the Lydians, Chaldeans, &c. 5, 6. I will make him strong and active, and will fit and dispose him for these great undertakings. 7. Comfort and calamity, prosperity and adversity, are overruled, in all their circumstances, by my power and wisdom. 8. I will bestow such plenty of favours upon you, through the righteousness of my Son, and in equity of procedure, as if they rained from heaven, or burst forth in floods, or grew in crops out of the earth. 9–11. Instead of presumptuously quarrelling with my procedure, humbly ask of me whatever information or blessings you or my church need, and you shall have your request granted. 13. I have qualified Cyrus to manifest my righteousness, truth, and goodness in the punishment of the Chaldeans, and the gratuitous deliverance of the Jews. 14. Part of the wealth of the Egyptians, Ethiopians, Arabians, &c., shall be bestowed upon the temple at Jerusalem; and multitudes of them shall humbly join themselves to the gospel church. 19. Not in the manner of the heathen oracles or idols, but in the most public and plain manner, and for your real advantage, I have promised what is true, and commanded what is just and good. 20–25. Ye who have escaped in the devastation of countries, inflicted to punish their abominable idolatries, and who can produce nothing to support the cause of your idols, know that I, the alone God and Saviour, have foretold these things. Renounce all your idols; believe in and acknowledge me as your only, almighty, and effectual Saviour; thus shall ye be graciously delivered from sin, and all the miseries which it entails, and advanced to everlasting happiness. I have sworn, and will most faithfully perform my promise, to manifest myself the true God, and lead men of all nations to accept gladly my worship: and they shall, each one for himself, heartily receive, and solemnly acknowledge, that all their righteousness, for justification, was performed by me, and all their strength, for the performance of duties, is conveyed from me. Even to me shall all sinful ones come; and all the finally impenitent shall be overwhelmed with misery and ignominy. In a state of union to my person and through my righteousness, shall all who accept Jesus Christ have their sins pardoned and their persons accepted; and in me shall they rejoice and boast.

Ver. 1. The entry of Cyrus into Babylon arose, first, from the neglect of closing the river gates on a night of festival: and secondly, from the opening of the palace-gates to inquire into the cause of the tumult, whereupon the Persian soldiers rushed in and slew the emperor, Da. 5. 30. C.

Ver. 8. 'Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above,' and as 'righteousness' is eminently the work and gift of God, through Jesus Christ, its heavenly origin and commission to the earth, as the only seed of salvation, are here beautifully described. Note. Every dispensation of Providence, whether it come in light or in darkness, has but one end—the manifestation of the righteousness of God, which ever was of old, as it now is, and ever will be, through faith of Jesus Christ, unto all and upon all them that believe—even upon all that believe the testimony of God, and rest upon his faithfulness, mercy, and power. C.

Ver. 11. Command ye me. How can the creature command his Maker? Observe, he is first to ask the Holy One, consequently by the Holy Spirit, Ro. 8. 26; and concerning sins, consequently by addressing a Father; and thus, not striving against his Maker, but bowing to his Redeemer, the march of providential events moves onward at the prayerful command of the believer. C.

Ver. 23. Who is this? It has been applied to Cyrus: but he was not 'raised up in righteousness;' and though overruled to fulfil God's purposes, God could not be said to 'direct all his ways;' neither did he build the city of Jerusalem, but aided merely to the laying of the foundations of the temple. Is not the whole rather a description of Messiah, the Adam of the foregoing verse, who, when sent forth upon earth, made of a woman, was manifested in creature condition and servant-form—truly raised in righteousness, Spirit-led in 'all his ways,' the builder of the 'New Jerusalem,' and the free-grace deliverer of 'the captives' of sin and death? Ep. 4. 8. C.

Ver. 15. God is essentially invisible, manifest only in providence, but hid as it were behind second causes;—manifest in his silent word, but hid from the wise and prudent,—'manifest in the flesh,' but hid behind 'the form of a servant:' or 'seen of angels' in glory, but hid from all but the eye of faith and hope. C.

Ver. 20. This summons refers to a time still future, when 'in the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory,' ver. 25. By the word escaped, it indicates that the return of the Jews will be as much against the will of oppressing nations as was the exodus from Egypt; and by the reference to 'graven images,' that idolatry will still be prevalent amongst an ignorant people 'perishing for lack of knowledge.' C.

Ver. 23. When this verse is compared with Ro. 14. 8–12, the reader finds (ver. 8. that we live or die unto the Lord; he also finds (ver. 9) that this Lord is Jesus. we all then find ourselves 'at the judgment-seat of Christ;' and thus (ver. 11, identical with Is. 45. 23 we find ourselves before that tribunal, fulfilling this prophecy and bowing to JEHOVAH, confessing to God. And surely it is impossible to weigh these things and continue to deny that JESUS is 'God manifest in the flesh.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—God, for the welfare of his church, often casts down the great and mighty, and raises up the weak and obscure. Uncertain are all the enjoyments of this world: it is therefore proper that they all be used for the glory of God and in kindness to his people. But let me never forget Jesus, who hath ascended up on high and led captivity captive, and hath received gifts for men, even the rebellious, that God the Lord may dwell among them. Let him order all my crosses and my comforts as he pleases. And while I look up for his abundant blessings, let me never

3 And [d]I will give thee the treasures[3] of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that[e] thou mayest know that I, the LORD, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel.

4 For[f] Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have [h]even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though [i]thou hast not known me.

5 ¶ I [j]am the LORD, and there is none else, there is no God beside me: I [k]girded thee, though thou hast not known me:

6 That[l] they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none beside me: I am the LORD, and there is none else.

7 I[m] form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil. I the LORD do all these things.[4]

8 Drop[o] down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness; let the earth open, and let them bring forth salvation, and let righteousness spring up together. I the LORD have created it.

9 Woe unto him that [p]striveth[5] with his Maker! Let the potsherd strive with the potsherds of the earth. [q]Shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What makest thou? or thy work, He hath no hands?

10 Woe[r] unto him that saith unto his father, What begettest thou? or to the woman, What hast thou brought forth?

11 Thus[s] saith the LORD, the Holy One of Israel, and his Maker, [t]Ask me of things to come [u]concerning my sons, and concerning the work of my hands [v]command ye me.

12 I[x] have made the earth, and created man upon it: I, even my hands, have stretched out the heavens, and all their host have I commanded.

13 I[y] have raised him up in righteousness, and I will direct[6] all his ways: [z]he shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives, [a]not for price nor reward, saith the LORD of hosts.

14 Thus saith the LORD, [b]The labour of Egypt, and merchandise of Ethiopia and of the Sabeans, men of stature, shall come over unto thee, and they shall be thine:[7] they shall come after thee; [c]in chains they shall come over, [d]and they shall fall down unto thee, they shall make supplication unto thee, saying, Surely God is in thee; and there is none else, there is no God.

15 Verily, thou art a God that [e]hidest thyself, [g]O God of Israel, the Saviour.

16 They[h] shall be ashamed, and also confounded, all of them: they shall go to confusion together that are makers of idols.

17 But[i] Israel shall be saved in the [8]LORD with an everlasting salvation: ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end.

18 For thus saith the LORD [j]that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited; I am the LORD, and there is none else.

19 I have not spoken [k]in secret, in a dark place of the earth: I said not unto the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me [l]in vain. I the LORD [m]speak righteousness, I declare things that are right.

20 ¶ Assemble yourselves and come; draw near together, ye that are [o]escaped of the nations: they [p]have no knowledge that set up the wood of their graven image, and pray unto a god that cannot save.

21 Tell ye, and [q]bring them near; yea, let them take counsel together: who [r]hath declared this from ancient time? who hath told it from that time? have not I the LORD? and [s]there is no God else beside me; a just God and a Saviour; there is none beside me.

22 Look[t] unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else.

23 I[u] have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every [v]knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.

24 Surely, shall one say, [x]In the LORD have I righteousness[9] and strength:[1] even to him shall men come: and [y]all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed.

25 In[z] the LORD shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall [a]glory.

CHAPTER XLVI.

1 The idols of Babylon could not save themselves from captivity. 3 God careth his people to the end. 5 Idols are not comparable to God for power. 12 His salvation is near at hand.

BEL boweth[a] down, Nebo stoopeth; their idols were upon the beasts, and upon the cattle: your carriages were heavy loaden; they are a burden to the weary beast.

2 They stoop, they bow down together; they could not deliver the burden, but [1]themselves are gone into captivity.[2]

3 ¶ Hearken[b] unto me, O house of Jacob, and all the remnant of the house of Israel, which are [c]borne by me from the belly, which are carried from the womb:

4 And [d]even to your old age I am he: and even to hoar hairs will I carry you: I have made, and I will bear; even I will carry, and will deliver you.

5 ¶ To[e] whom will ye liken me, and make me equal, and compare me, that we may be like?

[2] These verses refer directly to Babylon. In the preceding chapters the prophet had shown what Cyrus would do for the Jews: he now turns to those who had so long held the Jews in captivity, and pronounces judgment upon them. Bel, or Belus, was the supreme deity of the Babylonians. His fall is a symbol of the overthrow of the royal power in Babylon. Nebo was the tutelary deity of the Chaldeans, and corresponded to the Greek Mercury. His fall was symbolic of the complete subjection of the inhabitants of Babylonia to the great Persian conqueror Cyrus.—P.

18 For thus saith the LORD [j]that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited; I am the LORD, and there is none else.

19 I have not spoken [k]in secret, in a dark place of the earth: I said not unto the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me [l]in vain. I the LORD [m]speak righteousness, I declare things that are right.

20 ¶ Assemble yourselves and come; draw near together, ye that are [o]escaped of the nations: they [p]have no knowledge that set up the wood of their graven image, and pray unto a god that cannot save.

21 Tell ye, and [q]bring them near; yea, let them take counsel together: who [r]hath declared this from ancient time? who hath told it from that time? have not I the LORD? and [s]there is no God else beside me; a just God and a Saviour; there is none beside me.

22 Look[t] unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else.

23 I[u] have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every [v]knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.

CHAPTER XLVII.

1 God's judgment upon Babylon and Chaldea, 8 for their unmercifulness, 7 pride, 10 and over-boldness, 11 shall be unresistible.

COME down,[a] and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter[1] of Babylon; sit on the ground: there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate.

2 Take[b] the millstones, and grind meal:[2] uncover[c] thy locks, make bare the leg, uncover the thigh, pass over the [3]rivers.[4]

3 Thy nakedness shall be uncovered, yea, thy shame shall be seen: [d]I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man.[5]

4 As[e] for our Redeemer, the LORD of hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.

5 Sit[f] thou silent, and get thee into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms.

6 ¶ I[h] was wroth with my people; I have polluted mine inheritance, and given them into thine hand: thou didst show them no mercy; upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke.

7 And thou saidst, I shall be [i]a lady for ever: so that thou didst not lay these things to thy heart, neither didst remember the latter end of it.

8 Therefore hear now this, [k]thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelessly; that sayest in thine heart, [l]I am, and none else beside me; I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children:

9 But[m] these two things shall come to thee in a moment in one day, the loss of children, and widowhood: they shall come upon thee in their perfection for [o]the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments.

10 For thou hast [p]trusted in thy wickedness: thou [q]hast said, None seeth me. Thy wisdom and thy knowledge it hath perverted thee;[6] and thou hast said in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me.

11 Therefore [r]shall evil come upon thee; thou shalt not know from whence it [s]riseth: and mischief shall fall upon thee; thou shalt not be able to put it off:[8] and desolation shall come upon thee suddenly, which thou shalt not know.

12 ¶ Stand[t] now with thine enchantments, and with the multitude of thy sorceries, wherein thou hast laboured from thy youth; if so be that in Jesus, the man who is JEHOVAH'S fellow, we have righteousness and strength. But God forbid that we should incur the guilt, the shame, the ruin of such as are incensed against a divine Saviour!

CHAPTER XLVI. Ver. 1. The idols were carried away, either on account of their value as precious metals, or works of art, or trophies of victory—or with the superstitious view of transferring their tutelary favour and protection from Babylon to Persia. C.

Ver. 7. They bear him upon the shoulder. Alluding to the manner in which in heathen—and, alas! that it must be told, to the manner in which, in countries called Christian—images are borne upon men's shoulders in public processions. C.

Ver. 11. Calling a ravenous beast from the east. A golden eagle was the emblematic standard of Cyrus, under which name he is called from Persia, which lay eastward of Jerusalem where the prophecy was delivered. C.

Ver. 13. I bring near my righteousness—not by the deliverance granted by Cyrus, but as 'declaring the end from the beginning,' by the final deliverance to be effected by Messiah. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Desolating strokes clearly manifest the vanity of idols. In every period of the Jewish church and nation God was their protector, supporter, and deliverer: in every period of life he is such to every particular saint; and his former kindness ought to make us hope for further favours. It is only necessary to make use of our reason to observe the absurdity of idol worship; and it becomes us to ponder how wickedly we have acted, if we have joined in it. It is absurd to doubt of God's existence, or to neglect reverencing his almighty power and Godhead, which are so manifest. Firmly fixed are his purposes, and exactly fulfilled in every dispensation of providence; the tumultuous capture of cities and overthrow of nations not excepted. But infinitely great is the mercy, that not the worst of plagues or wickedness can debar us from Jesus Christ and his offered salvation!

CHAPTER XLVII. Ver. 1–5. Glorious and unconquered kingdom of Babylon, bewail thy approaching calamities: thou shalt be reduced very low: thy dignity and authority taken from thee; thy luxury and delicacy shall be exchanged for afflicting straits and oppressing miseries; thy wretched inhabitants shall be reduced to grind at the mills, or to perform other pieces of the basest drudgery, or driven in herds of captives before their cruel conquerors; they shall be exposed to scorn and disgrace in every form. I, the Almighty God and Redeemer of Israel, by the irresistible effects of my just judgment, will render your city and country desolate and miserable. 6–8. Because ye have cruelly murdered and oppressed the Jews, and presumptuously boasted that your empire could never fall, never be equalled in power and wealth, and never want a king and people to defend it. 14, 15. No comfort shall be left you;—and your merchants and hired troops shall flee away to their respective countries.

Ver. 5. The lady of kingdoms. There is a great tendency in all nations to be proud of their capitals, and to bestow upon them great swelling titles: 'lady of kingdoms,' indicating beauty and delicacy! What a name for a heap of rubbish, the habitation of serpents and wild beasts! 'The eternal city,' the fond title of imperial Rome, indicating a certainty of unchangeable splendour! what a name for the ruins that encumber her seven hills, and typify the judgments that are ready to sweep her away! C.

Ver. 9. In a moment in one day. Babylon was of such prodigious strength, and possessed of such resources, both of provisions and men, that Belshazzar and the city and army were engaged in the revelry of a festival: in 'a moment,' and without a blow struck in self-defence, the city was taken, and the kingdom overthrown, about 540 years before the Christian era.—The loss of children. The Babylonians afterwards rebelled against the Persians, and Darius Hystaspes besieged them. For the purpose of prolonging their means of defence, they resolved that all who were incapable of aiding in the defence, including their wives and children, should be put to death. Thus fulfilling, by their own decree and hand, the terrible doom of loss of children which God had denounced against them. C.

Ver. 12. Babylon, during all its history, was the fruitful parent of idolatry, lewdness, and debauchery. These were accompanied with high pretensions to the knowledge of occult sciences, called 'sorceries and enchantments,' Da. 2. 2, by which ignorant and superstitious minds were kept in mental and bodily subjection to a wicked priesthood and tyrannical government. C.

Ver. 13. Astrologers. Judicial astrology, or the pretence of foretelling the future fortunes of children from the position of the planets at the hour of their birth, still holds its place in India; and was at one period very prevalent in Europe, from some parts of which it is scarcely yet completely banished. Such, alas! has been, and continues to be, the folly and the presumption of men! C.

REFLECTIONS.—God delights to abase the proud, and to deal justly with the unmerciful. And, thou shalt be able to profit, if so be thou mayest prevail.

13 Thou[t] art wearied in the multitude of thy counsels. Let now the astrologers,[9] the star-gazers, the monthly prognosticators,[1] stand up and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee.

14 Behold, [u]they shall be as stubble; the fire shall burn them; they shall not deliver themselves[2] from the power of the flame: [v]there shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it.

15 Thus shall they be unto thee with whom thou hast laboured, even [w]thy merchants,[3] from thy youth: [y]they shall wander every one to his quarter; none shall save thee.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

1 God, to convince the people of their foreknown obstinacy, revealed his prophecies. 9 He spareth them for his own sake. 12 He exhorteth them to obedience, because of his power and providence. 16 He lamenteth their disobedience. 20 He sendeth his people out of Babylon.

HEAR ye this, O house of Jacob, which are called[a] by the name of Israel, and [b]are come forth out of the waters of [1]Judah; [c]which swear by the name of the LORD, and make mention of the God of Israel, but [d]not in truth, nor in righteousness.[2]

2 For [e]they call themselves of the [f]holy city, and stay themselves upon the God of Israel; the LORD of hosts is his name.

3 I[h] have declared the former things from the beginning; and they went forth out of my mouth, and I showed them; I did them suddenly, and they came to pass.

4 Because I knew that [i]thou art obstinate,[3] and thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass;

5 I[j] have even from the beginning declared it to thee; before it came to pass I showed it thee: lest thou shouldest say, Mine idol hath done them; and my graven image, and my molten image, hath commanded them.

6 Thou hast heard, see all this; and [k]will not ye declare[4] it?[5] I have showed thee new things from this time, even [l]hidden things, and thou didst not know them.

7 They are created now, and not from the beginning; even before the day when thou heardest them not;[6] lest thou shouldest say, Behold, I knew them.

8 Yea,[n] thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not; yea, from that time that thine ear was not opened: for I knew that thou wouldest [o]deal very treacherously, and wast called [p]a transgressor from the womb.

9 ¶ For[q] my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off.

10 Behold,[r] I have refined thee, but not with silver;[7] I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction.

11 For[s] mine own sake, even for mine own sake, will I do it: for how should my name be polluted? and [t]I will not give my glory unto another.

12 ¶ Hearken unto me, O Jacob and Israel, [u]my called: I am he; [v]I am the first, I also am the last.

13 Mine[w] hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand hath [x]spanned the heavens: [y]when I call unto them, they stand up together.

14 All[z] ye, assemble yourselves, and hear; which among them hath declared these things? the LORD hath loved [a]him; he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be on the Chaldeans.

15 I, even I, have spoken; yea, I have called him; [b]I have brought him, and he shall make his way prosperous.

16 ¶ Come ye near unto me, hear ye this; [c]I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; from the time that it was, there am I: and now the Lord GOD and his Spirit [d]hath sent me.[9]

17 Thus saith the LORD, [e]thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; I am the LORD thy God which teacheth thee [f]to profit, [h]which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go.

18 O[i] that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a [1]river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the [2]sea;

19 Thy[j] seed also had been as the sand, and the offspring of thy bowels like the gravel thereof; his [k]name[3] should not have been cut off nor destroyed from before me.

20 ¶ Go[l] ye forth of Babylon, flee ye from the Chaldeans, with a voice of singing declare ye, tell this, utter it even to the end of the earth; say ye, [m]The LORD hath redeemed his servant Jacob.

21 And[o] they thirsted not when he led them

alas! the mightiest nations soon sink under the hand of an angry but righteous God, and the weight of their manifold sins. The very sins in which they had gloried or laboured, or by which they had hoped to save themselves, become the principal causes of their ruin. Yea, the mischiefs which sinners least dreaded often come fatally upon them. And false teachers, who are the instruments in deceiving others, shall themselves feel the heaviest stroke of judgment.

CHAPTER XLVIII. Ver. 1, 2. Hear ye, who boast that you are descendants of Jacob and Judah his most honourable son, and are citizens of Jerusalem, and profess much, though feigned, confidence and dependence on God. 3–8. By foretelling and accomplishing events, I have given you the most undeniable proofs of my true Godhead, because I knew you were so stubborn and untractable. I have even so timed my predictions, as to leave you no ground to pretend that either you or your idols then foresaw the events; for I knew you were so long hardened in perverseness, that you would choose to ascribe your information to any other than to me. 9–11. From regard to the honour of my own perfections, covenant, and promises, I will not utterly destroy you. Nevertheless, in order to purge you from your sins, particularly your gross idolatries, I must try you in a furnace of moderate affliction in Chaldea, and there renew my choice of you for my peculiar people. 14, 15. God manifested his love to Cyrus by employing him in such honourable services, and giving him such prosperous success in destroying the Chaldeans. 16. From the very beginning I have plainly and publicly foretold future events, and have been always ready to fulfil my predictions. And now I am appointed of God to foretell, and in due time to execute, things relative to Cyrus and Babylon, and the redemption prefigured by it. 17–19. I am your divine instructor and leader in what conduces to your peace and prosperity; and if ye had but hearkened to my commandments, your peace, and the prosperity flowing from your piety and virtue, had been abundant and lasting; your children should have been greatly increased; nor should they have been carried captive out of my land. 20, 21. Ye shall certainly be delivered from Babylon, and shall be provided for in your return.

ENTRANCE TO THE GARDEN OF THE KNIGHTS OF MALTA—A GLIMPSE OF THE MOST SPLENDID EDIFICE EVER RAISED BY FAITH IN THE CAUSE OF RELIGION. [Isaiah, xlix:6.]—"And he said, It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the ends of the earth." Through an open vista made of a tangled labyrinth of trees and flowering shrubs in the garden of the Knights of Malta we have a glimpse of St. Peter's Church at Rome. This structure, conceived in the genius of Michael Angelo, is the most splendid edifice ever lifted by faith in the cause of religion. It is an evidence of the truth of Isaiah's prophecy, and is an expression of the declaration that Christ was to be a light to the Gentiles and to be salvation to the people unto the ends of the earth. This garden stands upon the Aventine Hill, the highest of the seven in Rome.

through the deserts: he caused the waters to flow out of the rock for them; he clave the rock also, and the waters gushed out.

22 There[v] is no peace, saith the LORD, unto the wicked.[4]

CHAPTER XLIX.

1 Christ, being sent to the Jews, complaineth of them. 5 He is sent to the Gentiles with gracious promises. 13 God's love is perpetual to his church. 18 The ample restoration of the church. 24 The certainty of its deliverance out of captivity.

LISTEN,[a] O isles,[1] unto me; and hearken, ye people, from far; The LORD hath [b]called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name.

2 And he [c]hath made my mouth like a sharp sword;[2] in the shadow of his hand hath he [d]hid me, and made me [e]a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me;

3 And said unto me, Thou art [f]my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified.

4 Then I said, [h]I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, and in vain; [i]yet surely my judgment is with the LORD, and my work[3] with my God.

5 ¶ And now, saith the LORD that formed me from the womb to be his servant, [j]to bring Jacob again to him, [k]Though[4] Israel be not gathered, yet [l]shall I be glorious in the eyes of the LORD, and my God shall be my strength.

6 And he said, [5]It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved[6] of Israel; I will also give thee for a [m]light to the Gentiles,[7] that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth.

7 Thus saith the LORD, the Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One, to him whom man despiseth,[8] to[n] him whom the nation abhorreth, to a servant of rulers, [o]Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the LORD that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose thee.

8 Thus saith the LORD, [p]In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee: and I [q]will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish[9] the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages; these? Behold, I was left alone; these, where had they been?

22 Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms,[4] and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.[5]

23 And [n]kings shall be thy nursing fathers,[6] and their queens[7] thy nursing mothers: they shall [o]bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD: for [p]they shall not be ashamed that wait for me.

24 ¶ Shall[q] the prey be taken from the mighty, or [8]the lawful captive[9] delivered?

25 But thus saith the LORD, [r]Even the captives[1] of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children.[2]

26 And [s]I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; and they shall be drunken with their own blood, as with sweet wine:[3] and all flesh [t]shall know that I the LORD am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob.

CHAPTER L.

1 The dereliction of the Jews to be imputed to their own sins, and not to God's inability to save. 4 Christ's commission to speak comfort to the weary: 5 his patient suffering of indignities, 7 and confidence in God's help. 10 An exhortation to trust in God, and not in human resources.

THUS saith the LORD, [a]Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement, whom I have put away? or which of my creditors is it to whom [b]I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have [c]ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away.

2 Wherefore, when I [d]came, was there [e]no man? when I called, was there none to answer? [f]Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I [g]dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst.

3 I [h]clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

vices he will glorify all his perfections to the highest. And though my ministrations have little success in the conversion of the Jewish nation, God will honourably reward my faithful service, and give me for an Instructor and Saviour to the Gentile world. 7–13. In consequence of my great sacrifice and trouble among the Jews, JEHOVAH will highly exalt me, seasonably grant whatever assistance and protection I need for myself or members, and grant me a living body through the whole world, saved from all their misery and bondage, and richly supplied with the precious and comfortable oracles, ordinances, and blessings of the new kingdom, while both angels and men shall rejoice in their happiness. 14–23. Nor shall the Jews in Babylon, or in their long dispersion, nor the church under Antichrist, have any just reason to doubt of God's continued kindness to and care for them. Delivered from their enemies, and returned to their own country, the Jews shall greatly increase in numbers and abound in prosperity. During their infidelity and dispersion, the vast numbers of Gentiles who enter the church shall more than balance their loss: and at last both Jews and Gentiles shall, in countless multitudes all over the world, be converted to the Lord. 24–26. Nor shall the mightiest devils or persecutors be able to keep them from accepting Christ, since God, as their redeemer, will exert his almighty power in their behalf, and the tremendous overthrow of the wicked.

Ver. 2. This highly figurative passage was designed to be descriptive of the Messiah. His mouth was like a sharp sword, able to give utterance to words of convincing and powerful eloquence, which would penetrate the heart. The figure is carried on into the second member of the verse. The shadow of God's hand is there represented as covering or concealing the sword. It is preserved by divine power, hidden from the eye of the enemy, until the moment comes for action; then it is suddenly drawn forth, and wielded with skill and power. The last clause sets forth the same idea under another figure: an arrow preserved in the quiver until the moment for shooting it arrives. P.

Ver. 3. Israel signifies 'Prevailer with God:' and here is easily, and with certainty, seen to be a specific title of Messiah, and not the national designation of the Jews. The distinction lies in ver. 4: Messiah-Israel had his 'judgment and work' with God; but Israel, the people, were ever a 'stiff-necked and rebellious generation.' C.

Ver. 5. To bring home again. Jacob, who went out an exile.—Though Israel a name given on returning. be not gathered; that is, though during a long time Israel shall remain dispersed, 'yet shall I be glorious' in the judgment of their excision for a time, till the Gentiles be 'grafted in'—and finally, 'all Israel shall be saved.' C.

Ver. 7. To him whom man despiseth, &c. To Messiah, 'despised and rejected of men:' and so abhorred of the Jewish nation, that they preferred Barabbas, a robber, and cried out, 'Away with him, away with him: crucify him, crucify him!'—To a servant of rulers. To one led before the tribunal, and condemned by the pusillanimous injustice, not of a native prince, but a foreign ruler. C.

Ver. 8. In an acceptable time, &c. This passage is quoted in 2 Co. 6. 2. Its general meaning is, that in the days of God's power, in a day appointed by him, he would be ready and willing to extend his salvation to mankind through his Son. In the time of the gospel dispensation, under the ministry of Christ's apostles, the Lord would extend his grace and mercy to Jews and Gentiles alike. P.—A covenant. 'A purifier, or a covenant sacrifice.' Purifier seems most agreeable to the scope of the passage.—To establish the earth. Rather, 'to restore the land' to its rightful owners in the 'acceptable time' of the gospel jubilee. C.

Ver. 10. They shall not hunger nor thirst. 'The hunger and thirst' of the Lord's captives is always 'after righteousness,' Mat. 5. 6, for nothing short of 'everlasting righteousness' can satisfy the cravings or sustain the strength of the soul. But now they 'hunger and thirst' no more, for the word of life is in them 'a well of water,' Jn. 4. 14, and their food 'the living bread which came down from heaven.' Jn. 6. 51. C.

Ver. 12. Sinim is said to have been the name of a strong city in Egypt; and may thus represent every city in which Israel had been imprisoned as Joseph, or enslaved as his descendants: the Vulgate translates it 'South Country,' probably in reference to Mat. 8. 11. C.

Ver. 17. 'They that ruined thee shall speedily become thy builders; and they that wasted thy substance shall [by conversion] become thy children.' C.

Ver. 23. While, like all spiritual promises to the Jews, this prophecy is fulfilled to the Christian Gentile church; yet it is obvious from the entire context, that its first application is to the Jews. And little during their long pilgrimage has been to them the 'nursing' of kings and queens. But let not the infidel deride, let not the Christian forget, and let not the Jew despair, the word is spoken, and it will be accomplished. C.

Ver. 26. The restoration of the Jews will take place in the midst of terrible intestine commotions, not necessarily in all Gentile nations, but in all that shall oppress them, as Egypt did, and oppose their return, either from motives of jealousy or self-interest. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What important truths are notified to men by the gospel of Christ! And great is the mercy that the Gentiles have so deep concern in it, and such abundant access to know and receive it. Enlarged gifts and grace are necessary to qualify men for the ministry. And exalted ought to be their ends, earnest their care, and assiduous their labour in winning souls to Christ. Glorious and certain shall be the reward of their faithful service, even though it should not have the wished success with men. But infinite is the mercy of God, in calling his own Son to his mediatorial office, and qualifying him for it;—in freely giving him for us as a Ransom, and to us as an effectual Saviour! By it JEHOVAH'S declarative glory, and the everlasting happiness of men, are wonderfully advanced. Alas! that ever he should be rejected, and his grace received in vain;—that his salvation, so extensive and suitable, should be so undervalued and refused!—In accordance with his love, God enlightens the mind, looses the bonds, supplies the wants, protects the persons, comforts the hearts, and makes plain the paths of the people. His work of redemption, his saving of men, demands our highest praise: and the assurances of his constant and everlasting kindness, and his promises to remove everything hurtful, give ground of encouragement to the most despondent. Thrice pleasant is it to behold the church extending her limits, and mightily increasing her members; and to discern how almighty power and grace protects and blesses it, notwithstanding all opposition!

CHAPTER L. Ver. 1. In reply to the objection that the casting off of the Israelites was a proof of want of faithfulness or caprice on the part of Jehovah, the true cause of it is here alleged. The Israelites were rejected and punished because of gross sin and open rebellion. God had dealt with them in mercy, he had spared them long, he had saved them by wondrous interpositions of supernatural power; but they had manifested the greatest ingratitude. P.—Where is the bill, &c. God's covenant with his church is often represented as a marriage-contract, see particularly Ho. 2. 2, 19, 20; and the progress of grace, together with the final glory of the church, as a marriage, Mat. 22. 1–14; Re. 21. 9.—Sold. The persons and liberties of their children were, according to the divine law, answerable for the debts of their fathers, 2 Ki. 4. 1; Mat. 18. 7. C.

Ver. 2. When I came. The Lord here speaks in continuation of the former verse—even the WORD that was with God, and was God. And he speaks of that time when, being 'made flesh, he dwelt among us;' when he 'came unto his own, and his own received him not,' Jn. 1. 11. C.

Ver. 4. The Lord God hath given me, &c. 'The LORD GOD' Adonai Jehovah', The FATHER, hath given me (his co-eternal WORD, his SON, 'God manifest in the flesh'), 'the tongue of the learned,' the 'learned' in the 'deep things of God,' his nature, his eternal purpose of grace, according to 'the counsel of his own will,' his work of redemption by substitution and sacrifice, and his victory over death by resurrection to glory. C.

Ver. 7. Set my face like a flint. As the flint endures the stroke of the steel, and yields its best service (fire) to him that smites it—even so did Messiah endure, unshrinking, the strokes of those that hated him, and yielded out tears of compassion and intercessory prayers in return for the ingratitude that cried 'Away with him!' the injustice that condemned him, and the cruelty that crucified him. C.

Ver. 10. That walketh in darkness. The only real darkness lies in ignorance of one point, 'What must I do to be saved?' Within the name of Jesus lies the only answer; from it emanates the only light, Jn. 1. 12; Ac. 16. 31. C.

Ver. 11. Walk in the light of your fire. This is neither an advice nor a permission, but a judicial sentence, and with this warning, instead of joy, 'ye shall lie down in sorrow.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—How common is it, but as absurd, for self-ruined, and even obstinate sinners, to lay the blame of their misery on God, who is infinitely able and ready to save!—Yea, infinite is the fitness of Jesus Christ to instruct, quicken, and comfort our souls. Great was the cheerfulness and boldness with which he endured the suffering, and performed the obedience, necessary in the work of our redemption. Wonderful was the pleasure of JEHOVAH in assisting, supporting, and honouring him in it: and infinite is his tenderness towards distressed and disconsolate souls, and his indignation against presumptuous sinners. Never let me pretend to teach others till God has taught myself. And embracing every opportunity of fellowship with him, let me always act in his service under the influence of a gracious good-will to it. Never let me shrink at doing or suffering for Jesus Christ, who has done and suffered so much for me. In every difficulty of work or warfare, let me firmly believe that he will

HOUSES OF DIVES AND LAZARUS—BESIDE THE ROAD CHRIST WALKED OVER TO HIS CRUCIFIXION. [Isaiah, 1:6.]—"I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting." The houses of Dives and Lazarus make up a station in the Via Dolorosa. The Via Dolorosa is the gloomy and sad way over which our Savior walked to Calvary. It begins with the Palace of Pilate, which is now the Governor's serai. Over one of the buildings on this way the Scala Santa or staircase leading to the judgment hall stood until removed by Constantine to the basilica of Saint John Lateran, in Rome. We have along this way the Church of the Flagelation, or the Church of the Crowning with Thorns, the arch of Ecce Homo, Convent of the Sisters of Zion, and at the bottom of the valley, the house of Dives. Pilgrims who visit Jerusalem during the Easter weeks make it a point to pass over and meditate along this sad way.

a word in season to him that is weary: he wakeneth[k] morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned.

5 ¶ The Lord GOD [l]hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back.

6 I[m] gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting.[1]

7 ¶ For the Lord GOD will [n]help me; therefore shall I not be confounded: therefore have I[p] set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed.

8 He[q] is near that justifieth me; who will contend with me? let us [r]stand together: [s]who is mine adversary?[2] let him come near to me.

9 Behold, the Lord GOD will help me; who is he that shall condemn me? lo, they all shall wax[t] old as a garment;[3] the moth shall eat them up.[4]

10 ¶ Who is among you that [u]feareth the LORD, that obeyeth the voice of his [v]servant, that [w]walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let[y] him trust in the name of the LORD, and stay upon his God.

11 Behold, all [x]ye that kindle a fire,[5] that compass yourselves about with sparks; [z]walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled. This[b] shall ye have of mine hand, ye shall lie down in sorrow.

CHAPTER LI.

1 An exhortation, after the pattern of Abraham, to trust in Christ, by reason of his comfortable promises, 4 of his righteous salvation, 7 and man's mortality. 9 Christ by his sanctified arm defendeth his from the fear of man. 17 The prophet bewaileth the afflictions of Jerusalem, 21 and promiseth deliverance.

HEARKEN to me, [a]ye that follow after righteousness, ye that [b]seek the LORD: look unto [c]the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged.[1]

2 Look[d] unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you: for I called [e]him alone, and blessed him, and increased him.

3 For[g] the LORD shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places, and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the LORD; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody.

4 ¶ Hearken unto me, [h]my people, and give ear unto me, O my nation: for [i]a law shall proceed from me, and I [j]will make my judgment to rest for a light of the people.

5 My[k] righteousness is near; my salvation is gone forth, and mine arms shall judge the people: [l]the isles shall wait upon me, and on mine arm shall they trust.

6 Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath; for [m]the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner:[2] but [o]my salvation shall be for ever, and my righteousness shall not be abolished.

7 ¶ Hearken unto me, ye that [p]know righteousness, the people [q]in whose heart is my law; [r]fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings.

8 For[s] the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wool: [t]but my righteousness shall be for ever, and my salvation from generation to generation.

9 ¶ Awake,[u] awake, put on strength, O [3]arm of the LORD; awake, as [v]in the ancient days, in the generations of old. Art thou not it that hath cut Rahab,[4] and [z]wounded the dragon?[5]

10 Art thou not it which [y]hath dried the sea, the waters of the great deep; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over?

11 Therefore[a] the redeemed of the LORD shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head: they shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away.[6]

12 ¶ I,[a] even I, am he that comforteth you: who art thou, that thou [b]shouldest be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made [c]as grass;

13 And [d]forgettest the LORD [e]thy [7]maker, do great things for me. In deeps, in nights of desertion, temptation, trouble, and grief, let me never fear, but only believe that, while I sit in darkness, the Lord will be a light unto me, and will bring me to the light. And let me stand in awe, lest confidence in my own wisdom and righteousness should entail upon me everlasting damnation.

CHAPTER LI. Ver. 1–3. The God who delivered Abraham from among his idolatrous friends, and, contrary to every natural appearance, made him and Sarah the parents of millions, can easily make you to flourish after your captivity in Canaan, and can easily form for himself a flourishing gospel church in the world. 4–8. The gospel, authorized by God, shall be published; and the ordinances of it, established and attended by his power, shall be effectual for converting men to Christ, and for revealing and bestowing upon them his everlasting righteousness and salvation. 9–16. The almighty power of God, which plagued the Egyptians and divided the Red Sea, shall bring the Jews from Babylon and their present dispersion with great joy, and deliver the church from heathenish or antichristian oppressors.—And for your comfort against the threatened fury of oppressors, the almighty Creator has given you his promises, and has protected you, that he may re-establish you as his church and people; and has raised up and qualified Jesus Christ in order to the erection and establishment of the gospel church. 17–23. Let not therefore the Jews, or the Christian church, despair under the terrible and destructive, and even stupifying judgments of God inflicted upon them: he will, in his proper time, deliver them, and execute judgment upon the Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, Romans, Antichristians, and Turks, who cruelly oppressed them.

Ver. 1. Righteousness is exactly equivalent to obedience; that is, perfect, not partial, obedience. This will appear evident from comparing 'the gift of righteousness,' Ro. 5. 17, with 'the obedience of one,' whereby 'many are made righteous,' Ro. 5. 19.—Note, It is of the utmost importance in theology to observe, that it is through this righteousness,' and this righteousness alone, that 'grace reigns unto the exhibition and bestowment of eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.' Grace ascends the throne of mercy only by the steps of righteousness.—Look unto the rock, &c. Israel, in his origin, is reminded that he was, for hardness, as a stone hewed out of a rock; and for filthiness, as clay digged out of a pit. C.

Ver. 5. My righteousness is near—even so near, that it is 'unto all, and upon all them that do believe,' Ro. 3. 22: yea, so near, as to dwell within the very heart of every believer, Ro. 10. 6–10. C.

Ver. 7. My law. This law in the heart is the promise of the new covenant established in Jesus as Mediator, and which is rendered effectual through free grace in justification, He. 6. 12.—Fear ye not the reproach, &c. How strange that free grace has ever been the subject of reproach and reviling! nay, of persecution unto death! Yet how glorious when persecuted believers can say, 'Being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it.' And without this 'mind that was in Jesus,' we are 'none of his,' Ro. 8. 9. C.

Ver. 11. This prediction indicates a time still future; for though there have been restorations with joy, as under Cyrus and Artaxerxes, there has yet been no 'everlasting joy.' See Re 21. 4. C.

Ver. 14. Die in the pit. Casting into a deep pit, with a little food, was an ancient mode of punishment; thus inflicting a slow and proportionally cruel death. It may here be also an allusion that[v] hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth; and [h]hast feared continually every day because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he were ready[8] to destroy? and where[i] is the fury of the oppressor?

14 The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed, and that he should not die [j]in the pit, nor that his bread should fail.

15 But I am the LORD thy God, that [k]divided the sea, whose waves roared: The LORD of hosts is his name.

16 And [l]I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that [m]I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people.

17 ¶ Awake,[n] awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the LORD the cup[p] of his fury: thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out.[9]

18 There[q] is none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth; neither is there any that taketh her by the hand of all the sons that she hath brought up.

19 These[r] two things[1] are come[2] unto thee; who shall be sorry for thee? desolation, and destruction,[3] and the famine, and the sword: by whom shall I comfort thee?

20 Thy[s] sons have fainted, they lie at the head of all the streets, as a wild bull in a net: they[t] are full of the fury of the LORD, the rebuke of thy God.

21 ¶ Therefore, hear now this, thou afflicted, and drunken, but not with wine:

22 Thus saith [u]thy Lord the LORD, and thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people, [v]Behold, I have taken out[t] of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink it again:[4]

23 But [x]I will put it into the hand of [y]them that afflict thee; which have said to thy soul, Bow[y] down, that we may go over: and thou hast laid thy body as the ground, and as the street, to them that went over.[5]

CHAPTER LII.

1 Christ persuadeth the church to believe his free redemption, 7 to receive the ministers thereof, 9 to joy in the power thereof, 11 and to free themselves from bondage. 13 Christ's kingdom shall be exalted.

AWAKE, awake;[a] put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the [b]holy city: for henceforth [c]there shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and the unclean.[1]

2 Shake[d] thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down,[2] O Jerusalem: loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion.

3 For thus saith the LORD, [e]Ye have sold yourselves for nought; and ye shall be redeemed without money.

4 For thus saith the Lord GOD, My people went down aforetime into [f]Egypt to sojourn there; and [g]the Assyrian oppressed them without cause.

5 Now, therefore, [h]what have I here, saith the LORD, that my people is taken away for nought? they that rule over them make them to howl, saith the LORD; and my name continually every day is [i]blasphemed.

6 Therefore my people [k]shall know my name: therefore they shall know in that day that I am he that doth speak; behold, it is I.

7 ¶ How[l] beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, [m]Thy God reigneth!

8 Thy [n]watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see [o]eye to eye, when the LORD shall [p]bring again Zion.[3]

9 ¶ Break[r] forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the LORD hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem.

10 The LORD hath [s]made bare his holy [t]arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.

11 ¶ Depart[t] ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence, touch no unclean thing; go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the LORD.

12 For [u]ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the LORD will go before you; and the God of Israel will be your rereward.[5]

13 ¶ Behold, [v]my servant shall deal[6] prudently,[7] he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high.

14 As many were astonished at thee; his

5 This chapter, with the first twelve verses of ch. lii. forms a connected passage of exquisite beauty. It is in part designed to be an introduction to the description of the person and work of the Messiah which follows. It is dramatic in form. The scene is laid in Babylon. The time is near the close of the captivity. The persons are the Lord and his people, who address each other alternately, God giving comfort and consolation, and the people pleading for deliverance.—J.

