19 For the LORD [b]brought Judah low, because of Ahaz king of Israel; for he made Judah naked,[3] and transgressed sore against the LORD.

20 And[c] Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria came unto him, and distressed him, but strengthened him not.[4]

21 For Ahaz took [d]away a portion out of the house of the LORD, and out of the house of the king, and of the princes, and gave it unto the king of Assyria: but he helped him not.

22 ¶ And [e]in the time of his distress did he trespass yet more against the LORD: this is that king Ahaz.

23 For he sacrificed unto the gods of Damascus, which smote him;[5] and he said, [f]Because the gods of the kings of Syria help them, therefore will I sacrifice to them, that they may help me: but they were the ruin of him, and of all Israel.[6]

24 And Ahaz gathered together the vessels of the house of God, and [g]cut in pieces the vessels of the house of God, and [h]shut up the doors of the house of the LORD, and he [i]made him altars in every corner of Jerusalem.

25 And in every several city of Judah he made high places to burn[7] incense unto other gods, and provoked to anger the LORD God of his fathers.

1 One of the most beautiful narratives upon record, and a glorious lesson to Christian nations—a lesson which some in a degree have learned, but which others are still in vain called to consider and obey. The picture of the undaunted prophet, the noble-hearted princes, the generous army in the foreground, and the returning captives gently escorted in the distance, form a picture which the heart can draw, but boundlessly beyond the utmost effort of the pencil.—C.

3 Nakedness either partial or entire, was a part of idolatrous worship, as appears from Ex. 32. 25. And with this idolatry had Ahaz infected his kingdom, the robbed her of her beautiful garment of righteousness, and left her exposed to the scorn of her enemies, and the storm of divine displeasure. 5 The Septuagint translates it: "And king Ahaz said, I will seek to the gods of Damascus which have smitten me." This view is preferred by many, as our translation seems to ascribe the power of smiting to idols. But there is no necessity nor is there any good authority, for departing from the Hebrew or the authorized version. Who smote Job? Satan. Job i. And who is he? The very god of this world. 4 The public worship at the temple was entirely suppressed during the latter years of king Ahaz. The only reason assigned for a contrary opinion is this: it is not said that the sacred fire on the altar of burnt offering was extinguished, or that it was rekindled by fire from heaven, as at the dedication of the temple. If, however, the service was not entirely put a stop to, the people in general were shut out from attending.—E.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 Hezekiah's good reign. 3 He restoreth religion. 5 He exhorteth the Levites to cleanse the house of God. 12 They sanctify themselves, and cleanse the house of God. 20 Hezekiah offereth solemn sacrifices, wherein the Levites were more forward than the priests.

HEZEKIAH began[a] to reign when he was five and twenty years old;[1] and he reigned nine and twenty years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Abijah, the daughter of [b]Zechariah.[2]

2 And he [c]did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that David his father had done.

3 ¶ He, in [d]the first year of his reign,[3] in the first month, [e]opened the doors of the house of the LORD, and repaired them.[4]

4 And he brought in the priests and the Levites, and gathered them together into the east street,

5 And said unto them, Hear me, ye Levites; [f]Sanctify now yourselves, and sanctify the house of the LORD God of your fathers, and carry forth [g]the filthiness out of the holy place.[5]

6 For [h]our fathers have trespassed, and done that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD our God, and have forsaken him, and have turned away their faces from the habitation of the LORD, and turned their backs.[6]

7 Also they have [i]shut up the doors of the porch, and put out the lamps, and have not burnt incense nor offered burnt-offerings in the holy place unto the God of Israel.

8 Wherefore the [k]wrath of the LORD was upon Judah and Jerusalem, and he hath delivered them to trouble, to astonishment, and to hissing, as ye see with your eyes.

9 For, lo, [l]our fathers have fallen by the sword, and our sons, and our daughters, and our wives, are in captivity for this.[7]

10 Now it is [m]in mine heart to make a covenant with the LORD God of Israel, that his fierce wrath may turn away from us.

11 My sons,[8] be[n] not now negligent: for the LORD hath [o]chosen you to stand before him, when God lays aside one instrument of correction, he often takes another in his hand; and turns the helps which we sinfully secure into ruinous plagues. When we forsake God, we must needs be disappointed in every other confidence. And desperately hardened must men be when both mercies and judgments render them worse and worse. Happy is that nation where their tyrannical monsters of wickedness are quickly cut off by death, to make way for better princes.

CHAPTER XXIX. REFLECTIONS.—What strange alterations the change of a sovereign may produce in a nation! And great is the mercy when God gives good men power after they have long been unwilling spectators of wickedness. It is highly honourable when those in high stations give to the Lord the first beginnings of their power and influence. And when God gives opportunity, with earnestness, humble grief, and holy zeal, should men reform their neglects and turn to the Lord. Corrupters of religion often leave the church and ordinances of God in the greatest confusion. And it is necessary to ponder the punishments of former sins in order to render us hearty and active in our reformation. And much may be done in a short time if all concerned be diligent. Honourable are those ministers whom God stirs up to be leaders in the work of reformation, to provoke their brethren to jealousy: and glorious is the sight when they cheerfully work to one another's hands in reforming the church; —when kings, princes, priests, and people vie with one another in improving Jesus Christ as the great propitiation for sins, and in serious repentance of former sins, and returning to the observance of all God's ordinances, grudging neither cost nor care! They will then find their work much more easy than they expected. But, alas! that priests, who ought to be to serve him, and that ye should minister unto him, and burn[9] incense.[1]

12 ¶ Then the Levites arose, Mahath the son of Amasai, and Joel the son of Azariah, of the sons of the [p]Kohathites: and of the sons of Merari; Kish the son of Abdi, and Azariah the son of Jehaleel: and of the Gershonites; Joah the son of Zimmah, and Eden the son of Joah:

13 And of the sons of [q]Elizaphan; Shimri, and Jeiel: and [r]of the sons of Asaph; Zechariah, and Mattaniah:

14 And of the sons of Heman; Jehiel, and Shimei: and of the sons of Jeduthun; Shemaiah, and Uzziel.

15 And they gathered their brethren, and sanctified themselves, and came, according to the commandment of the king, [s]by the words of the LORD, to cleanse the house of the LORD.

16 And the priests went into the [t]inner part of the house of the LORD, to cleanse it,[2] and brought out all the uncleanness that they found in the temple of the LORD into the court of the house of the LORD. And the Levites took it, to carry it out abroad [u]into the brook Kidron.

17 Now they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify, and on the eighth day of the month came they to the [v]porch of the LORD: so they sanctified the house of the LORD in eight days; and in the sixteenth day of the first month they made an end.[3]

18 Then they went in to Hezekiah the king, and said, We have cleansed all the house of the LORD, and the [w]altar of burnt-offering, with all the vessels thereof, and the show-bread table, with all the vessels thereof.

19 Moreover, [x]all the vessels, which king Ahaz in his reign did cast away[4] in his transgression, have we prepared and sanctified, and, behold, they are before the altar of the LORD.

20 ¶ Then Hezekiah the king [y]rose early, and gathered the rulers of the city, and went up to the house of the LORD.

21 And they brought [z]seven bullocks, and seven rams, and seven lambs, and seven he-goats, for a sin-offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah:[5] and he commanded the priests, the sons of Aaron, to offer them on the altar of the LORD.

22 So they killed the bullocks, and the priests received the blood, and [a]sprinkled it on

1 Hezekiah acted the part of a God-fearing monarch. He used his influence and his power to promote the spiritual welfare of his kingdom. He became a father to the nation. He instructed the priests, and stirred them up to a discharge of their proper duties. He warned the people, by showing what calamities had befallen them on account of their neglect of religion. CHAPTER XXX. [Ver. 1. It appears to me from the scope of the passage, that Ephraim and Manasseh are here mentioned not in their individual capacity, but as the representatives of the whole northern kingdom, just as Judah was the representative of the southern kingdom. Instead of addressing letters to each separate tribe, Hezekiah wrote to the chiefs of the two kingdoms. But in addition to this formal invitation, his messengers were instructed to go through all the cities of the land, and to address urgent verbal invitations to the whole people. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—God's ordinances ought not to be neglected on account of a mere circumstance. It is best to engage people to duty when they are in a proper temper. And we ought to stir up all whom we can to the worship and service of God, and that by the most engaging motives; representing to them the mercies and judgments of God, and his promises and threatenings. It is never too late for sinners to return while the calls of mercy are continued: and it is only impenitence persisted in that becomes fatal. If we do all that we can to encourage them, their blood must be on their own heads if they obstinately refuse. Better that our invitations should be derided than that God should be dishonoured, and one soul murdered by our sloth. And though few are saved, a remnant shall hear, fear, and humble themselves, and return to the Lord. What a shame it is when, on the contrary, ministers, through their inactivity, 33 And the [p]consecrated things were six hundred oxen, and three thousand sheep.

34 But the [q]priests were too few, so that they could not flay all the burnt-offerings: wherefore their [r]brethren the Levites did help them,[6] till the work was ended, and until the other priests had sanctified themselves: for the Levites were more upright in heart to sanctify themselves than the priests.

35 And also the burnt-offerings were in abundance, with the [s]fat of the peace-offerings, and the [t]drink-offerings for every burnt-offering. So the service of the house of the LORD was set in order.

36 And Hezekiah [u]rejoiced, and all the people, that God had prepared the people: for the thing was done suddenly.[7]

CHAPTER XXX.

1 Hezekiah proclaimeth a solemn passover on the second month for Judah and Israel. 13 The assembly, having destroyed the altars of idolatry in Jerusalem, keep the feast fourteen days. 27 The priests and Levites bless the people.

AND Hezekiah sent to all [a]Israel and Judah, and wrote letters also to [b]Ephraim and Manasseh,[1] that they should come to the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, to [c]keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel.

2 For the king had [d]taken counsel, and his princes, and all the congregation in Jerusalem, to keep the passover [e]in the second month.[2]

3 For they could not keep it at [f]that time, because the priests [g]had not sanctified themselves sufficiently, neither had the people gathered themselves together to Jerusalem.

4 And the thing pleased the king[3] and all the congregation.

5 So they established a decree to make proclamation [h]throughout all Israel, from Beersheba even to Dan, that they should come to keep the passover unto the LORD God of Israel at Jerusalem: for they had not done it of a long time in such sort as it was written.

6 So the posts[4] went with the letters from[5] the king and his princes throughout all Israel and Judah, and according to the commandment of the king, saying, Ye children of Israel, turn again unto the LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, and he will return to the remnant of you that are escaped out of the hand of the kings of Assyria.[6]

7 And be not ye like your fathers, and like your brethren, which trespassed against the LORD God of their fathers, who therefore gave them up to desolation,[7] as ye see.

8 Now be ye not stiff-necked,[8] as your fathers were, but [i]yield yourselves unto the LORD, and enter into his sanctuary, which he hath sanctified for ever; and serve the LORD your God, that the fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you.

9 For if ye turn again unto the LORD, your brethren and your children shall find compassion before them that lead them captive, so that they shall come again into this land: for the LORD your God is gracious and merciful, and will not turn away his face from you, if ye return unto him.

10 So the posts passed from city to city through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh even unto Zebulun: but they [r]laughed them to scorn, and mocked them.

11 Nevertheless [s]divers of Asher, and Manasseh, and of Zebulun, humbled [9]themselves, and came to Jerusalem.

12 Also in Judah the [t]hand of God was to give them one heart to do the commandment of the king and of the princes, by the word of the LORD.[1]

13 ¶ And there assembled at Jerusalem much people to keep the feast of unleavened bread [u]in the second month, a very great congregation.

14 And they arose, and took away the [x]altars that were in Jerusalem, and all the altars for incense took they away, and cast them into the brook Kidron.

15 Then they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the second month: and the [y]priests and the Levites were ashamed,[2] and sanctified themselves, and brought in the burnt-offerings into the house of the LORD.

16 And they stood in their place[3] after their manner, [z]according to the law of Moses the man of God: the priests sprinkled the blood, which they received of the hand of the Levites.

17 For there were many in the congregation that were not sanctified: therefore [a]the Levites had the charge of the killing of the passovers for every one that was not clean, to sanctify them unto the LORD.[4]

18 For a multitude of the people, even many of Ephraim, and Manasseh, Issachar, and Zebulun, [b]had not cleansed themselves, yet did they eat the passover otherwise than it was written: but Hezekiah [c]prayed for them, saying, The good LORD pardon every one

19 That [d]prepareth his heart to seek God, the LORD God of his fathers, though he be not cleansed according to the [e]purification of the sanctuary.[5]

20 And the LORD hearkened to Hezekiah, and [f]healed the people.

21 And the children of Israel that were present[6] at Jerusalem kept [g]the feast of unleavened bread seven days [h]with great gladness:

[1] Ephraim and Manasseh lay contiguous to Jerusalem, but not so near that Reuben and Gad, and not so near as Simeon and Dan. Three reasons seem to have produced this reformation in the invitation of Hezekiah, all which Manasseh was a descendant, as Benjamin was of Judah. It After Jeroboam was the greatest traitor, [p] it seems to have been the most hopelessly addicted to idolatry, and therefore its conversion might have been expected. Hos. 4. 17. 5. 1. [q] The king, by his pious and energetic letter, seeks to unite every effort of Heaven for the reformation and salvation of his country. This [r] end in relation to Ephraim seems to have been from the partial reformation [s] effected by the preaching of Hosea, ch. 13. 2. 14. 8. in which Manasseh, as [t] appears, and Ephraim, as Benjamin was of Judah, had, most probably, participated. [6] This implies that a portion of the people of the northern kingdom had already been carried captive by the king of Assyria. This took place during the reign of Pekah, when Pul and Tiglath-pileser made captives of the tribes east of the Jordan, and portions of the northern tribes. 2 Ki. 15. 29. 1 Ch. 5. 26.—P.

[9] The poverty and misery of a country are always to be traced to the sins of that country, which may be either personal, as lewdness, drunkenness, lying, dishonesty; conventional, as quarrelsomeness, uncharitableness, selfishness; or political, as partiality, injustice, oppression. Some of these may exist, and are generally found united, for they aim of necessity generally one another, and in every form they exist they provoke God to anger, and so destroy the world and the worship of God.—C.

[9] There are some to mock at every attempted reformation, and at every message from God. This is ever, alas!—never [r] any one to be [s] wise [t] for [u] any one, some will ever live yet, [v] even as "some mocked" when Paul preached Jesus and the resurrection; but Zacchæus and Damaris, with others, [w] came to him, and believed, Ac. 17. 32. 34.—C.

[1] This is the theory of all government. In the heart of the people—by grace, the gift of God implies obedience to the king and the princes, who constitute authority; but these ministers legislating for God, and requiring nothing of the people without or beyond the authority and sanction of the word of the Lord.—C.

[2] Ashamed of their past neglect, see Jer. 2. 26, or complacent with idolatry. The real sense of shame for sin is a sad symptom of spiritual death, Je. 6. 15. But the shame of any sin is a hopeful evidence of the spiritual working of the Spirit of God, Ro. 6. 21.—C.

[4] Many of those who assembled at Jerusalem to keep the feast had not prepared for it by ceremonial purification. They were probably ignorant of the minute requirements of the law. On being fully instructed after reaching Jerusalem, the heads of families found that they could not themselves slay the paschal lambs, because they were unclean. In all such cases the Levites acted in their stead, and the priests received the blood from the Levites and sprinkled it on the altar.—P.

But pleasant is the work when the worshippers of God have such delight in his service that they grudge neither cost nor time for it, and can hardly bear its conclusion. 22 And Hezekiah spake [t]comfortably unto all the Levites that taught the [u]good knowledge of the LORD: and they did eat throughout the feast seven days, offering peace-offerings, and making[8] confession to the LORD God of their fathers.

CHAPTER XXXI.

1 The people's zeal in destroying idolatry. 2 Hezekiah ordereth the courses of the priests and Levites, and provideth for their work and maintenance. 5 The people's forwardness in bringing in first-fruits and tithes. 11 Hezekiah appointeth officers to dispose of those offerings. 20 The sincerity of Hezekiah.

NOW when all this was finished, all Israel that were present[1] went out to the cities of Judah, and brake the images in pieces, and cut down the groves, and threw down the high places and the altars out of all Judah and Benjamin, in Ephraim also and Manasseh, until they had utterly destroyed[2] them all.[3] Then all the children of Israel returned, every man to his possession, into their own cities.

2 ¶ And Hezekiah appointed the courses of the priests, and the Levites after their courses, every man according to his service, the priests and Levites for burnt-offerings and for peace-offerings, to minister, and to give thanks, and to praise in the gates of the tents of the LORD.[4]

3 He appointed also the king's portion of his substance for the burnt-offerings, to wit, for the morning and evening burnt-offerings, and the burnt-offerings for the sabbaths, and for the new-moons, and for the set feasts, as it is written in the law of the LORD.[5]

[3] This noble proceeding can only be called, in one sense, a popular impulse, because it pervaded the people, as well as the king and the nation. But it was no less on that account an impulse from God (ch. 30. 12), and it was strictly legal, by the supreme law of Heaven, however contrary to idolatrous custom, prescription, and ordinances. See Lev. 23. 24. De. 7. 5. 12. 3.—C.

The city and temple of Jerusalem, and all places where God is truly worshipped, are so called, in reference to the provisional and mediatorial encampment of the angel of the LORD and his hosts around his people for protection and deliverance. [5] Hezekiah was a rich man. He had, in addition to the revenue of the kingdom, large private possessions, which are described in ch. 32. 27-29; out of these he contributed liberally, as was his duty, towards the maintenance of the worship of God. The offerings enjoined on the Israelites are minutely described in Numbers viii.—P.

[5] The disinterestedness of the priests was highly commendable, for they might easily have enriched themselves without being suspected. The whole transaction enlarges our idea of the blessing which had attended the solemnity; for before this the priests were generally careless and ungodly.—J.

4 Moreover he commanded the people that dwelt in Jerusalem to give [e]the portion of the priests and the Levites, that [6]they might be encouraged in the law of the LORD.[6]

5 ¶ And as soon as the commandment came abroad,[7] the children of Israel [f]brought in abundance[8] the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey,[9] and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly.

6 And concerning the children of Israel and Judah, that dwelt in the cities of Judah, they also brought in the tithe of oxen and sheep, and the [g]tithe of holy things, which were consecrated unto the LORD their God, and laid them [h]by heaps.

7 In the [i]third[1] month they began to lay the foundation of the heaps, and finished them in the seventh[2] month.[3]

9 Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps.

10 And[4] Azariah the chief priest of the house of Zadok answered him, and said, [m]Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the LORD, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty:[4] for the LORD hath blessed his people; and that which is left is this great store.[5] his daily portion[2] for their service in their charges, according to their courses;[3]

17 Both to the genealogy of the priests by the house of their fathers, and the Levites from[r] twenty years old and upward, in their charges by their courses;

20 ¶ And thus did Hezekiah throughout all Judah, and [u]wrought that which was good, and right, and truth, before the LORD his God.

21 And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, he did it [x]with all his heart,[5] and [y]prospered.

AFTER these[a] things, and the establishment thereof, [b]Sennacherib king of Assyria came, and entered into Judah, and encamped against the fenced cities,[1] and thought [c]to win them for himself.

2 And when Hezekiah saw that Sennacherib was come, and that [d]he was purposed to fight against Jerusalem,

3 He took counsel with his princes and his mighty men to [e]stop the waters of the fountains which were without the city; and they did help him.

4 So there was gathered much people together, who stopped all the fountains, and the brook[f] that ran[2] through the midst of the land,[3] saying, Why should the kings of Assyria come, and find much water?

5 Also he strengthened himself, and built up all the wall [g]that was broken, and raised it up to the towers, and [h]another wall without, and repaired [i]Millo in the city of David, and made [k]darts and shields in abundance.

6 And he set captains of war over the people, and gathered them together to him in the street of the gate of the city, and spake comfortably to them,[4] saying,

7 Be [l]strong and courageous, be not afraid nor dismayed for the king of Assyria, nor for all the multitude that is with him: for there be more with us than with him.[5]

8 With him is an [m]arm of flesh; but with us is the LORD our God to help us, and to fight our battles. And the people [n]rested themselves upon the words of Hezekiah king of Judah.

9 ¶ After[o] this did Sennacherib[6] king of Assyria send his servants[7] to Jerusalem,[8] (but he himself laid siege against Lachish, and all his power[9] with him,) unto Hezekiah king of Judah, and unto all Judah that were at Jerusalem, saying,

10 Thus saith Sennacherib king of Assyria, [p]Whereon [q]do ye trust, that ye abide in the siege in Jerusalem?[2]

11 Doth not Hezekiah persuade you to give over yourselves to die by famine and by thirst, saying, [r]The LORD our God shall deliver us out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

12 Hath not the same Hezekiah [s]taken away[3] his high places and his altars, and commanded Judah and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall worship before one altar, and burn incense upon it?

13 Know ye not what I and my fathers have done unto all the people of other lands? [t]were the gods of the nations of those lands any ways able to deliver their lands out of mine hand?

14 Who was there among all the gods of those nations that my fathers utterly destroyed, that could deliver his people out of mine hand, that your God[4] should be able [u]to deliver you out of mine hand?

15 Now therefore [v]let not Hezekiah [w]deceive you, nor persuade you on this manner, neither yet believe him: for no god of any nation or kingdom was able to deliver his people out of mine hand, and out of the hand of my fathers; [x]how much less shall your God deliver you out of mine hand?

The collecting of 'much people,' and the implied 'hiding' of the 'brook' in the midst of the land, indicate that, by a subterraneous passage, the water was conducted into the city, for the purpose of enabling it to stand the expected siege, while the want of water would distress or destroy the invaders. holy zeal against everything sinful. And well bestowed is that labour or expense which we lay out in abolishing idolatry or restoring the true worship of God. How comely is it when great men, by their generous presents, encourage others to bestow their respective dues upon the service and servants of God! The gospel ministry might be easily and comfortably maintained did every one concerned minister according to his ability. And with great care ought sacred revenues to be preserved and managed, that none of Jesus' servants, or their families, may lack what is necessary: for it is scandalous that some should riot in luxury, while their brethren, more laborious and faithful, should be almost starved for want. But with great confidence may we expect that God will honour and succeed our religious endeavours when we engage in them with our whole heart.

CHAPTER XXXII. [Ver. 4. We may conclude from this passage, when taken in connection with ver. 30, and with the statements made in the apocryphal book of Ecclesiasticus, 48. 17, that there was a fountain called Gihon somewhere on the west of the city, whose waters originally flowed down the valley of Hinnom, 'through the midst of the land.' Nehemiah, 2. 13, speaks of the Dragon Well in the same direction, and this may have been another name for Gihon, or for one of a group of fountains. Hezekiah seems to have covered the fountains by constructing subterranean chambers similar to those at the pools of Solomon, and then to have conducted the waters by hidden canals into the city. The work was evidently of great magnitude. Perhaps the Pool of Hezekiah, which LORD God of Israel, and to speak against him, saying, As the gods of the nations of other lands have not delivered their people out of mine hand, so shall not the God of Hezekiah deliver his people out of mine hand.

18 Then they [c]cried with a loud voice, in the Jews' speech, unto the people of Jerusalem that were on the wall, to affright them, and to trouble them; that they might take the city.

19 And they spake [b]against the God of Jerusalem, as against the gods of the people of the earth, which were the work of the hands of man.[7]

20 ¶ And [c]for this cause Hezekiah the king, and the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz, prayed and cried to heaven.[8]

21 And[d] the LORD sent an angel,[9] which cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria: so he returned with shame of face to his own land. And when he was come into the house of his god,[1] they that came forth of his own bowels slew him[2] there with the sword.

22 Thus the LORD [e]saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the hand of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, and from the hand of all other,[3] and [f]guided them on every side.

23 And many [g]brought gifts unto the LORD to Jerusalem, and presents[4] to Hezekiah king of Judah: so that he was magnified in the sight of all nations[5] from thenceforth.

24 ¶ In[h] those days Hezekiah was sick to the death, and prayed unto the LORD: and he spake unto him, and he [i]gave him a sign.

25 But Hezekiah [k]rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him; for [l]his heart was lifted up: therefore there was [m]wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem.[6]

26 Notwithstanding Hezekiah [n]humbled himself for the pride[7] of his heart, (both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem,) so that the wrath of the LORD came not upon them in the days of Hezekiah.

27 ¶ And Hezekiah had [o]exceeding much riches and honour: and he made himself treasuries for silver, and for gold, and for precious stones, and for spices, and for shields, and for all manner of pleasant jewels;[8]

28 Storehouses also for the increase of corn, and wine, and oil; and stalls for all manner of beasts, and cotes for flocks.[*]

29 Moreover he provided him cities, and possessions of flocks and herds in abundance; for [p]God had given him substance very much.

REFLECTIONS.—Never are Satan and his agents more ready to harass the people of God than when they are employed in the work of reformation: and thus God justly punishes his people for their hypocrisy and indifference in his service. Proud men hope to carry all to their mind if their first attempts are successful. But when war or danger is threatened, we must prepare for it by every proper mean, remembering, after all, to rest chiefly on the powerful protection and assistance of God. Strong faith in him will help us above the fear of man. If our adversaries discover their enmity to God and our souls by boasting and blasphemy, let us give ourselves to mourning and prayer: so shall the issue be terrible to them, and happy and honourable to us. But how criminal is ingratitude to God for his singular, his miraculous favours! The pride of his own children is especially odious and provoking to him; and it becomes us carefully to guard against and heartily to hate it. Astonishing is the wisdom of God, that can make sins, as well as sufferings, the means of his people's trial and humiliation. He delights to honour those whom his POOL OF HEZEKIAH—BUILT BY THE KING OF JUDAH. [II. Chronicles, xxxii:30.]—"This same Hezekiah also stopped the upper watercourse of Gihon, and brought it straight down to the west side of the city of David. And Hezekiah prospered in all his works." The same pool is referred to also in II. Kings, xx:20, where it says: "And the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and all his might, and how he made a pool, and a conduit, and brought water into the city, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?" This pool is 240 feet long by 144 feet wide, and is rather shallow. At the bottom is natural rock, which is leveled and covered with cement, and it is furnished with water by a small aqueduct from Birket Mamila. Dr. Thomson says the water which fills the pool is still brought by an underground conduit from what is supposed to be the upper Gihon.

son, In this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen before all the tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever:

8 Neither will I any more remove the foot of Israel from out of the land which I have appointed for your fathers; [k]so that they will take heed to do all that I have commanded them, according to the whole law, and the statutes, and the ordinances, by the hand of Moses.

9 So Manasseh [l]made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to err,[5] and to do worse than the heathen, whom the LORD had destroyed before the children of Israel.

10 ¶ And[m] the LORD spake[6] to Manasseh, and to his people; but they would not hearken.

11 Wherefore the LORD brought upon them the captains of the host [n]of the king of Assyria, which took Manasseh [o]among the thorns,[7] and bound[p] him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon.

12 And[q] when he was in affliction, he besought the LORD his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, 13 And prayed unto him: and he [r]was entreated of him, and heard his supplication, and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom. [s]Then Manasseh knew that the LORD he was God.

14 ¶ Now after this he [t]built a wall without the city of David, on the west side of Gihon, in the valley, even to the entering in of the fish-gate, and compassed about [u]Ophel, and raised it up a very great height, and put captains of war in all the fenced cities of Judah.

15 And [x]he took away the strange gods, and the idol out of the house of the LORD, and all the altars that he had built in the mount of the house of the LORD, and in Jerusalem, and cast them out of the city.

16 And he [y]repaired the altar of the LORD, and sacrificed thereon peace-offerings and thank-offerings, and [z]commanded Judah to serve the LORD God of Israel.[8]

17 Nevertheless [a]the people did sacrifice still in the high places, yet unto the LORD their God only.

[a] To have been "kept from an offering" is from an offering grace, is the greatest blessing; to have been led to repentance, is the next; and to abound in the best and fullest reparation in our power is the only evidence to man that our profession is sincere. Manasseh failed of the first; but, by the grace of God, he happily exemplified the other two.—C.

1 He carried on his reformation with a strong hand; somewhat did not prevent him from going far enough, and zeal did not lead him beyond due bounds. He walked in the golden mean, and his moderation was known unto all men. He looked not to the right hand or the left, but forward, forward, and upward. Reader, let the conduct of this pious youth be thy example through life.—C.
2 No limit of age can be prescribed to the spirit and grace of God. The call to the vineyard may be not only in the eleventh hour of a natural, but of an ecclesiastical, Mat. 20. 6 Lu. 23. 43. Still, early conversions are the most common and the most hopeful. A young king surrounded by all the fascinations of a court, yet fixing his heart on heaven: beset by flatterers, yet listening to the word of truth, the Spirit of God, and his own conscience: tempted by the example of paternal idolatry, yet steadily determined upon a godly reformation;—such was Josiah—such is the beauty of early piety.—C.

20 ¶ So Manasseh [e]slept with his fathers, and they buried him in his own house:[2] and Amon his son reigned in his stead.[3]

21 ¶ Amon[f] was two and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned two years in Jerusalem.

22 But he [g]did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, as did Manasseh his father: for Amon sacrificed unto all the carved images which Manasseh his father had made, and [h]served them;

23 And [k]humbled not himself before the LORD, as Manasseh his father had humbled himself; but Amon [l]trespassed more and more.

24 And [m]his servants conspired against him, and slew him in his own house.

25 ¶ But the people of the land [n]slew all them that had conspired against king Amon; and the people of the land made Josiah his son king in his stead.[5]

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 Josiah's good reign. 3 He destroyeth idolatry. 8 He provideth for the repairs of the temple. 14 Hilkiah having found the book of the law, Josiah sendeth to Huldah to inquire of the Lord. 23 Huldah prophesieth the destruction of Jerusalem, but respite thereof in Josiah's time. 29 Josiah, causing it to be read in a solemn assembly, reneweth the covenant with God.

JOSIAH was eight years old when he began to reign; and he reigned in Jerusalem one and thirty years.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right hand nor to the left.[1]

3 ¶ For in the eighth year of his [o]reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father: and in the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places, and the groves, and the carved images, and the molten images.

4 And they brake down the altars of Baalim in his presence; and the images[3] that were on high above them he cut down; and the [q]groves, grace hath enabled remarkably to honour him. And noted piety and activity for God are the true way to be happy and prosperous in life, and to die revered and justly lamented.

CHAPTER XXXIII. REFLECTIONS.—What a grief it would be to many godly parents to return from death and behold the abominations of their children! Nations and churches readily relapse into their wonted abominations, from which they had been reformed with infinite pains. They become inhuman, unnatural, and infatuated when God gives them over to their own hearts' lusts. They turn from and provoke God, their best friend, and depend on Satan, their worst enemy. How quickly Hezekiah's boasted treasures are carried to Babylon, and his son to attend them! But O the mercy of God, in giving repeated warnings to the most vile and obstinate sinners; or in afflicting them, in order to awaken them! He can convert and forgive the greatest monsters of wickedness. But bitter are the griefs, and visible the fruits, of real repentance, particularly when the subjects were once remarkably wicked. What care to restore the worship of God which they have defaced, and to reform the persons whom they have seduced! Though God cast their sin behind his back, they never forget it themselves, nor think themselves worthy of ordinary honours, whether in life or in death. And it may be useful for us to remember that our sins, with their aggravating circumstances, as well as our returns to our duty, are exactly marked in the registers of heaven. But with what a dreadful career and unremitting obstinacy do some men post to eternal ruin! They greedily copy their parents' wickedness, but never their repentance.

CHAPTER XXXIV. [Ver. 7. Josiah was the most thorough and successful reformer of Old Testament history. His piety and zeal were, under God, mainly owing to the wise and holy men who had charge of his early training. Never had there been in the Jewish court such a noble band of high-minded and God-fearing men. Shaphan, the scribe, was chief. He had charge of the finances, and trained the young prince in political economy. Hilkiah, the high-priest, and the carved images, and the molten images, he brake in pieces, and made dust of them, and strowed it upon the graves of them that had sacrificed unto them.[5]

5 And he [a]burnt the bones of the priests upon their altars, and cleansed Judah and Jerusalem.

6 And so [b]did he in the cities of Manasseh, and Ephraim, and Simeon even unto Naphtali with their mattocks[6] round about.[7]

7 And when he had broken down the altars and the groves, and had beaten the graven images [c]into powder, and cut down all the idols throughout all the land of Israel, he returned to Jerusalem.

8 ¶ Now, [d]in the eighteenth year of his reign,[8] when he had purged the land, and the house, he sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, and Maaseiah the governor of the city, and Joah the son of Joahaz the recorder, to [e]repair the house of the LORD his God.

9 And when they came to Hilkiah the high priest, they [f]delivered the money that was brought into the house of God, which the Levites that kept the doors had gathered of the hand of Manasseh and Ephraim, and of all the remnant of Israel, and of all Judah and Benjamin; and they returned to Jerusalem.[9]

10 And they put it in [g]the hand of the workmen that had the oversight of the house of the LORD, and they gave it to the workmen that wrought in the house of the LORD, to repair and amend the house;

11 Even to the artificers and builders gave they it, to buy hewn stone, and timber for couplings, and to floor[1] the houses which the kings[h] of Judah had destroyed.[2]

12 And the men did the work [i]faithfully: and the overseers of them were Jahath and Obadiah, the Levites, of the sons of Merari; and Zechariah and Meshullam, of the sons of the Kohathites, to set it forward; and other of the Levites, [k]all that could skill of instruments of music.[3]

13 Also they were [l]over the bearers of burdens, and were overseers of all that wrought the work in any manner of service: and [m]of the Levites there were scribes, and officers, and porters.

14 And when they brought out the money that was brought into the house of the LORD, Hilkiah the priest [n]found a book of the law of the LORD given by[4] Moses.[5]

15 And Hilkiah answered and said to Shaphan the scribe, I have found the book of the law in the house of the LORD. And Hilkiah delivered the book to Shaphan.

16 And Shaphan carried the book to the king, and brought the king word back again saying, All that was committed to[6] thy servants, they do it.

17 And they have [o]gathered together the money that was found in the house of the LORD, and have delivered it into the hand of the overseers, and to the hand of the workmen.

18 Then Shaphan[7] the scribe told the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath given me a book. And Shaphan read it[8] before[a] the king.

19 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the [p]words of the law, that he [q]rent his clothes.[9]

20 And the king commanded Hilkiah, and Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and [r]Abdon the son of Micah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asaiah a servant of the king's, saying,

21 Go, inquire of the LORD for me, and for them that are [s]left in Israel and in Judah, concerning the words of the book that is found: for [b]great is the wrath of the LORD that is poured out upon us, because our fathers have not kept the word of the LORD, to do after all that is written in this book.

22 And Hilkiah, and they that the king had appointed, went to Huldah the [c]prophetess, the wife of Shallum, the son of Tikvath, the son of [d]Hasrah, keeper of the wardrobe;[1] (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the [2]college;[3] and they spake to her to that effect.

23 ¶ And[t] she answered them, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Tell ye the man that sent you to me,

24 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, [f]I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the curses that are written in the book which they have read before the king of Judah:

25 Because [g]they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be poured out upon this place, and shall not be quenched.

26 And as for the king of Judah, who sent you to inquire of the LORD, so shall ye say unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel concerning the words which thou hast heard;

27 Because thine heart was [h]tender,[4] and thou didst humble thyself before God, when thou heardest his words against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, and humbledst thyself before me, and didst rend thy clothes, and weep before me; I have even heard thee also, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 Josiah keepeth a most solemn passover. 20 He, provoking Pharaoh-necho, is slain at Megiddo. 25 Lamentations for Josiah. 26 His acts.

MOREOVER, Josiah kept a passover unto the LORD[1] in Jerusalem: and they killed the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month.

2 And he set the priests in their charges, and "encouraged them to the service of the house of the LORD;

3 And said unto the Levites that taught all Israel,[2] which were holy unto the LORD, Put[b] the holy ark in the house which Solomon the son of David king of Israel did build;[3] it shall not be a burden upon your shoulders: serve[c] now the LORD your God, and his people Israel;

4 And prepare yourselves by the houses of your fathers, after your courses, according to the writing of David king of Israel, and according to the writing of Solomon[4] his son;

5 And stand in the holy place, according to the divisions of the families of the fathers[5] of your brethren the people,[6] and after the division of the families of the Levites;

6 So kill the passover, and [d]sanctify yourselves, and prepare your brethren, that they may do according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

7 And Josiah "gave to the people, of the flock, lambs and kids, all for the passover-offerings, for all that were present, to the number of thirty thousand,[7] and three thousand bullocks: these were of the king's substance.

8 And 'his princes gave[8] willingly unto the people, to the priests, and to the Levites: [g]Hilkiah, and Zechariah, and Jehiel, rulers of the house of God, gave unto the priests, for the passover-offerings, two thousand and six hundred small cattle, and three hundred oxen.

9 Conaniah also, and Shemaiah and Nethaneel, his brethren, and Hashabiah, and Jeiel, and Jozabad, chief of the Levites, [h]gave unto the Levites, for passover-offerings, five thousand small cattle, and five hundred oxen.

10 So the service was prepared, and the priests 'stood in their place, and the Levites in their courses, according to the king's commandment.

11 And they killed the passover,[9] and the priests [k]sprinkled the blood from their hands, and the Levites 'flayed them.

12 And they "removed the [l]burnt-offerings, that they might give according to the divisions of the "families of the people, to offer unto the LORD, as it is written in the book of Moses: and so did they with the oxen.

13 And they °roasted the passover with fire, according to the ordinance: but the other holy offerings sod they in pots, and in caldrons, and in pans, and [p]divided them speedily among all the people.

14 And afterward they made ready for themselves, and for the priests: because the priests the sons of Aaron [q]were busied in offering of burnt-offerings and the fat[2] until night; therefore the Levites prepared for themselves, and for the priests the sons of Aaron.

15 And the singers, the sons of Asaph, were in their place,[3] according to the "commandment of David, and Asaph, and Heman, and Jeduthun the king's seer;[4] and the porters [s]waited

9 Josiah's reign was an exact counterpart to that of Manasseh. The latter tolerated and established every form of worship except the true: Josiah established the true religion, and proscribed all others. He uprooted idolatry in the whole land. He was as thorough an iconoclast as John Knox. He shattered all images to pieces; he overthrew all altars; he desecrated all idol temples; and he summarily punished all idolatrous priests and people. He did not stop here. He was more than a mere destroyer of false systems. He was a reformer. He repaired the temple, re-established the national religion, remembered the priesthood, and adopted all possible means for the instruction of the whole body of the people in the law of the Lord.—J.

3 Had Amon removed it, as some think, to make room for an idol, it would most probably have been destroyed: had the priests, in idolatrous times, removed it for safety, the pious act would scarcely have been unnoticed, &c. The conclusion therefore is, that it had been removed by Josiah, during the cleansing and repairs of the temple, and was now restored to its appointed place. —C.

4 This interference of David and Solomon in the regulation of divine worship, does not sanction either kings or ecclesiastics in modifying God's service after their own imaginations. Hezekiah, Solomon were both prophets of the Lord, and, in that character, and not in virtue of their office as kings, did they enact those pious and orderly forms which Josiah is now restoring.—C.

his nation; trembles at the words of the God of Israel; and under the apprehensions of his denounced wrath humbles himself; and labours to have all his subjects taught divine truths, fixed in them, and preserved from wickedness. And it is pleasant, after great prevailing impiety, to behold kings, ministers, and people harmoniously and heartily zealous for the instituted purity of God's worship, and solemnly devoting themselves, upon a new-covenant footing, to his service.

CHAPTER XXXV. REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how often neither ministers nor people show due forwardness in observing the solemn ordinances of God! Yet much might be done for the excitement of others by one in high station, who so loves him that he grudges no expense nor labour in his service. And magistrates, by their example and zealous exertions, might effectually instigate and encourage even ministers to do their duty; yea, where many difficulties are in the way. No one ought to become a hypocrite for the sake of carnal advantage: but certainly such as appear sincere ought to meet with peculiar encouragement. Care should be taken, by all concerned, that none be deprived of God's ordinances on account of their poverty; and that none, by public service, injure his own soul's edification. But great labour and pains are necessary in reducing all ranks and things to due order in the observation of God's ordinances after they at every gate; they might not depart from their service;[5] for their brethren the Levites prepared for them.

16 So all the service of the LORD was prepared the same day, to keep the passover, and to offer burnt-offerings upon the altar of the LORD, according to the commandment of king Josiah.

17 And the children of Israel that were present[6] kept[t] the passover at that time, and the feast of unleavened bread seven days.

18 And there [u]was no passover like to that[7] kept in Israel from the days of Samuel the prophet; neither did all the kings of Israel keep such a passover as Josiah kept, and the priests, and the Levites, and all Judah and Israel that were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

19 In[x] the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah was this passover kept.

20 ¶ After[y] all this, when Josiah had prepared the temple,[8] Necho king of Egypt came up to fight against Carchemish by Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him.[9]

21 But he sent ambassadors to him, saying, What[z] have I to do with thee, thou king of Judah? I come not against thee this day, but against [a]the house wherewith I have war; for God[b] commanded me to make haste: forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not.

22 Nevertheless Josiah would not turn his face from him, but [c]disguised himself, that he might fight with him, and hearkened not unto the words of Necho from [d]the mouth of God,[1] and came to fight in the valley of [e]Megiddo.

23 And the archers shot at king Josiah; and the king said to his servants, Have me away; for I am sore [f]wounded.

24 His servants therefore took him out of that chariot, and put him in the second chariot that he had; and they brought him to Jerusalem, and he [g]died, and was buried in one of the sepulchres[2] of his fathers: and [h]all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah.[3]

25 ¶ And Jeremiah lamented for Josiah: and all the [i]singing-men and the singing-women spake of Josiah in their lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Israel: and, behold, they are written in the Lamentations.[4]

26 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Josiah, and his [k]goodness, according to that which was written in the law of the LORD, 27 And [l]his deeds, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of the Kings of Israel and Judah.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 Jehoahaz succeeding, is deposed by Pharaoh, and carried into Egypt. 5 Jehoiakim reigning ill, is carried bound into Babylon. 9 Jehoiachin succeeding, reigneth ill, and is brought into Babylon. 11 Zedekiah succeeding, reigneth ill, despiseth the prophets, and rebelleth against Nebuchadnezzar. 14 Jerusalem, for the sins of the priests and the people, is wholly destroyed. 22 The proclamation of Cyrus for building the temple.

THEN the people of the land took [a]Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and made him king in his father's stead in Jerusalem.

2 Jehoahaz was twenty and three years old when he began to reign; and he reigned three months in Jerusalem.

3 And the king of Egypt [b]put him down[1] at Jerusalem, and condemned[2] the land in an hundred talents of silver, and a talent of [3]gold.

4 And the king of Egypt made Eliakim his brother king over Judah and Jerusalem, and turned his name to Jehoiakim. And Necho took [c]Jehoahaz his brother, and carried him to Egypt.[4]

5 ¶ Jehoiakim[d] was twenty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD his God.

6 Against him [e]came up Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and bound him in fetters,[5] to carry him to Babylon.

7 Nebuchadnezzar[f] also carried off the vessels of the house of the LORD to Babylon, and put them in his temple at Babylon.

8 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and [g]his abominations which he did, and that which was found in him, behold, they are written in the book of the Kings of Israel and Judah: and [h]Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

1 Josiah cannot be accused of rashly entering upon an unjust war; for Necho was marching an army through his territory without leave, and about to attack the king of Babylon, from whom he must have held the northern parts of his kingdom, ch. 34. 6. Nor did Necho's ambassadors give any evidence that they had a divine command for their expedition, they merely assert it; and the expression, 'from the mouth of God' (Elohim) is not used in Scripture for a divine message, which is uniformly 'from the mouth of Jehovah.' 3 The battle took place in the plain of Esdraelon, at or very near to the spot consecrated in national history by the great victory of Barak. It would seem that there was on the battle-field an ancient sanctuary of the two Syrian gods Hadad and Rimmon, and that the city of Megiddo was not far distant. We have no details of the battle. One melancholy event absorbs the attention of the sacred writer. Josiah disguised himself, as kings were then accustomed to do when entering battle. The Egyptian archers fired upon and mortally wounded him. He was put into another chariot, and driven rapidly off eastward to Jerusalem. But all was in vain. The good monarch died; and all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for him.—P.

4 Immediately after the battle of Megiddo Pharaoh-Necho continued his march against the king of Assyria. The Jews were thus left to themselves, and they placed Jehoahaz on the throne. His reign was very short, but it was very wicked. Instead of imitating the noble example of his father, he gave way to the follies and vices of the worst of his predecessors. 2 Ki. 23. 32. Necho returned in three months from his victorious campaign. Encamping for a time at Riblah, on the northern border of Canaan, he gave orders to dethrone Jehoahaz, probably because he had not himself nominated him; and then he placed Eliakim, another son of Josiah, on the vacant throne. The change of name to Jehoiakim was the badge of a tributary prince; he became the vassal of Necho.—P.

have been long neglected. The very best of men rarely leave the world without some visible blemish. How affecting it is to see this great man die in an unjust war, after he had received from God fair warning of his danger! But God in his sovereign wisdom often makes his people's sinful rashness the mean of their own happiness and of their survivors' misery. Many lament the loss of their mercies who never rightly improved them in the enjoyment; and grieve for the misery which they see coming on their nation, who will not take the proper methods of repentance to prevent it.

CHAPTER XXXVI. [Ver. 6. It was in the third year of Jehoiakim's reign that Nebuchadnezzar took Jerusalem, Da. 1. 1, and put fetters on the king. At first it was the intention of the conqueror to take Jehoiakim to Babylon, but for some reason he changed his purpose, and restored the crown to him. Many Jews of high rank were at that time taken captive, and among them was the prophet Daniel, Da. 1. 1–7. A large proportion of the treasures and sacred vessels of the temple were also taken and placed in the great temple of Babylon. Jehoiakim became tributary to Nebuchadnezzar for three years. He then, taking advantage of some troubles in Assyria, ventured to rebel; Judea was invaded, Jerusalem captured, Jehoiakim slain, and his son Jehoiachin placed on the throne. P.]

Ver. 17. [The details of the terrible sufferings to which the people of Jerusalem were exposed during the long siege, which is only just referred to in this passage, may be learned by a careful study of the prophecies of Jeremiah and the history of Josephus. The siege lasted two years. It has been ever since regarded as the darkest period of Jewish history; and is still commemorated by a fast. Famine and pestilence committed frightful ravages in the city. Jeremiah was in prison, but received a daily supply of bread by order of the king, Je. 37. 21; 38. 9. The children died of hunger in the streets. Parents devoured the flesh of their own children, Eze. 5. 10. At length the enemy effected an entrance; Zedekiah with the royal family escaped in the night, fled through the wilderness, but were captured at Jericho. The king's fate was a cruel one. Jerusalem and its temple were completely destroyed. The captivity dates from the third year of Jehoiakim, B.C. 607, nineteen years previous to the final siege and destruction of Jerusalem. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—For the transgressions of a land many and unprofitable are the princes of it. Quickly do things ripen for the ruin of nations when their day of punishment is at hand. But to what obstinate and aggravated wickedness are they permitted to arrive

HALL OF THE ROYAL MUMMIES—CONTAINING THE MUMMY OF RAMESES II., THE OPPRESSOR OF THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL.

[II. Chronicles, xxxv.20.]—"After all this, when Josiah had prepared the temple, Necho, king of Egypt, came up to fight against Charchemish by Euphrates: and Josiah went out against him." Necho was one of the Pharaohs of Egypt. This view of the Hall of the Royal Mummies, Gizeh Museum, is given because it contains the remains of many of the Egyptian kings. This hall is one of the large rooms in the Palace of Gizeh, a building which is said to have been erected at a cost of nearly twenty-five million dollars. It was built as a harem for the great Egyptian Pasha who assisted De Lesseps in opening the Suez canal, and who brought such a load of debt upon Egypt that he was deposed by the Sultan and taken to Constantinople. This building was confiscated by the government and is now used to house the valuable collection of Egyptian antiquities which make up the marvelous contents of the museum.

9 ¶ Jehoiachin[t] was eight years[6] old when he began to reign; and he reigned three months and ten days in Jerusalem: and he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

10 And when the year[7] was expired, king Nebuchadnezzar sent and brought him to Babylon,[8] with the goodly vessels[9] of the house of the LORD, and made [k]Zedekiah his brother king over Judah and Jerusalem.[1]

11 ¶ Zedekiah[l] was one and twenty years old when he began to reign, and reigned eleven years in Jerusalem.

12 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD his God, and [m]humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet, speaking from the mouth of the LORD.

13 And he also [n]rebelled against king Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him swear by God: but he stiffened his neck, and hardened his heart, from turning unto the LORD God of Israel.

14 ¶ Moreover, all the chief of the priests, and the people, transgressed [o]very much after all the abominations of the heathen; and polluted the house of the LORD, which he had hallowed in Jerusalem.

15 And[p] the LORD God of their fathers sent to them by his messengers,[2] rising[3] up betimes,[4] and sending; because he had [q]compassion on his people, and on his dwelling-place:

16 But they [r]mocked[5] the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the LORD arose against his people, till there was no remedy.[s]

17 Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who slew their young men[6] with the sword in the house of their sanctuary,[7] and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age: he gave them all into his hand.

18 And [t]all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king, and of his princes; all these he brought to Babylon.

19 And they [u]burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof.

20 And them that had escaped from the sword[8] carried he away to Babylon, where they were servants [x]to him and his sons until the reign of the kingdom of Persia;

21 To fulfil the word of the LORD by the mouth of [y]Jeremiah, until the land [z]had enjoyed her sabbaths:[9] for as long as she lay desolate she kept sabbath, to fulfil threescore and ten years.[1]

22 ¶ Now,[a] in the first year[2] of Cyrus king of Persia, (that the word of the LORD spoken by the mouth of [b]Jeremiah might be accomplished,) [c]the LORD stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made [d]a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying,

23 Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, All the kingdoms of [e]the earth hath the LORD God of heaven given me; and he hath charged me to [f]build him an house in Jerusalem, which is in Judah: [g]who is there among you of all his people? the LORD his God be with him, and let him go up.

before the Lord measures his righteous justice upon them! None are usually more deeply involved in it than the rulers in church and state: and none share more of their contempt, hatred, and persecution than faithful ministers. But the righteous Lord at last marks their sins in their punishments; and makes up the loss of his honour, which he ought to have had from them, in the form or duration of his executed judgments. And yet in wrath he remembers mercy. Strangely he preserves his people's property for them against their return, even when they have provoked him to cast them out of it. In his providence he exactly adheres to his word. Nor will he, in his pardoning goodness, contend for ever, even where his honour requires him to contend long.

GENERAL VIEW OF ACROPOLIS AND THEATER, SARDIS—BURNED BY CYRUS, KING OF PERSIA, WHEN CROESUS WAS KING OF LYDIA. [Ezra, i:1.]—"Now in the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia, that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus, king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing." The proclamation of Cyrus referred to above had reference to building the Lord's house at Jerusalem. This is the Cyrus that captured Sardis, the capital of the kingdom of Lydia. Croesus was king at the time. Cyrus condemned him to be burned alive. When bound to the stake Croesus was heard to utter the name of Solon. Whereupon Cyrus inquired the reason. The unfortunate monarch replied by repeating a conversation which had taken place between himself and the Grecian sage on the instability of human happiness, which so affected Cyrus that he liberated Croesus, and ever after retained him as one of his most intimate friends.

THE BOOK OF EZRA

Was probably written by himself. It contains a history of eighty years; and exhibits the divine fulfilment of all those predictions of Moses, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Micah, or others, which respected the deliverance from Babylon. It particularly informs us, (1) Upon what encouragement, and what numbers returned, i. ii. (2) How the temple was rebuilt and dedicated, notwithstanding repeated stops from their heathen neighbours, iii.–vi. (3) How Ezra, as Artaxerxes' deputy, came to Jerusalem, mourned over, and dissolved the marriages with heathen women, vii.–x. [The book of Ezra may be divided into two sections:—(1) Ch. i.–vi., containing an account of the return of the exiles from Babylon under the leadership of Zerubbabel and Joshua, with the erection of the temple and the re-establishment of the Jewish worship. (2) Ch. vii.–x., detailing the journey of a second caravan of exiles under the leadership of Ezra himself. P.]

CHAPTER I.

1 The proclamation of Cyrus for the building of the temple. 5 The people provide for their return. 7 Cyrus restoreth the vessels of the temple to Sheshbazzar.

NOW, in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia,[1] (that the word of the LORD by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled,) the LORD [a]stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he [b]made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying,

2 Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The LORD God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth;[2] and he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah;

3 Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up[3] to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the LORD God of Israel, (he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem.

4 And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help[c] him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the free-will offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem.

5 ¶ Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit [d]God had raised,[4] to go up to build the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem.

6 And all they that were about them strengthened[e] their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, besides all that was [f]willingly offered.

7 ¶ Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the LORD, [g]which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods;

8 Even those did Cyrus king of Persia bring forth by the hand of Mithredath the treasurer, and numbered them unto [h]Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah.

9 And this is the number of them: thirty chargers of gold, a thousand [i]chargers of silver, nine and twenty knives,

10 Thirty basons of gold, silver basons of a second sort four hundred and ten, and other vessels a thousand.

11 All[k] the vessels of gold and of silver were five thousand and four hundred.[5] All these did Sheshbazzar bring up with them of [l]the captivity, that were brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem.

CHAP. I.

1 Cyrus, the son of a king of Persia by a daughter of the king of Media, united these two kingdoms, and conquered Babylon. He was born 600 years before Christ, and reigned 30 years. His name and conquests were prophetically announced by Isaiah 200 years before his birth, and Josephus (Antiq. lib. c. 2) attributes his partiality for the Jews to his reading these prophecies under the instruction of Daniel. —C.

2 According to the best authorities, Cyrus at this time reigned over the Persians, Medes, Hyrcanians, Bactrians, Indians, Assyrians, Syrians, and all the countries called Lesser Asia: still these were far from being 'all the kingdoms of the earth.' The words are not, however, to be considered a mere eastern hyperbole, for they contain a literal statement, when the word earth is interpreted of its known or civilized countries. —C.

CHAPTER I. [Ver. 7. We read in 2 Ki. 24. 13 that when in the reign of Jehoiachin Nebuchadnezzar captured Jerusalem, 'he carried out all the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house, and cut in pieces all the vessels of gold which Solomon king of Israel had made in the temple of the Lord;' yet Ezra says in this place that Cyrus returned the vessels. There is no contradiction. Nebuchadnezzar captured Jerusalem twice, once in the reign of Jehoiakim, and once in the reign of Jehoiachin. On the former occasion he took the golden vessels of the temple and placed them in the temple of his god at Babylon, 2 Ch. 36. 7; Da. 1. 2. These vessels Cyrus delivered up again to the Jews when returning from exile. On the second capture of Jerusalem Nebuchadnezzar appears to have stripped the gold plating from the larger vessels and furniture of the temple—from the altar of incense, the table of show-bread, the ark of the covenant, &c., he cut it in pieces and carried it away. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Behold how God rules over the kingdoms of the earth, and always seeks to turn the hearts of princes and others for the good of his church! God is here exactly fulfilling the predictions of his word concerning the name of the deliverer; and the occasion, time, and manner of the deliverance. It is honourable for princes and men in authority to begin the exercise of their power in the service of God, as an acknowledgment of his bounty to them; and to overlook secular interests and customs of countries in order to put honour on Christ and his people. But in every good word and work the Lord must work in us to will and to do of his good pleasure. And he can procure from such as know him not the greatest kindness to his interests and people. What care he took to preserve the furniture of his temple, and maintain the princely dignity of Judah, even in Babylon! But much greater is his care of whatever pertains to Jesus and his people. And it is honourable when princes and ministers are peculiarly forward to rebuild God's temple and reform his church.

CHAPTER II. [Ver. 59. Ver. 63. [The Tirshatha was the official name for the governor of Judea under the Persian rule. It is probable that Nehemiah is here meant, as he is twice called by that title, Ne. 8. 9; 10. 1. His decision was that those priests who could not prove from family registers their direct and pure descent, should not be permitted to perform priestly offices until divine sanction was obtained through the Urim and Thummim. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the honour God puts upon those who prefer his glory and the interests of his church to their own ease! And great are the privileges which those obtain who are enrolled in the Lamb's book of life, and go up with Christ from their captivity to sin, Satan, and the world! What care God took to keep clear the genealogies of his ancient people, till his Son was thereby manifested to spring of Judah and David! It is reasonable that those be excluded from office in the church who undervalue that honour, and want proper tokens of their spiritual birth. And there is need always to consult God himself in everything relating to his worship and service. To what a small and poor company had sin reduced the once numerous and wealthy tribes of Judah and Benjamin, at least such of them as were willing to appear for their God! And yet it is pleasing to see them in their poverty so willingly contributing to build a temple for God. And what is spent in God's work shall be returned with interest.

But was not this release and return of the Jews typical of the gathering of the nations to Christ, and of the church's deliverance from Antichrist, and the saints' release from death at the last day? Awakened and encouraged by the joyful sound of the gospel trumpet, what multitudes, in the apostolic and after ages, did, with mourning for sin, with hallelujahs of praise, and with the most cordial affection, join themselves to Christ and his church, to be built up a spiritual temple and meet habitation for God! With almighty power Jesus did, and still does, go forth conquering and to conquer, and to overthrow our spiritual enemies who hold us in slavery; making us free indeed, and willing to do whatever tends to his honour. In due time the instruments of God's wrath shall destroy the mystical Babylon, and restore the souls of men to the ancient 7 In 2 Ch. 8. 9 it is related that Solomon made servants, not of Israel, but of the remnants of the nations that had not been exhausted. These, if converted to the faith, it was lawful to incorporate into the Jewish nation, and these servants of Solomon are most probably their descendants.—C.

8 The reason of this exactness is plain from this, that such of the Jews as believed their prophets expected a return into their native land after a period of seventy years, and preserved their genealogies as the title on which they might resume their properties.—Graves. Je. 31. 14.

9 Not spiritually, but genealogically polluted. This exclusion presents the two emblematic lessons, 1. The necessity of proving our spiritual descent by being born again. Jn. 3. 3, 5. 2. The duty of excluding or removing from the ministry of the gospel all who cannot afford scriptural evidence that they are themselves the subjects of that holy conversion which they enforce upon others.—C.

1 Castel supposes this title to be of Persian origin, and that it signifies fear.—C.

2 These separate numbers being added, give only 29,818; the numbers in Nehemiah 31,089: yet both agree in giving one grand total, 42,360. To reconcile these varying accounts, it is necessary to observe, 1. That as many priests failed in establishing their genealogy (ver. 62), we may unquestionably infer, that many of the people were in the same predicament. 2. The number of these attainted priests is not given, so we may justly conclude of the unregistered people. 3. The persons enumerated obtain their hereditary estates in virtue of their genealogy. 4. The persons who cannot trace their descent, fail in establishing a right to any particular estate, but are not therefore excluded from the other rights of citizenship, but may retain as derivative tenants, or purchase for years, according to the jubilee law, or obtain new settlements in the sanctioned wards. Now these being added to the others, make up the sum of the whole congregation. 5. When Ezra recounts 494 not mentioned in Nehemiah, and Nehemiah 1765 not mentioned in Ezra, these accounts may be easily reconciled, by supposing the two varying enumerations to refer to different periods of proof of genealogy and enrolment as previous, the third to the period when the registry was completed.—C.

3 From what is known of eastern journeys or caffilas, the horses would be for the necessary guard of escort, the mules for the richer class to ride, the camels for carrying food, camp furniture, &c., and the asses would be nearly all required for conveyance of the children. It is obvious the greater number of adults, both men and women, would be on foot. The whole presents a striking contrast to the statistics introduced by Moses, at the commandment of God, Nu 1. 2. 45, 46; and while it exhibits the deep poverty of the returning remnant, it beautifully illustrates the power of grace to open the heart, and teach every man to contribute to the cause of God "after his ability." 4 The Hebrew word here translated "drams" denotes the Persian daric, a gold coin admitted to be the earliest known specimen of coined money. Its distinguishing mark was a crowned archer, his garb is the same which is seen on the sculptures at Persepolis. Specimens which have been weighed were found to be 15 grs. heavier than an English guinea, and their intrinsic value may therefore be reckoned at 25*s*.—P.

gospel liberty and rest. In the resurrection, awakened by the trump of God, all the ransomed millions, who are written among the living in Jerusalem, shall arise and be gathered to the Lord, and quickly after follow him into the celestial Canaan, to be built up as the everlasting habitation of God—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

CHAPTER III. REFLECTIONS.—Let us learn to prefer the business of religion to our most pressing temporal affairs; and in the worship of God do what we can when we cannot do what we would. And let leaders in church and state be peculiarly active and zealous. Never should the fear of men hinder us from, but hasten us to, fellowship with God. The more enemies we have, the more need have we that God should befriend us. If we have been long secluded from the public or solemn ordinances of God, more readily should we improve opportunities when put into our hands; and by no means neglect the daily sacrifices of the closet and family. If God bring us out of the furnace of affliction our hearts should burn with love to him; and never should we grudge to spare from ourselves that we may have wherewith to honour him or to relieve his poor saints; always taking care to dispose of it to the best advantage. If a good work is to be done, let us set about it with all our might and without delay, be the difficulties ever so great. Never should we despise the day of small things, but encourage ourselves in the everlasting power and mercy of God; praising him for the beginnings of his returning mercy; assured that they will issue in perfection at last. And while we are in this world, where shouts of joy can scarcely be discerned from the groans of weeping, let us rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep.

JAFFA, FROM HOTEL WINDOW—TO JAFFA WAS BROUGHT CEDAR TREES FROM LEBANON FOR THE REBUILDING OF THE TEMPLE IN JERUSALEM, UNDER ZERUBABEL. [Ezra. iii:7.] –"They gave money also unto the masons, and to the carpenters; and meat, and drink, and oil, unto them of Zidon, and to them of Tyre, to bring cedar trees from Lebanon to the sea of Joppa, according to the grant that they had of Cyrus, king of Persia." When Solomon originally built the temple, he had the assistance of Hiram, king of Tyre, who sent cedar from Lebanon by way of Joppa (Jaffa) to Jerusalem. So we find that when Zerubabel undertook the rebuilding of the temple, he had a grant from Cyrus, king of Persia, to bring cedar trees from Lebanon by way of Joppa to Jerusalem. We give an illustration of Jaffa from the hotel window. This city has a remarkable history. At different times it has been pagan, Jew, Moslem, Arab, Mameluke, and Christian. There are beautiful gardens about this old city filled with towering palms, and orange and lemon trees.

oil,[4] unto them of Zidon, and to them of Tyre, to bring cedar-trees from Lebanon to the sea of Joppa,[5] according to the [h]grant that they had of Cyrus king of Persia.

8 ¶ Now, in the second year[6] of their coming unto the house of God at Jerusalem, in the second month, began [m]Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and the remnant of their brethren the priests and the Levites, and all they that were come out of the captivity unto Jerusalem; and appointed the Levites, from [n]twenty years old and upward, to set forward the work of the house of the LORD.

9 Then stood [o]Jeshua, with his sons and his brethren, Kadmiel and his sons, the sons of Judah,[7] [p]together,[8] to set forward the workmen in the house of God: the sons of Henadad, with their sons and their brethren the Levites.

10 And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the LORD, they [q]set the priests in their apparel with trumpets, and the Levites, the sons of Asaph, with cymbals, to praise the LORD, after the ordinance of David king of Israel.

11 And they [r]sang together by course, in praising and giving thanks unto the LORD; because he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever toward Israel. And all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the LORD, because the foundation of the house of the LORD was laid.

12 But many of the priests and Levites, and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men, that had seen the first house,[9] when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept[t] with a loud voice; and many shouted aloud for joy:

13 So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people: for the people [s]shouted with a loud shout, and the noise was heard afar off.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The adversaries, being not accepted in the building of the temple with the Jews, endeavour to hinder it. 7 Their letter to Artaxerxes. 17 The decree of Artaxerxes. 23 The building is hindered.

NOW when the [a]adversaries of Judah and Benjamin[1] heard [b]that the children of the captivity builded the temple unto the LORD God of Israel,

2 Then they came to [c]Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers, and said unto them, [d]Let us build with you: for we [e]seek your God, as ye do; and we do sacrifice unto him since the days of [f]Esar-haddon[2] king of Assur, which brought us up hither.

3 But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest of the chief of the fathers of Israel, said unto them, [g]Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God; but we ourselves together will build unto the LORD God of Israel, as [h]king Cyrus the king of Persia hath commanded us.

4 Then the people of the land [i]weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building,[3]

5 And hired counsellers against them, to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus king of Persia, even until the reign of Darius king of Persia.

6 And in the reign of [k]Ahasuerus,[5] in the beginning of his reign,[6] wrote they unto him an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.

7 ¶ And in the days of Artaxerxes[7] wrote Bishlam,[8] Mithredath, Tabeel, and the rest of their [k]companions, unto Artaxerxes king of Persia; and the writing of the letter was written in the Syrian tongue, and interpreted in the Syrian tongue.

8 Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe,[9] wrote a letter [l]against Jerusalem to Artaxerxes the king in this sort:

9 Then wrote Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe, and the rest of their [m]companions; the Dinaites, the Apharsathchites, the Tarpelites, the Apharsites, the Archevites, the Babylonians, the Susanchites, the Dehavites, and the Elamites,[1]

10 And the rest of the nations whom the great and noble Asnapper brought over, and set in the cities of Samaria, and the rest that are on this side the river, and [n]at such a time.

11 ¶ This is the copy of the letter that they sent unto him, even unto Artaxerxes the king; Thy servants the men on this side the river, and at such a time.

12 Be it known unto the king, that the Jews which came up from thee to us are come unto Jerusalem, building [o]the rebellious and the bad city, and have [p]set up the walls thereof, and [q]joined the foundations.

13 Be it known now unto the king, that if this city be builded, and the walls set up again,

It is sometimes said that they were a mixed race, composed in part of the remnant of the ten tribes left in the kingdom of Israel after the first captivity, and in part of the colonists introduced from Assyria. But for this opinion there is no historic evidence. In their letter to the king of Persia given below they describe themselves as "the people whom the great Asnapper brought over and set in the cities of Samaria;" and when applying for permission to join in building the temple, they plead not their Jewish origin, but the fact that they had for a long period observed the Jewish ritual. This observance had been forced upon them by fear, as may be seen from the narrative of their settlement in 2 Ki. xvii.—P.

They serve, however, to illustrate an important evidence of the divine origin of the Scriptures. CHAPTER IV. REFLECTIONS.—God's temple can never be built but Satan and his agents will rage and do all that they can to oppose it: and none are ordinarily more bitter opposers than pretended and mongrel professors. They will turn themselves into every shape to vent their malice; and will not spare money, labour, or villany to accomplish their purpose. Pretences of friendship, bribing of counsellors, flattery of princes, and boastful threatenings and reproaches are their common methods of working. Saints had therefore need to avoid intimacy with them, and to encourage themselves in the Lord their God, and be strong in him and in the power of his might. It is common for the faithful followers of Christ to be reproached as dangerous enemies to the state: and if once professors have done an ill thing, their successors in the church are sure to be upbraided with it, although they themselves should heartily condemn it. When princes desire occasions of stumbling the agents for hell will soon supply them therewith. And things the most false or improbable, are often readily believed by most against Christ and his church. Most kings neither can nor care to know the truth with respect to their religious subjects. To their great joy the attempts of persecutors are often successful for a time; and the friends of Christ and his truths are too easily checked in their reforming attempts.

CHAPTER V. REFLECTIONS.—It is highly desirable to have church and state concurring in the work of reformation: but the declaration of divine truths is always the principal mean. Faithful reprovers are profitable to obedient ears. When God then will they not [r]pay toll, tribute, and custom, and so thou shalt endamage the revenue[2] of the kings.

14 Now, because [s]we have maintenance from the king's palace, and it was not meet for us to see the king's dishonour, therefore have we sent and certified the king,

15 That search may be made in the book of the records of thy fathers: so shalt thou find in the book of the records, and know that this city is a rebellious city, and [t]hurtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have moved[3] sedition within the same[4] of old time; for which cause was this city destroyed.[5]

16 We certify the king, that if this city be builded again, and the walls thereof set up, by this means [u]thou shalt have no portion on this side the river.[6]

17 ¶ Then sent the king an answer unto Rehum the chancellor, and to Shimshai the scribe, and to the rest of their [x]companions that dwell in Samaria, and unto the rest beyond the river, Peace, and at such a time.

18 The letter which ye sent unto us hath been plainly read before me.

19 And I commanded,[7] and search hath been made, and it is found that this city of old time hath [y]made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein.

20 There [z]have been mighty kings also over Jerusalem, which have ruled over all countries beyond the river; and toll, tribute, and custom, was paid unto them.

21 Give ye now commandment[8] to cause these men to cease, and that this city be not builded, until another commandment shall be given from me.

22 Take heed now that ye fail not to do this: why should damage grow to the hurt of the kings?

23 ¶ Now, when the copy of king Artaxerxes' letter was read before Rehum, and Shimshai the scribe, and their companions, they went up in haste to Jerusalem unto the Jews, and made them to cease [a]by force and power.

24 Then ceased[9] the work of the house of God which is at Jerusalem. So it ceased unto the second year of the reign of Darius king of Persia.

5 As is generally the case with the representations of enemies, these charges contained a mixture of truth and falsehood. It was true that after the subjection of Judah to the kings of Babylon, the Jews had often manifested a very rebellious and treacherous spirit; but, so far as appears, it was not true that as yet they had begun to build the walls of the city. The Samaritans allude not to the real ground of the offence which they had themselves taken, but affect to be concerned solely for their sovereign's interest. The enemies of the church are always skilful in seeking plausible pretexts.—J.

6 By the river here is generally understood the Euphrates, which meaning seems to be confirmed by ver.20, 25. This was the origin of that bitter enmity which has ever since existed between the Jews and Samaritans. In the days of our Lord the Jews had no dealings with the Samaritans. Even in the present day the small and feeble remnant of the Samaritan nation will have nothing to do with the Jews but no dealings with the Samaritans. Even in the present day the small and feeble remnant of the Samaritan nation will have nothing to do with the ancient city of Shechem, beneath the shadow of their sacred mountain, hate the Jews, and are hated by them.—J.

2 Westward of Euphrates.

3 The Persian empire now extended to the Mediterranean on the west, so that the Euphrates divided it from the eastern dependencies which extended to the Indus. Darius Hystaspes divided the empire into provinces or satrapies, each paying a fixed tribute to the royal treasury. That Tatnai should be governor of all west of the Euphrates is not peculiar, as the western division included Egypt, part of Arabia, Phœnicia, Cyprus, and the whole of Asia Minor, to the Hellespont and the Ægean. But it is evident he was possessed of power over the Jewish governor, and it is known that Judea remained under the sovereignty of Cœle-Syria till the time of Alexander.—C.

This certainly is a candid statement of the circumstances of the case as the governor had found them. The letters and edicts of this book, it has been remarked, are very interesting specimens of the form and style of the official correspondence and state orders of a very ancient period.—J.

2 Then [d]rose up Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and [e]began to build the house of God which is at Jerusalem: and with them were the prophets of God [f]helping them.

3 ¶ At the same time came to them [g]Tatnai, governor on this side[2] the river,[3] and Shethar-boznai, and their companions, and said thus unto them, [h]Who hath commanded you to build this house, and to make up this wall?

4 Then said we unto them after this manner, What are the names of the men that make this building?[4]

5 But the [i]eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews, that they could not cause them to cease, till the matter came to Darius: and then they [k]returned answer by letter concerning this matter.

7 They sent a letter[6] unto him, wherein[7] was written thus; Unto Darius the king, all peace.

8 Be it known unto the king, that we went into [m]the province of Judea, to the house of the [n]great God, which is builded with great stones,[8] and timber is laid in the walls; and this work goeth fast on, and prospereth in their hands.

9 Then asked we those elders, and said unto them thus, [o]Who commanded you to build this house, and to make up these walls?

10 We asked their names also, to certify thee, that we might write the names of the men that were the chief of them.

11 And thus they returned us answer, saying, We are the [p]servants of the God of heaven and earth, and build the house that was builded these many years ago, which a great king of Israel builded [q]and set up.

12 But [r]after that our fathers had provoked the God of heaven unto wrath, he gave them into the hand of [s]Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house, and carried the people away into Babylon.[9]

His comfortable presence should animate us to the utmost diligence in his work: nor ought we to conceal the just manifestations of his displeasure against us or our fathers. GENERAL VIEW OF THE ERECHTHEUM, ACROPOLIS—THE ERECHTHEUM WAS BURNED BY THE PERSIANS, LED BY DARIUS OR BY AHASUERUS, HIS SON, AND REBUILT IN THE TIME OF PERICLES.

[Ezra, vi:1.]—"Then Darius the king made a decree, and search was made in the house of the rolls, where the treasures were made up in Babylon." After the death of Cyrus, Cambyses was made king of Persia. He died of a small wound, and left no issue to succeed him, and his throne was usurped by Darius. Darius burnt Sardis, and thereby so enraged the Athenians that a war was kindled between Greece and Persia. Darius was then so exasperated against the Greeks that a servant every day, by his order, repeated these words: "Remember, O King, to punish the Athenians." He was conquered at the celebrated battle of Marathon by 10,000 Athenians. We give a picture of a general view of the Erechtheum on the Acropolis to illustrate these facts of Grecian history and the connection of Darius with it. It is an interesting fact that the Persians burned down the temple of Erechtheus that stood on this very spot. It was afterwards rebuilt in the time of Pericles.

whose name was Sheshbazzar,[1] whom he had made governor;[2]

15 And said unto him, Take these vessels, go, carry them into the temple that is in Jerusalem, and let the house of God be builded in his place.

16 Then [x]came the same Sheshbazzar, and laid the foundation of the house of God which is in Jerusalem: and since that time even until now hath it been in building, and yet it is not finished.[y]

17 Now therefore, if it seem good to the king, let [z]there be search made in the king's treasure-house, which is there at Babylon, whether it be so, that a [a]decree was made of Cyrus the king to build this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send [b]his pleasure to us concerning this matter.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Darius, finding the decree of Cyrus, maketh a new decree for the advancement of the building. 13 By the help of the enemies, and the directions of the prophets, the temple is finished. 16 The feast of the dedication is kept, 19 and the passover.

THEN Darius[a] the king made a decree, and search was made in the house of the rolls,[1] where the treasures were laid up[2] in Babylon.

2 And there was found at Achmetha,[3] in the palace that is in the province of the Medes, a roll, and therein was a record thus written:

3 In the [b]first year of Cyrus the king, the same Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid; [c]the height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits;[4]

4 With [d]three rows of great stones, and a row of new timber; and [e]let the expenses be given out of the king's house:

5 And also [f]let the golden and silver vessels of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took forth out of the temple which is at Jerusalem, and brought unto Babylon, be restored, and brought[5] again unto the temple which is at Jerusalem, every one to his place, and place them in the house of God.

6 Now[g] therefore, Tatnai, governor beyond the river, Shethar-boznai, and your companions[6] the Apharsachites, which are beyond the river, be ye far from thence:[7]

7 Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews build this house of God in his place.

8 Moreover, I make a decree[8] what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews for the building of this house of God: that [h]of the king's goods, even of the tribute[9] beyond the river, forthwith expenses be given unto these men, that they be not [i]hindered.

9 And that which they have need of, [j]both young bullocks, and rams, and lambs, for the burnt-offerings of the God of heaven,[9] wheat, salt, wine, and oil, according to the appointment of the priests which are at Jerusalem, let it be given them day by day without fail;

10 That they may offer sacrifices [k]of sweet savours unto the God of heaven, and [l]pray for the life of the king, and of his sons.

11 Also I have made a decree, [m]that whosoever shall alter this word, let timber be pulled down from his house, and, being set up, let him be hanged[3] thereon; and let his house be made a dunghill for this.

12 And the God that hath caused [n]his name to dwell there [o]destroy all kings and people, that shall put to their hand to alter and to destroy this house of God which is at Jerusalem. I [p]Darius have made a decree; let it be done [q]with speed.

13 ¶ Then [r]Tatnai, governor on this side the river, Shethar-boznai, and their companions, according to that which Darius the king had sent, [s]so they did speedily.

14 And [t]the elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered through the [u]prophesying of Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the son of Iddo: and they builded, and finished it, according to the [v]commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the [w]commandment of Cyrus, and Darius, and Artaxerxes[4] king of Persia.

15 And this house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king.

16 ¶ And [x]the children of Israel, the priests and the Levites, and the rest of the children of the captivity, kept the [y]dedication of this house of God [z]with joy,

17 And [a]offered at the dedication of this house of God an hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs; and, for a sin-offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats, according to the number of the tribes of Israel.

18 And they set the priests in their divisions, and the Levites in their courses, for the service of God which is at Jerusalem; [b]as it is written in the book of Moses.

19 And the children of the captivity [c]kept the passover upon the fourteenth day of the first month.[5]

20 For the priests and the Levites were [d]purified together; all of them were pure, and killed the passover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the priests, and for themselves.

21 And the children of Israel, which were Generally supposed to be the Ecbatana of ancient, and the Hamadan of modern history, where the tombs of Esther and Mordecai still continue to be pointed out to travellers. Some expositors, however, consider it a mere secretaire or book-case, in which the records of Media were kept at Babylon. f.—The name Achmetha was applied exclusively to cities having a fortress constructed to protect royal treasures. The city here referred to is the Ecbatana of the Apocryphal books and of Herodotus. "The walls," says the latter, "were built circle within circle. The number of the circles was seven, and within the innermost was the palace of the treasury. The site of Ecbatana is now occupied by the city of Hamadan, the capital of one of the provinces of Persia. It stands on a conical hill on the borders of a great plain. It still contains a large community of Jews, who claim to be descended from the Babylonian captives." f.]

4 There is no reason to conclude that this temple was larger than that of Solomon. The apparent difference lies in the different points from which the measurement is taken. If Solomon's cubits were measured from inside to inside of the actual temple, and those of Cyrus from the inside to the inner wall of the outer and surrounding apartments, the difference disappears. The difference in height may be accounted for in the same way. Solomon's temple might be measured from the basement course, the 60 cubits of Cyrus including all that was below it.—C.

2 The terms occurring throughout the decree of Darius may be considered that the God of the Jews was the true Jehovah. He did not, indeed, relinquish the worship of his idols, but he clearly believed Jehovah to be superior to them all. He seems to have acknowledged him to be the Supreme. He makes provision for the daily sacrifices, the morning and evening burnt-offerings, which, according to the law, were to be made day by day continually; and he desires an interest for himself and for his sons in the prayers of Jehovah's worshippers.—f.

Christ's followers are never persecuted but when they are belied. Let their cause be but fairly stated and fairly heard and it will stand its ground against every opposition. And it is often false information and not malice that makes magistrates to issue forth persecuting edicts and sentences.

CHAPTER VI. REFLECTIONS.—Impartial search never hurts but helps the cause of truth: and God makes the attempts against his church the means

CHAPTER VII.

1 Ezra's pedigree from Aaron; he goeth up to Jerusalem. 11 The gracious commission of Artaxerxes to him. 27 Ezra blesseth God for this favour.

NOW after these things, in the reign of Artaxerxes[1] king of Persia,[2] Ezra[a] the son of [b]Seraiah, the son of Azariah, the son of [c]Hilkiah,

2 The son of Shallum, the son of [d]Zadok, the son of Ahitub,

3 The son of Amariah, the son of Azariah, the son of Meraioth,

4 The son of Zerahiah, the son of Uzzi, the son of Bukki,

5 The son of Abishua, the son of [e]Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the chief priest:

6 This Ezra went up from Babylon; and he was a [f]ready scribe[3] in the law of Moses, which the LORD God of Israel had given: and the king [g]granted him all his request, according to the hand of the LORD his God upon him.

7 And there [h]went up some of the children of Israel, and of the priests, and the Levites, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, unto Jerusalem, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes the king.

8 And he came to Jerusalem in the fifth month, which was in the seventh year of the king.

9 For [i]upon the first day of the first month began he to go up from Babylon, and on the first day of the fifth month[4] came he to Jerusalem according to the good hand of his God upon him.[5]

10 For Ezra had [k]prepared[6] his heart to seek the law of the LORD, and to do it, and [l]to teach in Israel statutes and judgments.

11 ¶ Now this is the copy of the letter that the king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the LORD, and of his statutes to Israel.

12 Artaxerxes, [m]king of kings, unto [n]Ezra the priest, a scribe of the law of the God of heaven, perfect peace, and at such a time.

13 I make a decree, that [o]all they of the people of Israel, and of his priests and Levites, in my realm, which are minded of their own free will to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee.

14 Forasmuch as thou art sent of the [7]king, and of his [r]seven counsellors,[8] to inquire concerning Judah and Jerusalem, according to the law of [q]thy God which is in thine hand;

15 And to carry [t]the silver and gold, which the king and his counsellors have freely [s]offered unto the God of Israel, whose habitation [u]is in Jerusalem,

16 And[t] all the silver and gold that thou canst find in all the province of Babylon, with the free-will-offering of the people, and of the priests, offering willingly for the house of their God which is in Jerusalem;

17 That [v]thou mayest buy speedily with this money bullocks, rams, lambs, with their meat-offerings and their drink-offerings, and offer them upon the altar of the house of your God which is in Jerusalem.

18 And [w]whatsoever shall [9]seem good to thee, and to thy brethren, to do with the rest of the silver and the gold, that do after the will[1] of your God.

19 The [x]vessels also that are given thee for the service of the house of thy God, those deliver thou before the God of Jerusalem.

20 And whatsoever more shall be needful for the house of thy God, which thou shalt have occasion to bestow, bestow it out of the king's treasure-house.[2]

21 And I, even I Artaxerxes the king, do make a decree to [y]all the treasurers which are

2 An interval of about 58 years intervened between the close of the sixth and the beginning of the seventh chapter. of her advantage and honour. He raises up unexpected instruments to accomplish his gracious purposes. And often his spiritual work is carried on by their means who have neither part nor lot in the matter. The prayers of the godly are, or ought to be, the great support of nations and their magistrates; and if magistrates understood their own interests they would carefully secure them in their favour. But dreadful is the curse which shall at last light upon all the enemies of Christ and his church. And it is high time to be active and bold in his work, when we are bound to it by his express command, shamed into it by repeated edicts of heathen magistrates, and encouraged in it by his faithful ministers. God will have his work finished at last, notwithstanding ten thousand obstructions. What a mercy is it when Christ's church is prepared for the exact observance of all his ordinances, the most solemn not excepted! And it is a matter of great joy to all his true friends, and an honour to a church, when ministers are remarkably holy and faithful. Yea, it is highly necessary that all of us solemnly dedicate ourselves for temples to God; and offer up the solemn prayers of faith for God's blessing on the ordinances of his grace, which we have, or expect to enjoy. Yet not upon our services in his church must our hopes and joys depend, but on Jesus, as our God-honouring and sin-expiating oblation, and our passover sacrificed for us. If we live on him as our all in all, and occupy ourselves diligently in his service, the Lord will provide friends for us, even where we least expected.

CHAPTER VII. [Ver. 1. Seraiah, the son of Azariah. This Seraiah was that high-priest who was slain by Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah, 2 Ki. 25. 18, 21, about 130 years before, and therefore could not be literally the father of Ezra. But by a principle of Jewish law, frequently exemplified in the Scriptures, when the intermediate parties died childless, and the family property or offices descended by heirship to a collateral branch, or in virtue of the law of adoption, as exemplified Ge. 48. 5, 6, a grandson or still more distant relative might be counted not as the son of his immediate father, but of his more remote ancestor. Among the many practical advantages of this system, was the facility which it afforded in tracing ancestry, and settling hereditary claims, by diminishing the links of proof necessary for their establishment. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—God richly endows men with proper gifts and grace when he intends them for distinguished work in his church. And that character is highly exalted in which great knowledge and activity meet with great holiness of heart and life. Yea, very excellent is a knowledge of the Scriptures when it is reduced to practice and employed in the instruction of others. If God calls us to a difficult service he can make all things concur to our encouragement. If his people want magistrates of their own religion, he can make heathens to compensate the loss, doing honour to his word as the rule; showing at once generous hearts and open hands, and punishing contemptuous despisers of him and his interests. But how thankful ought we to be when he thus makes the princes of this world nursing parents to his church, terrors to evil-doers, and a praise to them that do well! Surely then it is becoming in us to depend on him alone as our strength and salvation, and to ascribe the glory of all beyond the river, that whatsoever Ezra the priest, the scribe of the law of the God of heaven, shall require of you, it be done speedily,

23 Whatsoever is commanded[5] by the God of heaven, let it be diligently done for the house of the God of heaven: for [a]why should there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons?[6]

24 Also we certify you, that touching any of the priests and Levites, singers, porters, Nethinims, or ministers of this house of God, it[b] shall not be lawful to impose toll, tribute, or custom, upon them.

25 And thou, Ezra, after the wisdom of thy God that is in thine hand, set [c]magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people that are beyond the river, all such as know the laws of thy God; and [d]teach ye them that know them not.

26 And [e]whosoever will not do the law of thy God, and the law of the king, let judgment be executed speedily upon him, whether it be unto death, or to banishment,[7] or to confiscation of goods, or to imprisonment.[8]

[6] Here is an acknowledgment on the part of a heathen monarch of the great principle, that God is king of nations, and that he can justly claim national treasures for the support and promotion of his church. Ezra was empowered to draw from the public funds whatever might be required for the building of the temple and the re-establishment of the worship of God at Jerusalem. The great officers of the empire were commanded to afford Ezra every facility in his work, and to see that he was supplied with money. Ezra felt himself justified in accepting of and using the money. The concluding clause of ver 23 is especially deserving of note: it embodies a noble lesson, which kings and rulers in all ages and countries ought to learn — that the wrath of God is to be averted, and his blessing to be obtained, by a dedication to his glory of national treasures and power. P.

[8] This extraordinary favour to the Jews has generally been accounted for by supposing that Artaxerxes is the Ahasuerus of Esther, and the favour to have originated from his attachment to his young and beautiful Jewish queen. CHAPTER VIII. REFLECTIONS. — How shameful it is to find such numbers of Jews still in Assyria after they had near eighty years' liberty of returning to Judea, where their brethren were and their God before them! And especially that the revenues for God's temple, even from heathens' hands, should be in more forwardness than Levitical ministers to bear or use them! But they who are backward to their duty must be stirred up. Every vacancy in the church ought to be speedily supplied with pastors according to God's heart. With the utmost care we ought to avoid everything that looks like distrusting of our God or dependence on an arm of flesh. We had better expose ourselves to difficulties than dishonour God, or give occasion of stumbling even to heathens. In perplexing circumstances let us apply to solemn fasting and fervent prayer. They who in a humble and dependent manner seek him, will find him a very present help in trouble. Let us therefore by faith cast all the care of our persons, families, and estates upon him. Only holy persons are duly qualified to take charge of

LYCABETTUS AND THE PALACE OF THE KING, FROM ACROPOLIS—IN SIGHT OF PLACE WHERE AHASUERUS WAS DEFEATED IN THE BATTLE OF SALAMIS. [Ezra. viii.1]—After the death of Darius, who was conquered by the Greeks in the battle of Marathon, Ahasuerus succeeded his father on the throne. Ahasuerus continued the warlike operations of his father, and invaded Greece, but was conquered at the battle of Salamis on the 20th of September, B. C. 480. There is a mount whose base is washed by the sea, called Korydallos, in sight of the Acropolis and Mt. Lycabettus which has long borne the name of the Throne of Xerxes (Ahasuerus) because it is said he sat upon the rocky brow of this hill in his silver-footed chair to watch the progress of the battle of Salamis. The Persian army was almost completely destroyed in this battle. Under the very eyes of Ahaseurus the Greeks destroyed the "bloom of all the Persian youth, in spirit the bravest, and in truth the noblest princes."

20 Also[s] of the Nethinims, whom David and the princes had appointed for the service of the Levites, two hundred and twenty Nethinims: all of them were expressed by name.

21 ¶ Then [a]I proclaimed a fast there, at the river of Ahava, that we might [b]afflict ourselves before our God, to [c]seek of him a right way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance.

22 For I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way:[2] because we had spoken unto the king, saying, The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him.

23 So [d]we fasted, and besought our God for this; and he was entreated of us.[3]

24 ¶ Then I separated twelve of the chief of the priests, Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren with them,

25 And [e]weighed unto them the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, even the offering of the house of our God, [f]which the king, and his counsellors, and his lords, and all Israel there present, had offered;

26 I even weighed unto their hand [4]six hundred and fifty talents of silver, and silver vessels an hundred talents, and of gold an hundred talents;

27 Also twenty basons of gold, of a thousand drams; and two vessels of fine copper,[5] precious as gold.[6]

28 And I said unto them, Ye are holy unto the LORD; the vessels are [g]holy also; and the silver and the gold are a free-will-offering unto the LORD God of your fathers.

29 Watch[h] ye, and keep them, until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, at Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of the LORD.

30 So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, to bring them to Jerusalem, unto the house of our God.

31 ¶ Then we departed from the river of Ahava on the [i]twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem: and the [k]hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy,[7] and of such as lay in wait by the way.[8]

32 And we came to Jerusalem, and abode there three days.

[2] These were chiefly the Bedouin Arabs, who still continue to infest the neighbourhood of Babylon and the deserts of the adjacent countries. True to their original character, their hand is still against every man. Single travellers or weak parties dare not pass their haunts; even strong and numerous parties, well armed or escorted by cavalry, cannot pass free, for when they fear to attack a well guarded caravan, they are the most adroit pilferers by night, and carry off all stragglers whom they can seize by day. Their murderous habit, however, is to avoid shedding blood, but to levy such contributions as amount to spoliation. To such robbers hordes Ezra and his fellow-mourners presented a most tempting object, as their recorded treasure of gold and silver alone could not be less than £300,000.—C.

He knew also the immense value of the property the returning exiles were about to carry with them. Yet he would not ask a guard. He prayed to God. He had confidence in his power, his faithfulness, and his love to a penitent people. He thus set forth on that perilous journey over the exposed desert, and the God of Abraham conveyed his people in safety to the land of their fathers.—J.

They appear to have laid their plans for seizure and attack, yet they were disappointed. Greater was He who was with the Israelites than all who could be against them. What a lesson does this teach timid and doubting Christians! It forms the best practical comment on the words of our Lord, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness.' N.—There were not only many enemies who hated them, and were desirous to cut them off, but many robbers who watched for a booty.—J.

CHAP. IX.

[1] By comparing ver. 1, 2, the princes seem to have become first sensible of the popular sin in which they had been the original leaders. This is no uncommon event—men, for example, discover the evil of drunkenness, not so readily from their own feeling of its effects in themselves as from seeing them exemplified in the folly, madness, and ruin of others.—C.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Ezra mourneth for the intermarriages of the people with strangers. 5 He prayeth unto God with confession of sins.

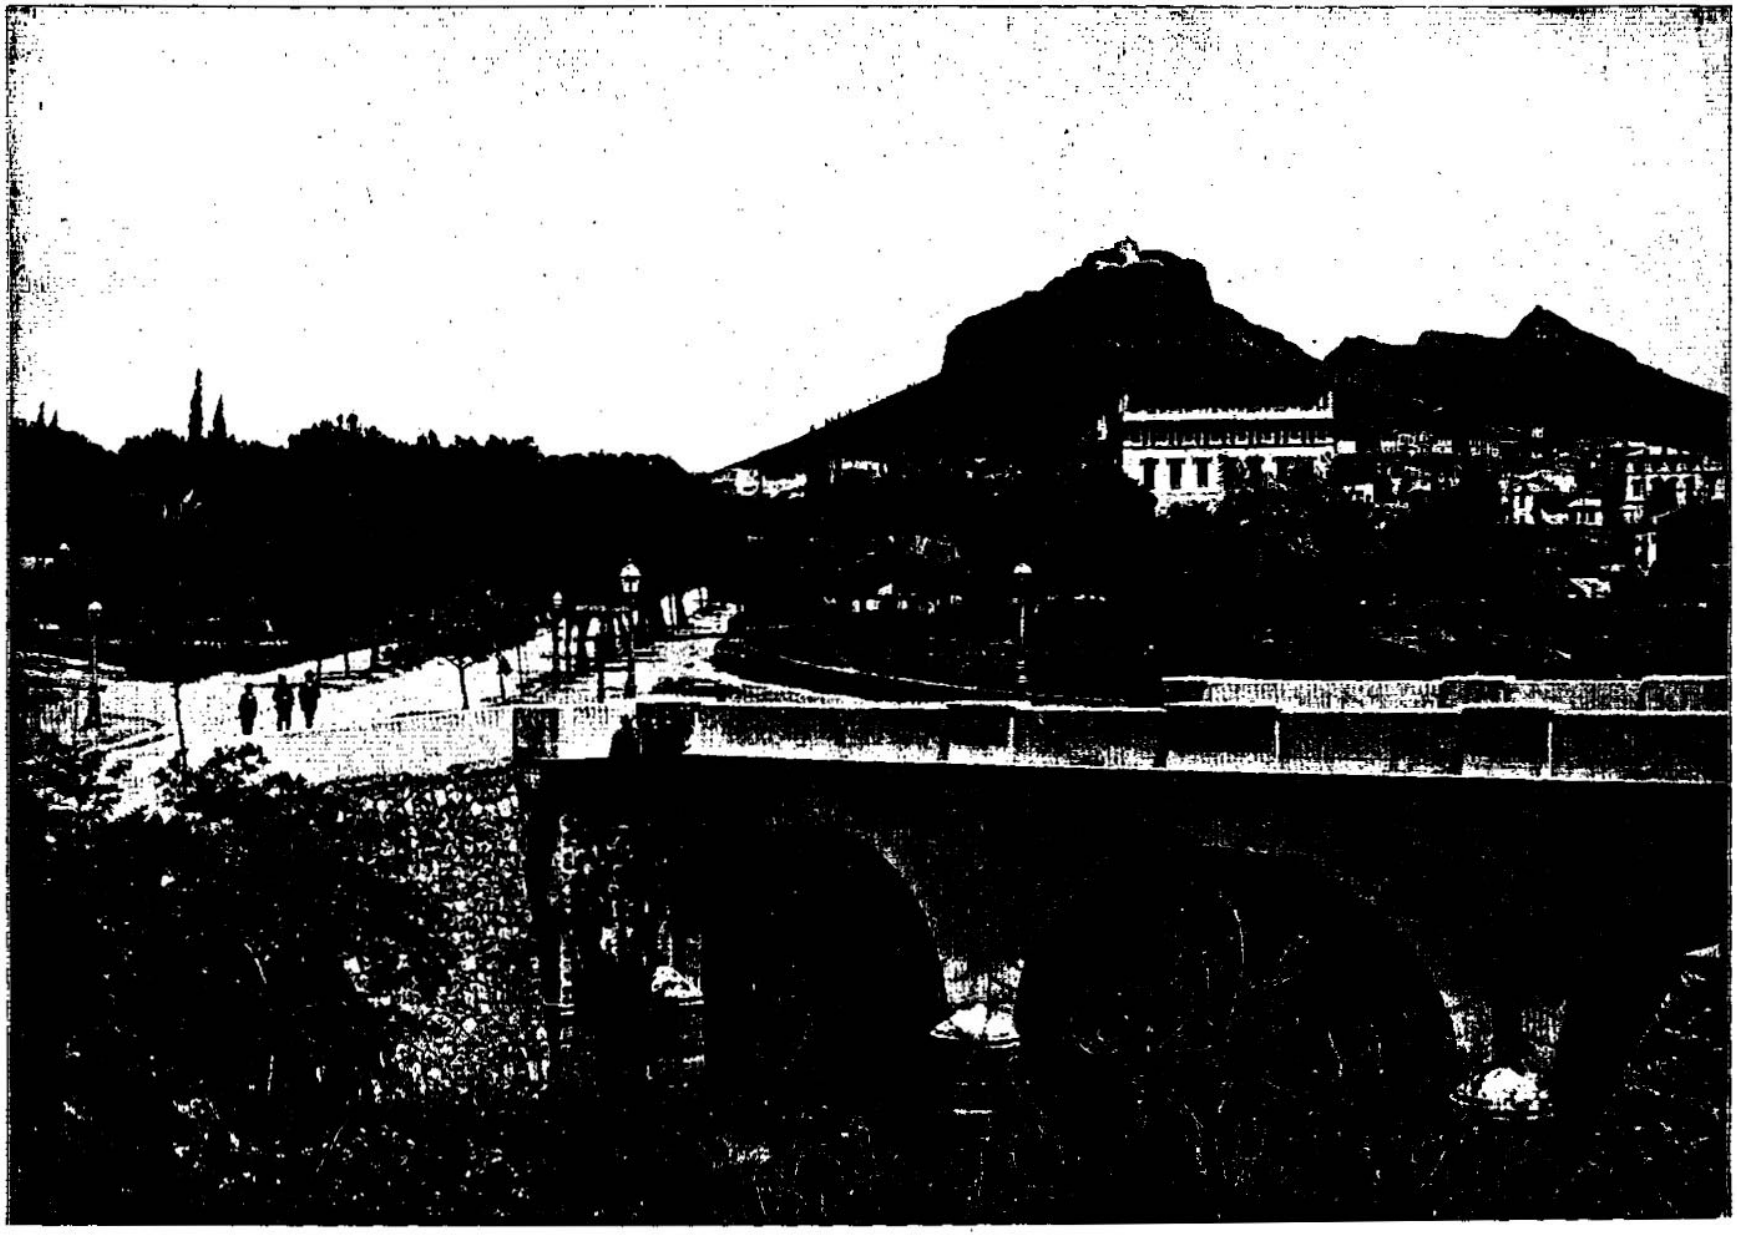
NOW, when these things were done, the princes came to me, saying, The people of Israel,[1] and the priests, and the Levites, have not separated themselves from the people of the lands, doing according to their abominations, even of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and the Amorites.

2 For they have taken of their daughters for themselves, and for their sons; so that the [r]holy[2] seed have mingled themselves with the people of those lands: yea, the hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass.

3 And when I heard this thing, I [s]rent my garment and my mantle, and [t]plucked off the hair of my head[3] and of my beard, and [u]sat down astonied.

4 Then were assembled unto me every one that [x]trembled at the words of the God of Israel, because of the transgression of those that had been carried away; and I sat astonied until the evening sacrifice.



5 ¶ And at [y]the evening sacrifice I arose up from my heaviness; and, having rent my garment and my mantle, I fell [w]upon my knees, and spread out my hands unto the LORD my God,

6 And said, O my God, [x]I am ashamed, and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: [y]for holy things, and especially of precious souls. And the greatest accuracy and fidelity are necessary in every trust, as we must give account to God. But O how infinite in his goodness in bringing all believers safe through dangers, rendering their trustees honest and faithful, their companions devout, and their enemies friendly! And soon shall his gracious designs be complete, in bringing all the ransomed millions to the Canaan, the Jerusalem above, where they shall for ever behold, live on, and rejoice with Jesus, their all-comprehending sacrifice, and where they shall find none but furtherers of their work.

CHAPTER IX. REFLECTIONS.—It is vain to expect perfection in the militant church. And the comforts of saints on earth are quickly imbittered with a mixture of griefs. But how infatuated are many professed Christians, who think of no sin, no danger, in being unequally yoked with unbelievers! A little skin-deep beauty, or a little earthly wealth or honour, is often preferred to the image of Jesus Christ! And when the most ruinous sins become fashionable few are affected with them. But to such as are Israelites indeed, the word of God appears awfully important.

BRIDGE OVER THE ILISSUS—ONE OF THE FOUR MOST CELEBRATED RIVERS IN THE WORLD, THE OTHER THREE BEING THE TIBER, THE NILE AND THE JORDAN. [Ezra, ix:1.]—"Now when these things were done, the princes came to me, saying the people of Israel, and the priests, and the Levites have not separated themselves from the people of the lands, doing according to their abominations, even of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians and the Amorites." About the time Ezra uttered the prayer recorded in this ninth chapter, confessing the sins of his people, the Spartans and the Boeotians were waging war against Athens. We give, as illustrating this Grecian history, contemporaneous with the facts of the ninth chapter of Ezra, a picture of a modern bridge over the Ilissus. This is a small stream that flows at the bottom of a deep ravine, through the classic city of Athens. It is dry a part of the year, and yet is one of the most famous water courses on earth, made so by the great men who have lived on and about it.

our iniquities are increased over our head,[4] and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens.[5]

7 Since the [p]days of our fathers have we been in a great trespass unto this day; and for our iniquities have we, our kings, and our priests, been delivered into the hand of the kings of the lands, to the sword, to captivity, and to a spoil, and to confusion of face, as it is this day.

8 And now for a [q]little space grace hath been showed from the LORD our God, to leave us a remnant[6] to escape, and to give us[7] a nail[8] in his holy place, that our God may [r]lighten our eyes, and give us a little reviving in our bondage.

9 For [s]we were bondmen; yet our God hath not forsaken us in our bondage, but hath extended mercy unto us in the [t]sight of the kings of Persia, to give us a reviving, to set up the house of our God, and to repair the desolations thereof, and to give us [u]a wall in Judah and in Jerusalem.

10 And now, O our God, [v]what shall we say after this? for we have forsaken thy commandments, 11 Which thou hast commanded [w]by thy servants the prophets, saying, The land, unto which ye go to possess it, is an unclean land with the filthiness of the people of the lands, with their abominations, which have filled it from one end to another with their uncleanness.

12 Now therefore give not your daughters unto their sons, neither take their daughters unto your sons, nor seek their peace or their wealth for ever; [x]that ye may be strong, and eat the good of the land, and leave it for an inheritance to your children for ever.

13 And after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great trespass, seeing that thou our God [y]hast punished us less than our iniquities[9] deserve, and hast given us such deliverance as this;

14 Should[b] we again break thy commandments, and join in affinity with the people of these abominations? [z]wouldest not thou be angry with us till thou hadst consumed us, so that there should be no remnant nor escaping?

15 O[d] LORD God of Israel, thou art righteous;[1] for we remain yet escaped, as it is this day: behold, we are before thee in our trespasses; for we cannot [a]stand before thee because of this.

CHAP. X.

1 The sorrow and consternation of so eminent a person as Ezra, with his prayer and confession of deep criminality, were no doubt speedily reported all over the city: and this induced the people seriously to reflect upon their conduct and its consequences, so that numbers of their own accord gathered around the governor, and united with him in lamentations and humiliation before God. And the alarm becoming general, even the women and children joined the assembly in the court of the temple, probably fearing lest the wrath of God should immediately be poured out upon them.—J.

4 The marriage of a Jew with an idolater was contrary to the divine law (De. 7. 3), and he that sinned presumptuously had no right to sacrifice, and was by law cut off from the congregation (Le. xxi. xxii.) Infidels have called this law harsh and unjust; but out of their own mouth are they condemned; for they, being men, and in much ignorance, do form arbitrary rules, for neglect or violation of which members are excluded from their societies, and yet dare to accuse God, who of his infinite wisdom promulgates and enforces his laws, only in support of the eternal and unchangeable principles of holiness.—C.

CHAPTER X.

1 Shechaniah encourageth Ezra to reform the abuse of the strange marriages. 6 Ezra mourning assembleth the people. 9 The people, at the exhortation of Ezra, repent, and promise amendment. 15 The care to perform it. 18 The names of those who had married strange wives.

NOW when Ezra[1] had[a] prayed, and when he had confessed, weeping and casting himself down [b]before the house of God, there [c]assembled unto him out of Israel a very great congregation of men, and women, and children: for the people wept very sore.[2]

2 And Shechaniah the son of Jehiel, one of the sons of Elam, answered and said unto Ezra, [d]We have trespassed against our God, and have taken strange wives of the people of the land: yet now [e]there is hope in Israel concerning this thing.

3 Now therefore let us [f]make a covenant with our God, to put away all the wives, and such as are born of them, according to the counsel of my lord, and of those that [g]tremble at the commandment of our God; and let it be done [h]according to the law.