Ver. 16. I have put my words in thy mouth. 'I have made thee my oracle,' see Ro. 3. 2; 9. 4. The address from ver. 12 seems directed to Zion, comp. ver. 3, and Zion is the representative of God's redeemed people, see ver. 16.—Plant the heavens—the kingdom of heaven on earth, with the 'tree of life,' Re. 2. 7; with 'trees of righteousness,' Is. 61. 3.—C.

Ver. 18. One of God's greatest mercies is the raising up of men distinguished by knowledge, sagacity, prudence, courage, and piety, as guides to a church or a nation. Such was Moses, such was David in Israel, such was Paul in the primitive church, such many of the glorious band of reformers—mighty minds, receiving their character from God's Spirit, and enstamping that character upon their own and after ages.—C.

REFLECTIONS—The perfections, relations, gracious promises, and providences of God are an infinite source of consolation to the saints. With ease he accomplishes the most remarkable events in mercy. And yet it is hard to make those who are in anguish of spirit to hearken to his words of comfort, or to review what he has done for them, either for their humiliation or encouragement, or for their excitement to holiness. How strangely God connects his mercies and his judgments! But there is little reason to regard either the reproaches or terrors of wicked men, when JEHOVAH and his blessings are ours, and near to us. And quickly will our waiting, weeping, and working for him, be graciously rewarded with unutterable and everlasting joys. How easily can JEHOVAH renew and restore souls, and form and re-establish churches, by the word of his power! But terrible are even his paternal chastisements. And unfaithfulness to him is often punished by the unfaithfulness of our relations to us. By sinfully quarrelling with his providences we but entangle and torment ourselves. None can comfort when God wounds us. But though he cause grief, he will have compassion. Whom he loveth he will love unto the end. And if judgments begin at the house of God, where shall the ungodly sinner and persecutor appear?

CHAPTER LII. Ver. 1–6. Rejoice, ye Jews, in hopes of being graciously delivered from your heathen oppressors and corrupters without any ransom, even as you have already been from the Egyptians and the Assyrians. And as I get nothing by your misery but blasphemous reproaches, as if I could not, or cared not, visage[z] was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men;

15 So[y] shall he sprinkle many nations: the kings shall [a]shut their mouths at him:[8] for that which[a] had not been told them shall they see, and that which they had not heard shall they consider.

CHAPTER LIII.

1 The prophet, complaining of incredulity, excuseth the scandal of the cross, 4 by the benefit of his passion, 10 and the good success thereof.

WHO hath[a] believed our [1]report?[2] and to whom is [b]the arm of the LORD revealed?[3]

2 For he [c]shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him.

3 He[d] is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and [4]we hid as it were our faces from him;[5] he was despised, and we esteemed him not.

4 ¶ Surely [e]he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet [g]we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

5 But he was [h]wounded[6] for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace[7] was upon him; and with his stripes[8] we are healed.

6 All[i] we, like sheep, have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and [j]the to deliver you, I will make you quickly to experience the fulfilment of all my promises. And in like manner rejoice, thou gospel church, in hopes of thy extension, purification, and deliverance from every enemy, heathen, Popish, or Mahometan. 7–12. Great joy and harmony, hearty renunciation of idols, and a composed return of the Jews to their own land, shall be produced by the proclamation of Cyrus, and the Lord's powerful appearance for their relief; and much more by the publication of the gospel by Jesus Christ and his apostles, and by the effectual redemption of multitudes from heathenism, Popery, Satan, and their own lusts, by an ascended Redeemer. 13–15. The infinitely well-qualified Messiah, in consequence of his inexpressible ignominy, debasement, and suffering, shall be highly exalted as Head over all things to his church; and shall, by his Word, his Spirit, and blood, purify multitudes of sinful Gentiles from their iniquities; and even kings, and other great ones, shall with reverence hear his gospel truths, which had been hid from former generations, and shall submit to his laws.

Ver. 1. Put on thy strength. The only strength of the church is Christ, whom spiritually she puts on, as armour for defence and garments for beauty, Ro. 13. 12, 14; Ga. 3. 27; Ep. 4. 24; 6. 11. C.

Ver. 3, 4. The passage is elliptical. Its general object is to prove that God, as he had delivered his people in days past, when in imminent danger, so he would deliver them now. Barnes has given the following paraphrase, which brings out the full sense:—'Ye have been sold for nought, and ye shall be ransomed without price. As a proof that God can do it, and will do it, remember, says he, that my people went down formerly to Egypt, and designed to sojourn there for a little time, and that they were there reduced to slavery, and oppressed by Pharaoh, but that I ransomed them without money, and brought them forth by my own power. Remember also how often the Assyrian has oppressed them without cause. Remember the history of Sennacherib, and Tiglath-pileser, and Shalmaneser, and how they have laid the land waste; and remember, also, how the Lord has delivered it from these oppressors. With the same certainty and the same ease he can deliver the people from the captivity of Babylon.' P.

Ver. 5. My name . . . is blasphemed. Either by the heathen exulting in their victory over Israel, as Sennacherib did in his pride, and saying, 'Where is your God?' 2 Ki. 18. 22, 30, 33–35; 19. 10; or by the irreligious conduct of the Jews, who, while professing zeal for the law, did, through breaking of that law, bring dishonour and blasphemy upon the holy name of their God, Ro. 2. 23, 24. C.

Ver. 7. This is the exclamation of the 'watchmen,' ver. 8, announcing the Prince of Peace, whose 'feet' alone they describe; those feet 'like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace,' Re. 1. 15, emblem of that furnace of affliction, ch. 48. 10, in which his church is to be melted, and by his Spirit purified from her dross. C.

Ver. 11. Go ye out from thence. Whence? From 'Egypt,' from 'the dust,' ver. 2, 4, from 'the nations, the ends of the earth,' ver. 10, into which they had been scattered. A similar exhortation is extended by St. Paul to the Gentile church, to come out from the idolatry of the world, 2 Co. 6. 17, and by St. John to come out from the mystical Babylon, Re. 18. 4—all progressive parts of the same glorious march of prophecy.—Be ye clean, &c. These are the priests, the Levites being interdicted from 'coming nigh the 'vessels' of the sanctuary,' Nu. 18. 3. But now all believers being 'kings and priests,' Re. 1. 6, are here exhorted to cleanse the vessels in which they bear the Lord's treasure, 2 Co. 4. 7. C.

Ver. 12. The God of Israel—not of Israel the people, but of Israel 'the prevailer with God,' prevailer by sacrifice and intercession—'the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.' See ch. 49. 3; Ro. 15. 16; Ep. 1. 17. C.

Ver. 13. These three verses (13–15) are closely connected with ch. lii. They constitute a portion of the same grand prophecy. The sense is greatly marred by their being placed at the close of this chapter, and separated from that which follows. From the deliverance of Israel from the Babylonish captivity, the prophet passes to a greater and far more glorious deliverance—that of his people from the captivity of sin by the atoning work of the Messiah. P.

Ver. 14. There is a want of grammatical correspondence, and consequent obscurity, in the translation of this verse. 'As' requires either another 'as' to follow, or a 'so' to correspond, expressed or understood. May not this be rectified by placing the 'so' where it stands in the Hebrew, at the commencement of the second clause? And is not the meaning as follows:—'As many were astonished at thee,' O Jerusalem, ver. 9, when thy visage was marred in the dust, and thy form in chains, ver. 2, 'so his (my servant's, visage was marred more than any man,' &c. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's grace and our duty, his glory and our salvation, are marvellously connected. Both saints and sinners ought to bestir themselves when he offers deliverance. And thrice happy is the church when she is duly separated from the world, which lieth in wickedness. And yet how averse are many to partake of this blessedness: how averse to accept of an offered deliverance from corrupt lusts, or from corrupt societies and synagogues of Satan! But blessed are the effects of Jesus' gospel and government in the world, powerful the influence of his offices and states, and gracious the manifestation of his person, sufferings, and glory for the conviction of the most hardened sinners.

CHAPTER LIII. Ver. 1-3. How few truly believe the gospel record concerning Jesus Christ! How few experience his gracious power, or behold his heart-captivating glory;—who, in his humbled estate, under the special care and protection of JEHOVAH, sprung from the humble family of David in the likeness of sinful flesh without any external glory or pomp—and was all along oppressed with miseries and griefs, and quiet contemned and hated by men, especially the Jewish rulers and people! 4–9. But notwithstanding our reckoning him persecuted by God as a notorious criminal, he as our Saviour, by whom it had pleased the Lord to pardon our iniquities, suffered, in the most patient manner, because of our manifold sins, that he might expiate them, and secure our eternal salvation:—to manifest which JEHOVAH not only allotted him honourable interment, but quickly released him from his grave, and made him the mediatorial Parent of all who believed in his blessed name, in that very age so remarkable for wickedness. 10-12. In consequence of bearing our iniquities, and the sufferings thereof, which our Father, in love to us, inflicted upon him in his soul and body, that he might thereby make full atonement for our sin, he is rewarded with everlasting life and honour; and has, to his infinite satisfaction, a living church of Jewish and Gentile converts, whom he instructs, and through his own sacrifice, justifies and saves. And while he is enthroned far above all principalities and powers, he erects, extends, and establishes his spiritual kingdom on earth, and his kingdom of glory in heaven.

Ver. 1. The main object of the sacred writer in this whole prophecy is to set forth the glorious person and work of the Messiah. To do this effectually, the mode in which his glory was exhibited and his work accomplished during his incarnation must be described. Hence it is necessary to exhibit the depth of his humiliation. One part of his humiliation consisted in his being despised and rejected of men. 'He came unto his own, and his own received him not.' The reality of his advent and of his mission was denied by the Jews. It is this sad fact which the prophet predicted in the opening words of this chapter. P.—Our report. The report of the 'sprinkled nations,' both Jewish and Gentile believers, ch. 42. 15. who declared what they 'both had seen and heard of the WORD OF LIFE,' 1 Jn. 1. 1-3. C.

Ver. 2. Before him—before the Lord. Plant—a scion or sucker, a descendant of a reduced family. When we shall see him—both Jews and Gentiles, nations and kings, ch. 42. 15. C.

Ver. 3. We hid as it were our faces. 'As one that hideth his face from us': Lovoth, in shame and grief, as mourners were wont to do. See 2 Sa. 15. 30; Eze. 24. 17. C.

Ver. 8. 'From imprisonment and judgment was he taken away, and who shall bear witness to his genealogy,' whereby, as 'son of David,' he is heir of the throne at Jerusalem: as 'Son of God,' heir of all things. 'Therefore (because there was none to witness the truth or judge righteously) he was cut off,' &c. C.—This is a passage of very great difficulty. The explanations given of it by commentators are widely different. Perhaps the following may be its true meaning:—He, the Messiah, was quickly taken away to execution after a short confinement and a formal, though unjust, official trial. Yet who, among those by whom he was there surrounded (his generation), considered that he was cut off from the land of the living—that he was smitten for the transgression of my people? The idea is, that neither the injustice of his sentence, nor the great object of his sufferings and his death, excited the least thought among those who saw him. With reckless indifference he was seized, beaten, tried, condemned, and crucified. P.

Ver. 10. When thou shalt make, &c. 'When thou (O Jerusalem, ch. 52. 14, that killest the prophets, Mat. 23. 37. shalt make his soul through false witness and false judgment, ver. 8, an offering for sin.'—He (my risen servant) shall see his seed—his spiritual children. C.

Ver. 11. By his knowledge, &c. 'By the knowledge of him (or himself, i.e. the Messiah) shall he, my righteous Servant (the Messiah), justify many.' The idiom is Hebrew, and is very expressive. The term 'knowledge' denotes a full acquaintance with Christ and his saving plan. It is the same idea which the apostle Paul brings out in Phi. 3. 10. 'That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death.' Christ himself says, 'This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent,' Jn. 17. 3. P.

Ver. 12. Therefore will I divide, &c. 'Therefore will I give him the multitudes for his portion, and the mighty for his spoil'—his spiritual trophies of victory and reward: multitudes of every people converted and brought to glory: Satan and the grave vanquished and spoiled. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! that Jesus Christ and his gospel should be so little known to the hearers of it! But nothing less than almighty grace can make us either know or believe in him. God exactly verified his predictions and promises in the whole sacrifice and exaltation of our Redeemer. Though carnal apprehensions of him lead men to contemn, reject, and blaspheme him, infinite was his love in undertaking, obeying, and suffering the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God! How great was our Father's love in sending him to us, and placing our burdens on his infinitely well beloved, his only begotten Son! And sweet, full, firm, and lasting is that forgiveness, that redemption, which comes through the blood, the intercession of God in our nature, and from JEHOVAH'S infinite and unchangeable love. In the ratified promises of the new kingdom, an extensive and firm foundation is laid for that faith by which we do and must receive Jesus Christ, as made of God to us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. And the rewards of our obedience of faith are all gloriously wrapped up in the blessed reward of Jesus Christ!

CHAPTER LIV. Ver. 1–5. Rejoice greatly, ye Gentiles, who have hitherto produced few converts to Christ; for now greater multitudes of you shall be born again than ever were in the Jewish church: greater multitudes shall be converted to Christ after his departure to heaven, than while his church enjoyed his bodily presence. The gospel church, that tabernacle of God, shall be greatly enlarged by the conversion of Gentile nations on every side. No more shall they be reproached, as rejected by and strangers to God: for now shall the divine Jesus and his Father call to himself a peculiar people in all places of the world. 6–10. And however destitute and wretched in themselves, despicable in their first appearances, or distressed and per-

WHEAT MARKET, NAZARETH—WHERE CHRIST GREW UP. [Isaiah, liii.]—"Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground." The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah is by all authorities conceded to refer to the sufferings of Christ. We give a view of the wheat market in Nazareth, the town in which Christ grew up. The scene such as we witness above has been one common doubtless in all ages of the town's history. Nazareth is upon a hill overlooking the valley of Esdraelon, which has been always noted for its fertility and its abundant harvests of wheat. Every place, and scene, and street, and hill, and rock in the town where the Savior spent thirty years of his life, is interesting. Large and rich life only can render a town significant and influential.

LORD hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.[g]

7 He[l] was oppressed, and he was afflicted;[2] yet [k]he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb[3] to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth.

8 He was [l]taken from prison and from judgment; and[4] who shall declare his generation?[5] for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken.[6]

9 And he[7] made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich [8]in his death;[9] because he had done no violence,[1] neither was any [m]deceit in his mouth.

10 ¶ Yet[o] it pleased the LORD to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin,[2] he[p] shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the [q]pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in his hand.

11 He [r]shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: [s]by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities.

12 Therefore[t] will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death; and he [u]was numbered with the transgressors; and he bare the sin of many, and [v]made intercession for the transgressors.

CHAPTER LIV.

1 The prophet, for the comfort of the Gentiles, prophesieth the amplitude of their church, 4 their safety, 6 their certain deliverance out of affliction, 11 their fair edification, 15 and their sure preservation.

SING,[a] O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the LORD.

2 Enlarge[b] the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes;

3 For [c]thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited.

4 ¶ Fear[d] not; for thou shalt not be ashamed: neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame: for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth, and shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more.

5 For [e]thy Maker is thine husband; the LORD of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel; [f]the God of the whole earth shall he be called.

6 For [h]the LORD hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God.

7 For [i]a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I [j]gather thee.

8 In [k]a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but [l]with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the LORD thy Redeemer.

9 For [m]this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.[1]

10 For [n]the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, [p]neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the LORD that [q]hath mercy on thee.

11 ¶ O[r] thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, [s]I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.

12 And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.

13 And [t]all thy children shall be taught of the LORD; and [u]great shall be the peace of thy children.

14 In[v] righteousness shalt thou be established: thou shalt be far from oppression; for [z]thou shalt not fear: and from terror; for it shall not come near thee.

15 ¶ Behold,[y] they shall surely gather together, but not by me:[2] whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall for thy sake.[3]

16 Behold,[z] I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work;[4] and I have created the waster to destroy.

17 No[a] weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and [b]every tongue that shall rise

This is the heritage of the servants of the LORD; and [c]their righteousness is of me, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER LV.

1 The prophet, with the promises of Christ, exhorteth to faith, 6 and to repentance. 8 The happy state of them that believe.

HO, every[a] one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money, and [b]without price.

2 Wherefore[c] do ye spend[1] money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? hearken [d]diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness.

3 Incline your ear, and come unto me: [e]hear, and your soul shall live; and [f]I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David.

4 Behold, [h]I have given him for [i]a witness to the people, [j]a leader and commander to the people.

5 Behold, thou [k]shalt call a nation that [l]thou knowest not; and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee, [m]because of the LORD thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee.

6 ¶ Seek[o] ye the LORD while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near.

7 Let[p] the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man[2] his thoughts: and let him return unto the LORD, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.[3]

8 ¶ For[q] my thoughts are not your thoughts, [4] neither are your ways my ways, saith the LORD.

9 For[r] as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.

10 For as the rain cometh down, and the snow, from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater;

11 So[s] shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

12 For [t]ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills | A.M. cir. 3302. B.C. cir. 702.
shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.

13 Instead[u] of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree: and it shall be to the LORD [v]for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.

CHAPTER LVI.

1 The prophet exhorteth to sanctification. 3 God promiseth it shall be general without respect of persons. 9 He inveigheth against blind watchmen.

THUS saith the LORD, [a]Keep ye [1]judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed.

2 Blessed[b] is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that [c]keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil.

3 ¶ Neither [d]let the son of the stranger, that hath joined himself to the LORD, speak, saying, The LORD hath utterly separated me from his people: neither [e]let the eunuch say, Behold, I am a dry tree.

4 For thus saith the LORD unto the eunuchs [g]that keep my sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant;

5 Even[h] unto them will I give in [i]mine house, and within my walls, a place[2] and [j]a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off.

6 Also the sons of the stranger, that [k]join themselves to the LORD, to serve him, and [l]to love the name of the LORD, to be his servants, [m]every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and [n]taketh hold of my covenant;

7 Even them will I [p]bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer; their burnt-offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar: for [q]mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people.

8 The Lord GOD, which [r]gathereth the outcasts of Israel, saith, [s]Yet will I gather others to him, beside those that are gathered[3] unto him.

9 ¶ All[t] ye beasts of the field, come to devour: yea, all ye beasts in the forest.

10 His watchmen are [u]blind; they are all ignorant, they are all [v]dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping,[4] lying down, loving to slumber.

11 Yea, [w]they are greedy[5] dogs which can never have enough,[6] and they are [x]shepherds

Ver. 17. This promise of deliverance, instruction, and protection, is the heritage of the Lord's servants, Ps. 119. 111. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Wretched was the state of religion in the world for many ages before Christianity was established. And great power in God, and care in men, are necessary for spreading the gospel and enlarging the church. But surely it is much to be lamented that some who have most of the means have least of the power of grace. It is great matter of joy to the long-rejected Gentiles that Jesus, our Maker, is now our God and our Husband, able to save us to the uttermost. May we ever walk as his bride, loving, cleaving to, and trusting in him! He condescends to our wretchedness in dealing with our souls. And wisely he mingles his favours and frowns, that we may neither be proud under the one nor despair under the other. But there is great matter of joy, and sure ground of faith, in the absolute unchangeableness of his love and promise of peace. Graciously he remarks his people's distresses, and balances them with his mercies unnumbered. His instructions graciously render us pious and peaceful. And safe are those, amidst millions of enemies, who trust implicity with all their hearts in Christ, and JEHOVAH, the manager of the world, in him their protector, and the gracious Lord of all mankind.

CHAPTER LV. Ver. 1-5. Ye sinners of mankind, who are not, but wish to be, happy, come ye, however guilty or polluted, to the ordinances of the gospel, and by faith freely receive all the blessings and privileges graciously offered in it. Why do ye lay out your gifts, parts, and opportunities in pursuit of worldly enjoyments, superstitious devotions, or self-righteousness, which can afford you no solid satisfaction? Carefully listen to and believe my gospel offers and invitations; and let your souls with pleasure receive and live on the substantial, satisfying, strengthening, and sanctifying blessings therein conferred. By faith embrace these offers, as the means of your spiritual and eternal life; and I will establish with you the everlasting promise of grace, which contains bequeaths, and insures all the free blessings promised to David; but secured by and lodged in Jesus Christ for the salvation of miserable sinners! Behold with faith, love and admira-

INTERIOR OF THE HOUSE OF ANANIAS—WHERE ANANIAS LIVED, WHO WAS DIRECTED TO INQUIRE FOR SAUL IN THE HOUSE OF JUDAS. [ISAIAH, lv: 5.]—"Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not; and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee, because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee." Near the east gate of Damascus there stands the traditional house of Ananias. Ananias was the disciple of Christ in Damascus who was directed to inquire for Saul in the house of Judas at the time of the apostle's conversion. This is said to stand upon the site of the house in which Ananias lived. It is fitted up now for a kind of church. We use this picture to illustrate the fifty-fifth chapter of Isaiah, because St. Paul was the great apostle to the Gentiles, through whose ministry outlying and foreign nations were to be brought to the Holy One of Israel.

CHAPTER LVII.

1 The blessed death of the righteous. 3 God reproveth the Jews for their whorish idolatry. 13 He giveth evangelical promises to the penitent.

THE righteous[a] perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and [b]merciful men[1] are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come.[2]

2 He shall [c]enter into peace:[3] they shall rest in their beds, each one walking in his uprightness.[4]

3 ¶ But draw near hither, [d]ye sons of the sorceress, the seed of the adulterer and the whore.

4 Against[e] whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom [f]make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? are ye not [h]children of transgression, a seed of falsehood;

5 Inflaming yourselves with [i]idols [k]under every green tree, [l]slaying the children in the valleys under the clifts of the rocks?

6 Among the smooth stones[6] of the stream is thy portion; they, they are thy lot; even to them hast thou poured a drink-offering, thou hast offered a meat-offering. [k]Should I receive comfort in these?

7 Upon[l] a lofty and high mountain[7] hast thou set thy bed: even thither wentest thou up to offer sacrifice.[8]

8 Behind[n] the doors also and the posts hast thou set up thy remembrance; for [o]thou hast discovered thyself to another than me, and art gone up; [p]thou hast enlarged thy bed, and made thee a covenant with them;[9] thou lovedst their bed where thou sawest it.[1]

9 And[q] thou[2] wentest to the king[3] with ointment, and didst increase thy perfumes, and didst send thy messengers far off, and didst debase thyself even unto hell.[4]

10 Thou [r]art wearied in the greatness of thy way; yet saidst thou not, [s]There is no hope: thou hast found the life[5] of thine hand; [t]therefore thou wast not grieved.

11 And[u] of whom hast thou been afraid or feared, that thou [v]hast lied, and hast not remembered me, nor laid it to thy heart? [w]have not I held my peace even of old, and thou fearest me not?

12 I[y] will declare thy righteousness, and thy works; for they shall not profit thee.

tion. I have freely granted him to publish and attest every gospel truth to ignorant and unbelieving men, to instruct and guide them to salvation, to rule and defend them, and to restrain or overcome the wicked. And at his invitation, through the influence of the Holy Ghost, and in order to glorify him, shall multitudes of Gentiles, who had neither been acknowledged by him nor known him, receive and submit to him. 6–13. Importunately seek after and heartily embrace him as your Saviour and portion, while he earnestly offers himself to you in his Word and ordinances. Let even the greatest sinner detest and turn from his self-contrived methods of relief, as well as from his courses and purposes of wickedness, in the sure faith of the unbounded mercy and pardoning grace of God: for in riches of mercy his purposes, words, and works infinitely transcend everything similar and every conception among men; and his promises cannot be defeated, but always issue in blessings to mankind.—And as with great joy the Jews shall be divinely conducted from Babylon and their present dispersion to their own country, and shall plant, multiply, and flourish in the same, so shall multitudes, to the public and lasting honour of God, be delivered from their spiritual bondage of heathenism, Popery, Satan, or their lusts; and while themselves are converted from mischievous sinners into agreeable and useful saints, they shall be delivered from whatever is hurtful and offensive.

Ver. 1. 'Ho, every one that thirsteth' for righteousness, Mat. 5. 6, 'and he that hath no money' nothing, though he had gained the whole world, to give in exchange for his soul, Mat. 16. 26, 'come ye to the waters.' C.

Ver. 3. David signifies Beloved, and is a prophetical 'Je. 30. 9; Ho. 3. 5, a heavenly Mat. 3. 17, and apostolic name of Christ, Ep. 1. 6. All mercies in him are made sure by 'two immutable things'—God's promise of truth and his oath of confirmation, He. 6. 17, 18. C.

Ver. 5. By following out the address in ch. 54. 1–17, it will be seen that the once barren but now prolific church is the party addressed in this promise. C.

Ver. 9. Higher. God's thoughts are higher (1) in their subject—Christ and his church, Ep. 1. 3–6. (2) In their object—salvation, Ep. 1. 10–14. (3) In their result—success, ver. 11. C.

Ver. 12. Mountains and hills—empires and kingdoms.—Trees of the field—believers everywhere throughout the world, Is. 61. 3. C.

Ver. 13. 'Thorns and briers' are the emblems of the primal curse, Ge. 3. 8; He. 6. 8.—'The fir-tree' is the mark of peaceful dwellings, Ca. 1. 17, successful commerce, Eze. 27. 5, and joyous music, 2 Sa. 6. 5.—'The myrtle,' of that co-extension of natural and spiritual husbandry, improving alike the natural and the moral wilderness, Is. 41. 19. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Think now, my soul, how all the blessings of salvation are framed to answer our need! —The most trifling cumberers of God's vineyard, nay, the most notorious sinners, are expressly, are earnestly invited by him to receive the same without any conditions. Infinite is his grace who, at infinite expense, provides these favours for his enemies, his betrayers, and murderers, and thus offers them to his despisers. But infinitely criminal must be that unbelief which treads on such grace, and doubts the fulfilment of his infallible promises. And base is the heart, and cruel the preacher, who gives JEHOVAH the lie; and pretends that self-formed qualifications of sensibility and sincerity must render us welcome to his market of GRACE.

CHAPTER LVI. Ver. 1. The general scope of this prophecy, and its close connection with ch. liv. lv., should be kept in view. In ch. liv. the blessed results of the Messiah's work and triumph are stated:—His church or kingdom would be established on an everlasting foundation. In ch. lv. it is declared that the doors of the church would no longer be shut against the Gentiles: but that they as well as God's ancient people would have access. In this chapter the same glorious truth is set forth more clearly and fully. Every individual of the human family, wherever born, from whatever nation or tribe sprung, would be admitted on equal terms to all the blessings and privileges of Christ's people. P.—Keep ye judgment, &c. The prophet being now about to close a great series of predictions, proceeds to certain practical observances, just as, in later days, Paul was accustomed to explain and establish certain doctrines, and then to enforce moral duties; both acting upon the principle of laying the foundation, and then building the temple. C.

Ver. 2. Keepeth the Sabbath. Sabbath observance is chosen as the chief outward test of inward holiness, (1) because it is a direct remembrance and imitation of God; (2) because it is a visible testimony to God's authority; (3) because, as an act of self-denial, it affords a continued specimen of deep Christian principle; and (4) because it is a natural type of the 'rest that remaineth for the people of God.' C.

Ver. 3. Son of the stranger. Not merely a Gentile as distinct from a Jew, but one whose parents had been strangers to God, whose early education had been neglected, and whose youth had consequently been spent in folly. C.

Ver. 4. The eunuchs, &c. Many Christians are much troubled because they think they have effected no good, because they have no spiritual posterity whom they can call 'their little children,' Ga. 4. 19. To such desponding believers this encouragement is addressed, to teach them that they are not to be judged by what they have done; but by what, through grace, they have endeavoured to accomplish, Ro. 9. 16. C.

Ver. 7. Them will I bring to my holy mountain. From Da. 2. 35 it is evident that the 'mountain of the Lord' is the emblem of the church exalted by Messiah; that the 'house of prayer' has ceased to be confined to Jerusalem, and is found wherever there is a worshipper 'in spirit and in truth,' Jn. 4. 20–24; that the 'offerings and sacrifices' are prayer, praise, and beneficence, 1 Pe. 2. 5; He. 13. 15, 16; and that 'the altar' is the spiritual and living altar and sacrifice, Christ, He. 13. 10. C.

Ver. 9. The foregoing verse has closed a glorious series of prophecies, some past, some present, but chiefly future. Here commences a series of accusations, rebukes, and exhortations, happily closing in deep national and ecclesiastical confession and repentance, ch. 59. 9–15. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's kindness powerfully binds and constrains to holiness in all manner of conversation. And if I share of his grace, it becomes me to hate evil; to love him with all my heart, soul, mind, and strength; carefully to observe all his institutions, and do to my neighbours of mankind as I would they should do to me. Always should I rest contented with my earthly lot, as now no natural defects can debar me from the congregation of the Lord: and the fulness of Jesus' promise can sufficiently balance my want of children, or anything beside. Yea, let me greatly rejoice that Gentile sinners are now not only invited, but divinely drawn, to God's holy mountain and the gospel church, with its divine and life-giving ordinances. But fearful is the presage of impending ruin when ministers and magistrates become monsters and patterns of wickedness.

CHAPTER LVII. Ver. 3–12. Answer ye my charge, ye who, descended from wicked parents, have abandoned yourselves to witchcraft, adultery, and idolatry. Why do ye contemptuously deride me and my prophets, abandon yourselves to vices, and yet hypocritically pretend to serve me? Ye are violent and eager upon your idolatrous worship, and sacrifice your children to Molech. Ye can hardly see a smooth stone in a river but you fancy it to be a god, and offer oblations to it. Can this fail to provoke me? Ye build temples and altars on every high place, and toil yourselves to go up and sacrifice there. Every corner of your houses is stored with memorials of your idols; and by coveting whatever you have seen among heathens, ye have exceedingly multiplied them. By courting alliances with heathen princes, even on the basest terms, ye have partook with them in their idolatrous worship. Without ever being convinced by your disappointments, ye have wearied yourselves in foreign embassies and wickedness; and, obtaining present ease, have never repented of your conduct. Without any proper ground of fear, ye have thus acted treacherously towards me, never regarding my relation to you, or the great things which I have done for you; and my patience exercised, and forbearing, has but tempted you to disregard me the more. Therefore, by my fearful judgments executed upon you, will I manifest how criminal and ruinous your conduct has been. Nor shall your idols or heathen allies be able

13 ¶ When[x] thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee: but [a]the wind shall carry them all away; vanity shall take them: but [b]he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land, and shall inherit my holy mountain;

14 And shall say,[6] Cast[c] ye up, cast ye up, prepare the way, take up the stumbling-block out of the way of my people.

15 For thus saith [d]the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell[e] in the high and holy place, with him also that is [f]of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones.

16 For [h]I will not contend for ever, neither will I be always wroth: for the spirit should fail before me, and the souls [i]which I have made.

17 For[j] the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him: I hid me, and was wroth, and he went on frowardly[7] in the way of his heart.

18 I[k] have seen his ways,[8] and will heal him: I will lead him also, and [l]restore comforts unto him and to his mourners.[9]

19 I create [m]the fruit of the [1]lips; [o]peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the LORD; and I will heal him.

20 But the wicked are [p]like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt.

21 There[q] is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.

CHAPTER LVIII.

1 The prophet, being sent to reprove hypocrisy, 3 showeth the difference between a counterfeit fast and a true. 8 He declareth what promises are due unto godliness, 13 and to the keeping of the sabbath.

CRY [a]aloud,[1] spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins.

2 Yet [b]they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinance of their God: they ask of me the ordinances of justice, they take delight in approaching to God.

3 Wherefore[c] have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? wherefore have we [d]afflicted[2] our soul, and thou takest no knowledge? Behold, in the day of your fast [e]ye find pleasure, and exact all your [3]labours.[4]

4 Behold, [g]ye fast for strife and debate,[5] and to smite with the fist of wickedness: ye shall not fast as ye do this day,[6] to[7] make your voice to be heard on high.

5 Is it [h]such a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul?[8] is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the LORD?

6 Is not this the fast that I have chosen? [i]to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens,[9] and to let the oppressed[1] go free, and that ye break every yoke?

7 Is it not [j]to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast [2]out [k]to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that [l]thou cover him; and that thou [n]hide not thyself from thine own flesh?

8 ¶ Then[3] shall [o]thy light break forth[4] as the morning, and [r]thine health shall spring forth speedily; and thy [q]righteousness shall go before thee: [t]the glory of the LORD shall be thy rereward.[5]

9 Then[s] shalt thou call, and the LORD shall answer; thou shalt cry, and he shall say, Here I am. If thou take away from the midst of thee [t]the yoke, [u]the putting forth of the finger, and speaking vanity:

10 And if [v]thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then [x]shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noon-day:

to protect either themselves or you. 13–21. But such as believe my word, and trust in my perfections, shall return from their captivity to Canaan by my providence; and Cyrus, by his proclamation, shall remove every hindrance in their way. For however high and lofty I am as the Holy One who inhabits eternity, yet am I infinitely condescending towards persons destitute, distressed, and broken in spirit; nor will I continue my judgments till such be utterly ruined or discouraged.—For their injustice, and other abominations, I have indeed punished them by the Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, Romans, and others; and yet, under their affliction, they have become worse and worse. I will therefore, by an extension of sovereign grace, forgive and reform them, lead them back to their duty and their country, and restore comforts to them; and by my prophets publish peace and prosperity to them, that their lips may be filled with my praise. But by their own lusts, guilt, and fears, and the judgments which I inflict, the wicked shall always remain in a restless, shameful, and loathsome condition.

Ver. 1. The righteous perisheth, &c. Christ the righteous is crucified; and, so far from 'laying it to heart' as national guilt, the cry is, 'His blood be upon us and our children.'—Merciful men. Those who have desired and obtained mercy, the disciples and martyrs of our Lord, Mat. 5. 7; 1 Ti. 1. 13. C.

Ver. 2. 'He Christ' shall enter into his peace,' 'walking in his uprightness:' while they, the disciples and martyrs, shall rest in their graves, their beds, till the resurrection, Ac. 7. 60. C.

Ver. 3. These titles are first literal; for idolatry and lewdness are synonymous. They are then emblematic of the false doctrines, heresies, worldliness, and image-worship by which Christianity, alas! still continues to be disfigured. C.

Ver. 5. Reference is here made primarily to the gross idolatry and cruel rites practised during the reign of Manasseh. The idol Molech was set up in the bottom of the valley of Kidron, at the mouth of Hinnom, just beneath the overhanging cliffs of Olivet. Molech was a brazen statue, having a place within it for a furnace. It was heated, and the children were then placed in the open arms of the monster, and roasted alive. Of Manasseh it is said, 'He caused his children to pass through the fire in the valley of the son of Hinnom," 2 Ch. 33. 6. P.

Ver. 6. A smooth oblong stone is culled from the bed of a river, placed on end under a tree, and water is carried and poured upon it; such idolatry is still practised by the women of Hindostan. C.

Ver. 8. Behind the doors, &c. In secret also, 'behind the doors and the posts,' hast thou 'set up thy remembrance'—dedicated a memorial of thy trust in idols, and thereby incurred the terrible curse of the law, De. 27. 15. C.

Ver. 10. Though wearied with efforts of labour and expenditure, yet no experience of failure has dissipated false hope: thou hast found a life neither by my Word nor by my Spirit, but of thine own hand, thine own power, therefore thou are not grieved either for thy failures or idolatries. C.——The general sense of this verse is:—No amount of labour in the service of your idols has sufficed to weary or discourage you. Still do you go on in idolatry. You have found in these evil practices sufficient pleasure and profit to keep you from despondency. P.

Ver. 12. I will declare thy righteousness to be but filthy rags, Is. 64. 6; 'thy works,' that they are not wrought in God, Jn. 3. 21. C.

Ver. 14. Stumbling-block—the offence of the cross. Teach them to look upon Him whom they have pierced, and mourn; teach them to glory in the cross at which they stumbled. C.

Ver. 17. His covetousness. Israel's, ch. 56. 8. Covetousness was one of the ingredients of the first sin. It is idolatry, and therefore specially hateful in the sight of God. But it is not confined to riches, but extends to 'everything that is our neighbour's.' C.

Ver. 19. This is the fruit of the tree of life, transmitted in the words of 'peace to him that is far off,' the Gentile: and 'to him that is near,' the Jew. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God kindly hides his people in heaven from his terrible judgments on earth. And great is the folly and ignorance of men, that such alarming warnings are often so little regarded. Dreadful indeed must be our inward corruption, which can thus push us to the utmost wickedness in every form, notwithstanding all the laws, mercies, and judgments which God lays in our way to hinder it. And when God himself is thus contemned and insulted, his faithful ministers must not hope to escape. But he will not always suffer our sins to pass unpunished. When he is wroth, not any created helper can in the least avail us. But an abiding faith will secure a blessed portion, both in time and eternity: and God himself will undoubtedly pity and relieve us in our depths of distress. Great is the happiness of those hearts in which he dwells. No evil can approach, no good be absent.—Alas! how covetousness provokes God and ruins men! But infinite is that grace which heaps mercies on the richest deservers of hell. Delightful is the new-kingdom connection betwixt pardon, conversion, comfort, peace,

11 And the LORD shall guide thee continually, and [v]satisfy thy soul in drought,[6] and make fat thy bones:[7] and thou shalt be [w]like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not.[8]

12 And they that shall be of thee [x]shall build the old waste places: thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations; and thou shalt be called, The repairer of the breach, The restorer of paths to dwell in.

13 ¶ If[b] thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath [c]a delight, the holy of the LORD, honourable; and shalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words:

14 Then shalt thou [d]delight thyself in the LORD; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth,[9] and feed thee with the[e] heritage of Jacob thy father: for [f]the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

CHAPTER LIX.

1 The damnable nature of sin. 3 The sins of the Jews. 9 Calamity is for sin. 16 Salvation is only of God. 20 The covenant of the Redeemer.

BEHOLD, the LORD's hand is not [a]shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear:[1]

2 But [b]your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid[2] his face from you, that he will not hear.[3]

3 For [c]your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity; [d]your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath muttered perverseness.

4 None[e] calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth: they trust in vanity, and speak lies; [g]they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity.

5 They[h] hatch cockatrice'[4] eggs, and weave the spider's web:[5] he that eateth of their eggs dieth, and that which is crushed breaketh out into a viper.[6]

6 Their[i] webs shall not become garments, neither shall they cover themselves with their works: [j]their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands.

7 Their[k] feet run to evil, and they make haste to shed innocent blood: their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and [7]destruction are in their paths.

8 The[l] way of peace they know not; and there is no judgment[8] in their goings: [m]they have made them crooked paths: whosoever goeth therein [n]shall not know peace.

9 [p]Therefore[9] is judgment far from us, neither doth justice overtake us: we wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness.

10 We[q] grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes: we stumble at noon-day as in the night; we are [r]in desolate places as dead men.[1]

11 We[s] roar all like bears,[2] and mourn sore like doves:[3] we look for judgment, but there is none; for salvation, but it is far off from us.

12 For[t] our transgressions are multiplied before thee, and our sins testify against us: for our transgressions are with us; and as for our iniquities, we know them:

and holy gratitude. But fearful is the guilt, and tremendous the misery, of such as perish in their sins amidst the offers and influences of God's GRACE.

CHAPTER LVIII. Ver. 1–7. Why complain ye so loudly that I do not reward your fasting, while therein you but gratify your own inclinations, oppress your poor servants, promote contention and oppression of the innocent, reproach your debtors, servants, or neighbours, or content yourselves with mere outward noise and show?—whereas the fasting which I delight in, is to repent of, and reform you from, your wickedness; particularly your usurious exactions and cruel oppressions, and to bestow necessary supplies upon your poor brethren. 8–12. If you forbear and restrain oppression of your neighbours, threatening and derisive contempt, hypocritical dissimulation, and do kindly pity and relieve the destitute and afflicted, great shall be your gracious reward; great shall be your comfort, prosperity, and glory. God shall, by his presence and providence, protect you; he shall readily accept and grant your requests; he shall direct you in all your ways, and while others are distressed with want, ye shall be plentifully provided for, and rendered the honoured instruments of re-establishing your nation, repairing your long desolate cities, and of the erection and re-establishment of the gospel church. 13, 14. And if ye carefully abstain from all carnal labour and recreations on the Sabbath, and with pleasure observe it in the spiritual exercises of my worship, ye shall enjoy unbounded comforts in me, as your God, in my ordinances; and with safety, honour, and pleasure, continue in the possession of Canaan, till at last ye be exalted to the felicities of the heavenly inheritance.

Ver. 2. Seek me daily. 'They loved to pray standing in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streets, that they might be seen of men.' Mat. 6. 5.—Delight to know my ways—as Herod, who heard John gladly, Mar. 6. 20; as the stony-ground hearers, who received the seed with joy, Mat. 13. 20; to whom the word —as mere matter of temporary feeling and taste—is as the words of a song, Eze. 33. 32.—Delight in approaching to God. Not for any love to God or his law; but from habit, love of a pompous worship (ver. 3), and the opportunity of attracting the admiration of ignorant followers. C.

Ver. 6. If 'every yoke' is to be broken in the acceptable fast of the LORD, then his Spirit demands the abolition of all that can be called slavery in every nation 'that names the name of JESUS.' C.

Ver. 8. Thy righteousness, &c. Messiah, in whom alone is righteousness, will go before you as your Leader, ch. 55. 4. and the 'glory of God in the face of Jesus' 2 Co. 4. 6. will protect your rereward, as did the Shechinah glory in the day when it protected your fathers in the passage of the Red Sea, Ex. 14. 19. C.

Ver. 9. Putting forth of the finger. Being connected with the abolition of the yoke, or of slavery, it is most probably an allusion to 1 Ki. 12. 10, and synonymous with oppression upon pretence of right. See ch. 59. 3. C.

Ver. 12. Tadmor in the desert, which still abides in solitary and desolate grandeur, is believed to have been the work of Solomon, and affords one of the most striking examples of the ruins of 'many generations.' What a cheering prospect is afforded in the predicted restoration of such ruined and deserted cities! C.

Ver. 13. If thou turn away thy foot from works of agriculture, De. 22. 10, walks of amusement, or journeys of pleasure, upon the Sabbath. C.

REFLECTIONS.—There is great need that ministers should deal closely with the consciences of their hearers, particularly nominal professors; and that all should seek, by a thorough self-examination, the evident marks of grace. For what alarming lengths in religious appearances do hypocrites sometimes go, and that merely to gratify their own legality and pride! Many flatter themselves that God will reward the services which, in fact, he abhors. And such are often greatly exasperated to have the vanity of their self-confidence exposed. There is much need of great brokenness of heart for and of reformation from sin, in our humiliation for it: otherwise our demure looks will but provoke God to abhor us. Nor can we have a deep sense of Jesus' grace without having our hearts and hands opened towards our poor and distressed brethren: and what is lent to the Lord, by relieving his people, he repays with usury. Let us likewise be careful that our hearts are sanctified and divinely influenced, in order to a proper sanctification of the Lord's-day. Multitudes undergo the most alarming miseries in time and eternity, as the just punishment of their profanation of it; while in keeping his commandments there is a great reward.

CHAPTER LIX. Ver. 5, 6. With the utmost labour and care they frame villanous schemes of doctrine or practice, by which their neighbours and partners are destroyed, and themselves nothing profited.—9–11. To punish our iniquity, men deny us justice, and God refuses to plead our cause. When we expect deliverance and prosperity, our miseries are increased, our spirits are overwhelmed with despair, and our anguish and grief inexpressible. 16–21. Finding that there are scarcely any left to stand up for injured honesty and truth, or even to plead for mercy, God will exert his immediate power in the righteous and faithful salvation of his people, and the destruction of their enemies, Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, Romans, Papists, or Mahometans, and thus shall the nations around be awed by, or turned to, the Lord. Whenever Satan, or his instruments, make any assault, God, by the preaching of the gospel, and by his providence, shall graciously and suddenly repress their attempts. Jesus, the almighty Redeemer, shall not only appear in his humble estate in the Jewish church and temple, but shall dwell in his gospel church, and by faith call to himself the remnant of the Hebrew nation along with the fulness of the Gentiles. And the Spirit and oracles of God, granted to him and his church, shall always, especially in the happy time to come, abide with his ministers and people, to direct and instruct them in everthing necessary.

LORD, and departing away from our God, speaking oppression and revolt, conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood.

14 And [v]judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter.

15 Yea, [w]truth faileth; and he that [y]departeth from evil [4]maketh himself a prey:[5] and the LORD saw it, and it displeased him[6] that there was no judgment.

16 ¶ And he saw that [z]there was no man, and wondered that there was no intercessor; therefore[a] his arm brought salvation unto him; and his righteousness, it sustained him.

17 For[b] he put on righteousness as a breastplate, and an helmet of salvation upon his head; and he put on the garments of vengeance for clothing, and was clad with zeal as a cloak.

18 According[c] to their deeds,[7] accordingly he will repay, fury to his adversaries, recompense to his enemies; to the islands he will repay recompense.[8]

19 So[d] shall they fear the name of the LORD from the west, and his glory from the rising of the sun.[9] When[e] the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the LORD shall lift up a standard against him.[1]

20 ¶ And [g]the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER LX.

1 The glory of the church in the abundant access of the Gentiles, 15 and the great blessings after a short affliction.

ARISE,[a] shine; for [b]thy light is come,[1] and the glory of the LORD is risen upon thee.

2 For, behold, [c]the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the [d]LORD shall arise upon thee, and his glory[2] shall be seen upon thee.

3 And the [e]Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.

4 Lift[f] up thine eyes round about, and see: all they gather themselves together, they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side.

5 Then[h] thou shalt see, and flow [3]together, and thine heart shall fear, and be enlarged; because the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee,[4] the forces[5] of the Gentiles shall come unto thee.

6 The[i] multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; all they from Sheba shall come: they shall bring gold

Ver. 3. Your hands are defiled with blood. Either with the sacrifice of children to Moloch, 2 Ki. 21. 6, or the factious and cruel administration of law in name but in violation of justice, 1 Ki. 21. 16, or by such bloody persecutions as the early Christians endured from Rome Pagan, and the blessed Reformers from Rome Papal. C.

Ver. 5. He that rateth. He that adopts their principles is destroyed: and that which is crushed, even when thwarted and disappointed in their evil designs, still the result is the production of those violent party feuds that, like a venomous viper, poison and destroy the peace and prosperity of their country. C.

Ver. 9. Judgment. A clear perception of national sins and national duties in conformity with the law of God. Justice. Neither are we able, with all our efforts, to obtain any due administration of justice; all is partial, one-sided, and oppressive. C.

Ver. 10. We grope. Rejecting the light of God's Word, and the end of God's glory, as the only rules in legislation, we grope about in the dark, and make one experiment after another, and all ends in greater darkness and confusion. C.

Ver. 16. Righteousness. The righteousness of the Scriptures is the work of God in the person of Christ, whom righteousness sustained in life, death, and resurrection; and whom it still sustains in the blessed work of intercession. C.

Ver. 21. Upon thee—the Redeemer. Thy seed the children whom God hath given thee in the everlasting covenant, and by renewal of the Holy Ghost. He. 2. 13; 1 Pe. 1. 23. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is in vain to expect favours from God while we indulge ourselves in sin; and absurd to love that which separates us from our God, and entails his judgment on our heads. Dreadful is that root of original corruption which springs up in so many abominable courses; miserable their condition who have their own conscience upbraiding them, while JEHOVAH and his instruments are punishing them; and awful the situation when the universal prevalency of wickedness is attended with general wretchedness, perplexity, and anguish! Thrice happy is it to reflect, that where sin abounded grace doth much more abound; and that our whole salvation, and the overthrow of the wicked depend on God himself, who loves all: that Jesus Christ and his Spirit are appointed to accomplish the whole work of our conviction and salvation, repentance and faith being left to the good management of our own free-will.

CHAPTER LX. Ver. 1, 2. Be enlightened, comforted, and glorious, O church, for not only is thy deliverance out of Babylon effected, but the Son of God is come in our nature, to enlighten the world, and glorify God in the salvation of men. And though multitudes were lying, or still remain, in depths of ignorance, wickedness, and misery, Jesus shall show his glory, through the gospel, among you. 3 14. The accession of proselytes, and bounty of kings and princes, to the Jewish church, after their return from Babylon, shall be no more than an earnest of the multitudes of princes and others, even of the most savage nations, that shall heartily accede to the gospel church, and devote their substance to, and labours in, the service of it. 15 22. And great shall be her honour, stable and lasting her joys, abundant her prosperity, excellent her ordinances, gifts, and graces, upright and peaceful her officers, complete her joys, lasting and divine her glory, eminently pure, holy, happy, and numerous her members, and quick her enlargement: all because of their faith in Christ.

Ver. 1. Arise, shine. This is a prophecy of the birth and ministry of Jesus, in whom was 'light,' and in whose reflected splendour Zion is called to shine. C.

Ver. 3. The 'wise men from the East' that came to Jerusalem to inquire after the birth of Jesus, tradition pronounces to have been kings. If so, kings literally came to the 'brightness of its rising.' But be this as it may, the prediction was fully verified on the accession of Constantine to the Roman empire. C.

Ver. 4. Thy sons. Thy adopted sons shall come 'from far' among the Gentiles; others, like daughters, 'shall be nursed at thy side,' in thine own bed, upon thine own arm. C.

Ver. 6. Midian was the most celebrated son of Keturah. What Judah became among the tribes of Israel, Midian became among the tribes of Arabia. The Midianites were for ages the dominant people, and virtual rulers of Arabia. The nadom of the nation was on the eastern border of Edom: but they spread thence westward through the Sinai peninsula, and eastward to the Euphrates. The caravan trade between Central and Western Asia appears to have been chiefly in their hands. Ephah was one of the sons of Midian, and the founder of a distinguished tribe. P.

Ver. 7. Kedar was the second, and Nebaioth the eldest son of Ishmael. The former appears to have settled in Central Arabia, and his descendants were among the chief nomads of that wide country. The Nabatheans probably had their earliest settlements on the banks of the Euphrates. In later times they migrated westward, drove out the Edomites, and took possession of their wild mountain home. The splendid rock temples and palaces of Petra were chiefly their work. P.—Rams of Nebaioth shall minister. The ascription of rational service to the flocks shows that in this prediction the camels, &c., are emblematic of the people of their several countries offering to God the sacrifice of prayer and of praise, through Jesus Christ, in that spiritual 'Mount Zion and heavenly Jerusalem' to which every believer is gone up, He. 12. 22. But that they also include the temporal restoration of Zion and Israel, as a great central light of truth, other parts of the prediction seem clearly to intimate. See ver. 10, 15. C.

Ver. 12. This does not mean political submission, but religious service: and the nation that serves Christ serves Zion: all others shall perish, Ps. 2. 8, 9, 12. C.

Ver. 13. This blessed period of national order, peace, and light, corresponds to that glorious vision of John, Re. 21. 23, 27. The Lord hasten it in his time! C.

Ver. 21. All righteous. All, as Abraham, who 'believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness.' None can be righteous but by the 'righteousness of God by faith of Jesus Christ,' Ro. 3. 10, 22. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Where sin had abounded grace much more abounds; and, through Jesus' sacrifice reigns unto eternal life, where sin had reigned unto death. But they who live destitute of the gospel are plunged into the greatest misery and darkness. And infinite is the mercy when Jesus Christ, the light of life and the glory of his people, manifests himself in his incarnation and ordinances. The remarkable favour of God, the clear light of the gospel, and the shining lives of professors, powerfully attract members to the church. And with inexpressible pleasure and wonder do the lovers of Christ behold men crowding to him as their refuge, and to the ordinances of his grace. And if we truly give him our heart, we shall liberally employ our wealth, honour, and influence for promoting his cause. How abundant and constant is the access of sinful men to Jesus and his gospel church! Quickly and truly would he turn her corruption, contempt, poverty, oppression, and misery, into holiness, comfort, honour, wealth, happiness, and peace. What then must heaven be, where no evil can enter, and where God himself shall be our everlasting light, our everlasting glory, and our ALL IN ALL.

CHAPTER LXI. Ver. 1. The quotation of this passage, Lu. 4. 18, identifies the speaker with Christ. The announcement comes in direct fulfilment of the closing prediction of the previous chapter: 'I the LORD will hasten it in HIS time,' who, though to the eyes of men 'a little one and a small one,' is here anointed with the Spirit, and invested with the mighty power of God. C.

Ver. 2. How blessed the contrast—a 'day of vengeance'—'the acceptable year of the Lord!' A vengeance that specially began upon Jerusalem, Mat. 23. 37, 38; 24. 21, which continues the emblem of that series of judgments by which God broke in pieces the heathen Roman empire, and by which he destroys that mystical Babylon that has so long been permitted to 'make war with the saints,' Re. 11. 7. C.

Ver. 4. For more than a thousand years many of the great and incense; and they shall show forth the praises of the LORD.

7 All[f] the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, the rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee: they shall come up with acceptance on mine altar, and I will glorify the house of my glory.

8 Who are these [h]that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?

9 Surely [i]the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them, [n]unto the name of the LORD thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee.

10 And [o]the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: for [p]in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favour have I had mercy on thee.[6]

11 Therefore [q]thy gates shall be open[7] continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the forces[8] of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought.

12 For[r] the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted.

13 The[s] glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir-tree, the pine-tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the [t]place of my feet glorious.

14 The[u] sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, [v]The city of the LORD, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel.

15 ¶ Whereas[x] thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, [y]I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations.[9]

16 Thou[z] shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, and shalt suck the breast of kings: and [a]thou shalt know that I the LORD am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob.

17 For[b] brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron: I will also make thy officers peace, and[c] thine exactors righteousness.

18 Violence[d] shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise.

19 The[e] sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the LORD shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory.

20 Thy[g] sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the LORD shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.

21 Thy[k] people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, [l]the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may [k]be glorified.

22 A[l] little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: [n]I the LORD will hasten it in his time.

CHAPTER LXI.

1 The office of Christ. 4 The restoration, 7 and blessedness of the faithful.

THE Spirit[a] of the Lord GOD is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek:[1] he hath sent me to [b]bind up the broken-hearted, [c]to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound;

2 To[d] proclaim the acceptable year of the LORD, and the day of vengeance of our God; [e]to comfort all that mourn;

3 To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, [g]to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, [h]the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness;[2] that they might be called [i]trees of righteousness, the planting of the LORD, that he might be glorified.

4 ¶ And they shall [j]build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.

5 And [k]strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your ploughmen, and your vine-dressers.

6 But ye shall be named [l]the priests of the LORD; [m]men shall call you the ministers of our God: [o]ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.

7 For [p]your shame ye shall have double,[3] and for confusion they shall rejoice in their portion: therefore in their land they shall possess the double; [q]everlasting joy shall be unto them.

8 For [r]I the LORD love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt-offering; and I [s]will direct their work in truth, and [t]I will make an everlasting covenant with them.

9 And[u] their seed[4] shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people:

cities and populous villages of Palestine have been literally 'a desolation.' Samaria, Bethel, Jezreel, Capernaum, Jericho, and multitudes of others, are in ruins. The whole country, in fact, when contrasted with its state in the days of Isaiah, or in the time of our Lord, is 'waste.' As the curse has been literally fulfilled, may we not expect that the promised blessing will be fulfilled as literally? F.——So far as this prediction is literal, its accomplishment is still future; and that it will have a literal accomplishment, the prophecies leave no room to doubt. In the meantime it has been spiritually verified, in the building up of God's people 'through faith unto salvation.' C.

Ver. 10. Are these the words of Zion or of Messiah? Of Messiah, who alone speaks in the first person throughout the previous parts of the prediction: and there is neither intimation nor mark of any change of speaker. See He. 10. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Clear is the call, and unbounded the spiritual furniture, of our Lord Jesus for his saving work; and wonderful the instruction, healing, deliverance, protection, and comfort which he gives us by the gospel. He graciously roots and grounds sinners of mankind in himself, and in a spiritual state; raises temples to God out of the ruined lodgings of lusts; makes the bond-slaves of Satan free indeed; the servants of sin priests and ministers to God; and fraudulent wanderers upright followers of truth.—Thrice happy are they whom he delivers from redoubled misery and shame; whom he enriches with his grace, and gives full contentment and joy in himself; and to whom he is a God and guide, even unto death. And sweet and honourable to exercised souls are Jesus'

SYNAGOGUE OF CHRIST AT NAZARETH—WHERE CHRIST PREACHED HIS FIRST SERMON. [Isaiah, lxi:1.]—The first sermon that Christ ever preached he preached in Nazareth, in the Synagogue. The Synagogue represented in the picture above is said to stand upon the exact site of the one in which Christ preached. This sermon was the only one Christ ever preached from a text, and that text he found in the 61st chapter of Isaiah: "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath annointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound. To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn." It was after the delivery of this sermon that the acquaintances of our Savior led him to the brow of the hill to cast him down.

all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are [s]the seed which the LORD hath blessed.

10 I[t] will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my soul shall be joyful in my God: for [u]he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh[5] himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

11 For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; [v]so the Lord GOD will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations.

CHAPTER LXII.

1 The fervent desire of the prophet to confirm the church in God's promises. 6 The office of the ministers (unto which they are invited) in preaching the gospel, 10 and preparing the people thereto.

FOR Zion's[w] sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the[b] righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth.[1]

2 And[c] the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and [d]thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the LORD shall name.

3 Thou shalt also be [e]a crown of glory in the hand of the LORD, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

4 Thou[g] shalt no more be termed Forsaken: neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah,[2] and thy land Beulah;[3] for the LORD delighteth in thee, [h]and thy land shall be married.

5 For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall[i] thy sons marry thee: and as the bridegroom rejoiceth[4] over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6 ¶ I have set [j]watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that make mention of the LORD,[5] keep[k] not silence,

7 And give him no [6]rest, [l]till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the [7]earth.

8 ¶ The LORD hath [m]sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength, Surely [6]I will no more give[8] thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast laboured:

9 But[p] they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness.

10 ¶ Go[q] through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people.

11 Behold, [r]the LORD hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, [s]Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, [t]his reward is with him, and his work[9] before him.

12 And they shall call them, [u]The holy people, The redeemed of the LORD: and thou [v]shalt be called, Sought out, A city not forsaken.

blessed righteousness and great salvation, with all the holiness and comfort which proceed therefrom.

CHAPTER LXII. Ver. 1. For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace. Poole ascribes these words to the prophet Isaiah; Aben Ezra, to Israel in captivity; the Targum, to God revealed not to be silent, nor give the nations rest till the coming of the deliverer. By following the grammar of the preceding and subsequent passages, which all uniformly speak in the name of one person, there can be no hesitation in applying these words to Messiah.—'God manifest in the flesh.' C.

Ver. 2. Thy righteousness. The righteousness of God, by faith of Jesus Christ. Ro. 3. 22.—Thy glory. The glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ. 2 Co. 4. 6. C.

Ver. 5. Thy sons. Rather, 'thy builders' God, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, building up the church as a living temple, 1 Co. 3. 9, 16, 17. C.

Ver. 10. Go through, go through the gates. Do not tarry at ease in the church, as men in the gaiety and luxury of a city; but pass out of the gates into the uncultivated lands of nominal or perverted Christianity, Mahometan delusion, or heathen darkness, and lift high a standard of testimony to 'the truth as it is in Jesus,' in sight of an ignorant and misled people. C.

Ver. 12. They shall call them. That is, the faithful watchmen who have prepared the way, gathered out the stones, and lifted up the standard, shall call the people so tended and cultivated, 'the holy (the separated and dedicated people.' C.

REFLECTIONS. Great fervour and perseverance, particularly in preaching and prayer, are necessary in the ministers of Christ. How near to theirs, and especially to Jesus' heart, lie the important concerns of the church! And great and numerous are the blessed fruits of their intercessions. Thrice happy is it, when not only churches are vindicated, but Jesus' righteousness and salvation are clearly exhibited and distinctly perceived; when church-members are spiritually joined to the Lord, and to one another in him; are an honour and pleasure to him; and bring forth the fruits of righteousness, to the praise of his glory; and when divine oracles, ordinances, officers, gifts and graces, and practical holiness, meet together! Thrice happy is it that in the work of our salvation, and of rearing, reforming, and ruling the church, Jesus Christ, and JEHOVAH in him, are ALL and IN ALL. Infinite is the condescension, mercy, power, wisdom, care, and faithfulness which he manifests in his work. And such as accept him by a living faith and thus walk in him he will protect.

CHAPTER LXIII. Ver. 1-6. Who is this that cometh from the overthrow and destruction of the deeply wicked, temporal or spiritual, having almighty power to perform his will withersoever he goes? It is I, the Messiah, who promise nothing but what I faithfully perform, and who through my own perfect sacrifice, am able to save to the uttermost.—I by myself alone, without needing any created assistance, have utterly subdued and overcome the wicked: and I will quickly come myself in the tremendous loss of such as still remain; for the seasons appointed for the overthrow of the wicked and the deliverance of believers, are fixed in my purpose and view. And though none be found able or willing to espouse their quarrel, or attempt their deliverance, my power and zeal shall save them, who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and even render them astonished at the greatness of my compassion.—8. They will not deal falsely and deceitfully in their promise with me.—14. The Lord carried them gently and surely, as on plain ground, through the Red Sea and the wilderness, till, to render himself famous in the earth, he brought them into the quiet possession of Canaan. 16–19. Abraham cannot either take notice of our troubles, or afford us any relief. Why hast thou given us up to a spirit of error and obstinacy, and left us to the bent and bias of our own corrupt hearts, that we cannot fear thee in a filial and reverential manner? O be reconciled, and show thyself favourable to us. Instead of possessing Canaan for ever, as was promised to the patriarchs, we, thy peculiar people, have enjoyed it but a little while; and our adversaries, who were never in such near relation to thee, have destroyed thy temple and thy land.

Ver. 1. The first six verses of this chapter are a responsive ode or hymn: the astonished and joyous church questioning, and the triumphant Messiah responding. He here speaks in his kingly office: he is mighty to save, or deliver from the power of man. Edom is mentioned because it was one of the most determined enemies of Israel. Bozrah is mentioned because it was the capital and stronghold of Edom. These together symbolized the foes of the church in every age; and King Messiah is represented as gaining a complete victory over them. C.—Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? The Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea, Is. 34. 6, &c.: see also Je. 49. 7–22. Eze. 25. 12–14. 35. 1–15, in which predictions there appears a wonderful contrast between Jacob and Esau: for though Jacob be scattered throughout all lands, he can still be found and known, while in truth there is not any remaining of the house of Esau. 'Edom is cut off for ever.' The question in this prophecy seems therefore to refer to this predicted period of 'vengeance,' and furnishes, most probably, an emblem and specimen of those national judgments with which God forewarns and threatens all nations which becoming, through agriculture and commerce, prosperous and great, as Edom, forget God, become proud of their wealth, wicked, cruel, and idolatrous.—The people to whom the standard has been lifted up, ch. 62. 10, and the daughter of Zion warned of her coming salvation, ch. 62. 11, prefer this interesting question. C.

Ver. 5. Wondered. Messiah is said to have wondered at the want of a Saviour, as he was grieved at the hardness of the people's hearts, Mar. 3. 5: both being expressions perfectly suitable to him when 'found in fashion as a man.' C.

Ver. 7. I will mention, &c. Messiah continues to speak, but pauses, as it were, from the work of judgment, to show how judgment upon the wicked is lovingkindness to those whom it delivers from their hands. C.

Ver. 9. For the import of 'Angel of his presence,' see Ex. 3. 2, 6, 13, 21; 14. 19; 23. 20, 21; Ju. 13. 18; comp. with Is. 9. 6; Zec. 12. 8; Mal. 3. 1, all indicating no other than Christ. C.

Ver. 11. Remembered: not as a thing forgotten, but as a thing in 'everlasting remembrance,' Ps. 112. 6. C.

Ver. 15. Toward me. Messiah here speaks as 'head over all things to the church, which is his body.' C.

Ver. 16. Here the church utters her prayer—'Thou art our Father' by regeneration of the Holy Spirit, Jn. 3. 5, though Abra NAPLES, FROM THE HILL. [Isaiah, lxiii:1.]—"Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? this that is glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save." We give a picture of Naples, a Christian city built upon the foundations of a heathen city, to illustrate this 63rd chapter of Isaiah. This chapter was written 2594 years ago, but Christ, to whom reference is made in this prophecy, has gradually changed the character of civilization. Where heathen temples once stood now stand Christian churches. Where men once sacrificed to idols, they now bring themselves willing sacrifices to the Lord Jesus Christ. Where once stood cities consecrated to pagan rights and given up to blindness, there now stand Christian cities regulated by humane laws, and moving in the great open ways disclosed by the life and spirit of Jesus Christ.

ness of his strength? I [a]that speak in righteousness, mighty to save.

2 Wherefore [b]art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat?

3 I[c] have trodden the wine-press alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment.

4 For the [d]day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come.

5 And I looked, and [e]there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore [f]mine own arm brought salvation unto me; and my fury, it upheld me.[2]

6 And I [g]will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth.

7 ¶ I[h] will mention the loving-kindnesses of the LORD, and the praises of the LORD, according to all that the LORD hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his loving-kindnesses.

8 For he said, [i]Surely they are my people, children that will not [k]lie:[3] so he was their Saviour.

9 In[l] all their affliction he was afflicted, and the [m]angel of his presence saved them: [n]in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and [o]he bare them, and carried them all the days of old.

10 But they [p]rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit: therefore [q]he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them.

11 Then he [r]remembered the days of old, Moses and his people, saying, Where is he that brought them up out of the sea with the shepherd[4] of his flock? where is he that put his holy Spirit within him?

12 That [s]led them by the right hand of Moses with his glorious arm, dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting name?

13 That [t]led them through the deep, as an horse in the wilderness,[5] that they should not stumble?

14 As a beast[6] goeth down into the valley, the Spirit of the LORD [u]caused him[7] to rest: so didst thou lead thy people, [v]to make thyself a glorious name.

15 ¶ Look[b] down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory:[8] where[c] is thy zeal and thy strength, the sounding[9] of thy bowels and of thy mercies toward me? are they restrained?

16 Doubtless[a] thou art our father, [w]though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: thou, O LORD, art our father, our redeemer: thy name is from everlasting.[1]

17 O LORD, why [x]hast thou made us to err from thy ways, and hardened our heart from thy fear? Return[h] for thy servants' sake, the tribes of thine inheritance.

18 The[i] people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: [k]our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary.

19 We[l] are thine: thou [m]never barest rule over them; they were not called by thy [z]name.

OH that[a] thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence,

2 As when the melting fire[1] burneth,[2] the fire causeth the waters to boil, [b]to make thy name known to thine adversaries, that the nations may tremble at thy presence!

3 When thou didst [c]terrible things which we looked not for, thou camest down, the mountains flowed down at thy presence.

sam be ignorant of us in the starlike multitude of his seed—though Israel acknowledge us not in the distribution of blessings to his family. C.

Ver. 17. Why hast thou made us to err, &c. Why hast thou adjudged us to be delivered over to our own errors, and judicially hardened our hearts as was the heart of Pharaoh? see Ex. 4. 21, or 'suffered us to err from thy ways to harden our heart' Lowth, Boothroyd. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Wonderful is Jesus Christ in the view of all that know him. And yet he indulges his servants and people in the most familiar inquiries and requests. Blessed are the periods which God hath fixed for showing mercy to believers, and distributing judgment to the wicked. And with the greatest zeal, fervent affection, and care, he accomplishes every promise or threatening. Nor can the inability or unconcern of others in the least discourage our almighty Saviour, or hinder his success: but thrice dreadful is their destruction in which his glory must be exalted!—Never ought we to remember God's mercies but with minds lost in love, in wonder, and in praise. And every blessing of providence, grace, or glory, in time or eternity, ought to be viewed as having its sole rise in his infinitely rich and gracious mercy. Alas! how base is it to lie, to deal treacherously, to rebel and vex the Holy Ghost, in opposition to that infinite pity and manifold salvation of God's dear Son! But wonderfully God mingles his sharpest corrections of his people with his gracious comforts. And it is comely when recounting of mercies, confession of iniquities, and pleading of promises are rightly connected; and when supplicants complain chiefly of spiritual judgments, and fill their mouths with arguments before him.

CHAPTER LXIV. Ver. 1–5. Oh that thou wouldest, in some awful manner, appear for the ruin of thine enemies and the relief of thy people, as in the destruction of the Egyptians and Canaanites, or as at Mount Sinai! For whatever great things thou hast done, we believe that thou wilt still do greater, in the incarnation of thy Son, the spread of thy gospel, and the erection, preservation, and perfection of the New Testament church.—Thou enrichest, with thine unsearchable blessings, them who with pleasure receive thy favours, obey thy laws, and hold fellowship with thee in thy ordinances. And though our sins have long provoked thee to anger, thy ways of mercy are perpetual, and therefore we hope for thy salvation. 6–12. We are indeed wholly corrupted, and our best works abominable in thy sight. Our sins have brought on these wasting and captivating judgments. And very few, with fervent importunity, labour to prevent thy departure, or plead for the removal of thy consuming judgments. But notwithstanding our unworthy carriage towards thee, do thou, our Father and Creator, graciously remember and spare us, moderate and shorten thy corrections, since we are thy faithful people. When Jerusalem and our other cities are laid desolate, and thy temple, in which our fathers long worshipped thee, is burned, and all our pleasant palaces and structures are destroyed, let thy bowels of compassion make thee hasten to our relief.

Ver. 1. Rend the heavens. Surely not the natural and visible heavens; for to rend them were to introduce universal ruin, and could not be a prayer of faith and love: but the political heavens, the moving and directing lights of the rebellious and idolatrous kingdoms. See ch. 13. 10, 13–22; comp. Joel 2. 10; 3. 15, 16–19; Mat. 24. 29.—Mountains. The exalted potentates of the world, whether adverse or friendly to the truth and holiness. They are friendly, ch. 9. 2; adverse, but subdued, ch. 41. 15.—Flow down at thy presence. 'Flow down' as mountains are wont to do when the sun melts the winter snows, see ch. 2. 2; Joel 3. 18, when springs and rivers issue from their bosom, or flocks and herds descend from them as streams, ch. 65. 9, 10. C.

Ver. 3. Thou camest down. This cannot refer to God's coming down on Sinai; for then the people looked for the 'terrible things' that were done, Ex. 19. 3–25. Moreover, upon that awful occasion, mention is never made of 'mountains,' but of 'the mount,' Ex. 19. 11–13, 16, &c. Does it not therefore rather refer to some of those unexpected deliverances which God at different times so signally wrought for his people, as by his judgments on Pharaoh, Sennacherib, and other enemies? C.

Ver. 4. Neither hath the eye seen, &c. 'Nor hath eye seen a God besides thee, who providest such things for them that trust him.' C.

4 ¶ For since the beginning of the world [d]men have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O God, beside thee, what he hath prepared for him[3] that waiteth for him.

5 Thou[e] meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness; those that remember thee in thy ways: behold, [4]thou art wroth; for we have sinned: [g]in those is continuance, and we shall be saved.[5]

6 But [h]we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; and we all do [i]fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, [j]have taken us away.

7 And[k] there is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee: for [l]thou hast hid thy face from us, and hast consumed[6] us, because of our iniquities.

8 But now, O LORD, [m]thou art our father: we[n] are the clay, and thou our potter; and [o]we all are the work of thy hand.

9 ¶ Be not [q]wroth very sore, O LORD, neither remember iniquity for ever: behold, see, we beseech thee, we are all thy people.

10 Thy[r] holy cities are a wilderness, Zion is a wilderness, Jerusalem a desolation.

11 Our[s] holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, is burned up with fire: and all our pleasant things are laid waste.[7]

12 Wilt[t] thou refrain thyself for these things, O LORD? wilt thou hold thy peace, and afflict us very sore?

CHAPTER LXV.

1 The calling of the Gentiles. 2 The Jews, for their incredulity, idolatry, and hypocrisy, are rejected. 8 A remnant shall be saved. 11 Judgments on the wicked, and blessings on the godly. 17 The blessed state of the new Jerusalem.

I AM[a] sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, behold me, unto [b]a nation that was not called by my name.

2 I[c] have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh [d]in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts;

3 A[e] people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face; that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense [f]upon altars of brick;[2]

4 Which [g]remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments; which [h]eat swine's flesh, and broth[3] of abominable things is in their vessels;

5 Which say, [i]Stand by thyself, come not near to me; for I am holier than thou. [j]These are a smoke in my [4]nose,[5] a fire that burneth all the day.

6 Behold, [k]it is written before me; I will not keep silence, but will recompense, even recompense into their bosom,

7 Your[l] iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together, saith the LORD, which [m]have burned incense upon the mountains, and blasphemed me upon the hills: therefore [n]will I measure their former work into their bosom.

8 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, [o]As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not; for a blessing[6] is in it: so will I do for my servants' sakes, that I may not destroy them all.

9 And [q]I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains: and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there.

10 And [r]Sharon[7] shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in, for my people that have sought me.

11 ¶ But ye are they that [s]forsake the LORD, that forget my [t]holy mountain, that prepare a table for that troop,[8] and that furnish the drink-offering unto that number.[9]

12 Therefore[u] will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: [v]because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not.

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [x]Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed:

14 Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation[1] of spirit.

15 And [y]ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen: for the Lord GOD shall [z]slay thee, and call his servants by [a]another name:[2]

16 That[b] he who blesseth himself in the earth,

REFLECTIONS.—In trouble the almighty God must be implored for our relief: and he will make himself known to all: to his people in mercy, and to the wicked in judgment. There is infinite need of his gracious descents to awaken, enlighten, pardon, purify, protect, regulate, direct, and comfort his church. What mercy he keeps, and what stores of blessedness he has laid up, for such as cheerfully wait on him, and walk with him, in all his ordinances, laws, and dispensations of providence! He bears with unnumbered provocations, and graciously forgives them, in the best of the people. But shameful are our sinful pollutions, and greatly criminal our want of earnestness in dealing with God; nor is there a surer token of a graceless heart, than neglect of and even indulged carelessness in prayer. But while we are pining away in our iniquities, nothing is more fit than by faith to throw ourselves entirely upon the great mercy of God. And if the disorders and desolations of churches lie so heavy on the heart of saints, how near must they go to the heart of the Saviour!

CHAPTER LXV. Ver. 1–7. I am now manifested to, enjoyed, and worshipped by the Gentiles, who for many ages have continued ignorant of and careless about me, and stood in no saving relation to me. But since, notwithstanding my long-continued offers of grace, vouchsafement of oracles and ordinances, and the strivings of my Spirit and providence, the Jews continue in their obstinate rejection and blasphemous contempt of me, since they still approve the sins of their fathers, or do what is equally horrid, and yet boast, to my high provocation, of themselves, as if they were the only holy people on earth; I will now, in the most tremendous and lasting manner, punish on them their own and their fathers' iniquities. 8–10. Nevertheless, I will not utterly destroy the nation, as there is among them, and in their loins, a number of believers, who in the apostolic and coming periods, shall truly accept Christ and his church, and become very useful to others. 11–16. But as for the body of that nation, since they have apostatized from my truths and service, and have, at least, in approbation of their fathers' conduct, offered sacrifices to multitudes of idols, and have obstinately rejected the Messiah, they shall terribly be destroyed by the shall bless himself in the [c]God of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth, shall swear by the God of truth; because [d]the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes.

17 ¶ For, behold, I create [e]new heavens, and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.[3]

18 But [f]be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.

19 And [h]I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the [i]voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

20 There[j] shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; [k]but the sinner, being an hundred years old, shall be accursed.

21 And they [l]shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.

22 They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for [m]as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall[4] long enjoy the work of their hands.

23 They[o] shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble: for [p]they are the seed of the blessed of the LORD, and their offspring with them.

24 And it shall come to pass, that [q]before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.

25 The[r] wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and [s]dust shall be the serpent's [5]meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my [t]holy mountain, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER LXVI.

1 The glorious God will be served in humble sincerity. 5 He comforteth the humble with the marvellous generation, 10 and with the gracious benefits of the church. 15 God's severe judgments against the wicked. 18 The Gentiles shall have an holy church, 24 and see the damnation of the wicked.

THUS saith the LORD, [a]The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool: where is the house that ye build unto me? and where is the place of my rest?

2 For [b]all those things hath mine hand made, and all those things have been, saith the LORD: but [c]to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and [d]trembleth at my word.

3 He[e] that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb,[1] as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that burneth[2] incense, as if he blessed an idol. Yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations.

4 I [g]also will choose their [3]delusions,[4] and will bring their fears upon them; [h]because when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear: but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not.

5 ¶ Hear the word of the LORD, ye that [i]tremble at his word; Your [j]brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the LORD be glorified:[5] but [k]he shall [6]appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed.

Romans and others, and by famine, while the Christians shall be protected and nourished. They shall be miserable, detested, and infamous, while the Christians shall be joyful, respected, and happy in the worship of their Redeemer; and idolatry, carnal ceremonies, and vexing miseries shall be abolished. 17–25. For, to the inexpressible comfort of believers, whether Jews or Gentiles, I will, in the apostolic and especially in the spiritual period, and still more gloriously in the heavenly state, establish my church in a new form; in which spiritual joys, noted advances in holiness, happy continuance in life, sanctified enjoyment of the blessings of providence, remarkable blessings from God, and delightful fellowship with him, remarkable change of men's dispositions and tempers, happy peacefulness, mutual affection, and freedom from persecution shall amazingly abound.

Ver. 1. The Lord here replies to the concluding expostulation of the preceding chapter: and, by enumerating their sins, vindicates the severity of his corrective judgments upon Israel, and his merciful, but righteous, substitution of the Gentiles in the place of a rebellious and idolatrous people. C.

Ver. 4. Which remain among the graves. Frequent the graves of dead men, whom they elevate into demigods or 'saints,' whose relics they venerate as things peculiarly holy, and to whom they address their prayers as possessed of tutelary power.—Which eat swine's flesh. Swine's flesh being forbidden to the Jew for reasons ceremonially instructive, the eating of 'swine's flesh' was the emblem of all unhallowed indulgence and epicurean idolatry of appetite, Phi. 3. 19. C.

Ver. 7. Therefore will I measure, &c. The allusion is to the loose eastern robe, which is often used as an apron: and, when filled with large measures, is drawn up to the bosom. Our Lord alludes to the same dress and practice in his memorable inculcation of the duty of charitable judgment, forgiveness, and liberality, Lu. 6. 38. C.

Ver. 11. Prepare a table for Gad and Meni—names of heathen gods or idolatrous rites. Gad, or troop, was most probably a name for the starry heavens, which the Hebrews were prone to worship. Meni, or number, for numerical calculation of fortunate and unfortunate days, with which idolatrous and superstitious nations are still trammelled. C.

Ver. 13. This prediction was wonderfully accomplished in the siege of Jerusalem by Titus. The Christians, whose chosen name was 'servants of Jesus Christ,' Phi. 1. 1; Ja. 1. 1, warned by the prophecy of our Lord, Mat. 24. 15–28, had fled to Pella, and lived in abundance and security, while the unbelieving Jews felt all the extremities of thirst, hunger, and ruin. C.

Ver. 17. New heavens and a new earth cannot here mean the new and eternal state; for it appears from ver. 20 that after the new creation here predicted, death will still be in the world; whereas in the new and eternal state 'there will be no more death,' Re. 21. 4. 'The new heavens and new earth' here foretold represent a new state of governments and people, produced by an outpouring of converting and renewing grace upon the hearts of Israel and the Gentile churches and kingdoms. C.

Ver. 20. Though it were presumptuous to affirm that God may not, or will not, hereafter restore mankind to antediluvian longevity; yet, as the 'new heavens and new earth' seem decidedly emblematic, and not literal, is there not reason for concluding that 'infant' and 'old man' are likewise emblematic? Thus the whole Christian church are called 'little children' by Christ himself, by Paul, and John, Jn. 13. 33; Ga. 4. 19; 1 Jn. 2. 1–5, 21. According to this authorized language, the verse will be interpreted thus: 'There shall no more be in my visible church' any who abides 'an infant of days,' any who continue 'children in understanding,' 1 Co. 14. 20, nor 'an old man,' a father in Christ, 1 Co. 14. 15; 1 Jn. 2. 13, who shall not have knowledge and experience in grace: but even 'the child,' the youngest believer, shall die in the Christian ripeness of old age. And such shall be the purity and vigour of godly discipline, that 'the sinner' who 'loves not the Lord Jesus Christ,' whatever may be his rank and attainments, shall be cut off and cast away as an accursed thing from the fellowship of the renovated church, 1 Co. 5. 4, 5; 7. 9, 11; 1 Co. 16. 22. C.

Ver. 22. As the days of a tree are the days of my people. Oaks, cedars, and olives are of such known longevity, that no one can tell at what age they die. It is by no means improbable that the remnants of the 'cedars of Lebanon' may have been contemporary with Solomon, or the trees of the Mount of Olives contemporary with our Lord. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Wise is JEHOVAH in the disposal of his favours; and graciously he convicts sinful men by the offers and communications of his saving graces and comforts. But rebellious dissemblers with God, and rejecters of his Son, provoke him to give them up at last to the most terrible rejection and ruin. Though he bear long, he will not bear always; and nothing is more odious in his sight than a sinner vaunting of his holiness, and looking down with contempt on others. Yet how loath is he utterly to abandon a people who have been once devoted to his honour! And how liberally sinners expend their substance to gratify their lusts! Awful and lasting are the proofs we have of Jesus' Messiahship, and of the truth of the Christian religion, in the tremendous miseries, and still continued dispersion and disgrace, of his Jewish rejecters. But O what unspeakable blessings, for Jews and Gentiles, are still wrapped up in God's promises. If I must die without seeing their fulfilment, let me live and die in the firm faith of it. If I am dispirited by the remarkable dishonours of God and ruin of souls which now prevail, let me hope for that happy period in which the kingdoms of this world, Jews and Gentiles, shall become the kingdoms of my Lord, and of his Christ.

CHAPTER LXVI. Ver. 1–4. I do not regard your temple in all its glory, but the law-fulfilling Messiah, and broken-hearted believers in him. Your sacrifices offered up without faith in, nay, in opposition to, his, I esteem as infinitely criminal and detestable. And since ye obstinately cleave to your abominable righteousness and superstitions, I will give you up to the lusts of your hearts, and bring upon you the miseries which ye attempt to avoid. 5–14. And while God shall marvellously protect the Jewish Christians who have been persecuted by their brethren, terrible judgments shall be executed on the Jewish nation, city, and temple. But speedily, and before their destruction, shall multitudes be converted to Christ and his gospel church, particularly from among the Gentiles; and large, abundant, and lasting, especially in the latter days, shall be their comforts. 14–24. And while the 6 A[l] voice of noise from the city, a voice from the temple, a voice of the LORD that rendereth recompense to his enemies.

7 ¶ Before[n] she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man-child.

8 Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? [o]shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children.

9 Shall[p] I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth?[7] saith the LORD: shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God.

10 ¶ Rejoice[q] ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her:

11 That [r]ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance[8] of her glory.

12 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, [s]I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: [t]then shall ye suck, ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees.

13 As[u] one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

14 And [v]when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb; and [w]the hand of the LORD shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

15 ¶ For, behold, [x]the LORD will come with fire,[9] and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire.

16 For[z] by fire and by his sword will the LORD plead with all flesh: and the slain of the LORD shall be many.

17 They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves [a]in the gardens, behind one tree in the midst,[1] eating[b] swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the LORD.

18 ¶ For[c] I know their works and their thoughts: [d]it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory.

19 And [e]I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, [f]to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud,[2] that draw the bow, to Tubal and Javan,[3] to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

20 And [h]they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the LORD, out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in [i]litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts,[5] to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the LORD, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel[6] into the house of the LORD.

21 And I will also take of them for [k]priests and for Levites,[7] saith the LORD.

22 For as [l]the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the LORD, so shall your seed and your name remain.

23 And it shall come to pass, [m]that from one new-moon to another, and from one sabbath to another,[8] shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD.

24 And they shall go forth, and [n]look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me; for [o]their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; [p]and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

obstinate Jews, Heathens, Papists, and Mahometans, shall be, in the most terrible manner, punished by the judgments of God, and set up as distinguished monuments of sin, in time or eternity, the Jewish preachers, and others, shall spread the gospel into all parts of the world, and shall become noted instruments of the enlargement, purification, and lively devotion of the gospel church.