4 Arise;[i] for this matter belongeth unto thee: we also will be with thee: be of good courage, and do it.[3]

5 Then arose Ezra, and made the chief priests, the Levites, and all Israel, to [k]swear that they should do according to this word. And they sware.

6 ¶ Then Ezra rose up from before the house of God, and went into [l]the chamber of Johanan the son of [m]Eliashib: and when he came thither, he [n]did eat no bread, nor drink water; for he mourned because of the transgression of them that had been carried away.

7 And they made proclamation throughout Judah and Jerusalem, unto all the children of the captivity, that they should gather themselves together unto Jerusalem;

8 And [o]that whosoever would not come within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be [p]forfeited,[4] and himself [q]separated from the congregation of those that had been carried away.

9 ¶ Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin gathered themselves together unto Jerusalem

And that which seems light or lawful to carnal professors lies heavy on tender consciences. These take grief and shame to themselves for such as are hardened in their sins: and to join with such in their sorrow and zeal is both our duty and honour: for the most fearful aggravations appear attending our sins and those of our land when we consider the matter as in the sight of God. It therefore becomes us faithfully and humbly to repent of and acknowledge our sins, over our great sacrifice, our great propitiation; once offered in the evening, the end of the world; and in the believing view of God's sacrificial relation and pardoning mercy, to justify him and 'condemn ourselves. But often-repeated provocations weary out the patience of God. And hopeless is their case when neither corrections humble nor mercies constrain.

CHAPTER X. [Ver. 11. The original cause of the law against mixed marriages evidently was the tendency of such marriages to draw the people away from the worship of the true God. All the nations among which the Israelites were placed were idolaters. Not only was their worship irrational, and sometimes inhuman, but their morals were most impure. Had the Israelites been permitted freely to intermarry with them, the natural and speedy result must have been universal degeneracy and degradation. The priesthood especially, as being the instructors and guides of the nation, required to be kept pure and spotless. Hence the intense desire and strenuous effort of Ezra to reclaim the erring among them. P.]

Ver. 17. ['They made an end with all the men,' that is, they completed the investigation of all the cases, and determined what should be done in each case. Probably in most cases the wives conformed to Judaism, and separated entirely from their Gentile relatives; but wherever the wives proved ignorant or stubborn, the rulers insisted on their being divorced. It became therefore, in regard to each wife, a choice between her idolatry and her husband; and in regard to each husband between carnal appetite and religious principle. P.]

Ver. 44. [All these had taken strange wives, and within three days: it was the ninth month,[5] and the twentieth day of the month; and all the people sat in the street of the house of God, trembling[r] because of this matter, and for the great rain.[6]

10 And Ezra the priest stood up, and said unto them, Ye have transgressed, and have taken strange wives, to [s]increase the trespass of Israel.

11 Now therefore [t]make confession unto the LORD God of your fathers, and [u]do his pleasure; and [v]separate yourselves from the people of the land, and from the strange wives.

12 Then all the congregation answered and said with a loud voice, As thou hast said, [w]so must we do.

13 But the people are [x]many, and it is a time of much rain, and we are not able to stand without,[7] neither is this a work of one day or two: for we are many that have transgressed in this thing.[8]

14 Let now our [y]rulers of all the congregation stand, and let all them which have taken strange wives in our cities come at appointed times, and with them the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until the fierce wrath of our God for this matter be turned from us.[9]

15 ¶ Only Jonathan the son of Asahel, and Jahaziah the son of Tikvah, were employed[1] about this matter: and Meshullam and Shabbethai the Levite helped them.

16 And the children of the captivity did so: and Ezra the priest, with certain chief of the fathers, after the house of their fathers, and all of them by their names, were separated, and sat down in the first day of the tenth month to examine[a] the matter.

17 And they made an end with all the men that had taken strange wives by the first day of the first month.[2]

18 ¶ And among the sons of the priests there [b]were found that had taken strange wives; namely, of the sons of [c]Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren, Maaseiah, and Eliezer, and Jarib, and Gedaliah.

19 And they[1] [d]gave their hands[3] that they would put away their wives; and, being [e]guilty, they offered a ram of the flock for their trespass.[4]

20 And of the sons of [f]Immer; Hanani and Zebadiah.

29 And of the sons[6] of [p]Bani; Meshullam, Malluch, and Adaiah, Jashub, and Sheal, and Ramoth.

43 Of the sons of [u]Nebo; Jeiel, Mattithiah, Zabad, Zebina, Jadau, and Joel, Benaiah.

44 All[x] these had taken strange[8] wives: and some of them had wives by whom they had children.

[5] Answering to our December, and the coldest and most rainy season of the year. But did not Ezra act with inhumanity in calling out the people at such an inclement season? Does the commander of an army act with inhumanity when he retreats with his troops by forced marches, and in the most inclement season, from the pursuit of a superior force? No: we praise his prudent attitude and his skill, and count a well-managed retreat sometimes superior to a victory. Are we to shall the precipitude of Ezra be blamed, who will not wait an hour after the discovery of the national sin, but instantly calls upon the people to flee from the wrath to come?—C.

[8] Or, but this matter be despatched.

[9] Heb. about. Perhaps these were the only opposers. (The translation here seems doubtful, if not erroneous. The word translated employed literally means stood. Now Ezra and the others, as judges always do, sat down (ver. 16) to examine? the meaning seems to be, that Asahel, &c., were the only persons opposed to the decision of Ezra and the princes.—C.)

[1] The Jewish year had thirteen months. This investigation must therefore have been very complicated, as it lasted three months.—C.

[2] Or, in what sort the hands were given does not appear, but may probably be ascertained from 2 Ki. 10. 15, where Jehu says to Jehonadab, Is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? If it be, give me thine hand. And he gave him his hand.—La. 5.6.—C.

[3] Ezra being himself a priest, manifests distinguished impartiality in beginning his reformation with the priesthood. Here so showed great wisdom; for if the priesthood be not reformed, the people cannot be expected. A comparison of the reformed and unreformed kingdoms of Europe, or even of the miniature cantons of Switzerland, bears ample testimony to this fact.—C.

[4] Heb. having first recorded the reformation of the priesthood, now records that of the people.—Note. That a more precise and scrupulous morality is required of the ministers of the gospel than of others, is a common but a most pernicious opinion. Christians should all be a "peculiar people" (1 Pe. 2. 9), an "holy priesthood," (1 Pe. 2. 5.)—C.

[5] About 225 in all are here named who had married strange wives, and some of them, it is said, had children by them. Whether the children were turned off with the mothers, as Shechaniah proposed, does not appear; it should seem not: it is, however, probable that the wives which were put away were well provided for according to their rank. One would think this grievance was now thoroughly redressed, yet we meet with it again, Ne. 13. 23; Mal. 2. 11; for such corruptions are easily and unwittingly wrought in, but not without great difficulty purged out again.—Henry.

[6] Or, Mahnadebai. according to some copies.

[7] Perhaps this observation is intended to show that only a few of them had children: so that the separation would be more easily effected. The names here given are supposed to be merely the principal persons, for all circumstances combine to induce an opinion that a far greater number were concerned than those here enumerated.—C.

[8] Heb. strange wives.

some of them had wives by whom they had children. The comparatively small number who had married idolatrous wives seems to intimate that the transgression was but of recent origin; and this view seems corroborated by the statement that 'some of them had wives by whom they had children.' This statement also evidences the strictness of the investigation and enforcement of the law. But was it not cruel thus to divorce husbands and wives? No. For God had not joined them, God had forbidden their union. It was no more cruel than to divorce a bigamist, whose marriage is rendered null and void by virtue of a previous contract. Besides, there is no reason to conclude these wives and children would be sent away portionless, the uncompromising purity of the divine law being always consistent with the dictates of mercy. Ex. xxi. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Wherever sin is seen and felt there is no ground for despair: yea, there may be good hope, through grace, where there is a burden of the most aggravated guilt. In mournful circumstances we ought to observe what makes for us as well as what makes against us. And even weaker saints may be instructors to those who are far stronger in gifts and grace. Mourning and reforming sinners ought to be encouraged; and leaders in church or state ought to be most active in promoting reformation. Men's sins, with the aggravations and danger of them, ought to be closely laid home to their consciences; for none will part with them till they perceive that they are undone if they persevere therein. Great men ought to take the good advice of their inferiors. Critical causes ought to be decided with great deliberation and caution; and reformations begun and carried on with much fasting, prayer, and solemn covenanting with God, promise good success. When we truly return to God he will return to us: he will at last pluck his people as brands out of the burning. They who have the cause of God at heart spare neither time nor pains to serve it. But how shameful is it to find priests, whose marriages were peculiarly restricted of God, ringleaders in unhallowed connections with heathen women! and yet it is highly commendable in them to prove at last patterns of repentance and reformation to others. Alas! that so few clergymen are disposed to imitate their example; but rather endeavouring by every possible shift to extenuate, excuse, or defend their own error and wickedness.

THE BOOK OF NEHEMIAH

Was probably written by himself. It commences twelve years after the dissolution of the unhallowed marriages; and, including at least twelve years of historical account, reaches to about the hundred and fourth after the return from Babylon. ## CHAPTER I.

1 Nehemiah, informed by Hanani concerning the afflicted state of Jerusalem, mourneth, fasteth, and prayeth. 5 His prayer.

THE words of [a]Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah. And it came to pass in [b]the month Chisleu, in the [c]twentieth year, as I was in Shushan[1] the palace,

2 That [d]Hanani, one of my brethren, came, he and certain men of Judah; and I asked them concerning the Jews that had escaped, which were left of the captivity, and concerning Jerusalem.

3 And they said unto me, The remnant that are left of the captivity there in the [e]province are [f]in great affliction and reproach: the wall of Jerusalem also [g]is broken down, and the gates thereof are burnt with fire.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, when I heard these words, that I [h]sat down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted, and prayed before the God of heaven,[2]

5 And said, I beseech thee, [i]O LORD God of heaven, the great and terrible God, [k]that keepeth covenant and mercy for them that love him, and observe his commandments;

6 Let [m]thine ear now be attentive, and thine eyes open, that thou mayest hear the prayer of thy servant, which I pray before thee now, day[n] and night, for the children of Israel thy servants, and [o]confess the sins of the children of Israel, which we have sinned against thee: both I and my father's house have sinned.

7 We [p]have dealt very corruptly against thee, and have not kept the commandments, nor the statutes, nor the judgments, which thou commandedst thy servant Moses.

8 Remember,[q] I beseech thee, the word that thou commandedst thy servant Moses, saying, If ye transgress, I will scatter you abroad among the nations:[3]

3 A voice directly from heaven is not more decisive of a divine revelation than is the voice of prophecy and its historic fulfilment. Accordingly God has been pleased to spread this evidence over the history of the four great empires, the Assyrian, the Persian, the Grecian, and Roman, but to concentrate it chiefly upon the history of the Jews, whose whole condition, past and present, has been made the continual theme of prophetic announcement; and thus their separation, their captivities, their scattering abroad, with their still unsettled condition, are all prophecies whose literal fulfilment constitutes such irresistible evidence of the divine origin of the Scriptures that contain them, that reason must acknowledge they came from God.—C.

The person holding it was the chief confidant of the monarch, and introduced or excluded petitioners at his pleasure; it was consequently an office of great emolument, which will account for the vast riches of Nehemiah, of which he made such pious and generous use. ## CHAPTER II.

1 Artaxerxes, understanding the cause of Nehemiah's sadness, sendeth him with letters and a commission to build the walls of Jerusalem. 9 Nehemiah, to the grief of the enemies of the Jews, cometh to Jerusalem. 12 He vieweth secretly the ruins of the walls. 17 He encourageth the Jews to build in spite of the scorn of the enemies.

3 And said unto the king, [f]Let the king live for ever:[3] why [g]should not my countenance be sad, when the city, the place of my fathers' sepulchres, lieth waste, and the gates thereof are consumed with fire?

4 Then the king said unto me, For what dost thou make request? So I [h]prayed to the God of heaven.

5 And I said unto the king, [i]If it please the king, and if thy servant have found favour in CHAPTER I. [Ver. 1. Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah. Some have supposed that Nehemiah was descended from a priestly family, because it is said in ch. 10. 8, after a list of names, 'these were the priests.' Nehemiah is the first name on the list; but a careful examination shows that his name was placed at the head not because he was a priest, but because he was Tirshatha, or recognized leader of the nation. In the translation of 2 Mac. 1. 21 he is called 'Nehemiah the priest.' This, however, is an error, for the Greek has it, 'Nehemiah ordered the priests.' He was probably of the tribe of Judah, and perhaps of the royal house of David, as his forefathers were buried at Jerusalem. Nehemiah was a man distinguished for piety, energy, tact, and courage. With the single exception of Ezra he conferred more signal benefits upon his country than any man of that age. He found the people oppressed, the country desolate, the walls of Jerusalem in ruins. He rebuilt the walls, and thus laid the foundation of national independence. By his vigilance and prudence he overcame the opposition of powerful thy sight, that thou wouldest send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may [k]build it.

6 And the king said unto me, (the [l]queen also sitting by him,[4]) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? So it[m] pleased the king to send me; and I [n]set him a time.

7 Moreover, I said unto the king, If it please the king, let [o]letters be given me to the governors beyond the river, that they may convey me over till I come into Judah;[5]

8 And a letter unto Asaph the keeper of the king's forest, that he may give me timber to make beams for the gates of the palace which appertained to [p]the house, and for the [q]wall of the city,[6] and for [r]the house that I shall enter into. And the king granted me, [s]according to the good hand of my God upon me.

9 ¶ Then I came to the governors beyond the river, and gave them the king's letters. (Now the king had sent [t]captains of the army and horsemen with me.)[7]

10 When Sanballat the [u]Horonite, and Tobiah [x]the servant, the Ammonite, heard of it, it [y]grieved them exceedingly that there was come a man to seek the welfare of the children of Israel.

11 So I came to Jerusalem, and was there three[z] days.

12 ¶ And I [a]arose in the night, I and some few men with me; neither [b]told I any man what my God had put in my heart to do at Jerusalem:[8] neither was there any beast with me, save the beast that I rode upon.

13 And I went out by night by the [c]gate of the valley, even before the dragon-well, and to the [d]dung-port, and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which [e]were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire.

14 Then I went on to the [f]gate of the fountain, and to the [g]king's pool: but there was no place for the beast that was under me to pass.

15 Then went I up in the night by the brook, and viewed the wall, and turned back, and entered by the gate of the valley, and so returned.[9]

16 And the rulers knew not whither I went, or what I did; neither had I as yet told it to the Jews, nor to the priests, nor to the nobles, nor to the rulers, nor to the rest that did the work.

17 ¶ Then said I unto them, Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burnt with fire: [h]come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more [i]a reproach.

18 Then I told them [k]of the hand of my God which was good upon me; as also the king's words that he had spoken unto me. And they said, Let us rise up and build. So they [l]strengthened their hands[l] for this good work.

19 But when [m]Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant,[2] the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian, heard it, they [n]laughed us to scorn, and despised us, and said, What is this thing that ye do? will ye [o]rebel against the king?

20 Then answered I them, and said unto them, The God of heaven, he will [p]prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build: but ye [q]have no portion, nor right, nor memorial, in Jerusalem.

CHAPTER III.

The names and order of them that builded the wall.

THEN Eliashib[a] the high priest rose up with his brethren the priests, and they builded [b]the sheep-gate: they sanctified it, and set up the doors of it; even unto the tower of [1]Meah they [c]sanctified it unto the tower of Hananeel.

2 And next unto him[2] builded the [d]men of Jericho: and next to them builded Zaccur the son of Imri.

3 But the [e]fish-gate did the sons of Hassenaah build, who also laid the beams thereof, and [f]set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

h Nehemiah's inspection appears to have embraced the whole circuit of the city. He went out by the gate of the valley, which occupied the site of the present Jaffa gate; running southward he rode round the lower slope of Mount Zion, and then crossed the mouth of the Tyropœon to the fountain of Siloam at the southern end of Ophel. There he entered the Kedron valley, here called 'the Brook;' but as the narrow ravine was impassable for the animal he rode, probably on account of the ruins of the ancient wall that had rolled down into it, he dismounted and walked up the Kidron to the high ground on the north of the city, and after examining the wall there he turned back to where he had left his horse, and returned to the west gate.—C.

enemies; and by the example of his energy and courage he roused the Jews from their ignominious lethargy. 'For pure and disinterested patriotism Nehemiah stands unrivalled. Its site is now marked by the extensive ruins of Sus, which cover a wide extent of plain between the rivers Euæus and Shaour. See note on Es. 1. 2. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Sad defects still remain in the militant church. But whenever God has work to be done, he can easily find or qualify instruments for it. Lively saints may often be found where we could least expect them—courts not excepted. And no dignity or distance can make such a one careless of the honour of the church of God. The poverty or persecution which discourages others awakens his zeal and concern. In seasons of public or private distress, fasting and tears should accompany our prayers. It is a great relief for a sorrowful spirit to pour out its complaints into the bosom of a compassionate God. While we have a God in Christ to go to, our case is never desperate. And if he pour out upon us his Spirit of grace and supplication, he will certainly hear us. Let us then, with holy and believing awe of his greatness and grace, rest on the stability of his promise. And let candid confessions of our sins and unworthiness attend our supplications for mercy. It is infinitely encouraging to us that we have to deal with a God who is our own God; a God who has done great things for us, and has pledged his promise to do more. Let us therefore put our own, and the hearts of all connected with the welfare of Zion, into his hand.

CHAPTER II. REFLECTIONS.—Strong grief can scarcely be concealed. And it becomes superior or others to observe the appearances of distress in those around them, and to sympathize with them in it. Even Jesus marks his people's groans, and puts their tears into his bottle. There is therefore no reason either for fear or for shame when sorrow for sin and for the affliction of God's people burden our heart and sadden our countenance. Nothing is more comely than meek and humble answers when given by distressed minds to great men. And pious ejaculations to God are proper to be intermingled with all our important dealings. The prayer of faith is never in vain. God will afford us friends, and help us where we scarcely ever expected it. It is easy with him to render the greatest on earth friendly and helpful to his church in a time of need. But every favour shown to the servants of God awakens the envy and rage of the wicked. They so heartily hate the cause of God that they are vexed exceedingly if any take it by the hand and zealously promote it, and are ready to attack them with every arrow of envenomed malice, derision, slander, and threatening. What strong faith in God, zeal for his glory, bold

DRAGON'S FOUNTAIN, JERUSALEM—WHERE NEHEMIAH WENT TO VIEW THE WALLS OF JERUSALEM. [Nehemiah, ii:13.]—"And I went out by night by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon well * * * and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire." In the center of the Ophel hill, in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, there is a fountain with an intermittent spring whose waters connect with the Pool of Siloam by a canal which runs through the hill. This fountain is called the Dragon's Well, because they have a tradition that a dragon swallows up the water when awake, the water rising again when he is asleep, and this waking and sleeping of the dragon causes the intermittent flow of the water. The water comes up in the bottom of a cave 25 feet deep excavated in the rock. By going down sixteen steps we reach a chamber 18 feet long by 10 feet wide and 10 feet high, its sides being built of old stones and its roof a pointed arch.

4 And next unto them repaired [g]Meremoth the son of Urijah, the son of Koz: and next unto them repaired Meshullam the son of Berechiah, the son of Meshezabeel: and next unto them repaired Zadok the son of Baana.

5 And next unto them the [h]Tekoites repaired; but their nobles put [i]not their necks to the work of their Lord.[3]

6 Moreover, the [k]old gate repaired Jehoiada the son of Paseah, and Meshullam the son of Besodeiah; they laid the beams thereof, and set up the doors thereof, and the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

7 And next unto them repaired Melatiah the Gibeonite, and Jadon the Meronothite, the men of [l]Gibeon, and of Mizpah, unto the [m]throne[5] of the governor on this side the river.

8 Next unto him repaired Uzziel the son of Harhaiah, of the goldsmiths: next unto him also repaired Hananiah the son of one of the apothecaries,[6] and they [n]fortified Jerusalem unto the broad wall.

9 And next unto them repaired Rephaiah the son of Hur, the ruler of the [o]half-part of Jerusalem.

11 Malchijah[p] the son of Harim, and Hashub the son of [q]Pahath-moab, repaired the other piece,[7] and the tower of the furnaces.

15 But the [y]gate of the fountain repaired Shallum the son of Col-hozeh, the ruler of part of [z]Mizpah; he built it, and covered it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof, and the wall of [a]the pool of Siloah[9] by the king's garden, and unto the stairs that go down from the [b]city of David.

16 After him repaired Nehemiah the son of Azbuk, the ruler of the half-part of [c]Beth-zur, unto the place over against the [d]sepulchres of David, and to the [e]pool that was made,[1] and unto the [f]house of the mighty.[2]

'No man,' observes Pellicanus, 'can think that the names of them that repaired the walls of Jerusalem were set down so diligently as here they are, without some rational cause for it. And the reason was, because it was a work of great virtue to love and to do honour to their country; a work of piety to restore the holy city; a religious thing to defend the true worshippers of God, that they might serve him in quietness and safety; and a courageous thing, in the midst of so many enemies, to go on with this work in a pious confidence of the power of God to support them.'—P.

courage, and prudent discretion, are then necessary, in attempting any noted work for the Lord and his church. In this manner we bid fair to animate even cowards and sluggards to join with us in it! Many will second the labours of one that is zealous and active who had no courage to lead. Let us therefore instantly begin, as delays are dangerous: and let us carefully observe and acknowledge the kind interposals of Providence in all that we meet with.

CHAPTER IV.

1 While the enemies are wroth, and scoff, Nehemiah prayeth to God, and continueth the work. 7 Understanding the wrath and secrets of the enemy, he setteth a watch. 13 He armeth the labourers, 19 and giveth military precepts.

BUT it came to pass, that when Sanballat heard that we builded the wall, he [a]was wroth, and took great indignation, and mocked the Jews.

2 And he spake before his brethren, and the army of Samaria, and said, What do these feeble[b] Jews? will they fortify themselves?[1] will they sacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they [c]revive the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish which are burnt?

3 Now Tobiah the Ammonite was by him, and he said, Even that which they build, if a fox[4] go up, he shall even break down their stone wall.

4 Hear, O our God;[2] for[e] we are despised:[3] and turn their reproach upon their own head, and give them for a prey in the land of captivity:

5 And [f]cover not their iniquity, and let not their sin be blotted out from before thee: for they have provoked thee to anger [g]before the [h]builders.

6 So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof:[4] for the people[h] had a mind to work.[5]

7 ¶ But it came to pass, [i]that when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and the Arabians, and the Ammonites, and the Ashdodites, heard that the walls of Jerusalem were made up,[6] and that the breaches began to be stopped, then they were very[k] wroth,

8 And conspired all of them together to come and to fight against Jerusalem, and to hinder it.

9 Nevertheless we [l]made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch against them day and night, because of them.[7]

10 And Judah said, [m]The [n]strength of the bearers of burdens is decayed, and there is much rubbish; so that we are not able to build the wall.

11 And our adversaries said, [n]They shall not know, neither see, till we come in the midst among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease.

12 And it came to pass, that when the [o]Jews which dwelt by them came, they said unto us ten[p] times, From all places whence ye shall return unto us,[8] they will be upon you.[9]

13 ¶ Therefore [q]set I in the lower [r]places behind the wall, and on the higher places, I even set the people after their families with their [s]swords, their spears, and their bows.

14 And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, [t]Be not ye afraid of them: [t]remember the LORD, which is great and terrible, and [u]fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses.

15 And it came to pass, when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, and God [x]had brought their counsel to nought, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work.

16 And it came to pass, from that time forth, that the half of my servants [y]wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons; and the rulers were behind all the house of [z]Judah.

17 They which builded on the wall, and they that bare burdens, with those that laded, every one [a]with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.[2]

18 For the builders, every one had his sword girded by his side,[3] and so builded: and he that sounded the trumpet was by me.

19 And I said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, The work is great and large, and we are separated upon the wall, one far from another.

20 In what place therefore ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us: [b]our God shall fight for us.

21 So we [c]laboured in the work: and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared.

22 Likewise at the same time said I unto the people, Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

23 So neither [d]I, nor my brethren, nor my servants, nor the men of the guard which followed me, none of us put off our clothes, [e]saving that every one put them off for washing.[4]

CHAPTER V.

1 The Jews complain of their debt, mortgage, and bondage. 6 Nehemiah rebuketh the usurers, and causeth them to swear to make a full and free restitution. 14 He forbeareth his own allowance, and keepeth hospitality at his own expense.

9 The obscurity of meaning in the verse has led critics of the highest order to adopt a change in a word, so as to produce greater clearness. The alteration of words, however, without overwhelming authority of MSS. or early translations, is never to be admitted. And it does not the marginal translation render the words quite intelligible? viz. The Jews that dwelt in the neighbourhood of Samaria, &c., told their brethren ten times frequently, continually, 'from all places that is, from the cities which ye have occupied under Nehemiah, ye must return to us,' and thus elude or conciliate the enemies that are plotting the ruin of Jerusalem. And that this was not a friendly admonition, but a treacherous attempt to bring over the Jerusalemites, the party of the Samaritans, appears highly probable from the record of the conspiracy between the Jewish nobles and Tobiah, ch.vi.—C.

2 This would be literally impossible if it meant that while the right hand worked the left held sword, or spear, or bow, ver. 23. And where is the use of such a violent figure for 'equal readiness to work or fight?' But if the Hebrew employed the word translated hands as it is employed in English, that is for workmen, then the sense becomes plain, and merely signifies that every class was divided, just as every army in field or garrison is often divided into a working party and a covering party, which perfectly coincides with ver. 21.—C.

4 The last clause is very obscure. In fact the Hebrew words, as they at present stand in the received text, convey no precise meaning. The general sense of the whole verse is clear enough. The people worked by day and night, taking it in turns. They did not undress lest they should be suddenly called to action. They only put off their clothes when it became necessary to have them washed. There is a reading in one of the MSS. examined by De Rossi which is worthy of note. It is as follows:—'We did not put off our garments except in order to send them to be washed.'—P.

CHAPTER III. REFLECTIONS.—It is a hopeful appearance when ministers are most forward in every good word and work; and when they undertake and go through their work with much solemn prayer and dependence on God. And it is very encouraging when multitudes of all ranks—tradesmen, ladies, nobles, and commons—unanimously concur in promoting the work of the Lord in an orderly manner. But how honourable is it if, like the men of Jericho, Gibeon, Mizpah, Zanoah, and the commons of Tekoah, we prefer the public interests to our own private concerns! or if, like the Tekoites and Meremoth, we help our brethren after finishing our own share! When the work is the Lord's we cannot be too zealously affected; and every person, if he be but hearty, may do something in it. None are so little as to be useless; and none are so high as to be above it. And it is highly disgraceful, even for the greatest, to shift or neglect what God calls them to do in his church.

CHAPTER IV. [Ver. 18. This verse is explanatory of ver. 17. Every workman, whether builder or attendant, was fully armed, ready at a moment's notice to defend the half-built walls against the enemy. I have seen examples of this in the East. When travelling through central Palestine, I saw the whole population of the fortress-village of Sanûr employed in repairing the shattered walls. The men were all armed, and they were all working—sheikhs and peasants, rich and poor. Women also were engaged bearing burdens, supplying the thirsty workmen with water, and in some cases holding the guns and pistols beside their husbands. P.]

2 For there were that said, We, our sons, and our daughters, are many; therefore we take[c] up corn for them, that we may eat, and live.

3 Some also there were that said, We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses, that we might buy corn, [d]because of the dearth.

4 There were also that said, We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards:

5 Yet now our [e]flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children: and, lo, [f]we bring into bondage our sons and our daughters to be servants, and some of our daughters are brought unto bondage already: neither is it in our power to redeem them; for other men have our lands and vineyards.[2]

6 ¶ And I was [g]very angry when I heard their cry and these words.

7 Then I consulted[3] with myself,[4] and I rebuked[h] the nobles and the rulers, and said unto them, [i]Ye exact usury every one of his brother. And [k]I set a great assembly against them.

8 And I said unto them, We, after our ability, have [l]redeemed our brethren the Jews which were sold unto the heathen; and will ye even sell your brethren? or shall they be sold unto us? Then [m]held they their peace, and found nothing to answer.

9 Also I said, [n]It is not good that ye do: ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God, because of the reproach of the heathen our enemies?

10 I[o] likewise, and my brethren, and my servants, might exact of them money and corn: I pray you, let us leave off this usury.

11 Restore, I pray you, to them, even this day, their lands, their vineyards, their oliveyards, and their houses, also the hundredth part of the money,[5] and of the corn, the wine, and the oil, that ye exact of them.

But if it was not paid at all, but of each, viz. money, wine, oil, and corn, then would it amount to 48 per cent., and in Syria and the adjoining countries money is still frequently lent at an interest of 30 per cent. The idea of a monthly payment is, however, totally unsupported by authority. Is it not therefore much more likely that the word hundredth was equivalent to the phrase per centage, because so is the arithmetical basis upon which interest is calculated, and consequently that Nehemiah gives no intimation of the rate of interest, but according to the divine law (Ex. 22. 25) requires the remission of the whole? 16 Yea, also I [t]continued in the work of this wall, neither [u]bought we any land: and all my servants were gathered thither unto the work.

17 Moreover, there were [v]at my table an hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, besides those that came unto us from among the heathen that are about us.

18 Now that [w]which was prepared for me daily was one ox, and six choice sheep; also fowls were prepared for me; and once in ten days store of all sorts of wine: yet for all this required not I the bread[2] of the governor, because the bondage was heavy upon this people.[3]

19 Think[x] upon me, my God, for good, according to all[4] that I have done for this people.

REFLECTIONS.—God's faithful builders are sure to have a share of the world's ridicule and contempt; and one wicked man encourages another. But though scoffers make their hands strong, God will shortly cover them with shame and confusion. Let saints then never discompose their souls on account of the most bitter or insolent contempt: God observes it, and will quickly resent it. Let them in patience possess their souls, commit their way to God, and go on more briskly with their Christian work. God's blessing will more than compensate men's revilings. And much may be done in a little time if all be hearty in lending their assistance. What a pity then is it that the people of God should scarcely ever be as harmonious and active in the Lord's work as the wicked are in their opposition to it! Nay, his more active servants have often as much trouble with the fears of their friends as with the terrors of their enemies. And false friends are more dangerous than open enemies. But be the plots of enemies ever so well laid, or ever so secret, God can discover or defeat them. Let then his infinite power and unbounded goodness encourage us to go on with our work, notwithstanding all the craft and malice of our adversaries. In all our spiritual work, all our attempts of reformation, let us put on the whole armour of God, and watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation. Let us, in our respective stations, unanimously unite, with heart and hand, against the common enemy; and count neither ease nor life dear unto us, that we may finish our course with joy. Religion bids fair to prosper when the professors thereof make earnest work of it, and endure hardship as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER V. [Ver. 2. The ground of complaint was this: The able-bodied men were kept at work on the walls. They received no pay, yet they had to provide food for themselves and families. They were obliged to buy, and to borrow the necessary money. Unscrupulous merchants and usurers took advantage of this, charged extravagant prices and exorbitant interest, so that many were obliged to mortgage their lands, and even give their children up to servitude. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Hard times and hard hearts when met together render the poor miserable indeed. And it is cruel to take advantage of our brethren's distress, and to make their yoke heavier by usurious exactions. Alas! how we bring hardship and famine on ourselves by our sins, and then complain of it. Those who have great families and little substance must learn to live by faith on God's promise and providence. And those who have small families and much substance should make their abundance a supply for their neighbours' wants; for often poor housekeepers are in much greater straits than the most wretched vagrants. But what a scandal to our holy religion is a worldly-minded and niggardly professor! And deliberate and aggravated is that theft which lies in retaining that which we have unjustly gotten. There can be no uprightness towards God without restitution to the oppressed. It is proper that rulers show themselves angry at what is sinful, that their subjects may be deterred from it and excited to duty. But reproofs ought to be given with great consideration and temper, lest otherwise they fail of their end. And warm and rough, though not furious, measures are to be taken with hardened and presumptuous transgressors. It is highly criminal to expose the people of God, and interests of religion, to the reproach of their enemies. And the strongest bonds are necessary to restrain worldlings from their covetous courses. But how scandalous is it for magistrates to enrich themselves, or indulge their servants, to the public hurt! Those, whether magistrates or others, in whose hearts the fear and love of God remarkably reign, will discover it by the exemplariness of their lives. In times of public distress they will even remit what was their unquestionable due. But infallible are the gracious

CHAPTER VI.

1 Sanballat practiseth by craft, by rumours, by hired prophecies, to terrify Nehemiah. 15 The wall is finished to the terror of the enemies. 17 Secret intelligence passeth between the enemies and the nobles of Judah.

NOW it came to pass, when [a]Sanballat, and Tobiah, and Geshem the Arabian, and the rest of our enemies, heard that I had builded the wall, and that there was no [b]breach left therein, (though at that time I [c]had not set up the doors upon the gates,)

2 That Sanballat and Geshem sent unto me, saying, Come, let us [d]meet together in some one of the villages[1] in the [e]plain of Ono:[2] but they[f] thought to do me mischief.

3 And I [g]sent messengers unto them, saying, I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?

4 Yet they sent unto me [h]four times after this sort; and I answered them after the same manner.

5 ¶ Then sent Sanballat his servant unto me, in like manner, the fifth time, with an open letter in his hand;[3]

6 Wherein was written, [i]It is reported among the heathen, and [k]Gashmu saith it, that thou and the Jews think to [l]rebel: for which cause thou buildest the wall, that thou mayest be their king, according to these words.[4]

7 And thou hast also appointed prophets to preach of thee at Jerusalem, saying, There is a king in Judah: and now shall it be reported to the king according to these words. Come now therefore, and let us [m]take counsel together.

8 Then I sent unto him, saying, There are no such things done as thou sayest, but thou feignest[n] them out of thine own heart.

9 For they all made us [o]afraid,[5] saying, Their hands shall be weakened from the work, that it be not done: Now therefore, [p]O God, strengthen my hands.

10 ¶ Afterward I came unto the house of Shemaiah[q] the son of Delaiah, the son of Mehetabeel, who was shut up;[6] and he said, [r]Let us meet together in the house of God, within the temple, and let us shut the doors of the temple: for they will come to slay thee; yea, in the night will they come to slay thee.[7]

11 And I said, Should [s]such a man as I flee?[8] and who is there, that, being as I [g]am, would go into the temple to save his life? I will not go in.

12 And, lo, I [t]perceived that God had not sent him;[1] but that he pronounced this prophecy against me: for Tobiah and Sanballat had hired him.[2]

13 Therefore was he hired, that I should [u]be afraid, and do so, and sin, and that [x]they might have matter for an evil report, that they might reproach me.

14 My [y] God, think thou upon Tobiah and Sanballat according to these their works, and on the [z]prophetess Noadiah, and the rest of the prophets, that would have put me in fear.[3]

15 ¶ So the wall was [a]finished in the twenty and fifth day of the month Elul, in fifty and two days.

16 And it came to pass, that when all our enemies heard thereof, and all the heathen that were about us saw these things, they were [b]much cast down in their own eyes: for they perceived that this work was wrought of our God.[4]

17 ¶ Moreover, in those days the nobles of Judah [c]sent many letters unto Tobiah, and the letters of Tobiah came unto them.

18 For there were many in Judah sworn unto him, because he was the son-in-law of Shechaniah the son of [d]Arah; and his son Johanan had taken the daughter of [e]Meshullam, the son of Berechiah.

19 Also they reported his good deeds before me, and uttered my words[5] to him. And Tobiah sent [f]letters to put me in fear.

rewards of sincere piety and disinterested benevolence from God, even when men overlook it. And it is pleasant to have them as a mark of our sacrificial relation to God.

CHAPTER VI. REFLECTIONS.—O the infernal subtlety and restlessness of Satan and his agents; and the need of heavenly wisdom and steady circumspection for resisting all their ensnaring and repeated solicitations! But business of consequence ought always to be preferred to matters of civility and compliment. It is common for the church's enemies to pretend friendship in order to ruin her; and no less so to represent her faithful ministers and members as traitors to government. But no lies, or malevolent reports, should weaken our hands from the work of God. They who have almighty power engaged for them may look up to God and be comforted. He will uphold them; and the more the enemies rage the more shall JEHOVAH's strength be perfected in our weakness. Yea, they shall see, to their grief, that he cares for his people, and that when he works none can hinder it. However great the opposition, and weak the instruments, he can speedily effect his work. And much good may be done in a short time if people are hearty in it, and have a good God and a pious man at the head of it. But a most dangerous plague are pretended and unfaithful ministers, treacherous magistrates, and villanous professors. The treachery of pretended friends is more to be feared than the malice of open enemies. And happy are those who, directed and encouraged of God, escape being ensnared in their nets. But for this we must walk circumspectly, and try the spirits: and be ready to risk every danger, rather than injure the cause of God, or even bring a reproach on our holy character or office. God marks the iniquities of his enemies, and will turn their deep-laid schemes against his people to their own confusion. Nor shall those who have ensnared themselves by sinful connections, or who assist them in their purposes, long escape the judgment which lingereth not.

CHAPTER VII. REFLECTIONS.—The worship and service of God ought always to be preferred to our civil concerns, however important; and with great care ought princes and other rulers to make choice of their deputies: if possible they should fix upon such as are faithful and eminently fear God. Happy even amidst dangers are the cities and nations which have such to rule and protect them. Great caution is necessary for our own and the church's safety when we have

3 And I said unto them, [g]Let not the gates of Jerusalem be opened until the sun be hot; and while they stand by, let them shut the doors, and bar them:[3] and appoint watches of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, every one in his watch, and every one to be over against his house.

4 Now the city was [h]large and great: but the people were few therein, and the houses were [i]not builded.

5 ¶ And my God [k]put into mine heart to gather together the nobles, and the rulers, and the people, that they might be reckoned by genealogy: and I found a register[4] of the genealogy of them which came up at the first, and found written therein,

6 These[l] are the children of the province that went up out of the captivity, of those that had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away, and came again to Jerusalem and to Judah, every one unto his city;

7 Who came with [m]Zerubbabel, [n]Jeshua, Nehemiah, [o]Azariah, Raamiah, Nahamani,[5] Mordecai, Bilshan, Mispereth, Bigvai, Nehum, Baanah. The number, I say, of the men of the people of Israel was this:[6]

8 The children[7] of [p]Parosh, two thousand an hundred seventy and two.

9 The children of [q]Shephatiah, three hundred seventy and two.

10 The children of [r]Arah, six hundred fifty and two.[8]

7 Here is an account of the heads of the several families that first came up. Though it seem of little use to us now, yet then it was of great use, to compare what they had been with what they now were. We may suppose they were much increased by this time: but it would do well for them to remember their small beginnings that they might acknowledge God in multiplying their families, and humble them up. By this means likewise their genealogies would be preserved, and the destination of their families kept up, till Messiah should come, and then an end be put to all genealogies, which were preserved for his sake, but afterwards were useless.—f.

6 There are some families named here which are not in Ezra, as in ver. 59, and ver. 48, 49, 51, 52, which are all omitted in Ezra. For it must be considered that one of these accounts was taken by Ezra in Babylon, the other by Nehemiah in Judea. And therefore it is no wonder that a greater number are sometimes mentioned in Nehemiah than in Ezra, for in the first account that was taken of them many were ignorant of their genealogy: but before the last, the book of that genealogy was found. Lightfoot remarks, that the matter is to be apprehended thus: "That Nehemiah found that list of those that came up in the first of Cyrus, as it was taken then, and that he called over the names of the families as they lay in order there. He observed the order of that list in calling and listing them.—f.

traitors amongst and within us: and every man's family ought to be his immediate concern. He has need to watch over them night and day that he may preserve them from the destroyer. Important records should be preserved, as they may be of use afterwards. But woe to those who, having given their names to the Lord, afterwards look back and return to the world! though God will compensate the loss of them to his church in the accession of others.

54 The children of [m]Bazlith, the children of Mehida, the children of Harsha,

56 The children of Neziah, the children of Hatipha.

57 ¶ The [n]children of Solomon's servants: the children of Sotai, the children of Sophereth, the children of Perida,

58 The children of Jaala, the children of Darkon, the children of Giddel, 59 The children of Shephatiah, the children of Hattil, the children of Pochereth of Zebaim, the children of [o]Amon.

60 All[p] the Nethinims and the children of Solomon's servants were three hundred ninety and two.

61 And[q] these were they which went up also from Tel-melah, Tel-haresha, Cherub, Addon, and Immer; but they could not show their father's house, nor their seed,[s] whether they were of Israel.

62 The children of Delaiah, the children of Tobiah, the children of Nekoda, six hundred forty and two.[7]

63 ¶ And [t]of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai, (which took one of the daughters of Barzillai[u] the Gileadite to wife, and was called after their name,)

64 These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but it was not found: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.

65 And [v]the Tirshatha[8] said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things till there stood up a priest with [w]Urim and Thummim.

66 ¶ The [x]whole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore;

67 Besides their [y]man-servants and their maid-servants, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven; and they had two hundred forty and five singing-men and singing-women.

68 Their horses, seven hundred thirty and six; their mules, two hundred forty and five;

69 Their camels, four hundred thirty and five; six thousand seven hundred and twenty asses.

70 ¶ And[z] some[9] of[a] the chief of the fathers gave unto the work. The [b]Tirshatha gave to the treasure a thousand drams of gold, fifty basons, five hundred and thirty priests' garments.

71 And some of the chief of the fathers gave to the treasure of the work[1] twenty thousand drams of gold, and two thousand and two hundred pound of silver.[2]

72 And that which [c]the rest of the people gave was twenty thousand drams of gold, and two thousand pound of silver, and threescore and seven priests' garments.

73 So the priests, and the Levites, and the porters, and the singers, and some of the people, and the Nethinims, and all Israel, [d]dwelt in their cities; and when the [e]seventh month came, the children of Israel were in their cities.

AND all [a]the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before [b]the water-gate; and they spake unto Ezra the [c]scribe to bring the [d]book of the law of Moses, which the LORD had commanded to Israel.[1]

2 And Ezra the priest [e]brought the law before the congregation, both of [f]men and women, and all that could hear with understanding,[2] upon the [g]first day of the seventh month.

3 And he [h]read therein before the street that was before the water-gate[3] from the morning[4] until mid-day,[5] before the men and the women, and those that could understand: and the [i]ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law.

4 And Ezra the scribe stood upon a [k]pulpit of wood,[7] which they had made for the purpose; and [l]beside him stood Mattithiah, and Shema, and Anaiah, and Urijah, and Hilkiah, and Maaseiah, on his right hand; and on his left

These variations, so far from forming any a priori evidence against the divine inspiration and authority of Ezra and Nehemiah, afford, on the contrary, the strongest evidence, at least, of their integrity. Had they been forming a "cunningly devised fable," the one would have minutely copied the other; but as truth was the object of both, each copied the register he found or found (see ch. 7. 5). and each was correct, according to the time and place at which it was taken, varying, as the one refers to leaving Babylon, the other to arriving at Jerusalem, but agreeing when the genealogical and congregational families were summed up together, and thus amounting to 42,360.—C.

[8] It is the opinion of Jaculus Capellus, that Zerubbabel is here meant by the Tirshatha. Whosoever he was, he expressed his hope that God might in time restore the Urim and Thummim (as he had done the nation), and so give answer about future and difficult matters, as he had done in former ages. But till then these priests were not admitted to partake of the most holy things, because it did not appear by good proof that they were of the family of the priests: and not to appear, and not to be, are the same thing in law. But the Talmudists, as the same person observes, interpret these words as if it had been said, Till the dead rise, or till the Messiah come. For after the first temple was destroyed the cities of the Levites, with their suburbs, were wanting, and so were Urim and Thummim, and the kings of the house of Judah (Patrick). The expression is by many understood as amounting to a perpetual prohibition, as if the Tirshatha had said that they should never eat of the most holy things.—C.

CHAPTER VIII. [Ver. 1. 'The book of the law of Moses' is a proper name, and was employed and understood by the Jews as definitely as we employ the name Pentateuch. It is interesting to observe, 1. That the people all knew of the existence of such a book, and that they were acquainted with its general contents. 2. That they were aware that the book was in the possession of Ezra. It is in the highest degree probable that the book referred to was the original autograph committed by Moses to the custody of the priests, and laid up beside the ark. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Not strong walls, but knowledge of and obedience to God, are the great safety of cities and nations. Nothing is more necessary for the establishment or preservation of true religion than a diligent study and thorough acquaintance with the word of God. Men, women, and children ought to vie with each other in their study and knowledge of it. And it is a great pleasure to faithful preachers to have hearers who hunger and thirst after it. Not only ought God's word to be read, but also explained and enforced on the conscience. And solemn prayers and praises should be joined with every public religious instruction. Sermons bid fair for success when the hearers are solemnly attentive. Nor will those who relish the word of God ever think the time long which is spent in hearing. Short sermons and soon-wearied hearers are sad tokens of cold and careless hearts. O what a happy presage it is when God's law cuts men's consciences to the quick, and makes them weep from the heart! Penitent mourning makes way for spiritual mirth. They who sow in tears shall reap in joy. And it is the pleasantest part of a minister's work to con-hand, Pedaiah, and Mishael, and Malchiah, and Hashum, and Hashbadana, Zechariah, and Meshullam.

5 And Ezra [b]opened the book in the sight[8] of all the people; (for he was above all the people;) and when he opened it, all the people stood[m] up:

6 And Ezra [n]blessed the LORD, the great God: and all the people answered, Amen, Amen, with [o]lifting up their hands; and they [p]bowed their heads, and worshipped the LORD with their faces to the ground.

7 Also Jeshua, and Bani, and Sherebiah, Jamin, Akkub, Shabbethai, Hodijah, Maaseiah, Kelita, Azariah, Jozabad, Hanan, Pelaiah, and the Levites, caused the people to understand the law; and the people stood in their place.

8 So they read in the book in the law of God [q]distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading.[9]

9 ¶ And Nehemiah, which is [r]the Tirshatha, and Ezra the priest the scribe, and the Levites that taught the people, said unto all the people, This day is [s]holy unto the LORD your God; mourn[t] not nor weep: for all the people [u]wept when they heard the words of the law.

10 Then he said unto them, Go your way, eat the fat,[1] and drink the sweet, and [x]send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared; for this day is holy unto our LORD: neither be ye sorry; for [y]the joy of the LORD is your strength.[2]

11 So the Levites stilled all the people,[3] saying, [z]Hold your peace; for the day is holy; neither [a]be ye grieved.

12 And all the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth, because they had understood the words that were declared unto them.

13 ¶ And on the second day were gathered together the chief of the fathers of all the people, the priests, and the Levites, unto Ezra the scribe, even [b]to understand the words of the law.

14 And they found written in the law which the LORD had commanded by[4] Moses, that the children of Israel should dwell in booths in the feast of the seventh month:[5]

15 And that they should [d]publish and proclaim in all their cities, and in Jerusalem, saying, Go forth unto the mount,[3] and fetch olive-branches,[e] and pine-branches, and myrtle-branches, and palm-branches, and branches of thick trees, to make booths, as it is written.

16 ¶ So the people went forth, and brought

18 Also day by day, from the first day unto the last day, he [m]read in the book of the law of God: and they kept the feast seven days; and on the eighth day was a solemn assembly, according unto the manner.

CHAPTER IX.

1 A solemn general fast and humiliation. 4 The Levites make a religious confession of God's goodness, and of the national sins.

NOW in the twenty and fourth day of [a]this month the children of Israel were assembled with [b]fasting, and with sackclothes, and [c]earth upon them.

2 And the seed of Israel [d]separated themselves from all strangers,[1] and stood and [e]confessed their sins, and the iniquities of their fathers.

3 And they stood up in their place, and [f]read in the book of the law of the LORD their God one fourth part of the day; and another fourth part they confessed, and [g]worshipped the LORD their God.[3]

4 ¶ Then stood up upon the [h]stairs,[4] of the Levites, Jeshua, and Bani, Kadmiel, Shebaniah, Bunni, Sherebiah, Bani, and Chenani, and [i]cried with a loud voice unto the LORD their God.

5 Then the Levites, Jeshua, and Kadmiel, Bani, Hashabniah, Sherebiah, Hodijah, Shebaniah, and Pethahiah, said, Stand up[5] and bless the LORD your God for ever and ever; and blessed be thy glorious name, which is exalted above all blessing and praise.

6 Thou, even thou, [k]art LORD alone: thou hast made heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their host, the earth, and all things that are therein, the seas, and all that is therein, and thou [l]preservest them all;[6] and the host of heaven worshippeth thee.

7 Thou art the LORD the God, who didst choose Abram, and broughtest him forth out of Ur of the Chaldees, and gavest him the name of Abraham;

8 And foundest his heart faithful before thee, and madest a covenant with him, to give fort with the gospel of Christ those that mourn. For the gospel explained and believed, and the consolations of Christ experienced, effectually rejoice the heart, and qualify for the performance of duty or resistance of enemies. And a sense of God's redeeming kindness powerfully instigates to charitable benevolence.

But how often the institutions of God's word are unknown to the most of professors! What a multitude of things will diligent searchers of the Scriptures find there, which they had forgotten or had never duly considered! It will convince them of many negligences and ignorances. Well spent are those hours which are occupied in earnest conversing with God by his word. And happy is the effect when such as have access to it speedily and cheerfully practise whatever they find therein commanded.

11 And thou didst divide the sea before them, so that they went through the midst of the sea on the dry land; and their persecutors thou threwest into the deeps, as a stone into the mighty waters.

12 Moreover, thou [v]leddest them in the day by a cloudy pillar, and in the night by a pillar of fire, to give them light in the way wherein they should go.

13 Thou[p] camest down also upon mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and [q]true laws, good statutes and commandments:

16 But they and our fathers [w]dealt proudly, and hardened their necks, and hearkened not to thy commandments,[4]

17 And refused to obey, neither were mindful of thy wonders that thou didst among them;[4] but hardened their necks, and in their rebellion appointed a captain to return to their bondage:[5] but thou art [x]a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and [y]forsookest them not.

18 Yea, when they had made them a molten calf, and said, This is thy God that brought thee up out of Egypt, and had wrought great provocations;

19 Yet[a] thou, in thy manifold mercies, forsookest them not in the wilderness: the pillar of the cloud departed not from them by day, to lead them in the way, neither the pillar of fire by night, to show them light, and the way wherein they should go.

20 Thou gavest also thy [b]good Spirit[6] to instruct them, and withheldest not thy manna from their mouth, and gavest them water for their thirst.

21 Yea, forty years didst thou sustain them in the wilderness, so that they [c]lacked nothing: their clothes waxed not old, and their feet swelled not.[7]

22 Moreover, thou [d]gavest them kingdoms and nations, and didst divide them into [3]corners: so they possessed the land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon, and the land of Og king of Bashan.

23 Their children also [e]multipliedst thou as the stars of heaven, and [f]broughtest them into the land concerning which thou hadst [g]promised to their fathers, that they should go in to possess it.

24 So the children went in and possessed the land, and thou [h]subduedst before them the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, and gavest them into their hands, with their kings, and the people of the land, that they might do with them as they would.

25 And they took [i]strong cities, and a fat land, and possessed houses full of all goods, wells[9] digged,[1] vineyards, and olive-yards, and fruit trees in abundance: so they did eat, and were filled, and became fat, and delighted themselves in thy great goodness.

26 Nevertheless they [k]were disobedient, and rebelled against thee, and [l]cast thy law behind their backs, and [m]slew thy prophets, which testified against them to turn [4]them to thee, and they wrought great provocations.

27 Therefore thou [n]deliveredst them into the hand of their enemies, who vexed[2] them: and in the time of their trouble, when they cried unto thee, thou heardest them from heaven; and, according to thy manifold mercies, thou gavest them [o]saviours, who saved them out of the hand of their enemies.