Ver. 1. The Jews were proud of their national descent from Abraham, whose faith they knew not; of the law of M. ses, whose precepts they kept not; of the temple, whose services they degraded by their profanity; and of JEHOVAH their God, whom they associated with idols. Against this false pride and the false security thence arising, the Lord here proceeds to warn them by shewing that heaven is his glorious temple, and the humble man the only acceptable worshipper. C.

Ver. 3. This verse is obscured by the italics of the translators, as the object seems to be a description, not of the comparative guilt of the Jews 'as if a certain crime were committed,' but the actual abominations they had conjoined with the worship of Jehovah: 'He that slayeth an ox' to offer to God 'killeth a man' to satisfy his own malice: 'he that sacrificeth a lamb' to Jehovah 'beheadeth a dog' to a heathen deity: 'he that maketh an oblation' to the living God 'offereth swine's flesh' a sacrifice to the dead: 'he that burneth incense' (emblem of ascending prayer, 'blesseth an idol' that can neither hear nor answer. C.

Ver. 5. The Lord here speaks the word of comfort to his church, anticipating the time when the first Christians were 'cast out of the synagogues,' Jn. 16. 2. and the custom of total excision from family affection and aid, as well as church-fellowship, still practised against every Jew who is converted to the 'truth as it is in Jesus.' C.

Ver. 7. When Christ, as 'a child born, a son given,' came in the flesh, a remnant were doubtless expecting and praying for his appearing; but as a nation and church, the Jews neither expected nor desired such a Redeemer. C.

Ver. 8. For as soon as Zion travailed. 'But as soon as Zion travailed,' &c. Of which see the wonderful conversions produced by a single apostolic address, Ac. 2. 41: 4. 4. And surely what God has effected once he is able to accomplish again.—Note, Let believers pray for that outpouring of the Spirit from on high; for neither by 'might nor by power' of man shall this work be effected, 'but by my Spirit, saith the Lord,' Zec 4. 6. C.

Ver. 12. Like a river. A river as distinguished from a cistern, which, however deep, is at length exhausted, while the mountain-fed river is rolling on, and, by aid of its tributaries, ever increasing as it flows. Note, This distinction is forcibly exemplified in the distinction between agiaz and nuyz, Jn. 4. 11, 14. C.

Ver. 14. Your bones. The bones are the emblems of strength and the mechanical instruments of motion. They abide in the grave when the flesh is decayed, as the root of an herb abides in the ground when the flower is faded, the leaf withered, and the stem cut down. The comparison, therefore, seems to refer to the resurrection as exhibited in the vision of dry bones, Eze 37. 11. C.

Ver. 17. Behind one in the midst. 'Who purify themselves at a fountain in the midst of the gardens,' according to Kimchi. But how could any be said to purify themselves behind a fountain? 'After the rites of Achad!' Lowth. But Achad never elsewhere appears as the name of any idol. The marginal translation, 'one after another,' the Eternal, 'after one between,' may probably suggest the true meaning, 'successively,' or 'promiscuously.' C.

Ver. 19. I will set a sign. A sign of God's power, faithfulness, holiness, and grace, such as appeared in the incarnation Lu. 2. 34, preaching Jn 7. 46, and miracles of our Lord, and in the endowments, self-denial, and miracles of his apostles, Ac. 2. 19, 22, 43: 4. 30: 14. 3: Ro. 15. 19: 2 Co. 12. 12. Heb. 2. 4. —My glory. The real demonstration of the 'glory of God' in 'the face of Jesus Christ,' whether marked by the look of tenderness, the tear of pity, the elevation of prayer, the bloody sweat of agony in the garden, or the hand of the smiter in the hall; above all, in his face when he rose from the dead, and brought life and immortality to light from the darkness of the grave, 2 Co. 4. 6. C.

Ver. 23. 'From one new-moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another (that is, perpetually), shall all flesh come to worship before me,' not necessarily in Jerusalem - for that were physically impossible - but 'in spirit and in truth,' where the eye of faith seeth him in the temple of his universal presence, Jn. 4. 21–24: Heb. 11. 1. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Let my care be to have my heart right with God, and a meet habitation for him through the Spirit. And making Jesus my pattern, let me, with a contrite heart, tremble at his word. God forbid that I should ever value myself on account of external performances in religion, which may be so detestable to him; or that ever he should abandon me to the power and rage of my own lusts, and the fearful suffering attending the same. Hypocrites and church-rulers are frequently the most cruel persecutors. But saints may bear injuries with patience when God will so quickly overbalance them with deliverance and comfort. And the church's remarkable deliverances, enlargements, and joys, are ordinarily introduced or attended by the most tremendous judgments on hypocritical professors and open enemies. All labour and suffering are well bestowed that issue in the conversion of men to Christ. And notwithstanding all that the wicked can do, the word of the Lord hath had, and will have, free course, and be glorified. The ends of the earth shall be made to remember and turn to the Lord. And the grace of God, which bringeth salvation, shall teach men to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this world. But what dreadful spectacles of divine judgment have been the Jewish and Roman, and shall be the Popish and Turkish, persecutors of the church! Let, therefore, the British nation stand in awe and tremble!

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ISAIAH.

Isaiah is placed at the head of the glorious prophetic company, not because his prophecy was first in point of time—for he was preceded by Jonah, Amos, and Hosea, and was contemporary with Joel and Micah—but because of the overwhelming importance of his subject, and his frequent references to the coming and kingdom of Christ. Upon this account Isaiah has been distinguished by the title of 'the evangelical prophet.' Concerning his family nothing certain is known, though some suppose him to have been of the blood-royal, and that his father was the son of Joash, and brother of Uzziah. There is a tradition among the Jews, and it has been adopted by many Christian writers, that Isaiah lived till the time of Manasseh, by whom he was sawn asunder. That some one of the prophets so suffered, the apostle affirms, He. 11. 37: but of the individual we are uncertain. If Isaiah lived till the time of Manasseh, he must have exercised the prophetic office during at least sixty-one years—a period by no means improbable, when compared with that during which many ministers of the gospel have continued to discharge the most laborious duties of their offices. It is however certain that he lived till after the fifteenth year of Hezekiah, which makes the continuance of his office beyond all question—calculating from the first of Uzziah—to have been not under forty-eight years.

The name of Isaiah, when interpreted, is, in some measure, descriptive of the nature of his divine message. It signifies 'the salvation of Jehovah;' and was bestowed with singular prophetic propriety upon him who was commissioned to foretell and describe, so vividly and impressively, the glorious advent of Messiah, through whom 'all flesh shall see the salvation of God.' See Is. 40. 5, comp. with Lu. 3. 6; Ac. 4. 12.

Called into office during a period of great national declension from truth, purity, and godliness, one great object of the prophet was to establish beyond controversy the divine origin of the Jewish institutions. This he effects by foretelling some events nigh at hand, 'coming home to men's own lives and bosoms,' and which the living witnesses of his own generation must have been able either to falsify or verify by their own observation. The verification of the prediction, including events most improbable at the time, fulfilled the Mosaic test of the divine commission of a prophet, and left unbelieving idolaters and apostates totally without excuse (see De. 18. 21, 22); while others of his prophecies, stretching far into futurity, have continued to receive an exact but progressive fulfilment during centuries; and others look forward still, and give assurance, by the experience of the past, that all that remain will be accomplished. C.

JEREMIAH.

Jeremiah was a priest descended from Aaron, very early called to the prophetical office (ch. i.), and continued forty or fifty years faithfully discharging it. Living in a period of great dissimulation with God, and of notorious rebellion against him, the miseries which he foresaw, and the persecutions which he endured, rendered his condition extremely afflicted and sorrowful, ch. ix. 1; xi. 18, 19; xv. 10, 15; xvii. 14–18; xviii. 18–23; xx. 7–18; and, excepting some promises of deliverance from Babylon, or redemption through Jesus Christ, and happiness to his church, in ch. iii. xxx.–xxxiii.; xxiii. 3–8; xxiv. 4–7; xxix. 10–14; l. 4–8, 19, 20, 33, 34, he is continually engaged in charging men's sins upon them, or denouncing the judgments of God against them;—as the ruin of the Jewish nation, Egyptians, Philistines, Tyrians, Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Syrians, Arabians, and Persians, by the Chaldeans; and then of the Chaldeans themselves, ch. xxv. xxvii. xlvi.–li. &c. His first four sermons are generally plain, ch. ii.–xii. The following sixteen are generally introduced by some typical emblem, ch. xiii.–xxv.

{It is the opinion of the most learned commentators that the prophecies of Jeremiah, having been written upon separate parchments, have not been placed as they were delivered, and the following, among other attempts, has been made to arrange them in chronological order:—after ch. xx., xxii. xxiii. xxv. xxvi. xxxv. xxxvi. xlv. xxiv. xxix.–xxxi. xxvii. xxviii. xxi. xxxiv. xxxvii. xxxii. xxxiii. xxxviii. xxxix. 15–19, xxxix. 1–14, lx.–lxiv. lxvi. (Blayney). After ch. xx., xxii. 1–24, xxvi. xlvi. 1–13, xxxv. xxv. xxxvi. 1–9, xlv. xxxvi. 9 to end, xxii. 24 to end, lii. 1–4, xxiv. xxix. 1–15, xxix. 16–21, xxix. 15, xxix. 21 to end, xxx. xxxi. xxvii. xxviii. xlviii, xlix. 1–51, xxxix. 1, xxxvii. 1–5, xxxiv. 1–11, xxxii. xxxiii. xxxvii. 5–47, xxxvii. 6–11, xxxiv. 11 to end, xxxvii. 11 to end, xxi. xxxviii. xxxix. 15 to end, lii. 5, 6, xxxix. 3, lii. 7–12, xxxix. 11–15, lii. 24–28, lii. 12–15, lii. 17–24, iii. 15, 16, xxxix. 10, lii. 4, xxxix. 2–10 (Townsend).

Of the comparative value of these suggested arrangements, it is unnecessary to speak, inasmuch as they are at best conjectural; but they are important as specimens of the indefatigable pains bestowed by their respective authors in "searching the Scriptures." C.}

CHAPTER I. Ver. 10. He was appointed to declare what God would infallibly do with the nations. 11–16. The almond-tree, which flourishes very early in the spring, imported that the Jews were almost ripe for destruction, and it would speedily come upon them. And the boiling-pot, with its face toward the north, signified that the Chaldeans would come from the north-east, and burn and render miserable Jerusalem and other cities of Judah. 17–19. Be expeditious and diligent, bold, resolute, and faithful, in delivering my messages, however severe or awful; for I will protect, strengthen, and stablish thee, that none of their persecutions shall hurt thee.

Ver. 1. Anathoth. A city of Benjamin, situated, according to Jerome, about two miles and a half north of Jerusalem. It was assigned to the priests, 1 Ch. 6. 60. It was destroyed by the Chaldeans, and again rebuilt, Ne. 11. 32; but, at present, it fully verifies the denunciations of the prophet, Je. 11. 21–23, for nothing remains but a few poor houses on the bleak mountain-side, surrounded by mounds of rubbish and hewn stones. C.

Ver. 2. Word of the Lord. Not a mere utterance which the prophet was commissioned to make; but the Son of God, in visible form, and with audible speech, ver. 4–14, as he also appeared and spoke to Abraham, Ge. 15. 1–18; 17. 1–22. See also Is. 6. 1; Jos. 5. 13; Eze. 1. 26. Da. 8. 15–18; 10. 6–10. C.

Ver. 17. Be not dismayed. Moral courage, arising from a sense of obedience to God, a love for the souls of sinners, a 'conscience sprinkled from dead works,' with deep self-denial that 'Christ may be all in all,' is an indispensable qualification of every one who would seek to convert sinners and build up believers to salvation. Like all other good qualities, it is the gift of God. He that has it should bless God; and he that has it not should pray for it; for without it it is impossible to 'do the work of an evangelist.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great are the pains and patience that God exercises to prevent the destruction of his professed people. And it is honourable to be early chosen, sanctified, and prepared for the ministerial service of God. How real are his purposes relative to men's persons and offices! He can easily qualify men for his service, and enable them to speak intelligibly and powerfully, notwithstanding all weakness or opposition, and though their message issue in the ruin of some and deliverance of others. And with great care doth God render his mind plain to his servants and people, and condescendingly vouchsafes them his presence in their work. In what different forms he warns men before he inflicts his remarkable judgments! And ministers had need to consider the infinite importance

TOMB OF THE HORATII, ON THE APPIAN WAY—PASSED BY ST. PAUL IN CHAINS. [Jeremiah, i:1.]—"The words of Jeremiah, the son of Hilkiah, of the priests that were in Anathoth in the land of Benjamin." Jeremiah began to prophesy in the reign of Josiah. Josiah reigned in Jerusalem from 609 to 640 B. C. Near to the time when Josiah was reigning over the Israelites, there was a war between Rome and Alba, which was settled by a contest of the Horatii and the Curatii. These brothers and cousins fought in sight of the Roman and Alban armies with a bravery such as made their names famous in all after ages. The terrible tragedy between the brothers and cousins terminated the independent existence of the Alban power, and gave to the Roman cause complete victory. This tomb is distant about six miles from Rome on the Appian way. Along by this tomb came St. Paul in chains, a prisoner to Rome.

king of Judah, unto the [g]carrying away of Jerusalem captive in the fifth month.[1]

4 ¶ Then [h]the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

5 Before I [i]formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee; and I ordained[2] thee [k]a prophet unto the nations.

6 Then said I, Ah! [l]Lord GOD! behold, I cannot speak; for I am a child.

7 But the LORD said unto me, [m]Say not, I am a child: for [n]thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

8 Be[o] not afraid of their faces: for [p]I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the LORD.

9 Then the LORD put forth his hand, and touched[q] my mouth. And the LORD said unto me, Behold, I have [r]put my words in thy mouth.

10 See, I have this day set thee over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to [s]root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.

11 ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, [t]what seest thou? and I said, I see [u]a rod of an almond-tree.[3]

12 Then said the LORD unto me, Thou hast well seen; for [v]I will hasten my word to perform it.

13 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying, What seest thou? and I said, I see [z]a seething-pot;[4] and the face thereof is toward[5] the north.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, [y]Out of the north[6] an evil shall break forth[7] upon all the inhabitants of the land.

15 For, lo, I will [a]call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne[8] at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah.

ver. 6 it appears he was a very young man, not literally 'a child,' however, when the Lord called him; and from ch. 52. 31 it is evident he must have lived to an extreme old age, for he records an event which occurred during the reign of Evil-Merodach, king of Babylon, and not earlier than B.C. 560. He thus lived during one of the darkest periods of Jewish history, and therefore to his lot more intense suffering probably than any prophet had ever experienced.—C.

of their charge, the great danger of unfaithfulness in it, and God's promises of his presence to enable them to perform it, and to protect them in it, as a balance to all the power and threatenings of their persecutors.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 2, 3. I remember the kindness which I showed to your nation when it was but forming, and when in the Arabian wilderness, by solemn covenant, I espoused you first of all the nations of the world to be my holy and peculiar people, and the affectionate regard which your fathers professed for me. And then I severely punished the Egyptians and others who attempted to do them wrong. 13-18. They have rejected me in my oracles, ordinances, and fulness, who am the freely bestowed, everlasting, and unbounded source of all grace, consolations, and blessings; and have, with inexpressible fatigue, procured to themselves idols which cannot give them the smallest relief. No wonder that they are basely enslaved and cruelly spoiled. The Assyrians, like outrageous lions, have wasted the country of the ten tribes, and murdered and carried captive the inhabitants. And the Egyptians have treacherously disappointed you, or shall murder Josiah, depose Jehoahaz, and impose a tribute. And will you, nevertheless, still send messengers to Egypt or Assyria, to form new alliances, or to borrow new idols? 20-28. When I formerly delivered you from the Egyptians, and other oppressors, ye engaged to keep my commandments, yet ye commit idolatry everywhere. I originally formed your nation of pious patriarchs, and established among you my pure oracles, ordinances, and worship; how then are ye become superstitious, idolatrous, and everyway corrupt, in both church and state? Nor can all your excuses, evasions, or pretences to reformation, conceal the manifest tokens of your wickedness from me. How can ye deny it, when the valley of Hinnom, where ye have burned your children to Molech, and other valleys where ye have worshipped your idols, manifest it? Ye have, even with madness and fury, run after idols empty as wind, one after another; and till fearful distress restrain you, ye appear quite irreclaimable. I have warned you to repent of your lewd, idolatrous, and foolish courses, and of hunting after alliances with heathens, which will bring you to captivity and misery; but ye desperately cleave to your strange gods. Yet all of you at last shall be ashamed of your idols, when ye find that, notwithstanding their multitudes, they can do nothing to save you from disgrace or punishment. 29-37. No excuse can be offered for your conduct; and all of you are guilty. Warnings and judgments have not in the least reclaimed you; nay, ye have cruelly murdered the prophets who admonished you. Did not I plentifully provide for and comfort you while ye continued obedient; why then do ye reject me, as if now, self-sufficient, ye had no need of me? Why thus so long forget me, who have been your chief glory and ornament? Why take such tedious journeys in pursuance of idolatrous courses, and become patterns and teachers to the very heathens in wickedness? Why, in every corner of your land, publicly sacrifice your children to idols, and murder the innocent, and yet hope to pass unpunished? Why thus change your idols and heathen allies? The Egyptians shall no more help you than the Assyrians did; but ye shall be led forth into a mournful and miserable captivity; and the curse of God shall render all your projected methods of relief unprofitable and ruinous to you.

Ver. 10. Chittim—a general name for the west; Kedar, for the east. The one the descendants of Kittim the son of Javan, Ge. 10. 4, the son of Japheth; the other of Kedar the son of Ishmael, Ge. 25. 13, 18. C.

Ver. 11. The facility with which the Israelites changed from the worship of JEHOVAH to idols forms a prominent and surprising trait in their national character from the formation of the that[r] led us through the wilderness, through a land of deserts and of pits; through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death; through a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt?

7 And [s]I brought you into a plentiful country, to eat the fruit thereof and the goodness thereof: but when ye entered, ye [t]defiled[7] my land, and made mine heritage an abomination.

8 The[u] priests said not, Where is the LORD? and they that handle the law knew me not: the pastors also transgressed against me, and [v]the prophets prophesied by Baal, and [w]walked after things that do not profit.

9 Wherefore I [x]will yet plead[8] with you, saith the LORD, and [y]with your children's children will I plead.

10 For pass over[9] the[a] isles of Chittim,[1] and see; and send unto Kedar, and consider diligently, [b]and see if there be such a thing:

11 Hath[c] a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people [d]have changed their glory for that which doth not profit.

12 Be[e] astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye [f]very desolate, saith the LORD.

13 For my people have committed two evils; they have [g]forsaken me, the [h]fountain of living waters, and hewed them out [i]cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water.

14 ¶ Is[k] Israel a servant? is he a home-born slave? why is he spoiled?[2]

15 The[l] young lions[3] roared upon him and yelled,[4] and they made his land waste: his cities are burned without inhabitant.

16 Also[m] the children of Noph and Tahapanes have broken the crown[5] of thy head.

17 Hast[n] thou not procured this unto thyself, in that thou hast forsaken the LORD thy God, when he [o]led thee by the way?

18 ¶ And now [p]what hast thou to do in the way of Egypt, to drink the waters of Sihor? or [q]what hast thou to do in the way of Assyria, to drink the waters of the [6]river?[7]

19 Thine own [r]wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backslidings shall reprove thee: know, therefore, and see that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the LORD thy God, and that my fear is not in thee, saith the Lord GOD of hosts.

20 For[s] of old time I have broken thy yoke, and burst thy bands; and thou saidst, I [t]will not transgress;[8] when [u]upon every high hill, and under every green tree, thou wanderest, playing the harlot.

21 Yet I had [v]planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed; how then art thou [w]turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?

22 For [x]though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord GOD.

23 How[z] canst thou say, I am not polluted, I have not gone after Baalim? [a]See thy way in the valley, know what thou hast done; thou art a swift dromedary[9] traversing her ways;

24 A[1] wild ass used[2] to the wilderness, that snuffeth up the wind at her pleasure;[3] in her occasion who can turn her away?[4] all they that seek her will not weary themselves; [b]in her month they shall find her.

25 Withhold[c] thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst: but thou saidst, [5]There is no hope:[6] no; for I have loved strangers, and after them will I go.

26 As[d] the thief is ashamed[7] when he is found, so is the house of Israel ashamed; they, their kings, their princes, and their priests, and their prophets,

27 Saying to a [e]stock, [f]Thou art my father; and to a stone, Thou hast brought me [8]forth; for they have turned their back[9] unto me, and not their face: but [h]in the time of their trouble they will say, Arise, and save us.

28 But [i]where are thy gods that thou hast made thee? let them arise, if they can save thee in the time of thy trouble:[1] for [j]according to the number of thy cities are thy gods, O Judah.[2]

29 Wherefore[k] will ye plead with me? ye all have transgressed against me, saith the LORD.

30 In vain have I [l]smitten your children: they received no correction: [m]your own sword hath devoured your prophets, like a destroying lion.

The Israelites imitated the example of the heathen, who not only worshipped great national deities, but also set up inferior tutelary deities in each city and village, and gave homage to them as their special patrons and protectors. golden calf, Ex. 32. 1–6, throughout all their history, till the Babylonish captivity. Since that period the tenacity with which they have adhered to their law and traditions, forms an interesting contrast with their former versatility. And no doubt the present decision and tenacity of profession into which Providence has trained them will, when 'their heart turneth to the Lord,' whom they rejected and crucified, render them admirably fitted for that blessed work among the Gentiles, Is. 66. 19, unto which God has destined them in the latter day. C.

Ver. 16. Noph was the Hebrew name of Memphis, the capital of Egypt. It stood just at the southern angle of the Delta, where the Nile branched.—Tahapanes, or Daphne, was also an Egyptian city, situated on the border of the country, on the Pelusiac arm of the Nile. These two cities are mentioned as representatives of all Egypt. P.——Broken the crown. By the defeat and death of the good king Josiah, the kingdom was reduced to a tributary province, 2 Ki. 23. 29, 33. C.

Ver. 23. In the valley. The valley of the sons of Hinnom, where they had built the high places of Tophet. See ch. 7. 31; Is. 57. 5.—A swift dromedary. As swift as the dromedary, which, though subjugated, 'traverses (rather twists) her ways' to pass by her master who would impede or stop her from seeking her mate. C.

Ver. 24. A wild ass. As wild as the onager, which, bred in the desert, and unaccustomed to restraint, 'snuffeth up the wind,' and thereby discovering her companions, hastes to them as matter of right.—In her month they shall find her. Her mate will find her without difficulty, because she seeks as earnestly as she is sought; so Israel sought after idolaters as earnestly as idolaters sought after them. C.

Ver. 25. 'Withhold thy foot from being unshod,' as the wilful dromedary or untamable wild ass; 'and thy throat from thirst,' such as they experience in the wilderness—that is, eschew this wilfulness and wildness, and 'let thy feet be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace,' and drink of the 'well of water springing up unto life eternal.' C.

Ver. 31. Have I been a wilderness—have my ways (ver. 31) been unprepared, my waters bitter or scanty, my food unprovided, my habitation unbuilt? C.

Ver. 34. I have not found it. 'I have not found it in a hole digged' to hide it, I.e. 17. 13', 'but upon every oak' to expose and proclaim it', as an offering acceptable to abominable idols.—Note, Instead of the words upon all these, in the authorized translation, the ancient versions render it upon every oak, in allusion to the groves in which idols were worshipped, and their impure rites celebrated. C.

Ver. 35. Because I am innocent. I am 'innocent' of idolatry: using graven images, not as gods, but as means of devotion. So say the Hindoos (see Duff's India), so say the Council of Trent (see their decrees); but let Christians see the second commandment, and believe and obey God rather than men. C.

THEY say,[1] If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, shall[a] he return unto her again? shall not that land be [b]greatly polluted? but [c]thou hast played the harlot with many lovers; [d]yet return again to me, saith the LORD.

2 Lift up thine eyes unto the [e]high places, and see where thou hast not been lien with: [f]in the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian[2] in the wilderness; and thou hast [h]polluted the land with thy whoredoms and with thy wickedness.

3 Therefore the [i]showers have been withholden, and there hath been no latter rain; and thou hadst a [j]whore's forehead,[3] thou refusedst to be ashamed.

4 Wilt[k] thou not from this time cry unto me, My father, thou art the guide of my youth?

5 Will[l] he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Behold, [m]thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou couldest.[4]

6 ¶ The LORD said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king,[5] Hast thou seen that which backsliding[6] Israel hath done? she is [o]gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot.[7]

7 And[p] I said, after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me; but she returned not. And [q]her treacherous sister Judah saw it.

8 And I saw, [r]when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery, I had put her away, and given her a bill of divorce; yet her [s]treacherous[8] sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also.

9 And it came to pass through the [t]lightness[1] of her whoredom, that [u]she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks.

10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah [v]hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but [z]feignedly,[3] saith the LORD.

11 And the LORD said unto me, The [a]backsliding Israel hath [b]justified[4] herself more than treacherous Judah.

12 ¶ Go, and proclaim these words toward the [c]north, and say, [d]Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the LORD, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you: for I am [e]merciful, saith the LORD, and I will not keep anger for ever.

13 Only[b] acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the LORD thy God, and [f]hast scattered[5] thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the LORD.

14 Turn,[d] O backsliding children, saith the LORD; for I am [g]married unto you; and [h]I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion:

15 And I will give you [i]pastors according to mine heart, [k]which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.

16 And it shall come to pass, when ye be [l]multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the LORD, [m]they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the LORD; neither shall it come to mind,[6] neither shall they remember it, neither shall they visit it, neither shall that be done[7] any more.

17 At that time they shall call [n]Jerusalem the throne of the LORD: and [o]all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the threatened to overwhelm them. Instead of trusting in God, they turned to Egypt for help. This proved the immediate cause of the overthrow of the Jewish monarchy and the destruction of Jerusalem. P.

REFLECTIONS.—It is honourable for nations, families, and persons to be early beloved by God, and addicted to his service; and safe to be followers of him through every difficulty. But very absurd is it for those who have shared his distinguished favours to apostatize from him to idols, and render him hatred for love; for church-officers to be ringleaders in guilt; and for men at once to belie their profession, affront their God, and cheat themselves out of happiness. Alas! in what slavery, poverty, and disappointment, and endless wandering after idols, do unbelief and forsaking of God issue! With denial of guilt, eagerness, obstinacy, and impudence, do men, abandoned by God, proceed from evil to worse. And it is common for sinners to supplicate relief from God when their idols cannot help them. But dreadful is their case who, under his word, rod, or favours, grow insolent and imperious in wickedness; and when, forgetting God, notwithstanding checks unnumbered, they abound in impiety.

CHAPTER III. As the Jewish nation were espoused to God by special covenant, apostasy and idolatry, or dependence on heathen allies instead of God, are often represented as whoredom, adultery, or fornication, by the prophets. 1–5. Notwithstanding ye have, under the judgments of famine, &c., multiplied your idols and idolatry, and eagerly hunted after companions in it, and opportunities of committing it, in all the corners of your land, and have impudently gone to your very uttermost in speaking and acting the most horrid abominations; yet, without a moment's delay, return unto me as your infinitely gracious Husband and Father. 11. The sins of the ten tribes, who had been long ruined or in a miserable captivity, were far less aggravated than those of Judah, being committed against fewer warnings, mercies, judgments, vows, &c. 12–25. These predictions began to be accomplished in and after the deliverance from Babylon;

LORD, to Jerusalem: neither [c]shall they walk any more after the imagination[8] of their evil heart.

18 In those days the house of Judah [p]shall walk with[9] the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers.[1]

19 ¶ But I said, [q]How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage[2] of the hosts of nations? and I said, Thou shalt call me, [r]My father; and shalt not turn away from[3] me.

20 ¶ Surely, as a wife treacherously departeth from her husband,[4] so [s]have ye dealt treacherously with me, O house of Israel, saith the LORD.

21 [t] A voice was heard upon the high places,[5] weeping[u] and supplications of the children of Israel: [v]for they have perverted their way, and they have forgotten the LORD their God.

22 Return,[x] ye backsliding children, and I will heal[6] your backslidings. Behold, [y]we come unto thee; for [z]thou art the LORD our God.

23 Truly [a]in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills,[7] and from the multitude of mountains; truly[b] in the LORD our God is the salvation of Israel.

24 For [c]shame hath devoured the labour of our fathers from our youth; their flocks and their herds, their sons and their daughters.

25 We[d] lie down in our shame, and our confusion covereth us: [e]for we have sinned against the LORD our God, we and our fathers, from our [f]youth even unto this day, and have not obeyed the voice of the LORD our God.

CHAPTER IV.

1 God calleth Israel by his promises. 3 He exhorteth Judah to repentance by fearful judgments. 19 A grievous lamentation for the miseries of Judah.

IF thou wilt return, O [a]Israel, saith the LORD, return[b] unto me; and if thou wilt put away thine [c]abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not [d]remove.

2 And [e]thou shalt swear, The LORD liveth, [g]in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness; and [h]the nations shall bless themselves in him, and in him shall they glory.

3 ¶ For thus saith the LORD to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, [i]Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns.

4 Circumcise[j] yourselves to the LORD, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem; [k]lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

5 Declare[l] ye in Judah, and publish in Jerusalem; and say, Blow ye the trumpet in the land: cry, gather together, and say, Assemble yourselves, and let us go into the defenced cities.

6 Set up the standard toward Zion: [l]retire, stay not; for [m]I will bring evil from the [2]north, and a great destruction.[3]

but will be much more fully accomplished in the future return of the twelve tribes to Canaan, and in the glories of the Christian church: especially in the coming age, when converts shall be numerous, ministers and magistrates faithful, ceremonies laid aside, and peace, harmony, faith, and godly sorrow prevail.

Ver. 3. The showers have been withheld, &c. At no time are men more disposed to repine and murmur against Providence than during the time of drought; God therefore again and again directs men's thoughts above the clouds to him who sits in heaven, as the only giver of 'rain and dew and fruitful seasons.' C.

Ver. 12. Here commences a prophecy looking far into the future. It opens with calling Israel from the north—that is, from Media, Persia, the borders of the Caspian, Poland, Lithuania, and other regions lying northerly from Judea; and closes with a period when by conversion to JESUS, commencing with 'one of a city and two of a family,' ver. 14, they shall be 'multiplied and increased in the land'—they shall neither name, remember, nor visit 'the ark of the covenant of the LORD,' ver. 16: and Judah and Israel shall come together out of the land of the north, and shall no more turn from following after the LORD, ver. 17, 18. C.

Ver. 17. That Jerusalem is a name of the church of Christ cannot be questioned. See Ga. 4. 26; He. 12. 22; Re. 21. 2, 3. But that here it signifies the literal Jerusalem can scarcely be doubted by any who considers the literal reality of the sins charged, the judgments inflicted, and, connected with the repentance of Israel, ver. 14, the promise of restoration to 'the land given for an inheritance to their fathers,' ver. 18. See Ro. 11. 26. C.

Ver. 24. Shame. The noted idol Baal was called 'shame,' ch. 11. 13; Ho. 9. 10, from the shameful nature of his worship; and this and similar idolatrous worship devoured Israel's labour continually. This was effected 1: naturally by the habits of dissipation that idolatry fosters; and 2: by the direct and consuming judgments wherewith it is constantly punished. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How base, eager, active, abounding, and impudent in wickedness, apostates from God become! And if we would seriously repent, we must take a particular view of our sins and their aggravations. Unbounded is the mercy of that God of grace with whom we have to do. He is averse to punish with severity; and opens his arms and heart to receive the most enormous transgressors who attempt returning to him by faith. But sad is the case when God's judgments upon our neighbours do not awaken us to detest and avoid their sins; and that, when God bestows reforming magistrates and ministers, many who join in reformation do but dissemble with him. Few backsliders from God are ever recovered. And obstinacy in sin lays bars in the way of our mercies, that nothing less than uncommon stretches of mercy can remove. Earnest are JEHOVAH'S calls to faith and repentance; and strong and moving his gracious encouragements; and it is the assured faith of his special mercy that will most truly produce a true and gracious repentance. Peaceful, harmonious, well governed, conspicuous, and pure is the gospel church when everything in her is according to God's Word. And when his Spirit draws men to himself, deep is their sense of their guilt and folly in departing from and rebelling against him; and cordial their dependence on him, and justification of his judgments.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1–4. If you truly return to me by faith and repentance, and reform from your idolatries, and in a candid and upright manner devote yourselves to and serve me, in whom even the Gentile nations shall in a little time be blessed and glory, your captivity may be prevented. Yet not a mere outward reformation, but deep convictions of conscience, and a thorough renovation of your hearts, and purgation from the sinful corruptions thereof, are necessary to the preventing of my approaching and justly deserved judgments.—30, 31. No devices which ye can use shall avail you: the Egyptians and Chaldeans, whose friendship ye have courted, will forsake or murder you, which will occasion terrible anguish and despair all over the country, but especially at Jerusalem.

Ver. 2. Every one who has studied the prophecies of the Old and New Testaments, and carefully noted the history of nations, must have seen how wonderfully the fate of nations is interwoven with the condition of the Jews. Here the repentance of Israel would not only have suspended or superseded their own captivity and exile, but would have expedited and secured the conversion and happiness of the Gentiles. They did not repent—they were scattered—and but a few of the Gentiles have yet 'blessed themselves in him.'—Note, After a man's own personal salvation, few things should more occupy his thoughts than the present and eternal influence his conduct may exercise over others either for good or evil, happiness or misery. 'A word in season' may be instrumental to convert and 'save a soul alive'—a word may poison the heart of the hearer, and be followed by death and misery. C.

Ver. 10. The prophet neither says nor means that God had 'deceived' the people by telling them any flattering untruth—the ordinary meaning of deception—such an imputation would be insulting to the truth and holiness of God, and unworthy of the divine wisdom of the prophet. But the meaning is, 'that while God had promised peace to a penitent people forsaking their idolatry and returning to the Lord,' the Jews, appropriating the promise without realizing the character, have been deceived; and, in this sense only, were deceived by the Lord. In another view God is said to have 'deceived the people;' that is, false prophets prophesied, saying, 'Peace, peace;' when there was no peace;' but the people loved and preferred these false prophesyings, and detested the truth, wherefore God 'gave them up to strong delusions,' and is therefore said to have done that which he judicially condemned an unbelieving, impenitent, and self-willed people to underlie. C.

Ver. 15. Dan. The north-eastern extremity of Palestine, at which the Babylonians, coming from Damascus, entered the Holy Land. See ver. 6. C.

Ver. 16. Watchers, besiegers. An army, not of temporary marauders, but fully instructed in all the arts of war and endurance of watchfulness. C.

Ver. 17. Grain fields, early ripe, require, in most countries, protection against birds, which, when affrighted from one part of the field, fly to another, and so require the guards to go 'round about' it. In Arabia the ripening grain requires to be strongly guarded against robbers, and as the fields are unfenced, the guards must surround them on all sides.—See Sir J. Chardin. C.

Ver. 19. Is this the exclamation of Israel, of the prophet, or of the LORD himself? Israel could not say, 'I have heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet!' for this was that sound which they sottishly refused to hear. Neither can it be the prophet; for he speaks of 'my tents' and 'my people' who 'have not known me.' This last phrase unquestionably designates Messiah. And as the speaker, throughout the whole discourse, ver. 19–26, is one, speaking uniformly in the first person, the whole must be understood of Messiah himself speaking prophetically as in 'the days of his flesh,' even as when he came near the city, looked upon it, and wept. C.

Ver. 25. No man. At the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, no Jew was left in it, unless such as hid themselves in subterraneous passages. The expression 'no man' may, however, be justly interpreted—'no man' was seen who stood up for order and defence. C.

Ver. 26. All the cities. Jerusalem, Acre, and Jaffa alone remain, the mere skeletons of their former glory. All the other cities of Judea have sunk either into mere villages or absolute ruins; so complete is the desolation, that of many the sites cannot be ascertained.—See Wylie's Modern Judea, p. 318–329. C.

Ver. 28. For this shall the earth mourn, &c. This expression alludes to a well-known fact in human nature—that is, that everything, yea, the very sunshine, looks gloomy and dismal to the man whose heart is darkened by hopeless distress—that feels the rod of punishment without the consolations of faith, humiliation, and repentance. C.

Ver. 30. Though thou rendest thy face with painting. 'Though thou distend thine eyes with paint.'—Boothroyd. The allusion is to the eastern practice of painting the brows and edges of the eyelids black, which gives the white an enlarged and distended the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way; he is gone forth from his place to make thy land desolate: and thy cities shall be laid waste without an inhabitant.

STREET IN TIBERIAS—ONE OF THE CENTERS OF JEWISH CULTURE AND WORSHIP SINCE THE DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM. [Jeremiah, iv:1.]—"If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the Lord, return unto me; and if thou wilt put away thine abominations out of my sight, then thou shalt not remove." We give a street scene in Tiberias because of the view it enables us to get of modern Israelities. After the destruction of Jerusalem, Tiberias became the chief seat of the Jews. In the second century the Sanhedrin was removed here, and here was a great rabbinical school. There are now about three thousand people in this city, nearly two thousand of whom are Jews. They are easily recognized. Many of them have their hair in ringlets and nearly all look pale and effeminate. Most of them, like the Jews in Jerusalem, live on charity. There is something pathetic about the way these ancient people of God hang about Jerusalem and Tiberias.

8 For this [p]gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl; for the fierce anger of the LORD [q]is not turned back from us.

9 And it shall come to pass at that day, saith the LORD, that [r]the heart of the king shall perish, and the heart of the princes; and [s]the priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder.

10 Then said I, Ah, Lord GOD! surely thou hast[t] greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, [u]Ye shall have peace; whereas the sword [v]reacheth unto the soul.

11 At that time shall it be said to this people and to Jerusalem, [w]A dry wind of the high places in the wilderness toward the daughter of my people, [x]not to fan, nor to cleanse,[5]

12 Even a full wind from those[6] places shall come unto me:[7] now also will I give sentence[8] against them.

13 Behold, [y]he shall come[9] up as clouds, and his chariots shall be as a whirlwind: [z]his horses are swifter than eagles. Woe unto us! for we are spoiled.

14 O Jerusalem, [a]wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved: how long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?

15 For[1] a voice declareth from Dan, and publisheth affliction from mount Ephraim.[2]

16 Make ye mention to the nations; behold, publish against Jerusalem, that watchers[3] come from a far country, and [b]give out their voice against the cities of Judah.

17 As[4] keepers of a field are they against her round about; because [c]she hath been rebellious against me, saith the LORD.

18 Thy[d] way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee: this is thy wickedness,[4] because it is bitter, because it reacheth unto thine heart.

19 ¶ My[e] bowels, my bowels! I am pained at my very heart;[5] my heart maketh a noise in me; I cannot hold my peace, because [f]thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war.

20 Destruction[f] upon destruction is cried; for the whole land is spoiled: suddenly are my tents[k] spoiled, and my curtains in a moment.

21 How[l] long shall I see the standard, and hear the sound of the trumpet?

[6] The prophet here seems to look away down the long vista of the future, and to see in perspective spoiler after spoiler wasting and desolating Palestine, until at length, in the fulness of the prophetic period, the whole country is desolate. The first execution was wrought by the armies of Babylon; the final one by the Romans. The language of Jeremiah is now completely fulfilled. Time has converted prophetic declarations into history. The mountains, hills, plains, cities, and villages of Palestine are, as compared with ancient times, "desolate;" yet there is not "an full end," for a remnant has been left.—P.

24 I[p] beheld the mountains,[8] and, lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly.

26 I beheld, and, lo, [s]the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at [t]the presence of the LORD, and by his fierce anger.

27 For thus hath the LORD said, The whole land shall be desolate; [u]yet will I not make a full end.

CHAPTER V.

1 The judgments of God upon the Jews, for their perverseness, 7 for their adultery, 10 for their impiety, 19 for their contempt of God, 25 and for their great corruption in the civil state, 30 and their prevarication in religion.

RUN ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, [a]if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it.

2 And[1] though they say, The LORD liveth; surely they swear falsely.

3 O LORD, [b]are not thine eyes upon the truth? thou hast [c]stricken them, but they have appearance, which custom has converted into an artificial beauty. So vain, so foolish, and so weak is humanity in departing from nature, when forsaking God!—C.

REFLECTIONS.—Thrice blessed are the fruits of true and gospel repentance! But great accuracy is requisite in turning to the Lord, in dedicating ourselves to him, or swearing by his name. And deep convictions, and an effectual change of heart, is necessary to the extirpation of indwelling lusts. How great is JEHOVAH'S love to Gentile sinners! But dreadful is his wrath; and it is mad to kindle it upon ourselves by our sins! For furious, swift, terrible, and ruinous are the miseries, the effects of his justice upon impenitent sinners! It is vain to flee into defenced cities, or to attempt being courageous, under a sense of guilt. And those prophets who flatter men with vain hopes will most certainly perish along with those whom they have seduced and hardened in wickedness. Our ruin is wholly of ourselves. And it is criminal and absurd to be obstinate in wickedness when God's judgments are just falling on our heads. Hard is the heart which is not affected when destructive calamities befall the nation or church, and all created confidences concur to their ruin. And if such anguish and despair take place in the overthrow of nations, what must take place among the wicked in the last judgment, and in the eternal damnation of hell!

not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they[a] have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return.

4 Therefore I said, [b]Surely these are poor; they are foolish: for they know not the way of the LORD, nor the judgment of their God.

5 I will get me unto [c]the great men, and will speak unto them: for they have known the way of the LORD, and the judgment of their God: but these [d]have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds.[2]

6 Wherefore a lion[3] out of the forest shall slay them, and [e]a wolf of the evenings[4] shall spoil them, a leopard shall watch over their cities: every one that goeth out thence shall be torn in pieces; [f]because their transgressions are many, and their backslidings are increased.[5]

7 ¶ How[g] shall I pardon[6] thee for this? thy children have forsaken me, and [h]sworn by them that are no gods: when [i]I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery, and assembled themselves by troops in the harlots' houses.

8 They[k] were as fed horses in the morning: every one neighed after his neighbour's wife.

9 Shall[l] I not visit for these things? saith the LORD: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?[7]

10 ¶ Go[m] ye up upon her walls, and destroy; but [n]make not a full end: take away her battlements; for they are not the LORD'S.[8]

11 For the house of Israel and the house of Judah have [o]dealt very treacherously against me, saith the LORD.

12 They [p]have belied the LORD, and said, It is not he,[9] neither shall evil come upon us, neither shall we see sword nor famine:

13 And[q] the prophets shall become wind,[1] and the word is not in them: thus shall it be done unto them.[2]

14 Wherefore thus saith the LORD God of hosts, Because ye speak this word, [r]behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them.

15 ¶ Lo, [s]I will bring a nation upon you from far, O [t]house of Israel,[3] saith the LORD: it is a mighty nation, it is an ancient nation, a nation whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say.

16 Their[u] quiver is as an open sepulchre, they are all mighty men.

17 And[v] they shall eat up thine harvest, and thy bread, which thy sons and thy daughters should eat: they shall eat up thy flocks and thine herds: they shall eat up thy vines and thy fig-trees: they shall impoverish thy fenced cities, wherein thou trustedst, with the sword.

18 Nevertheless in those days, saith the LORD, I [w]will not make a full end with you.

19 And it shall come to pass, when ye shall say, [x]Wherefore doeth the LORD our God all these things unto us? then shalt thou answer them, [y]Like as ye have forsaken me, and served strange gods in your land; so shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not yours.

20 ¶ Declare this in the house of Jacob, and publish it in Judah, saying,

21 Hear now this, [z]O foolish people, and without understanding;[5] which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not:

22 Fear[a] ye not me? saith the LORD: [b]will ye not tremble at my presence, which [c]have placed the sand[6] for the bound of the sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it; and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it?

23 But[d] this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone.

24 Neither [e]say they in their heart, [f]Let us now fear the LORD our God, [g]that giveth rain, both the former and the latter, in his season: he reserveth unto us the [h]appointed weeks of the harvest.

25 Your[i] iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withholden good things from you.

26 For among my people are found wicked men:[7] they[k] lay wait,[8] as he that setteth snares: they set a trap, they catch men.

27 As a cage[9] is full of birds,[1] so are their houses full of deceit:[2] therefore they are become great, and waxen rich.

28 They[l] are waxen fat, they shine: yea, they overpass[3] the deeds of the [m]wicked: [n]they judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, yet they [o]prosper: and the right of the needy do they not judge.

29 Shall[p] I not visit for these things? saith the LORD: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

30 ¶ A[q] wonderful and horrible thing[5] is committed in the land;

31 The[r] prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule[6] by their means; and my people [s]love to have it so: and [t]what will ye do in the end thereof?[7]

CHAPTER V. Ver. 3. Thou requirest and regardest upright dealings; but they, under all thy lesser judgments, have stupified themselves, and become more and more stubborn and rebellious. 12–14. They have contradicted the faithful messages of God by his prophets, and pretended that they spoke of themselves in foretelling calamities; and that their words were but a mere puff of noisy wind, which would neither profit nor hurt anybody, unless they should be fulfilled on themselves. Therefore God's words by Jeremiah shall be accomplished in the fearful destruction of them and their country. 31. The prophets fit their predictions to the ambitious humours of the priests and princes; the people delight to be flattered with promises of prosperity; and what can these things end in but ruin to you all?

Ver. 2. Neither word nor oath could be believed—a state to which idolatry, superstition, and libertinism speedily conduct any people.—Note, Where God is not honoured, in vain do men talk of honour. They raise an idol, and they worship it, so long and so far as that worship pleases them; and then, like other idols, it is cast down, and, as 'wicked men and seducers wax worse and worse,' some baser idol of lust or avarice is reared in its stead. So was it with Israel, so will it ever be with unrenewed human nature. C.

Ver. 6. The 'lion' bold, the 'wolf' destructive, the 'leopard'

CHAPTER VI.

1 The enemies sent against Judah encourage themselves. 6 God setteth them on work because of their sins. 9 The prophet lamenteth the judgments of God because of their sins. 18 He proclaimeth God's wrath. 26 He calleth the people to mourn for the judgment on their sins.

O YE[a] children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee out of the midst of Jerusalem, and [b]blow the trumpet in Tekoa, and set up a sign of fire[1] in [c]Beth-haccerem:[2] for[d] evil appeareth out of the north, and great destruction.

2 I have likened the daughter of Zion[3] to a comely[4] and delicate woman.[5]

3 The shepherds[6] with their flocks shall come unto her: [e]they shall pitch their tents against her round about; they shall feed every one in his place.

4 Prepare[g] ye war against her; arise, and let us go up at noon. [h]Woe unto us! for the day goeth away, [i]for the shadows of the evening are stretched out.

5 Arise, and let us go by night, and let us destroy her palaces.

6 ¶ For thus hath the LORD of hosts said, Hew[k] ye down trees,[7] and cast a mount[8] against Jerusalem: this is the city to be visited; she is wholly[l] oppression in the midst of her.

7 As[m] a fountain casteth out her waters, so she casteth out her wickedness: violence and spoil is heard in her; before me continually is grief and wounds.

8 Be[o] thou instructed, O Jerusalem, [p]lest my soul [q]depart[1] from thee; lest [r]I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [s]They shall throughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine: turn back thine hand as a grape-gatherer into the baskets.[2]

10 To[t] whom shall I speak, and give warning, that they may hear? behold, [u]their ear is uncircumcised, and they cannot hearken: behold, [v]the word of the LORD is unto them a reproach; they have no delight in it.[3]

11 Therefore [w]I am full of the fury of the LORD; I am weary with holding in: [x]I will pour it out upon [y]the children abroad, and upon the assembly of young men together: for [z]even the husband with the wife shall be taken, the aged with him that is full of days.

12 And [a]their houses shall be turned unto others, with their fields and wives together: for I[b] will stretch out my hand upon the inhabitants of the land, saith the LORD.

13 For[c] from the least of them even unto the greatest of them every one is given to covetousness;[4] and from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely.

14 They have [d]healed also the hurt[5] of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace: when there is no peace.

15 Were they [e]ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore [f]they shall fall among them that fall: at the time that I visit them they shall be cast down, saith the LORD.

16 Thus saith the LORD, [h]Stand ye in the ways, and see, [i]and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, [j]and walk therein, and ye shall [k]find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.

17 Also I set [l]watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the [m]sound of the trumpet. But they said, [o]We will not hearken.

18 ¶ Therefore hear, [p]ye nations, and know, O congregation, [q]what is among them.

19 Hear,[r] O earth; behold, I will bring evil upon this people, [s]even the fruit of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto my words, [t]nor to my law, but rejected it.

20 To[x] what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country? your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto me.

21 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, [y]I will lay stumbling-blocks[6] before this people, and the fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; the neighbour and his friend shall perish.

22 Thus saith the LORD, [z]Behold, a people cometh from [a]the north country, and a great nation shall be raised from the sides of the earth.[7]

23 They[c] shall lay hold on bow and spear; they are cruel, and have no mercy; their voice roareth like the sea; and they ride upon horses, set in array as men for war against thee, O daughter of Zion.

24 We[e] have heard the fame thereof: our hands wax feeble: [b]anguish hath taken hold of us, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

25 Go[e] not forth into the field, nor walk by the way: [d]for the sword of the enemy and fear is on every side.

26 ¶ O daughter of my people, [g]gird thee

springing suddenly upon its prey, are still expressive emblems of invaders; but were probably, in the days of the prophet, the distinctive war-standards of the principal nations of the Babylonian empire. C.

Ver. 10. The commission of judgement is to the 'lion, wolf, and leopard,' ver. 6. 'Go ye up against her wild vine and destroy, but make not a full end; cut away her branches, for they are not the Lord's.' Boothroyd. C.

Ver. 15. An ancient nation. Babylon was founded by Nimrod, about 150 years after the flood; and as the Jews piqued themselves much on their ancient descent from Abraham, their pride of ancestry is here reminded of a nation of invaders more ancient than themselves. C.

Ver. 31. The professed prophets sustained the faction of the idolatrous priests, and the people approved, because both parties flattered their vanity, bowed to their prejudices, and indulged their sins. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Terrible and manifold are the corruptions of apostate nations and churches. One sin introduces another, till all ranks become absolute monsters in guilt. And, alas! great men, fattened by prosperity or power, are often the most active patterns in, or promoters of, wickedness. Very grating to multitudes of hearers are the faithful messages of God's ministers. But God will make them to know at last whose words shall stand, whether His or theirs. When professors of the true religion live destitute of the fear of God, nothing is so horrible or unnatural but they will commit it. And it is dreadful when men have carried their sins to such a height that God cannot longer forbear punishing them without violating the honour of his perfections. Nothing more hastens things to this crisis than combinations of ministers and magistrates to support one another in wickedness, and corrupt the nation between them.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1–6. Flee out of your cities, particularly Jerusalem, for the Chaldeans are at hand to besiege it. And while the inhabitants are quite with sackcloth, and wallow thyself in ashes: make thee mourning, as for an only son, most bitter lamentation: for the spoiler shall suddenly come upon us.

27 I have set thee for[8] a tower and a fortress among my people, that thou mayest know and try their way.[9]

28 They are all [g]grievous revolters, walking with slanders: they are brass and iron;[1] they are all corrupters.

29 The[h] bellows are burned, the lead[2] is consumed[3] of the fire; the founder melteth in vain: for the wicked are not plucked away.

30 [i]Reprobate[4] silver shall men call them, because the LORD hath [j]rejected them.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Jeremiah is sent to call for true repentance, to prevent the Jews' captivity. 8 God rejecteth their rain confidence, 12 by the example of Shiloh. 17 He threateneth them for their idolatry. 21 He rejecteth the sacrifices of the disobedient. 29 He exhorteth to mourn for their abominations in Tophet, 32 and the judgments for the same.

THE [a]word[1] that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Stand in the [b]gate of the LORD's house, and proclaim there this word, and say, [c]Hear the word of the LORD, all ye of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the LORD.

3 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [d]Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place.

4 Trust[e] ye not in lying words, saying, [f]The temple of the LORD, the temple of the LORD, the temple of the LORD, are these.

5 For [k]if ye throughly amend your ways and your doings; if ye throughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour;

6 If[l] ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, [j]neither walk after other gods to your hurt:

7 Then[k] will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers, for ever and ever.[2]

8 ¶ Behold, [e]ye trust in lying words, that cannot profit.

9 Will[m] ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods [o]whom ye know not;

10 And[p] come and stand before me in this house, which is called by my name,[3] and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations?

11 Is[q] this house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers in your eyes? [r]behold, even I have seen it, saith the LORD.

12 But go ye now unto my place [s]which was in Shiloh,[4] where I set my name at the first, and see [t]what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel.

13 And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the LORD, and I spake unto you, helpless, weak, and terrified, the enemies shall surround the city, and encourage one another, day and night, to give the assault, and destroy it. 9–11. By repeated murders and captivities they shall desolate the country. But to what purpose shall I warn this careless, ignorant, and hardened generation, who detest every message that comes from God, and reckon reproofs slanderous reproaches? Therefore my mind is so full of prophetic threatenings, and of zeal to utter them, that I cannot any longer forbear, but I must denounce destruction to persons of all ages, ranks, and relations. 14. The priests and prophets, instead of faithful reproofs for sin, and denunciation of approaching judgments, do, by their flattering and false predictions of peace, lull the people into a fatal security. 16, 17. Inquire after, and walk in, the good old way of faith and holiness prescribed in paradise, and walked in by your pious ancestors; and thus shall you find both temporal and eternal happiness.—Hearken to the voice of God's ministers, charging you with your sins, and warning you of approaching judgments. 18. Let therefore the heathen nations around observe to what height of wickedness and ripeness for judgments they are arrived! 27–30. I have therefore, under my own infallible protection, set up Jeremiah to observe and reprove their conduct. But they are obstinately wicked, abandoned to lying, slander, and every other base and abominable thing, corrupting themselves and one another. The instructions and admonitions of prophets, and the rebukes of Providence, are of no avail to reform them. Therefore they must be utterly rejected of God and men, as useless and abominable.

Ver. 1. Children of Benjamin. Jerusalem was situated partly in the lot of Benjamin, partly in that of Judah. The exhortation seems directed to Benjamin, either because the supreme power and consequent misrule lay in the hands of Judah, or perhaps they were less depraved than their brethren, and therefore more likely to listen to advice; or, by selecting the tribe among whom he dwelt, the prophet may have hoped to stir up the other to a holy jealousy. See Ro. 10. 19; 11. 11. C.

Ver. 3. Several of the predatory nations of the East are still, not partially, but universally, both soldiers and shepherds. And even at this day the Arabs with their flocks occupy the best of the land of Judea, combining the fearful characters of robber and murderer with that of shepherd. C.

Ver. 4, 5. The first clause conveys God's commission of judgment; the second, the alacrity of the summoned host to 'go up at noon'—the usual time of repose; the third declares their grief that they have not arrived in time to see to do the work of destruction; while ver. 5 declares their impatience for a night attack—the ordinary time for the assault of fortresses. C.

Ver. 6. Cast a mount against Jerusalem. The original is not a raised mount to overlook the walls, but any missile cast against them. The balista, the catapulta, and the scorpion were, in point of fact, enormous bows, variously contrived, by means of springs, ropes, and levers, for shooting arrows or stones against besieged places. C.

Ver. 14. The Jewish priests held the office of physician, as may be seen in the law of the leper, where the symptoms of the disease are most accurately described, and the completeness of the cure most imperatively required. But as the soul is more precious than the body, so is the effectual cure of its diseases proportionally important. To this neither prophet nor priest had attended; but contented themselves with inculcating a narrow and superficial morality, without insisting upon the bodies being presented 'living sacrifices,' and their hearts 'transformed' by 'the renewing' of the Holy Spirit, Ro. 12. 1, 2. C.

Ver. 16. Antiquity, as such, is entitled to no veneration in things civil or religious; for if it were, then were violence and oppression venerable institutions, Ge. 6. 5, 11, 13; then were unbelief and idolatry worthy of all acceptation, Ge. 6. 3; Jos. 24. 2. Antiquity is venerable and authoritative just so far as its records and practices are 'good,' that is, authorized of God; and so far as they give 'rest to the soul,' that is, lead men to JESUS, his righteousness and service, Mat. 11. 28. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Sinners must often be alarmed before they will awaken. But fixed is the connection between national sins and national judgments. And the more luxurious and delicate people have lived, their calamity is the more insupportable. When an angry God is the leader, eager and alert to follow are the instruments of his wrath. But, O! how he multiplies his kind, though severe, admonitions before he strikes the fatal blow that desolates the country! Yet no direction, no warning, no good pattern, will prevail with hardened despisers of Christ—the way, the truth, and the life. His judgments on such must therefore appear righteous to every rational beholder. Nor can any pretences to devotion or reformation avail while men continue abandoned to wickedness. Yea, dreadful and desperate must be the issue with those upon whom not all the repeated pains of prophets and providences make any suitable impression.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 4. Do not imagine that, because the temple has been the place of God's special residence, he will never forsake it, but uphold it for ever. 9–11. Will ye practise the vilest abominations, and presumptuously appear in my courts, as if ceremonial services could atone for your guilt, and procure you a new indulgence in sin? Is my temple become a refuge for such notorious criminals? 21. You may eat or do what you please with all your offerings, for I detest them.

Ver. 4. Either these courts, and buildings, and apartments, or these worshippers, are the temple of the LORD. In the one view the Jews trusted in the temple as their protection, ver. 14, supposing it had preserved Judah when the ten tribes were carried away; in the other view, they 'trusted in themselves that they were righteous,' and would be preserved on account of the covenant with Abraham, or their own ceremonial observances. C.

Ver. 10. We are delivered, &c. As if they had said, We have been delivered from Egypt, from the perils of the wilderness, from the Philistines, from Sennacherib, and all other enemies, that we might enjoy this freedom of worshipping the gods of our own choice, and practising those rites that the over-scrupulous prophets call 'abominations,' but which we consider rational worship of the 'gods that brought us up out of the land of Egypt,' Ex. 32. 4. C.

Ver. 21. The burnt-offerings were wholly consumed, Le. 1. 9, but only the fat of the peace-offerings. The rest belonged to the priest, and was spent in a religious festival, Le. 7. 29–34; De. 12. 11, 12. God here authorizes them to eat of both; as, being the offerings of hypocrisy and pollution, both were equally unacceptable to him. C.

Ver. 22. This statement draws no contrast between 'ceremonial observances and spiritual duties,' nor asserts any comparative superiority of the one over the other. It merely relates a simple fact—that God neither 'spake nor commanded' anything concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifice in 'the day' that he brought Israel out of the land of Egypt. That 'day' was the day of passing the Red Sea—the last of Egypt, the first of freedom. See Ex. 15. 26. Neither was there, in the moral law, anything spoken or commanded concerning burnt-offering or sacrifice, see Ex. 20. 1–17; nor was it until the people had, through fear, 'removed and stood afar off,' and prayed that God should speak to Moses, and not to them, that any mention was made of sacrifice, Ex. 20. 24. C.

Ver. 25. Rising up early. As every word of God is fraught with plenitude of meaning, the frequent mention of 'rising up early' is not to be regarded as a casual expression, but as a divine lesson, delivered by example, in favour of early rising—a practice alike conducive to health of body, soundness of intellect, and growth in grace. C.

Ver. 27. Since God knew they would not answer, why did he send? Many evident reasons might be assigned, but the most obvious is sufficient:—though they might not answer, others might take warning by their sin of neglect and severity of punishment. C.

Ver. 33. Tophet was situated at, or close to, the junction of the glens of Hinnom and Kidron, just outside the walls of the ancient city of Jerusalem, and in full view of the temple on Moriah. It is encompassed by high rocks and naked cliffs, and every rock and cliff is honey-combed with tombs. It is a literal fact that RUINS OF SHILOH—WHERE ABIJAH THE PROPHET LIVED. [JEREMIAH, vii:12.]—"But go ye now into my place which was in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people in Israel." It is said in Joshua, xviii:1, that "the whole congregation of the children of Israel assembled together at Shiloh, and set up the tabernacle of the congregation there;" but because of Israel's wickedness the Philistines were permitted to smite and slay them in Shiloh, so that there fell in Israel 30,000 footmen, and the ark of God was taken here, and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were slain. Here we have the ruins of this city where the ark of the covenant remained so long. It is about 20 miles north of Jerusalem, on the way to Nazareth. There is nothing here but broken ruins. In May, when this scene was taken, this whole region was illuminated with flowers.

rising[u] up early[s] and speaking, but ye heard not; and [t]I called you, but ye answered not;

14 Therefore [z]will I do unto this house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you and to your fathers, as I have done to [y]Shiloh.[6]

15 And I will cast you out of my sight, [z]as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim.[7]

16 Therefore [a]pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee.

17 ¶ Seest[b] thou not what they do in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem?

18 The[c] children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to make cakes to the [8]queen[9] of heaven,[1] and to pour out drink-offerings unto other gods, that they[d] may provoke me[2] to anger.

19 Do[e] they provoke me to anger? saith the LORD: do they not provoke themselves,[3] to the confusion of their own faces?

20 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [f]Behold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground; and it shall burn, and shall not be quenched.

21 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; [h]Put your burnt-offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh.

22 For [i]I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning[4] burnt-offerings or sacrifices:

23 But this thing commanded I them, saying, [j]Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people; and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you.

24 But [k]they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels and in the imagination[5] of their evil heart, and went[6] backward,[1] and not forward.

25 Since the [n]day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day, I have even [o]sent unto you all my servants the prophets, daily rising up early, and sending them:

26 Yet[p] they hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear, but hardened their neck: they did worse than their fathers.

27 Therefore thou shalt speak all these words unto them, [q]but they will not hearken to thee: thou shalt also call unto them; but they will not answer thee.

28 But thou shalt say unto them, [r]This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the LORD their God, nor receiveth correction:[7] truth is perished, and is cut off from their mouth.

29 ¶ Cut[s] off thine hair,[8] O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places;[9] for the LORD [t]hath rejected and forsaken the [u]generation of his wrath.

30 For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the LORD: they have set [v]their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it.

31 And they have built the [x]high places of Tophet,[1] which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I [y]commanded them [z]not, neither came it into[3] my heart.

32 ¶ Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, [a]that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor, The valley of the son of Hinnom, but, The valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet till there be no place.

33 And the [c]carcases of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away.

34 Then [b]will I cause to cease from the cities of Judah, and from the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness,[4] the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; for the land shall be desolate.

1 The calamity of the Jews, both dead and alive. 4 The prophet upbraideth their foolish and shameless impenitency. 13 He sheweth their grievous judgment, 18 and bewaileth their desperate estate.

AT that[1] time, saith the LORD, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves:

2 And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, [a]whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: [b]they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; [c]they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth.[2]

they have buried in Tophet until there is no place. As I returned from a visit to this spot to my temporary abode on Olivet, in the gray twilight of a summer evening, I saw what appeared to me to be a terrible illustration of the fulfilment of this strange prophecy. I saw hyænas, jackals, and vultures tearing the corpses from the shallow graves in the modern Jewish cemetery on the side of the Kidron. With what harrowing vividness did the prophet's dire prediction then flash upon my mind! P.

REFLECTIONS.—God's ministers have need of great boldness in facing multitudes of obstinate sinners. And it is common for the most profligate hypocrites to hope that their external privileges will recommend them to the favour of God, and even to use them as encouragements to the most horrid impieties. One public judgment of God is ordinarily a presage of another, as well as a warning to avoid the causes of it. But, alas! hopeless is their case for whom God's people must not pray! And yet how readily children confirm the denunciations of God against their parents, by following their evil courses! Ceremonies and forms of devotion do but provoke God more and more against men, who prefer them to the standing duties of morality. Slow and gradual, but at last most certain, are his judgments upon obstinate transgressors. And hardened and barbarous sinners have their crimes fearfully marked in their punishment, and are made to change their sinful mirth into everlasting anguish.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 4–9. Though they are fallen life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the LORD of hosts.

4 ¶ Moreover, thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD; [a]Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return?

5 Why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden[b] back by a perpetual backsliding? [c]they hold fast deceit, [d]they refuse to return.

6 [e]I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: [f]no man repented him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done? every one turned to his course, [g]as the horse rusheth into the battle.

7 Yea, [h]the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; [i]and the turtle, and the crane, and the swallow, observe the time of their coming: but my people know not the judgment of the LORD.[3]

8 How[k] do ye say, We are wise, and the law of the LORD is with us? Lo, certainly [l]in vain[4] made he it; the pen of the scribes is in vain.[5]

9 The[m] wise men are ashamed,[6] they are dismayed and taken: lo, they have rejected the word of the LORD; and what [n]wisdom[7] is in them?

10 Therefore [o]will I give their wives unto others, and their fields to them that shall inherit[8] them: [p]for every one, from the least even unto the greatest, is given to covetousness; from the prophet even unto the priest, every one dealeth falsely.

11 For[q] they have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace.

12 Were[r] they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore shall they fall among them that fall; [s]in the time of their visitation they shall be cast down, saith the LORD.

13 ¶ I will surely consume[9] them, saith the LORD: [t]there shall be no grapes on the vine, nor figs on the fig-tree, and the leaf shall fade; and the things that I have given them shall pass away from them.[1]

14 Why do we sit still? [u]assemble yourselves, and let us enter into the defenced cities, and let us [v]be silent there; for the LORD our God hath [w]put us to silence, and given us [x]water of [2]gall to drink, because we have sinned against the LORD.

15 We [y]looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of health, and behold trouble!

16 The[z] snorting of his horses was heard from Dan;[3] the[a] whole land trembled at the sound of the neighing of his strong ones; for they are come,[4] and have devoured the land, and all that is in it;[5] the city, and those that dwell therein.

17 For, behold, I will send [b]serpents,[6] cockatrices, among you, which will not be charmed, and they shall bite you, saith the LORD.

18 ¶ When I would comfort myself against sorrow, [c]my heart is faint in[7] me.[8]

19 Behold, [d]the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people, [e]because of them that dwell in a far country:[9] Is[f] not the LORD in Zion? [g]is not her king in her? why have they provoked me[1] to anger with their graven images, and with strange vanities?

into grievous calamities, they will hearken to no counsel that will tend to their recovery; but persevering in their wickedness, they continue firmly trusting to the flattering delusions of their false prophets. Scarcely one of them seriously thinks what he has done; but in general they rush forward into abominable practices, quite thoughtless and regardless of danger. More brutish than the fowls of heaven, they have no proper discernment either of God's mercies or judgments.—Though God has given them his law, and it has been copied out and expounded to them, and they even boast of it, yet they make no good use of it. Their politicians can advise nothing for their relief, and indeed show themselves arrant fools by their rejection of God's word. 18–20. I am almost overcome with grief to hear the cries of the people, occasioned by the ravage of the Chaldeans. How comes it that we, who are God's people, and have his temple among us, are thus destroyed by profane heathens? It is because of our idolatries; and after all our looking for assistance from the Egyptians or others, the season is past, and no help is come. 22. All means of help fail, because we continue obstinate in our sin.

Ver. 2. It seems natural to the living man to be anxious about his dead body. This natural feeling seems heightened by the hope and assurance of a resurrection. Whatever therefore interferes with the repose of the grave, seems equally to violate the feelings of nature and religion. Such violation, however, may arise (1). From rude, irreverent, and savage neglect or contempt. (2) In condemnation of some sin of the dead, and as a lesson to the living; thus Josiah burned the bones of the idolaters on the altar at Bethel, 2 Ki. 23. 16, 20. (3) As matter of idle curiosity or science; thus the mummies of Egypt form an ordinary article of European commerce among the learned. (4) They have not unfrequently been dragged from their resting-places as manure for the earth. (5) Less frequently, and less extensively, for the purpose of superstitious and unholy rites. (6) For the purpose of clearing the sepulchral vaults as dwelling-places for a wretched and houseless population; of which fact examples are often found in various parts of Western Asia. C.

Ver. 3. Death shall be chosen rather than life. Examples of the voluntary choice of death have frequently occurred among the Jews when cruelly persecuted under pretence of religion, but really on account of their wealth and usury. Thus, during the reign of king John, in the city of York in England, a large party, having first put their wives and children to death, set fire to the place in which they were assailed, and, with all their riches, perished miserably by their own hands. C.

Ver. 16. The snorting of his horses. Many eastern armies are altogether composed of horsemen; all others, and they are often very numerous, are mere camp-followers, and never engaged in battle. C.

Ver. 21. I am black. A phrase signifying the deepest melancholy and distress—an allusion to the overcasting of the sky with black clouds before a storm, ch. 14. 2; Joel 2. 6; Na. 2. 10. C.

Ver. 22. Balm in Gilead. The Balsamum judaicum has been celebrated by Pliny, Tacitus, &c., for its costliness, its medicinal virtues, and as the product of Judea alone, and of one particular spot in that country which Josephus assigns to Jericho. Bochart, however, considers the Gilead balm to be the resin of the terebinth, which grows abundantly in that district; and as it and similar products are often used in dressing wounds at particular stages, this opinion seems the most probable. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Barbarous is the outrage of bloody conquerors in sporting with the remains of the dead. But it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of an angry God, who can stretch out his hand to death and damnation to devour us. Just is his judgment in exposing idolaters, even when dead, before the idols which they had loved and worshipped in life; and fearful is the state when life becomes a burden, and men prefer to it a random leap into eternity. How obstinate against God, how attached to apostasy and self-imposition, how heedless of their own conduct, and how regardless of God's Word, do most men live! But none are more distinguished plagues to nations than evil, flattering, and impudent clergy. Nor shall any in hell have a deeper share of damnation. To their running unsent of God, preaching another gospel, and slight dealing with the consciences of sinners, is owing the ruin of nations and churches, and the everlasting misery of millions. But when God arms himself to judgment against a people, what multitudes of calamities beset them! what deprivation of comforts! what disappointments, terrors, and despair! And it is greatly affecting to faithful ministers to see ruin, inevitable ruin, coming on their congregation, church, or nation.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 2. Princes in Asia frequently erect in the desert parts of their dominions rest-houses, or choultries, where travellers may reside for a night, a solitary and uncomfortable dwelling, but preferable to a palace amidst profligate and abandoned society. C.

Ver. 13. And the Lord saith—that is, Messiah saith—'God manifest in the flesh,' the only 'wise man,' 'the wisdom of God'—he declares the origin of natural to be moral evil: and traces up the stream of judgment to the fountainhead of sin. C.

Ver. 15. Wormwood. This is, most probably, the plant commonly so named.—Gall. What plant is meant is not known, but there can be no doubt that it signifies something very bitter—the emblem of sorrow and distress. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Manifold causes of weeping have faithful ministers in this world. And it is a fearful token of approaching judgments when they are so vexed with their people's abominations as to become weary of dwelling among them. Alas! sinful lusts transform even professors into very devils in crimes. Many are at great pains to secure their own damnation; and one sin opens the door for another. But terrible are the judgments of God upon obstinate sinners. And in a wonderful manner, by the same fire which consumes the wicked, he refines his own people. But every step of departure from him tends only to misery. And let sinners flee where they will, his curse attends them. Death closely follows sin. And very foolish are they who lament losses and death, but never lament sin as the cause of them, nor stand in awe of damnation. But it is very difficult to wean hardened sinners, especially gospel despisers, from every false confidence. Line must be upon line, and precept upon precept, and perhaps after all they will cleave thereto, and perish with heathens.

20 The harvest is past,[2] the summer is ended, and we are not saved.

21 For[p] the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt; I am black; astonishment hath taken hold on me.

22 Is there no [q]balm in Gilead? [r]is there no physician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?[3]

CHAPTER IX.

1 Jeremiah lamenteth the Jews for their manifold sins, 9 and for their judgments. 12 Disobedience is the cause of their bitter calamity. 17 He exhorteth to mourn for their destruction. 23 and to trust not in themselves, but in God. 25 He threatneth both Jews and Gentiles.

OH that[a] my head[1] were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!

2 Oh[b] that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people, and go from them! for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men.

3 And[c] they bend their tongues like their bow for lies; but they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth: for they [d]proceed from evil to evil, and they [e]know not me, saith the LORD.

4 Take[g] ye heed every one of his neighbour,[2] and trust ye not in any brother: [h]for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbour [i]will walk with slanders.

5 And[j] they will deceive[3] every one his neighbour, and will not speak the truth: they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and [k]weary themselves to commit iniquity.

6 Thine[l] habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they [m]refuse to know me, saith the LORD.

7 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts,[4] Behold,[o] I will melt them,[5] and try them; for how[p] shall I do for the daughter of my people?

8 Their[q] tongue is as an arrow shot out;[6] it speaketh deceit: one [r]speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but in heart[7] he layeth his wait.[8]

9 ¶ Shall[s] I not visit them for these things? saith the LORD: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

10 For[t] the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing, and for the [u]habitations[1] of the wilderness a lamentation, because they are burned up,[2] so that none can pass through them; neither can men hear the voice of the cattle: [v]both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled; they are gone.

11 And I [w]will make Jerusalem heaps, and a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah [x]desolate,[5] without an inhabitant.

12 ¶ Who[y] is the wise man, that may understand this? and who is he to whom the mouth of the LORD hath spoken, that he may declare [z]it, for what the land perisheth and is burned up like a wilderness, that none passeth through?

13 And the LORD saith,[a] Because they have forsaken my law which I set before them, and have not obeyed my voice, neither walked therein;

14 But have walked after the [b]imagination of their own heart, and after Baalim, which their fathers taught them:

15 Therefore[g] thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, [d]I will feed them, even this people, with wormwood, and give them water of gall[7] to drink.

16 I will [e]scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known: and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed[8] them.

17 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [h]Consider ye, and call for the [i]mourning women, that they may come; and send for [k]cunning women, that they may come:

18 And let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids gush out with waters.

19 For [l]a voice of wailing is heard out of Zion, How are we spoiled! we are greatly confounded, because we have forsaken the land, because our dwellings have [m]cast us out.[1]

20 Yet hear the word of the LORD, [n]O ye women, and let your ear receive the word of his mouth, [o]and teach your daughters wailing, and every one her neighbour lamentation:[2]

21 For [p]death is come up into our [q]windows, and is entered into our palaces, to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets.

22 Speak, Thus saith the LORD, [r]Even the carcases of men shall fall as dung upon the open field, and as the handful after the harvestman,[4] and none shall gather them.

23 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, [s]Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches:

24 But [t]let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the LORD which [u]exercise loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: for in these things [v]I delight, saith the LORD.

25 ¶ Behold,[y] the days come, saith the LORD, that [w]I will punish[5] all them which are [x]circumcised with the uncircumcised;

26 Egypt,[c] and Judah, and Edom, and the children of Ammon, and Moab,[6] and all that are in the utmost corners,[7] that dwell in the wilderness; for all these nations are uncircumcised, and all the house of Israel are [y]uncircumcised in the heart.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 17–22. Bring all your goods out of the country, where they are exposed to plunder, into the strongholds; for quickly will I, in a furious manner, drive out the inhabitants of this land by death and captivity. Alas! almost insupportable is my grief, that the whole Jewish church and nation should be quite unhinged, and none able in the least to help them! The rulers of both are ignorant and wicked; therefore shall they and their people be ruined or dis-

FALLEN COLUMNS OF THE PARTHENON—DORIC COLUMNS OF THE STYLE OF ARCHITECTURE WHICH FLOURISHED IN ATHENS DURING THE TIME THAT JEREMIAH WROTE. [Jeremiah, x:10.]—"But the Lord is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting king; at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation." Jeremiah is supposed to have written the words referred to above about B. C. 600. In this very year Pherecydes, the philosopher, was born, and this was a flourishing period of the Doric and Ionic orders of architecture in Athens. The Parthenon, fallen columns of which are shown in the above picture, was the most beautiful specimen of Doric architecture ever seen. Looking upon these pieces of broken marble as they lie scattered on the Acropolis, we can not help feeling the force of the words of Jeremiah: "The nations of the earth shall not be able to abide his indignation." In no other nation has architecture come to such high and exquisite perfection as in Greece but it was all consecrated to idolatry.

CHAPTER X.

1 The great disparity between God and idols. 17 The prophet exhorteth to flee from the calamity to come. 19 He lamenteth the spoil of the tabernacle by foolish pastors. 23 He maketh an humble supplication.

HEAR ye[a] the word which the LORD speaketh unto you, [b]O house of Israel:

2 Thus saith the LORD, [c]Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them.

3 For the [1]customs of the people are vain: for [d]one cutteth a tree out of the forest, the work of the hands of the workman, with the axe:

4 They[e] deck it with silver and with gold; they fasten it with nails and with hammers, that it move not.

5 They are upright as the palm-tree, [2]but speak not; [f]they must needs be borne, because they cannot go. Be not afraid of them; [3]for they cannot do evil, neither also is it in them to do good.

6 Forasmuch as [4]there is none like unto thee, O LORD; thou art great, and thy name is great in might.

7 Who[g] would not fear thee, O King of nations? for to thee[2] doth it appertain:[5] forasmuch as among all the wise men of the nations, and in all their kingdoms, there is none like[4] unto thee.

8 But they are [5]altogether [6]brutish and foolish; the stock[6] is a doctrine of vanities.

9 Silver[h] spread into plates is brought from Tarshish,[c] and gold from [7]Uphaz, the work of the workman, and of the hands of the founder: blue and purple is their clothing; they are all the work of cunning men.[7]

10 But[i] the LORD is the true God,[8] he is the living God, and an everlasting [9]King: [8]at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation.

11 Thus shall ye say unto them, The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even [9]they shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens.

12 He [10]hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion.

13 When he uttereth his voice,[1] there is a multitude[2] of waters in the heavens, and [11]he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth: he maketh lightnings with[3] rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

14 Every man is [12]brutish in his [4]knowledge: every founder is confounded by the graven image: [13]for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

15 They[j] are vanity, and the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

16 The[k] portion of Jacob is not like them: for he is the [14]former of all things; and Israel is [15]the rod of his inheritance: the LORD of hosts is his name.[5]

17 ¶ Gather[l] up thy wares[6] out of the land, O inhabitant[7] of the fortress:

18 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, [16]I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once, and will distress them, that they [17]may find it [8]so.

19 ¶ Woe[m] is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous: but I said, Truly this is a grief, and I [18]must bear it.

20 My tabernacle[9] is spoiled, and all my cords are broken: my children are gone forth of me, and they are not; there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, and to set up my curtains.

21 For the pastors[1] are become brutish, and have not sought the LORD: therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered.

22 Behold, [19]the noise of the bruit[2] is come, and a great commotion out of the north country, to make the cities of Judah desolate, and a den of dragons.

23 ¶ O LORD, I know that the [20]way of man

7 Then not makers, or creators, of gods, ver. 11. C.—How admirably is this whole passage fitted to demonstrate to thoughtful men the utter folly of idolatry. The prophet, as it were, anatomizes the whole system. He discerns the stocks which are called gods, and he thus shows not merely that they cannot aid others, but they are themselves helpless. That such discourses as this failed to reclaim the Jews proves how grievously they had fallen, how reason itself had left them. So it is in all ages, among all people. When men wilfully reject the truth, systematically turn aside from the commands and ordinances of the Lord, his Spirit ceases to strive with them: they are given over to a reprobate mind.—C.

5 The comparison here drawn between the false gods of the heathen and the JEHOVAH God of Israel is sublime. The Creator of all things is contrasted with the helpless, senseless stock which is moulded by the hand of a poor frail creature. It seems strange that the Israelites should have been so grievously deluded as to turn from the living God, to whose all mighty power and infinite mercy their national history bore such striking testimony, and to have given homage to idols.—E.

Ver. 5. Upright. A most graphic description of the attitude of Egyptian idols, and probably of all idols, until Grecian sculpture gave everything but life to the marble, and induced the learned but most foolish Athenians to exclaim, when they looked upon a statue of Jupiter, That is no statue, that is the very god himself! How melancholy, alas! that science and art may attain their highest perfection, while religion sinks into the utmost degradation of idolatry! C.

Ver. 9. Blue—the colour of the unclouded eastern sky, the emblem of Deity; purple—the colour of kings, the emblem of royalty and dominion. C.

Ver. 11. This verse is in the Chaldee, as if to prepare the Hebrews with an answer to their idolatrous masters, when tempting them to idolatry. It is not improbable that, like the sentences adduced by Paul, Ac. 17. 28, it may have been a quotation from some of the earlier writings of the Chaldeans before they were perverted by idolatry. C.

Ver. 13. When God speaks to the ear of reason by the voice of thunder, the clouds, by the agency of electricity, are converted into water—not into a mass which would bring ruin, but into multitudinous drops that shower down fertility.—By a wonderful process he causes vapours to ascend from 'the ends,' from all parts of the earth; or does the prophet allude to the almost continual vapours and fogs that hang around the polar regions, the literal 'ends of the earth?'—The winds are literally treasured up by the condensing power of cold, ready, at the will of their Lord, to be drawn out in the breeze or storm. C.

Ver. 14. Brutish in his knowledge. Every man is really 'brutish in knowledge'—in the knowledge of God—until he is 'born again of water and of the Spirit,' Jn. 3. 5. C.

Ver. 15. Of many, the very names have perished, many have been broken to fragments, many overwhelmed in earthquakes, or buried in rubbish and ruins. Can such things have ever been gods? Did learned nations ever worship them? Alas! for Egypt, Greece, and Rome, such were their gods! They are perished! but, alas! for the paintings and images, the idols that still are worshipped! Alas! for the second commandment, which Rome, to her confusion, hath blotted out, though written by the finger of God!—Note, This awful suppression of the second commandment may be witnessed in the Romish catechism called *Christian Doctrine. C.

Ver. 16. Portion. The God from whom Jacob would not part until he should bestow a blessing. See Ge. 32. 26–30; Ps. 119. 57.—Rod. Is it the rod of measurement? or rather the sceptre of power, government, and protection, Ge. 49. 10; Ps. 23. 4. And Israel is literally that people 'by whom and for whom' all nations and kingdoms are still governed, until Christ shall 'inherit all things' in fact, as he already does in *right. C.

Ver. 18. 'The inhabitant of the fortress,' ver. 17, is here introduced, bemoaning his grievous wound and the captivity and loss of his children. C.

Ver. 20. My tabernacle is spoiled. The union of the 'tabernacle' with the 'pastors and flocks,' ver. 21, seems to fix the allusion to the tabernacle of the congregation in the wilderness; and which was afterwards set up in Jerusalem by David, previous to the building of the temple. It is the legitimate emblem of all religious ordinances and assemblies for the public worship of JEHOVAH. C.

Ver. 22. Behold, the noise of the bruit is come! 'Hark! a noise—behold, it draws near!'—Dragons. There is perhaps no distinct species of animal to which the word 'dragon' can be applied; it seems here rather a generic name for all wild beasts frequenting solitary places. C.

Ver. 23. Man is neither wise enough to discover, nor steady enough to pursue, the way of safety and success; his wisdom, and strength, and success must be the gift of God, Ja. 1. 17. C.

Ver. 24. Correct me, but with judgment. 'With judgment,' to reform; not 'with anger,' to extirpate. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Amazing absurdities often prevail even among nations which are famed for worldly wisdom and knowledge. And it is very unreasonable and dangerous for those who have been taught of God to learn the ways of heathens. God's eternal power and Godhead are so manifest as to leave the most stupid idolaters without excuse; and the more we contemplate his unsearchable greatness and glory, the more we shall be filled with reverence and godly fear, and lost in admiration. If he be our King, let us show ourselves faithful subjects, dependent on his protection, and devoted to his service. If he be our Portion, we can wish nothing beyond him. But often men remain ignorant of his excellency, and of the vanity of idols, till it be too late, and till his word be verified in their irrevocable and tremendous destruction. Terrible is the prospect when both rulers and ruled are plunged in ignorance, and abandoned to atheistical neglect of prayer. Neglect of God's worship in families rank-

CHAPTER XI.

1 Jeremiah proclaimeth God's covenant, 8 rebuketh the Jews' disobeying thereof, 11 prophesieth evils to come upon them, 18 and upon the men of Anathoth, for conspiring to kill Jeremiah.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Hear[a] ye the words of this covenant, and speak unto the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem;

3 And say thou unto them, [b]Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [c]Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this [d]covenant,

4 Which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the [e]iron furnace, saying, [f]Obey my voice, and do them, according to all which I command you: so shall ye be my people, and I will be your God;

5 That I may perform the [h]oath which I have sworn unto your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as it is this day.[1] Then answered I, and said, So be it,[2] O LORD.

6 Then the LORD said unto me, [i]Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear ye the words of this covenant, and [j]do them.

7 For [k]I earnestly protested unto your fathers, in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice.

8 Yet[l] they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the imagination[3] of their evil heart: therefore [n]I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant,[4] which I commanded them to do; but they did them not.