28 But after they had [p]rest, they [q]did evil again before thee;[3] therefore leftest thou [r]them in the hand of their enemies, so that they had the dominion over them: yet when they returned, and cried unto thee, thou heardest them from heaven; and [s]many times didst thou deliver them according to thy mercies;

29 And [t]testifiedst against them, that thou [u]mightest bring them again unto thy law: yet they dealt proudly, and hearkened not unto thy

3 In this beautiful psalm prayer there is a summary, brief but comprehensive, of the whole history contained in the Pentateuch. It begins with creation; it notices the call of Abram, and the leading events in the eventful history of his descendants down to the time of their settlement in Palestine. The prayer contains therefore a remarkable testimony to the authenticity and divine authority of the five books of Moses.—P.

5 Though the narrative (Num. 14, 4) merely expresses the wish for a captain to lead them back to slavery; when it is compared with this confession, the actual appointment is evident. mon attitude of both Jews and Samaritans at prayer is a half-kneeling half-sitting posture,—the knees upon the ground, but the body thrown back so as to rest upon the heels, the hands being crossed in front, and the eyes fixed in humility on the ground. At certain parts of their devotional exercises they suddenly rise from this posture and stand upon their feet, raising their voices at the same time in praise to God. A.]

REFLECTIONS.—It is a great mercy when God's word burdens men's consciences with a sense of their sins; and when reformation from sin and fasting for it go hand in hand. Those fasts are made profitable in which men's souls are afflicted for their sins, the bands of wickedness are loosed, intimate fellowship with God enjoyed, and in which God's goodness leads to repentance. O what multitudes of mercies to us and to our fathers may a diligent observer of providence discover! What gracious calls and covenants! What deliver-commandments, but sinned against thy judgments, (which [u]if a man do, he shall live in them;) and withdrew the shoulder, and hardened their neck, and would not hear:

30 Yet many years didst thou [a]forbear them, and [v]testifiedst against them by thy Spirit[4] in thy prophets; yet would they not give ear: therefore gavest thou them into the hand of the people of the lands.

31 Nevertheless, for thy [w]great mercies' sake thou didst not utterly consume them, nor forsake them; for thou art [x]a gracious and merciful God.

32 Now therefore, [b]our God, the great, the mighty, and the terrible God,[5] who keepest covenant and mercy, let not [c]all the trouble[6] seem little before thee that hath come upon us,[7] on our kings, on our princes, and on our priests, and on our prophets, and on our fathers, and on all thy people, since the [d]time of the kings of Assyria unto this day.

33 Howbeit thou art [e]just in all that is brought upon us; for thou hast done right, but we have done wickedly.

34 Neither have [f]our kings, our princes, our priests, nor our fathers, kept thy law, nor hearkened unto thy commandments and thy testimonies, wherewith thou didst testify against them.

35 For they [g]have not served thee in their kingdom,[8] and in thy great goodness that thou gavest them, and in the large and fat land which thou gavest before them; neither turned they from their wicked works.

36 Behold, we are [h]servants this day; and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers, to eat the fruit thereof, and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:

37 And it yieldeth much increase unto [i]the kings whom thou hast set over us because of our sins: also they [k]have dominion over our bodies, and over our cattle, at their pleasure,[9] and we are in great distress.

38 And [l]because of all this we make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, Levites, and priests, seal[1] unto it.[2]

28 ¶ And[h] the rest of the people, the priests, the Levites, the porters, the singers, the Nethinims, and all they that had separated themselves from the people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one [i]having knowledge, and having understanding;[4]

29 They [k]clave[5] to their brethren, their nobles, and entered into a curse, and into an oath, to walk in God's law, which was given by[6] Moses the servant of God, and to [l]observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our Lord, and his judgments and his statutes;

30 And that we would not give [m]our daughters unto the people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons:

31 And[n] if the people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the sabbath-day to sell, that we would not buy it of them on the sabbath, or on the holy-day; and that we would leave the [o]seventh year, and the [p]exaction of every[7] debt.[8]

32 Also we made [q]ordinances for us, to charge ourselves yearly with the third part of a shekel for the service of the house of our God;[9]

This annual payment of half a shekel was, therefore, not the Mosaic ordinance modified, but an ordinance of the nobles, Levites, and priests, and most probably sanctioned by some of the contemporary prophets.—C.

ance, direction, provision, and establishment! What giving of the law and of the promises! What warnings against and pardons of our sins! What amazing patience and long-suffering! What well-timed and well-adjusted corrections! And it is necessary to confess our fathers' iniquities as well as our own, or we make ourselves heirs to them, and shall share in the punishment of them. We must likewise search out the aggravations of our sins, and seek not to exculpate ourselves, but to justify God. O what a root of wickedness and woe is the pride of men's heart! Often by it we revolt from the free and honourable service of God into the basest slavery. But God's infinite mercy, and his constant adherence to his new relation with Christ, and in him with us, ought to encourage us to return to him under the deepest sense of our provocations. And solemn evangelical promises to God is peculiarly proper when we have notoriously departed from him, are sharply corrected by him, and earnestly desire to return to him.

REFLECTIONS.—It is honourable to be solemnly and publicly bound in the service of God; and especially is it becoming when they who have the lead in civil or sacred offices, or in solemn fasting, are correspondently forward in regular covenanting with God. But in all our covenants of duty a respect must be had to all God's commandments; and a peculiar guard be placed over those temptations which we have seen to be the occasion of other men's falls and to prove most dangerous to ourselves. They ought to be framed in direct opposition to that of which we have been guilty, or to which we are most likely to be tempted. And plainness and caution are indispensably necessary in the whole frame of them, that all who swear them, or are bound by them, may readily know what obligations they come under.

CHAPTER XI. REFLECTIONS.—The church of God, even on earth, ought to be a holy city. And since Jesus her great ruler and his apostles and prophets dwell in her, men ought cheerfully to fix their residence there. But, alas! regard to carnal advantages or sinful liberties, or fear of persecution or expense, often keep many from the church or cause of God! It [NEHEMIAH, xi: 1.]—"And the rulers of the people dwelt at Jerusalem." The things recorded in the eleventh chapter of Nehemiah are connected, by the calculation of Archbishop Usher, with B. C. 445. This was the year when the thirty years peace between Athens and Sparta was completed, and about the time, strange to say, that after the death of Cimon, negotiations for peace were opened between Athens and Persia, and an Athenian embassy under Callias was sent to Susa, capital of Persia. Thus we have the strange historical relationship of Greece and Palestine to Persia. About this time the Persian empire extended from India to Egypt, including the wide regions between the Black Sea, the Caucasus, the Caspian Sea, the Persian Gulf, the Indian Ocean, and the Arabian desert, and parts of Europe and Africa. We give a picture here of the Corinthian canal. The Ismuth of Corinth separated the ancient nations of Athens and Sparta.

1 The dates of the succession of the several high-priests after the time of Nehemiah cannot be precisely ascertained. But as Jaddua did not ascend the throne of Alexander of Macedon, about 100 years after Nehemiah's commission, this verse has been ascribed to a later writer than Nehemiah. There is, however, no necessity for this conjecture. Nehemiah might well have been cup-bearer to Artaxerxes at 25, and at the age of 125 or upwards have written, or caused to be written, this, as well as the foregoing genealogy. Thus is that Jaddua who is said by Josephus (Antiq. l. xi. c. 8) to have come out to meet Alexander on his march from the siege of Tyre to the destruction of the Persian empire, when Alexander declared he had seen in a dream, to which he had the allegiance as a guest, of God, whom he accompanied into the temple of Jehovah was under warrings; who showed him the prophecies of Daniel, by which he was encouraged to proceed upon his warlike enterprises; and who obtained from the triumphant conqueror many favours for the Jews which he denied to the Samaritans.—C.

reflects great honour on magistrates and ministers when they take special care of the chief stations in nations and churches, and readily show themselves patterns of self-denial and holy resolution. If God distinguish them with honour, they should distinguish themselves by zeal for his cause. And they who for God's glory forego their own advantage shall never lose their reward; while those who only commend duty but do not practise it shall be ashamed. How commodiously God disposes of men into their various habitations! In all situations, therefore, they ought to accommodate their circumstances to his honour; and always live as strangers and pilgrims on this earth, who have here no continuing city, but look for one to come, the builder and maker of which is God.

CHAPTER XII. REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those ministers, those saints, who are recorded in the Lamb's book of life! Notwithstanding the ravages of death, God seeks to keep up in his church a succession of servants and people, and show them distinguished honours. It is highly proper, even in a most solemn manner, to devolve the protection of our cities and all that we have upon our God, as reconciled through the sacrifice of Christ. And it is comely when all, even wives and children, share in the joys of the gospel, and are taught to sing God's high praise. How necessary, through the selfishness or unconcern of most professors, are fixed methods of collecting a proper maintenance for the ministers of the Lord! But it is highly becoming for them faithfully to attend to their work, and leave the supply of their needs to the care of their God.

22 ¶ The Levites, in the days of [a]Eliashib, Joiada, and Johanan, and Jaddua, were recorded chief of the fathers; also the priests, to the reign of [b]Darius the Persian.[2]

23 The sons of Levi, the chief of the fathers, were written in the book of the [c]Chronicles,[3] even until the days of Johanan the son of Eliashib.

24 And the chief of the Levites: [d]Hashabiah, Sherebiah, and Jeshua the son of Kadmiel, with their brethren over against them, to praise and to give thanks, [e]according to the commandment of David [f]the man of God, [g]ward over against ward.

25 Mattaniah,[h] and Bakbukiah, Obadiah, Meshullam, Talmon, Akkub, were porters, keeping the ward at the thresholds[4] of the gates.

26 These were in the days of Joiakim the son of Jeshua, the son of Jozadak, and in the days of Nehemiah the governor, and of Ezra the priest, the scribe.

27 ¶ And at the [i]dedication of the wall[5] of Jerusalem they sought the Levites out of all their places, to bring them to Jerusalem, to keep the dedication with gladness, both [k]with thanksgivings, and with singing, with cymbals, psalteries, and with harps.

28 And the sons of the singers gathered themselves together, both out of the [l]plain country round about Jerusalem, and from the villages of [m]Netophathi;[6]

29 Also from the [n]house of Gilgal,[7] and out of the fields of [o]Geba and Azmaveth: for the singers had builded them [p]villages round about Jerusalem.

30 And the priests and the Levites [q]purified themselves, and purified the people, and the gates, and the wall.[8]

31 Then I brought up [r]the princes of Judah upon the wall, and appointed [s]two great companies of them that gave thanks, whereof one went on the right hand upon the wall toward the [t]dung-gate:[9]

32 And after them went Hoshaiah, and half of the princes of Judah,

33 And Azariah, Ezra, and Meshullam,

34 Judah, and Benjamin, and Shemaiah, and Jeremiah;

35 And certain of the priests' sons [u]with trumpets; namely, Zechariah the son of Jonathan, the son of Shemaiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Michaiah, the son of Zaccur, the son of Asaph;

36 And his brethren, Shemaiah, and Azarael, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethaneel, and Judah, Hanani, with the [v]musical instruments of David the man of God, and [w]Ezra the scribe before them.

37 And at the [x]fountain-gate, which was over against them, they went up by the [y]stairs[1] of the city of David, at the going up of the wall, above the house of David, even unto the [z]water-gate eastward.

38 And the other company of them that gave thanks went over against them, and I after them, and the half of the people upon the wall, from beyond the [a]tower of the furnaces, even unto the [b]broad wall;[2]

39 And from above the [c]gate of Ephraim, and above the [d]old gate, and above the [e]fish-gate, and the [f]tower of Hananeel, and the tower of Meah, even unto the sheep-gate; and they stood still in the [g]prison-gate.

40 So stood the [h]two companies of them that gave thanks in the house of God, and I, and the half of the rulers with me:

41 And the priests; Eliakim, Maaseiah, Miniamin, Michaiah, Elioenai, Zechariah, and Hananiah, with trumpets;

42 And Maaseiah, and Shemaiah, and Eleazar, and Uzzi, and Jehohanan, and Malchijah, and Elam, and Ezer: and the singers sang [3]loud, with Jezrahiah their overseer.

43 Also that day they [i]offered great sacrifices, and rejoiced; for God had made them rejoice with great joy: the wives also and the children rejoiced; so that the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off.

44 ¶ And at that time were some appointed over the [k]chambers for the treasures, for the offerings, for the first-fruits, and for the tithes, to gather into them, out of the fields of the cities, the portions [l]of the law for the priests and Levites: for Judah rejoiced[4] for the priests and for the Levites that waited.[5]

45 And both the singers and the porters kept the ward of their God,[6] and the ward of the purification, [m]according to the commandment of David, and of Solomon his son.

46 For in the days of David [n]and Asaph of old there were chief of the singers, and songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God.

47 And all Israel, in the days of Zerubbabel, and in the days of Nehemiah, [o]gave the portions of the singers and the porters, every day his portion: and they sanctified[7] holy things unto the Levites; [p]and the Levites sanctified them unto the children of Aaron.[8]

CHAPTER XIII. REFLECTIONS.—It is strange to observe how unacquainted with God's law many are who have daily access to study it! and while the common people are ready to comply with his mandates, often the principal leaders in the church are the most base and treacherous adherents to wickedness. But no dignity must plead exemption from rebuke. They who sin before all should be put to shame before all. The higher a man's station and the holier his office the more scandalous are his sins. Reformers have need therefore of great zeal, prudence, and fearlessness of man. But what vile robbery of God and wicked injury to the church is the withholding of ministers' dues from them! A scandalous maintenance makes a scandalous ministry. Few ministers are willing to serve Christ in hunger and nakedness, and amidst reproach, peril, and sword. Most are even ready to betake themselves to farming or merchandise, or like worldly cares, when they have scarcely a temptation to it: but when they first show themselves unworthy of their maintenance, no wonder the people grudge it. Sacred is God's claim to his holy Sabbath; and heinous their guilt who dare presumptuously to rob him of his property. Nobles, as well as others, ought to be

1 Upon the reading of the law separation is made from the mixed multitude. 4 Nehemiah at his return causeth the chambers to be cleansed. 10 He reformeth the offices in the house of God, 15 the violation of the sabbath, 23 and the marriages with strange wives.

ON that [1]day [a]they read in the book of Moses[2] in the audience[3] of the people; and therein was found written, [b]that the Ammonite and the Moabite should not come into the congregation of God for ever;[4]

2 Because they [c]met not the children of Israel with bread and with water, but [d]hired Balaam against them, that he should curse them: howbeit our God [e]turned the curse into a blessing.

3 Now it came to pass, when they [f]had heard the law, that they separated from Israel all the [g]mixed multitude.

4 ¶ And before this, [h]Eliashib the priest, having the oversight[5] of the chamber of the house of our God, was allied unto [i]Tobiah;[6]

5 And he had prepared for him [k]a great chamber, where aforetime they laid the meat-offerings, the frankincense, and the vessels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oil, (which was commanded to be given to the Levites, and the singers, and the porters,) and the offerings of the priests.

6 But in all this time [m]was not I at Jerusalem: for [n]in the two and thirtieth year of Artaxerxes king of Babylon[7] came I unto the king, and after certain days[8] obtained[9] I leave of the king.

7 And I came[1] to Jerusalem, and [o]understood of the evil that Eliashib did for Tobiah, in preparing him a chamber in the [p]courts of the house of God.

8 And it grieved me sore; therefore [q]I cast forth all the household-stuff of Tobiah out of the chamber.

9 Then I commanded, and they [r]cleansed the chambers; and thither brought I again the vessels of the house of God, with the meat-offering and the frankincense.

10 ¶ And I perceived that [s]the portions of the Levites had not been given them: for the Levites and the singers, that did the work, were fled every one [t]to his field.[2]

11 Then [u]contended I with the rulers, and said, [x]Why is the house of God forsaken? And I gathered them[3] together, and set them in their place.[4]

12 Then [y]brought all Judah the tithe of the corn, and the new wine, and the oil, unto the treasuries.[5]

13 And I made treasurers over the treasuries, Shelemiah the priest, and Zadok the scribe; and of the Levites, Pedaiah; and next to them[6] was Hanan the son of Zaccur, the son of Mattaniah; for they were counted [z]faithful; and their office was[7] to distribute unto their brethren.

14 Remember[a] me, O my God, concerning this, and wipe[8] not out my good deeds[9] that I have done for the house of my God, and for the offices[1] thereof.[2]

15 ¶ In those days saw I in Judah [b]some treading wine-presses on the sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the sabbath-day: and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals.

16 There dwelt [c]men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem.

17 Then I [d]contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath-day?

18 Did[e] not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath[3] upon Israel by profaning the sabbath.

19 And it came to pass, that, when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the sabbath, [f]I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the sabbath: and some of my [4]servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the sabbath-day.

20 So the merchants, and sellers of all kind of ware, lodged without Jerusalem once or twice.

21 Then I testified against them,[5] and said unto them, Why lodge ye about the wall?[6] if ye do so again, I will lay hands on you. From that time forth came they no more on the sabbath.

22 And I [g]commanded the Levites, [h]that they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates, to sanctify the sabbath-day. 'Remember me, O my God, concerning this also, and spare me according to the greatness[7] of thy mercy.

faithfully rebuked for their profanation of the Sabbath. And yet, alas! they are often either ringleaders in this sin, or connivers at such as are guilty. But magistrates ought to exert themselves in preventing open profanation of the Lord's-day. Though their laws, or the sanctions attending them, cannot convert souls, they may oblige vice to hide itself as ashamed. And did magistrates and ministers but faithfully concur in this matter according to God's law, much good might be done. Nations and churches quickly relapse into their former corruptions; and into none more readily than unhallowed connections in marriage. And none are off their hair,[3] and made them [t]swear by God, saying, Ye shall not give your daughters unto their sons, nor take their daughters unto your sons, or for yourselves.

26 Did not Solomon[4] king of Israel sin by these things? yet [o]among many nations was there no king like him, who was beloved of his God, and God made him king over all Israel: nevertheless[p] even him did outlandish women cause to sin.

27 Shall we then hearken unto you to do all[q] this great evil, to transgress against our God in marrying strange wives?

more daring in wickedness than unsanctified clergymen. But nothing more effectually entails misery on our offspring than profane marriages: and yet no commands of God, no warnings of Providence, are sufficient to restrain men. The sharpest rebukes, corrections, and brands of infamy, are necessary to check abominations which here once become fashionable. And it is a great mercy if, in critical conjunctures, a magistrate or minister is helped so to behave in his station, as that he may look up to God for a gracious reward.

THE BOOK OF ESTHER.

In the two preceding books we have seen God's marvellous preservation of those Jews who returned to their own country. In this we have an account of his marvellous preservation of those who continued in the eastern parts of the Persian empire. Particularly, (1) How God brought Esther to be queen, and Mordecai to be great at the Persian court, to prepare them to be instruments of the intended deliverance, ch. i. ii. vi. (2) Upon what provocation, and by what arts, Haman obtained an irrevocable order from the Persian king for the destruction of all the Jews, iii. (3) The great distress into which the publishing of this order cast the Jews, particularly Esther and Mordecai, iv. (4) The defeating of Haman's particular plot against Mordecai's life, v. vi. vii. (5) The defeating of his general plot against the Jewish nation, viii. ix. (6) The joyful commemoration and happy issue of the deliverance, ix. x. [The authorship of this book is not stated. That it was written by an eye-witness of the events which it records is evident. There is a vividness of description, a minuteness of detail, and an acquaintance with the internal arrangements of the royal palace, which prove that the writer must have lived in the court of the Persian monarch. The only man mentioned in the book itself who could have written it is Mordecai; and it is highly probable he was the author. Independent of its sacred character as a part of the canon of Scripture, Esther is highly valuable as affording a vivid picture of the plots and intrigues, the public policy and domestic economy, of the Persian court. It is singular that in the Septuagint version, and others made from it, this book appears in a different form. It has various interpolations, prefixed, interspersed, and appended; but all so woven in as to form a complete and consistent narrative. The additions to the canonical book must have been made at a comparatively early period. P.]

CHAPTER I. [Ver. 1. Three monarchs of this name are mentioned in the Bible:—1. The father of Darius the Mede, who is well known in history as Cyaxeres, the conqueror of Nineveh; and who began to reign in B.C. 634. 2. Ahasuerus, king of Persia, mentioned in Ezr. 4. 6; and who was the same as Cambyses. He began to reign in B.C. 529. 3. The Ahasuerus here spoken of, who has been identified with the Xerxes of classic historians. The traits of character described in this book accord well with those mentioned by Greek writers. He was a rash, unscrupulous, and sensual tyrant; easily influenced by passion, and thus open to the devices of crafty counsellors. It was in the third year of his reign he gave the grand feast to his nobles mentioned in ver. 3; and it was in the same year, probably at the very same time, he assembled his chief officers to deliberate on the invasion of Greece. P.]

Ver. 5. [Shushan, called by the Greeks Susa, was the ancient capital of Elam. It was captured by the Assyrians about B.C. 650. It was subsequently occupied by Cyrus, and was by him restored to Babylon. Daniel resided in it for a time, Da. viii. Under the Persian monarchy Shushan was a royal city, the king residing there for a portion of each year. Nehemiah was in Shushan when he heard of the desolation of Jerusalem, Ne. i. The site of the ancient capital is now marked by a number of large and desolate mounds, lying between the rivers Ulai, Da. 8. 2, and Dizful. The ruins cover an area nearly four miles in circuit.

PEDESTAL OF AGRIPPA, ATHENS—SHOWING ALSO THE TEMPLE OF THESEUS, STANDING WHEN AHASUERUS FOUGHT THE GREEKS IN THE BATTLE OF SALAMIS. [Esther, i:1.]—"Now it came to pass in the days of Ahasuerus (this is Ahasuerus which reigned from India even unto Ethiopia, over a hundred and seven and twenty provinces)." Ahasuerus is the name of the Persian king the Greeks knew as Xerxes, the latter being the Greek form of the word. The characters of the two kings as described by sacred and profane history correspond. Ahasuerus in the beginning of his reign organized an expedition for the purpose of subjugating Greece. The battle of Salamis, in which the Persians under Ahasuerus fought the Greeks, was in sight of the scene represented by the above picture. The Temple of Theseus which we see between the Pedestal of Agrippa on the left, and the stone wall on the right, was in all probability standing when this battle was fought. This temple was built in the fifth century, B. C., and is to-day the most perfect of the ancient buildings in Athens.

8 And the drinking was according to the law; none did [v]compel:[9] for so the king had appointed[1] to all the officers of his house, that they should do according to every man's pleasure.

9 Also Vashti the queen made a feast for the women[1] in the royal house which belonged to king Ahasuerus.

10 ¶ On the seventh day, when the heart of the king was [w]merry with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, [x]Harbona, Bigtha, and Abagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the seven [2]chamberlains[3] that served in the presence of Ahasuerus the king,

11 To bring Vashti the queen before the king with the crown-royal, to show the people and the princes her beauty; for she was fair to look on.[4]

12 But the queen Vashti refused[5] to come at the king's commandment by his chamberlains;[6] therefore was the king very wroth, and his anger burned in him.

13 ¶ Then the king said to the wise men, which knew the times, (for so was the king's manner toward all that knew law and judgment:

14 And the next unto him was Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena, and Memucan, the [y]seven princes of Persia and Media, which saw the king's face,[7] and which sat the first in the kingdom,)

15 What[z] shall we do unto the queen Vashti according to law, because she hath not performed the commandment of the king Ahasuerus by the chamberlains?

16 And Memucan[8] answered before the king and the princes, Vashti the queen hath not done wrong[a] to the king only, but also to all the princes, and to all the people that are in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus.

17 For this deed of the queen shall come abroad unto all women, so that they shall despise[b] their husbands in their eyes, when it shall be reported, The king Ahasuerus commanded Vashti the queen to be brought in before him, but she came not.

18 Likewise shall the ladies of Persia and Media say this day unto all the king's princes, which have heard of the deed of the queen. Thus shall there arise too much contempt[9] and wrath.[1]

1 Wherever there is an unnatural law or custom, it sooner or later punishes the author or observer. Such was the custom amongst the Persians of exposing their wives to the gaze of Bacchanalian revellers, and such our law of polygamy, which invariably establishes domestic tyranny, introduces jealousies and feuds, and slowly yet finally extirpates those classes whose riches enable them most extensively to follow their caprices, and indulge their passions. C.—The sense seems to be—'And henceforth the ladies of Persia and Media, who have heard of the act of the queen, will speak to their husbands the king's princes, with too much contempt and petulance.—P.

The Targum gives this interpretation:—'Every man shall rule in his own house and compel his wife to speak in the language of her husband and in the language of his people. It appears that the Persians when they married foreign wives permitted them to rule the harem as they thought proper, and to use in it their own language. 1 Out of the choice of virgins a queen is to be chosen. 5 Mordecai the nursing father of Esther. 8 Esther is preferred by Hegai before the rest. 12 The manner of purification, and going in to the king. 15 Esther best pleasing him, is made queen. 21 Mordecai discovering a treason, is recorded in the chronicles.

AFTER these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased, he [a]remembered Vashti,[1] and what she had done, and what was decreed against her.

2 Then said the king's [b]servants that ministered unto him, Let there be fair young virgins sought for the king:

REFLECTIONS.—Insatiable is the nature of covetousness and ambition, which gathers to itself all people and countries, yet is nothing nearer contentment. Yea, kingdoms, when once they are overgrown, are near the brink of decay and ruin. What vast expenses do many sacrifice to the idol of pride—expenses which might have relieved many helpless families. In what awful manner shall those heathens, who would urge none to

THEATRE OF BACCHUS DIONYSUS — WHERE ÆSCHYLUS BROUGHT OUT HIS PLAY REPRESENTING THE DEFEAT OF THE PERSIANS LED BY AHASUERUS, EIGHT YEARS AFTER THE BATTLE OF SALAMIS. [ESTHER, ii: 1.]—"After these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased, he remembered Vashti, and what she had done and what had been decreed against her." The theatre of Bacchus Dionysus is called the cradle of the dramatic art of Greece. Here is where the masterpieces of Æschylus, Sophocles, Euripides and Aristophanes were first brought before the Greeks. This theatre was frequently altered during its history, but when we see the above view we may know that we are looking at the very spot where the theatre always stood. Æschylus whose plays were acted here, fought against the Persian army led by Ahasuerus in the battle of Salamis. Eight years after this battle, his play, the "Persians," was performed in the theatre of Dionysus at Athens. The foundations of two sanctuaries of Dionysus have been excavated here, one of them dating from the time of the Persian wars. To the north and rising directly above this theatre is the Acropolis, and if one could have been standing on the top of the Acropolis when the battle of Salamis was fought he would have had a view of this decisive conflict between the Greeks and the Persians.

Esther,[1]) his uncle's daughter; for she had neither father nor mother, and the maid was fair and beautiful:[8] whom Mordecai (when her father and mother were dead) took for his own daughter.

8 ¶ So it came to pass, when the king's commandment and his decree was heard, and when many maidens were gathered together unto Shushan the palace, to the custody of Hegai,[m] that Esther was brought also unto the king's house,[9] to the custody of Hegai, keeper of the women.

9 And the maiden pleased him, and she obtained[n] kindness of him; and he speedily gave her her things for purification, with such things as belonged to her,[1] and seven maidens, which were meet to be given her, out of the king's house: and he preferred[2] her and her maids unto the best place of the house of the women.

10 Esther had not showed her people, nor her kindred:[3] for Mordecai had charged her that she [o]should not show it.

11 And Mordecai [p]walked every day before the court of the women's house, to know[4] how Esther did, and what should become of her.[5]

12 ¶ Now, when every maid's turn was come to go in to king Ahasuerus, after that she had been twelve months, according to the manner of the women, (for so were the days of their purifications accomplished, to wit, six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and with other things for the purifying of the women;)

13 Then thus came every maiden unto the king; whatsoever she desired was given her, to go with her out of the house of the women unto the king's house.

14 In the evening she went, and on the morrow she returned into the second house[6] of the women, to the custody of Shaashgaz the king's chamberlain, which kept the concubines: she came in unto the king no more, except the king delighted in her, and that she were called by name.

15 ¶ Now when the [q]turn of Esther, the daughter of Abihail, [r]the uncle of Mordecai, (who had taken her for his daughter,) was come to go in unto the king, she [s]required nothing but what Hegai the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed: and Esther [t]obtained favour in the sight of all them that looked upon her.

16 So Esther was taken unto king Ahasuerus, into his house-royal, in the [u]tenth month, (which is the month Tebeth,) in the seventh year of his reign.[6]

17 And the king loved Esther above all the women, and she obtained grace and [7]favour [x]in his sight more than all the virgins; so that he [y]set the royal crown upon her head, and made her queen instead of Vashti.

18 Then the king [z]made a great feast [a]unto all his princes and his servants, even Esther's feast; and he made a [8]release[9] to the provinces, and [b]gave gifts, according to the state of the king.

19 And when the virgins were gathered together the second time,[1] then Mordecai sat in the king's[2] gate.[3]

20 Esther had [c]not yet showed her kindred nor her people, as Mordecai had charged her: for Esther did the commandment of Mordecai, like as when she was brought up with him.

21 ¶ In those days, (while Mordecai sat in the king's gate,) two of the king's chamberlains, [d]Bigthan and Teresh, of those which kept the door,[4] were [e]wroth, and sought to lay hand on the king Ahasuerus.

22 And the thing was [f]known to Mordecai, who told it unto Esther the queen; and Esther certified the king thereof in [g]Mordecai's name.

23 And when inquisition was made of the matter, it was found out; therefore they were

This was the name of every one that was taken from among the virgins (who had a separate house for themselves), and conducted to the king's bedchamber, having passed a night, she returned no more to the virgins' apartments, but was the next morning received into the house of the concubines, and there treated in the state and port of one of the king's wives; for such they were accounted. 6 The divorce of Vashti took place in the third year of Ahasuerus, and Esther's accession four years after. Humiliated as a soldier, it was quite characteristic of an eastern despot to crown his cares in revelry and licentiousness. In the third year of his reign he dethroned and divorced Vashti; from that time till the seventh year he had been unnerved by war, and had no time to think of domestic matters.—P.

drink, rise up in judgment against those professed Christians who send round their healths, their toasts, and send round sin and death along with them! Yea, ordinarily hard drinking, however unforced, issues in the misery or shame of those who occasioned it. If persons be once intoxicated with liquor, how imprudent their conduct! they are ready to dishonour themselves or their nearest relations, and to require what cannot be decently granted. And when pride meets with pride the issue is contention and ruin. It is easier to govern a kingdom than to rule our own proud spirit. But especially unhappy are those contentions between married persons which happen before company. The bad consequences of them may never be cured. It is indeed dangerous for kingdoms to indulge disobedience in the wives of rulers; but death or divorce ought to be the last means used to prevent it. Nor ought even the general welfare of kingdoms to be founded in injustice to particulars. But O the wisdom and power of God! he makes all the follies and wickedness, as well as the counsels of mankind, to work for his own glory and the good of his church and people.

CHAPTER II. REFLECTIONS.—What is done in haste and passion issues in bitter repentance and grief. And what odd shifts crafty courtiers will take to avoid coming under the power of a female whom they have injured. Yea, men will practise the greatest extravagance and wickedness to gratify their fleshly lusts. Surely we may here observe the need there was of the gospel, in order to reduce men to the observance even of the plainest laws of nature: and at the same time we discern the wisdom of God in carrying on his wise and holy designs by means of the most simple methods. What care he takes of orphans and fatherless! And great is the care which men ought to take of them. Yea, it is comely when near relations have a tender and fixed regard for one another. Great prudence is sometimes necessary to enable us to discern what truths may be told, and what concealed, without bordering on falsehood. And the guardians of virgins ought to take the greatest care of them, especially if they are brought into slippery and dangerous situations. How strangely God brings treasonable plots to light! And it is an advantage for courts to have faithful attendants; and very honourable to risk our own life for the sake of our sovereign, even when we have no prospect of reward.

CHAPTER III. REFLECTIONS.—The very worst of men are often exalted to the highest honours: and exalted too to render their shame and ruin in the end the more conspicuous and dreadful. Often the cringing complaisance of others lays a snare for the truly godly. And there is need therefore of strong faith and ardent zeal to make us take a singular course at the hazard of all that is dear to us in this world. But no consideration must influence us to that which is evil. Of what intolerable pride, insatiable cruelty, and deep-rooted antipathy to the people of God are some men possessed! And often courtiers mark out the worthiest of the subjects as the objects of their resentments. The people of God are ordinarily loaded with the vilest calumnies in order to encompass their ruin. And pride, malice, and revenge, met together, stick at nothing to obtain their own ends. Some men are very lavish of their money in the service of the devil, who would be absolute churls in the service of God. And crafty courtiers often make princes believe what is for their unspeakable hurt to be for their inexpressible advantage. But miserable is the state of nations when flattering sycophants can sway the sovereign to everything horrid at their pleasure. And it is absurd for princes or others to riot in mirth and pleasure when the church is in danger and the public perplexed. But there is no counsel nor device effectual against the Lord. Even Haman's appeal to the lot for marking out a lucky day for the destruction of the PRISON OF SOCRATES, ATHENS—WHERE SOCRATES, BORN FIVE YEARS AFTER THE BATTLE OF SALAMIS, WAS POISONED BY HIS COUNTRYMEN. [Esther, iii:1.]—Socrates was born about five years after the battle of Salamis. He is regarded as the greatest spirit of the pagan world. He was born at the time when Grecian civilization had reached its highest point of splendor. The high civilization to which the Greeks attained at the time Socrates was born is thought to have been due to the triumph which the Greeks, as representing western civilization, won over the Persians, representing the civilization of the east. The armies of the east that aroused and regenerated the Greeks were led by Ahasuerus, the king mentioned in the first verse of the third chapter of Esther. We give above a picture of the prison of Socrates, in sight of the Acropolis and the Pnyx, and of the neighborhood of the battle where the Greeks fought the Persians under Ahasuerus. The poet, Shelly, called Socrates the Jesus Christ of Greece.

CHAPTER III.

1 Haman, advanced by the king, and despised by Mordecai, seeketh revenge upon all the Jews. 7 He casteth lots. 8 He obtaineth by calumniation a decree of the king to put the Jews to death.

AFTER these things did king Ahasuerus promote[a] Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, and advanced him, and set his seat above all the princes that were with him.

2 And all the king's servants, that were in the king's gate, bowed, and reverenced Haman: for the king had so commanded concerning him: but Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence.[1]

3 Then the king's servants, which were in the king's gate, said unto Mordecai, Why transgressest thou the king's commandment?

4 Now it came to pass, when they spake daily unto him, and he hearkened not unto them, that they told Haman, to see whether Mordecai's matters would stand: for he had told them that he was a Jew.[2]

5 And when Haman saw that Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence, then was Haman full of wrath.

6 And he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone; for they had showed him the people of Mordecai: wherefore Haman sought to destroy all the Jews[3] that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai.

7 ¶ In the first month, (that is, the month Nisan,) in the twelfth year of king Ahasuerus, they cast [b]Pur, that is, the lot,[4] before Haman from day to day, and from month to month, to the twelfth month, that is, the month Adar.

8 ¶ And Haman said unto king Ahasuerus, There is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the people in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and their laws are diverse from all people; neither keep they the king's laws: therefore it is not[5] for the king's profit to suffer them.

9 If it please the king, let it be written that they may be destroyed;[6] and I will pay[7] ten thousand talents of silver to the hands of those that have the charge of the business, to bring it into the king's treasuries.[8]

10 And the king took his ring from his hand, and gave it unto Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, the Jews' [c]enemy.

11 And the king said unto Haman, The silver is given to thee, the people also, to do with them as[d] it seemeth good to thee.

12 Then were the king's [e]scribes called on

CHAP. III.

[a] Ps. 12.8. Mal. 3.15. Pr. 29.2.

[1] The most probable explanation of this is, that Haman was an Amalekite, and therefore sworn to do homage or show respect in any way to one of that hated nation. Possibly also Mordecai saw the way and traitorous heart of the powerful but unscrupulous adviser. The sequel shows that Haman's boasted loyal regard and devotion to the king was assumed for purposes of personal aggrandizement.—F.

[2] Agag was the common name of the kings of Amalek, with whom Israel was commanded to have no peace. Nothing can account for the refusal of Mordecai to do an act of ordinary courtesy to his superior, but the idea that he judged himself thereby contravening a command*ment* of God. He recollected how Saul his kinsman had suffered for sparing the wicked Agag;—he dreaded he might suffer for bowing to his equally wicked descendant.—C.

[3] Every single evil passion passes immediately into attempt when temptation offers. Haman appears to have been merely proud, instantly he becomes unmeasurably cruel—he was offended by the neglect of one man, whom his pride disdains to punish; but in revenge of the imaginary insult his cruelty enacts the destruction of a whole nation.—C.

[4] ch. 9.24. Eze. 21.21. He tried to fix upon a lucky day for his project.

[4] The casting of lots to find out fortunate months and days, and even hours, is still all-prevalent in Persia. The king maintains an astrologer for this superstitious purpose. European almanacs were formerly filled with such vain but too successful impositions upon credulity, and even yet there are those who prefer one month or one day of the week to another for special undertakings. All this is a departure from God that, rightly considered, amounts to idolatry. The word and Spirit of God, and a conscience void of offence, are the only oracles a true believer dares or requires to consult.—C.

[8] It is not necessary to conclude that this was all the argument Haman employed to deceive the king, but merely the substance of it. It amounts to a charge of rebellion against the Jews, and a lure to the king's covetousness by their extirpation. The offer amounts to above two millions of our money, but was not to come out of Haman's private property, as appears from ver. 11, but from the product of the plunder and confiscation arising from the execution of the decree. —C.

Many private and public documents still continue to be so authenticated, and the keeper of the great seal is in Britain an officer of the very highest rank. C.—The Persians have stones in their rings, which answer the purpose of seals. On these their names are frequently engraved, and the impression serves for their signature. It was probably for the purpose of sealing this writing that the king had previously given Haman his ring, by the use of which the sanction of the royal authority would be given to his bloody mandate.—A.

[1] Different countries have different modes of expressing the same thing, or attempting the same object. Any obnoxious proclamation in a free country would instantly be met by public assemblies and petitions, but under an eastern despotism the effort must be personal. Loud cries are so common in the streets of Asiatic towns that the efforts of Mordecai would not be considered more than the ordinary mode of attracting public attention.—C.

the thirteenth day of the first month, and there was written, according to all that Haman had commanded, unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language; [f]in the name of king Ahasuerus was it written, and sealed with the king's ring.[9]

13 And the letters were sent by [g]posts into all the king's provinces, to destroy, [h]to kill, and to cause to perish, all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in [i]one day, even upon the [k]thirteenth day of the twelfth month, (which is the month Adar,) and to take the spoil of them for a prey.

14 The copy of the writing, for a commandment to be given in every province, was published unto all people, that they should be ready against that day.

15 The posts went out, [l]being hastened by the king's commandment; and the decree was given in Shushan the palace. And the king and Haman [m]sat down to drink;[1] but the [n]city Shushan was perplexed.[2]

CHAPTER IV.

1 The great mourning of Mordecai and the Jews. 4 Esther, understanding it, sendeth to Mordecai, who showeth the cause, and adviseth her to intercede with the king for the nation. 10 She excusing herself, is threatened by Mordecai. 15 She appointing a fast, undertaketh the suit.

WHEN Mordecai perceived all that was done, Mordecai rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth with ashes, and went out into the midst of the city, and cried with a loud and a bitter cry;[1]

2 And came even before the king's gate: for none might enter into the king's gate clothed with sackcloth.

3 And in every province, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, there was great mourning among the Jews, and fasting, and weeping, and wailing; and many lay in sackcloth and ashes.

4 ¶ So Esther's maids and her [2]chamberlains came and told it her. Then was the queen exceedingly grieved;[3] and she sent raiment to clothe Mordecai, and to take away his sackcloth from him: but [a]he received it not.

5 Then called Esther for Hatach, one of the king's chamberlains, whom he had appointed to attend upon her,[4] and gave him a commandment to Mordecai, [b]to know what it was, and why it was.

6 So Hatach went [c]forth to Mordecai unto the street of the city, which was before the king's gate.

Jews, places it at so great a distance as to render their deliverance more glorious, and his own and their enemies' ruin the more ignominious.

CHAPTER IV. REFLECTIONS.—A good man severely feels and laments the heavy strokes of Providence, whilst with humble resignation he submits to the rod: and it is peculiarly grievous to him that others should suffer for his sake. How brave is it to espouse the cause of God when it seems desperate and sinking! But unhappy are those courts where all are so abandoned to gaiety, pleasure and mirth, that nothing serious or mournful dare enter. Yea, the pride or base fear of princes has introduced the most unaccountable laws, hurtful to themselves, families, and 7 And Mordecai told him [d]of all that had happened unto him, and of the sum of the money that Haman had promised to pay to the king's treasuries for the Jews,[5] to destroy them.

8 Also he gave him the copy of the writing[6] of the decree that was given at [e]Shushan to destroy them, to show it unto Esther, and to declare it unto her, and to [f]charge her that she should go in unto the king, to make [g]supplication unto him, and to make request before him for her people.

9 And Hatach came and [h]told Esther the words of Mordecai.

10 ¶ Again[i] Esther spake unto Hatach, and gave him commandment unto Mordecai;

11 All the king's servants, and the people of the king's provinces, do know, that whosoever, whether man or woman, shall come unto the king into [k]the inner court, who is not called, there is [l]one law of his to put him to death,[7] except such to [m]whom the king shall hold out the golden sceptre,[8] that he may live: but I have [n]not been called to come in unto the king these thirty days.

12 And they told to Mordecai Esther's words.

13 Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, Think [o]not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews.

14 For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then [p]shall there enlargement[9] and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether [q]thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?[10]

15 ¶ Then Esther bade them return Mordecai this answer,

16 Go, gather together all the Jews that are present[2] in Shushan, and fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink three days, night or day: I also and my maidens[3] will fast likewise; and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law; and if I perish, I perish.[4]

17 So Mordecai went[5] his way, and did according to all that Esther had commanded him.

CHAPTER V.

1 Esther, adventuring on the king's favour, obtaineth the grace of the golden sceptre, and inviteth the king and Haman to a banquet. 6 She, being encouraged by the king to name her suit, inviteth them to another banquet the next day. 9 Haman, proud of his advancement, repineth at the contempt of Mordecai. 14 By the advice of his wife and friends he prepareth for him a gallows.

NOW it came to pass on [a]the third day, that Esther [b]put on her royal apparel, and stood in the [c]inner court[1] of the king's house, over against the king's house: and the king sat upon his royal throne in the royal house, over against the gate of the house.

2 And it was [d]so, when the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, that she obtained favour in his sight: and the king [e]held out to Esther the golden sceptre that was in his hand. So Esther drew near, and touched the top of the sceptre.

3 Then said the king unto her, [f]What wilt thou, queen Esther? and what is thy request? it shall be even given thee to the half of the kingdom.[2]

4 And Esther [g]answered, If it seem good unto the king, let the king and Haman come this day unto the [h]banquet that I have prepared for him.

5 Then the king said, Cause Haman to make haste, that he may do as Esther hath said. So the king and Haman came to the banquet that Esther had prepared.

6 ¶ And the king said unto Esther at the banquet of wine, [i]What is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? even to the half of the kingdom it shall be performed.

7 Then [k]answered Esther, and said, My petition and my request is;

8 If I have found favour in the sight of the king, and if it please the king to grant my petition, and to perform[3] my request, let the king and Haman come to the banquet that I shall prepare for them, and I will do [l]to-morrow as the king hath said.[4]

9 ¶ Then went Haman forth that day [m]joyful and with a glad heart: but when Haman saw Mordecai in the king's gate, that he [n]stood not up, nor moved for him, he was [o]full of indignation against Mordecai.

10 Nevertheless Haman [p]refrained himself: and when he came home, he sent and [q]called for his friends, and [r]Zeresh his wife.

11 And [s]Haman told them of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, and all the things wherein the king had promoted him, and how he had advanced him above the princes and servants of the king.

12 Haman said moreover, Yea, Esther the queen did let no man come in with the king unto the banquet that she had prepared but myself; and [t]to-morrow am I invited unto her also with the king.

13 Yet [u]all this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate.[6]

The circumstance that Esther was seen by the king, she being in the court while he was seated in the hall, is explained by the fact that, in the Persian palaces, the principal apartment is open in front, so that the king, from the upper end of the hall, commands a view of the whole court.—C.

Here was a man, according to his own account, enjoying everything his heart could wish for—wealth, honour, domestic prosperity; and yet the bitter hatred he entertained to another troubled and distracted his mind. Haman was essentially a bad man. He was vain, ambitious, cruel, and unscrupulous. To gratify his private feelings he would stop at no crime. Mordecai had from the first formed a true estimate of him.—P.

subjects. But how friendly is it when all the members of Christ, however great, sympathize with one another in their distress! God sometimes permits the most discouraging circumstance to exercise the faith and brighten the crown of the redeemed. And it is necessary to consider well the ends of Providence in putting us into our stations, and to labour to let slip no opportunity of answering them. If we have faith to trust in God he will never fail us. But if through unbelief we decline the path of duty, we may expect the danger which we sinfully decline. In times of great distress, solemn fasting and supplication to God are leading means of deliverance. And such as are confined ought to join in the work as well as the attenders in public. In all our distresses there is a throne of grace open and a God who heareth prayer. When we are truly humbled under our sins, we may hope that God will deliver us from our afflictions. And while we desire the prayers of others, let us never forget to be importunate for ourselves. And having by the prayers of faith committed our way to the Lord, we may, with the greatest courage and resolution, venture on the most dangerous work to which in providence we have a call.

14 ¶ Then said [u]Zeresh his wife and all his friends unto him, Let a gallows be made of fifty cubits high, and to-morrow speak thou unto the king that Mordecai may be hanged thereon: then [x]go thou in merrily with the king unto the banquet. And the thing pleased Haman; and [y]he caused the gallows to be made.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Ahasuerus, hearing read in the chronicles the good service done by Mordecai, taketh care for his reward. 4 Haman, coming to sue that Mordecai might be hanged, unawares giveth counsel that he might do him honour. 12 Complaining of his misfortune, his friends foretell him of his fall.

ON that night could not the king sleep;[1] [a]and he commanded to bring the book of records of the chronicles;[2] and they were read before the king.[3]

2 And it was found written, That Mordecai had told of Bigthana and Teresh, two of the king's chamberlains, the keepers of the door, who sought to lay hand on the king Ahasuerus.

3 And the king said, What honour and dignity hath been done to Mordecai for this? Then said the king's servants that ministered unto him, There is nothing done for him.

4 ¶ And the king said, Who is in the court? (Now Haman was come into the outward court of the king's house, to speak unto the king to hang Mordecai on the gallows that he had prepared for him.)[4]

5 And the king's servants said unto him, Behold, Haman standeth in the court. And the king said, Let him come in.

6 So Haman came in. And the king said unto him, What shall be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honour? (Now Haman [c]thought in his heart, To whom would the king delight to do honour more than to myself?)

1 Heb. the king's sleep fled away.

2 These chronicles were written in verse, and would therefore form an embellished narrative, well suited to amuse the sleepless king. The famous Persian poem of Ferdousy is nothing but such a chronicle of events from the creation till the tenth century. Similar poetic records may be found in all countries emerging from barbarism; and, in Persia, they continue down till the present day.—C.

3 We have here a key to Esther's postponement of her request. She was guided from first to last by divine wisdom. She may not herself have been fully conscious of it; yet still she was an instrument in God's hands. Matters were not yet ripe for action. The gallows had not been erected. Mordecai's loyalty and devotion had not been fully developed.—P.

4 What a blessing is a government where liberty, and life, and death stand not in the will of any man, but solely in the law, openly administered, and deciding upon public evidence, not upon private insinuation! Haman, without a proof of crime, had obtained sentence of death against a nation, and now by a single writ expects the immediate execution of Mordecai! Yet, in lands of law and liberty, let it never be forgotten, that every nation was at one period of its history despotically governed, and that to the light of Christianity is due all the real liberties that any nation has established and enjoyed.—C.

9 This 'crown-royal' was most probably some regal ornament for the head of the horse, not of the man. To put the crown upon his own head, even Haman, in all his pride, would scarcely have dared to propose. This custom of crowning a horse led in state still prevails in Ethiopia.—C.

7 And Haman [b]answered the king, For the man whom the king delighteth to honour,[5]

8 Let the royal apparel be brought[6] which the king useth[7] to wear,[8] and the [e]horse that the king rideth upon, and the crown-royal which is set upon his head;[9]

9 And let this apparel and horse be delivered to the hand of one of the king's most noble princes, that they may array the man withal whom the king delighteth to honour, and bring him on horseback[1] through the street of the city, and [d]proclaim before him, Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

10 Then the king said to Haman, [e]Make haste, and take the apparel and the horse, as thou hast said, and do even so to Mordecai the Jew, that sitteth at the king's gate: let nothing fail[2] of all that thou hast spoken.

11 Then [f]took Haman the apparel and the horse, and arrayed Mordecai, and brought him on horseback through the street of the city, and proclaimed before him, Thus shall it be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honour.[3]

12 ¶ And Mordecai [g]came again to the king's gate: but Haman hasted to his house mourning, and [h]having his head covered.

13 And Haman told Zeresh his [i]wife and all his friends every thing that had befallen him. Then said his [k]wise men and Zeresh his wife unto him, [l]If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, before whom thou hast begun to fall, thou shalt not prevail against him, but shalt surely fall before him.[4]

14 And while they were yet talking with him, came the king's chamberlains, and [m]hasted to bring Haman unto the banquet that Esther had prepared.

CHAPTER V. REFLECTIONS.—Prudence and courage must be joined to our prayers if we would succeed in any work for God. And a plentiful harvest of joy shall they reap who sow in the tears and mourning of faith. They who venture all for God shall find him able to do for them unspeakably better than their most sanguine hopes. While himself is easily accessible, casting out none that come to him, he can dispose the spirits of the haughtiest princes to whatever he pleases. But in our dealing with great men, it is best first to conciliate their affection before we ask important favours: and to watch the favourable moment is the best way to insure success. They who are careful to please God need neither fear nor care who are displeased with them for so doing. But pitiful and miserable is the condition of the proud. Easily they are puffed up with that which is intended to ruin them, and unmeasurably fretted at that which could never hurt them. Their pride and discontentment create them numberless miseries, and rob them of the enjoyment of their mercies: and the curse of God is often visible upon them in the midst of all their great possessions. But it is unhappy for proud spirits to have rash and imprudent advisers, who spur them on to the most debasing resentment. And base are those minds which promote revenge, even the lowest, with alertness and pleasure.

CHAPTER VI. REFLECTIONS.—How unsearchable are God's judgments, and his ways past finding out! By the most insignificant trifles can he promote his most important purposes. Happy are those who have the sleep of his beloved granted to them: or if their eyes be debarred from rest, can employ their minds in sweet surveys of the annals of redeeming love! The natural law of gratitude, even towards the meanest inferior, is binding upon the conscience. But how little notice earthly princes take of their mean servants and friends, when they often know not whether their important services have been rewarded or not! Nay, often the greatest merits and best services are least rewarded at courts. That modesty and self-denial which are of so great price before God, hinder men's preferment in this world; whilst forward flatterers thrust themselves into honours. The longer we have neglected to recompense favours done us we should the more abundantly reward them at last. But pride and ambition are never satisfied with the most accumulated honours. And it is dangerous for courtiers to have too high an opinion of their own merits, and of their interest with princes, or to presume on more than they really have. Kings ought always to delight in honouring the deserving, and encouraging those that do well. But how confounding is it to proud spirits to be obliged to confer that honour on the distinguished objects of their hatred and contempt, which they had carved out for themselves! Miserable comforters in a day of distress are those who flatter us in the time of our prosperity; and it is in vain to fight against those whom God protects. But none hurry faster downwards than falling favourites at courts. And sad presages of approaching ruin often seize upon sinners before destruction comes upon them to the uttermost.