9 And the LORD said unto me, [o]A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

10 They are turned back to [p]the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they went after other gods to serve them: [q]the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant, which I made with their fathers.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD, [r]Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape;[5] and [s]though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them.[6]

12 Then shall the cities of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, go and cry [t]unto the gods unto whom they offer incense: but they shall not save them at all in the time of their trouble.[7]

13 For [u]according to the number of thy cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that shameful thing,[8] even altars to burn incense unto Baal.

14 Therefore [v]pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their [9]trouble.[1]

15 What[2] hath [x]my beloved [y]to do in mine house,[3] seeing she hath [z]wrought lewdness with many, and the [a]holy flesh[4] is passed from thee? when thou doest evil,[5] then[b] thou rejoicest.

16 The LORD called thy name, [c]A green olive-tree, fair, and of goodly fruit; [d]with the noise of a great tumult he hath kindled fire upon it, and the branches of it are broken.

17 For the LORD of hosts [e]that planted thee [9]hath pronounced evil against thee, for the evil of the house of Israel, and of the house of Judah, which they have done against themselves, to provoke me to anger, in offering incense unto Baal.

18 ¶ And the LORD [h]hath given me knowledge of it, and I know it: then thou showedst me their doings.[6]

19 But I was [i]like a lamb, or an ox, that is brought to the slaughter; and I knew not that [j]they had devised devices against me, saying, [k]Let us destroy the tree with the fruit[7] thereof, and let us cut him off from the land of the living, that his name may be no more remembered.

20 But, O LORD of hosts, [l]that judgest righteously, that [m]triest the reins and the heart, [o]let men with heathens, and entails his curse upon them. But great is the mercy that, though God correct, yet he will not destroy his people; and that, though we may not pray against corrections, we may pray for the mitigation of them, and hope that the rod will be quickly turned from us.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 15, 16. What have the Jewish nation, whom I once so dearly loved and cherished, now to do in my temple, when they are so abandoned to idolatries, and when their sacrifices, which were once holy, are rendered detestable because of their obstinacy and joy in wickedness? I once made them outwardly flourishing and prosperous, and put them into a capacity to do much good, but now they shall be destroyed by the furious Chaldeans.

Ver. 4. From the iron furnace. A slight examination of the wonderful relics of their labour and skill will show that the Egyptians must have been well supplied with iron tools. And the allusion here, and in Deu. 4. 20, renders it highly probable that they were acquainted with the preparation of iron from the ore, and that the Israelites were condemned to work at their furnaces. C.

Ver. 6. The prophet, it appears, was commanded to itinerate as a preacher of righteousness from city to city, and, as is customary in milder climates, to preach in the public streets. C.

Ver. 13. The Israelites had adopted the custom of Egypt, where every city had its own peculiar tutelary deities, besides the rational gods that were worshipped in common—a system of which it is melancholy to behold the exact reflected image in the tutelary saints assigned by the Church of Rome to countries, cities, families, or individuals. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God greatly loves true holiness; and abundant, but gracious, are his rewards of it. The saints of God delightfully consent to his transactions of grace, but especially to the better promise made with men in Christ, and established upon better promises than the national covenant which God made with Israel. But it is hard to make unregenerate men have so much as a semblance of holiness; on the contrary, they are ready deliberately and obstinately to combine against the Lord their God. But if they will not be ruled by his law, they must be destroyed by his curse. And dreadful is their case for whom prayer cannot avail: God will not, and idols cannot, help. Neither present devotions nor the past favours of God can profit them. Faithful ministers are often barbarously rewarded by those who should be their protectors. And none have been more malicious persecutors than profane clergymen. But if God preserve and vindicate his servants, they may possess their souls in patience, and continue their faithfulness. And, alas! wretched will be the condition of those who have injured them when God rises up to punish.

me see[8] thy vengeance on them; [z]for unto thee have I revealed my cause.

21 Therefore thus saith the LORD of the men of Anathoth that [a]seek thy life, saying, [b]Prophesy not in the name of the LORD, that [c]thou die not by our hand:

22 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will [d]punish[9] them; the young men shall die by the sword, their sons and their daughters shall die by famine;

23 And [e]there shall be no remnant of them, for I will bring evil upon the men of Anathoth, even [f]the year[1] of their visitation.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Jeremiah, complaining of the wicked's prosperity, by faith seeth their ruin. 5 God admonisheth him of his brethren's treachery against him, 7 and lamenteth his heritage. 14 He promiseth to the penitent return from captivity.

RIGHTEOUS [a]art thou, O LORD, when I plead with thee; yet let me talk[1] with thee of thy judgments: [b]Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are all they happy that deal very treacherously?[2]

2 Thou[c] hast planted them; yea, they have taken root: they grow;[3] yea, they bring forth fruit: [d]thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins.

3 But thou, O LORD, [e]knowest me; thou hast seen me, and tried mine heart toward[4] thee; pull[f] them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter.[5]

4 How[h] long shall the land mourn, and the herbs of every field wither, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? the beasts are consumed, and the birds; because they said, [i]He shall not see our last end.

5 ¶ If thou [j]hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst [k]thou contend with horses? and if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustedst, [l]they wearied thee, then how wilt thou do [m]in the swelling of Jordan?[6]

6 For even [n]thy brethren, and the house of thy father, even they have dealt treacherously with thee; yea, [o]they have called a multitude after thee:[7] believe them not, though they speak fair words[8] unto thee.[9]

7 ¶ I[p] have forsaken mine house, I have left mine heritage; I have given the dearly [1]beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies.

8 Mine heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest; it crieth out[2] against me; [r]therefore have I hated it.

9 Mine heritage is unto me as a [3]speckled bird; the birds round about are against her; come ye, [s]assemble all the beasts of the field, come[4] to devour.

10 Many[t] pastors[5] have destroyed my vineyard, they have trodden my portion under foot, they have made my pleasant portion[6] a desolate wilderness.

11 They [u]have made it desolate, and being desolate it mourneth unto me; the whole land is made desolate, because no man layeth it to heart.

12 The[v] spoilers are come upon all high places through the wilderness: for the sword of the LORD shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other end of the land: no flesh shall have peace.

13 They[x] have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns; they have put themselves to pain, but shall not profit; and they shall be ashamed of your revenues, because of the fierce anger of the LORD.[7]

14 ¶ Thus saith the LORD [y]against all mine evil neighbours,[8] that [z]touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit; Behold, [a]I will pluck them out of their land, and [b]pluck out the house of Judah from among them.

15 And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out [c]I will return, and have compassion on them, and will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land.

16 And it shall come to pass, [d]if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, [e]to swear by my name, The LORD liveth; as [f]they taught my people to swear by Baal; then shall they [h]be built in the midst of my people.

17 But [i]if they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 5, 6. If you are so faint and impatient under the opposition of your own poor friends and neighbours at Anathoth, the place of your birth, how wilt thou bear through when all the rulers of Judah shall persecute you, and even your own relations and fellow-priests stir up the common people to destroy you? 7-13. I will quickly abandon my temple and my people, which I once so dearly loved, into the hand of the Chaldean destroyers. Instead of hearkening to my voice, as sheep to their shepherd, they blasphemously contradict my words, reject my government, abuse my messengers, and abandon themselves to rapine and oppression; therefore their heathen neighbours shall assemble in armies to destroy them; Nebuchadnezzar and his princes shall unhinge their constitution in church and state, and lay their whole country terribly desolate. While the crops shall be ruined, all their expensive attempts to save themselves by the help of the Egyptians shall but increase their misery. 14-17. I will also destroy, and carry captive out of their own countries, the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Egyptians, Philistines, Phœnicians, Syrians, and Northern Arabs, who have injured my people; and will afterwards bring back my people, and even part of these nations, to their respective countries; and will even unite them into the same true church, especially in the apostolic and coming periods. (See Introduction, ch. iv. sect. 18, 19.)

Ver. 2. Near in their mouth, as the bit of the bridle to the horse: but far from their reins, the powers by which he is guided or restrained.—Note, The Hebrew word for kidneys or reins is derived from a root that signifies to complete or finish, probably because the circuit of digestion, absorption, and arterial propulsion has been completed or finished when they have separated the superabundant aqueous and saline particles from the blood: and because the completeness of men (fearing God and keeping his commandments, Ec. 12. 13) lies in self-denial, the same word signifies to withhold, restrain, and, as it were, bridle and rein the passions, presenting the body 'a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, man's reasonable service.' C.

Ver. 4. He shall not see our last end. Most probably an allusion to De. 32. 29, and the previous description of the 'latter end,' the state of the Jewish people in 'the latter day,' ver. 15-28. 'He shall not see:' the wickedness charged against this expression can scarcely refer to Jeremiah, as if he had prophesied falsely, or should not live to see his predictions fulfilled, but rather to God, of whom they insinuate or affirm that he is either indisposed or unable to execute his threatened judgments. See Ec. 8. 11. C.

Ver. 9. A speckled bird. The Seventy render it hyena, which is countenanced by the Arabic, and adopted by Bochart, Gesenius, Boothroyd, and others. Jerome supposes it to be the peacock; and Blayney, despairing of identifying the species, translates it 'the bird tzeboa.' But however the word may be translated, the reference is probably not to any species, but to a well-known fact in natural history, viz. the disposition, nay habit, of birds to follow, and, as it were, persecute strange beasts or birds, or birds even of their own species, if speckled with anything uncommon. In such cases the natural timidity of birds seems to give place to a reckless courage, which occasionally incites the weakest to combine in pursuit and assault of their most formidable enemy. C.

Ver. 11. He does not mean no man felt the misery; but that no man 'laid to heart' his own sins, and the national sins, as the procuring cause of the judgments. C.

Ver. 13. Revenues. Boothroyd translates it 'crops,' which seems much more consonant to the tenor of the verse.—Note, The vineyard of the sluggard, the broken wall, the brier, the thistle, and the rank weed, are a shame to the husbandman: but the real shame of any people is sin—whether of a law broken, as

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Under the type of a linen girdle, hidden at Euphrates, God prefigureth the destruction of his people. 12 Under the parable of bottles filled with wine, he foretelleth their excess of misery. 15 He exhorteth them to prevent their future judgments. 22 He showeth their abominations are the cause of these evils.

THUS saith the LORD unto me, Go and get thee a [a]linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it [b]not in water.

2 So I got a girdle, [c]according to the word of the LORD, and put it on my loins.

3 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying,

4 Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to [d]Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.

5 So [e]I went and hid it by Euphrates, as the LORD commanded me.

6 And it came to pass after many days, that the LORD said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take the girdle from thence, which I commanded thee to hide there.

7 Then I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hid it: and, behold, the girdle was marred, it was [g]profitable for nothing.[1]

8 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 Thus saith the LORD, [h]After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem.

10 This[i] evil people which refuse to hear my words, which walk in the imagination[2] of their heart, and walk after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them, [j]shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing.

11 For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have [k]I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Judah, saith the LORD; that they might be unto me for a people, and [l]for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory: [m]but they would not hear.[3]

12 ¶ Therefore thou shalt speak unto them this word, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Every[o] bottle shall be filled with wine: and they shall say unto thee, [p]Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine?[4]

13 Then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants of this land, even the kings that sit upon David's throne, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, [q]with drunkenness.

14 And I will dash them[5] one against another,[6] even the fathers and the sons together, saith the LORD; [r]I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them.[7]

15 ¶ Hear[s] ye, and give ear; [t]be not proud: for the LORD hath spoken.

16 Give[u] glory[8] to the LORD your God, before he cause [v]darkness, and before your feet stumble [w]upon the dark mountains,[9] and while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness.

17 But if ye will not hear it, [x]my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride; and mine eye shall weep sore, and run down with tears, because [y]the LORD's flock is carried away captive.

18 Say unto the king and to the queen, [z]Humble yourselves, sit down; for your principalities[1] shall come down, even the crown of your glory.

19 The cities of the [2]south[3] shall be [b]shut up,[4] and none shall open them: [c]Judah shall be carried away captive all of it, it shall be wholly carried away captive.

20 Lift up your eyes, and behold [d]them that come from the north; [e]where is the flock that was given thee,[5] thy beautiful flock?

21 What wilt thou say when he shall [f]punish thee?[7] for [g]thou hast taught them[8] to be captains, and as chief over thee; [h]shall not sorrows take thee, as a woman in travail?

22 ¶ And if thou say in thine heart, [i]Wherefore come these things upon me? [j]for the greatness of thine iniquity are [k]thy skirts discovered, and thy heels [l]made bare.[1]

23 Can[l] the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed[2] to do evil.

24 Therefore[n] will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness.

25 This[o] is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the LORD; because thou hast [p]forgotten me, and [q]trusted in falsehood.

3 It seems probable that Jeremiah was in Babylon at the time when this prophecy was uttered. There is nothing in the story of his life opposed to this supposition, and the whole scope of the narrative appears to sanction the idea that the facts were real and not merely visionary symbols. It would seem too from the subsequent history of the prophet that he was acquainted with the chiefs of the Babylonian armies who conquered Judah; and the special orders given by Nebuchadnezzar (ch. 39. 11) regarding him indicate some previous knowledge. Jeremiah during his visit to Babylon at the time of this prophetic vision may have gained the friendship of those in power.—C.

This passage contains a distinct promise of the restoration of the Philistines, Moabites, &c., in the event of their conversion to Christ; and in a form that seems to indicate that some of them will be converted, and thereupon restored and reorganized into kingdoms; while one will remain in obstinate heathenism, and be 'utterly plucked up and destroyed.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—The prosperity of wicked men has often been a stumbling-block to the godly. But let God do as he will, it is certain he will never do what is unrighteous. His providences may be dark, but never unjust; nay, nor unkind to the upright. We may sit easy under men's revilings, if we be conscious of God's approbation of us. Yea, there is no reason to covet that prosperity which fattens men, particularly hypocritical professors, for the fearful loss of God's favour. Atheistical and prophet-murdering sinners are a great plague to their country. And yet, if ministers will be faithful, they must expect more and more opposition, especially from evil brethren. And very justly the Lord metes out heavier trials to such as rage and fret at lesser ones, even when the lesser kindly prepare for the greater. Dreadful are those sins which make God desert and detest those ordinances and persons for which he has professed the greatest regard. But men's furious rage against him and his ways must be punished with fearful judgments. And yet no judgments fail to harden and exasperate sinners when God has withdrawn his Spirit from them. They who have tempted us to sin, ordinarily become our tormentors in punishing it. And if judgment begin at the house of God, the wicked corrupters and abusers of it need not think long to escape. But the bitterest enemies may be reconciled by the gospel. And such as diligently learn the Lord's ways shall share the blessings of his people; while ruin, dreadful ruin, in every age, shall await obstinate sinners.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 16. Glorify your own God, by confession and repentance of your sins, before he bring the most perplexing, scattering, deathful, and ruinous judgments upon you. 20–23. Behold, O Jews, the Chaldeans shall invade your country, and shall destroy and carry captive your once flourishing multitudes of God's own people; and when they, whom you formerly invited to your assistance (and thus showed them the way to subdue you), shall destroy you, how dreadful shall be your misery and anguish! ## CHAPTER XIV.

1 A grievous famine 7 causeth Jeremiah to pray. 10 The Lord will not be entreated for the people. 13 Lying prophets are no excuse for them. 17 Jeremiah is commanded to bewail their calamities.

THE word[a] of the LORD that came to Jeremiah concerning the [1]dearth.[2]

2 Judah[b] mourneth, and the gates thereof languish; they are black unto the ground; and the cry of Jerusalem is gone up.

3 And their nobles have sent their little ones[3] to the waters: they [c]came to the pits,[4] and found no water; they returned with their vessels empty; [d]they were ashamed and confounded, and [e]covered their heads.

4 Because[g] the ground is chapt, for there was no rain in the earth, [h]the plowmen were ashamed, they covered their heads.

5 Yea, [i]the hind also calved in the field, and forsook it, because there was no grass.

6 And[j] the wild asses did stand in the high places, they snuffed up the wind like dragons; their[k] eyes did fail, because there was no grass.

7 ¶ O[l] LORD, though our iniquities [m]testify against us, [n]do thou it for thy name's sake:[5] for our[o] backslidings are many; we have sinned against thee.

8 O [p]the Hope of Israel, [q]the Saviour thereof in time of trouble, [r]why shouldest thou be as a stranger in the land, and [s]as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night?

9 Why[u] shouldest thou be as a man astonied,[6] as a mighty man that cannot save? yet thou, O LORD, art [v]in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name;[7] leave[x] us not.

10 ¶ Thus saith the LORD unto this people, Thus[y] have they loved to wander, they have not refrained their feet, [z]therefore the LORD doth not accept[8] them: [a]he will now remember their iniquity, and visit their sins.

11 Then said the LORD unto me, [b]Pray not for this people for their good.

12 When[c] they fast, I will not hear their cry; and when they offer burnt-offering and an oblation, I will not accept them; but [d]I will consume them by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence.

13 ¶ Then said I, Ah, Lord GOD! [e]behold, the prophets say unto them, Ye shall not see the sword, neither shall ye have famine; but I will give you assured peace[9] in this place.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, The prophets prophesy lies in my name; [g]I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart.

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name, and I sent them not, yet they say, Sword and famine shall not be in this land; [h]by sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed.

16 And the people to whom they prophesy [i]shall be cast out in the streets of Jerusalem, because of the famine and the sword; and they shall have none to bury them, them, their wives, nor their sons, nor their daughters: for I will pour [j]their wickedness upon them.

17 ¶ Therefore thou shalt say this word unto them, [k]Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease: for [l]the virgin daughter of my people [m]is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous blow.

18 If [n]I go forth into the field, then behold the slain with the sword! and if I enter into the city, then behold them that are sick with famine! yea, both the prophet and the priest [o]go about into a land that they know not.[2]

19 Hast[p] thou utterly rejected Judah? hath extreme disgrace and the basest of servitude; since ye are so hardened in a long course of sinning, that all attempts to remove your spotted practices, or your universal corruptions, are in vain.

Ver. 1. Thus saith the Lord. This is a prophecy in the distinctly symbolical form, and, in some sense, parallel to the parabolic teaching of our Lord.—Go and get thee a linen girdle. The girdle is 'linen' for two reasons. (1) Linen was of Egyptian origin, and is therefore used as a pictorial remembrance of past slavery, followed by future captivity. (2) Because, like Elijah and John, 2 Ki. 1. 8; Mat. 3. 4, it is most probable the prophet had customarily worn a leathern girdle: and now he assumes the linen, to exemplify Judah's taste for foreign finery, and contrast with it the state of rotten and unwashed raggedness into which sin was about to reduce her. C.

Ver. 7. Then I went to Euphrates. Tiphsah, the point of Euphrates nearest to Jerusalem, 1 Ki. 4. 24, was distant about 400 British miles, measuring 'as the bird flies.' This would probably give from 500 to 600 miles of travel. This distance has induced commentators to conclude that the journey was merely in vision. But of this visionary character there is not a trace in the passage; nor is there the shadow of reason for any such violent interpretation. Journeys of equal or greater length, and even on foot, are common in all countries, either for religion or worldly business; and the report of the prophet's journey, accompanied as he most probably would be by a number of his friends and pupils, or by a whole caravan (for it was the great commercial road), would be well calculated to excite the serious attention of some, though it might incur the ridicule of others, among his infatuated countrymen. C.

Ver. 13. God judicially gives them over to the drunkenness of pride, party spirit, and anarchy, ver. 24. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's ministers are often strangely tried for the instruction of their hearers; and it will require all the arts that can be used to make men understand what concerns their eternal welfare. But infinite is the kindness of God in making any of them his peculiar people, to the praise of his glory. Fearfully does he disgrace and ruin such as had behaved unfaithfully in his honourable service; and self-complacence, in parts, gifts, station, wealth, or power, God rejects with abhorrence. Alas! how stupified, and what mutual destroyers, do nations become when God leaves them! Their very managers and protectors do but ruin instead of relieving them; and vain hopes will but aggravate their misery and increase their confusion. Nothing but self-humiliation and repentance can avail when God lifts up his hand to destroy. Nor are the highest too great to sit in the dust when he calls to weeping and mourning for the sins of the land. Those ministers or others who know the terrors of the Lord cannot but tremble and weep for those who, insensible of danger, refuse to amend. Disgraceful miseries shall at last overtake the obstinate; and frequently the persons or things with which they sinned become the instruments of their punishment. Proud and ignorant sinners readily quarrel with the justice of their calamities. But, alas! how extensive and dreadful is God's charge against them, when he sets before them their great iniquities, their fixedness and obstinacy therein, their forgetfulness of and treacherous departure from him, and their mad propensity to whoredom and idolatry! Nothing less than the infinitely precious blood of Jesus, and the infinitely powerful grace of JEHOVAH, can renew and purify a sinner, thus spotted and deformed both in nature and practice. And, alas! dreadful is the guilt and folly that, while God waits to cleanse us, we should so refuse and evade his kindness.

CHAPTER XIV. Ver. 5. The inhabitants of the forest, Ps. 29. 9, had come out to the fields in search of grass, and the hind, the emblem of tenderest love, Pr. 5. 19, had forgot its instinct and forsaken its young through the misery induced by the sins of Jerusalem, ver. 7.—Note, While philanthropists are laudably employed in the prevention or punishment of 'cruelty to animals,' let them never forget that no remedy short of national 'repentance towards God, and faith towards the Lord Jesus Christ,' can ever reach to the root of the evil. C.

Ver. 17. The prophet is commanded to open, as it were, a fountain of tears over their sins, when every fountain of waters was dry, if by any means the contrast and the sympathy might move them to attention, examination, and repentance. C.

Ver. 20. We—that is, the penitent remnant whom, in the worst of times, and in the most apostate churches, God has either preserved as his 'hidden ones,' or endowed and commissioned as martyrs or reformers. C.

* Both Moses and Samuel were characterised by their earnest, powerful, and successful intercessions on behalf of the Israelites, when national sin had attracted national judgment. But even though these great and holy men should return to life, and stand together before God as supplicants for Israel, it would be in vain. Their pleas were now so urged and aggravated that even divine mercy was exhausted, and justice must take its place. The people were not to reason or repent, and even to sinning. miserable, and make the inhabitants of the wealthiest cities pale, faint, and dying. At his nod fields deny their crops, and fountains their water, and cause even the richest to die by hunger and thirst; and not only sinners, but the irrational creatures, for our sakes, share in the punishment. Those who take no shame for their sins, provoke God to confound them with disappointments; and many mourn over their miseries who never mourn over the sinful causes of them. Yea, both sins and judgments often lie heaviest on their hearts who had the least hand in procuring them. Alarmingly dreadful, but just, is God's departure from a church or nation whose Hope and Saviour he has long been. And great is his condescension to indulge his people in the most familiar expostulations, and in the improving of his own excellencies, as arguments to enforce their requests. But no prayers can prevail when he is determined to leave men obstinate in wickedness; no sacrifice can be accepted, no excuse admitted. What plagues to themselves, and all around, are flattering, unfaithful, and erroneous ministers! But they who are faithful cannot forbear intercessions for their people's welfare and salvation. With unutterable groans and expostulations they deprecate their ruin; and encourage themselves therein by the views of God's honour, mercy, power, and blessed relation.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 9. Jerusalem, or Judea, which was once so populous, is bereaved of her inhabitants; destruction hath come upon her in the height of her prosperity, when it was altogether unexpected. 12–14. The hard-hearted and self-conceited Jews shall never be able to grapple with the Chaldean forces, to whom I will give all their wealth, without any possibility of redemption; and who, in execution of my kindled wrath, shall carry them away captives. 15–18. Lord, thou knowest my circumstances; protect, favour, and comfort me, and punish my persecutors. While they are spared, let me not be destroyed, but manifest thy regard to me, as one persecuted for thy sake. I very cheerfully received my commission from thee to be thy prophet, and with pleasure declared thy messages to this people, expecting that they might be moved to repent; but the repeated messages of wrath which I have been appointed to deliver, and the persecution which I have endured on their account, have inexpressibly burdened and sunk my spirits. And must my troubles be perpetual? Wilt thou never deliver me according to thy promise? 19–21. If thou repent of this sinful distrust, and cheerfully and diligently discharge thine office, I will continue thee in it; and if thou faithfully endeavour to convince and reclaim wicked hypocrites, and to comfort upright saints, thou shalt be honoured as a true prophet. But remember thy faithful reproofs to reduce them to that course in which thou walkest, and never comply with or flatter them in their sinful courses; and then will I constantly protect thee against, and at last deliver thee from, all thy furious and powerful persecutors.

Ver. 1. Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, &c. By intercessory prayer Moses prevailed, Ex. 32. 14; Nu. 14. 20, and Samuel likewise, 1 Sa. 7. 9: for this 'power with God' they are specially mentioned, Ps. 99. 6, 8. And while men inquire, cavil, and will neither understand nor believe that these things are so, the humble Christian can rely upon the word which testifies that 'the effectual fervent [inwrought] prayer of a righteous man availeth much,' Ja. 5. 16. C.

Ver. 4. Never was any prophecy more literally fulfilled, and never was there any one more unlikely to be true. (1) Because the Jews were remarkable for their attachment to their native land, to which all their institutions, interests, and recollections bound them, Ps. 137. 5. (2) Because, if scattered, they had hitherto displayed such a tendency to conform to the religion and habits of the heathen that all trace of their separate existence might be expected speedily to disappear. Notwithstanding of these things, they still abide a scattered, but a distinct people. They are found alike in Europe, Asia, Africa, and America: they are citizens of the world—without a country. They abound in Poland, Holland, Russia, and Turkey. In Germany, Spain, Italy, France, and Britain they are more thinly scattered. They are found in Persia, China, and India, east and west of the Ganges, and even in the interior of Africa, south of Timbuctoo' (Keith). C.

Ver. 6. God is perfect, therefore every attribute of his nature is perfect: (1) in itself; and (2) in its relation to his other attributes. Hence it follows that while his 'long-suffering' is perfect, so likewise his justice is perfect; and so God is said to be 'weary of repenting,' when the time of his 'long-suffering' is ended, and the relative time of his righteous retribution arrived. See ver. 15: Ex. 32. 12; Nu. 23. 19. C.

Ver. 7. I will fan them, &c. An allusion to 'fanning' or winnowing corn in gateways for sake of the air-draught. C.

Ver. 8. Mother of the young men. See the marginal translations, 'Mother of the chosen people' (Poole.—'I have brought against their mother city a chosen one' (Boothroyd. This variety testifies the difficulty of the phrase. But should not 'young men' be translated 'young man,' as the word is certainly singular? Is not this 'young man' king Jehoiachin, then only eighteen years of age? Comp. 2 Ki. 24. 8 with Je. 1. 3. Is not 'the mother of the young man' Nehushta, who is twice expressly mentioned, 2 Ki. 24. 8, 12, 15? having most probably been the chief adviser of her son in that idolatry which brought on the divine judgment.—A spoiler at noonday. In addition to the spoiler by night, ch. 6. 5, the evils of invasion in its most aggravated shape; a city taken by storm and delivered up to plunder. C.

Ver. 9. She that hath born seven languisheth. Is not this a prophetic allusion to 'all the men of might, even seven thousand,' whom Nebuchadnezzar carried away captive? See 2 Ki. 24. 16. C.

Ver. 10, 11 must be regarded as a parenthesis, containing a lamentation of the prophet on his persecution, and a promise of the LORD to protect him and his 'remnant,' not of days, but of believing ones 'who had not bowed the knee to Baal.' C.

Ver. 12. Shall iron alone 'Judah' be able to break the northern iron (the Assyrians) combined with steel (the Chaldeans')? C.

Ver. 15. Revenge. God will certainly punish the persecutors of his servants. The prophet, however, does not pray for revenge, in the sinful sense of the word: but that God would take compassion on his unhappy case, and, in his own time and manner, restrain the wrath and humble the power, disappoint the schemes, and dissolve the combination of his enemies. C.

Ver. 17. Indignation. Either with the indignities he had endured from the cursing of all ranks, ver. 10, or with indignation at the idolatry of the sacrifices and profane revelry of the feasts of the king and people; or with an overwhelming sense of the indignation of God at the national apostasy and wickedness. C.

12 Shall[y] iron break the northern iron and the steel?[z]

13 Thy[a] substance and thy treasures will I give to the spoil without price, and that for all thy sins, even in all thy borders.

14 And[b] I will make thee to pass with thine enemies into a land which thou knowest not; for a [b]fire is kindled in mine anger, which shall burn upon you.

15 ¶ O LORD, [c]thou knowest: remember me, and visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors: [d]take me not away in thy long-suffering: know that [e]for thy sake I have suffered rebuke.

16 Thy words were found, and I did [f]eat them;[3] and[h] thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart: for I am called by thy [i]name,[5] O LORD God of hosts.

17 I[j] sat not in the assembly of the mockers,[6] nor rejoiced; [j]I sat alone, because of thy hand: for thou hast [k]filled me with indignation.

18 Why is my [l]pain perpetual, and my wound incurable, which refuseth to be healed? [m]wilt thou be altogether unto me as a liar, and as waters that fail?[7]

19 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD, If thou return,[o] then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt [p]stand before me: and [q]if thou take forth the precious[8] from the vile,[9] thou shalt be as my mouth: [r]let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them.[1]

20 And[s] I will make thee unto this people a fenced brazen wall; and they shall fight against thee, but [t]they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee to save thee, and to deliver thee, saith the LORD.

21 And [u]I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 The prophet, under the types of abstaining from marriage, and from houses of mourning and feasting, foreshoweth the utter ruin of the Jews, 10 because they were even worse than their fathers. 14 Their return from captivity shall be more memorable than their deliverance out of Egypt. 16 God will doubly recompense their idolatry.

THE word[a] of the LORD came also unto me, saying,

2 Thou[b] shalt not take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons or daughters in this place.

3 For thus saith the LORD concerning the sons and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land;

4 They[c] shall die of grievous deaths: they shall not be lamented, neither shall they be buried; but they shall be as dung upon the face of the earth; and they shall be consumed by the sword, and by famine; and their carcases shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

5 For thus saith the LORD, [d]Enter not into the house of mourning,[1] neither go to lament nor bemoan them: [e]for I have taken away my peace from this people, saith the LORD, even loving-kindness and mercies.

6 Both the great and the small shall die in this land: they shall not be buried, neither shall men lament for them, nor [g]cut themselves, nor make themselves bald[2] for them.

7 Neither shall men tear[3] themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the [h]dead; neither shall men give them the [h]cup of consolation to drink for their father or for their mother.

8 Thou[i] shalt not also go into the house of feasting, to sit with them to eat and to drink.[5]

9 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, [j]I will cause to cease out of this place in your eyes, and in your days, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride.

10 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt show this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, [k]Wherefore hath the LORD pronounced all this great evil against us? or what is our iniquity? or what is our sin that we have committed against the LORD our [6]God?

11 Then shalt thou say unto them, [l]Because your fathers have forsaken me, saith the LORD, and have walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshipped them, and have forsaken me, and have not kept my law;

12 And ye have done [m]worse than your fathers; for, behold, ye walk every one after the

2 'The northern iron' was doubtless of a superior quality, most probably prepared and hardened, to a certain peculiar manner, like the steel obtained from the Chalybes of Pontus. A method of hardening iron was known in Pontus at a very early period. 'Northern iron,' therefore, was somewhat like our steel. The word rendered 'steel' in this verse means 'copper,' and ought to be so translated. In ancient times copper was mixed with other metals which rendered it hard and durable.—P.

5 This is supposed to refer to the funeral feast given after 'the three days of weeping.' Such a custom seems to have prevailed among all nations. In England, during the plague, 1665, one of the precautions against the spread of the disease was the prohibition of funeral dinners (Maitland's London, vol. i. p. 260.) The allusion here, however, seems to be, not to a funeral, but to a marriage feast. See ver. 9.—C.

6 This self-defence, founded upon their total ignorance or disregard of the law of God, is often looked upon by Christians with surprise. Alas! how many examples of equal ignorance, disregard, and justification, or, at least, palliation of sin, may Christians readily discover among themselves! The Sabbath is violated upon human authority, in opposition to divine law; and what is the Christian answer? the Jewish to a tittle? REFLECTIONS.—Dreadful is the case of nations when chargeable with sins which God will not pardon, and when the prayers of the choicest saints avail nothing for their relief. For in diversified and dreadful forms God can, even on earth, avenge himself on his enemies. Ministers, if faithful, must expect the most ungrateful returns from the world. And however earnestly they should follow after peace with all men, it must never be purchased by base and flattering compliances in sin; nor ought they to entangle themselves with the affairs of this world. But it is hard for the best to keep their temper in an evil day. It is astonishing that God should be so condescending and kind to his peevish saints. And they who distinguish themselves in piety, faithfulness, and diligence, may expect his distinguished favours and protections. If hypocrites will persecute them, heathens shall show them kindness. And however our frames change, we ought never to doubt of his faithfulness and fulfilment of all his promises.

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 6. Nor cut themselves. The custom of cutting the flesh in mourning was practised in several ancient nations. Among the Athenians it prevailed, and was forbidden by Solon. The Spartans were accustomed, in mourning for their great men, to tear their flesh: Harwood's Grecian Antiquities, p. 364'. A similar practice prevailed amongst the ancient Huns, and was found amongst the modern South Sea Islanders. Though prohibited by Mahomet, it still maintains its ground in Moslem countries. In the annual mourning in Persia for Hassein the son of the Caliph Ali, many run about uttering doleful cries, and cutting themselves with knives and lancets till completely covered with blood. This barbarous practice was forbidden by the divine law, Le. 19. 28; notwithstanding which it still appears to have prevailed among the disobedient Hebrews. C.

Ver. 7. Cup of consolation. This was a refreshment sent to mourners by their friends. In ancient times the Jews were accustomed to send bread, fruits, and wine; in modern times they send eggs, salt, and a small loaf (Allen's Modern Judaism, p. 439., which is sometimes called 'the bread of bitterness,' and seems to be alluded to in 2 Sa. 3. 35; Eze. 24. 16, 17; Ho. 9. 4. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In evil days, a concern for our church and nation ought to swallow up our care for natural relations; for then our families, and other created comforts, become occasional additions to our trouble. Carnal feasting and mirth are very unseasonable when God's destructive judgments are hanging over and ravaging around us. God is exact in marking men's iniquities, and unavoidable is his punishment of them; but it is very hard to convince obdurate sinners of their guilt, or of the equity of God's judgments. And yet how infinite is his mercy in connecting the most awful judgments with the most gracious deliverances, and in making his strokes of wrath to prepare men for the reception of his favours! And marvellous imagination[7] of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me;

13 Therefore[e] will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night, where I will not show you favour.

14 ¶ Therefore,[8] behold, [f]the days come, saith the LORD, that it shall no more be said, The LORD liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

15 But, The LORD liveth [g]that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: [h]and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers.

16 ¶ Behold, [i]I will send for many fishers, saith the LORD, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks.

17 For mine [k]eyes are upon all their ways; they are not hid from my face, [l]neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes.

18 And first[9] I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double;[1] because [m]they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the [n]carcases of their detestable and abominable things.

19 O LORD, [o]my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, [p]the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, [q]Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.

20 Shall a man make gods unto himself, [r]and they are no gods?

21 Therefore, behold, [s]I will this once cause them to know, I will cause them to know[2] mine hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is the [3]LORD.[4]

[3] The wonderful and cheering prophecy of this chapter reaches away outward into a still distant future. An ingathering of the remnant of Israel from among the Gentile nations, synchronous with the conversion of the Gentiles themselves, is predicted. This has not yet taken place. No sound exegesis can make it refer to the return from Babylonish captivity. From this and other passages we are justified in expecting that, in accordance with prophecy, the Jews have been scattered among all nations, so they shall be gathered in again to the land of their fathers.—P.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 The captivity of Judah for her sin. 5 Trust in man is cursed, in God is blessed. 9 The deceitful heart cannot impose upon God. 12 The salvation of God. 15 The prophet complaineth of the mockers of his prophecy. 19 He is sent to renew the covenant in hallowing the sabbath.

THE sin of Judah is written with a [a]pen of iron, and with the point[1] of a diamond:[2] it is graven [b]upon the table of their heart, and [c]upon the horns of your altars;

2 Whilst[3] their[2] children remember their altars and their groves[4] by the green trees upon the high hills.

3 O my [5]mountain[6] in the field, [d]I will give thy substance and all thy treasures to the spoil, and thy high places for sin,[7] throughout all thy borders.

4 And thou, even thyself,[8] shalt[9] discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee; [h]and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not: for [i]ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn for ever.

5 ¶ Thus saith the LORD; [j]Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm,[9] and whose heart departeth from the LORD.

6 For he shall be [k]like the heath in the desert,[1] and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, [l]in a salt land and not inhabited.

7 Blessed[m] is the man that trusteth in the LORD, and whose hope the LORD is:

8 For he shall be [n]as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh; but her leaf shall be green, and shall not be careful in the year of drought,[2] neither shall cease from yielding fruit.

are all his ways: he makes both the miseries and the deliverances of the Jewish nation to promote the gathering of the Gentiles to Christ.

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 1, 2. Their proneness to idolatry is deeply rooted in their hearts, and marked on the multitudes of their altars; and they continue in it from generation to generation. 5–8. They who, instead of depending upon God, depend upon human powers for help, shall not only be disappointed of that safety and prosperity which they expected, but shall bring upon themselves the lasting miseries which they thought to have escaped; but they who trust in the Lord shall prosper in their undertakings, and be safe and happy when all around them are in distress. 12–18. O Lord, who hast long dwelt with us in thy tabernacle and temple, and in whom we hope for all necessary blessings, they that apostatize from thee, the infinite source of pure and lasting consolations, shall be disgraced, contemned, and destroyed. But do thou, the object of all my praises, deliver me from the injuries which I suffer from this malicious people, and effectually grant me comfort. They insolently deride me, as if the threatenings which I denounce would never be fulfilled. But I have patiently persevered in delivering thy messages to them, without ever desiring to bear one message of destruction, or to see it executed; and I have never spoken but as directed by thee. Do thou therefore acknowledge, protect, and comfort me, while they malign, tertify, and persecute me. And let these my persecutors be disgraced, perplexed, terrified, and fearfully destroyed.

Ver. 1. The key to this difficult passage seems to be ch. 19. 5, where the Jews are charged with sacrificing their children to Baal. May it not, accordingly, be paraphrased thus:—'The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron in blood, and with the point of a diamond or flint, some hard species of stone formed into a sacrificial knife, as was common with the heathens; it is graven upon the tables of their (the people's hard) hearts (from which natural affection has been obliterated), and upon the horns (ye priests of your altars; to which horns the helpless victims are bound) when they (the people commemorate their (sacrificed) children at their altars and their groves,' &c.? C.

Ver. 6. A salt land. Equivalent to barren land; for though several, perhaps all, kinds of salt, act as a stimulant manure when applied in small quantity, yet, when largely mixed with earth, they destroy the vegetation of all except a few marine plants. The neighbourhood of the Dead Sea, some parts of Arabia Petræa, large districts of the African deserts, and of South America, are so full of salt as to be totally barren. C.

Ver. 18. This is not an imprecation of wrathful revenge, prompted by passion, but an appeal from man's injustice and cruelty to God's justice, mercy, and protection. See notes on Ps. 5. 10; 35. 8. C.

Ver. 23. Their neck stiff. Jews and Christians have strangely assimilated in 'making their necks stiff' against the light and easy yoke of the Sabbath: (1) By degrading the fourth commandment from a moral to a mere ceremonial institution. (2) By pleading the absolute necessity of many public works being continued on that day. (3) By acting under human authority, and disregarding God's prohibition of labour. (4) By a view of the gain derivable from Sabbath traffic, under a pretended regard for public accommodation, convenience, and health. Doctrines, pleadings, and excuses to 'make void the law,' against which this prophecy directs alike the authority, ver. 20, the promises, ver. 24, and the threatenings, ver. 27, of the Almighty. See ver. 19–21, 24–27. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Sinful corruptions are deeply rooted in men's hearts, and fixed in their practice, though sin effectually robs us of everything valuable. There is great malignity and hurt in trusting to creatures. It draws our heart from God, the blessed ALL and IN ALL. But much satisfaction and success attend a solid dependence upon him alone as our God. Alas! what an unsearchable fund of all manner of deceiving and desperate wickedness is an unrenewed heart! But all is naked and open before the righteous Judge of all, and punisher of the wicked. And dreadful is the curse annexed to ill-gotten riches, as well as to resting on self-righteousness. Great is the esteem which saints have for the temple, the ordinances, the Christ of God. And while he is the hope, the praise, the healer, and the saviour of his people, he is the awful, but just, punisher of his and their enemies. A fearful portion of debasement, terror, and ruin shall earthly men, and apostates from God, receive at the last. When they become incorrigible, their damnation slumbereth not. And O the strength of indwelling corruption, that makes even precious prophets sinfully fret when they meet with much opposition in the execution of their office! Great is the mercy that God does not always employ them in the unpleasing messages of wrath. Alas! the folly and wickedness of nations—of Britain—in disregarding God's Sabbaths, when such important blessings to 9 ¶ The[p] heart is deceitful above all things, and[q] desperately wicked:[3] who can know it?

10 I the LORD [r]search the heart, I try the reins, even [s]to give every man according to his ways, [t]and according to the fruit of his doings.

11 As the partridge[4] sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not;[5] so[u] he that getteth riches, and not by right, [v]shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool.

12 ¶ A[w] glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary.

13 O LORD, [x]the hope of Israel, [y]all that forsake thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from me[6] shall be written[7] in the earth,[8] because they have forsaken the LORD, the fountain[z] of living waters.

14 Heal[a] me, O LORD, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved: for thou art [b]my praise.

15 ¶ Behold, they say unto me, [c]Where is the word of the LORD? let it come now.

16 As for me, [d]I have not hastened[9] from being a pastor to follow[1] thee; neither have I desired the woful day, thou knowest: that which came out of my lips was right before thee.

17 Be[e] not a terror unto me: thou art [f]my hope in the day of evil.

18 Let[g] them be confounded that persecute me, but let not me be confounded; let them be dismayed, but let not me be dismayed: [h]bring upon them the day of evil, and destroy them with double destruction.[2]

19 ¶ Thus said the LORD unto me, Go, and stand [i]in the gate of the children of the people, whereby the kings of Judah come in, and by the which they go out, and in all the gates of Jerusalem;

20 And say unto them, [j]Hear ye the word of the LORD, ye kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, that enter in by these gates:

21 Thus saith the LORD, [k]Take heed to yourselves, and [l]bear no burden on the sabbath-day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem.

22 Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the sabbath-day, neither do ye any work; [m]but hallow ye the sabbath-day, as I commanded your fathers.

23 But[n] they obeyed not, neither inclined their ear, [o]but made their neck stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction.

24 And it shall come to pass, if [p]ye diligently hearken unto me, saith the LORD, to bring in no burden through the gates of this city on the sabbath-day, [q]but hallow the sabbath-day, to do no work therein;

25 Then[u] shall there enter into the gates of this city kings and princes sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, they, and their princes, the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and this city shall remain for ever.[3]

26 And they shall come [v]from the cities of Judah, and from the places about Jerusalem, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the plain, and from the mountains, and from the south,[4] bringing[w] burnt-offerings, and sacrifices, and meat-offerings, and incense, and bringing sacrifices of praise, unto the house of the LORD.

27 But[y] if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the sabbath-day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath-day; then [z]will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, [a]and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched.

There are, however, several birds that readily decoy the nests of others, of which the French (p. 12, margin) Gazoulle, or an example; and as this bird is driven away from a nest which the true owner arrives, so shall every one be, sooner or later, driven away, who, by fraud or violence, usurps or appropriates riches to which he has no just claim.—C.

ST. STEPHEN'S GATE—WHERE ST. STEPHEN WAS STONED TO DEATH. [Jeremiah, xvii:19.]—"Thus said the Lord unto me: Go and stand in the gate of the children of the people, whereby the kings of Judah come in, and by that which they go out, and in all the gates of Jerusalem." St. Stephen's Gate is known by the Christians of Jerusalem as the Gate of My Lady Mary, and by the Arabs as the Gate of the Tribes. It is on the east side of Jerusalem, and opens into the road leading across the valley of Kedron, and thence up the Mount of Olives to Bethany and Jericho. There are lions sculptured over it. One of the points which lends interest to Saint Stephen's Gate is the fact that near here in the Kedron valley Saint Stephen was martyred. Stephen was the first Christian martyr. In connection with his death, Saul of Tarsus first comes to view, who in after years was to be the great apostle of the Gentiles.

it again[4] another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it.

5 Then the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

6 O house of Israel, [a]cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the LORD. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel.

7 At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to [g]pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it:

8 If[h] that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, [i]I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them.

9 And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, [k]to build and to plant it:

10 If[k] it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit them.

11 ¶ Now, therefore, go to, speak to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Behold, [l]I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you: [m]return ye now every one from his evil way, and make your ways and your doings good.[5]

12 And they said, [n]There is no hope; but we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his evil heart.

13 Therefore thus saith the LORD, [p]Ask ye now among the heathen, who have heard such things: the [q]virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing.

14 Will[r] a man leave [s]the snow of Lebanon which cometh from the rock of the field? or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken?[6][7]

15 Because[t] my people hath forgotten me, they have burned incense to [u]vanity, and they have caused them to stumble in their ways from the [w]ancient paths, [x]to walk in paths, in a way not cast up;

16 To make their land [y]desolate, and a perpetual hissing: [z]every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and wag his head.

17 I[a] will scatter them as with an east wind before the enemy; [b]I will show them the back, and not the face, in the day of their calamity.

18 ¶ Then said they, [c]Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah; [d]for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the [e]prophet: [f]come, and let us smite him with[9] the tongue,[1] and let us not [g]give heed to any of his words.

19 Give[g] heed to me, O LORD, and hearken to the voice of them that contend with me.

20 Shall[h] evil be recompensed for good? for they [i]have digged a pit for my soul. Remember [k]that I stood before thee to speak good for them, and to turn away thy wrath from them.

21 Therefore [l]deliver up their children to the famine, and pour out their blood[2] by the force of the sword; and let their wives be bereaved of their children, and be widows; and let their men be put to death; let their young men be slain by the sword in battle.

22 Let[l] a cry be heard from their houses, when thou shalt bring a troop suddenly upon them; [n]for they have digged a pit to take me, and hid snares for my feet.

23 Yet, LORD, thou knowest all their counsel against me [o]to slay me:[3] forgive[p] not their iniquity, neither blot out their sin from thy sight; but let them be overthrown before thee: deal thus with them in the time of thine anger.

CHAPTER XIX.

Under the type of breaking a potter's vessel is foreshowed the desolation of the Jews for their sins.

THUS saith the LORD, Go, and get [a]a potter's earthen bottle,[1] and take of [b]the ancients of the people, and of the ancients of the priests,

2 And go forth unto [c]the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of the [2]east gate,[3] and [d]proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee;

3 And say, [e]Hear ye the word of the LORD, O kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [g]Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle.

4 Because[h] they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place,[4] and have burned incense in it unto [i]other gods, [k]whom neither they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings[5] of Judah, [l]and have filled this place with the blood of innocents;

5 They have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt-offerings unto Baal, [l]which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into my mind:

6 Therefore,[l] behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor, The valley of the son of Hinnom, but, The valley of slaughter.

7 And [n]I will make void the counsel[6] of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and [o]I will cause them to fall by the sword before their

[3] 'East gate' is a wrong translation. It is wrong etymologically: for even taking the root to be cheres, 'the sun,' the proper rendering would be 'sun-gate.' It is also wrong topographically; for the valley of Hinnom lies south of the city, and could not therefore be said to be 'by the entry of the east gate.' The word however seems to me to be from another root, and its proper rendering is, 'the pottery gate.' The potter's field lay on the bank of the valley of Hinnom, south of the city.—C.

[6] Each of these statements was perfectly true in itself—each wrong in the application. For the 'law shall perish' from the ignorant, the worldly, the superstitious, and idolatrous priest; and counsel shall depart from them that count themselves wise and are fools; and the word shall depart from the false and presumptuous prophet, who speaks in the Lord's name what the Lord has not commanded him to speak.—C.

Babylonish captivity, La. 4. 20; it reappeared at the siege of Jerusalem by Vespasian and Titus, and similar instances occurred in the time of Hadrian. See Josephus, De Bell. Jud. vi. 3. 4. C.

Ver. 13. Upon whose roofs. The roofs of the Jewish houses were flat and surrounded by a battlement. The inhabitants ascended to them to walk, sometimes to sleep, at other times, as places of retirement, to pray; and idolaters chose them as places for burning incense to the sun, moon, and stars, which they worshipped as gods. C.

REFLECTIONS.—By methods unnumbered the Lord tries to awaken ignorant, stupified, and self-hardened sinners to repentance, that their ruin may be prevented, or at least appear wholly owing to themselves. And it is proper that rulers in church and state should be warned with peculiar faithfulness and solemnity; and warnings had need to be again and again repeated. Dreadful are the effects of sin upon nations and churches: and often those who have been noted for sinning are made no less noted for suffering: and all attempts to avoid God's ruinous strokes prove fruitless or worse.

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 7–10. Contrary to my own inclination thou hast persuaded me to undertake this enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives; and their [z]carcases will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

8 And[a] I will make this city desolate, and an hissing: every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof.

9 And I will cause them to eat the [b]flesh of their sons, and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend, in the siege and straitness wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them.

10 Then [c]shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee,

11 And shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [d]Even so will I break this people, and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole[e] again; and they shall [f]bury them in Tophet, till [g]there be no place to bury.[8]

12 Thus will I do unto this place, saith the LORD, and to the inhabitants thereof, and even make this city as [h]Tophet:[i]

13 And the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses of the kings of Judah, shall be defiled[k] as the place of Tophet, because of all the houses [l]upon whose roofs they have burned incense unto all the host of heaven, and have poured out drink-offerings unto other gods.

14 Then came Jeremiah from Tophet, whither the LORD had sent him to prophesy; and he stood [m]in the court of the LORD's house, and said to all the people,

15 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, [n]I will bring upon this city, and upon all her towns, all the evil that I have pronounced against it; because they have hardened their [o]necks, [p]that they might not hear my words.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Pashur, smiting Jeremiah, receiveth a new name, and a fearful doom. 7 Jeremiah complaineth of contempt, 10 of treachery, 14 and of his birth.

NOW Pashur,[a] the son of Immer the priest, who was also chief governor in the house of the LORD, heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things.

2 Then Pashur [b]smote Jeremiah the prophet, and put him in the stocks[1] that were in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the LORD.

3 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Pashur brought forth Jeremiah out of the stocks. Then said Jeremiah unto him, The LORD hath not [c]called thy name Pashur, but Magor-missabib.[2]

4 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will make thee [d]a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends; and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and [e]thine eyes shall behold it: and [f]I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword.

5 Moreover, I [h]will deliver all the [3]strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon.

6 And[i] thou, Pashur, and all that dwell in thine house, shall go into captivity: and thou shalt come to Babylon, and there thou shalt die, and shalt be buried there, thou, and all thy friends, [j]to whom thou hast prophesied lies.

7 ¶ O LORD, thou hast [4]deceived me,[5] and I was deceived; thou art stronger than I,[6] and hast prevailed: [k]I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me.

8 For since I spake, I cried out, [7]I cried violence and spoil; because[7] the word of the LORD [m]was made a reproach unto me, and a derision, daily.[8]

9 Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name: but [n]his word was in mine heart[9] as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay.

10 ¶ For [p]I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side. [q]Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiars[1] watched[r] for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed,[2] and we shall prevail against him, and we shall take our revenge on him.

11 But [s]the LORD is with me as a mighty terrible one; therefore [t]my persecutors shall stumble, and they shall not [u]prevail; they shall be greatly ashamed; for they shall not prosper: their [v]everlasting confusion shall never be forgotten.

12 But, O LORD of hosts, that triest the righteous, and seest the reins and the heart, [w]let me see thy vengeance on them: [x]for unto thee have I opened my cause.

13 Sing[y] unto the LORD, praise ye the LORD; for he hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hand of evil-doers.

14 ¶ Cursed[a] be the day wherein I was born: let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.[3]

[m] The meaning of the word Topheth is disputed. It may be derived from a Hebrew root which signifies 'to spit,' and would thus mean 'a loathsome place;' but it is more probably derived from taphath, the oven' or 'fire-place,' in which children offered in sacrifice to Moloch were burned, and would then signify 'place of burning.' In this latter sense the analogy between it and Jerusalem would be very striking. Jerusalem was burned by the Babylonians and by the Romans.—P.

* The book of Jeremiah is to a large extent fragmentary. A great number of detached pieces are put together which have no logical connection with each other. This is one of them. Ver. 14-18 form a striking contrast to what immediately precedes. We cannot see anything to call forth such a strong expression of the bitterness of his soul. In syntax and structure the passage bears a strong resemblance to Job 3. 3-12. It is singular in fact, and it tends to throw some light upon these remarkable words, that such expressions of feeling are common in the East to this day. One hears them frequently, but they are never conversion literally. They are poetical, and intended to express in language of high imagery the intense feelings of sorrow and bitterness which wring the heart.—C.

office, and hast disappointed me of the comforts which I expected in it. By thy powerful arguments and authority thou didst overrule me in it; yet have I met with nothing but derision and persecution. For since I began to deliver thy messages, I have prophesied of nothing but miseries to befal my people; and on that account all my messages have been made matter of derision and reproach to me; I therefore resolved to prophesy no more: but I found myself inwardly tormented with challenges of conscience and frowns from God, till I again delivered his messages. Though with fear I knew that I was everywhere calumniated as seditious, false, and dangerous to the state, and mine enemies were ready to spread the most malignant aspersions, in order to procure my disgrace or death; and even my relations and intimates did all they could to insnare me.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Zedekiah sendeth to Jeremiah to inquire the event of Nebuchadrezzar's war. 3 Jeremiah foretelleth a calamitous siege and miserable captivity. 8 He counselleth the people to fall to the Chaldeans, 11 and upbraideth the king's house.

THE [a]word[1] which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, when king Zedekiah [b]sent unto him Pashur the son of Melchiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, saying,

2 Inquire,[2] I pray thee, of the LORD for us; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon [c]maketh war against us; if so be that the LORD will deal with us [d]according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us.

3 ¶ Then said Jeremiah unto them, Thus shall ye say to Zedekiah:

4 Thus saith the LORD God of Israel; Behold, I[e] will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege you without the walls, and [f]I will assemble them into the midst of this city.

5 And[h] I myself will fight against you with an outstretched hand, and with a strong arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath.

6 And [i]I will smite the inhabitants of this city, both man and beast: they shall die of a great pestilence.

7 And afterward, saith the LORD, [j]I will deliver Zedekiah king of Judah, and his servants, and the people, and such as are left in this city from the pestilence, from the sword, and from the famine, into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of those that seek their life: [k]and he shall smite them with the edge of the sword; [l]he shall not spare them, neither have pity, nor have mercy.[3]

8 ¶ And unto this people thou shalt say, Thus saith the LORD; [m]Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death.

9 He that [n]abideth in this city shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth out, and falleth to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live, and his life shall be unto him for a prey.

10 For[o] I have set my face against this city for evil, and not for good, saith the LORD; [p]it shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire.

11 ¶ And touching the house[4] of the king of Judah, say, Hear ye the word of the LORD;

12 O house of David, thus saith the LORD, [r]Execute[5] judgment in the morning, and [s]deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor, [t]lest my fury go out like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

13 Behold, [u]I am against thee, O [6]inhabitant of the valley,[7] and rock of the plain,[8] saith the LORD; which say, [x]Who shall come down against us? or who shall enter into our habitations?

14 But I will punish[9] you [y]according to the fruit of your doings, saith the LORD: and I will kindle a fire in [z]the forest thereof, [a]and it shall devour all things round about it.[1]

* The message in this chapter has been confounded with that in ch. xxxvii., and as the narratives differ, they have been urged as contradictory. But the least attention will show that they relate to events clearly distinct. (1) Jeremiah had been imprisoned in the 'high gate of Benjamin,' by order of Pashur alone, and delivered the next day, ch. 20. 2, 3. This message came to Jeremiah at the very commencement of the war, and of the siege of Jerusalem, ver. 2, 4, and only requested the prophet to 'inquire of the LORD.' (3) When the message in ch. xxxvii. was sent, the Chaldeans had continued the siege till the Egyptian army had come up against them, ch. 37. 5, 14. The request of that message was that the prophet should 'pray unto the LORD,' ver. 3. (5) Jeremiah was at that time free; and his subsequent imprisonment was not by Pashur, but by the princes; and not in the 'high gate of Benjamin,' but in the 'house of Jonathan the scribe,' ver. 15; and, finally, by order of Zedekiah, in the 'court of the prison,' ver 21.—C.

terror upon every side. There can be little doubt that Pashur was one of those degenerate priests who had turned from the LORD to Baal, and took such offence at Jeremiah for his faithful denunciation of idolatry, as the Pharisees conceived against our Lord for his faithful rebukes of their hypocrisy. Nor is it improbable, from considering the import of his self-assumed name, that Pashur and his associates may have covertly introduced idolatry under the specious plea of an extension of universal liberty. C.

Ver. 10. The defaming. Such misrepresentations of the prophet's words as the false witnesses afterwards gave of the words of our Lord, Mat. 26. 60, 61, and such erroneous interpretation as the high-priest pronounced when he and his fellow-judges voted him guilty, Mat. 26. 63-66. C.

Ver. 12. This prayer, for such it is, and not a prediction, and every other of a similar kind, can be fully vindicated, not merely on the ground of the prophet's inspiration, but by the internal fact that the prophet does not say 'my,' but 'thy vengeance'—a vengeance, a vindication and enforcement of justice, which, however severe, must be in strict conformity with the principles and exercise of that 'mercy which endureth for ever,' Ps. 136. 1, &c. C.

Ver. 14. Cursed be the day wherein I was born. Brown Patterson, whose notes to the work of his venerable relative are generally most judicious, has here referred to the reasonableness of 'taking into account' the 'poetical and rhetorical embellishment' of the passage, during the interpretation of it, and enters a caveat against its being 'used as a model for our own feelings in reference to our birth,' &c. And in this admission and caveat there are undoubtedly many who would concur. But surely such interpreters must forget (1) that 'Thus saith the LORD,' ver. 4, &c., speaking by his inspired prophet! and, if inspired for one part, surely inspired for all. And if not for all, where does inspiration end and man begin? (2) They must forget, that even though there is much that is called 'poetical and rhetorical embellishment,' it is the embellishment of the Spirit of God, and requires no drawback for its interpretation. (3) They must forget that 'these things were written for our ensamples,' our 'models:' and that the only caveat necessary is, that we take care rightly to understand 'the mind of the Spirit'—'the mind of Christ'—speaking by the prophet, and imitate, not in our own spirit, but in God's. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How heartily the wicked, especially among the clergy, hate the faithful ministers of Christ! They who boldly remonstrate against the wickedness of an abandoned generation must scarcely expect the common formalities of justice. But God can soon make those who would frighten his prophets a terror to themselves. And they who attempt to stop their mouth do but hasten their own doom. It is never safe for ministers to promise themselves much comfort on earth. Neither the wisdom of the serpent, nor the harmlessness of the dove, will be able to preserve them from reproach and derision. Nay, ridicule and contempt are the common weapons of the ungodly against the preachers of truth. And it is no small pain to a faithful soul to hear God's messages treated with levity and contempt. To faint in the Lord's way, or to wish that we had never entered into it, because we meet with difficulties, is extremely weak and foolish. But it is an ease for burdened souls to pour out their complaints before the Lord: even that which is terrible in him turns out to their comfort. And when they avenge not themselves, but commit their cause to him, he will compass them about with songs of expected, and afterwards enjoyed, deliverance. But, alas! how inconstant are the frames of the best on earth. Now they mount up to heaven in excellency; but soon descend to the depths of weakness and guilt. Alas! what vanity and vexation of spirit fill up human life! But absurd is sinful passion when allowed to ramble. And it is dangerous to have an unbridled tongue while our passions are strong.

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 9. For a prey. As something snatched from the great 'spoilers'—the famine, the pestilence, and the sword. C.

Ver. 12. Execute judgment in the morning. Not in an evasive manner, but speedily; not by bribes, the ordinary course of eastern despotism, but by a faithful enforcement of the 'judgments' of God. C.

Ver. 14. Forest thereof. An allusion to the kindling of fires in forests by lightning, by the friction of branches in storms, by negligence, or by malice. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God often honours his ministers when they think that their days are consumed in shame. And they who would not take God's direction for de-

David, thou, and thy servants, and thy people that enter in by these gates;

3 Thus saith the LORD, [c]Execute ye judgment and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor: and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow, neither shed innocent blood in this place.

4 For [d]if ye do this thing indeed, [e]then shall there enter in by the gates of this house kings sitting upon the throne of David,[2] riding in chariots and on horses, he, and his servants, and his people.

5 But [f]if ye will not hear these words, I swear [g]by myself, saith the LORD, that [h]this house[3] shall become a desolation.

6 For thus saith the LORD unto the king's house of Judah, Thou art [i]Gilead[4] unto me, and the head of Lebanon:[6] yet surely [j]I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited.

7 And [k]I will prepare destroyers against thee, every one with his weapons; [l]and they shall cut down thy choice cedars, and cast them into the fire.

8 And [m]many nations shall pass by this city, and they shall say every man to his neighbour, Wherefore hath the LORD done thus unto this great city?

9 Then they shall answer, [n]Because they have forsaken the covenant of the LORD their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them.

10 ¶ Weep[p] ye not for the dead,[7] neither bemoan him; but weep sore for [q]him that goeth away: for he shall return no more, nor see his native country.

11 For thus saith the LORD touching Shallum[8] the son of Josiah king of Judah, which reigned instead of Josiah his father, which went forth out of this place, He shall not return thither any more:

12 But he shall die in the place whither they have led him captive, and shall see this land no more.

13 ¶ Woe unto him[9] that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work;

14 That saith, [r]I will build me a wide house, and large[1] chambers, and cutteth him out windows;[2] and it is ceiled with cedar, and painted with vermilion.

15 Shalt thou reign because thou closest thyself in cedar? did not thy father[3] eat and drink, and [s]do judgment and justice, and then it was well with him?

16 He judged the cause of the poor and needy; then it was well with him: [t]was not this to know me? saith the LORD.

17 But [u]thine eyes and thine heart are not but for thy covetousness, and for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression, [v]and for [w]violence to do it.

18 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, [x]They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother! or, Ah sister![5] they shall not lament for him, saying, Ah lord! or, Ah his glory!

19 He[y] shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.[6]

20 ¶ Go up to Lebanon[7] and cry; and lift up thy voice in Bashan, and cry from the passages:[8] for all thy lovers are destroyed.

21 I spake unto thee in thy prosperity;[9] but [z]thou saidst, I will not hear: [a]this hath been thy manner from thy youth,[1] that[4] thou obeyedst not my voice.

22 [b]The wind[2] shall eat up all thy pastors, and thy lovers shall go into captivity: surely then [c]shalt thou be ashamed and confounded for all thy wickedness.

23 O inhabitant[3] of Lebanon, that [d]makest thy nest in the cedars, [e]how gracious[4] shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain as of a woman in travail!

24 As I live, saith the LORD, though [5]Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were [6]the signet upon my right hand,[7] yet would I pluck thee thence;[8]

25 And I [f]will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 And I will [g]cast thee out, and thy mother that bare thee,[9] into another country, where ye were not born; and there shall ye die.

The Scriptures do not detail the time or manner of his death; and Josephus, Jerome, and Kimchi differ in their accounts; while others think he was carried to Babylon, where he lived in contempt, and died neglected—a lesson to the degenerate sons of worthy fathers, and a warning to all covetous, cruel, and oppressive rulers. deliverance from sin, would often gladly take it for escaping from trouble. But it is vain to hope that God will do that for us in our sin which he did for others in their integrity; or that anything will help us when he is our determined adversary; or that men will pity us when we have forfeited his compassion. An ignominious slavery, or a miserable death, is but a dreadful alternative. But it is best to give up the defence of our country when we can do nothing for its relief. It is but a disgrace for men to be descended of godly ancestors when they indulge themselves in impiety. When nations are in danger, princes ought without delay to reform themselves and their subjects: and ministers who faithfully admonish them to it, had need to be well furnished with faith and courage.

CHAPTER XXII. Ver. 11. Shallum. This is another name for Jehoahaz, who succeeded Josiah, 2 Ki. 23. 30; 2 Ch. 36. 1; but who was deposed in three months, and carried into Egypt, where he died, 2 Ki. 23. 34. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Ministers must be faithful and bold, and tell kings and courtiers of their sins, dangers, and duties, as well as others. It is only in keeping God's commandments that we can expect a great reward. He has always instruments duly prepared for destructive work as well as for building up. And men's sins are sometimes so plainly marked in their judgments, that even heathens can justify his procedure; for he never casts them off till they first cast off him. Dying saints may be justly envied, whilst living sinners are to be pitied. No education or example can change men's hearts; but it is a terrible aggravation of men's wickedness that it is contrary to their pious education. Proud and mischievous rebellion against God entails upon multitudes the most lasting shame and disgrace: nay, distinguished pride is generally followed by distinguished dishonour and misery, either in life or in death. It is extremely foolish to set our hearts upon that which can be easily taken from us, or made a curse to us. And none are more apt to appear mean, or to pretend piety under adversity, than those who boast highly amidst prosperity. It were well if what we suffer would bring us to a serious repentance. Sometimes

INTERIOR OF OUR TENT AT NAZARETH—THE TENT IS STANDING NEAR THE GREEK CHURCH OF ANNUNCIATION, IN NAZARETH, THE TOWN WHERE OUR LORD SPENT MOST OF HIS LIFE. [Jeremiah, xxiii:5-6.]—"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." We give as an illustration of this Scripture the interior of the tent used in Palestine by the parties who secured the pictures of the places of Bible events for this Self-Interpreting Bible. We give this picture here because it was taken in Nazareth where our tent was pitched. It is situated near the Virgin's Fountain, and is not far from the Greek Church of Annunciation. Here in this neighborhood grew up the righteous Branch which Jeremiah declared God would raise to David.

30 Thus saith the LORD, [1]Write ye this man childless,[3] a man that shall not prosper in his days: for [w]no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Jeremiah prophesieth a restoration of the scattered flock. 5 Christ shall rule and save them. 9 God's fearful judgments against false prophets, 33 and mockers of the true ones.

WOE be[a] unto the pastors[1] that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! saith the LORD.

2 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people, Ye[b] have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited[2] them: behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the LORD.

3 And [c]I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase.

4 And [d]I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them; and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the LORD.

5 ¶ Behold, [e]the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth.

6 In[f] his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.[3]

7 Therefore, behold, the days come,[4] saith the LORD, that they shall no more say, The LORD liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

5 Heb. prophecy is here of Israel generally, and their gathering from all countries. Now the restoration by Zerubbabel, &c., was of more than a part of the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Levi (Ezra 1. 5, &c. 11. 4., amounting in all to 42 360). Ezra 2. 64. It follows that this prophecy, however a commencement typically, yet remains to be fulfilled; and the Lord will accomplish his promise, and verify all his predictions, as he has realized his judgments.—C.

8 But, [f]The LORD liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all [5]countries whither I had driven them; and they shall [g]dwell in their own land.[6]

9 ¶ Mine[7] heart within me is broken because of the prophets; all my bones shake: I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome, [h]because of the LORD, and because of the words of his holiness.

10 For[i] the land is full of adulterers; for because of [7]swearing[8] the land mourneth; [k]the pleasant places of the wilderness are dried up, and their course[9] is evil, and their force is not right.

11 For[l] both prophet and priest are profane; yea, [m]in my house have I found their wickedness, saith the LORD.

12 Wherefore [n]their way shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness; they shall be driven on, and fall therein: for [o]I will bring evil upon them, even the year of their visitation, saith the LORD.

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts concerning the prophets, Behold, [s]I will feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall: for from the prophets of Jerusalem is profaneness[4] gone forth into all the land.

16 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [t]Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you; [u]they make you vain:[5] they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the LORD.

persons are exalted even to thrones that God may pour the more public and lasting disgrace upon them and theirs. Nor need the greatest to be confident, since they know not what debasement and misery await them and their seed. But it is hard to awaken sinners lost in sensuality and earthly-mindedness. And how sovereign is God in making men fruitful or childless, honoured or dishonoured, as he thinks fit!

CHAPTER XXIII. Ver. 5, 6. Behold, in the fulness of time the Son of God shall appear in a holy but debased human nature; who, as God's King set up in his church, shall, with astonishing success, reform the world, and destroy the wicked out of it. By him shall his spiritual Israel be delivered from their sin and misery, and blessed with all spiritual and eternal blessings. In his holiness of nature, obedience of life, and satisfactory sufferings, he shall fulfil for us a complete and everlasting righteousness; by the impartation of which to us for our justification, he shall render us perfectly righteous in law before God as our Judge, and thus secure the gradual sanctification of our nature and practice. 9, 10. I am grieved to see the false prophets deluding the people into wickedness; and I tremble at the fearful judgments which God, in his infinite holiness, hath denounced against them. For though the wrath of God has already begun to destroy the country, for the abounding wickedness of its inhabitants, they continue to employ their whole power and labour in promoting and encouraging it. 17–20. They encourage the wicked and profane to hope that the Lord will prosper and protect them in their sins; and pretend that themselves alone know his mind, and that no message of reproof or threatening deserves any credit. But a sudden and dreadful storm of judgment shall overtake and ruin them, which shall force them to regard and believe such threatenings. 30. Either they mimicked the true prophets in their language, to render their own predictions the more easily believed, or they laboured to prejudice the people against their messages. 35, 36. Ye shall hereafter speak with great reverence and regard concerning the Lord's Word; but now your irreverent speeches shall pull down judgments on your own heads; for ye have derided and misinterpreted the words of your own God, who lives and reigns over all.

Ver. 3, 4. This prophecy began to be fulfilled under Zerubbabel, Nehemiah, Ezra, &c., the commencement being the type of the completion. The gathering of 'the remnant out of all countries,' and the time when 'they shall fear no more,' are events still future, which the experience of the past renders probable: the Word of God, certain. C.

Ver. 6. Righteousness is exactly equivalent to obedience, Ro. 5. 17–19. This obedience (that is, obedience to the law of God, Ro. 5. 20, unreserved and complete: and there is, and there can be, no other) never was rendered unless by Christ, Ro. 3. 20; comp. with 2 Co. 5. 21; Phi. 2. 8. But he being the WORD of JEHOVAH, Ge. 15. 1–7, 18, 'God manifest in the flesh,' 'as many as (by faith) receive him,' can truly say, he is 'JEHOVAH OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.'—Note. It is not unimportant to observe, that the best Jewish expositors unite JEHOVAH with RIGHTEOUSNESS; and the most learned Christians so translate the passage. C.

Ver. 33. 'A burden,' signifies a calamitous prophecy. The question here is put by the speakers lightly, and in contempt of the often repeated and heavy denunciations against sin and sinners. As if they had said, What next? What new judgment that will never come?—Note. Lightness of speech, turning serious things into a jest, may amuse the thoughtless for an hour; but is

The LORD hath said, [a]Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the imagination[6] of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you.

18 For [b]who hath stood in the counsel[7] of the LORD, and hath perceived and heard his word?[8] who[c] hath marked his word, and heard it?

19 Behold, [d]a whirlwind of the LORD is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind: it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked.

20 The anger of the LORD shall not return, until he have executed, [e]and till he have performed the thoughts of his heart: [f]in the latter days[9] ye shall consider it perfectly.

21 I[h] have not sent these prophets, yet they ran: I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied.

22 But [i]if they had stood in my counsel, and had caused my people to hear my words, [j]then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings.

23 Am[1] I a God at hand,[2] saith the LORD, and not a God afar off?

24 Can[k] any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the LORD. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the LORD.

25 I[l] have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name, saying, [m]I have dreamed, I have dreamed.

26 How[o] long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophesy lies? yea, they are prophets [p]of the deceit of their own heart;

27 Which[q] think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams, which they tell every man to his neighbour, [r]as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal.

28 The prophet that hath[3] a dream, let him tell a dream;[4] and he that hath my word, [s]let him speak my word faithfully. [t]What is the chaff to the wheat?[5] saith the LORD.

29 Is[u] not my word like as a fire? saith the LORD; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?

30 Therefore, behold, [v]I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that steal my words[6] every one from his neighbour.

31 Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the LORD, that use[7] their tongues, and say, He saith.

32 Behold,[x] I am against them that prophesy false dreams, saith the LORD, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their [8]lightness;[9] yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: therefore [y]they shall not profit this people at all, saith the LORD.

33 ¶ And when this people, or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, [z]What is the burden of the LORD? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden? I will even [a]forsake you, saith the LORD.

34 And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the LORD, I will even punish[1] that man and his house.

35 Thus[b] shall ye say every one to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, What hath the LORD answered? and, What hath the LORD spoken?

36 And the burden of the LORD shall ye mention no more; [c]for every man's word shall be his burden:[2] for ye [d]have perverted the words of the living God, of the LORD of hosts our God.

37 Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, What hath the LORD answered thee? and, What hath the LORD spoken?

38 But since ye say, The burden of the LORD; therefore thus saith the LORD, Because ye say this word, The burden of the LORD, and I have sent unto you, saying, Ye shall not say, The burden of the LORD;

39 Therefore, behold, [e]I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence:

40 And [f]I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Under the type of good and bad figs, 4 the prophet foreshoweth the restoration of them that were in captivity, 8 and the desolation of Zedekiah and the residue of Jerusalem.

THE LORD[a] showed me, and, behold, two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the LORD,[1] after that [b]Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, [c]with the carpenters and smiths,[2] from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon.

2 One[d] basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe; and the other basket sure to bring its own punishment, by unfitting the understanding for serious realities, and hardening the heart against sympathy with human sorrows. Besides all which it underlies the sentence: 'I will ever punish that man and his house.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—At their own infinite hazard, rulers neglect to execute their office to the honour of God and the welfare of his people. But though they should not, he will at last see to these ends. And often he mercifully gathers his people after he has wrathfully cut off their rulers. The church's peace, happiness, and honour are not founded in the external pomp of her rulers, but in having Jesus Christ as her Prophet, Priest, and King. And his spiritual deliverances are more remarkable than the temporal ones granted to the Jewish nation. That sinners dishonour God and ruin themselves are very grievous considerations to gracious souls. But no guilt is so aggravated as that of profane clergymen. And nothing so emboldens and hardens sinners as when teachers, by their example or doctrine, encourage them in wickedness. No plague is more dangerous than clergymen who intrude into their office by the influence of patrons or church rulers, without any commission from Christ, or who preach another gospel, as if men's own works, however insignificant, could recommend them to the favour of God. It tends to render men quite irreligious and atheistical. And no preachers are so confident of their own abilities as evil and erroneous ones. If God call men to the ministry, he will not only qualify them for it, but give them some success in it. And while profane ministers ought to be detested by all, as the very offscourings of mankind, it is infinitely dangerous to sport with, or make by-words of, any part of the Scripture. God will honour and magnify his own Word in the ruin of the mockers and perverters of it.

CHAPTER XXIV. REFLECTIONS.—Greatly mysterious are the ways of God's providence. The most afflictive are often the most useful. The same dispensation is to some a blessing and to others a ruinous plague. And all ought to be taken as out of God's own hand. Exact is his knowledge of and care for had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, they were so bad.[3]

3 Then said the LORD unto me, [e]What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good; [g]and the evil, very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

4 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

5 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, Like these good figs, [h]so will I acknowledge them[4] that are carried away captive[5] of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans [i]for their good.

6 For [j]I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and [k]I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up.[6]

7 And [l]I will give them an heart to know me, that I am the LORD; and [m]they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their [n]whole heart.

8 ¶ And as the evil [o]figs, which cannot be eaten, they are so evil; surely thus saith the LORD, So will I give Zedekiah the king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, that remain in this land, and them that [q]dwell in the land of Egypt;

9 And I will deliver them to [r]be removed[7] into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them.

10 And [s]I will send the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, among them, till they be consumed from off the land that I gave unto them and to their fathers.

[6] It is certain that the survivors of these captives were restored under Zerubbabel, &c., and so that part of the prophecy was fulfilled. But has it been fulfilled when it promised to 'build and not pull down; to plant, and not pluck up'? Have not these very men, in their descendants, been as a 'building' hurt in mind, as a tree uprooted? True. But before this judgment came, in part, because 'blindness, in part, had happened to Israel' (Ro. 11. 25), God had gathered out of them 'a remnant, according to the election of grace' (Ro. 11. 5, 7), who became 'God's husbandry and God's building' (1 Co. 3. 9. Eph. 2. 21), a temple never to be pulled down (1 Co. 3. 16), a tree never to be plucked up (Ro. 11. 17, 23). 2 The which Jeremiah the prophet spake [b]unto all the people of Judah, and to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying,

3 From the thirteenth year of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, even unto this day, that is, the three and twentieth year,[2] the word of the LORD hath come unto me, and I have spoken unto you, [c]rising early and speaking; [d]but ye have not hearkened.

4 And the LORD hath sent unto you all his servants[3] the [e]prophets, rising early and sending them; but ye have not hearkened, nor inclined your ear to hear.

5 They said, [g]Turn ye again now every one from his evil way, and from the evil of your doings, and dwell in the land that the LORD hath given unto you, and to your fathers [h]for ever and ever:

6 And [i]go not after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, and provoke me not to anger with the works of your hands; and I will do you no hurt.

7 Yet[j] ye have not hearkened unto me, saith the LORD; that ye might provoke me to anger with the works of your hands to your own hurt.

8 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, Because ye have not heard my words,

9 Behold, [k]I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the LORD, and Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, [l]my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations.

10 Moreover, I will take from them[4] the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the [m]voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, [n]the sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle.[5]

11 And [o]this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon [6]seventy [7]years.

12 ¶ And it shall come to pass, [q]when seventy years are accomplished, that I will [r]punish[8] the his people in the worst of times. It is he who, by his blessed grace, must renew our heart; and draw us to himself, as well as receive us with open arms to his favour, and to the enjoyment of all the privileges of his people. But, alas! what judgment, in time and eternity, must await impenitent transgressors! And when some are signally punished, others should learn to avoid their wickedness.

CHAPTER XXV. Ver. 18–25. Beginning at the most distant. The Egyptians, Philistines, Tyrians, Sidonians, Jews, Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, Arabians, Syrians, dwelt westward of Babylon; and the Elamites or Persians and the Medes on the east side of it. (See Introduction, ch. iv. sect. 1 13.)

Ver. 9. My servant. Whether Nebuchadrezzar became God's servant in heart may be questioned: though his intimacy with Daniel, a man who would keep his religion no secret, together with the declaration of his faith, Da. 4. 34, 37, lead to the conclusion that he was a convert to the truth. Still both he and every potentate is the providential servant of the Most High, fulfilling his purposes of mercy or judgment on the nations they govern or destroy.—The word rendered 'perpetual' implies, Ex. 21. 6, no more than continuation till the jubilee. Like other words, it is modified, not by any change in itself, but by the nature of the subject treated of, and the other words with which it is combined. Here it may be understood as limited to continuation till 'the prophetic times of the restitution of all things,' Ac. 3. 21; or it may be taken absolutely and without limit; for the nations whom God did 'utterly destroy,' do now stand and will continue to stand, in the page of history, as 'perpetual' monuments of the 'desolations' occasioned by sin. Ps. 46. 8. C.

Ver. 12. When Jeremiah prophesied, Babylon was the queen of cities and the crown of empires. Situated on a noble river, in the centre of commerce and civilization, no city ever seemed more calculated for perpetual glory. But the Spirit of prophecy pronounced her doom; and all that now remains of 'this great Babylon,' is a few grave like mounds, the burial-places of her palaces, and one solitary fragment of her idolatrous temple—the witness of God's unerring foreknowledge, and the monument of his righteous judgment. C.

Ver. 15. Drunk it. By a common mode of speech the ear is said to drink and to devour, when the mind, through eager curiosity, excited alarm, or other strong emotion, gives earnest heed to what is spoken. C.

Ver. 17. Cup. A full cup is a striking emblem, and consequently a common expression for prosperity; a bitter cup for adversity; a wine-cup, as productive of drunkenness, is an equally intelligible emblem of luxury, ending in irrationality, madness, and ruin. C.

Ver. 18. As it is this day. There is no reason to conclude that these words were added after their fulfilment. For as the prophet says he had 'made all nations drink,' he looks forward to the judgments as already accomplished, and speaks of the future as of the present, because he foresaw it as certain. C.

Ver. 20. Remnant. They are called 'the remnant,' because Ashdod had been besieged by Psammiticus, king of Egypt, during twenty-nine years; and when he at last took it, he found it reduced to a few living skeletons, the sole survivors of the ruin of their city. C.

Ver. 34. Shepherds. This warning address may be to rulers under the emblem of shepherds, who ought to lead and protect the flock; or it may be directed chiefly to those pastoral nations which had not adopted husbandry or manufactures, and whose kings and nobles were literally shepherds, their flocks and herds being their principal riches. See Job 1. 3. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's words, which concern all, ought to be publicly proclaimed. He keeps an exact account of every circumstance relative to our enjoyment and improvement of the means of grace. And they who declare his messages ought to be earnest and diligent in delivering them, that they may at least be free from the blood of all men; and all of them should insist upon the same leading truths of the gospel. But if God's messengers of peace be contemned, his messengers of wrath will soon follow, and make dreadful king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the LORD, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it [x]perpetual desolations.

13 And I will bring upon that land all my words which I have pronounced against it, even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations.

14 For [y]many nations[9] and great kings[1] shall serve themselves of them[2] also: [z]and I will recompense them according to their deeds, and according to the works of their own hands.

15 ¶ For thus saith the LORD God of Israel unto me, Take the [a]wine-cup of this fury at my hand, [b]and cause all the nations, to whom I send thee, to drink it.

16 And they shall drink, [c]and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them.

17 Then[c] took I the cup at the LORD's hand, and made all the nations to drink,[3] unto whom the LORD had sent me:

18 To wit, [d]Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, and the princes thereof, to[b] make them a desolation, an astonishment, an hissing, and a curse; [e]as it is this day;

19 Pharaoh[d] king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people;

20 And[e] all the mingled people,[4] and all the kings of the land of [f]Uz, and all the kings[5] of the land of the [h]Philistines, and Ashkelon, and Azzah, and Ekron, and the remnant of Ashdod,

21 Edom,[i] and [j]Moab, and the children of Ammon,

22 And [k]all the kings of Tyrus, and all the kings of Zidon, and the kings of the isles which are beyond the sea,[6]

23 Dedan,[l] and Tema, and Buz, and all that are [7]in the utmost corners,[8]

24 And all the kings of Arabia, [m]and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert,

25 And all the kings of Zimri, and all the kings of [o]Elam, and all the kings of the Medes, 26 And all the kings of the north,[9] far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world,[1] which are upon the face of the earth: and the king of [2]Sheshach[3] shall drink after them.

27 Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Drink[p] ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I will send among you.

28 And it shall be if they refuse[4] to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, [q]Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Ye shall certainly drink.

29 For, lo, [r]I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name,[5] and [s]should ye be utterly unpunished?[6] Ye shall not be unpunished: [t]for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the LORD of hosts.

30 Therefore prophesy thou against them all these words, and say unto them, The LORD shall [7]roar[8] from on high, and utter his voice from his holy habitation; he shall mightily roar upon his habitation; [u]he shall give a shout, as they that tread the grapes,[9] against all the inhabitants of the earth.

31 A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth: [v]for the LORD hath a controversy with the nations; he will plead with all flesh: he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the LORD.

32 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, [w]evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

33 And[y] the slain of the LORD shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth: [z]they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground.

34 ¶ Howl,[a] ye shepherds,[1] and cry; and wallow yourselves in the ashes, ye principal of the flock: for the days of your slaughter[2] and of your dispersions are accomplished; and ye shall fall [b]like a pleasant [3]vessel.[4]

35 [c]And [5]the shepherds shall[d] have no way to flee, nor the principal of the flock to [6]escape.

36 A[e] voice of the cry of the shepherds, and an howling of the principal of the flock, shall be heard: for the LORD hath spoiled their [7]pasture.