CHAPTER VII. REFLECTIONS.—God often strangely animates his enemies in power to encourage his people's requests for favour. And a tender regard for natural life at stake makes us very earnest in supplicating deliverance: and surely then we ought to be much more earnest for the life of our own and others' souls. The most ruinous and wicked projects are often laid to gratify men's sinful lusts. And though persecution of the people of God is not only impious, but even exceedingly detrimental to the state, where nothing can repair the loss of pious and industrious subjects, how often is it practised! Men are ready often to startle at the mention of that very wickedness to which they had given their consent! And sin generally becomes vexatious and burdensome at the last. That is often done thoughtlessly with which, on a moment's cool reflection, we cannot but be shocked. Many seem amazed at the wickedness of others, who overlook the same, or a greater, in themselves. And accomplices in guilt quickly become the bitterest enemies one to another. How dejected in adversity are those who were most proud in prosperity! The most insolent enemies of God's people may quickly be glad to bow at their feet. And every motion creates suspicion against a man whose character is once proved infamous and abandoned. All hands will eagerly help down with falling courtiers; and the ruin of the wicked comes upon them in an instant! Yea, the enemies of God's church are astonishingly taken in their own craftiness, and have their pride brought down, their persecution punished, and their mischief returned on their head.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Esther, entertaining the king and Haman, maketh suit for her own life and her people's. 5 She accuseth Haman. 7 The king in his anger, being told of the gallows which Haman had made for Mordecai, causeth him to be hanged thereon.

SO the king and Haman came to banquet[1] with Esther the queen.

2 And the king said again unto Esther on the second day, at the banquet of wine, [a]What is thy petition, queen Esther? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? and it shall be performed, even to the half of the kingdom.

3 Then Esther the queen answered and said, If I have found favour in thy sight, O king, and if it please the king, [b]let my life be given me at my petition, and my people at my request.

4 For we are [c]sold, I and my people, to be destroyed, to be slain, and to perish.[2] but if we had been sold for [d]bond-men and bond-women, I had held my tongue, although the enemy could not countervail the king's [e]damage.[3]

5 ¶ Then the king Ahasuerus answered and said unto Esther the queen, Who is he, and where is he, that durst presume in his heart[4] to do so?

6 And Esther [f]said, The adversary[5] and enemy is this wicked Haman. Then Haman was [g]afraid before the king and the queen.

7 ¶ And the king, arising from the banquet of wine in his [h]wrath, went into the palace-garden: and Haman [i]stood up to make request for his life to Esther the queen; [k]for he saw that there was evil determined against him by the king.[6]

8 Then the king returned out of the palace-garden into the place of the banquet of wine; and Haman was [l]fallen upon the bed whereon Esther was.[7] Then said the king, Will he force the queen also before me in the house? As the word went out of the king's mouth, they covered[m] Haman's face.[8]

9 And [n]Harbonah, one of the chamberlains, said before the king, Behold also, the gallows[9] fifty cubits high, which Haman had made for Mordecai, who [o]had spoken good for the king, standeth in the house of Haman. Then the king said, Hang him thereon.

10 So they [p]hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. Then was the king's wrath [q]pacified.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Mordecai is advanced. 3 Esther maketh suit to reverse Haman's letters against the Jews. 7 Ahasuerus granteth to the Jews to defend themselves. 15 Mordecai's honour, and the Jews' joy.

ON that day [a]did the king Ahasuerus give the house of Haman, the Jews' enemy, unto Esther the queen: and Mordecai [b]came before the king; for Esther had told what he was unto her.

2 And the king took off [c]his ring, which he had taken from Haman, and gave it unto Mordecai. And Esther [d]set Mordecai over the house of Haman.

3 ¶ And Esther spake yet again before the king, and [e]fell down at his feet, and besought him with tears[1] to put away the [f]mischief of Haman the Agagite, and his device that he had devised against the Jews.[2]

4 Then the king [g]held out the golden sceptre toward Esther. So Esther arose, and stood before the king,

5 And said, If it please the king, and if I have found favour in his sight, and the thing seem right before the king, and I be [h]pleasing in his eyes, let it be written to reverse [i]the letters devised by Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, which he wrote[3] to destroy the Jews which are in all the king's provinces:

6 For how can I [k]endure to see the evil that shall come unto my people? or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?

7 ¶ Then the king Ahasuerus said unto Esther the queen, and to Mordecai the Jew, Behold, [l]I have given Esther the house of Haman, and him they have hanged upon the gallows, because he laid his hand upon the Jews.

8 Write ye also for the Jews, as it liketh you, [m]in the king's name, and seal it with the king's ring: for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, [n]may no man reverse.[4]

9 Then were the king's scribes called at that time in the [o]third month, (that is, the month Sivan,) on the three and twentieth day thereof, and it was written (according to all that Mordecai commanded) [p]unto the Jews, and to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces which are from India unto Ethiopia, an hundred twenty and seven provinces, unto every province according to the writing thereof, and unto every people after their language, and to the Jews according to their writing, and according to their language.

10 And he wrote [q]in the king Ahasuerus' name, and sealed it with the king's ring; and sent letters by post on [r]horseback, and riders on mules, camels, and young dromedaries:

11 Wherein the king granted the Jews which were in every city to gather themselves together, and [s]to stand for their life, to destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish, all the power of the

2 In peaceful and settled times such a cruel device as that of Haman against the Jews seems scarcely credible, or at least an attempt without parallel. The plot against the Huguenots, and the massacre of St. Bartholomew's, in France, can, however, furnish an example of similar devising and cruelty, where the victims were taken totally unawares, and where the king, so far from repenting, like Ahasuerus, of his rash decree, himself took part in the murder of his subjects.—C.

4 It seems that according to the principles of Median and Persian jurisprudence, a decree, once signed, could not be reversed: full power, however, is given to Esther and Mordecai to devise any means by which Haman's decree may be counteracted. C.—Whatever had passed the royal signet could never be revoked; and this was the reason why the king was obliged not to reverse, but to give a contradictory decree—that if the Jews, pursuant to the first decree, were assaulted, they might legitimately, by virtue of the second, defend themselves, slay their enemies, and even take the spoil. The maxim in our government that no act can be so framed but that the same authority which enacted it may repeal it, is better suited to the state of human nature; for no human wisdom can foresee all the effects of any regulation till experience has evinced them. Nothing, indeed, could more strikingly show the absurdity of this law of the Persians than that the king should now be forced to allow a civil war.—J.

CHAPTER VIII. REFLECTIONS.—This world is but a changing scene. The favour even of kings is precarious; and riches make to themselves wings and fly away. Men often lay up wealth, little thinking to whom it shall at last pertain, whether to a friend or a foe. The ten thousand talents which were lately offered as the price of the Jews' blood now become the property of them whose lives were marked out for a prey. How just is the judgment of God; and with what care should we make sure those riches which will not be left behind, but will go with us into another world! Surely then the lives and interests of God's people ought to lie the nearest to our hearts! And no advancement must make us to forget our poor relations. It is proper to present our petitions to God or men with earnestness, and attended with the utmost modesty. Though we have justice on our side it becomes us, as inferiors, to use entreaty. Men's mischief often sur-people and province that would assault them,[5] both little ones and women, and to [t]take the spoil of them for a prey, 12 Upon [u]one day, in all the provinces of king Ahasuerus, namely, upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar.

13 The copy of the writing, for a commandment to be given in every province, was published[6] unto all people, and that the Jews should be ready against that day to [x]avenge themselves on their enemies.

14 So the post[s][7] that rode upon mules and camels went out being [y]hastened and pressed on by the king's commandment. And the decree was given at Shushan the palace.

15 ¶ And Mordecai went out from the presence of the king in [z]royal apparel of blue[8] and white, and with a great crown of gold, and with a garment of fine linen and purple; and the city of Shushan [a]rejoiced and was glad.

16 The Jews had light, and gladness, and joy, and honour.

17 And in every province, and in every city, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, the Jews had joy and gladness, a feast and a good day. And many of the people of the land became Jews; for the fear of the Jews fell upon them.[9]

CHAPTER IX.

1 The Jews (the rulers, for fear of Mordecai, helping them) slay their enemies, with the ten sons of Haman. 12 Ahasuerus, at the request of Esther, granteth another day of slaughter, and causeth Haman's sons to be hanged. 20 The two days of Purim are made festival.

NOW, in the [a]twelfth month, (that is, the month Adar,) on the thirteenth day of the same, when the king's commandment and his decree drew near to be put in execution, in the day that the enemies of the Jews hoped to have power over them, (though it [b]was turned to the contrary, that the Jews had rule over them that hated them),

2 The Jews [c]gathered themselves together in their cities, throughout all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, to lay hand on such as sought their hurt:[1] and no man could withstand them; for [d]the fear of them fell upon all people.

3 And all the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and officers of the king,[e] helped[f] the Jews; because the fear of Mordecai fell upon them.

4 For Mordecai was great in the king's house, and his fame went out throughout all the provinces: for this man Mordecai [g]waxed greater and greater.

5 Could not the Jews have stood upon the defensive without this royal decree? No doubt they could. But then they would have become rebels, and so would have been prosecuted for a new crime. This decree of Ahasuerus rendered their self-defence lawful, while it must greatly have abated the courage of their enemies. A more unnatural mode of government cannot well be conceived, nor can we wonder that the empire was soon afterwards dismembered by a handful of Macedonians. —C.

He is said by the Greek writers to have established post-houses with relays of horses at proper distances; and that by causing them to travel both night and day, he astonished the ancient world by the rapidity of communication with all parts of his vast empire. Early European travellers were astonished to find similar posting establishments in the Mogul empire, having 10,000 post-houses, and 200,000 horses, and expediting despatches at the rate of 200 or 250 miles in a day. The origin of posting in Europe is generally ascribed to the university of Paris. (See Marco Polo, 2. 90).—C.

1 To the honour of the Jews it is recorded that they injured none but their assailants, in strict accordance with the terms of the decree, ch. 8. 11. C.—As the Jews were not charged with exceeding the limits assigned them in the king's edict, it may be concluded that they attacked none except such as appeared in arms against them. The 18th verse, indeed, seems plainly to indicate that they stood on the defensive. It is not unnatural to suppose that Haman had a great party throughout the empire who, enraged at his fall, would be unable to suppress their hatred against those who had been the occasion of it.—f.

1 History is found in books, the evidence of history generally in institutions. Independently, therefore, of the higher evidence of Scripture, it is always accompanied by such institutional evidence as no other history can furnish. This yearly festival, which the Jews still celebrate, gives witness to the history of this book as distinct and undeniable as if Esther, Mordecai, and Ahasuerus were to rise from the dead to confirm it.—f.

5 Thus the [z]Jews smote all their enemies with the stroke of the sword, and slaughter, and destruction, and did what they would[3] unto those that hated them.

6 And in Shushan the palace the Jews slew and destroyed five hundred men.

7 And Parshandatha, and Dalphon, and Aspatha,

8 And Poratha, and Adalia, and Aridatha,

9 And Parmashta, and Arisai, and Aridai, and Vajezatha,

10 The[h] ten sons of Haman the son of Hammedatha, the enemy of the Jews, slew they; but [i]on the spoil laid they not their [4]hand.

11 On that day the number of those that were slain in Shushan the palace was [5]brought before the king.

12 ¶ And the king said unto Esther the queen, The Jews have slain and destroyed five hundred men in Shushan[6] the palace, and the ten sons of Haman; what have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? now, [k]what is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee; or what is thy request further? and it shall be done.

13 Then said Esther, [l]If it please the king, let it be granted to the Jews which are in Shushan to do to-morrow also according unto this day's decree, and [m]let Haman's ten sons be hanged upon the gallows.

14 And the king commanded it so to be done: and the decree was given at Shushan; and they hanged Haman's ten sons.[7]

15 For the [n]Jews that were in Shushan gathered themselves together on the fourteenth day also of the month Adar, and slew three hundred men at Shushan: but [o]on the prey they laid not their hand.

16 But the other Jews that were in the king's provinces gathered themselves [8]together, and [p]stood for their lives, and had rest from their enemies, and slew of their foes seventy and five thousand (but they laid not their hands on the prey)

17 On the thirteenth day of the month Adar: and on the fourteenth day of the [9]same rested they, and made it a day [q]of feasting and gladness.

18 But the Jews that were at Shushan assembled together on the thirteenth day thereof, and on the fourteenth thereof; and on the fifteenth day of the same they rested, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.[1] vives them. They murder, even after their death, by the laws which they have made, the projects which they have set on foot, and the writings and sentiments which they have propagated. But absurd and entangling are those laws which have pride for their source and basis. And there is great need to hasten the relief when men's lives are in danger: for when we have done wrong we cannot too quickly prevent the mischievous consequences of it. God quickly turns his people's mourning into joy. And his alarming providences in their favour effectually determine others to join them.

CHAPTER IX. REFLECTIONS. — How strangely sinners are infatuated to their own destruction; and obstinate revenge is deaf to all admonition. Fight they will, though both the hand of God and men be lifted up against them! But great numbers are friends or enemies to the people of God, just as the smiles of great men wind about: and pitiful is the work which the wicked have in hand when the terrors of God and the terrors of great men concur to dismay them. We may make the boldest attempts when not only great men favour us but the great God fights for us. And it is glorious when, in the most desperate war, the laws of self-denial, humanity, and pity are strictly regarded. Never should the people 19 Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwalled towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar a day [r]of gladness and feasting, and a good day, and of sending portions one to another.

20 ¶ And Mordecai [s]wrote these things,[2] and sent letters unto all the Jews that were in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, both nigh and far,

21 To stablish this among them, that they shou[l]d[t] keep the fourteenth day of the month Ada[r], and the fifteenth day of the same, yearly,[3]

22 As[u] the days wherein the Jews rested from their enemies, and the month which was turned unto them from sorrow to joy, and from mourning into a good day; that they should make[v] them days of feasting and joy, and of sending portions[4] one to another, and gifts to the poor.

23 And the Jews undertook to do as they had begun, and as Mordecai had written unto them;

24 Because [w]Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, had devised against the Jews to destroy them, and had cast [x]Pur, (that is, the lot,) to consume[5] them, and to destroy them:

25 But [a]when Esther came before the king, he commanded by letters, that his wicked device, which he devised against the Jews, should return upon his own head, and that he and his sons should be hanged on the gallows.

26 Wherefore they called these days [b]Purim,[6] after the name of Pur:[7] therefore for all the words of this letter, and of that which they had seen concerning this matter, and which had come unto them,

27 The Jews ordained, and [c]took upon them, and upon their seed, and upon all such as joined themselves unto them, so as it should not fail,[8]

6 The way in which the feast of Purim is now kept by the Jews is as follows:—The 13th of Adar is kept as a fast, and is called the fast of Esther. It is a time of humiliation and prayer. At sunset the festival commences by a public service in the synagogue, after which the whole book of Esther is read from a special roll containing it alone. The passage containing the names of Haman and his sons (9.7-9) is read very rapidly, to indicate that they were hanged at once. In the MS. roll the names are placed underneath each other, commencing on the entire line, and the whole ten being on a page by themselves. On the morning of the 14th there is another public service in the synagogue, after which the roll of Esther is again read through as before. The rest of the festival is spent in feasting and rejoicing—too often in revelry and drunkenness.—P.

In some countries the feast is a species of carnival, on which the bounds of temperance are entirely overpast; and even where these boundaries are more respected, an extraordinary degree of indulgence is still conceded. of God appear selfish, worldly, or covetous. And if we receive signal mercies from God, our thankful returns ought to be quick and speedy: while they are yet fresh in our minds, and the impressions of them most sensible. Nor ought astonishing deliverances and their circumstances ever to be forgotten. Remembrance of such ought to encourage us in every subsequent distress. Yet there is great need to beware, lest what is well intended at first should by degrees become an occasion of wickedness. Nothing more purifies the heart and adorns religion than holy joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ. And nothing more pollutes the heart, and reproaches religion, than carnal mirth and sensual pleasure.

CHAPTER X. REFLECTIONS.—It is a great mercy in an arbitrary government, when the weakness or wickedness of the monarch is balanced by the good qualities of the minister of state. They only are truly great whose power and dignity are employed for the public good. But, alas! how unsubstantial the whole pomp, grandeur, and wealth of this world, which so soon pass away!

GENERAL REMARKS ON THE HISTORICAL BOOKS.

[It has been well observed by a recent writer that 'the Old Testament may be regarded from two points of view—the religious and the literary. It is needless here to enlarge on the disproportion between the value of the two, or to re-assert the truism of the uselessness for the highest ends of the most accurate knowledge of the literary history of the Holy Scriptures, and the most minute acquaintance with their criticism, unless we also employ the Scriptures for the purpose for which they were given by divine inspiration, and make them 'profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness.' But while we endeavour to keep both in their places, and especially not to exalt the lower at the expense of the higher, we must recognize the existence of the two characters borne by the Old Testament. We must not be afraid to acknowledge the undoubted fact that it is not merely a revelation of God—his being, his attributes, his will, his works, his ways; but also a national literature, and a collection of books of different characters—historical, prophetical, poetic, and didactic; of widely different dates, some perhaps misdated, by very diverse authors, and some perhaps wrongly assigned.' The notes and reflections attached to the text in this Bible have been written almost exclusively from the religious point of view. The divine origin and sacred character of the book has never been lost sight of. It has been treated, in fact, as a revelation from God rather than a work of human authorship. I now think it well to append a very few observations, from a purely literary stand-point, upon the origin, history, and character of the historical books, which, as arranged in our English version, conclude with Esther.

It is important, at the outset, to know exactly what is the meaning of the word canonical as applied to books of Scripture. The meaning of the term canon was primarily a 'cane:' then, technically, a 'measuring cane;' then, metaphorically, 'anything which serves to regulate other things.' Hence canonical books are those which form the divine rule of faith and practice—by which men determine what they are to believe, and what they are to do. In the primitive church, however, the word was not always employed in the same definite sense. By some it was used to designate those books which were publicly read in the churches; and as in some churches apocryphal books were permitted to be read, the term canonical was given to them. Thus originated the admission by the Church of Rome, and the Greek church, of certain uninspired writings into the canon of Scripture. But while the term canonical was thus somewhat vaguely used in the early church, and by the early fathers, it is most important to bear in mind that, during the first four centuries of our era, there existed no doubt or uncertainty as to the books which were inspired and of divine authority, as contradistinguished from those which were uninspired. The books of Maccabees, and a few others, are classed by some churches among the historical books of the Old Testament; but their inspiration was never admitted by the Jews, or by any Christian writer or church during the first three centuries. The Jewish canon of the Old Testament, which received the sanction of our Lord and his apostles, was identical with that of our present authorized version.

It is well to observe, however, that the arrangement of the books in the Jewish canon was different from ours. The Jews divided the Old Testament into three parts—the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms.

1. The Law included the five books of Moses—our Pentateuch in fact—and was usually written continuously upon one parchment roll, and called either 'The Law,' or 'The Book of the Law.'

2. The Prophets. Under this general name were comprehended two distinct classes of writings, which were again distinguished from each other by specific titles—(1) The Earlier Prophets, including only the historical books of Joshua, Judges, 1 and 2 Samuel, and 1 and 2 Kings; (2) The Later Prophets, including all those books of the Old Testament, with one exception, which are strictly prophetical, and which were classed under two heads, namely, (a) The Greater Prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel; (b) The Twelve Minor Prophets, from Hosea to Malachi. The general name Prophets was given to them because they contained a large portion of prophetic matter, and were written by men gifted with prophetic power.

3. The Psalms, or Writings, comprehended the remaining books, which were arranged under three heads—(1) The purely poetical, always written in Jewish MSS. with the poetical accentuation, including Job, Psalms, and Proverbs; (2) The Megilloth ('Rolls'), including Canticles, Lamentations, Ruth, Ecclesiastes, and Esther. In later times these five were appointed to be read on certain festival days. (3) The third division included Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and 1 and 2 Chronicles.

This threefold division of the Old Testament canon into Law, Prophets, and Psalms, appears to have been generally adopted immediately after the close of the canon, about the year B.C. 425. It is first mentioned in the prologue to the Greek translation of 'The Wisdom of Sirach,' which may be dated about B.C. 130. It is mentioned by Philo and Josephus, the latter giving a full list. It was universally known among the Jews in the time of our Lord; hence the vast importance of his words as recorded in Luke 24. 44: 'All things must be fulfilled, which were written in the Law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me.' In these words our Lord bears clear testimony to the prophetic character, and consequently to the plenary inspiration, of the whole of the Old Testament.

The enumeration of the books was not the same in the Jewish canon as in ours. The Talmud, for example, makes the total number of books in the Old Testament twenty-four; Josephus makes it twenty-two; we make thirty-nine. The Talmud arranges them as follows: Law, 5; Prophets, 8; Psalms, 11. This is done by counting 1 and 2 Samuel one, 1 and 2 Kings one, the twelve minor prophets one, 1 and 2 Chronicles one, Ezra and Nehemiah one. Josephus has the same plan, only he unites Ruth with Judges, and Lamentations with Jeremiah.

The arrangement of the books in our Bibles is widely different from that followed by the Jews, and is more in accordance with their character and subject-matter. Our arrangement is not modern. We find it in the Septuagint version, which was made in Egypt in the third century B.C. It was followed by Jerome in his translation, which is now well known as the Latin Vulgate. It was adopted by Luther and the Reformers. The general plan is a threefold division into historical, poetical, and prophetical. The first division embraces seventeen books, terminating with Esther; the second division five, terminating with Canticles; and the third division seventeen. Each of the two first divisions is arranged chronologically, and this is very important to the student who wishes to read them systematically. In the third division, however, the chronology is not adhered to; and the reader is apt to become confused when passing suddenly from Daniel, one of the latest, to Hosea, one of the earliest of the prophets; and again from Zephaniah, who prophesied during the reign of Josiah, to Haggai, who lived after the exile. It will be well to remember that in our Bibles the prophets are divided into two groups, the greater and the minor. The former group includes Daniel, and is arranged chronologically; the latter includes the twelve, and is also arranged with a near approach to chronological order.

After these general observations on the whole of the Old Testament canon, I shall now direct special attention to the first great division of our English Bible, which comprehends the Historical Books.

1. THE PENTATEUCH contains an outline of the history of the world from the creation till the death of Moses. History forms its groundwork. Wherever doctrines or moral precepts are introduced, they are connected with historic facts. As a history we may inquire, Who was its author? When was it written? and What were its sources; or, in other words, whence did its author derive his information?

The Pentateuch professes to have been written by Moses during the last forty years of his life. Such at least is the impression which a thoughtful perusal would leave on any unprejudiced mind. In Ex. 17. 14, it is recorded that the Lord commanded Moses to write an account of the war with Amalek 'in the Book.' The Hebrew words indicate a book well known to Moses—a book intended to be handed down to posterity, at once for the future guidance of rulers, and to show that God would execute his prophetic judgments. Of this book Moses was the author; and we find him from time to time receiving divine instructions to record in it the great events of Jewish history, Ex. 24. 1–7; 34. 27; Nu. 33. 1, 2. The account of its completion and solemn delivery into the custody of the priests is most important: 'And Moses wrote this law, and delivered it unto the priests, the sons of Levi, . . . and unto all the elders of Israel. . . . And Moses commanded them, saying, At the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles, when all Israel is come to appear before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel in their hearing,' De. 31. 9–11.

We have thus an indication of the way in which the Pentateuch originated. It was not written at once. Genesis was first compiled by Moses, apparently from authentic and inspired documents, written by the patriarchs, and handed down through successive generations. Genesis formed the groundwork of the Bible. When it was compiled it was called The Book. The rest of the Pentateuch consists mainly of narratives or journals of passing events, also written by Moses, and added to The Book from time to time. The Book, thus gradually formed, was at length, before the death of its great author, committed to the care of the priests, and placed beside the ark of the covenant: 'And it came to pass when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in The Book [so the Hebrew reads] until they were finished, that Moses commanded the Levites which bare the ark . . . saying, Take this book of the law and put it in the side of the ark . . . that it may be there for a witness against you,' De. 31. 24.

These direct indications of authorship are corroborated by evidence of another kind, but no less convincing. The book abounds with minute incidental allusions to the manners and customs, private life and public polity, of the Egyptians, with descriptions of and references to the topography, physical features, and products of the wilderness of Sinai; with genealogical and ethnological accounts of ancient peoples and tribes. The writer must therefore have been personally acquainted with Egypt and the whole desert of Arabia; and he must have possessed besides most extensive learning. All these things point to one man, and one only. Moses, who was brought up at the court of Pharaoh, who was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, who spent forty years in Egypt, and forty in the peninsula of Sinai—Moses is the only man on whom the scholar could fix his attention as the author of the Pentateuch.

What is indicated in the Pentateuch itself is fully stated by subsequent writers. In a literary point of view, the testimony of antiquity to the authorship and credibility of the Pentateuch is most interesting. The first evidence is that of a contemporary—a man who had fuller opportunity of knowing the whole truth than any other. When Joshua entered on his office as Moses' successor, he thus records the charges given to him by Jehovah: 'Be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law which Moses my servant commanded thee. . . . This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate thereon day and night,' &c., Jos. 1. 6, 8. Again, at the close of his life he himself gave this last solemn admonition to the Israelites: 'Be ye therefore very courageous to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moses,' Jos. 23. 6. This book of the law is quoted or referred to by a line of illustrious authors extending from the time of Joshua down to the commencement of our era. A close inspection proves that every book of the Old Testament, with the exception of Job, indicates in one way or another the previous existence of the Pentateuch. In many of them it is mentioned by name, Ju. 3. 4; 1 Sa. 2. 13; 1 Ki. 2. 3, sq.; 2 Ki. 23. 25; 2 Ch. 23. 18; Ps. 19. 7–11; Dan. 9. 11, 13; Ezra 3. 2; in others it is quoted; in others simply referred to. The testimony of Nehemiah, the last of the historical writers in the Old Testament, is especially worthy of note. He speaks of Moses as its author, Ne. 8. 14; he calls it the 'book of the law of God,' Ne. 8. 18; he says it was read throughout at the feast of tabernacles; and he gives a summary of its contents, Ne. 9. 1, sq. And the last of the prophetical books is equally clear in its testimony. Malachi says, 'Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel,' Mal. 4. 4.

I have now brought down the testimony for the authorship and authenticity of the Pentateuch to the close of the Old Testament period. I have shown it to be clear and uniform from Joshua to Malachi. The Pentateuch was known to the whole Jewish nation. It contained the code of national law, the directory for national worship, the confession of the national faith. Many of its enactments were felt to be burdensome; but no attempt was ever made to dispute their divine authority. The unanimous and continuous testimony of the Jews regarding the Pentateuch was that Moses wrote it by divine inspiration. That testimony is embodied in the authentic records of national history, in the odes and hymns of poets, and in the writings of prophets. In fact it pervades the whole national literature. We may therefore conclude that 'at no time from the days of Joshua would it have been possible for any man, or any body of men, to introduce among the Jewish sacred records a modern work, or a modern compilation of ancient fragments and traditions, and to gain for it the confidence and respect of the nation. The imposition would have been at once detected and exposed.'

The chain of evidence does not end here. It extends unbroken down to the time of the New Testament, and from that period to our own day. In the apocryphal books of Ecclesiasticus (ch. 24. 23), Esdras (1 Esd. 1. 6), Baruch (ch. 1. 20), and Maccabees (2 Mac. 7. 30), the law of Moses is distinctly mentioned and quoted as authoritative. Philo, the distinguished Jewish philosopher of Alexandria, wrote a life of Moses, and gives a detailed account of his great work, the Pentateuch. Josephus, the representative of the Jewish literati in Palestine, as Philo was in Egypt, is equally full and clear in his testimony.

I have hitherto cited Jewish testimony alone. Some may perhaps affirm that the Jews were not impartial witnesses. I do not admit this. I affirm, on the contrary, that they were the best and safest witnesses. But to take away all ground of objection, I shall quote a few heathen testimonies. Hecatæus of Abdera, a contemporary of Alexander the Great, and a man famed for learning and wisdom, wrote a history of the Jews, in which he has described the exodus, and attributed the Pentateuch to the great lawgiver. Eupolemus, a Greek historian, who lived a century and a half later, states that Moses was the author of the book of the Law. Manetho, a learned Egyptian of the age of Hecatæus, ascribes to Moses the formation of the Jewish code. To these might be added Tacitus, Juvenal, Longinus, and many other classic writers, all of whom ascribe to Moses the institution of that code of laws which we find in the Pentateuch. 'These authors cover a period extending from the time of Alexander, when the Greeks first became curious on the subject of Jewish history, to that of the emperor Aurelian, when the literature of the Jews had been thoroughly sifted by the acute and learned Alexandrians. They constitute not the full voice of heathenism, but only an indication of what that voice was. Here then we have a mass of sound historical evidence for the genuineness and authenticity of the Pentateuch such as no other ancient writing can boast of.'

I have stated that the Pentateuch is a history. It is not, however, an ordinary history. It has marked characteristics, which the student must keep in mind if he would fully comprehend it. 'It is in no sense a civil history, or record of general revolutions in human affairs, or of even intellectual and social progress. It opens with an account of the origin of the earth and its various inhabitants, showing the preparations made for man—the last link in the great chain of creation—and the special object of the history in his moral and spiritual relations. The object of this record, however, was not to teach science or natural history, but to point out distinctly the relation subsisting between the Creator and his creatures, which constitutes the fundamental idea of all true religion and worship.' Nor are the delineations of the progress of human affairs, given in the immediately succeeding portions, composed in the spirit, or with the design, of mere secular history. There are indeed notices of the origin of the arts, of the founding of cities, of the wars of some ancient tribes, but all these are referred to in a way which plainly shows their entire subordination to the sacred object of the narrative. The whole history of the Cainites, for instance, is disposed of in ten verses (Ge. 4. 16–26), while the particulars referred to are adduced as indications of the character of this rejected family, and of the sources whence they looked for happiness. The wars of the eastern kings, too, are only noticed on account of the part Abraham took in rescuing Lot; and to introduce the interview of the patriarch with Melchizedec. The object, then, of the Pentateuch was not to give a full or systematic history either of the physical or political world, but simply to notice such facts in connection with both as tended to show in what relation the universe and man stand to God; what duties God requires of man; and what provision God has made for man's temporal and eternal welfare. Whatever is calculated to throw light on these subjects is narrated—all else is excluded. This I take to be the key to the narratives in the Pentateuch. This shows why incidents in the personal and family histories of the patriarchs are minutely related, why conversations, dreams, and visions are recorded with great fulness of detail; while the rise of dynasties and kingdoms is barely mentioned. This shows, too, why the account of the creation of man occupies such a large space, while the most stupendous creations and arrangements of the material universe—the countless orbs of heaven, the strata of the earth's crust, the air, the ocean, the trees, the grass, the flowers, the multitudinous forms of animal life—are either passed over or despatched in a word or two. In fact the Pentateuch looks at, and speaks of, the whole of this world, and the whole material universe, merely in its relation to a creating and governing God, and to man as a moral and immortal being. The opening words of the Pentateuch may be regarded as intended to show the relation of God to the physical universe. The next part his relation to the whole human race—that in him they live, and move, and have their being; that to him they are responsible; that by him they will finally be judged. All that follows—the great body of the Pentateuch, and indeed of the Bible—was designed to show the special and peculiar relation of God to his church and covenant people. They are his by a double ownership. He watches over them with a double interest and care.

The grand design, therefore, of the Pentateuch is to show God as the Creator and Ruler of the universe; to show when, and for what purpose, the present terrestrial economy was instituted; to show that mankind is one fraternal tribe, protected, guided, and provided for by the care of a Father, the only and omnipotent Creator; to show the object for which man was created, and the destiny in store for him; to show the provision made for man's spiritual as well as his temporal wants, in the promise of a MESSIAH; and to show the way in which God selects, governs, and redeems his church. All the historic facts, all the incidental allusions, all the scientific notices, are subservient to one or other of these objects. The Pentateuch is a system of divine truth grafted on a series of physical and historical events. It is this characteristic which makes it so infinitely superior to all the so-called sacred books in the world. The Pentateuch is not a collection of poems more or less beautiful; it is not a philosophical speculation on the origin of the universe; it is not an unintelligible jumble which expositors can twist at pleasure from a cosmological essay into a treatise on ethics. It is a sacred history; but a history designed to show God's relation to the universe as Creator and Sustainer; and especially God's dealings with man, and man's duty to God. It is only when viewed in this light we can understand why the history of the fall is given with such minuteness; and why the biographies of three patriarchs occupy whole chapters, while the histories of the mightiest nations and potentates are dismissed in a single sentence. It was to the patriarchs God revealed himself; to them the promise of the Messiah was given; and hence to those wandering chiefs attaches a grandeur and an interest greater far than that of the Babels and the Nimrods of the world.

In the remaining historical books the history of the people of Israel, which was begun in the Pentateuch, is carried on continuously from the death of Moses to the re-establishment of the Jews in Palestine after the captivity, under the leadership of Ezra and Nehemiah. They thus cover a period of a little more than a thousand years. They may be divided into two groups. The first group begins with Joshua and ends with 2 Kings. The history is continuous. The book of Joshua closes with his death, after narrating the partition of Palestine among the tribes, and the overthrow of the most formidable of the Canaanitish kings. Judges embraces the history of Israel from the death of Joshua to the death of Samson. The books of Samuel continue it down to the close of David's reign; and the two books of Kings narrate the history of the Jews to the Babylonish captivity. The second group begins with Chronicles and ends with Nehemiah. The history here is also continuous, but to a large extent it overlaps the former group. The books of Chronicles begin with genealogical tables which extend back to Adam, and reach onward to David, where the narrative is taken up, and a history of the kingdom of Judah given down to the captivity. The narrative differs from that in Kings in this respect, that nothing is said of the kingdom of the ten tribes. Ezra and Nehemiah join on to the end of Chronicles, and record the return of the several bands of Jews from Babylon, the rebuilding of the temple, and the re-establishment of the Jewish polity in Jerusalem.

The books of Ruth and Esther may be regarded as in some respects standing apart from both these groups. They are monographs of two of the most remarkable women in Old Testament history. The former narrates the almost unparalleled filial devotion of a stranger, whose fortunes as one of the ancestors of King David and of the MESSIAH, had a peculiar interest for the Israelites. The latter contains the romantic story of Queen Esther, and her noble act of patriotism.

With one or two exceptions, the authorship of these books cannot now be definitely ascertained. Joshua doubtless wrote the greater part of the book which bears his name; and Samuel may have been the author of Judges and a part of the books of Samuel. Ezra and Nehemiah probably composed those books which have been called after them; but more than this we cannot say. Another and much more interesting question presents itself to the thoughtful reader. Whence did the authors obtain their information? It could not have been in all cases from personal knowledge, for the book of Judges embraces the history of about five hundred years; Samuel of more than a hundred years; Kings of four hundred and fifty years; and Chronicles of a still longer period. Direct revelation from God was, of course, possible. Some of the facts and truths recorded were confessedly obtained from that source; but we have no evidence that ever ordinary history was revealed. The analogy of Scripture is altogether opposed to such a theory. Whatever came within the sphere of ordinary observation was recorded in the ordinary way. There was no new revelation of it to the mind of the historian; and there was no supernatural power exerted farther than was necessary to enable fallible man to write observed facts with infallible accuracy.

In the book of Genesis we have some incidental evidence of the source from which Moses obtained his information. Close observation shows to even the ordinary reader traces of distinct narratives, or documents; sometimes overlapping each other, and recording events from different points of view, and with different details. These documents generally begin with some set phrase, such as, 'These are the generations of the heavens and the earth,' Ge. 2. 4; 'This is the book [or writing] of the generations of Adam,' ch. 5. 1; 'These are the generations of Shem,' ch. 11. 10; 'Now these are the generations of Esau,' ch. 36. 1. The details of facts, of genealogies and lists of names, and of long conversations, are given with a minuteness and circumstantiality which indicate an actor or eye-witness. The words and phrases used, and the general style, show distinctive individuality. My belief is that the leading personages in primeval history—Adam, Seth, Enoch, Abraham, Jacob, Joseph—each recorded the events which transpired in his own times; and that the records thus prepared were handed down from generation to generation, until at length they were embodied by Moses, under the infallible guidance of the Holy Spirit, in one continuous history.

In addition to the documents which Moses appears to have used in the preparation of the book of Genesis, he mentions and quotes from a separate work, 'The Book of the Wars of the Lord,' Nu. 21. 14, 15. The title and the quotation show that this must have been a collection of odes, composed at different periods, to celebrate the wars waged by Israel, under the guidance of Jehovah. They may have been so connected by brief annals as to form a continuous history, comp. Nu. 21. 17, 18; 27. 3. The authors of the succeeding historical books of the Old Testament seem to have made full use of national records and contemporary annals. Joshua (ch. 10. 13) and the author of 2 Samuel (ch. 1. 18) quote from the Book of Jasher, which appears to have contained a collection of odes on some of the most remarkable events of Israelitish history. At the close of the reign of Solomon, the sacred writer refers for a fuller history of the events of that important period to the Book of the Acts of Solomon, 1 Ki. 11. 41; and the character of the reference implies that the writer was himself largely indebted to that book. In regard to the history of King David the author of 1 Chronicles says:—'Now the acts of David the king, first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Samuel the seer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the seer; with all his reign and his might, and the times that went over him, and over Israel, and over all the kingdoms of the countries,' ch. 29. 29, 30. In one or other of the historical books, reference is made to the following works: 'The Prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite,' 2 Ch. 9. 29; 'The Visions of Iddo the Seer against Jeroboam the Son of Nebat,' 2 Ch. 9. 29; 'The Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah,' 1 Ki. 14. 19; 'The Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah,' 2 Ch. 27. 7. The two last are probably identical, and are referred to very often both by the writers of Kings and Chronicles. The work must have been large, and was perhaps an official or national record of the leading events which occurred both in the northern and southern kingdom. Mention is likewise made of histories or annals written by Jehu the son of Hanani, 2 Ch. 20. 34; by Isaiah the prophet, 2 Ch. 26. 22; by Hosai (rendered in the English version 'the Sayings of the Seers,' 2 Ch. 33. 19); and of 'The Chronicles of King David,' 1 Ch. 27. 24. All these were probably contemporary works, from which the sacred writers extracted, under divine guidance, the facts which they wove into Bible history.

It has been objected to the view given above with regard to the original sources of the book of Genesis, that the art of writing was unknown in those primeval times. If this can be proved, the theory of written documents is untenable. But recent discoveries have dissolved this argument, and have established the fact that the art of writing with ink upon papyrus was known in Egypt long before the days of Moses. A number of Egyptian papyri, written in the hieratic character, are now in the British Museum, all of which are of the age of Moses or anterior to it. There is one in the Bibliothèque Impériale at Paris, which appears to have been written two centuries before Abraham migrated to Palestine. Recent discovery has achieved still greater triumphs on behalf of divine revelation. Away in the midst of a parched desert, near the banks of the Euphrates, are great mounds covered with dust and sand. They mark the site of Abraham's native city, Ur of the Chaldees. Some of them have been excavated, and bricks, cylinders, and other monuments have been dug up, bearing inscriptions dating back from the time of Abraham to the period of the confusion of tongues. Thus it is that some of the very earliest monuments in the world bear inscriptions which are still legible; and this fact, taken in connection with incidental allusions in the book of Genesis, seems to indicate that He who first taught the human tongue to articulate intelligible sounds, taught at the same time the human hand to trace intelligible characters.

The foregoing considerations give an additional antiquarian interest to the historical books of the Old Testament. We recognize in them not merely the earliest specimens of literature, but venerable records handed down from periods when most of us have been accustomed to think the means for forming a literature did not exist. It seems to me highly probable that to Adam the revelation of God's creative work was first made, and by him it was recorded; and that to him we are indebted for the striking narrative of his converse with God in Eden, and for the whole account of the fall. Noah was the natural historian of the deluge. Abraham was his own biographer, and we find in his life just such simple and graphic details of facts, incidents, and conversations as an eye-witness would record. Jacob alone could have written so fully the story of the dream at Bethel, the romantic incidents of Padan-aram, and the meeting with Jehovah at Mahanaim. Joseph was probably the last whose personal memorials Moses embodied in his history.

To some this view may appear strange; it may perhaps run counter to their early impressions, or to what may be called traditional theory. But does it detract one iota from the authenticity of the sacred history? Does it contradict one single passage in God's Word? Does it tend in the least to contravene the truth of the Mosaic authorship or plenary inspiration of the Pentateuch? It seems to me that it tends to encircle this venerable book with a yet brighter halo of glory, and to give it if possible a yet higher claim upon the attention of the Christian scholar and antiquary. We can see in it not merely a connected history drawn up by Moses; but we can recognize, embodied in that history, the sublime story of creation written by Adam in Eden; we can recognize there Noah's own account of the deluge, perhaps composed in the ark; we can recognize fragments of the autobiographies of Abraham, Jacob, and Joseph. We can see besides the infinite wisdom of God pervading each fragment as well as the combined history—giving life-like reality to its characters, giving perfect accuracy to its details, giving infallible certainty to scientific developments, and investing with absolute historic truth its wondrous and cheering prophecies and promises. P.]

THE BOOK OF JOB.

By whom the book of Job was written is uncertain, and conjecture is useless. It is, for the substance of it, a true history of real facts. Job is represented as really existent as Noah or Daniel, Eze. 14. 14, 20; and as a patient sufferer who obtained a joyful deliverance, Ja. 5. 11. It is an ancient history. The length of Job's life; the rare use of the divine name of JEHOVAH, and frequent use of SHADDAI, or Almighty and All-sufficient; the remarkable remains of religion in the land of Uz and the places about; the mentioning of no other idolatry but that of worshipping the sun and moon; the never making any plain allusion to the dividing of the Red Sea, or to the appearance of God to the Israelites in the wilderness, which lay at no great distance from the land of Uz; strongly tempt one to think that Job's distress might be about the time when Moses lived in the land of Midian, or perhaps a hundred years before. We have here, (1) The history of Job's sufferings and his remarkable patience under them, issuing in a sad mixture of human weakness in his cursing the day of his birth, ch. i. ii. iii. (2) A hot dispute between him and Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar, his friends, Whether remarkable judgments be certain tokens of the wickedness of those upon whom they are inflicted? The aim of Job is to bewail his own affliction, complain of its weight, justify himself from gross wickedness or hypocrisy, and prove that wicked men often prosper in this world while the godly are exposed to manifold calamities. The scope of his friends is to prove that no good man is subjected to extraordinary calamities, but that the most wicked men ordinarily are; and hence to condemn Job as a hypocrite, because of his uncommon troubles, iv.-xxxi. (3) A decision of the dispute; by Elihu, then by JEHOVAH. The aim of Elihu is to leave Job's state undetermined, or even to admit it to be good; and only to charge him with his misbehaviour under his trouble, as too arrogant and self-justifying, especially when he had to do with a God of infinite sovereignty, greatness, power, wisdom, and justice. The scope of Jehovah's speech is to convince Job of his meanness, and of his own infinite power, greatness, and extensive influence; and thereby lead him into a sense of his iniquity in insisting so much upon his own justification, and complaining so unguardedly of the providence of God:—and at last he justifies him, in opposition to his three friends, in his character and sentiments, xxxii.-xlii. (4) The whole issues in Job's great honour and redoubled prosperity, xlii. In this book we have at once a most noted encouragement to patience, and a system of the most ancient believers' apprehensions and faith concerning the wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and sovereignty of God; and concerning his works of creation and providence; concerning the original and actual corruption of mankind; concerning redemption by Christ and the usefulness of good works; and, in fine, concerning the resurrection of the dead and eternal life.

[The age of the book of Job is a subject of deep interest to the biblical scholar. We have no direct evidence bearing upon it. Jewish tradition assigns to it a very high antiquity. The critic, however, must depend for his arguments mainly on the character of the book itself—on its language and style; on the manners and customs it portrays; and on its reference to, or silence regarding, the great facts and personages of sacred history. All are agreed that the language of the book is of the oldest type found in the Bible. It has certain peculiarities. It has a closer affinity to the Arabic than any other of the inspired writings, arising from the close connection of Job with the nomads of the Arabian desert. There are besides many Aramaic words and phrases in it; but these are of an archaic form, entirely different from those found in the later Hebrew writings. The style of the book - its terse, rugged, and highly poetic language—resembles portions of the book of Genesis, the song of Deborah, and the Proverbs of Solomon, and is characteristic of a primitive and imaginative people. 'The language,' says a recent writer, 'belongs altogether to a period when thought was slow, but profound and intensely concentrated; when the weighty and oracular sayings of the wise were wont to be engraved upon rocks with a pen of iron and in characters of molten lead. It is truly a lapidary style, such as was natural only in an age when writing, though known, was rarely used, before language had acquired clearness, fluency, and flexibility, but lost much of its freshness and native force.' The manners and customs so clearly developed are those of a simple and primitive people. The vast flocks and herds, the semi-nomad, semi-agricultural mode of life, the profuse hospitality, the sudden and sweeping reverses of fortune, are all characteristic of the earliest patriarchal age. The nearest approaches to them are in the histories of Abraham at Beersheba and Laban in Mesopotamia. This book affords a very graphic and full picture of the manners and customs, domestic, social, and political, of the period. Yet there is no straining in it—no aiming at effect; all is easy, natural, simple, affording clear proof that the writer was personally familiar with the scenes he depicted. The free, vigorous, and wild simplicity of the life portrayed in the book of Job bears the stamp of a hoar antiquity; and the style of the narrative shows that the author must have been contemporary with the events. Another consideration leads to the same conclusion. The book is silent regarding the Mosaic law. Its peculiar enactments and institutions, which gave a tone and distinctive character to all the subsequent literature of the Jewish nation, were manifestly unknown to the author of this book, as well as to all the actors introduced into it. The book is silent too regarding the Egyptian bondage, the exodus, the wilderness journey, and the entrance into Canaan. This silence can only be accounted for by the supposition that the date of the book was anterior to those events. 'The sanctions and penalties of the law, if known, could scarcely have been passed over by the opponents of Job, while the deliverance of Israel and the overthrow of the Egyptians supplied exactly the examples which they required to silence the complaints and answer the arguments of Job.' The forms of law, the system of worship, the illustrations and allusions of the book are those of the patriarchal age. Everything therefore in this book tends to show that it 'stands apart from all other productions of the Hebrews, belongs to a different epoch, and, in accordance with the surest canons of criticism, to an earlier age.' P.]

CHAPTER I. [Ver. 1. Uz. There are three persons called Uz in Scripture. The son of Aram, Ge. 10. 23; the son of Nahor, Ge. 22. 21; and the son of Dishan, Ge. 36. 28. Hence the difficulty of deciding upon what country is called by this name. The most probable opinion, because the best supported by Scripture reference, is that which places Uz in Edom, or Idumæa, as in La. 4. 21, where Uz and Edom are identified. The same may be seen by referring to Je. 49. 7; Eze. 25. 13; Am. 1. 11; and in Ob. 9 the men of Teman are described as inhabitants of Idumæa, and in Job 2. 11 Eliphaz is described as a Temanite. C.]

Ver. 3. [Job was 'the greatest of all the men of the east;' literally, 'the Bene-Kedem,' a people who dwelt in Arabia, and chiefly in that section of it which lay east and south-east of Palestine. Hence it may be concluded that the land of Uz was in Arabia Petraea. Jeremiah groups it with Egypt, Philistia, Edom, and Moab, Je. 25. 20; in one passage he seems to identify it with part of Edom:—'Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in the land of Uz,' La.

COURT-YARD OF SHIEK ISLAM, DAMASCUS—NEAR WHICH, ACCORDING TO THE HISTORIAN IBN ER RABI, JOB WAS BURIED. [Job, i:1.] —"There was a man in the land of Uz whose name was Job; and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God and eschewed evil." Ibn er Rabi, as quoted by Lawrence Oliphant in his Land of Gilead, says: "To the prophets buried in the region of Damascus belong Job, and his tomb is near Nawa in the district of Hauran." Muhammed el Makdeshi, on page 81 of his Geography, as also quoted by Oliphant, says: "And in Hauran and Batanæa lie the villages of Job and his home. The chief place is Nawa, rich in wheat and other cereals." The Hauran is the store-house of Damascus. It is a highly productive and thickly populated region. The artist who took these pictures and the writer were in Damascus when the first train went out from Damascus seventy miles into the Hauran. We give as illustrating this the court-yard of Shiek Islam in Damascus.

5 And it was so, when the days of their feasting were gone about, that Job sent and sanctified[i] them, and [k]rose up early in the morning, and offered burnt-offerings according to the number of them all: for Job said, It may be that my sons have sinned, and [m]cursed God in their hearts. Thus did Job [n]continually.

6 ¶ Now there was a [o]day when the [p]sons of God came to [q]present themselves before the LORD, and Satan[7] came also among them.[8]

7 And the LORD said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, From [r]going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

8 And the LORD said unto Satan, [9]Hast thou considered [s]my servant Job, that there is [t]none like him in the earth, a [u]perfect and an [v]upright man, one [w]that feareth God, and [x]escheweth evil?

9 Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, Doth Job fear God for nought?

10 Hast thou not [a]made an hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? thou hast [b]blessed the work of his hands, and his substance[1] is increased in the land.

11 But [c]put forth thine hand now, and [d]touch all that he hath, and he will [e]curse thee to thy face.[2]

12 And the LORD said unto Satan, Behold, all[f] that he hath is in thy power;[3] only [g]upon himself put not forth thine hand. So Satan went[h] forth from the presence of the LORD.[4]

13 ¶ And there was a day [1]when his sons and his daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house:

14 And there came a messenger unto Job, and said, The oxen were ploughing, and the asses feeding beside them;

15 And the [j]Sabeans[5] fell upon them, and took them away; yea, they have slain the servants with the edge of the sword; and I [k]only am escaped alone to tell thee.

16 While[1] he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, The [m]fire of God is fallen from heaven, and hath burnt up the sheep, and the servants, and consumed them; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

17 While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, The [n]Chaldeans made out three bands, and fell[6] upon the camels, and have carried them away, yea, and slain the servants with the edge of the sword; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

18 While[o] he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, Thy sons and thy daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house:

[4] Is this to be considered a real dialogue, or an allegory; a narrative of facts, or a representation by parable? When it is recollected that JEHOVAH literally conversed with Abraham (Ge. 15.1,2,7,8. 18. 17.1,18,19), and afterwards with Jacob (Ge. 32. 24, 30), and that he spoke with Moses 'face to face' (Ex. 33. 11); and then when it is further recollected that Jesus, 'the Word that was God—the Word become flesh' (Jn. 1. 1, 14. 'God manifest in the flesh' 1 Ti. 3. 16), permitted Satan to tempt him verbally (Mat. 4. 3, 11), there will be less difficulty in apprehending how this narrative may reveal and record a reality of the invisible, and not present a mere figurative emblem. But, if any be otherwise minded, still let it be remembered, that a figure is a figure of some reality, and that consequently the narrative, however interpreted, represents the reality of an invisible government over the good and the evil of this visible world.—C.

4. 21. The name was derived from Aram's eldest son, who was founder of one of the primeval tribes, which took his name, and settled in the land of Uz, Ge. 10. 23, 31. When travelling in the countries east of Palestine, I often heard from intelligent natives the tradition that Jebel-Hauran was the country of Job; and I found several places in that wild region bearing the name of the patriarch. P.]

Ver. 5. [Cursed God in their hearts. Nor blessed God in their hearts.—Note, In all efforts for promoting religion, let the heart—the conversion, the purifying, the watching of the heart, be the chief object. C.]

Ver. 6. [Of the invisible kingdom of God we know literally nothing beyond what God is pleased to reveal; therefore, when it pleases God to reveal it to us, it must needs be by corresponding emblems from visible governments. Still it must be remembered that these emblems have originals of which they are the copies; and that whilst through these emblems 'we see but in part, and know but in part,' yet we see there is a heavenly worship and an invisible government in which spirits of evil may accuse the children of God in heaven, even as their coadjutors, evil-spirited men, have ever done on earth; and in which they may obtain a limited power of inflicting injury, even as on earth wicked men obtain a similar power; while JEHOVAH restrains both, and finally compels all things to 'work together for good to them that love God.' C.]

Ver. 7. [It must not be inferred from this narrative that Satan has admission to the assembly of the saints in heaven. The Lord is here represented as holding a solemn court. Before it Satan appears. He appears as a subject of the Ruler of the Universe, though a wicked and rebellious one. And it is seen in this remarkable incident that, while pursuing his own wicked purposes, he is still made, by the all-wise, overruling providence of God, instrumental in promoting the glory of God and the ultimate good of God's true children. The dealings of Satan with Job are in harmony with what we read of him in the New Testament. Paul's thorn in the flesh was 'a messenger of Satan,' 2 Co. 12. 7; the tares in the field were sown by Satan, Mat. 13. 29; the poor woman mentioned in Lu. 13. 16 is said to have been bound by Satan. He is thus represented as the author of physical as well as moral evil. He is permitted in God's mysterious providence to torture the body as well as to tempt and oppress the soul. His character and work are well indicated in his name, Satan, 'the adversary.' P.]

Ver. 11. [We have a key here to the moral of the book and of Job's history. It was intended to be a life lesson to all God's people. Job was a good man. He was prosperous, happy, and useful. Under the divine protection and blessing he enjoyed as large an amount of felicity as weak humanity is capable of. 'One question could be raised by envy: May not the goodness which secures such direct and tangible rewards be a refined form of selfishness? In the world of spirits, where all the mysteries of existence are brought to light, Satan suggests the doubt, 'Doth Job fear God for nought?' and asserts boldly that if these external blessings were withdrawn Job would cast off his allegiance. One problem is thus distinctly propounded which this book is intended to discuss and solve—Can goodness exist irrespective of reward?' P.]

Ver. 17. [The Chaldeans. The word literally signifies robbers. They gave name to an indefinite extent of country bordering on the Euphrates. C.——The Chaldees were one of the primeval races who settled early on the great alluvial plain near the junction of the Euphrates and Tigris. Ur was a city of the Chaldees, and must always be remembered as the native place of Abraham. The Chaldees possessed the characteristics of true Bedawin—restless, fierce, and predatory. They were of Cushite origin. The raid here mentioned will remind the reader of that in which Sodom fell and Lot was carried away captive. P.]

Ver. 19. [Infidels have scoffed at a wind smiting the four corners of a house at once, but in their scoffing they but display their ignorance; a whirlwind would exactly smite the house as the messenger described. C. ——Satan's power, as here represented, is very extensive. It reaches to individuals, nations, and the elements of nature. In all this the incidental statements in Job are in entire harmony with the notices in the New Testament. He is the great tempter of man, insinuating doubts, suggesting evil, visiting with bodily infirmity. He is spoken of as 'prince of this world,' and even 'god of this world,' Jn. 12. 31; 2 Co. 4. 4:—that is, of the physical world, able to employ the elements as his instruments against the people of God. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—God can easily raise up instances of remarkable piety, even among wild Arabs and amidst wealth: and he delights to propagate the fame of such as are remarkably pious. It is a mercy for children to have parents deeply and constantly concerned for the glory of God and the good of their souls. However lawful feasting and mirth may be on some occasions, there is always need after it to examine our hearts and conduct, and to supplicate the pardon of our mistakes in it. How closely Satan attends saints, ministers, and angels, particularly when they present themselves before God! We have great need to be always sober and vigilant, when our adversary the devil goeth about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. And many, not less odious to God in their tempers and designs than Satan, thrust themselves into the assemblies of God's people in their house of prayer. The noted favourites and servants of God are peculiarly the objects of Satan's malice. But precise are the limits by which he is restricted by God, who knoweth all his designs. And they who approve themselves faithful servants to God, will find him faithful to them in preserving them from the snares of the devil. It is very common for Satan and his instruments to reproach the people of God as selfish and hypocritical in their religion: and almost as common to ascertain their declarations with curses and impre-

22 In[a] all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly.[1]

CHAPTER II.

1 Satan appearing again before God, obtaineth further leave to tempt Job. 7 He smiteth him with sore boils from head to foot. 9 Job reproveth his wife, moving him to curse God. 11 His three friends condole with him in silence.

AGAIN there[a] was a day when the sons[1] of God came to present themselves before the LORD, and Satan came also among them, to present himself before the LORD.

2 And the LORD said unto Satan, From whence comest thou?[2] And [b]Satan answered the LORD, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.[3]

3 And the LORD said unto Satan, Hast thou considered [c]my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect[4] and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil? and [d]still he holdeth fast his integrity, although thou movedst me against him, to destroy[5] him without[e] cause.

4 And Satan answered the LORD, and said, Skin[f] for skin,[6] yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life.

5 But [g]put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will [h]curse thee to thy face.

6 And the LORD said unto Satan, [i]Behold, he is in thine hand; but[7] save his life.

7 ¶ So [k]went Satan forth from the presence of the LORD, and smote Job [l]with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown.

8 And he [m]took him a potsherd to scrape himself withal; and he [n]sat down among the ashes.

9 ¶ Then said [o]his wife unto him, Dost thou still retain thine integrity? [p]curse God, and die.[8]

10 But he said unto her, Thou speakest as one of the [q]foolish women[9] speaketh. What! shall we [r]receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? [s]In all this did not Job sin with his lips.

11 ¶ Now when Job's three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, they came every one from his own place; [t]Eliphaz the Temanite, and [u]Bildad the Shuhite, and [v]Zophar the Naamathite: for they had made an appointment together [w]to come to mourn with him, and to comfort him.

12 And when they lifted up their eyes afar off, [x]and knew him not, they [y]lifted up their voice, and wept; and [z]they rent every one his mantle, and sprinkled dust upon their heads toward heaven.

13 So they [a]sat down with him upon the ground [b]seven days and seven nights, and none [c]spake a word unto him: for they saw that his grief was very great.

1 Job curses the day and services of his birth. 13 The ease of death. 20 He complaineth of life, because of his anguish.

AFTER this [a]opened Job his mouth, and cursed[b] his day.

cations. And when God, for holy ends, lengthens Satan's chain against his own people, how inexpressibly forward is he in carrying on mischief to the utmost extent of his permission! There is need then in our happiest estate to rejoice with trembling. How heavy are sore troubles when they come from every quarter and on everything, one upon the neck of another; and the last the most dreadful. Happy is it when we are graciously weaned from created comforts, of which we may be so quickly and in so awful a manner deprived. But no affliction should indispose us for God's worship. The more trouble we feel the more need we have of his grace to support us. And the views of our death should wean us from perishing things. All that we have is God's gift, lent or given to us: and whatever we lose, enough is left to deserve our thankfulness. Nay, a spirit of meekness bestowed is a greater blessing than all that God can take from us. But, nevertheless, how powerful are the influences of God's grace, that can render his people composed and heartily resigned to his will under the sharpest trials! In all my troubles let me view God's hand and acquiesce in his will: and let them all drive me into the arms, the bosom of my God.

CHAPTER II. [Ver. 3. The object of God was holy and wise, though that of Satan was wicked and foolish. Satan insinuated that piety could not exist independent of the selfish expectation of reward. In opposition to this the Lord desired to demonstrate to Satan by a living example the existence of true and disinterested piety. And this was no mere useless demonstration of truth. Satan was man's great tempter. Had he not been signally defeated in his plans and arguments, his power must have been largely augmented. P.]

Ver. 6. [But save his life. Whatever be the power and commission of evil spirits or wicked men, God sets bounds to their malice they are unable to pass, Ps. 76. 10. C.]

Ver. 8. [Sitting in ashes is a sign of deepest humiliation and sorrow. It is still practised in the East. I have witnessed it on more than one occasion. Any sudden and heavy calamity often drives the afflicted one not only to sit down on the heap of dust and ashes, but to sprinkle them over the whole person. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—How restless, impudent, steady, and active is the devil in prosecuting his malice against the saints! Disappointment but sharpens his rage, and makes him return more furious to the attack: and though proved a liar he persists in his accusations. It is honourable and necessary to resist him steadfast in the faith. But above all, great is the mercy that we have Jesus as our advocate to repel his bold accusations. To what astonishing extent doth God, for his own wise ends, permit Satan to afflict his dearest saints; nay, his Son! But glorious conquerors are they whose mind, in humble abasement, corresponds with their lowest or most loathsome circumstances of body. Heavy indeed is the trial when those who ought to be our sympathizing directors in trouble become our tempters to the most horrid sins;—to rage and disquiet; to blasphemy;—to trespass more and more against the Lord; and when those who come to comfort us have their mouths shut! But happy is he who endureth temptation; when he is tried he shall receive a crown of life! Happy is he who abhors to parley with vile suggestions, and who receives troubles as the love-messengers of his God! God can make our friends useless to us, even when they are so kind as to come to comfort us, and so wise as to prefer the house of mourning to the house of mirth. What frightful changes disease can make on us! Why then should we be proud of vile bodies? But worthless are those friends who hasten from the chamber of disease, and are glad to flee from the melancholy door: an awful proof that they are unmindful of and unprepared for death. Let then no health but what Christ is, no friend but God in him, be the trust, the boast of my soul! In the time of need all others take to themselves the wings of the morning and fly away. Miserable comforters, nay ensnaring tormenters, are they all.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1, 2. After these seven days were finished, Job gave vent to that grief which had so long stupified him, in the most bitter lamentations, and in imprecating mischiefs upon the day of his conception and birth. 3. Let, said he, the day of my birth, and the night of my conception, be utterly forgotten as if they had never been. 4. Let that unhappy day be covered with horrible darkness, and turned into night. And never let one ray of daylight appear thereon. 5. Let the most frightful darkness, and the most extensive and thick clouds, wholly possess it. Let black burning vapours, and the most fearful disasters, render it terrible to men. 6. Let gross darkness, or absolute extinction, seize upon the night of my conception. 7. Let that wretched night be as barren of everything comfortable as a flinty rock: and let men never meet together on it for feasting or mirth: nor let a single whisper of joy be heard on it. 8. Let the most skilful mourners, who imprecate woe upon the days of uncommon disasters, effectually curse it by name as the direful mother of monsters, redoubled terrors, and mischiefs. 9. Let nothing but the most frightful darkness seize upon it, without a single glimmering of a star, or the smallest dawn of a long-looked-for morning; 10. Because it did not bury me in my mother's womb, and thus secure me from those miseries which I now feel. 11. What a wretched misfortune was it that I did not die in the womb in the birth, or immediately after! 12. What a misfortune that they who received me from the womb did not let me fall on the ground, and dash out my brains; or that the nurse

[6] Twice is testimony borne to Job (ch. 1. 22; 2. 10), that he sinned not (sinned not with his lips), nor charged God foolishly. But after he begins this unparalleled wailing and proceeds with his argument against his friends, this favourable testimony is never repeated. On the contrary (ch. 42. 6), he accuses himself heavily, and proclaims his deep abasement and repentance. It will be evident when Elihu appears (ch. xxxii.), that both Job and his friends are in some degree in error, and their several statements are therefore to be received under the correction of those principles by which Elihu expounds and defends the principles of the divine government.—C.

13 For now should [s]I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept: then had I been at rest,

14 With[t] kings and counsellors of the earth, which built [u]desolate places for themselves;

15 Or with princes that had gold, who [x]filled their houses with silver:

16 Or [y]as an hidden untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light.

17 There the [z]wicked cease from troubling; and there the [a]weary be at rest.

18 There the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the [b]oppressor.

19 The [c]small and great are there; and the servant is free from his master.

20 Wherefore is [d]light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul;[6]

21 Which[e] long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures;

22 Which rejoice exceedingly, and are glad when they can find the grave?

23 Why is light given to a man [f]whose way is hid, and whom God hath [g]hedged in?

24 For [h]my sighing cometh before I [7]eat, and [i]my roarings are poured out like the waters.

25 For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me,[8] and that which I was afraid of is come unto me.

did not refuse to give me suck! 13. For thus should I have lain still as a ship at anchor; I should have felt none of those miseries which I now endure: but had lain quiet and undisturbed in the grave; 14. Equal to kings and great men, who lie alone in the tombs which they built for themselves; 15. And to princes, who in their life had heaped up riches and wealth; 16. Or like a concealed abortive infant, which was never numbered among men. 17. There, in the grave, the most wicked can hurt no one; and they who had been restlessly tossed and wearied with violence, enjoy the profoundest safety and rest. 18. There the condemned prisoners and enslaved captives enjoy the most perfect ease, and do not so much as hear the voice of an oppressor or exacter of labour. 19. There every person is on an equal level of power and greatness; and the servant is as free as his master. 20. Is it not strange that a man should be forced to live when his miserable condition makes him heartily abhor it; 21. Who in vain wishes for death, and seeks it more eagerly than the greatest riches; 22. And who would more gladly leap into his grave than the covetous miser can meet with a rich vein of silver; 23. Being so oppressed and shut up with God's indignation that he knows no other way to turn himself? 24. For my meat doth but sustain a miserable life, which is filled up with heart-sinking sobs and loud roarings, on account of my troubles. 25. For whatever dreadful things I fear they immediately come upon me, notwithstanding all my care to prevent them. 26. In my prosperity I never securely trusted in my riches, nor indulged myself in carnal ease; yet that has not preserved me from being miserable. And in this distress I have had no rest; and yet further billows of tossing troubles are still coming upon me.

Ver. 1. [The close connection between the end of the second and beginning of the third chapter ought not to be overlooked. 'After this opened Job his mouth,'—after the seven days of silent pantomime that ushered them in. Could anything have been more trying to the temper, more crushing to the spirit, more harrowing to the feelings of the poor bereaved, plague-stricken sufferer than the conduct of these three men? They came professedly to mourn with and comfort him; but justly has their heartless conduct been made the basis of the ironical proverb, 'Job's comforters.' The loud lamentations, the rending of their garments, the throwing of dust on their heads, and the seven days and nights of blank silence, were all, by the wasted and heart-broken sufferer, interpreted, and, as the sequel shows, rightly interpreted, in the light of insults rather than sympathy. The visit of the three friends was probably a part of Satan's work; and if so, it was surely his masterpiece. To assail the isolated, exhausted, agonized man with hypocritical professions of sympathy, with illogical arguments, and finally with coarse and cruel invective, was enough to drive him to despair. We can scarcely wonder that, under such circumstances, even the patience of Job was exhausted, and that he broke forth into those passionate utterances, of which an example is given in this third chapter. P.]

Ver. 14. [Desolate places. No country is more remarkable for its splendid and desolate tomb-palaces than the land of Edom, where Job resided. See Laborde or any other descriptions of Idumæa, especially of the city of Petra. C.]

Ver. 26. [This sublime and pathetic, and yet humiliating speech, must be regarded as the commencement of Job's 'sin with his lips.' Hitherto his outward conduct and language had been pure and perfect; now under unparalleled trial and temptation he bursts forth into passionate exclamations. What a sad comment is this on his noble declaration: 'The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord!' P.]

REFLECTIONS.—How dreadful are the days, the ages, in hell, on which heaven frowns, and which earth forgets, joy forsakes, and curses attend. The best, when left to themselves, may fall into the greatest folly and guilt; become mad in their wishes, liberal of their curses, cruel to their friends, and unthankful to their God! but how much better is the never-cursed day of our spiritual and eternal birth than that of our natural! How helpless are men when they come into this world! But kind is the care of Providence about them. How levelling are the strokes of death! None of our earthly honours dare enter the grave. Happy only those in it who die in the Lord! What relief from trouble, what rest, what liberty they enjoy! But sad is the case when inflicted troubles, and want of prospect of deliverance, make even saints to long for death and bid it welcome. To quarrel with the life which God bestows, is to sin against our own mercies. Fretfulness and impatience at our lot can only aggravate our sufferings. And to reflect on God's providence is to accuse himself. It is our happiness that our time is in God's hand. The more irksome this life is we should be the more solicitous to prepare for a better. And they only are fit to die who are content to live, and, satisfied under every burden, wait cheerfully the Lord's pleasure.

CHAPTER IV. Then Eliphaz, a descendant of Esau, replied, ver. 2. Thou wilt doubtless be incensed by the slightest attempts to offer a reply: but who can restrain himself from speaking the truth upon such a pressing occasion? 3. Behold, in former times thou hast, with great pains and success, instructed many under trouble and corrected their mistakes; and by thy kind and pertinent advices hast mightily encouraged the dispirited. 4. By thy discourse thou hast encouraged and supported those whose hearts were ready to sink; and hast settled them who trembled under the burdens of their adversity. 5. But now, when fallen into their condition, thou canst not practise thy own lessons, but faintest and art struck with consternation. 6 Is not this the time to exercise thy piety, thy confidence in God, thy hope of blessings, and thy integrity of conversation? Or shall all thy religious appearances turn out a mere nothing? 7. Too good reason thou hast to suspect thyself a hypocrite: for think if thou canst remember one instance of an innocent and godly man who was ever punished with such remarkable strokes of divine vengeance as thou art. 8. For my part, aged as I am, I have always observed that it is the wicked devisers and practisers of horrible crimes who reap the fruit of their works in such a manner. 9. By the blasting and burning influence of God's fearful judgments they are more suddenly, or more gradually, reduced to misery and ruin. 10. And though, like thee and thy sons, they be oppressors, fierce and strong as lions, their power and influence are broken and themselves afflicted. 11. The mightiest tyrants and their posterity are in due time stripped of their ill-gotten wealth, and violently reduced to misery and servitude. 12–16. Moreover in a vision which exceedingly terrified me, I heard a spirit, whose form I could not com-

1 Eliphaz reproveth Job for want of religious trust. 7 He teacheth God's judgments to be not for the righteous, but for the wicked. 12 His fearful vision, to humble the excellency of creatures before God.

THEN[a] Eliphaz[1] the Temanite [b]answered and said,

2 If we assay to commune[2] with thee, wilt thou [c]be grieved? but who can withhold himself from speaking?[3]

3 Behold, [d]thou hast instructed many, and thou hast strengthened the weak hands.

4 Thy words have upholden him that was falling, and thou hast strengthened the feeble knees.[4]

5 But now [e]it is come upon thee, and thou faintest;[5] it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled.

6 Is not this [f]thy fear, thy confidence, thy hope,[6] and the uprightness of thy ways?

7 Remember,[g] I pray thee, who ever perished being innocent? or where were the righteous cut off?

8 Even as I have seen, [h]they that plough iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same.

10 The roaring of the lion, and the voice of the fierce lion, and the [j]teeth of the young lions, are broken.

11 The [k]old lion perisheth for lack of prey, and the stout lion's whelps are scattered abroad.

13 In [m]thoughts from the visions of the night, when [n]deep sleep falleth on men, 14 Fear[o] came upon me,[9] and trembling, which made all my bones[1] to shake.

15 Then a [p]spirit passed before my face; the hair of my flesh stood up:

16 It stood still, but I could not discern the form thereof: an image was before mine eyes; there [q]was silence, and I heard a [2]voice, saying,

17 Shall [r]mortal man be more just [s]than prehend, amidst profound silence all around, say, 17. Shall a wretched man be more righteous than God, or justified before him? or even the most excellent man be pure before his Maker? 18. Behold! he put no firmness in his heavenly ministers, and can put no trust in them; and in his angels he has placed no ground of boasting, and can perceive defect of service and readiness to slide. 19. How then can he perceive perfection in mortal and sinful men, whom he can crush as easily as, or before the face of, a moth? 20. They are pricked and bruised in a mortar of trouble through their whole life and quickly perish for ever, without any oppressing them or regarding their fall. 21. Is not all their power and excellency a plucked-up nothing, is it not destroyed together? They pine and melt away for want of, and without ever attaining, wisdom, or any solid and well-connected good. And though their dignity be ever so great, and their posterity ever so numerous, they die like so many beasts which have no understanding of their latter end.

Ver. 1. [Teman is closely connected with Edom, and must have been a province of it, or have bordered upon it, Je. 49. 7, 20. In one passage it is included in the same curse with the capital of Edom, Am. 1. 12. Habakkuk joins it with Mount Paran, and this may indicate that it embraced that section of Edom which lay opposite to Kadesh, Hab. 3. 3. Probably as the northern section of Edom was called Gebal, the southern may have been called Teman. P.]

Ver. 6. [Delitzsch's translation brings out what appears to be the true meaning:—'Is not thy piety thy confidence, thy hope? and the uprightness of thy ways?' That is, Dost thou not rely on thy presumed innocence before God? P.]

Ver. 9. [The argument is this: What a man sows, that shall he reap—if he sow wickedness, by the blast of God he will perish; but you, Job, are suffering by that blast, therefore it is evident you have been secretly wicked. So dark is the understanding, so uncharitable the judgment of man! But to the believer 'it is a small thing to be judged of man's judgment—he that judgeth is the Lord,' 1 Co. 4. 3, 4. C.]

Ver. 17. [How blessed the truth, that notwithstanding all man's weakness, imperfection, and sin, God has provided a way in which man shall be 'justified,' and God shall be, not merely merciful, but 'just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus,' Ro. 3. 26. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Such as are in sore trouble ought to be spoken to and dealt with in great tenderness. But affection must not hinder, but promote faithfulness in our reproofs and admonitions. We must not, for fear of offending, suffer sins upon our brother. And it is very edifying when such as are noted in their profession, lay out themselves for the instruction and encouragement of others in the Lord's war; warning the unruly, supporting the weak, and comforting the feeble-minded. Yet through the sorruption of our nature, it is far easier to give good counsel than to take it. Extremely trying is the situation when Satan employs the saints' godly friends to make them raise their hopes and acknowledge themselves hypocrites. The charge of hypocrisy is most frequently laid against the people of God, and is one of the hardest to be borne. But exceeding sinful is the indulgence of a censorious spirit. We must never judge of a man's state from a particular failing or from his outward lot. Though tyrannical oppressors and other sinners be recompensed in this life, yet no man knows either love or hatred by all that is before him. What singular intimacy with God might saints enjoy if duly weaned and withdrawn from the things of this life! Were our tempers duly holy, even our dreams might be means of our noted fellowship with God. O how men's spirits shrink under visits from the other world! What then must be the terrible majesty, infinite holiness, and equity of God himself! Insignificant and impure are all creatures in comparison of him. Mean are men while they live; and wretched in death if driven away in their sins. But for senseless, sinful, dying worms to impeach the wisdom, goodness, or equity of JEHOVAH'S dispensations of providence, or to plead their own wealth and excellency in his presence, is the boldest presumption. How strange is it that amidst so many and remarkable warnings of an entrance into eternity, most men should live entirely unconcerned about it! And scarcely less strange that even good men should so often wrest God's oracles to serve their own humours. This oracle which Eliphaz heard gave ground to rebuke Job for his murmuring, but none to condemn him as a hypocrite.

CHAPTER V. Call now if there be indeed any that will answer this oracle in thy favour! And to which of the saints canst thou turn as an advocate for thy cause, or as an example of thy condition? 2. For the just judgment and holy jealousy of God shall destroy foolish and wicked men: and their own rage at Providence and envy of other men's happiness shall render them miserable. 3. Even when I have seen wicked men flourishing in apparently fixed prosperity, I have judged them unhappy, and predicted their fall, and quickly seen them and their families rendered miserable. 4. Their posterity are exposed to great dangers and calamities: they are oppressed and ruined in their lawsuits, or are openly punished, while there is none to deliver them. 5. The hungry vagabonds eat up their crop; and notwithstanding all the means used to secure it, or the danger to the taker, the sweeping scourge, and savage robber, such as the Chaldeans or Sabeans, carry off their whole substance and wealth. 6, 7. Affliction never comes to men without the just influence of God and the deserving influence of men's sin, even though it be altogether common and natural for men to meet with trouble. And men, outrageous in iniquity, and abandoned to gross impiety, shall not long flourish on the earth; but if, as born in it, a man be obstinate in gross wickedness, the flaming thunderbolts of God's judgment shall fly aloft to destroy him. 8. Truly, therefore, were I in thy place, I would humbly address myself unto God and refer myself to his disposal. 9. I would refer myself to God, who works so many things, the nature, causes, and immediate ends of which we do not understand, and so is able to help or punish as he pleases: 10. To God, who waters the earth with rain, and who causes the fountains to spring, and rivulets to run along the streets and fields; 11. That by plentiful crops he may enrich and dignify men of low condition, and exalt those that mourn in sordid baseness and misery to an extended happiness and safety: 12. To God, who defeats the craftiest designs of subtle men to raise or enrich themselves, that it is not in their power to execute the schemes which they have most cunningly contrived: 13. Who makes their own devices to produce what they studied to avoid, and to hurry them, contrary to their expectation, into dreadful ruin. 14. So that when everything seems plain and prosperous, they suddenly stumble into mistakes and misery; and in the very midst of their wisdom and felicity unexpected danger seizes upon them. 15. By which means God delivers those who fear his name from the open fury and from the treacherous flatteries and calumnies of these powerful oppressors. 16. That by observation and experience of this the poor and oppressed may be encouraged to hope in God for help and deliverance, and wicked men may be confounded and silenced.—17. And, moreover, God makes all the afflictions of his people to work remarkably for their good; therefore never complain of his corrections, but esteem them as a distinguished favour. 18. For he not only makes us grieved and pained with trouble for our good, but quickly removes his rod and bestows his comforts. 19. When manifold troubles are inflicted on others thou shalt escape if thou refer thyself to God's disposal. Nay, be thy own troubles as many as they will, they shall do thee no real hurt. 20. God shall supply thee with food in times of famine, and protect thee in the day of battle. 21. No malicious reproachers or false witnesses shall be able to hurt thee; and thou shalt be secure amidst the depopulations of countries. 22. No pestilence, nor famine, nor ravenous beast shall be allowed to hurt thee, nor even mar thy cheerfulness. 23. The stones of the field, as if in league with thee, shall neither hurt thy person nor crop; and even the wild beasts shall submit to thee as thy conquered servants. 24. Thou shalt by experience find thy dwelling, family, and substance, wherever it is, in safety and quietness: and thou shalt be enabled to manage thy household affairs without any allowed iniquity; and shalt take an account of them without disappointment. 25. And however bare thou now appearest, as the earth in winter, thou shalt find thy God?[4] shall a man be more pure than his Maker?

18 Behold, [a]he put no trust in his servants;[5] and his angels[6] he charged with folly:[7]

19 How much less in them that dwell in houses[t] of clay, whose foundation is in the dust, which are crushed before the moth?[8]

20 They are [u]destroyed[9] from morning to evening: they [x]perish for ever without any regarding it.

CHAPTER V.

1 The harm of inconsideration. 3 The end of the wicked is misery. 6 God is to be regarded in affliction. 17 The happy end of God's correction.

CALL now, if there be any that will answer thee; and to which of the saints wilt thou turn?[1]

2 For [a]wrath killeth the [b]foolish man, and envy[2] slayeth the silly one.

3 I [c]have seen the foolish taking root: but suddenly I cursed[3] his habitation.

4 His children are [d]far from safety, and they are crushed in the gate,[4] neither is there any to deliver them.

5 Whose harvest the hungry eateth up, and taketh it even out of the thorns, and the [e]robber swalloweth up their substance.

6 Although affliction[5] cometh [f]not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground,

7 Yet[g] man is born unto trouble,[6] as the [h]sparks[7] fly upward.

8 I[i] would seek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cause:

9 Which [j]doeth great things and unsearchable; marvellous things without number:

10 Who[k] giveth rain upon the earth, and sendeth waters upon the fields:[l]

11 To[m] set up on high those that be low; that those which mourn may be exalted to safety.

12 He[n] disappointeth the devices of the crafty, so that their hands cannot perform their enterprise.[8]

13 He[o] taketh the wise in their own craftiness; and the counsel of the froward is carried headlong.

14 They [p]meet [q]with darkness in the daytime, and grope in the noon-day as in the night.

15 But [r]he saveth the poor from the sword, from their mouth, and from the hand of the mighty.

16 So[s] the poor hath hope, and iniquity stoppeth her mouth.

17 Behold, [t]happy is the man whom God correcteth;[1] therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty:

18 For[1] he maketh sore, and bindeth up: he woundeth, and his hands make whole.

19 He [u]shall deliver thee in six troubles; yea, in seven[2] there shall no evil touch thee.

20 In[x] famine he shall redeem thee from death; and in war from the power of the sword.

21 Thou[y] shalt be hid from the scourge of the tongue;[3] neither shalt thou be afraid of destruction when it cometh.

22 At destruction and famine thou shalt [z]laugh; neither shalt thou be afraid of the beasts of the earth.

23 For[a] thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee.

24 And thou shalt know [b]that thy tabernacle shall be in peace; and thou shalt visit thy habitation, and shalt not sin.[4]

25 Thou shalt know also [c]that thy seed shall be great,[5] and thine offspring as the grass of the earth.

26 Thou shalt [d]come to thy grave [e]in a full age, like as a shock of [f]corn cometh in his season.

27 Lo this, we have [g]searched it, so it is; hear it, and know thou it for thy good.

posterity very numerous, prosperous, and beautifully connected. 26. And when thou hast arrived at an uncommon age, thou shalt enter into thy grave with an easy smile and shouts of joy, as one fully ripened for the glories of heaven. 27. Doubt not of this; for we have thoroughly examined the point, and find it as I have said. Hear, consider, and practise it, for thy present and everlasting advantage.

Ver. 1. [These are the words of Eliphaz. 'Call now'—which of these can give assistance? 'Saints' (holy angels), to whom amongst these wilt thou turn for help in thy murmuring against Providence, seeing they are unable to help themselves? See ch. 4. 18. C.
——To which of the saints wilt thou turn? This clause is connected in sense with ch. 4. 18. God charged his angels with folly, consequently it would be vain to put any trust in them. They are sustained by divine power, and can render no assistance to others. As the term 'saints' is liable to be misunderstood, the translation 'holy ones' would be preferable. P.]

Ver. 2. [Envy slayeth the silly one. For envy the margin gives indignation, and this is the true reading. Wrath and indignation do not signify the suicidal influence of a man's own passions, but the righteous 'severity of God,' Ro. 11. 22, as will appear by the ascription of all chastisements to his will and power, ver. 11–14. C.]

Ver. 7. ['Misfortune does not grow like weeds out of the ground; it is rather established in the divine order of the world, as it is established in the order of nature that sparks of fire should ascend.' It is a beautiful sentiment, and characteristic of an age of piety and thoughtfulness. P.]

Ver. 23. [Stones of the field. Literally, sons of the field, the verse intimating a mutual peace; the whole animal creation in league with man, and he faithful to his engagement, and at peace with them. And true it is, that in proportion as religion gains a place in the heart, cruelty to animals is expelled. C.]

Ver. 27. [With all its beauty of expression, poetic fire, and depth of thought, there is a false principle running through the whole of this speech, or rather ode. Eliphaz regards Job as a sinner and a hypocrite, and therefore punished by God. He endeavours to establish the dogma that all affliction is penal; consequently the address must have seemed cold and heartless to the poor sufferer. Not a word of compassion is uttered, not a sentiment calculated to purify or spiritualize the soul. He never rises to the sublime conception of suffering set forth by Christ or Paul:—'We know that all things work together for good to them that love God.' 'Every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.' P.]

REFLECTIONS.—The best of men quickly grow confident in their own mistakes. And it is the greatest discouragement to one in sore trouble to find no saint in his case or sentiment. But how foolish and silly are the greatest of sinners! Their own wickedness fearfully corrects them, and their backslidings ruin themselves, their families, or property. It is stupid and heathenish to think that anything happens to us by chance. And the more we are acquainted with the sinfulness of our nature, we shall see the less reason to murmur at our afflictions. Under sore troubles it is necessary to search out and remove the sinful cause, and to turn all our fretful murmurs into humble supplications. How encouraging is it to have an almighty, condescending, and gracious God to apply to! No craft, no strength, no plots of devils or men need discourage us when we have him on our side. If our mind be brought down to our circumstances let us never quit our hope: it is in a faithful promiser. Our malignant opposers may for a while open their mouths wide against us, and their oppressing hand may lie heavy on us; but quickly their arms shall be broken and their lips sealed up in

CHAPTER VI.

Job showeth that his complaints are not causeless. 8 He wisheth for death, wherein he is assured of comfort. 14 He reproveth his friends of unkindness.

BUT Job [a]answered and said,

2 Oh that my grief were [b]thoroughly weighed, and my calamity laid[1] in the balances together!

3 For now it would be [c]heavier than the sand of the sea:[2] therefore [d]my words are swallowed up.

4 For[e] the arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poison whereof drinketh up[3] my spirit: the terrors of God do set themselves in array against me.

5 Doth the wild ass[4] bray when he hath [f]grass?[5] or loweth the ox over his fodder?

6 Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg?

7 The things that my soul refused to touch are as my [g]sorrowful meat.

8 Oh that I might have my request; and that God would grant me the thing that I long for![6]

9 Even[h] that it would please God to destroy me; that he would let loose his hand, and cut me off!

10 Then should [i]I yet have comfort; yea, I would harden[7] myself in sorrow:[8] let him not spare; for I [k]have not concealed the words of the[l] Holy One.[9]

11 What[m] is my strength, that I should hope? and what is mine end, that I should prolong my life?

12 Is[n] my strength the strength of stones? or is my flesh of brass?[1] death. But great and holy caution is necessary under trouble, that we may neither be averse to it, nor think ill of it, nor overlook and disregard it. For when blessed of God they are remarkably advantageous. They but open God's way for bestowing his distinguished favours. And those who dwell under the shadow of the Almighty shall enjoy the surest protection, inward quietness, peace with God and his creatures, comfort in their families and seed, and joy and honour in their death. Let us then attend to and profit by every truth we hear.

13 Is not my help [o]in me?[2] and is wisdom driven quite from me?

CHAPTER VI. But Job replied to Eliphaz: 2. O that my oppressive trouble, allotted me in God's indignation, and my extensive, unavoidable, and sinking calamity and sorrow, were but impartially and thoroughly weighed! 3. It would be found so heavy as to hinder and far surpass complaints: therefore are my words full of burning rage and tossing disquiet. 4. For grievous pains in my body, and impressions of God's wrath on my conscience, by their violence, quite dispirit my soul and waste my life. His terrible judgments shut me up on every side and set themselves as in battle array against me. 5. You do no more than brute beasts when you are easy and unconcerned amidst your prosperity. But if these animals complain in their distress, why should I be hindered? 6. Can ever such empty and unsavoury discourse as yours, without any seasoning of grace, prudence, and moderation, be either acceptable or edifying to one in such distress! 7. Those grievous afflictions, which I was once afraid to touch, I must now in anguish endure; and yet I have nothing afforded me for comfort but your loathsome and empty discourses. 8. O that God would quickly fulfil my request for death, and grant me that which I earnestly hope and long for! 9. Even that, without leaving me to languish in this miserable condition, he would, with one effectual stroke, put an end to my present life. 10. The near views of this would comfort my spirit and strengthen me to endure the severest pains; to obtain this I would gladly endure what he pleases; as I am conscious that I have not hypocritically denied, disregarded, or concealed his truths. 11. My strength is so spent that I can neither hold out nor expect recovery. I neither have nor hope for comfort in this life that I should desire it; nor do I apprehend any hurt in death that I should fear it. 12. My strength is quite incapable of bearing such troubles; nor can I but feel their terrible pressure. 13. And though I cannot deliver myself, am I therefore destitute of solid reason and true virtue? Have not I the testimony of a good conscience? Do not I know my own integrity, and the nature and degree of my sufferings, better than you? 14. Surely he who is in distress should meet with pity and compassion! and he who, instead of pitying a friend under great affliction, censures and reproaches him, shows that he has not the true fear of God, and is in a fair way to apostatize from his service. 15–20. My dearest friends promised me help and comfort; but failed me in a time of need; as torrents, which in winter make a great noise, and run with a violent stream when the melted ice and snow fall thick into them; but in the summer, when water is much needed in these hot and parched countries, are quite dried up; the water is so diverted into other channels, exhausted by the dry desert, or exhaled into the empty air, that one can scarcely tell where they ran: and the Arabian travellers who expected to refresh themselves with the water find themselves shamefully and miserably disappointed. 21. Just so are ye deceitfully disappointing me in my adversity, when I most need your help. Instead of comforting me, you, seeing my distress, shrink from me, as if you were afraid I should prove burdensome or disgraceful to you. 22, 23. But since I never asked aught of you for either my subsistence or deliverance, can you not afford me a few comfortable words! 24. If you can convince me of any mistake, I shall submit, cease my complaints, and hearken to your counsels: 25. For solid arguments have a marvellous power to convince and persuade; but your reproofs are to no purpose, as they proceed wholly on mistakes. 26. To what purpose rail ye at words, or critically censure the speeches of a man desperate with trouble? 27. Mean ye to oppress me, when so helpless and destitute, with your bitter calumnies and revilings; and designedly to add to my misery? 28–30. Consider therefore my case and words more deliberately and impartially: you can easily detect me if I speak false or maintain a bad cause. Fairly try my cause over again, and you will find me innocent of the hypocrisy and wickedness which you have laid to my charge. Have I uttered aught that is false or wilfully wicked? or am I so stupid that I cannot distinguish that which is vain, false, or impious, from that which is true, gracious, and edifying?

Ver. 5–7. [May not ver. 5–7 be paraphrased thus:

MILITARY ROAD, DAMASCUS—SETTLED BY UZ, THE SON OF ARALI, AND SAID BY THE ARABIAN HISTORIAN, MUGIR-ED-DIN-EL-HAMBELI, TO HAVE ONCE BEEN THE PROPERTY OF JOB. [Job, vi:1.]—Wetzstein, Oliphant thinks, clearly shows that the land of Uz, mentioned in Jeremiah, xxv:20, "And all the mingled people, and all the kings of the land of Uz," cannot refer to Edom, but must have reference to a region near Damascus. While Josephus, in his Antiquities (i:6-4), states that the Arameans, whom the Greeks called the Syrians, were descended from Aram. Uz, who was a son of Aram settled Trachonitis and Damascus. The historian, Mugir-ed-din-el-Hambeli, in the chapter on the legends of the prophet, says: "Job came from El-Es Uz (?), and the Damascene province of Batanæa, which included Hauran, was his property." And Dr. Porter, one of the contributors to this Self-Interpreting Bible, says that he visited a town in the Hauran whose people claimed that Job was king of Batanæa. We give as illustrating this a view of the Military Road in Damascus.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Job excuseth his desire of death. 12 He complaineth of his own restlessness, 17 and God's watchfulness.

IS there[a] not [b]an appointed time to man[1] upon earth? are not his days also [c]like the days of an hireling?

2 As a servant earnestly [2]desireth [d]the shadow,[3] and as an hireling [e]looketh for the reward of his work;

3 So am I made to possess [f]months of vanity, and wearisome nights are appointed to me.

4 When I lie down, I say, [g]When shall I arise, and the night be gone?[4] and I am full of tossings to and fro unto the dawning of the day.

5 My[h] flesh is clothed with worms and clods of dust; my skin is broken, and become loathsome.

6 My[i] days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent [j]without hope.

7 O remember that my life is [k]wind: [l]mine eye shall no more[5] see good.[6]

8 The eye of him that hath seen me shall see [m]me no more: [n]thine eyes are upon me,[7] and I am not.[8]

9 As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away; [o]so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more.[9]

Even so, before me is set a table covered with sorrowful meat which my soul refuses to touch. I have lost all taste and relish for the world, the world is become insipid and unsavoury to me; why should I not then complain if the lower animals are so privileged? If their Maker indulge their craving appetites, why may I not call upon the death that I long for? See ver. 8. C.]

Ver. 17. [The imagery is thoroughly oriental. In western Asia there are very few perennial streams. Torrents flow while rain is falling, or at most during a few months in winter. On the return of summer the water disappears; the torrent-beds are dry and parched; the streams are literally 'consumed out of their place.' P.]

Ver. 19. [Troops of Tema. The companies of Tema, a city of Arabia, so called from Tema a son of Ishmael (Ge. 25. 15), searched for these brooks in their thirst, but they had vanished, leaving nothing but a dry channel, a circumstance frequent even with considerable rivers in warm climates like Edom. C.——In travelling once across the Arabian desert my Arab guides had determined to spend the night at a well-known watering-place—a desert streamlet. Our water was exhausted. We had had none from early morning; we suffered in silent hope of a refreshing draught in the evening. We reached the spot weary and almost fainting.—It was dry! I can never forget the look of dismay—of blank despair, that in a moment was pictured on every face. Then for the first time I realized the words of ver. 20:—'They were confounded because they had hoped.' P.]

Ver. 29. ['Try again; let there be no injustice; try again, my righteousness still stands.' The sense is: Turn back to the way of reason and charity, and do not deal with me rashly and unjustly. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—How insupportable is inward trouble, either felt or feared; and of all our evils none more intolerable than a sense of God's wrath! They, in general, are partial judges of other men's troubles who live in ease and plenty themselves. And it adds greatly to afflictions to meet with nothing under them but uncharitable censures and insipid comforts from our Christian friends. It is difficult to keep either heart or lips aright under such complicated troubles. Ungoverned passion grows more violent when it meets with rebukes and checks. But it is most unbecoming when it gets into our very prayers to God, and by our folly turns them into sin. There is great need of always living faithful for God, since we know not how soon troubles may render us weary of our life. And those who are by grace prepared for another world, can see little in this to make them fond of staying in it. But it is not self-hardening, but humility under trouble, that makes us ripe for deliverance. Alas! how often dejected spirits preach despair to themselves, and refuse to be comforted; forgetting how God can strengthen or recover for his own glory as he pleases! It is a mercy then to have wisdom and grace that will remain with us in the very worst of times. Unjust, yea, impious, is the want of compassion to those who are under heavy afflictions. And it is bitter to find the friends on whom we depended prove faithless. Yet created comforts commonly disappoint us, and become gall and wormwood when we come to have most need of their encouraging and supporting influence. Upright souls are averse to be a burden to their friends. And the importunity of want often provokes the abuse of the uncharitable. But how contrary to sense—to reason—to pity—to patience—to equity—to a desire after truth—do friends act when God makes them scourges to us! Truth is a mighty weapon when wielded by the weakest arm. And they who have truth on their side will never shun the light, but court inquiry; and nothing then can be more unreasonable than to refuse them a patient hearing.

CHAPTER VII. Is there not a warfare of trouble, and the set time thereof appointed, for wretched man upon earth? Are not his days fixed and determined, and full of toil and labour? 2. As a servant wearied with the toils of the day desires a place of refreshment, and as a hireling looks for the end and reward of his work, so I long for death, to deliver me from my miseries and bring me to my glorious reward. For I have now allotted me for my portion months of wretchedness and vanity without any solid comfort; and in the night, when others rest from their sorrows, I can but restlessly increase mine. 4. I am scarcely laid down on my bed when, through agony and pain, I wish to be up again; and I am continually tormented both in body and mind. 5. For my body is overspread with ulcers, filled with worms, and crusted over with scabs, which have made such clefts in my skin that I am become loathsome to myself. 6. My happy days have quickly run over in a moment, and there is no hope that I shall recover them. 7. Remember, O God, how short and unsubstantial my life is, though once it was pleasant; and when once dead, I shall never return to my possessions and worldly prosperity. 8. My friends shall never more see me in this mortal state. Thou dost but frown upon me and I vanish out of this world. 11. Since there is no hope that my condition will be better in this world, therefore I will give some vent to the extremity of my sorrow by complaining. 12. Am I so strong and unruly that nothing but such strong chains of affliction can tame, rule, or restrain me? 16. Either cease from afflicting me or from preserving me in life; for my days have no need to be made more miserable and fading than they are of themselves. 17. What is man that thou shouldest honour him so much as to contend with him, and set thyself against him in rendering him so miserable? 18. And that thou shouldest visit him with new afflictions every morning, and try him with new strokes every moment? 19. If thou art so patient and kind to the generality of mankind, why wilt thou not turn away thy displeasure from me, and at least give me time to breathe? 20. I cannot satisfy thy justice for my sins, O thou Observer of men: yet why hast thou set me up as a mark for thy vengeance to shoot at and run against, so that I am a burden to myself and to thee? 21. Why wilt thou not forgive me my sin, and at least release me so far from its punishment that I may die? for if thou come not speedily to help me it will be too late.

2 How long wilt thou speak these things? and how long shall the words of thy mouth [a]be like a strong wind?

afflicted by some loathsome disease of the skin, of what specific kind we cannot tell, and mere conjecture is useless. Were conjecture permitted, it is most probable that the disease was sui generis, unprecedented, and hence the astonishment of his friends, and their conviction that it was a divine judgment. C.]

Ver. 12. [Am I a sea or a whale? Am I an inundation, such as that of the Nile, whose risings are eagerly watched by appointed officers; or a dragon (as the word is translated, ch. 30. 29; Mi. 1. 8; Mal. 1. 3), that is, as a crocodile, which is also watched lest it should destroy those who observe the inundation. C.]

Ver. 21. [Job does not absolutely deny his sin (see ver. 20), but merely questions its magnitude in the sight of the 'Observer of men,' and murmurs against what he judges the long delay of pardon. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Our life hath its bounds and form unalterably fixed by God's decree. But how short-lived and hard is the condition of mankind on earth! Surely then we ought to be humble, whose bodies are so vile, and our days so empty and short? And sweet must the heavenly rest be to those who get thither through so much tribulation. It is proper therefore to die with affections quite weaned from this world and set on things above. But if the saints' afflictions can be so terrible, so constant on earth, what must hell be to the wicked for evermore! How terible to be driven thither in our wickedness! to fall into the hands of an angry God! The views then of our near approaching death ought to animate our confessions of sin, our cries for pardon of it, and deliverance from it. It is a mercy that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin, the most unadvised and desperate expostulations with God not excepted: and sprinkled with this, we may cheerfully bid adieu to this valley of tears and sorrows.

CHAPTER VIII. Not without a mixture of mistake, rage, and pride, Bildad replied, 2. How long wilt thou outrageously pour forth what is dishonourable to God and unprofitable to men; and brutishly violent, noisy, and presumptuous? 3. Can God, who has no reason to fear the displeasure or court the favour of any, wretchedly and wickedly deal unjustly with men? 4. Suppose he has fearfully punished thy children for their wickedness; 5. Yet thy humble, speedy, and penitent supplication to him for mercy would meet with due regard. 6. And wert thou thyself sincere in heart, and upright in conduct, he would, all of a sudden, bestir himself to help thee, and restore thee and thy family to its wonted peace and prosperity. 7. And however low and contemptible thy condition is at present, he would render thy happiness and glory more eminent than ever. 8–10. And as you look on us as mere ignorant upstarts, carefully inquire of the most aged and best informed, and they will assure you that God never punished but for sin, and never rejected a penitent person. 11, 12. And that as rushes and flags without abundant moisture quickly wither of their own accord; 13, 14. So without true piety, and a real enjoyment of the divine favour, the highest professions of religion, and the greatest prosperity and most extensive hopes of happiness, will quickly issue in apostasy, infamy, disappointment, and self-wrought wretchedness. 15. The wicked man may attempt to rely on his friends, family, or wealth, and may exert himself to the utmost to retain what he has, but to no purpose. 16. The external smiles of Providence may render his prosperity remarkable for a little time; and his family, wealth, and honour may greatly flourish and increase. 17. He may appear deep-rooted amidst outward enjoyments; and, in height of glory and apparent stability, may vie with the loftiest buildings of marble. 18. But quickly shall his native soil swallow him up into ruin: and he and all that he had shall quickly disappear and be forgotten. 19. Such is the mad and unsubstantial joy of the wicked, and the issue of their flourishing prosperity; while others are exalted from meanness and poverty to fill their place in the world. 20. For—mark it as a certain and important truth—the mighty God will never despise, or loathe, or refuse to help and comfort an upright saint; nor will he strengthen, support, or deliver evil-doers. 21, 22. Wert thou perfect, or thoroughly penitent, he would bless thee till his favours had overwhelmed thee with raptures of thankful praise; they who hate thee and rejoice at thy present troubles should be confounded at thy restoration, while they and theirs should irrecoverably perish.

Ver. 11. [Can the rush. Believed to be the Egyptian papyrus. The rush and the flag are green and flourishing above other plants while they have mire and water, but wither before any other herb when these are dried up—meet emblem of man's transient prosperity, which withers in a moment under the displeasure of God!—Note, There is but one kind of plant that can never wither—the believing branch in the true vine, Jn. 15. 7, 16; 17. 10–12. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Men readily follow one another in running down those who are singularly distressed. And much sooner do they perceive other men's sins marked in their judgments than their own. But in every affliction it is always wise to have recourse to God for help. His blessing can soon make a remarkable change for the better in our lot. And if he knows our integrity, it matters little though men esteem us as hypocrites. God often gives his people indirect hints of the kindness which he intends for them, by words never intended for that purpose by the speakers. And the knowledge and experience of others ought carefully to be improved for our instruction and comfort. What a common sin among professors is hypocrisy and dissimulation! What a sad source of it is forgetfulness of God! But the hope of hypocrites will put the most fearful cheat upon themselves. Though it flourishes awhile, it perishes at last. And the things of nature around us suggest the most important admonitions, did we but consider them aright. The most precious truths are often abused through the misapplication of them, to make the heart of the righteous sad, and the souls of the wicked to triumph. Let me therefore never be a harsh judge of others, and never too mild with respect to myself. Let me never judge of people's character by their outward lot. It is not time, but the last judgment and eternity, that will reduce all things to apparent order.

CHAPTER IX. Immediately Job replied, 2. I know indeed that God is righteous, and that he ordinarily punishes the wicked and favours the godly. But what frail man can, in your sense, be just before God? 3. If God please to call him to a strict account he cannot answer for one of a thousand of his thoughts, words, or actions. 4. And while God is infinitely righteous, his knowledge, wisdom, and power are so unbounded, that it is impossible for any to harden himself in rebellion against him and peacefully prosper. 5–9. Against him who can in a moment remove and overturn the largest mountains—who can shake the earth out of its place, and shatter its rocky foundations—who can at pleasure forbid the rising of the sun or shining of the stars—who at pleasure spreads out or dispels the clouds, and triumphantly treads upon the swelling waves of the sea, all being subject to his will—who makes and governs all the starry constellations which appear in the north or south parts of our world. 10. And does works unsearchably marvellous and unnumbered. 11. In his providential dispensations he can pass before me and attack me; can quickly pass by and rush upon me, and continually set his works before me: and yet I cannot perceive him nor understand them. 12. Behold! he can suddenly or forcibly snatch away whatever a man has, and none can resist his infinite power, or make him to restore it, or even bring him to account for his conduct. 13. If he, the object of our adoration, continue the displays of his terrible majesty and almighty wrath in the infliction of just 22 They that hate thee [z]shall be clothed with shame; and the dwelling-place of the wicked shall come to nought.[4]

CHAPTER IX.

1 Job, acknowledging God's justice, showeth there is no contending with him. 22 Man's innocency is not to be condemned by afflictions.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 I know it is so of a truth: but [a]how should man be just with God?[1]

3 If he will contend with him, he cannot answer him [b]one of a thousand.[2]

4 He is [c]wise in heart, and mighty in strength: [d]who hath hardened himself against him, and hath prospered?

8 Which alone [k]spreadeth out the heavens, and[l] treadeth upon the waves[3] of the sea;

9 Which[m] maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades,[4] and the chambers of the south;[5]

10 Which[n] doeth great things past finding out; yea, and wonders without number.

11 Lo,[o] he goeth by me, and I see him not: he passeth on also, but I perceive him not.

12 Behold,[p] he taketh away, [q]who can hinder him? who will say unto him, What doest thou?

13 If[r] God will not withdraw his anger, the proud helpers do stoop under him.[6]

14 How[s] much less shall I answer him, and choose out my words to reason with him?

15 Whom, [t]though I were righteous, yet would I not answer, [u]but I would make supplication to my Judge.

16 If [x]I had called, and he had answered me; yet would [y]I not believe that he had hearkened unto my voice.[7]

CHAPTER X.

1 Job, taking liberty of complaint, expostulateth with God about his afflictions. 18 He complaineth of life, and craveth a little ease before death.