37 And[g] the peaceable habitations are cut down, [h]because of the fierce anger of the LORD.

38 He[8] hath forsaken his covert,[9] as the lion: for their land is desolate,[1] because of the fierceness of the oppressor, and because of his fierce anger.

work. God does not usually strike without warning; but if we will not hear we must perish. When judgment begins at the house of God, it ordinarily makes fearful and overturning work among all, even the mightiest nations around, before it cease. That God, to whom all nations are accountable, can easily, by a small sip of his unbounded wrath, by a stroke of his sword, or the roaring of his voice, terrify, perplex, and destroy them, however numerous, powerful, or secure. And they who have plagued their neighbours, and especially the people of God, shall have their fill of vexation and misery at last.—Men who are ambitious of power generally become troublers and destroyers to the world around. But great earthly pomp and power are of very uncertain, and often of very short, continuance. And no sinners can either withstand or outrun the judgments of God. When wars are once kindled, the higher men are the more is their danger; and even

THE KING'S CHAMBER—WHERE ONE OF THE EGYPTIAN PHARAOHS WAS BURIED. [Jeremiah, xxv:19.]—"Pharaoh king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people." The Pharaoh to whom Jeremiah refers is not Cheops who built the Great Pyramid for his tomb. Ezekiel's Pharaoh was the successor in after ages of Cheops. "Pharaoh" is a general term used by the ancient Egyptians to denote their ruler. The King's Chamber is near the heart of the Great Pyramid, the largest that was ever built. Cheops was the second king of the fourth dynasty, and according to Wallis Budge, reigned 3733 B. C. The name of this Pharaoh was found written in red ink upon blocks of stone inside the pyramid. The King's Chamber is lined with granite, and measures about thirty-five by seventeen by nineteen feet. The floor of the King's Chamber is about one hundred and forty feet from the level of the base of the pyramid.

cities of Judah, which [c]come to worship[1] in the LORD's house, [d]all the words that I command thee to speak unto them; diminish not a word:

3 If[e] so be they will hearken and turn every man from his evil way, that I may repent me of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them because of the evil of their doings.

4 And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD, [f]If ye will not hearken to me, to walk in my law, which I have set before you,

5 To[h] hearken to the words of my servants the prophets, whom I sent unto you, both rising up early,[2] and sending them, but ye have not hearkened;

6 Then will I make this house [i]like Shiloh, and will make this city [j]a curse[3] to all the nations of the earth.

7 So [k]the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the house of the LORD.

8 ¶ Now it came to pass, when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the LORD had commanded him to speak unto all the people, that [l]the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, took him, saying, Thou shalt surely die.

9 Why[n] hast thou prophesied in the name of the LORD, saying, This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city shall be desolate without an inhabitant? [o]and all the people were gathered against Jeremiah [p]in the house of the LORD.

10 When [q]the princes of Judah heard these things, then they came up from the king's house unto the house of the LORD, and sat down in the entry[4] of the [r]new gate of the LORD's house.

11 Then [s]spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes, and to all the people, saying, This man is worthy to die;[5] for[t] he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard with your ears.

12 ¶ Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes, and to all the people, saying, [u]The LORD sent me to prophesy against this house, and against this city, all the words that ye have heard.

13 Therefore now [v]amend your ways, and your doings, and obey the voice of the LORD your God; and the LORD will repent him of the evil that he hath pronounced against you.

16 ¶ Then[x] said [a]the princes and all the people unto the priests and to the prophets, This man is not worthy to die; for he hath spoken to us in the name of the LORD our God.

17 Then rose up certain of [b]the elders of the land, and spake to all the assembly of the people, saying,

18 Micah[c] the Morasthite prophesied in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [d]Zion shall be plowed like a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and [e]the mountain of the house as the high places of a forest.[8]

19 Did Hezekiah king of Judah and all Judah put him at all to death? [g]did he not fear the LORD, and besought the LORD,[9] and the LORD repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them? Thus might[1] we procure great evil against our souls.[2]

20 ¶ And there was also a man that prophesied in the name of the LORD, Urijah the son of Shemaiah of [h]Kirjath-jearim, who prophesied against this city, and against this land, according to all the words of Jeremiah:

21 And when Jehoiakim the king, with all his mighty men, and all the princes, heard his words, [i]the king sought to put him to death: but when Urijah heard it he was afraid, and [j]fled, and went into Egypt:

22 And Jehoiakim the king sent [k]men into Egypt, namely, Elnathan the son of [l]Achbor, and certain men with him into Egypt:

many who had lived harmlessly share in the hardships. But if the ravages of war be so tremendous, what infinitely more fearful work must be the consciousness of having sinned away our opportunity to get to heaven for ever and ever! Let then wars and troubles, however distant, make me to hear and fear, and embrace his new covenant of peace offered in the gospel, that I may at last enter into that peaceful habitation, into which no fire or sword, no violence or destruction, can ever enter.

CHAPTER XXVI. REFLECTIONS.—God patiently waits, and earnestly calls men to repentance. The dispensations of his providence are just and even similar. And if men will not be subject to his command, they must be subjected to his curse, and the execution of it. If they will not be warned, they must be condemned. Profane clergymen never fail to hate and persecute such as are faithful for their kind warnings. But to be bold in preaching, and patient in suffering, is truly worthy of a minister of Christ. And no damage or death ought to make them in the least recede from God's truth. If they be faithful, it is at their infinite peril who persecute and murder them. It is proper that men should deter themselves, or others, from sin, by the irreparable mischief it will do to our souls. And it is the wisdom of the greatest to regard the admonitions of JEHOVAH. More justice may be expected from profligate civil judges than from abandoned clergy. And yet many wicked princes eagerly draw down the judgment of God upon their heads by the persecution of their faithful admonishers. But it is beyond their power to cut off God's ministers or worshippers till their testimony be finished: and whenever it pleases God he can, in the very worst of times, raise up protectors to his servants. Let us then always attend to our duty, and commit our safety to God, who has the hearts of all men in his hand, and can raise us up friends in the day of trial where we least expected to find them.

CHAPTER XXVII. Ver. 7. They served Nebuchadnezzar, and Evil-merodach his son, and Belshazzar his grandson: and then came the time fixed by God for the overthrow of the Chaldean monarchy, when the Medes, Persians, and their allies reduced it, and rendered the Chaldeans tributaries and slaves.

REFLECTIONS.—The whole earth is the Lord's, and he may dispose of it as he pleases. And since he puts little value upon it, he often gives most of it to the wicked; and soon he will call them to account for their use of his gifts. Civil dominion is far from being founded on either the reality or the appearance of saving grace. And they who have no shadow of a right to eternal life, may have a justifiable right to son of Shaphan was with Jeremiah, [p]that they should not give him into the hand of the people to put him to death.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 Under the type of bonds and yokes he prophesieth the subduing of the neighbour kings unto Nebuchadnezzar. 8 He exhorteth them to yield, and not to believe the false prophets. 12 The like he doeth to Zedekiah. 19 He foretelleth the remnant of the vessels shall be carried to Babylon, and there continue until the day of visitation.

IN the beginning of the reign of [1]Jehoiakim[2] the son of Josiah king of Judah, [a]came this word unto Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD to me, [b]Make thee bonds and yokes, and put them upon thy neck,

3 And send them [c]to the king of Edom, and to the king of Moab, and to the king of the Ammonites, and to the king of Tyrus, and to the king of Zidon, by the hand of the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah king of Judah;[3]

4 And command them to say unto their masters,[4] Thus saith [d]the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Thus shall ye say unto your masters;

5 I[e] have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power, and by my outstretched arm, and [f]have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me.

6 And now [h]have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, [i]my servant; and [k]the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him.

7 And[l] all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land come:[5] and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him.

8 And it shall come to pass, that the nation and kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation [m]will I punish,[6] saith the LORD, with the sword, and with the famine, and with the pestilence, until I have consumed them by his hand.

9 Therefore [n]hearken not ye to your prophets, nor to your diviners, nor to your dreamers,[7] nor[o] to your enchanters, nor to your sorcerers, which speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon:

10 For[p] they prophesy a lie unto you, to remove you far from your land; and that I should drive you out, and ye should perish.

11 But the nations that bring their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve[q] him, [q]those will I let remain still in their own land, saith the LORD; and they shall till it, and dwell therein.

CHAP. XXVII.

1 Or Zedekiah, ver. 3, 12, 20, 27, the order was given under Jehoiakim, but not executed till under Zedekiah.

2 In several MSS., and in the Syriac and Arabic, it is 'Zedekiah,' which change ver. 3 seems to require; and this reading is supported by commentators of the highest rank. Still there seems an insuperable difficulty in the way, viz. Jehoiakim is specially described as 'the son of Josiah,' whereas Zedekiah was his brother, 2 Ki. 24. 17. Is it not, therefore, necessary to conclude that the authorized reading is correct? And may it not be explained thus? The word came to the prophet 'in the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim;' and it not only foretold the captivity, but the extinction or degradation of the line of Jehoiakim, and the elevation of Zedekiah, and the sending of the yokes and bonds, either actually or prophetically, by the ambassadors of the neighbouring states, who should come to congratulate him upon his accession to the throne of Judah? C.—There must be an error here in the text. Jehoiakim reigned eleven years. This prophecy and the command embodied in it were given to Jeremiah in the commencement of his reign, and consequently eleven years before his brother Zedekiah was placed upon the throne by Nebuchadnezzar. Yet in ver. 3 and again in ver. 12 of this chapter it appears that Zedekiah was the reigning monarch at the time of the prophecy. So also in ch. 28. 1, the same fact is expressly affirmed. We must conclude, therefore, that the name Jehoiakim has, by the error of some early copyist, been inserted instead of Zedekiah. A few ancient MSS. with the Syriac and Arabic versions have the reading Zedekiah, which is adopted by some of the best critics.—P.

8 There are few objects about which men are more anxious than national independence and political liberty—few things more hateful to a nation than a foreign yoke. Of these desires and aversions God avails himself that he may illustrate and enforce the doctrine of divine foreknowledge and providential retribution—two doctrines that idolatrous nations totally disbelieve, and to which Christian nations too little attend. The one should lead to a careful study of prophecy, and observation of 'the signs of the times;' the other, to the conformity of all political principles and practices with the immutable laws of divine truth, justice, and mercy.—C.

12 ¶ I spake also [r]to Zedekiah king of Judah according to all these words, saying, Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people, [s]and live.

13 Why[t] will ye die, thou and thy people, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, as the LORD hath spoken against the nation that will not serve the king of Babylon?

14 Therefore[u] hearken not unto the words of the prophets that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: for [w]they prophesy a lie unto you.

15 For I have not sent them, saith the LORD, yet they prophesy a lie[x] in my name, that I might drive you out, and that ye might perish, ye, [z]and the prophets[1] that prophesy unto you.

16 ¶ Also I spake to the priests, and to all this people, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Hearken not to the words of your prophets that prophesy unto you, saying, [y]Behold, the vessels of the LORD's house shall now shortly be brought again from Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you.

17 Hearken[z] not unto them; serve the king of Babylon, and live: [a]wherefore should this city be laid waste?

18 But[b] if they be prophets, and if the word of the LORD be with them, let them [c]now make intercession to the LORD of hosts, that the vessels[2] which are left in the house of the LORD, and in the house of the king of Judah, and at Jerusalem, go not to Babylon.

19 ¶ For thus saith the LORD of hosts concerning [d]the pillars, and concerning the sea, and concerning the bases, and concerning the residue of the vessels that remain in this city,

20 Which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took not, when [e]he carried away captive Jeconiah, the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, from Jerusalem to Babylon, and all the nobles[3] of Judah and Jerusalem;

21 Yea, thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, concerning the vessels that [f]remain in the house of the LORD, and in the house of the king of Judah and of Jerusalem;

22 They shall be [h]carried to Babylon, and there shall they be [i]until the day that I visit them, saith the LORD: then [k]will I bring them up, and restore them to this place.

temporal enjoyments. They who in any respect serve God never lose by his service; and if we will not serve our Maker and Preserver, it is but just that we be forced to serve our enemies. It is very unsafe to struggle against his providence; for when he judges, he will overcome. When his judgments are abroad in the earth, we ought not to seek great things for ourselves, but to be thankful for little. And if his judgments are begun, it is better to alleviate the burden by submission, than to make it heavier by perverseness. Yea, though we should never see the deliverance of God's church, we ought never to despair of it: he will at

Judah, in the fourth [2]year,[3] and in the fifth month, that Hananiah the son of Azur [b]the prophet, which was of Gibeon, spake unto me in the house of the LORD, in the presence of the priests, and of all the people, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, I have broken the [c]yoke of the king of Babylon.

3 Within two full years[4] will[d] I bring again into this place [e]all the vessels of the LORD's house that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place, and carried them to Babylon;

4 And I will bring again to this place Jeconiah[5] the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, with all the captives[6] of Judah, that went into Babylon, saith the LORD: for I will [f]break the yoke of the king of Babylon.

5 ¶ Then the prophet Jeremiah said unto the prophet Hananiah in the presence of the priests, and in the presence of all the people that stood [h]in the house of the LORD,

6 Even the prophet Jeremiah said, [7]Amen:[8] the LORD do so; the LORD perform thy words which thou hast prophesied, to bring again the vessels of the LORD's house, and all that is carried away captive, from Babylon into this place.

7 Nevertheless,[i] hear thou now this word that I speak in thine ears, and in the ears of all the people:

8 The prophets that have been before me and before thee of old, [j]prophesied both against many countries, [k]and against great kingdoms, of war, and of evil, and of pestilence.

9 The prophet which prophesieth of peace,[9] when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, [l]then shall the prophet be known, that the LORD hath truly sent him.

10 ¶ Then Hananiah the prophet took the yoke[m] from off the prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it.

11 And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Even so [n]will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from the neck of all nations within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah [o]went his way.[1]

12 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the prophet, after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah, saying,

13 Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Thou hast broken the yokes of wood, but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron.[2]

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and they shall serve him: [q]and I have given him the beasts of the field also.

15 ¶ Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet, Hear now, Hananiah, [r]The LORD hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie.

16 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth: this year [s]thou shalt die, because thou hast taught [3]rebellion[4] against the LORD.

17 So[t] Hananiah the prophet died the same year, in the seventh month.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 Jeremiah sendeth a letter to the captives in Babylon, to be quiet there, 8 and not to believe the dreams of their prophets, 10 and that they shall return with grace after seventy years. 15 He foretelleth the destruction of the rest for their disobedience. 20 He showeth the fearful end of Ahab and Zedekiah, two lying prophets. 24 Shemaiah writeth a letter against Jeremiah. 30 Jeremiah readeth his doom.

NOW[1] these are the words of [a]the letter that Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem unto the residue of [b]the elders which were carried away captives, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon,[2]

2 (After that Jeconiah[3] the king, and the queen, and the eunuchs,[4] the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, and the carpenters, and the smiths, were departed from Jerusalem.)

3 By the hand of Elasah the son of [c]Shaphan, and [d]Gemariah the son of Hilkiah, (whom Zedekiah king of Judah sent[5] unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon,) saying,

4 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, whom [e]I have caused[6] to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon,

5 Build[g] ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them;

6 Take[h] ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; [i]and take wives for your sons, and give

[3] From what year was it the fourth? Some think from the jubilee; but of this there is no intimation. May it not be estimated from Nebuchadnezzar conquering Judah, and rendering Jehoiakim tributary, from which period the gradual conversion of the seventy years' captivity commences. At the end of three years, however, Jehoiakim rebelled, when the treasure was renewed, and on the death of Jehoiakim, which occurred soon after, Jehoiachin succeeded, and reigned three months, and was succeeded by Zedekiah in the fourth year since the first subjugation of Judah, and 5 of the first captivity.—C.

The prayer that follows, it is to be noted, only seeks the fact of the restoration, and makes no mention of the time: for the prophet knowing the mind of the Lord respecting the seventy years' captivity, could not pray, in faith, for Hananiah's period of two years, which he knew to be an unauthorized and false prediction.—C.

They held out hopes of speedy deliverance, and thus excited discontent and even rebellion, which would have entailed severe punishment. Jeremiah was commissioned to tell them the truth, so that they might not feel disappointment, and that they might submit calmly to their lot.—C.

last, in wrath, remember mercy. Meanwhile, let us detest flattering clergy. Incapable of interceding for their welfare, these hurry nations and churches into utter destruction, and perish in misery, along with those whom they have deceived.

CHAPTER XXVIII. REFLECTIONS. — False teachers impudently dare to preach their other gospel, and speak lies in God's name. But what is the chaff to the wheat? Not majesty of style, not the inculcating of faith or repentance, but flattering hints of prosperity in sin, mark their discourses. Alas! how strangely were the Jews besotted, who, contrary to manifold warnings, believed such impostors as flattered them to their ruin! But falsehood, advanced with solemnity and confidence, often gains regard. And many dare to affirm that to be God's truth which shortly will be found a lie, to their own damnation. But the faithful servants of God must not strive; and if they are reviled, they must not revile again. God will, in his due time, vindicate their honour, and disgrace and punish their opposers. And none may expect heavier judgments than they who hinder the success of God's Word, and seek to prejudice men's minds against the faithful ministers of it. At last every one who ran into sacred offices unsent, or who preached his own inventions instead of the truths of Christ, shall reap the due reward of his wickedness.

CHAPTER XXIX. REFLECTIONS.—Letters of seasonable comfort or advice are a service to God and his church. Though God correct his people, he never breaks his promise with them. And the view of God as our God, and the appointer of our troubles, tends greatly to render us patient under them. In every condition we ought to make the best of what we have, though we should be far from having all we wish. They who behave meekly and quietly often meet with better treatment from strangers than they expected. And whatever hardships we have to endure in a country, we should pray for its welfare. When people love to be deceived, they readily find flatterers to their ruin. But they who trust the promises of God shall never be disappointed. No difficulties can hinder the execution of his purposes, or fulfilment of his promises, your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there, and not diminished.

7 And seek[7] the peace[8] of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the LORD for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace.

8 ¶ For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [h]Let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed.

9 For they prophesy falsely[9] unto you in my name; I have not sent them, saith the LORD.

10 ¶ For thus saith the LORD, That after seventy[k] years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, [l]and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place.

11 For I know [m]the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the LORD, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an [n]expected end.[1]

12 Then shall ye [o]call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, [p]and I will hearken unto you.

13 And [q]ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me [r]with all your heart.

14 And[t] I will be found of you, saith the LORD; and [u]I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the LORD; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive.

15 ¶ Because[2] ye have said, The LORD hath raised us up [v]prophets in Babylon;[3]

16 Know that [w]thus saith the LORD of the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and of all the people that dwelleth in this city, and of your brethren that are not gone forth with you into captivity;

17 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will send upon them the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, and will make them like vile figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

18 And I will persecute them with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence, [x]and will deliver them to be removed to all the kingdoms of the earth, to be[4] a curse, and an astonishment, and an hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations whither I have driven them:

19 Because[5] they have not hearkened to my words, saith the LORD, which I sent unto them by my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them; but ye would not hear, saith the LORD.

20 ¶ Hear[a] ye, therefore, the word of the LORD, all ye of the captivity, whom [b]I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon:

21 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, of Ahab the son of Kolaiah, and of Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, [c]who prophesy a lie unto you in my name, Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall slay them before your eyes;

22 And of them shall be taken up [d]a curse by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, saying, The LORD make thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon [e]roasted in the fire;[5]

23 Because they [f]have committed villany in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives, and have spoken lying words in my name, which I have not commanded them; [g]even I know, and am a witness, saith the LORD.

24 ¶ Thus shalt thou also speak to Shemaiah the Nehelamite,[6] saying,

25 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Because thou hast [i]sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to [j]Zephaniah[7] the son of Maaseiah, the priest, and to all the priests, saying,

26 The LORD hath made thee priest in the stead of [k]Jehoiada the priest, that ye should be officers in the house of the LORD, for every man that is [l]mad,[8] and maketh himself a prophet, [m]that thou shouldest put him in prison, and in the stocks.

6 Since our Lord was accused of being mad, no one need be surprised that Jeremiah under the Old Testament, and Paul under the New, should both have been so calumniated. Jn. 10. 20. Ac. 26. 24. And, as it is easier to invent a falsehood than to answer an argument; and as many will, at all times, be found more willing to listen to an evil report than patiently to examine evidence; and, as in true religion there must be many things strange to the ears, and above the apprehension of worldly men, the continuance of such calumnies and accusations, down to the present time, cannot excite the wonder of any acquainted with the world and its ways; with the malice and the wiles of Satan and his emissaries.—C.

beyond the due time. And his promises should excite, not supersede, our earnest prayers. By prayer we go forth to meet the accomplishment of promises. And it is when our supplications are fervent, cordial, and persevering, that we may expect gracious returns. Alas! how often men mistake the messengers, the preachers, and prophets of Satan, for those of Jesus Christ, and credit them as such! But they who flatter men in sin are undoubtedly false prophets. And if men make themselves vile by their sins, God, in just judgment, will render them vile in their sufferings. If evil clergymen indulge themselves in secret wickedness, let them not wonder if God render them base before all the people on earth, and eternally lost in hell. They who would be faithful to souls, may expect to be treated by their unfaithful brethren as deceivers or madmen: persecuting zeal, under pretence of regard to the honour of God, will extend its murderous influence to the utmost; and very often church power is employed in tormenting her best friends. But God often renders those friendly to his faithful servants of whom it could scarcely have been expected; while their persecutors are quickly overwhelmed with ruin; and they that would not wait the due season of God's favours, lose their share in them.

CHAPTER XXX. Ver. 3. Israel and Judah. The promise is distinctly made both to Israel, or the ten tribes that separated from Rehoboam, and Judah, or the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, including most of the tribe of Levi. Now, though Judah was restored under Zerubbabel and his friends, Israel, or the ten tribes, never were. Indeed, their present residence is either totally unknown, or matter of continued question. Some believe them to be the modern Affghans; others, the American Indians; others, the Nestorian Christians in the neighbourhood of the Caspian Sea, &c. But, wherever they may be, they are yet to 'return and possess the land' that God gave to their fathers. C.

Ver. 11. Full end. Not necessarily an extermination of persons, but a 'full end' of their power and glory. This event has been exemplified in the Assyrian, Medo-Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires. And, strange as it may appear, the descendants of Jacob possess at this moment a name and visible being, and exercise a power in the financial, and by consequence in the political, affairs of the world, possessed by no representative of those mighty and extinct monarchies. So literally verified is this prophecy, that, while the mightiest empires have been dissolved and come to 'a full end,' a people comparatively few and feeble retain their name, their laws, their identity, nay, their power; and shadow out, even in their dispersion, the glory that awaits them when 'Jacob shall return and be in rest.' C.

Ver. 12. Incurable. The word has been translated 'desperate;' and it has also been explained as signifying 'incurable' by human means. And this exposition is countenanced by ver. 17, in which health and healing are promised by God himself. Still there is a sense in which the bruise (of sin) may justly be called 'incurable;' for, in truth, the 'old man' is not healed, but 'mortified;' the 'body of sin' is not renovated, but 'destroyed.' 'Old things pass away, and all things become new,' Ro. 6. 6; 8. 13; 2 Co. 5. 17. C.

Ver. 16. Shall be devoured. The Babylonians were 'devoured' by the Medes and Persians, they again by the Grecians; and they by the Romans. And it abides an historical and incontrovertible fact, that each of these empires has fallen, or been 'devoured,' just in proportion to their cruelty or kindness to the Jewish church. The cruel Babylonian empire has been utterly exterminated. The Persians restored Israel, and Persia still survives. C.

Ver. 19. Mirry. Not the 'mirth of fools,' which is as the 'crackling of thorns,' but the voice of thanksgiving for mercies, and of spiritual joy in the victories of grace.—Note; Religion is much injured by any undue gloominess of religious men. No doubt there are times when it is impossible to look upon sinners without sorrow. Yet, as 'there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth,' the children of God may always find cause to 'make truly merry,' Ps. 100. 1, 2; Isa. 15. 7, 10. C.

Ver. 24. The latter days. Marked not by any chronology but by historical description of facts. Thus they are noted, Da. 2. 28, as the days during, and subsequent to, the subversion of the fourth monarchy; and in Ac. 2. 17 the 'last days, which seem to be identical with the 'latter days,' are dated from the miraculous outpouring of the Spirit of God in tongues and other miraculous gifts at Pentecost. C.

27 Now, therefore, why hast thou not [o]reproved [p]Jeremiah of Anathoth, which [q]maketh himself a prophet to you?

28 For therefore he sent unto us in Babylon, saying, [r]This captivity is long: build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them.

29 And [s]Zephaniah the priest read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah the prophet.

30 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

31 Send[t] to all them of the captivity, saying, Thus saith the LORD concerning Shemaiah the Nehelamite, [u]Because that Shemaiah hath prophesied unto you, and I sent him not, and he caused you to trust in a lie;

32 Therefore thus saith the LORD, [v]Behold, I will punish Shemaiah the Nehelamite, and his seed: he shall not have a man to dwell among this people; neither shall he behold the good that I will do for my people, saith the LORD; because[w] he hath taught rebellion[9] against the LORD.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 God showeth Jeremiah the return of the Jews. 4 After their trouble they shall have deliverance. 10 He comforteth Jacob. 18 Their return shall be gracious. 23 Wrath shall fall on the wicked.

THE word[a] that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD God of Israel, saying, [b]Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book.[1]

3 For, lo, the days come, saith the LORD, that[c] I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the LORD; [d]and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it.

4 ¶ And these are the words that the LORD spake concerning Israel and concerning Judah.

5 For thus saith the LORD, We have heard a[e] voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace.[2]

6 Ask ye now, and see whether a man[3] doth travail with child? wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, [f]as a woman in travail,[5] and all faces are turned into paleness?

7 Alas![g] for that day is great,[6] so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble;[7] but [h]he shall be saved out of it.

8 For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD of hosts, [i]that I will break his yoke from off thy neck,[8] and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him:[9]

9 But[j] they shall serve the LORD their God, and David[1] their king, whom I will raise up unto them.

10 ¶ Therefore [k]fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the LORD; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, [l]I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and [m]shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid.

11 For [n]I am with thee, saith the LORD, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, [p]yet will I not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.

12 For thus saith the LORD, [q]Thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous.[2]

13 There[r] is none to plead thy cause, that thou mayest be bound up:[3] thou[s] hast no healing medicines.

14 All[t] thy lovers have forgotten thee; they seek thee not: for [u]I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased.

15 Why [v]criest thou for thine affliction? thy sorrow is incurable [w]for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased, I have done these things unto thee.

16 Therefore[x] all they that devour thee [y]shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, every one of them, shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee shall be a spoil, and all that prey upon thee will I give for a prey.

17 For [z]I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the [5]LORD; [a]because they called thee an outcast, saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after.

18 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, Behold, [b]I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling-places; [c]and the city shall be builded upon her own [6]heap,[7] and the palace[8] shall remain after the manner thereof.

19 And[d] out of them shall proceed thanksgiving, and the voice of them that make merry: and [e]I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; [g]I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small.

20 Their[h] children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and [i]I will punish all that oppress them.[9]

21 And their nobles[1] shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them;[2] and [j]I will cause him to draw [3]near, and he shall approach[4] unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the LORD.

1 This is one of the strongest evidences of the plenary inspiration of Scripture. 'Write all the words that I have spoken to thee:' they were the words of God, not of man; they were not to be left to the uncertainty of human memory, they were to be written. They were designed also to serve a certain specific purpose. Almost every little section in this book begins with some phrase which embodies the same truth, that the words recorded are the words of God.—P.

REFLECTIONS.—God's promises ought to be carefully preserved, propagated, considered, and improved. Sin often makes for men a hell upon earth. Very sore trials and miseries often precede the most remarkable deliverances. And diligence in God's service is the proper fruit of his salvations. But there is no true serving of him but in receiving and serving his Son Jesus Christ, our mystical David. No profession, however plausible, can secure impunity in sin. Nay, though our heaviest afflictions are far lighter than our sins deserved, yet the sins of professors, and even of saints, are often most sharply corrected. But it is only incurable lusts that make incurable troubles. Let God's church be ever so fearfully deserted and despised, he will in due time deliver her. Let therefore her true children give no way to disquieting fears or hopeless sorrows. Never is her deliverance nearer than when all refuges but God have entirely failed her, and all her 22 And ye shall be [k]my people, and I will be your God.

23 ¶ Behold, the [l]whirlwind of the LORD goeth forth with fury, a continuing[5] whirlwind; it shall fall[6] with pain upon the head of [m]the wicked.

24 The[n] fierce anger of the LORD shall not return, until he have done it, and until he have performed the intents of his heart: [o]in the latter days ye shall consider it.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 The restoration of Israel. 10 The publication thereof. 15 Rahel, mourning, is comforted. 18 Ephraim, repenting, is brought home again. 22 Christ is promised. 27 God's care over the church. 31 His new covenant. 35 The stability, 38 and amplitude of the church.

AT the [a]same time,[1] saith the LORD, will I be the God [b]of all the families of Israel, and they[c] shall be my people.

2 Thus saith the LORD, [d]The people which were left of the [2]sword [e]found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when [f]I went to cause him to rest.

3 The LORD hath appeared of old[3] unto me,[4] saying, Yea, [g]I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.[5]

4 Again[6] I[7] will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel: thou shalt again be adorned with thy [8]tabrets,[9] and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

5 Thou[h] shalt yet plant vines upon [i]the mountains of Samaria: the planters shall plant, and shall eat them[8] as common things.

6 For there shall be [j]a day, that [k]the watchmen [l]upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, [m]Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the LORD our God.[9]

7 For thus saith the LORD, [n]Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, [o]O LORD, save thy people, the remnant of Israel.

8 Behold, [p]I will bring them from the north country, [q]and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child [r]and her that travaileth with child together: [s]a great company shall return thither.

9 They shall come [t]with weeping, [u]and with supplications[1] will I lead them: [v]I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters [w]in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for[x] I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born.

10 Hear the word of the LORD, O ye nations, and declare it [y]in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will [z]gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.

[5] This prediction is interpreted by the evangelist of the massacre of the children at Bethlehem by Herod, Mat. 2.17, 18, at which time it was literally fulfilled. For the prophet does not figuratively represent Rachel, the wife of Jacob, as arising from her grave to lament, but every bereaved mother as a Rachel, that is, as a 'sheep' (for so the word signifies) bleating after her lamb when seized by the ravenous and relentless wolf. No doubt the prediction had been previously fulfilled by Nebuzaradan (Jer.40.1), but the prediction did not relate to one event, but embraced a whole series of events, in every one of which it is equally exemplified and fulfilled.—C.

13 Then[k] shall the virgin rejoice in the dance, both young men and old together: [l]for I will turn their mourning into joy, and will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow.

14 And [m]I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness,[3] and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the LORD.

15 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, [n]A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping; Rahel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they [o]were not.[4]

16 Thus saith the LORD, [p]Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: [q]for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the LORD; and [r]they shall come again from the land of the enemy.

17 And[s] there is hope in thine end, saith the LORD, that thy children shall come again to their own border.

allies and friends appear disposed to hurt her. If Jesus rise up to the prey, he will work great things for her deliverance. And to his person, incarnation, covenant engagements, and fulfilment of them, ought we to look through all temporal or spiritual blessings. And while he destroys his and our enemies, his kindness and relations to, or work for us, ought to engage our hearts in his worship and service.

CHAPTER XXXI. Ver. 1–6. I will manifest myself to the Hebrew tribes and gospel church as their God, and will cause them to acknowledge, worship, and serve me, as my people; as I formerly did in the land of Judah and in the cities thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity, The LORD bless thee, O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness.

24 And there shall dwell in Judah itself, and in all the cities thereof together, husbandmen, and they that go forth with flocks.

25 For I have satiated the weary soul, and I have replenished every sorrowful soul.

26 Upon this I awaked, and beheld; and my sleep was sweet unto me.

27 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will sow the house of Israel, and the house of Judah, with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast.

28 And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the LORD.

29 ¶ In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge.

30 But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge.

31 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah;

32 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the LORD;

33 But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the LORD, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people.

34 And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the LORD: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the LORD: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

35 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; the LORD of hosts is his name:

36 If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the LORD, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever.

37 Thus saith the LORD, If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel, for all that they have done, saith the LORD.

38 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that the city shall be built to the LORD, from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner.

39 And the measuring-line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath.

Arabian desert, on the way to Canaan, when first I espoused the Israelites to myself as my peculiar people, and bestowed on them my ordinances and miraculous favours, after I had delivered them from the murderous cruelty of Pharaoh and of the Amalekites; for that ancient love manifested to them is neither ceased nor weakened. I will yet establish your government in both church and state; and ye shall have great ground of rejoicing, on account of both temporal and spiritual benefits. And ministers and others shall stir up their companions to join the church and attend the ordinances of God. 7–9. For, to the infinite joy and comfort of all the friends of the Jews, or of the gospel church, I will marvellously deliver them, and conduct them, however unfit in themselves, to their own land, or to the new-covenant state; render them penitent and prayerful, and in the most affectionate manner supply them with everything necessary. 10–14. All the nations around shall know and be affected with the marvellous salvation, temporal and spiritual, which I will work for them; they themselves shall, with great joy, repair to the temple and the ordinances of the gospel, in order to praise me for my diversified kindness. Universal shall be the joy and prosperity of all ranks; ministers and people shall be plentifully supplied, and be mutual blessings one to another. 15–17. The terrible mourning occasioned by the captivity in Babylon, the slaughter of the infants at Bethlehem, or rejection of the Jewish nation, shall be turned into joy, by the restoration of the Benjamites and other Jews, and by the accession of multitudes to the gospel church. 18 20. Deeply penitent for their sins, and earnestly desirous of spiritual blessings, shall the Jews return from Babylon, and especially from their present dispersion; and graciously will I receive them into favour, and abundantly bless them. 21 26. Return with the utmost care and despatch to your country, and erect marks by the way to direct such as may follow you: yea, though for your sinful apostasies ye have been long tossed to and fro, prepare for a return to your country, where the Messiah shall be born; and after your return, great shall be your reformation in righteousness and holiness; numerous shall be your flocks of cattle, and as numerous your worshippers of God; for I will refresh and supply you with every good thing.— Upon this Jeremiah awaked, and was delighted with the comfortable revelations which had been made to him in his dream or vision. 27 30. I will exceedingly multiply themselves and their cattle; and will manifest myself as eager to restore and bless them as ever I seemed to destroy them. Nor shall they have any more reason to complain that they are punished for their fathers' iniquities, but every one shall suffer for his own. 31–34. And I will renew my covenant with them in a more abundantly gracious form than I did at Sinai, and which they have so often transgressed by their idolatry and other wickedness, notwithstanding my kindness to them. But freely bestowing myself upon them as their God, adopting them as my people, and forgiving all their iniquities, I will clearly enlighten the minds of multitudes in the knowledge of the gospel, and renew their hearts, and dispose them to a holy and cheerful obedience to all my commandments.

Ver. 22. A woman shall compass a man. Pearson, Gill, and other learned expositors, interpret this expression of the miraculous conception of Christ. Boothroyd translates it 'a woman shall put to flight the mighty man;' and, with Willet, Gataker, and others, considers it an expressive mode of saying, that 'the weak and timid woman shall terrify and conquer the strong and courageous man.' See ver. 11. C.

Ver. 27. When, in healthfulness, peace, and prosperity, both men and cattle shall multiply as the corn. This promise acquires peculiar emphasis when it is remembered that, at present, many districts of Judea are nearly uninhabited. See Wylie's Modern Judea, p. 306. C.

Ver. 34. Since a time will come when 'they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, saying, Know the Lord,' and that because 'all shall have come to know him,' it follows that it is the right and duty of 'every man' to teach his neighbour; and that the right never ceases, and the duty never re axes, but in proportion as the necessity ceases by the universal diffusion of religious knowledge in principle and practice. C.

Ver. 37. Until man can measure infinity in heaven above, or penetrate to the centre of the earth beneath, I will still, notwithstanding their ingratitude and rebellion, preserve a 'remnant' of Israel, a seed for the reviva. of the whole, 'according to the election of grace.' C.

Ver. 38. The prophecy includes the restoration of Jerusalem on earth to her former dimensions and glory, as the emblem of the 'heavenly Jerusalem,' the 'city that hath foundations,' and 'the kingdom that cannot be moved.' C.

REFLECTIONS.— Thrice happy are the families which have God for their God! Remembrance of our own and the church's former deliverances is of great use to prevent despondency under long and sore troubles. But all our comfort and holiness must flow from God's everlasting love, fixed on and exercised towards us. It is pleasant when those that were chief rebels against God become his most zealous subjects and servants. But if he build up his church, and restore to us the ordinances of his grace, all must issue to the praise of his glory. And praises to him for mercies bestowed must be attended with supplications for what he has promised. When he intends to deliver, no distance, no weakness, no paucity, no grief, no perilous passage, can stop or even retard his designs. If he calls us to follow him, he will either find or make us a plain way; nor will he allow us to want any necessary supply. Great is the goodness of God observable in common providences, but especially in new-covenant blessings. Thrice happy are they whose souls are richly supplied by the Holy Ghost from the all-containing fulness of God, and who taste his goodness in everything they receive. It is not the death, but the justly apprehended loss, of our relations, that should disquiet us; and solid hopes of the happy issue of troubles will gate toward the east, shall be [a]holy unto the LORD; [b]it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down, any more for ever.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 Jeremiah, being imprisoned by Zedekiah for his prophecy, 6 buyeth Hanameel's field. 13 Baruch must preserve the evidences, as tokens of the people's return. 16 Jeremiah in his prayer complaineth to God. 26 God condemneth the captivity of Judah for their sins, 36 and promiseth a gracious return.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the LORD [c]in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar.

2 For then the king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem: [d]and Jeremiah the prophet was shut up [e]in the court of the prison, which was in the king of Judah's house.

3 For [f]Zedekiah king of Judah had shut him up, saying, [g]Wherefore dost thou prophesy, and say, Thus saith the LORD, [h]Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it;

4 And [i]Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes;

5 And he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be until [k]I visit him, saith the LORD: [l]though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper.

6 ¶ And Jeremiah said, The word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

7 Behold, Hanameel, the son of Shallum thine uncle, shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field that is in [m]Anathoth; for the right[1] of redemption[1] is thine to buy it.

8 So Hanameel, mine uncle's son, came to me in [n]the court of the prison, according to the word of the LORD, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the country of Benjamin: for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. Then[2] I knew that this was the word of the LORD.

9 And I bought the field of Hanameel, my uncle's son, that was in Anathoth, [o]and weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver.[3]

10 And [p]I subscribed the evidence,[4] and sealed it, and took witnesses, and [q]weighed him the money in the balances.

11 So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed [r]according to the law and custom, and that which was open.[5]

12 And I gave the evidence of the purchase unto [s]Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, in the sight of Hanameel mine uncle's son, [t]and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the book of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the prison.

13 ¶ And I charged Baruch before them, saying,

14 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, both which is sealed, and this evidence which is open, and put them in an earthen vessel,[6] that they may continue many days:

15 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [u]Houses and fields and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land.

16 ¶ Now when I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, [v]I prayed unto the LORD, saying,

17 Ah, Lord GOD! behold, [w]thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched-out arm, and [x]there is nothing too hard for thee:[7]

18 Thou showest [y]loving-kindness unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them: [z]the great, the mighty God, the [a]LORD of hosts, is his name,

19 Great in counsel, and mighty in [b]work: for thine [c]eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men; [d]to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings:

20 Which[e] hast set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among other men: and [g]hast made thee a name, as at this day;

21 And[h] hast brought forth thy people Israel out of the land of Egypt with signs, and with wonders, and with a strong hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with great terror;

22 And[i] hast given them this land, which thou didst [j]swear to their fathers to give them, a land flowing with milk and honey:

23 And they came in, and possessed it; [k]but they obeyed not thy voice, neither walked in thy law: they have done nothing[9] of all that thou commandedst them to do; [l]therefore thou hast caused all this evil to come upon them.

24 Behold the [1]mounts,[2] they are come unto the city to take it; and [n]the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans that fight against it, because of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence: and what thou hast spoken [o]is come to pass; and, behold, thou seest it.[3]

[6] The idea of the prophet seems to have been akin to the modern practice of inclosing written documents in glass bottles, either hermetically sealed, or so immersed in plaster as to exclude the air and moisture, and thus handing them to the foundations of public buildings with a view to their possible discovery after many days. As the transaction has the appearance of a reality (comp. ver. 7, 8, and not of a vision, it is not beyond the bounds even of ordinary probability to speculate upon the future discovery of this very document, which, as the earliest deed of conveyance upon record, would certainly rank among the chief curiosities of the world.

It was now the tenth year of Zedekiah's reign, and the siege began in the tenth month of the ninth year. Famine too, begun already to be felt in the city, and pestilence was raging.—C.

make us bear them patiently. True repentance is a deep and thorough work; and renders a sinner very loathsome and wicked in his own view. Nor do sins of youth appear small under its influence. But all turning to God must be produced by his own Spirit in us; who introduces his grace, by making us to perceive gospel truths. And God is ever ready to give his most rebellious children a kind reception when penitent. His mercy cannot forbear working for them while he frowns; and at last it must break forth in unnumbered and everlasting blessings. But what an encouragement to faith and repentance is the incarnation and work of our Redeemer!—Thrice happy are societies and souls where righteousness towards men, and piety towards God, are closely connected. Refreshing is that sleep in which men are entertained with comfortable promises from God. And no prospect is more pleasant to gracious souls than the spiritual 25 And thou hast said unto me, O Lord GOD, Buy thee the field for money, and take witnesses; for[4] the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 ¶ Then[p] came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

27 Behold, I am the LORD, the [q]God of all flesh: [r]Is there any thing too hard for me?

28 Therefore thus saith the LORD, [s]Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall take it.

29 And the Chaldeans, that fight against this city, shall come [t]and set fire on this city, and burn it, with the houses upon whose roofs they have offered incense unto Baal, and poured out drink-offerings unto other gods, to provoke me[5] to anger.

30 For[u] the children of Israel, and the children of Judah, have only done evil before me from their youth:[6] for the children of Israel have only provoked me to anger with the work of their hands, saith the LORD.

31 For[v] this city hath been to me as a provocation of mine anger,[7] and of my fury, from the day that they built it, even unto this day, that I should [w]remove it from before my face;

32 Because[y] of all the evil of the children of Israel, and of the children of Judah, which they have done to provoke me to anger, [z]they, their kings, their princes, their priests, and the prophets, and the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

33 And they have turned unto me [a]the [8]back,[9] and not the face: [b]though I taught them, rising up early and teaching them, yet they have not hearkened to receive instruction.

34 But they [c]set their abominations in the house, which is called by my name, to defile it.[1]

35 And [d]they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto Molech, which I commanded them not, neither came it into my mind, that they should do this abomination, to cause Judah to sin.[2]

36 ¶ And now therefore[3] thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning this city, whereof ye say,[4] It[e] shall be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence;[5]