MY soul [1]is [a]weary[2] of my life; I [b]will leave my complaint upon myself: [c]I will speak in the bitterness of my soul.

punishments, the most proud, powerful, and fierce helpers and avengers must yield to his influence, and confess their inability to relieve us. 14. How then can I, a poor, weak, unbefriended wretch, answer him in judgment; or choose, give sense to, and order my words in debating with him! 15. Though my case were ever so just, nothing would become me but to make humble supplications to my tremendous and omniscient Judge who contends with me. 16. And if he had graciously accepted my supplication, and even promised to grant the request of such a poor and wretched creature as I am, I could not believe it. 17. Since, without my being conscious of any uncommon wickedness, he breaks me to pieces by a fiery whirlwind of his judgments, and multiplies my painful afflictions. 18. He allows me no interval from trouble, no ease under it, but fills me with the most tormenting troubles and bitter griefs. 19. Should I be inclined to dispute with him by force, lo! he is infinitely more powerful than I. Should I be inclined to cite him at law, who, higher than he, could be our judge and appoint us a time or place of hearing? 20. Though I am guilty of no allowed crime, yet his majesty and holiness would make me condemn myself: and though I be no hypocrite, my attempts to justify myself before him would prove me perverse. 21. Though I were ever so perfect I durst not, on my own consciousness, debate the matter with him, nor insist that my soul were really such in his view; but I would undervalue, disapprove, and loathe my practice before his infinite holiness; and would rather lose my life than dare to contend with one of boundless majesty. 22. All that I have affirmed and insist upon is this important truth, that God, in sovereignty, fearfully afflicts the righteous as well as the wicked. 23. When the most fearful calamities fall upon and suddenly kill men, he often, with seeming pleasure, for their trial grievously afflicts the most innocent. 24. Who but he prospers the wicked, and gives the earth to be possessed by wicked men, and ruled by blind judges, who, from ignorance, misinformation, bribery, or partiality, pass unrighteous decisions? 25, 26. I myself am an instance of his sovereign management. My days of prosperity have quickly passed away without substantial comfort; and my natural life, amidst inexpressible misery, posts on to an end, more swiftly than the boat of paper reeds is hurried down the rapid stream, or the hungry eagle alights upon his prey. 27, 28. If I attempt to forget my calamities, lay aside my mournful looks, pluck up my spirits, and cause my face to shine with a smile, my tormenting pains and sorrows terrify my mind: and I find by experience that thou, O God, wilt not remove my trouble as if I were innocent. 29. I see that I shall be held and punished as one that is wicked—why then do I thus fatigue myself in vindicating my innocency? 30. Though I could wash myself by the most effectual vindications, and thoroughly purge my practice with purity itself, 31. Thou, O infinitely holy God, wouldst plunge me into depths of noisome afflictions and of filthy ulcers; and my discovered wickedness and manifest troubles should hold me forth as quite abominable: 32. For God is so infinitely above me that I cannot, dare not, enter into a debate or plea with him. 33. Neither, indeed, is any umpire or arbiter to be found who could order us to silence, or oblige us both to stand to his award. 34, 35. If he would remove from off me this heavy trouble, and not terrify me with the dread of his power and majesty, then would I freely speak, without any slavish fear of him, in my own vindication; for I am not such a hypocrite as you allege. But, alas! sorrows and fears oppress my spirit.

Ver. 1. [Job admits the truth of the principle enunciated at the close of Bildad's address; namely, that God's acts and judgments are always right and just. He goes on to show that it would be impossible for man to dispute this; for if God should even condescend to enter into controversy with man, he would not be able to give him information on one of a thousand subjects that might be brought into discussion. Fear would awe him; his finite and fallible mind would utterly fail before the infinite and infallible Jehovah. To discuss or question God's dealings would therefore be mere presumption. P.]

Ver. 9. [Arcturus—Aben Ezra says it is a northern constellation, composed of seven stars, constituting Ursa Major. Orion—Aben Ezra concludes it to be Antares, a star in the constellation Scorpio. Pleiades, a cluster of stars in the constellation Taurus. Of these some additional remarks will be required on ch. 38. 31 C.]

Ver. 14. [Job's conception of the nature and attributes of God is clear and full. He was totally free from false and imperfect views which we discover even in the most distinguished of heathen philosophers. Here God is represented as a Spirit of infinite wisdom, power, and justice. All things are admitted to be subject to his direct control. The universe which he created he governs. P.]

Ver. 22. [He afflicts and cuts off both good and evil men, therefore outward calamities are no certain indications, as you suppose, of the sufferer's profligacy and of God's displeasure. C.]

Ver 23. If the scourge (the wicked oppressor) slay suddenly, the innocent will also be allowed to perish though false witness and unjust judgment, and thus come to the same end as the wicked. C.]

Ver. 24. [Covereth the faces of the judges. Gives up not merely the innocent to trial and condemnation, but righteous judges to have their faces covered; that is, to be themselves tried and condemned for their righteous administration of the law. See Es. 7. 8. C.]

Ver 26. ['Job gathers images of swiftness from earth (the posts), from water (the light ships of reed or papyrus, such as float swiftly on the Nile), and from the air (the eagle), to describe the rapidity with which his days of happiness have passed away' (Wordsworth). P.]

Ver. 33. [The Hebrew word translated 'daysman' signifies 'one who makes clear,' 'one who arbitrates in a matter. The general sense is plain enough, but the doctrinal point involved is whether Job can have had any reference to Christ, the great Mediator. There is a reading of great importance found in some early MSS. It would convert the clause into a prayer:—'O that there was a daysmen between us!' The latter part of the verse suggests the idea that Job must have formed some conception in his mind of one who having two natures, the divine and human, touches both God and man, and brings them together so as to make an atonement. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—O the infinite goodness of God! And what is man, so mean, so sinful, that he should be mindful of him! How incapable of advancing a justifying righteousness before him! Dreadful is the case of those devils and men who harden themselves against him. His excellencies are plainly marked in his works of creation and providence. Happy are they whose God is JEHOVAH! and inexpressibly miserable his most powerful and proud opposers! In incontestable goodness he often afflicts the righteous and prospers the wicked. And it is hard to complain much of our troubles without mingling somewhat reproachful to God. Let therefore the thoughts of my own meanness, sinfulness, and mortality keep my mind low and silent before him. It is his mercy, not my merits, that must be my only plea. Conceit of my sinless perfection, and of the worth of my righteousness, will but manifest my ignorance of the spirituality of his law and of my own corruption. Let me always stand in awe of him and the power of his wrath. Let me tenderly pity such as are wounded in spirit, and earnestly pray for them, as they can sometimes scarcely pray for themselves. Let me always entertain kind and honourable thoughts of God; as hard thoughts of him are inlets to much sin and sorrow. But above all, let me bless him that Jesus Christ is the Mediator between himself and me, and that my soul is not under extreme anguish and disquiet. And while I walk in the light of the Lord, let me rejoice therein, but rejoice with trembling. Who knows what change a night or a day may bring forth!

CHAPTER X. My soul bursts asunder with weariness of being detained in the cords of natural life. I will therefore permit my complaints to vent themselves freely, be the issue what it will. I will speak fervently in the bitter anguish of my soul. 2. I will say to God, Do not condemn and punish me as a wicked man, but cause me to know for what sin or reason I am so peculiarly afflicted. 3. Is it either pleasant, profitable, or honourable to thee, or is it just and equal, that thou shouldst spoil me of all I had, and thus load me with tormenting troubles: or that with an enraged mind thou shouldst contemn the work of thine hands as good for nothing but to be a spectacle of misery? or that, by thy providential dispensations, thou shouldst appear to confirm the thoughts or encourage the practices of the wicked? 4–6. Are thy views of my conduct and state short-sighted, biased, or malignant? Are thy days so short that thou must punish me in this sudden and severe manner all at once? Are thy researches after truth tedious that thou shouldst thus by tortures attempt to force a confession of guilt from me? 7. Thou canst not but know that I am no hypocrite, and that if thou punish, none can deliver me from thy judgments. 8. By thy creating power I have been curiously and elaborately bound together with sinews; bound together in my whole frame: and wilt thou, as a raging lion, utterly tear me asunder and swallow me up? 9. Remember that thou, as my Potter, hast formed me out of the clay; and wilt thou, in this sudden and fearful manner, so quickly reduce me to dust by death? 10. Didst thou not, in the womb, purify my substance as milk, and curdle and compact the liquid matter of which my body was framed? 11. Didst thou not cover my inward parts with skin and flesh, and curiously fence and weave me together with bones and sinews? 12. Didst thou not grant me the entrance and continuance of life? And hath not thy providential care and kindness preserved me from dangers and death? 13. And, notwithstanding, hadst thou a secret purpose thus to afflict me?—I find, by experience, that it was then determined with thee, 14. That if I should sin, thou wouldst watch over me to punish me, without the least patience, pardon, or pity. 15. That if I should be wicked, fearful judgments should fall upon me; and though I should live holy and innocent, I should nevertheless be oppressed with trouble. I am full of confusion and shame on account of my uncommon circumstances; therefore look with pity on my inexpressible misery. 16. Shall my trouble still increase and exalt itself over me? Wilt thou follow me close with plagues, as a fierce lion hunteth his prey? Wilt thou, by repeated strokes of judgment, set me up as a distinguished spectacle of thy marvellous power and wrath to all around me? 17. Wilt thou bring fresh plagues upon me as witnesses of thy continued displeasure? Wilt thou still afflict me more and more? Shall nothing but diverse forms and multitudes of trouble assault me? 18. Why then didst thou bring me out of the womb at all? Why did I not die in the womb, without ever being seen on this wretched earth? 19. Or die in the birth, that I might have been carried from the womb to the grave? 20. Shall not the momentary duration of my life quickly cease? Shall I not then be allowed a short reprieve from trouble, 21, 22. Before I go to the dark region of the grave, where there is no orderly succession of day and night, summer and winter, labour and rest, but one perpetual night of gross darkness?

Ver. 2. ['Do not condemn me' thus to suffer under thine own hand, and then under the unjust accusations of my friends, without showing why these complicated calamities are sent, and without any divine interference or human sympathy for their relief. C.]

Ver. 10. [The whole process of human nutrition is by milk poured out as a fluid, and then consolidated as cheese. This is not merely true of the child sustained by the maternal aliment, but equally true through all the after-stages of life. For whatever food is received into the stomach there undergoes the first process of digestion, and is afterwards farther changed into chyle; whence by the lacteals—an innumerable system of absorbent vessels—it is carried into the thoracic duct in the form of milk, next it is commingled with the blood, which it thus serves to renew; and being in that form carried throughout the whole

17 Thou renewest thy [f]witnesses[4] against me, and increasest thine indignation upon me; changes[g] and war[5] are against me.

18 Wherefore[h] then hast thou brought me forth out of the womb? Oh that I had given up the ghost, and no eye had seen me!

19 I should have been as though I had not been; I should have been carried from the womb to the grave.

1 Zophar sharply reproveth Job for justifying himself. 7 God's counsels are unsearchable. 13 The assured blessing of repentance.

THEN answered Zophar the Naamathite, and said,

2 Should not the [a]multitude of words be answered? and should a man full of talk[1] be justified?

3 Should thy lies[2] make men hold their peace? and when thou [b]mockest, shall no man make thee ashamed?

body, it supplies the necessary repairs or increase to bone, muscle, and every other part of the frame. C.]

Ver. 11. [The whole process of the growth of the human body is here described by a few graphic touches, which show an extent of anatomical and physiological knowledge that may well surprise the thoughtful student. The last clause is particularly striking:—'Thou hast woven me, intertwined me about with bones and sinews.' P.]

REFLECTIONS.—To be weary of life before God sends us our discharge, is to be unfaithful to the post which he hath given us to maintain. In suffering times we should inquire into their cause that we may answer their end; and chiefly plead for the removal of our sin and of the condemnation on account of it. But those who are awed by the majesty of God often attempt easing their mind in sinful resentments. And under extraordinary troubles it is hard to forbear impeaching the goodness or equity of God by sinful murmurings. The most humble prayers are often mingled with the most peevish and proud expostulations. Neither the views of his omniscient discernment of all our sins, nor the almighty power of his correcting hand, can awe our souls into quiet submission. Nothing but the largest supplies of grace can bridle the tongue in such a case. But when God hides himself as a Saviour his work as a Maker and Preserver should lead us to admiration and thankfulness. When he changes his way towards us, we are to believe that he has reasons hid for it in his heart, which will be shortly manifested. Alas! how sin stares the best of men in the face when God lays them under heavy troubles! Happy are they whose iniquities are pardoned, and in whom the fruit of afflictions is to take away the sin that procured them. But if sins be great, troubles heavy, life and its comforts short, death and its darkness near, let us give ourselves unto prayer. Every trouble is a call from God; and every moment of reprieve from death is an opportunity to prepare for it.

CHAPTER XI. Then Zophar the Naamathite replied, 2. Dost thou think to stop our mouths with a multitude of words, or by thy talkativeness to persuade us thou art innocent? 3. Must no one confute thy false allegations concerning thine own innocence or God's dispensations of providence? And when thou hast so insolently scoffed at God and thy friends, must none expose thee to shame, by pointing forth thy wickedness? 4. Wilt thou dare pretend to God himself that thou art quite pure and unspotted in thy principles and practice? 5. Truly my earnest wish is that he would fully and freely debate the cause with thee, and confute thy mistakes; 6. And that he would show thee the hidden methods of his providence, and reasons of his wise counsels, which infinitely transcend thy conceptions, and make thee to know that thou hast deserved far more affliction than has been laid upon thee. 7. Darest thou pretend, by thy inquiries, fully to know the secrets of his providence, or the reasons of his procedure? 8, 9. Thou mayest sooner measure the height of heaven, or fathom the depth of hell, and describe the surfaces and boundaries of the earth and sea. 10. If he attack a person or family, and shut them up in chains or nets of affliction, or bring them to his public tribunal, who can resist or refute him; or cause him to restore them to liberty? 11. For he knoweth the lovers of, and dealers in, falsehood and vanity. He exactly observes and understands what emptiness and wickedness takes place, however unimportant it appears to us, and thus hath reasons for inflicting trouble that men overlook. 12. Let then the dull and self-conceited pretender to knowledge, who just now spoke, be endued with solid wisdom; and let him who appears as rude and blockish as an ass be formed into a man of understanding. 13. If thou art truly wise, forbear disputing; and in the exercise of faith and hearty repentance, apply thyself to humble supplication. 14. Reform thyself and family from whatever wickedness thou hast indulged. 15. Thus shalt thou be quickly delivered from thy loathsome disease and lamentable condition, and be firmly established in holiness and happiness. 16. The greatness of thy prosperity shall make thee forget all thy present trouble as if it had never been. 17. The remainder of thy life shall be filled up with the most glorious and ever-increasing felicity. Thy present labour, under confounding trouble, shall issue in a fresh, clear, and pleasant morning of prosperity. 18. Thy mind shall be quiet and free from terrors, in the well-grounded confidence of God's favour and protection. Thou shalt dig thy wells of water, or intrench thyself for security, and nothing shall disturb thee or thine. 19. And whilst thou art in perfect peace, without anything to disquiet thee, many, even of the great, shall humbly court thy favour and friendship. 20. But wicked men shall never enjoy the happiness they desire or expect; their refuge from, help under, or escape out of misery is utterly perished. Their firmest hope of happiness is as the giving up of the ghost, a noisy puff of breath, all on a sudden leaving them miserable and desperate.

Ver. 15. [Without spot. Without consciousness of sin, which is as the spot of leprosy, Le. 13. 2, 4, 19; Ep. 5. 27; He. 9. 14. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—It is highly indecent and sinful to be abusive and passionate in religious controversy;

No one is so foolish as to conclude that a complicated machine was ever made by chance: and when it is seen performing its work with more than the precision of rationality, the conclusion is inevitable, that it was designed for that end. But the body of a beast, a fowl, or a fish is a far more curious and more complicated machine, and answers hundreds of purposes that no work of man could accomplish; the conclusion is again inevitable, that the several parts of the creature were designed for their several functions.—C.

and cruel to deal harshly with them whose spirits the Lord has wounded. Harsh censures readily exceed the bounds of truth. Such as are forward in giving the lie to others are ordinarily too guilty of falsehood themselves; and none are more forward in making their appeals to God than they whose cause is bad. How little we know of God's unbounded excellencies, or of the mysteries of his wisdom and will! men often talk well concerning them to serve a bad purpose. But surely it is very unreasonable to complain under troubles, when we have not only a God of deep counsels and unsearchable perfections to deal with; but, in providence, have a mixture of undeserved mercy in the most severe afflictions we meet with. Men often proudly imagine they know much when they are amazingly ignorant: and the more ignorant they are, so are they the more unsettled and ungovernable. But in trouble there is need of a thorough reformation of ourselves and families. Yea, to have our nature changed, our heart lifted up to God in holy desires and self-dedication, and our practice rectified. And the most holy confidence towards God; holy composure in our own mind; comfortable reflection on troubles; and joyful expectation of peace, joy, and honour, attend upon sincere and gospel repentance. If God establish us we shall not fail; nor need we fear what all the powers of hell and earth can do against us. Though we may for a little suffer an eclipse, we shall at last, without spot, shine forth in the kingdom of our Father. If the anchor of our hope be fixed on the faithfulness of God, no storms can hurt or endanger our security.—But unavoidable misery awaits the impenitent; and if not before, the hope of the wicked always expires in death.

CHAPTER XII. To this Job replied, 2. No doubt you think yourselves the only men upon earth who understand divine things, by whose death all solid knowledge will be rooted out from the world. 3. But believe it, I, and even the weakest of mankind, understood all that you have said of God's infinite wisdom, power, and justice. 4. I am indeed insolently mocked by you, my fellow-professors, even while you promise me great prosperity in answer to my prayers. But it has been the common lot of upright men to be made the butts of derision by their wicked neighbours. 5. The best of men, when reduced to the point of perishing, are generally contemned and hissed at by those who wallow in worldly ease and affluence. 6. But it is certain that the most wicked and mischievous persons often prosper remarkably in this world. 7, 8. The beasts and fowls which they live upon, or are served by, can teach you pretenders to wisdom this: the earth, that affords them her plentiful and delicious fruits; and the fishes of the sea, which gratify their appetites, plainly manifest this. 9, 10. And even the most stupid of mankind must know that this is ordered by the providence of God, who is the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of both animals and men. 11, 12. Cannot our mind distinguish truth from falsehood as exactly as the palate can do sweet from bitter? And the older we grow the more wise we ought to become. 13. Much more with the eternal God is there wisdom to know all, and strength to do everything. He never mistakes in his conceptions, nor miscarries in his purposes. 14. Behold, he destroys cities, families, persons, and things; and none can restore them. He shuts up men in prisons or troubles, and none can bring them out. 15. At one time he withholds rain, or restrains the springs, and the waters dry up. Anon he sends forth the rains and fountains with unbridled liberty, and the torrents of water overturn the strongest banks. 16. Nor is his wisdom inferior to his power. The sin of the deceiver, and the sufferings of the deceived, are both ordered by him to his glory. 17. He defeats the projects of the wisest statesmen, and infatuates the ablest senators. 18. He deprives kings of their royal majesty and authority, and reduces them to slavery and imprisonment. 19. The most devout priests, or the noblest ministers of state, he renders captives; and overthrows the most powerful armies of warriors. 20. Eloquence, fidelity, and prudence, gained by long experience, are rendered quite unavailable for the protection of princes or kingdoms. 21. He renders the greatest princes contemptible, and the strongest persons or armies weak. 22. He brings to light the most secret plots; makes plain the mysteries of doctrine or providence; and advances such as were poor, obscure, condemned, or imprisoned, to liberty and glory, to honour and wealth. 23. At his pleasure he increases nations in number, power, wealth, and honour; and anon diminishes them by famine, war, and pestilence. He enlarges their boundaries, and anon shuts them up into corners. 24. Princes, magistrates, and others, he deprives of courage and wisdom; and throws them into such confusion that they know not which way to turn themselves. 25. Without either sense or success, they seek for ways to help themselves and their people out of trouble; but by his providential influence they are quite uncertain in their counsels, and doubtful what course to take.

Ver. 2. [Wisdom shall die with you. Were this a mere irony, as many interpreters assume, then would not Job immediately claim equal wisdom for himself (ver. 3), but plead comparative ignorance, to make the irony effective. But irony is not a figure for deep and poignant affliction. The phrase is not therefore irony, but a simple acknowledgment that his learned friends were wise, and would be accompanied with wisdom to the grave. C.]

Ver. 5. [Ready to slip—to fall through the exhaustion of losses and weight of troubles. A lamp despised—a lamp that is dying out, whose former light is ungratefully forgotten. C.]

Ver. 6. [The tabernacles of robbers prosper. Of this fact Job could furnish the evidence of the Sabean and Chaldean marauders on a small scale, and that of the most distinguished conquerors, who have been but robbers on a great scale. Witness Nebuchadnezzar in after-times robbing the very temple of God, 2 Ki. 25. 13-17. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing is more disgusting and offensive than proud boasting; and a high conceit of our own importance is extremely foolish and sinful; contempt is all that is ordinarily gained by it. It is but just to allow others a share of reason and wisdom as well as ourselves. But often they who riot in prosperity contemn and reproach the afflicted, especially if they be religious. And peevish minds are sometimes apt to take well-meant reproofs for ill-natured and he maketh them to stagger[6] like a drunken man.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Job reproveth his friends of false reasoning and partiality. 14 He professeth his confidence in God: 20 and entreateth to know his own sins, and God's purpose in afflicting him.

LO, mine[a] eye hath seen all this;[1] mine ear hath heard and understood it.

2 What[b] ye know, the same do I know also: I am not inferior unto you.

3 Surely I [c]would speak to the Almighty, and I desire to reason with God.[2]

4 But ye are [d]forgers of lies,[3] ye are all physicians of no value.

5 O [e]that ye would altogether hold your peace; and it should be your wisdom.

6 Hear[f] now my reasoning, and hearken to the pleadings of my lips.

7 Will[g] ye speak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully[h] for him?

8 Will ye [i]accept his person?[5] will ye contend for God?

9 Is it good that he should [j]search you out? or as one man mocketh another, do ye so [k]mock him?[6]

10 He will surely [l]reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons.

11 Shall not his [m]excellency make you afraid? and his dread fall upon you?

12 Your[n] remembrances are like unto ashes,[7] your bodies to bodies of clay.

reproaches. Mankind are rarely able to give things of importance a fair trial. Those who are fast running to hell often get large portions of earthly things, even the most delicate, in their way to it. But their abuse of God's creatures in this world shall witness against them, and will but increase their torments in the next. The most instructive lessons concerning God are afforded us in the volumes of creation and providence. But how mad and criminal is it to attempt contending with him who hath all possible excellence in possession, and doth according to his will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth! No king so high but he can bring down; no politician so crafty or eloquent, but he can infatuate; no plot so well laid, but he can frustrate; no nation so mighty, but he can destroy with his nod; no general so brave, but he can intimidate. Be thou wise, my soul, to observe these things; so shalt thou understand the loving-kindness of the Lord.

CHAPTER XIII. Behold, all these things I know from my own experience and observation, or have learned from others; whereby you may see that I need none of your instructions on these points. 3. It is with God himself that I wish to debate my own integrity, and to answer his objections against it; 4. For ye are all forgers of false doctrines and accusations against me; you unskilfully and unfaithfully prescribe bad remedies for my affliction, and misapply good ones. 5, 6. It would be more agreeable to me, and show more wisdom in you, if ye would never speak a word more on the subject, but carefully listen to what I can say in my own behalf. 7. Doth God stand in need of your false doctrines, or your false accusations of me, contrary to the dictates of your own conscience, to justify his proceedings against me? 8. Hath he so little right on his side, that you must show him favour, and oblige him by wronging me? 9. Would it be for your honour or advantage that he should narrowly examine your discourses, and the springs and motives of them? Do ye think that he will be deceived with your flatteries and high pretences to piety? 10. No; he will certainly, fearfully, and openly chastise you for your hypocritical attempts to gratify him by condemning me. 11. Should not his infinite majesty, holiness, and awful justice make you afraid to deal unjustly, even on his behalf, or to speak rashly of his ways and counsels? 12. Ye yourselves are but mean worms, sprung out of the dust before him; and your boasted remonstrances on his behalf, and your bulwarks of arguments, are worthless and weak, as heaps of dirt or clay. 13. Keep silence therefore, and do not interrupt my speech; let me but speak out my mind, be the penal issue of it what it will. 14. I am so conscious of my integrity, that I must wonder why I suffer such enraging miseries, and am exposed to such evils; and I could risk all danger to obtain a thorough reasoning with God. 15. Lo! should he utterly cut me off, and not leave me the least glimmering of hope, I would, to the last gasp, maintain mine integrity. 16. Nay, I am confident that he himself, with whom no hypocrite dare lodge his appeal, will in due time vindicate me, preserve me in or deliver me from trouble; and save me with an everlasting salvation. 17, 18. Hear me then with care and attention: I have formed a process against myself, and digested what I have to say for myself; and I know that, in the issue, I shall be cleared from every charge of hypocrisy, and manifested a righteous person. 19. What impartial person dare charge me with hypocrisy, or can prove his point? If he could, I should be silent, die with shame, and be strangled with grief. But when it is otherwise, it is death to me to neglect my own just vindication. 20–22. Do thou, great Judge, remove thy oppressing rod from off me, and let not the overwhelming awe of thy majesty terrify me: then will I, in the most bold and free manner, debate my cause with thee. 23. What, and how many, O God, are those heinous sins which require such grievous punishments? Or if I am thus afflicted for some particular crime, cause me to know it. 24. Why shouldest thou in anger thus withhold thy favours and comforts? Why shouldest thou hold and treat me as an enemy to thee? 25. How canst thou find in thy heart so violently to toss and grievously persecute me, who am so mean, weak, and contemptible in thy sight? And what honour canst thou acquire by it? 26. Thou passest the most severe sentence against me; and by afflicting me with the most tormenting troubles, bringest to my mind, and punishest me for, the crimes which were committed before I well knew what I did. 27. Thy fearful judgments compass me in so close and tormenting a manner that I cannot escape. They follow me at the very heels; the tokens of thy wrath are engraven on the very soles of my feet. 28 And under these my frail carcass gradually rots into death.

Ver. 1. ['This' is not in the original, and the sense would be better expressed by its omission: 'Lo, mine eye hath seen all,' i.e. all that you have seen. My knowledge is as extensive as yours, consequently my judgments and views are deserving of as much credit as yours. P.]

Ver. 7. [Wickedly—wrongfully accusing me with the view of honouring him. Deceitfully—fallaciously, sophistically. C.]

Ver. 12. [Delitzsch translates as follows:—'Your memorable words are proverbs of dust, your strongholds are become strongholds of clay.' The meaning is that their proverbs have no bearing on the questions at issue, and are therefore as ashes; their 'strongholds,' or 'choice arguments,' are weak and worthless as ramparts of clay. P.]

Ver. 14. [Job may literally have taken his 'flesh in his teeth' to alleviate some torturing pain, as in the mercy of God pressure sometimes affords relief. Put my life in my hand—freely offering it back to the Giver, longing and praying for death. All this is no want of reliance upon God, no wish to escape his scrutiny and judgment; for though he slay me, yet will I trust in him. C.——'Wherefore should I bear my flesh in my teeth? I take my life in my hands:' i.e. Wherefore should I be intent on the preservation of my life, as a wild beast on the preservation of its prey, by carrying it away between its teeth? I will calmly submit to whatever danger comes, even to death itself. P.]

Ver. 27. [Thou puttest my feet also in the stocks. Of what kind they were is not known. From the following reference to paths, they were most probably a species of clog locked on the foot, and used to prevent a slave or prisoner from escaping.—Settest a print upon the heels of my feet. The allusion is very obscure; but if and [m]lookest narrowly unto all my paths; thou [n]set'est a print upon the heels of my feet.

28 And [o] he, as a rotten thing, consumeth as a garment that is moth-eaten.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Job entreateth God for favour, by the shortness of life, and certainty of death. 7 Though life once lost be irrecoverable, yet he waiteth for his change. 18 By sin the creature is subject to corruption.

MAN[1] that is born of a woman is [a]of few days,[2] and full of trouble.

2 He[b] cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he [c]fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not.

3 And dost thou [d]open thine eyes upon such an one, and bringest me into judgment with thee?

4 Who[3] can[e] bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one.

5 Seeing [f]his days are determined, the number of his months are with thee; thou hast appointed[g] his bounds that he cannot pass.

6 Turn[h] from him, that he may rest,[4] till he shall accomplish, as an hireling, his day.

7 For there is [i]hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease.

8 Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground;

9 Yet through the scent[6] of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant.

10 But man dieth, and wasteth away;[7] yea, man giveth up the ghost, and [j]where is he?[8]

REFLECTIONS.—Hot disputants generally magnify themselves and undervalue their opponents; and too seldom do they adhere to truth with proper exactness. There is great need then to pray that the Lord would mortify our pride, and keep us from the way of lying; and so far as is for his glory, keep us out of temptation. Deliberate lying is of all things most infamous. But what insignificant physicians are all but Christ to a sin-sick or wrath-sick soul! It is singularly criminal to manage the cause of God in a wicked and deceitful manner. What men call pious frauds are with God impious cheats; and devout persecutions are but horrid profanations of his name. Strict will be the scrutiny, and severe the rebukes of God, with respect to those found guilty of these things! No good intentions, no pious pretence, will avail at his awful bar. Let us then stand in awe of his perfections. Never let us, who are so mean and mortal, dare to contemn or trample on our neighbour. Never let us dare to exhibit weak and carnal remonstrances on God's behalf. But how supporting is it under trouble to have the testimony of a good conscience! and it is relieving to get our minds vented in kindly complaints. It is glorious, in the extremity of trouble, to be strong in the faith, giving glory to God, and coming boldly to his throne of grace, to ask mercy, and obtain grace to help us in the time of need. But how awful is it to find the greatest saints mingling their passions with their prayers! Lord, what is man, even in his best estate, if left to himself! And what a hell on earth sin sometimes forms for even the children of God! Sins long before committed fall with an awful weight on their conscience, and cause them to roar through disquiet of spirit. If then I find myself deserted of God; if I find my sins of youth remembered by him, and my present miscarriages strictly animadverted upon; if I find myself wasting away under his heavy hand, let me never murmur at his dispensations. Let me, holding fast his promise, believe him to be my friend, even when he puts on the appearance of an enemy. Let me firmly expect the performance of his promises, even when all the ways leading to it are seemingly shut up. Let me rejoice in the Lord when he hath left me nothing else; and in dying moments let me derive from him my ever-living consolation.

CHAPTER XIV. Man that is born of a poor, weak, frail woman, through whom he derives guilt, curses, corruptions, and infirmities, is of few days, and so surfeited with troubles that he needs pity rather than a violent hand to cut him off. 2. He makes a sparkling and fair show for a few days or hours, and then is cut down by an untimely death, or gradually, and without substantial happiness, posts through age into the eternal state. 3. And wilt thou, O God, debase thyself to take notice of, frown on, or contend with such an insignificant creature, or to hale to thy tribunal and execute strict justice upon me! 4. How is it possible for such as are sinfully corrupted themselves to produce innocent children! Why then should I, who am by nature no worse than others, be so peculiarly punished? 5, 6. Since the period of every man's life is unalterably fixed by thy purpose and providence, why shouldest thou now torment, and not let me alone, till I have contentedly accomplished my appointed service, and obtained the wished-for evening of death? 7-12. And the rather since there is no hope that men once dead will revive into life like the stumps of old trees in a well-watered soil; but will be crumbled into dust, and quite insensible, till the last day. 13. O that thou wouldest hide me in the state of the dead, and cover me with a vail, till this storm of thy wrath blow over! or set some limit of time and degree to thy wrath, and in pity remember me! 14. Then, however impossible it be for men to rise from the dead before the last day, I should patiently, all the days of my troublesome warfare, wait for my dying hour; and no less patiently wait for my glorious change at the resurrection. 15. Then, in love to thy poor creature, thou shouldest by death call me to thy judgment-seat, and I should readily come: and at the resurrection thou shalt, in love to me, call me up from the grave, and I will gladly obey. 16. But now thou wrathfully observest all the steps of my life, and, as it were, greedily markest the smallest trips of my conduct in order to punish them. 17. The least of my sins of infirmity is as carefully preserved in thy remembrance against me as if it were a precious treasure; and thou huntest after forged calumnies to add to my sin and punish me for it. 18, 19. But there is no more hope of men's recovery from death, or of me from this calamity, than that fallen mountains should raise themselves up, or removed rocks resume their place, or worn stones should grow again; or that which is carried away by a flood should be brought back and the devastations repaired. 20. None can resist thy deadly stroke, but must pass into eternity whenever thou requirest. Thou wrathfully changest his countenance, spoilest his beauty, and expellest him as a leper from thy camp on earth. 21. And then whatever glory, power, or honour, or whatever debasement, disgrace, or misery, his posterity meet with, he neither knows nor regards it. 22. But his body, after pains in death, shall corrupt in the grave; and his soul, imbittered in death, often removes to an eternal anguish in hell.

Ver. 4. [As water cannot by its own gravity rise higher than its fountainhead, neither can a descendant of Adam and Eve become by their own efforts better than they; and they, alas! were ungrateful rebels. Blessed be his name who, while we were yet enemies, hath reconciled us by the death of his Son, Ro.5.10. C.]

Ver. 5. ['Job had before deplored his miserable state by nature, ch. 3. 1, and he here acknowledges himself to have been conceived and born in sin, cf. ## CHAPTER XV.

1 Eliphaz reproveth Job of impiety in justifying himself. 17 He proveth from tradition the disquietude of wicked men.

THEN answered Eliphaz the Temanite, and said,

2 Should[a] a wise man utter vain knowledge,[1] and fill his belly with the east wind?[2]

3 Should he reason with [b]unprofitable talk? or with speeches wherewith he can do no good?

4 Yea, [c]thou castest off fear, and restrainest prayer[3] before God.[4]

5 For thy mouth [d]uttereth thine iniquity, and thou choosest the tongue of the crafty.

6 Thine own mouth [e]condemneth thee, and not I; yea, thine own lips testify against thee.

7 Art thou [f]the first man that was born? or wast thou made before the hills?

10 With us are both [i]the grey-headed and very aged men, much elder than thy father.

REFLECTIONS. If human life be so short, so sinful, and so wretched; if death and an awful eternity be so near; why should any be proud! Why unconcerned about spiritual, about eternal happiness! Why not live on that gracious God who hath a feeling of our infirmities; and look and long for that rest which remaineth for the people of God! Awful and awakening, though comfortable and heart-composing, are believing views of death and of the resurrection from the dead: and happy is the thought that while my body, as precious dust, sleeps in Jesus' arms of kindly care, my soul shall retire to sit with him on his throne, and there wait till my great, my last change come! If grace has changed my heart, death hath changed its nature to me: and the hope of a glorious resurrection is enough to support me under every human trouble. Everything around admonishes me of death: and nothing can resist it when God gives it the commission. Sharp are its pains and strange is the change it makes! It separates the chiefest friends! In view of it, to render me always content, let me maintain kind thoughts of God and a deep sense of my sin. And at last let it find me weaned from this perishing world, disengaged from all but a God in Christ; and singing, O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory!

CHAPTER XV. Filled with indignation at the contempt which Job had discovered for him and his friends, Eliphaz replied. 2. Shouldest thou, who pretendest to wisdom, presume to throw forth such unsubstantial and boisterous nonsense; or to satisfy thy own conscience with such pernicious fancies? 3. Shouldest thou, instead of solid arguments, pour forth unprofitable wranglings? 4. Nay, shouldest thou cast off, and break through, all reverential regard to God, and refuse to pour forth thy humble complaints and prayers before him; and even tempt others to do the like? 5. Thy tongue proclaims the wickedness of thy heart, even while, by pretences of respect to God, thou attemptest to cover thy impious principles and practices. 6. I need produce no evidence of thy impiety; thy own words sufficiently manifest and prove it. 7. Wast thou formed before every other creature that thou pretendest to be wiser and better than other men? 8. Hast thou been acquainted with the most secret counsels and mysteries of God that thou shouldest engross all wisdom to thyself? 9. What secrets hast thou learned that we do not fully comprehend? 10. Among us, and on our side in this debate, we have the most aged and experienced men. 11. Darest thou to contemn the divine admonitions and comforting promises which we have suggested, and undervalue our kind and consoling discourses, as if thou knewest some better way of comfort? 12. Why do thy inward lusts thus violently transport thee into such pride, fury, and scornful contempt. 13. That thou shouldest dare to rage against the Most High, and insolently arraign the equity of his providence? 14. Can the corrupted child of a sinful parent be innocent or righteous before an infinitely holy God? 15, 16. When the loftiest angels are not without their mutability and comparative imperfections, how inexpressibly and universally abominable must the man be who, with greediness and delight, commits the most criminal impieties? 17–19. Listen carefully while I clearly declare and demonstrate unto thee what I myself have observed, and which the wisest, most powerful, and wealthy princes of former ages have observed, professed, or believed, and informed their children of. 20. The wicked tyrant is never free from inward torment; he lives in continual dread of disasters, death, and damnation, never knowing how soon they may overtake him. 21. Consciousness of guilt keeps him in perpetual terror of approaching mischiefs. And never is the destroyer more ready to attack him than when he is in the height of his prosperity. 22. In trouble he despairs of deliverance; in the night he dreads being killed before morning; everywhere he fears; and is indeed exposed to the most certain and sudden destruction. 23. In the most destitute and vagabond manner he is obliged to wander for bread. He finds, by experience, that terrible and inevitable ruin is just ready to seize him. 24. Straitening distress and anguish shall terrify him; they shall quickly rush on and prevail against him, as a strong and furious army commanded by a valiant prince: 25. As the punishment of his daring impiety, because he defied and set himself in opposition to the Almighty. 26. Daring to sin in the most insolent and presumptuous manner, even amidst the tokens of the divine indignation, inflicted or impending; 27. Because, grown rich, powerful, and successful, his only care is to pamper himself, and wallow in ease and luxury; 28. Dwelling in cities and stately houses, from whence he had driven, or murdered, the righteous proprietors; and which, by the curse of God, for his sake shall be quickly reduced to heaps of ruins, and he be obliged to shift for himself in the most miserable manner. 29. The riches and glory which he hath gotten by violence and oppression shall neither be lasting, complete, nor firmly rooted. 30. Having once entered into terrible and confounding troubles he shall never get out of them. The lightning, like flames of God's wrath, shall destroy his flourishing family and substance; and he himself shall be ruined and driven to hell by the threatened judgments of God, amidst his proud boasting. 31. Let therefore no one who is seduced to wicked or carnal security, trust in the uncertain profits, pleasures, or honours of this world, for vexations, losses, disappointments, and troubles shall be all he will get by them. 32, 33. These shall come upon him far sooner than he thinks. His riches, hopes, or children shall scarcely make their appearance, when, blasted by the justice of God, they shall all be reduced to ruin. 34. Thus suddenly and fearfully shall the stock and numerous family of hypocrites be utterly destroyed; and some terrible judgment of God shall consume the house built up by or stored with ill-gotten goods. 35. With no small pains such wicked men plot and practise mischief against others; but in the issue it usually brings ruin upon themselves.

Ver. 10. [The argument from experience is a good one; that from mere age is nothing. To give experience weight, there must be, (1) Capacity to observe; (2) Right disposition of heart towards God and man; (3) Light of truth, light of the Spirit (1 Jn. 5. 6) to guide; (4) Memory accurately to recollect, 1 Co. 15. 2); and (5) Sound judgment to compare and decide, 2 Tim. 5. 7. Truly such experience is a glorious guide to the possessor and to others; but all other experience, however lengthened, is but that of a blind man with colours—study without discovery, and words without meaning to him that utters them. C.]

Ver. 20. [From ver. 20 to the end of the chapter the speaker appears to be reciting the choice sayings of the sages of antiquity. This speech, therefore, is deserving of special note. It affords a most interesting view of the philosophy, morality, and theology of remote antiquity. There is a depth of thought, a force of truth, and terseness and beauty of expression in these words which give a high idea of Job's Arab forefathers. P.]

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Job reproveth his friends of inhumanity toward him. 7 He showeth the pitifulness of his case. 17 He maintaineth his innocency.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 I have heard many such things; [a]miserable comforters are ye all.

3 Shall [b]vain words have an end? or what emboldeneth thee that thou answerest?

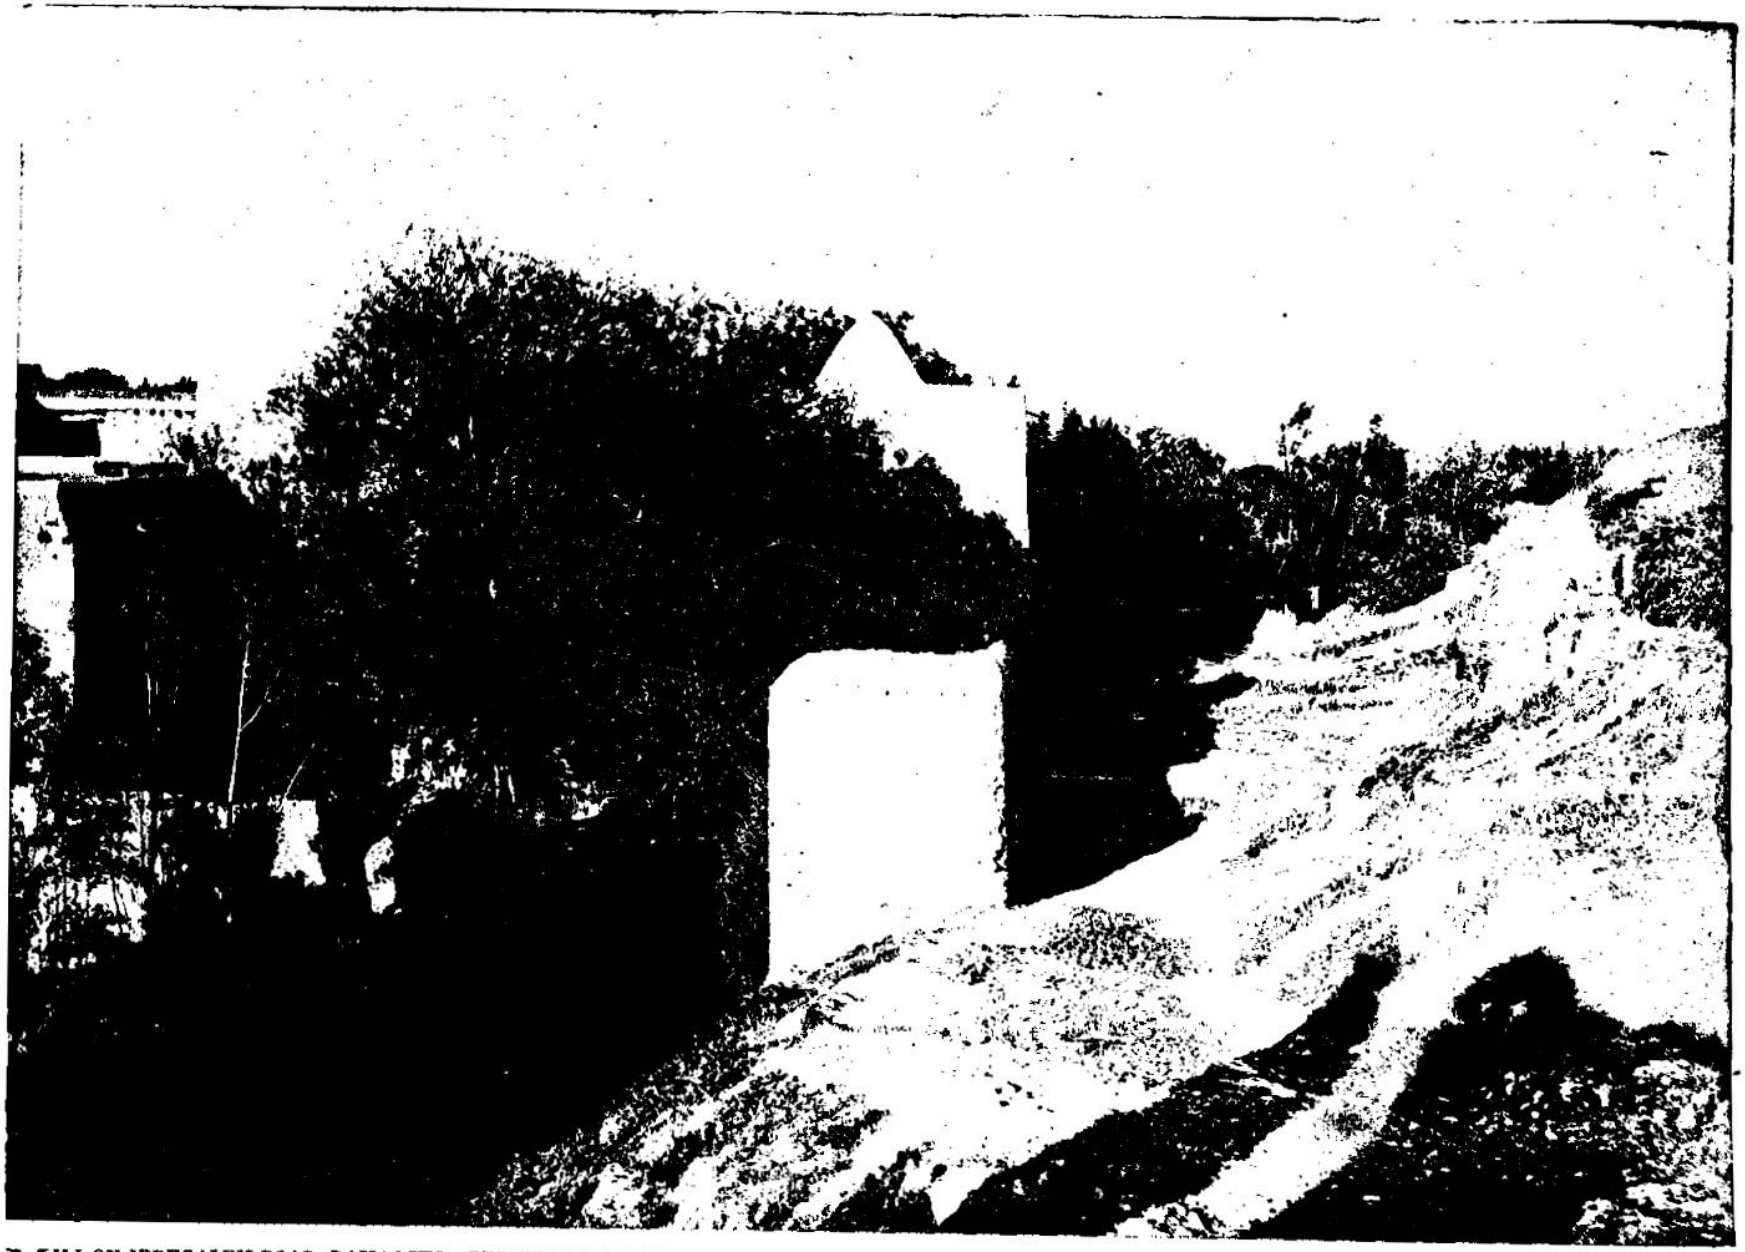
4 I also [c]could speak as ye do: if your soul were in my soul's stead, I could heap up words against you, and [d]shake mine head at you.

desolate his cities, and scatters his ill-gotten wealth. The verification of which may be specially seen in the ruined cities of Edom, where we believe Job dwelt; the ruins, the very tombs of which are now inhabited by such a wretched race—wretched in poverty and wickedness—as Job here describes. C.——It would appear that two distinct classes of sin are here traced, both of which eventually entail punishment:—1. Arrogant opposition to God, described in ver. 25–27. Rebellion, insolence, defiance, and carnal security are the developments of this arrogance. 2. Callous and proud contentment on the ruins of the prosperity of other men, as set forth in ver. 28. Here the powerful sinner is represented as taking possession, with haughty carelessness, of those cities and houses which had been desolated by the judgment of Heaven; and which were intended to remain as perpetual monuments of God's wrath. P.]

Ver. 33. [The olive-tree only bears fruit fully every second year. But it blossoms with equal luxuriance every year. In those years in which it does not bear the blossoms fall off; no berries are formed. How graphic, therefore, is the language of this verse! P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Men too often hold fast the false principles which they have once imbibed: and it is much easier to treat an adversary with contempt than to answer him with reason. Disputants often turn revilers rather than reasoners; and charge their opponents with things which they utterly abhor. And none are more ready to indulge pride and self-conceit in themselves than those who rage against it in their neighbours! Old men often rather boast of their knowledge and wisdom than possess it. But surely it is a humbling sight to see men so corrupt in nature, so abominable in practice; and amazing that God should love any such, and deliver them from the pit of corruption! In the study of true knowledge the experience and observation of others, as well as our own, are an excellent help. But how unbounded is the patience of God that can bear with wicked monsters so long! Yet little external happiness have they even in this world. Their seemingly purest prosperity is mingled with gall and wormwood. But if they are miserable in this world, which is their heaven, what must they be in death, in judgment, in hell!

CHAPTER XVI. To this Job replied, 2. Thou hast but repeated the senseless and tormenting jargon which I had heard before. Instead of comforting, you plague, harass, and tempt me to despair. 3. When will thou make an end of such idle and impertinent discourse? What has instigated and emboldened thee to answer me in this censorious, scornful, and peremptory manner? 4. Were your condition and mine exchanged I could easily insult you with a multitude of words, and deride you in a grave or scornful manner. 5. I could furiously bear you down with my mouth, and restrain my lips from uttering a single sentence of consolation;—though I hope I should rather attempt to encourage, strengthen, and comfort you. 6. But now, indeed, whether I boldly defend my innocence and pour forth my complaints, or whether I forbear, my frightful sores and griefs are nothing eased. 7. This terrible trouble has quite tired me out, and made my life a burden to me. Thou, O God, hast, with thy thunderbolts and fiery tempest, utterly destroyed my large family and all that pertained to me. 8. While others murder my character and torment my spirit, thou, by plagues and griefs, hast so wasted and disfigured my body that it testifies my great affliction, and is employed against me as a witness of my great wickedness. 9. Meanwhile my pretended friends, who indeed implacably hate me, tear my reputation and torment my spirit with their speeches. They reproach me in the most spiteful and outrageous manner; and while their eyes sparkle with anger, they cruelly set themselves to spy out every, even the least, occasion to calumniate me. 10. They behave like wild beasts, gaping to devour or deride me; they treat me with the most cruel and abusive scorn and contempt; they have met together to satisfy their infernal malice in tormenting me. 11. And God hath quite abandoned me, chained me up, and dreadfully cast me down into the hands of these and other wicked men, to be abused by them as they please. 12. Great was my former happiness and prosperity; but now God has trodden and bruised me in the press of his wrath, and made me, as it were, to boil over with dregs of trouble and desperate complaints. In the most tormenting manner he has ruined my soul, body, my children, and all that I had: he has set up as a distinguished butt of his fearful indignation. 13. Devils, wicked men, calamities and diseases, as the instruments of his judgment, compass me round about. Without mercy he torments me with the most exquisite pains in my body, anguish of mind, and terrors of conscience. 14. As a battering-ram he breaks through me with breach upon breach, still adding one dreadful plague to another: he furiously rushes upon me with the almighty force of his wrath, which I can by no means withstand or support. 15. The sackcloth I had put on all over my body, to mark my deep mourning and humiliation under his mighty hand, sticks to my ulcers; and exhausted with wounds of trouble, I have sat down on this dunghill, where all my former authority and honour are changed into contempt. 16. My face is terribly burned and tormented with trickling tears; and the very substance of my eyes is almost consumed with weeping, so that I look like one dead and rotting; 17. Although I was never a violent oppressor of men, or a hypocritical worshipper of God. 18. O earth, if I have been guilty of bloodshed or oppression, conceal it not: let the dogs lick my blood when I am dead, and let neither God nor men regard my complaints or cries for pity while I am alive! 19. But what need these imprecations when even now the all-seeing God, who dwells in the lofty regions of heaven, is the ear and the eye witness of my virtue and true piety! 20. My companions mock and scoff at me as a hypocrite; but my soul, with floods of tears, earnestly appeals to God and begs, 21. That he would thoroughly and clearly examine my cause, and give a decision between me and my reproaching friends; 22. Since, if it be not done quickly, my troubles will soon make an end of me, and then it will be too late.



Ver. 4. [It is worthy of remark that this signal of contempt was used against our Lord upon the cross, Mat. 27. 39; Mar. 15. 29. But like all other visible signs of thought or feeling, it may have various significations, but usually those of doubt, sorrow, dissatisfaction, or scorn. C.——Job's anger is now kindled by the reproaches and false accusations of his 'vexatious comforters.' He shows his anger in his bitter and passionate retort. His anger not only leads him to sinful excess in replying to his assailants, but even to assume something like a tone of irreverence toward God. P.]

Ver. 7. [Turning from his accusers Job here directs his words to God, whom he regards as the cause of all his sufferings. It is now painful to hear Job's repinings and complaints. P.]

Ver. 15. [Horn. The horn of an animal is often both its defence and ornament. Hence the horn has been employed in Scripture as the emblem of power and glory, De. 33. 17; Ps. 132. 17. Job's losses, though great, had still left him the possession of his lands; but he had laid down all his emblems of authority, and humbled himself in the dust. C.]

Ver. 18. These are words of deep pathos and great power. Yet they show that Job was not yet conscious of his true state as a sinner. He dares even to appeal to Heaven for a testimony of his innocence, and consequently, to some extent, of the injustice dealt out to him. His faith, however, has not yet deserted him. For life he has no hope, but he looks beyond it. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Often much is said, and yet nothing to the purpose: and miserable comforters to a wounded spirit are all duties, all friends, if God continue his frowns! Nothing but Jesus' blood—nothing but JEHOVAH'S mercy—can grant any solid relief. Nay, alas! men are often most cruel and harsh when they ought to be most tender and compassionate: and those who riot in prosperity and ease seldom lay much to heart the case of their extremely distressed brethren. But though complicated and terrible are the troubles of saints in this world, unspeakably more so are the troubles of the wicked in hell, where there is nothing but remorse—but torment in all its horror! Happy are they who are here purged in God's furnace! They sow in tears, but shall reap in joy. And however hard it be to bring down their mind to their lot, the testimony of their good conscience, sprinkled with Jesus' blood, shall comfort them now. They have a good

MILL ON JERUSALEM ROAD, DAMASCUS—THE TRADING POINT OF THE HAURAN WHERE JOB LIVED. [Job xvi: 1.]—The traditions of the Arabs which make the Hauran in the neighborhood of Damascus, the home of Job, are not to be despised. In no part of the world have the native races undergone so little change as in this region. To this very day the descendants of the contemporaries of Job, and perhaps his own, live on the same plains once occupied by their ancestors. This gives to the tradition that fixed the home of Job in the Hauran a very different value from what it would have in a country where the people were continually changing. Chrysostom, speaking of pilgrimages in his day, said: "Many pilgrims come from the ends of the earth to Arabia in order to seek for the dung hill on which Job lay, and with rapture to kiss the ground where he suffered." We give as illustrating this traditional history concerning the land of Uz a picture of the mill on the Jerusalem Road at Damascus.

1 Job appealeth from men to God. 6 The unmerciful dealing of men with the afflicted may astonish, but not discourage the righteous. 11 His hope is no longer in life, but in death.

MY breath is corrupt,[1] my days are extinct, the[a] graves are ready for me.

2 Are there not [b]mockers with me? and doth not mine eye continue[2] in their provocation?[3]

6 He hath made me also a [f]by-word of the people; and aforetime[5] I was as a tabret.

God to appeal to as their judge and friend. Their tears shall be put into his bottle and marked in his book; and death, but destitute of its sting, shall soon set the prisoners free into a glorious eternity.

CHAPTER XVII. My spirit is maimed, broken, and confounded with trouble; and my breath stinks, as in dying persons: the days of my life are thunderstruck, shortened, and debased: nothing but the grave remains for me. 2. O God, do not my friends bitterly mock and deride me as a wicked hypocrite? And does not my mind so dwell and pore on their proud, insolent, and exasperating speeches that I cannot sleep nor mine eyes refrain from tears? 3. Come then, give me undoubted assurance that thou wilt take my cause in hand and do me justice; or give me an impartial man like myself, who in thy stead shall debate the matter with me. 4. For as for these my friends, thou hast withheld from them a common capacity to understand thy providential dispensations, therefore they can never be honoured to judge my plea. 5. He who flatters friends in their wickedness because of their prosperity, or who manifestly makes a prey of them, his posterity shall pine away in disappointment and misery. 6. Alas! both God and my friends now combine to expose me to the common contempt of the people, though lately I was their darling and the matter of their praise. 7. My eyes are rendered dim, and my mind stupified with grief, and my body is wasted to a skeleton. 8. Upright saints in after-times shall be astonished at the sovereign dispensations of God, and the cruel abuse of my friends, with respect to me; and shall be excited to the utmost detestation of hypocrites who uncharitably censure the afflicted. 9. And, notwithstanding every scandal or discouragement, persons truly righteous shall persevere in their course of piety and virtue, and become more and more confirmed and active in it. 10. And as for you, my friends, either repent of your rash censures, or examine my cause over again; for hitherto none of you have spoken to the point. 11. Whatever hopes you give me of recovering my wonted prosperity, I find I am a dying man, and all my designs, even the most fixed and dear, are at an end. 12. My tormenting pains and anxious thoughts keep me awake through the whole night; or if I get any moments of ease, it is but little and soon over 13. I expect, I wait for nothing now but an entrance into the state of the dead; and I have prepared for and expect speedily to lie down in the grave. 14. In the form of my trouble, and in the exercise of my mind, I have contracted a relation to and familiarity with death, corruption, and worms. 15. The future prosperity with which you attempt to flatter me, and the temporal happiness you would have me expect, are a mere imagination 16. These hopes shall quickly appear buried in the grave along with myself.

Ver. 1. [The graves are ready for me. The sepulchres of Edom are generally in extensive chambers, scooped out in the rocks. In these are numerous niches or shelves ready to receive the dead bodies. C.]

Ver. 3. ['Lay down now, be bondsman (or surety) for me with thyself; who else should furnish surety to me?' This is a very remarkable passage. God is conceived of by Job in a double capacity; as a judge, who tries and condemns Job for his sins, and as a bondsman or surety, who takes the place of the guilty, and pledges himself for him. It would seem that Job was enabled by faith to look to Christ, the great Saviour and redeemer of the people. P.]

Ver. 5. [Not merely shall he be disappointed, but his children shall be ruined through his vain and unfulfilled expectations. C.]

Ver. 6. [Tabret. The translation of this word is diversified, according to the opinion entertained of its derivation. As it is, however, evident that Job is speaking of the present, and not of his past condition, we are disposed to adopt the translation of Tyndale, 'He hath made me a by-word of the common people. I am his jesting-stock among them.' Heath translates it prodigy, and Good translates it dotard. C.——'And I became as one in whose face they spit; that is, an utter abomination. The parallelism shows that this is the true meaning of the Hebrew word tophet. P.]

Ver 13. [Job gives way to despair. His comforters had become tormentors. They had shown utter ignorance of his state, his sufferings, and his wants; and now he resigns himself to his fate:—'If I hope, it is for the grave as my house; in darkness I make my bed.' P.]

Ver 16 [Job's only hope of relief is in death. He believes his disease to be incurable; his life is miserable; he longs for its close; and in the grave alone does he see rest from trial and sorrow. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those who have spiritual breath which cannot corrupt; life that can never fail; who have their portion in eternal blessedness, and are ready for their grave! If cruel friends exasperate my spirit and drive sleep from mine eyes, let Jesus, as my surety and redeemer, be the ground of all my hope and the source of all my joys. God can easily infatuate the wisest when they abuse his gifts. And it is mad to pursue honour and advancements by sinful methods, particularly in employing the wisdom which he has given against his cause and interest. Vain is the inconstant applause of men. While we are great the world admire us; but when depressed and poor they contemn or abhor us. But though we see things in providence which we cannot account for, we must not stagger through unbelief. And if we are faithful to God we must be zealous for his cause and take part with his oppressed people, whose bitterest enemies are usually formal hypocrites. They who are through faith brought into the way, Jesus Christ, and a course of holiness, strive not to faint or fail; nay, even difficulties and opposition quicken them. Many great pretenders to wisdom can give no profitable instructions in a day of trial; and empty are the promises and vain the hopes of carnal minds. How debasing to proud men are death and the grave! And even good men are apt to despair of that which God and he that hath [l]clean hands [m]shall be stronger and stronger.

10 But as for you all, do ye [n]return, and come now:[7] for I cannot find [o]one wise man among you.

11 My days [p]are past, my [q]purposes are broken off, even the thoughts[8] of my heart.

12 They [r]change the night into day:[9] the light is short[1] because of darkness.

13 If I [s]wait, the [t]grave is mine house: I have made my bed in the darkness.

14 I have said[2] to corruption, [u]Thou art my father; to the worm, Thou art my mother and my sister.

15 And where is now my [v]hope? as for my hope, who shall see it?

16 They[y] shall go down to the bars of the pit, when our rest together is in the dust.

really intends for them. Happy are they who rest in Christ here—they shall rest in death and in heaven for ever and ever!

CHAPTER XVIII. In no small heat of spirit Bildad replied, 2. How long wilt thou cast forth such confused, double-meaning, and unintelligible words, as if you wanted to entrap us? Declare plainly what you intend, and after that we shall deliver our minds with the utmost clearness, freedom, and boldness. 3. For to what purpose is it to talk with one who looks upon us as a company of dull beasts, into whom nothing of wisdom can enter! 4. With impatient rage you tear and torment yourself. Must God, to humour thee, suspend or cease his government of the world, and leave everything to chance: or must he alter his immutable counsels or the fixed laws of his providence? 5. But say what thou wilt, though the wicked man may prosper for a while, all his splendour and apparent happiness shall quickly come to an end. 6. The wealth and honour of his family shall be turned into misery, contempt, and sorrow, together with himself. 7. His bold and resolute attempts to increase or maintain his prosperity shall be unsuccessful and involve him in insurmountable difficulties, and his own devices shall prove the means of his overthrow. 8. His own wiles and works bring him into inextricable difficulty and distress; and every step he takes in prosecution of his designs, or in the way of pleasing himself, is attended with perpetual danger and farther ensnares him. 9. While ruinous snares take hold of and entangle him, they who thirst for his blood, wealth, or honours shall prevail against him. 10. Even when he neither foresees nor fears it, he is always in danger of some sudden mischief. 11. Unexpected and overturning terrors shall fearfully affright him on all hands and waste him away on his feet, while they make him to run from place to place for safety. 12. Sorrows shall insatiably, as with intense hunger, feed upon him, till his strength, wealth, and honour be entirely wasted; and nothing but prepared and terrible destruction shall everywhere attend him. 13. Rottenness, fearful affliction, and a miserable death shall consume his flesh and bones. 14. Whatever he relied upon for the support of himself and his family shall utterly fail him and hasten his unhappy death; while terrors, as a mighty king, shall drive him into the depths of hell. 15. Terrors, despair, and destruction shall dwell in his habitation, which he unjustly acquired; and thunder and lightning, or some exemplary judgment, like that of Sodom, shall destroy it. 16. His whole estate, habitation, and family shall be irrecoverably ruined. 17. And the very name of him shall be buried in everlasting infamy and forgetfulness. 18. He shall be driven from his prosperity and life into misery and death, and chased out of the world as a nuisance into eternal woe. 19. None of his descendants or kindred shall long survive him to keep up his remembrance. 20. They, on every side, who behold, and they who afterward read or hear of the fearful justice of God upon him, shall be astonished and terrified at it. 21. This, indeed, is a just description of the miserable condition of the wicked at last; and thus shall those who dishonour God be abased.

Ver. 4. [Bildad in the first member of the sentence addresses his friends, describing Job; in the second he addresses Job: 'Shall the earth be forsaken for thee?' shall God leave off the care of all his other works to attend to thy vain complaints, and anticipate the final judgment to gratify your sinful impatience? C.—— The meaning of the passage is:—Dost thou imagine that by thy vehement conduct, by which thou art become enraged against thyself, thou canst effect any change in the established divine order of the world? It is a divine law that sufferings are the punishments of sin; thou canst no more alter this than that at thy command, or for thy sake, the earth, which is appointed to be the habitation of man, will become desolate; or that a rock will remove from its place. P.]

Ver. 10. [Delitzsch translates as follows:—'The trap holdeth his heel fast, the noose bindeth him. His snare lieth hidden in the earth; his nets upon the path.' This brings out pretty clearly the sense of the passage. P.]

Ver. 13. [First-born of death. Who or what is this? Some think it the pestilence, others famine, but neither seems entitled to this terrible pre-eminence. Is it not the destruction or desolation (ver. 12) 'ready at his side' that is (ver. 13) twice said to 'devour his strength?' The one act points to the same agent. How blessed the hope of that time when the great devourer shall devour no more, but death shall be swallowed up in victory! 1 Co. 15. 54. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—There is much wisdom in leaving off contention before it be meddled with; it so furiously heats men's spirits, and makes them to misinterpret everything said or done by their antagonist; nay, makes them to misapply the most precious or tremendous truths of God! They suspect affronts that were never intended. They even torment themselves—their pride and passion proving hurtful to both soul and body. But to what terrible judgments of God, in time, in death, and chiefly in eternity, are the wicked exposed! Short-lived and unsubstantial is their prosperity, and heavy the curse that is upon them! Being abandoned of God, Satan first ensnares and afterwards torments them. Agitated by their lusts they rush headlong into ruin; till death in all its stings and terrors devours them! Then friends, physicians, and all human supports are vain. Their glorious prosperity is quickly turned into everlasting shame and contempt.

CHAPTER XIX. Job replied, Will ye never cease tormenting my soul, and bruising me as in a mortar, with your senseless revilings! 3. Ye have too often wounded me with the vilest reproaches. Ye have been shamelessly obstinate in your rebukes and cruel usage of me. 4. If I indeed had been mistaken in my opinion or practice, I have sufficiently smarted for it in my own person and estate, and so am a fit object of pity rather than of your reproach. 5. If you will still insolently declaim against me, and allege my debasing calamities as a proof of my impiety, 6. Know that I am sensible that it is God who hath in this fearful manner cast me down from my prosperity, and compassed me about with unavoidable miseries. 7. And my case is the more pitiable, that while friends abuse me with reproach, God, to whom I have repeatedly committed my cause, refuses to redress my wrongs or vindicate my innocency. 8. Nay, his plagues so surround me on every side that I can find no way of escape: and I am so overwhelmed with perplexity that I know not whither to turn myself. 9. He has deprived me of all my dignity, authority, wealth, and family. 10. In respect of children, wealth, honour, authority, and health, he has entirely destroyed me; and all my hopes of future comfort in this world he hath plucked up by the roots. 12. He has in the most violent and furious manner afflicted me, as if I had been one of his principal enemies. 13. Whole armies of troubles have, by his order, invaded me; and as with raised batteries so straitly besieged me, that not the smallest comfort I had could escape their fury. 14–16. While friends and neighbours are alienated from me, and refuse to do me any office of kindness, my maidens and men-servants treat me with the utmost disobedience and contempt. 17. My wife regards my complaints and cries no more than if she were a mere stranger, though I have begged 18 He[y] shall be driven from light into darkness, and chased out of the world.

21 Surely [c]such are the dwellings of the wicked, and this is the place of him that [d]knoweth not God.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 Job, complaining of his friends' cruelty, showeth there is misery enough in him to gratify it. 21 He craveth pity; 23 professeth his belief in a future resurrection; 28 and warneth his friends not to persecute him.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 How [a]long will ye [b]vex my soul, and break me in pieces with words?

3 These [c]ten times have ye reproached me: ye are not ashamed that ye make yourselves strange to me.[1] her sympathy for the sake of our dear children, who have been so dreadfully hurried into death. 18. The very children, and ignorant people about, following the example of the rest, despise me, and treat me with the most abusive language. 19. The very men whom I had trusted with my secrets, and who had received the most distinguished tokens of my affection, abhor and hate me. 20. I am wasted with afflictions till I am little more than skin and bone; I am bruised till the teeth have fallen out of my head; and I have scarcely left me a mouth to complain. 21. O my friends, have pity upon me, when God's afflicting hand has so grievously smitten and wounded me! 22. Why do ye persecute and harass me, as if ye were an avenging God? Why, as if unsatisfied with my external calamities, do ye cruelly torment my spirit?—23. O that my protestations of uprightness, and appeals to God, were in the most legible and indelible manner registered in a book of public records, for my vindication, and for the encouragement of other upright persons under sore troubles! 24. O that they were registered in the most indelible manner in some marble rock or pillar, to continue legible to all generations! 25. For, notwithstanding these present miseries, I by faith know, and am firmly persuaded, that Jesus Christ, my Kinsman-Redeemer, liveth, having life in himself; and shall victoriously stand as the last Adam, upon the dust of the earth, in his incarnation, resurrection, and appearance to judgment. 26. And though these vermin, bred or breeding in my afflicted body, should quickly devour the whole of it, yet even in this body, when fashioned like unto his glorious body, shall I see God in my nature. 27. Whom I shall see for my own particular comfort, in my own person, when raised from the dead—though at present I am at the point of death through sore trouble, and earnestly longing for deliverance. 28. Ye should therefore say, Why do we persecute one in whom there is such soundness and strength of faith, and who hath the right cause in the present debate? 29. Beware lest God punish your inhuman cruelty to me with some terrible judgments. Such rage as yours deserves, and such wrath as God's, provoked by your sin, will bring fearful calamities upon you, that ye may know to your cost that God vindicates his own people and punishes their enemies.

Ver. 3. [Ten times. This phrase is said by most expositors to stand for many times. This loose method of speaking seems, however, rather inconsistent with the unparalleled and necessary accuracy of Scripture, as a divine revelation. Is not the expression ten times literally true? Job now had spoken five times (ch. 3. 1; 6. 1; 9. 1; 12. 1; 16. 1), and his friends five times (ch. 4. 1; 8. 1; 11. 1; 15. 1; 18. 1), in all, ten times. C.]

Ver. 6. [Job's visitors had traced all his calamities to sins which, according to them, he had hypocritically concealed. Job, however, indignantly denies that in this respect he is guilty. He traces all his sufferings to God; he can assign no cause for them; he leaves the impression on the mind that he is hardly, if not unjustly, dealt with. Job's friends were unquestionably in error, and they were harsh and cruel; but Job himself was far from the truth. P.]

Ver. 17. [In aggravated forms of elephantiasis, the mouth and throat become ulcerated; breathing is difficult, and the breath is foul. In fact, as the disease progresses the limbs decay, and the half-putrid members emit a most offensive odour. P.]

Ver. 22. [The meaning of this reproachful question is, that God regarded his persecutors as usurping to themselves a judicial divine authority over him. They were at best only his equals; they were not infallible; they might be mistaken; they had no right therefore to condemn him. P.]

Ver. 25. [From the depth of his affliction and despair, so far as regards earthly happiness and even life, the faith of the patriarch rises clear and triumphant, and finds utterance in these noble words:—'And I know, my Redeemer (my judge and vindicator) liveth (he is in existence; he knows, and will save me), and he will arise the last one (the final judge and disposer of all things) from (or over) the dust (of the grave, to call from it those who sleep, and to raise the mortal to immortality).' P.]

Ver. 26. [Yet in my flesh shall I see God. 'Worms' and 'body' are not in the original, so that we are not bound to contemplate them in the exposition. May not the verse be paraphrased thus: 'Though as my skin is destroyed by disease, this flesh beneath it be destroyed by death, yet in my (resurrection) flesh shall I see God,' 1 Jn. 3. 2. C.]

Ver. 27. [These words may be rendered as follows. There is a terseness and concentration of thought in them, such as characterize the most ancient literature of the Shemitic race:—'And after my skin (after its decay—after death), thus destroyed (rent and torn by the ravages of my loathsome disease), and without my flesh (in a disembodied state, when my soul is freed from this vile body), I shall see God (I shall see him with my spirit); whom I shall behold for myself (for my good, for my vindication from the unjust and cruel accusations of those now before me), and mine eyes shall see him and no other (no accuser, no stranger, but my own redeeming God)—my reins consume within me (i.e. I languish and pine here for that glorious vision).' P.——Not another—not estranged as you, my friends, nor ashamed to call me brother, He. 2. 11. C.]

Ver. 29. [There is a threat implied in this verse. God, in whom Job trusts, and who will in the end vindicate him, will prove a judge to those who now persecute him. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Hard is the trial when inward vexation and outward reproach meet together; and distressing the situation when those who ought to comfort us, again and again reproach and disquiet us; and especially when men abuse us with revilings, and God shuts out our prayer, and loads us with trouble! But when God strikes a saint, almost every person and thing is ready to second his blow; and then the sparing of his relations becomes a heavier cross than the removal of them by death. It is hard to discern God's love and endeared affection amidst many and heavy strokes of paternal wrath. But happy are those who, when earth is turned into a kind of hell to them, can by faith solace themselves with the views of a future judgment; and of being for ever with Jesus Christ—their Relation, their Husband, their Deliverer, their Lord! It is dangerous to persecute the saints while their Kinsman-Redeemer lives and sees, and shall quickly judge the world. But here let me stand still, and with pleasure remark, that there is a Kinsman-Redeemer provided for fallen men; that he is a living and divine Redeemer; that I have a new-covenant interest in him, and know that I have it; that there will be a last day, when time shall be no more; that then my Redeemer, who stood as the last Adam upon earth, shall appear without sin unto my salvation; and so shall I be for ever with the Lord: I shall be like him, for I shall see him as he is!

I entreated for the [z]children's sake of mine own body.[6]

18 Yea, [y]young children despised me; I arose, and they spake against me.

19 All [z]my inward friends[7] abhorred me; and they whom I loved are turned against me.

20 My [a]bone cleaveth to my skin and[8] to my flesh, and I am escaped with the skin of my teeth.[9]

21 Have [b]pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched [c]me.

22 Why do ye [d]persecute me as God,[1] and are not satisfied with my flesh?

23 Oh that my words were now written![2] oh that they were printed in a book![3]

24 That they were graven with an [e]iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!

25 For [f]I know that my [g]Redeemer liveth, and that he shall [h]stand at the latter day upon the earth:

26 And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet [i]in my flesh shall I see God:[4]

27 Whom I shall see [k]for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another;[5] though my reins be consumed [6]within me.[7]

28 But ye should say, Why [l]persecute we him, seeing the root of the matter is found in me?[8]

29 Be ye afraid of the sword: for wrath bringeth the punishments of the sword, [m]that ye may know there is a judgment.

CHAPTER XX.

Zophar showeth in his turn the certain downfal and portion of the wicked.

THEN answered Zophar the Naamathite, and said,

2 Therefore [a]do my thoughts cause me to answer, and for this I make haste.[1]

3 I have [b]heard the check of my reproach, and [c]the spirit of my understanding causeth me to answer.

4 Knowest[d] thou not this of old, since man was placed upon earth,

5 That[e] the triumphing of the wicked is short,[2] and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment?

6 Though his excellency [f]mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds;[3]

7 Yet [g]he shall perish for ever, like his own dung: they which have seen him shall say, [h]Where is he?

8 He [i]shall fly away as a dream, and shall not be found; yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night.

9 The [k]eye also which saw him shall see him no more; neither shall his place any more behold him.

10 His [l]children shall seek to please the [m]poor, and his hands shall [n]restore their goods.[5]

11 His [o]bones are full of the sin of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust.

12 Though wickedness be [p]sweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue;

13 Though he [r]spare it, and forsake it not, but keep it still within his mouth;[r]

14 Yet [s]his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall[7] of asps within him.

15 He hath swallowed down riches, and [t]he shall vomit them up again: God shall cast them out of his belly.

16 He [u]shall suck the poison of asps; the viper's tongue shall slay him.

17 He [v]shall not see the rivers, the [8]floods, the brooks[9] of honey and butter.

18 That [w]which he laboured for shall he restore, and shall not swallow it down: according to his substance shall the restitution[1] be, and he shall not rejoice therein.

19 Because[x] he hath oppressed[2] and hath forsaken the poor; because he hath violently taken away an house which he builded not;

20 Surely[y] he [3]shall not feel quietness in his belly, he shall not save of that which he desired.

21 There shall none of his meat[4] be [4]left;[5] therefore shall no man look for his goods.

22 In[a] the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits: every hand of the [b]wicked shall come upon him.

23 When [c]he is about to fill his belly, God shall cast the fury of his wrath upon him, and shall rain it upon him while he is eating.

24 He[d] shall flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of steel shall strike him through.

25 It[e] is drawn, and cometh out of the body; yea, the glittering sword cometh out of his gall:[6] terrors are upon him.

26 All [f]darkness[7] shall be hid in his secret places: a fire not blown[8] shall consume him; it —Let me blush to behold an ancient patriarch, amidst his darkest nights of trouble, with clearer views of Jesus and eternal things, and his happy interest therein, than I, upon whom the light of the glorious gospel hath so clearly shined.

CHAPTER XX. Interrupting Job, Zophar the Naamathite in no small fury replied, 2. My thoughts make me burn and swell with matter of refutation, and oblige me to answer; therefore, highly provoked with thy speech, I make haste to the dispute, as a person fully prepared. 3. I have indeed heard a most reproachful answer to my own and my friend's, former speeches, but my heart enables me to answer in the most prudent and considerate manner. 4, 5. Knowest thou not, that all along from the creation the prosperity of a wicked man and hypocrite has been very short-lived and momentary. 6. Though his high-towering excellency mount up to heaven, and his temporal honours and happiness be advanced to the highest pitch, 7–9. He shall quickly perish in the most disgraceful and contemptible manner, without any hope of recovery. 10. His children, in their wretchedness, shall court the favour of the meanest, or attempt to satisfy them for the wrongs done to them by their father; and the works of his hands shall render him sorrow for his reward. 11. His youthful and secret wickedness shall bring such distempers upon him as shall hasten him to his grave, and shall attend him to hell. 12-14. If he with great fondness and pleasure indulged himself in his wickedness, it shall prove most bitter, unwholesome, painful, and destructive to him in the fearful miseries attending it. 15. The riches which he has greedily and unjustly got into his possession, he shall be forced to restore with great shame and torment. God shall so torment him with trouble and anguish of mind that he shall be sick of them. 16. That which he has been so eager in getting shall bring upon him the most terrible, painful, and destructive judgments. 17. Never shall he enjoy the least real comfort in all his plenty of outward things. 18. He shall be obliged to restore the hire which he unjustly withheld; nay, even what he laboured for shall[f] go ill with him that is left in his tabernacle.

27 The [h]heaven shall reveal his iniquity; and the earth shall rise up against him.[9]

28 The[i] increase of his house shall depart, and his goods shall flow away in the day of his [k]wrath.

29 This[l] is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed unto him by God.[1]

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Job showeth that even in the judgment of man he hath reason to be grieved. 7 Sometimes the wicked do so prosper that they are tempted to despise God. 16 Sometimes their destruction is manifest. 23 The happy and unhappy are alike in death. 27 The judgment of the wicked is in another world.

BUT Job answered and said,

2 Hear[a] diligently my speech, and let this be your [b]consolations.[1]

3 Suffer me that I may speak; and after that I have spoken, [c]mock on.

4 As for me, [d]is my complaint to man? and, if it were so, why should not my spirit be troubled?[2]

5 Mark me,[e] and [f]be astonished, and [g]lay your hand upon your mouth.

6 Even when I remember [g]I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my flesh.

7 Wherefore[h] do the wicked live, become old, yea, are [i]mighty in power?

8 Their [k]seed is established in their sight with them, and their offspring before their eyes.

9 Their houses are safe from [l]fear, [m]neither is the rod of God upon them.

10 Their[m] bull gendereth, and faileth not; their cow calveth, and casteth not her calf.

11 They[n] send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance.

12 They [o]take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ.[5]

13 They [p]spend their days in wealth,[6] and in a moment[7] go down to the grave.

14 Therefore[q] they say unto God, Depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways.

15 What[r] is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have, if we pray unto him?

16 Lo, [s]their good is not in their hand: the counsel of the wicked [t]is far from me.[8]

17 How [u]oft is the candle[9] of the wicked put out? and how oft cometh their destruction upon them? God [x]distributeth sorrows in his anger.

18 They are as [y]stubble before the wind, and as chaff that the storm carrieth away.[1] shall be cursed to him, and quickly lost along with his unjust gain; and he shall have no comfort in anything he has. 19. Because he furiously oppressed the poor till he rendered them destitute, and violently seized houses which he built not. 20. Therefore shall he have no solid satisfaction in his own mind, but be in pain, as a travailing woman; and shall be deprived of all his desirable things. 21. He shall scarcely have wherewith to sustain himself in life, and shall have no goods left for any to look after. 22. In the very height of his prosperity he shall be terribly distressed; and even his fellows in impiety shall concur to render him miserable. 23. Whenever he shall attempt to satisfy himself in what he has, some extraordinary judgment shall of a sudden overtake him. 24. When he shall attempt to avoid one danger, another more dreadful shall overtake him; 25. And terribly shall the judgments of God torment and destroy him. Horrors of conscience shall seize upon him, as one who cannot live, and who dares not die. 26. Every kind of fearful calamities shall be reserved for him as his treasure, and shall follow him wherever he thinks to hide himself. Some awful judgment, which comes none knows how, shall consume him. His posterity and family shall, for his sake, be cursed of God, and entirely wasted and ruined. 27. God, by remarkable judgments of thunder, lightning, or the like, shall discover his notorious wickedness; and all creatures on earth shall exert themselves for his ruin. 28. His estate, which he had got by the labour of his family, shall quickly be taken from him, or destroyed, in the day when God manifests his wrath against him. 29. This is the portion and reward which God has allotted to impious and insolent sinners.

19 God layeth up [z]his iniquity for his children: he rewardeth him, and he shall know it.

Ver. 16. [The pethen and ephch are the two serpents mentioned; most probably the bacan and effah of the Arabians, both remarkable for the rapid and fatal effects of their poison. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! the most confident and forward in a dispute are seldom in the right: and with such the kindest warning is interpreted into an affront, and returned with insolence; and the dictates of passion pass for the arguments of reason. The truths of God are often, as here, excellently explained, but miserably applied. Short-lived is a wicked man's prosperity and a hypocrite's profession. If not in this life, sin and ruin shall in the next appear certainly inseparable. And the higher men tower in sinful prosperity, their fall into the pit of destruction shall be the more dreadful. What terrible consequences have the often unthought-of sins of youth! Bitter are the issues of those sins which are reckoned sweet; and inexpressible the loss of those which are reckoned gainful. Where God's curse lies there can be no real felicity. But dreadful shall it be to the wicked when all their dreams of happiness shall be disappointed, their secret sins revealed, and the wrath of God shall take an everlasting hold of them! Let the sound of destruction—terrible destruction—everlasting destruction, that is in my ears, drive me to Jesus Christ, and the everlasting redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of my sins, according to the riches of his grace.

CHAPTER XXI. Job immediately replied, 2. Instead of pretending to comfort me, patiently and attentively hear my speech. 3. Permit me freely to declare my mind without interrupting me; and when I have finished my pertinent reasoning mock on as long as you please. 4. I have made my appeal to God; and had it been to man, I could not but be vexed to find myself thus interrupted, reproached, and abused. 5. To see in me a religious and upright man so fearfully afflicted, might overwhelm you with the most confounding astonishment at the awfully dark providence of God, and at least make you willing to hold your peace while I speak. 6. For truly, when I think on it, I am filled with the most terrifying awe of his awful judgments. 7. But if wicked men always meet with such fearful calamities as you have pretended, whence is it that many of them, for a long time, flourish in uncommon prosperity and power? 8. Nay, live to see their children, and children's children, settled and prosperous? 9. Their habitations and families live in peace and security, and are not loaded with any afflictions; 10. While their cattle are extremely healthful, prosperous, and fruitful, 11, 12. Their wives with the greatest ease bring forth multitudes of children, who employ themselves in nothing but carnal joy and mirth. 13. Even unto old age they spend their days in earthly prosperity and carnal indulgence, and at last die very easily, without any sense of pain. 14, 15. Gratified and puffed up with their prosperity, they in the most daring manner testify their dislike and contempt of the knowledge, service, and worship of God. 16. It is God, however, not themselves, who renders them wealthy and powerful. Yet far be it from me to join with them in their impiety; 17. But let facts speak for themselves. How often are wicked men's shining prosperity and honour extinguished by fearful judgments and justly merited destruction? How often does God, as by lot, distribute to them entangling bonds of trouble and sorrow in his anger? 18. How often are they of a sudden fearfully carried away before the sweeping whirlwinds of his awful judgments? 19. How often are either wicked men's children or themselves rewarded with fearful punishments? 20. How often do wicked men on earth experience the distinguishing judgments and hot burning wrath of the Almighty? 21. And though their children should prosper, what pain, care, or pleasure can they have about their house and family when they are cut off by an early death? 22. Dare any of you pretend to teach God how to govern the world, and whom to prosper and whom not; or to prescribe rules by which he must judge men, who, even the highest, are in death but the food of worms? 23, 24. Some men, both good and bad, die in the very prime of their life, and height of their prosperity, and in a very easy manner. 25. Others die amidst torments of body and anguish of mind, without ever partaking of earthly happiness or pleasure: 26. They lie down together in the same condition in the grave, and the vermin make an equal prey of both; so that none can tell who is good or who is bad by any external events. 27. I can indeed easily foresee what you, in your reproachful speeches and imaginations, will think and say. 28. You will ask, What is become of my own once princely family and of the dwellings of my children? And if Providence hath not plainly marked us out for wicked by the fearful judgments which have befallen us? 29, 30. But cannot even the most common passenger tell you that they have observed that wicked men are often preserved, as in a secret place, amidst destructive judgments, and are carried forth with pomp in the day of overflowing wrath, and the punishment of their crimes reserved for the other world? 31. Their power is often so great on earth that nobody dare reprove or can punish them for their crimes. 32. Nay, they are brought in pomp to the grave, and honourably and quietly rest in their tombs. 33. They sleep as quietly in their graves as the best; and all men, whether good or bad, by little and little follow them into that state of the dead, without any visible difference betwixt them. 34. Why then attempt ye to comfort me with unsubstantial hopes of 20 His[a] eyes shall see his destruction, and he shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

21 For what [b]pleasure hath he in his house after him, when the number of his months is cut off [c]in the midst?

22 Shall[d] any teach God knowledge? seeing he judgeth those that are [e]high.

23 One dieth [f]in his full strength, being wholly at ease and quiet;

24 His[g] breasts[2] are full of milk, and his bones are moistened with marrow:

25 And[h] another dieth in the bitterness of his soul, and never eateth with pleasure.

26 They shall lie down [i]alike in the dust, and the [k]worms shall cover them.

27 Behold, I know your [l]thoughts, and the devices which ye wrongfully imagine against me.

28 For ye say, Where is the [m]house of the prince? and where are the dwelling-places of the wicked?[3]

29 Have ye not asked them that [n]go by the way?[4] and do ye not know their tokens,

30 That the wicked [o]is reserved to the day of destruction? they shall be brought forth to the day[5] of wrath.[6]

31 Who[p] shall declare his way to his face? and who shall repay him what he hath done?

32 Yet[q] shall he be brought to the grave,[7] and shall remain in the tomb.[8]

33 The clods of the valley shall be [r]sweet unto him, and [s]every man shall draw after him, as there are innumerable before him.[9]

34 How [t]then comfort ye me in vain, seeing in your answers there remaineth falsehood?[1]

s Walketh only in the circuit of heaven, and so far from the inspection of the world. This was the very doctrine of certain of the Epicurean philosophers, who did not deny the being of a God or gods, but placed him (rather them) above the cares of a particular providence.—C.

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Eliphaz showeth that man's goodness profiteth not God. 5 He accuseth Job of divers sins. 21 He exhorteth him to repentance, with promises of mercy.

THEN Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said,

2 Can[a] a man be profitable unto God,[1] as he that is wise may be profitable [b]unto himself?

3 Is [c]it any pleasure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous? or is it gain to him, that thou makest thy ways perfect?

4 Will he [d]reprove thee for fear of thee? will he enter with thee into judgment?

5 Is not thy wickedness [e]great? and thine iniquities infinite?

6 For [f]thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and stripped the naked of their clothing.[2]

7 Thou[g] hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withholden bread from the hungry.

8 But as for the mighty man,[3] he [h]had the earth; and the honourable[4] man dwelt in it.[5]

9 Thou[i] hast sent widows away empty, and the arms of the fatherless have been broken.

10 Therefore [k]snares are round about thee, and sudden [l]fear troubleth thee;

11 Or [m]darkness, that thou canst not see; [n]and abundance of waters cover thee.

12 Is[o] not God in the height of heaven? and behold the height of the stars,[6] how high they are!

13 And thou sayest, [p]How[7] doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud?

14 Thick[q] clouds are a covering to him, that he seeth not; and he walketh in [r]the circuit of [s]heaven.

future happiness? And why doth the vilest prevarication, inconsistent with the cause of God or your duty, continue to be the whole sum of your discourses?

Ver. 7. [Job here meets his accusers on their own ground. He shows them that the patent facts of the divine government do not harmonize with the principles laid down by them. According to their theory the wicked alone are judged and punished. But Job points them to the case of wicked men who, notwithstanding notorious wickedness, are yet rich, prosperous, joyous, and full of children. P.]

Ver. 19. [God layeth up his iniquity for his children. Not an unjust, but a most merciful dispensation of God; for many who disregarded themselves have been moved to conversion by seeing the evil consequences their wicked examples and principles were entailing upon their offspring. C.]

Ver. 22. [High. He ruleth those that are on high, the principalities and powers in heaven; who then on earth shall instruct him in its government? C.]

Ver. 26. [All this being true—the wicked, whether in the enjoyment of full temporal prosperity, or pinched by poverty and wasted by disease, come to the same end, and are laid in the same grave. Such being the case, what is become of the law of retribution in this world, as maintained by the friends? P.]

Ver. 34. [This is the summing up—the application of the whole argument. Seeing your arguments are so fallacious, your words so illogical, why do ye attempt to comfort me? It is a mockery and an insult. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Those who are once engaged in hot disputes often lose their way through want of attention to their opponents. But what a mercy it is that saints have a gracious God to complain to when their friends refuse to hear what they say, or to regard their distress! And though the present dispensations of Providence sometimes stagger the faith and hope of the best of men, the last judgment will make all clear and plain. What a certain fact, and often a sad stumbling-block to the godly, is the prosperity of wicked men! It often hardens them in presumptuous impiety to their own destruction; but it will never reconcile a tender saint to their manner of life. It entails upon themselves and families at last the greatest misery. And however different their lot on earth or the manner of their death, or pompous their burial, everlasting punishment in hell shall be their final portion. Let therefore their heart, their counsel, their practice, be far from me. And while I adore the high wisdom of God in his providence, let me never comfort myself with vain words! Where there is no truth there can be no solid comfort.

CHAPTER XXII. Imagining that Job had accused God of injustice, in suffering the wicked to prosper and the righteous to be afflicted, Eliphaz, in great anger, replied, 2. Darest thou imagine that God is a gainer by our virtue, as we ourselves are, and so bound to reward us for it? 3. Can it add anything to his joy or profit that thou art ever so righteous and perfect? 4. Dost thou imagine that he corrects thee out of reverence to thee, or for fear thou shouldest hurt him? Will he, for fear of thee, either punish thee or give thee an account of his conduct? 5. Are not thy own monstrous and unnumbered iniquities the true cause of thy fearful sufferings? 6. For without any just cause thou hast taken pledges from thy very brethren, and hast in the cruelest manner deprived the poor of their small remains of the preservatives of life. 7. Most inhumanly thou hast withheld from the weary and starving, the most cheap and common supports of their life. 8. But the man who was high-born, wealthy, and honoured, was thy favourite, and had thy land and estate at his service, and was sure to carry his cause at thy tribunal. 9. Thou hast spoiled widows of their just property, and cruelly oppressed, broken, and crushed the orphans, depriving them of all their supports and comforts. 10. Therefore entangling troubles and dangers are everywhere round about thee, and sudden fears and terrible judgments affright thee. 11. Fearful troubles and perplexities so overwhelm thee that thou hast neither a comfortable sense nor hope of relief left; and multitudes of afflictions have with violence burst forth upon thee. 12. Is not God higher in place and dignity than the loftiest stars which thou observest? 13, 14. But like an atheist, you seem to think that God cannot know, or doth not care, what is done upon earth, but merely amuses himself in walking round the heavens. 15. Hast thou not eagerly followed, rather than prudently observed, the conduct or fate of those companions of vanity and wickedness who lived before the flood? 16. To whose horrid impieties God put a stop, by destroying them before their time, and carrying them off the earth by an overflowing deluge. 17. Who, in the most insolent manner, wished to have nothing to do with God, and imagined that nothing he could do for them could really profit them? 18. Yet it was he who granted them their whole prosperity. But God forbid that I should ever join in either principles, purposes, or practices with such abandoned wretches. 19. The righteous shall with pleasure behold the destruction of such men, as a vindication of the honour, holiness, and justice of God; and shall deride their folly in taking such courses as issue therein. 20. While the estates of such as are truly pious and virtuous remain unhurt by the providence of God, those who imitate these ancient sinners are consumed by thunder, lightning, or some other fearful judgment. 21. But since God hath not entirely consumed thee, try, without a moment's delay, to get the spiritual knowledge of God; accustom thyself to him by re-

15 Hast thou marked the [t]old way which wicked men have trodden?

16 Which [u]were cut down out of time, whose foundation [v]was overflown with a flood;

17 Which said unto God, [w]Depart from us; and what can the Almighty do for them?[9]

18 Yet he [x]filled their houses with good things: but [y]the counsel of the wicked is far from me.[1]

19 The [z]righteous see it,[2] and are glad; and the innocent laugh them to scorn:

20 Whereas our substance[3] is not cut down, but the remnant[4] of them the [b]fire consumeth.[5]

21 Acquaint[c] now thyself with[6] him,[7] and [d]be at peace: thereby [e]good shall come unto thee.

22 Receive,[f] I pray thee, the law from his mouth, and [g]lay up his words in thine heart.

23 If[h] thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up, thou shalt [i]put away iniquity far from thy tabernacles.

24 Then [j]shalt thou lay up gold as dust,[8] and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brooks.

25 Yea, the Almighty shall be thy [k]defence, and thou shalt have plenty[9] of silver.[1]

26 For then shalt thou [l]have thy delight in the Almighty, and shalt [m]lift up thy face unto God.

27 Thou [n]shalt make thy prayer unto him, and he shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy vows.

28 Thou shalt also [o]decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee; and the [p]light shall shine upon thy ways.

29 When[q] men are cast down, then thou shalt say, There is lifting up; and he [r]shall save [s]the humble person.

30 He[t] shall deliver the island[2] of the innocent: and it is delivered by the pureness of thine hands.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 Job longeth to appear before God, 6 in confidence of being heard with mercy and acquitted. 8 God, though invisible, observeth our ways. 11 Job's innocency. 13 God's decree is immutable.

THEN Job answered and said,

2 Even [a]to-day is my complaint [b]bitter: my [1]stroke[2] is heavier than my groaning.

3 Oh[c] that I knew where I might find him! that I might come even to his seat!

4 I [d]would order my cause before him, and fill my mouth with arguments.

5 I [e]would know the words which he would answer me, and understand what he would say unto me.

6 Will[f] he plead against me with his great power? No; but he would put strength in me.

7 There[g] the righteous might dispute with him; so should I be delivered for ever from my judge.[3]

8 Behold, [h]I go forward, but he is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive him:[4]

9 On the left hand, where he doth work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see him.

10 But [i]he knoweth the way[5] that I [6]take: when he [j]hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold.

11 My [k]foot hath held his steps; his way have I kept, and not declined.

12 Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lips; [7]I have esteemed the peated supplications; receive peace from him; and quietly submit to him by an unfeigned repentance. Thus shall all manner of blessings, temporal and eternal, come to thee. 22. Receive, and duly meditate on, the instructive revelations which he may be pleased to afford thee. 23. If by a true faith and sincere repentance thou turn to the Lord, thou shalt be again advanced to thy former honours and prosperity; and the punishment which thy sins have brought upon thee shall be removed far from thee and whatever belongs to thee. 24. Then shalt thou lay up gold, and fine gold, in such amazing plenty, and with such ease, as if they were the most common things. 25. For the all-sufficient and almighty God shall be thy portion and the protector of thy treasures; and thou shalt have astonishing heaps of silver. 26. Thou shalt delight thyself in the enjoyment of God's love and favour; and shalt with confidence and comfort present thyself at his throne of grace, and hope for his eternal felicity. 27. With sweet pleasure shall he hear thy prayers; and thou shalt pay thy vows of gratitude to him with the warmest affection. 28. Whatever thou hast purposed shall be accomplished; and divine direction, success, and comfort shall attend all thy proceedings. 29. When wicked men around thee are distressed or destroyed, thou shalt confidently expect honour and felicity; and God shall bring to eminent and extensive happiness the person who is cast down in his own eyes. 30. Nay, at thy request he shall marvellously deliver not only many innocents, but even the guilty, and their country, by means of thy prayers, piety, and virtue.

Ver. 2. [Eliphaz charges Job with presumption. He accuses him of magnifying himself in the sight of God. His argument is to this effect:—'Can even a great man (such is the meaning of the Hebrew term) be profitable to God? Thou seemest to think that God is thy debtor, on the ground of thy righteousness. But suppose that thou art righteous, wouldst thou thus be conferring a favour on God? No; by righteousness a wise man is profitable to himself. But I affirm that thou art not righteous, and that thou art injuring thyself by unrighteousness' (Wordsworth). P.]

Ver. 6. [This being a grievous and direct charge, it is probable that Job, in the midst of his charities which his friends cannot deny (ch. 29. 15; 31. 16–22), had, as a man of business, been careful of his rights, righteous exacting being to the poor themselves frequently better than promiscuous and inconsiderate giving, and that Eliphaz now exaggerates this carefulness and justice into this hideous picture of unfeeling oppression. C.]

Ver. 7. [A charge of inhospitality, one of the most grievous in the estimation of the Arabians and their kindred nations. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing can be more absurd than to imagine that we can make God our debtor by anything which we can do. We have nothing good in us, or done by us, but what is God's gift. None are too great for God to humble. And if he spare the wicked, it is not for fear of them, but in patient pity towards them. Even good men, from a pretended regard to God, are apt to charge their neighbour with things which he heartily abhors. But if God's greatness, omniscience, and equity should deter men from crimes, they should also deter us from unjustly charging our neighbour with them. He that condemns the righteous is an abomination to the Lord. How tremendous are the judgments of Heaven, and happy they who can safely rejoice amidst them; or who, in a Christian manner, take warning from them! Through ignorance of and enmity against God, through neglect and contempt of his word, and through obstinate continuance in sin, men lose the greatest blessings and incur the greatest evils. But oh the delight in God, the bold confidence towards him, the intimate fellowship with him, the satisfaction even in managing outward affairs, the safety in times of common calamity, and usefulness towards others—that knowledge of and peace with God, spiritual improvement of God's word, and sincere repentance do produce!

CHAPTER XXIII. Job replied, 2. Notwithstanding all your pretended advices and comforts, I have as much reason for bitter complaints as ever; and my sufferings far exceed my expressions of grief. 3. O that I were admitted into God's own immediate presence, and allowed to present myself before his judgment-seat! 4. I would, in an orderly manner, set the justice of my cause before him, and fully support it with arguments, vindicating myself, and confuting your reproachful allegations. 5. I would insist for his decision whether I be a hypocrite or not; and that he would show me plainly why he hath so afflicted me. 6. Would he employ his infinite power and majesty to bear me down? No; but would mercifully strengthen and encourage me to plead with him. And suppose he should plead against me in the multitude of his strength, he certainly would lay no false charge against me, nor make any hostile attack upon me. 7. For at his throne of grace a righteous person, such as I am, may argue the matter with him; and by this means I should fully and for ever escape condemnation, being acquitted by him as my Judge. 8, 9. I have tried all methods to obtain a fair hearing for my cause before him, but have not hitherto been able to procure it. 10. But he knows the integrity of my heart and life; and whenever I am tried at his bar I shall come off sufficiently vindicated; and it is to render me more holy and pure that he tries me in this furnace of affliction. 11. I have always, in the most fixed and steady manner, followed his pattern and guidance. I have steadfastly observed his commandments without even words of his mouth more than my [m]necessary[8] food.

13 But he is in one mind, and [n]who can turn him? and what [o]his soul desireth, even that he doeth.

14 For he performeth the thing that is [p]appointed for me: and [q]many such things[9] are with him.

15 Therefore [r]am I troubled at his presence: when I consider, I am afraid of him.

16 For God [s]maketh my heart soft,[1] and the Almighty troubleth me:

17 Because I was not cut off [t]before the darkness, neither hath he covered the [u]darkness from my face.[2]

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Wickedness goeth often unpunished. 17 There is a secret judgment for the wicked.

WHY, seeing [a]times are not hidden from the Almighty,[1] do [b]they that know him not see his days?[2]

2 Some [c]remove the land-marks; they violently take away flocks, and feed thereof.[3]

3 They [d]drive away the ass of the fatherless; they take the widow's ox for a pledge;

4 They[e] turn the needy out of the way: the poor of the earth hide themselves together.[4]

5 Behold, as [f]wild asses in the desert, go they forth to their work, rising [g]betimes for a prey; the wilderness yieldeth food for them and for their children.

6 They reap every one his corn[5] in the [h]field; and they gather the vintage of the wicked.[7]

7 They [i]cause the naked to lodge without clothing, that they have no covering in the cold:

8 They are [k]wet with the showers of the mountains, and embrace the rock for want of shelter.

9 They [l]pluck the fatherless from the breast, and take a pledge of the poor:

10 They [m]cause him to go naked without clothing, and they take away the sheaf from the hungry;

11 Which make oil within their walls, and tread their wine-presses, and suffer thirst.[8]

12 Men[n] groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out; yet God [o]layeth not folly[9] to them.

13 They are of those that [p]rebel against the light; they know not the ways thereof, nor abide in the paths thereof.

14 The[p] murderer, rising with the light, killeth the poor and needy, and in the night is as a thief.

swerving from them. 12. I have never apostatized from his doctrines nor precepts; and have more earnestly sought, more highly prized, more heartily delighted in, and more carefully stored up his words of revelation, than my necessary food, or most valuable and precious things. 13. But his purposes are unchangeable, and he immovably persists in afflicting me, and does whatever he pleases, without giving to any a reason for his conduct. 14. Whatever trouble he has intended for me he will inflict: and in his purposes and providential conduct there are many instances of deep mystery, of which, though both wise and just, we cannot see the reason. 15. In consideration of his infinite majesty and wondrous and infinite power, I am troubled at the tokens of his anger; and when I leisurely consider his hard dealings with me I am afraid of him. 16. For in his infinite power he hath quite broken and melted my heart with fiery tribulations; and I am in perpetual terror of his inflicting still heavier strokes. 17. For he keeps me still alive under these terrible troubles and perplexities, and refuses me the favour of dying by his fearful and confounding strokes.

REFLECTIONS.—Our groanings should never be heavier than our strokes. God allows us to complain of our troubles, but never to murmur at them. It is becoming for saints to be earnestly desirous of close dealing with God; and to be particular and importunate in their requests at his throne of grace. However men abuse us, God will not only deal in equity, but even in great mercy, with his people. And it is proper always to keep up kind and exalted thoughts of him. They who fly to him in distress shall find their spiritual strength increased by every application; and if he acquit us, we need neither fear nor care who condemn us. But O what dark and perplexing nights of desertion and perplexity are God's choicest saints often afflicted with! Happy are those who, amidst all, cleave to his commandments, walk uprightly in his way, and feed daily by faith on his word! Their trials shall issue to their lasting honour and advantage. But it is sad when the mystery of God's counsels, and the deep wisdom of them, the greatness of his power, and ordinary methods of providence, disquiet instead of composing our minds. Let him do what he will, he cannot but do right. However terrible he is in himself, in Christ he is infinitely engaging. Let us therefore always acquiesce in his works and delight in himself. There is no reason rashly to wish for death when God can so quickly render life a comfort to us and a service to his church.

CHAPTER XXIV. But if God always punishes the wicked in this world, as you pretend, why are not particular seasons of it fixed by him? And why do not those who are best acquainted with him observe those days of judgment of his enemies? 2. Certain it is that in this world some are notoriously covetous and unjust, and even open robbers. 3. They cruelly oppress widows and fatherless children. 4. They harass, terrify, or even imprison the meek, poor, and afflicted. 5. In the most unconcerned manner they carry on their oppressions, and by rapine and violence maintain themselves and families in the desert. 6. They reap fields and gather vintages not their own. 7, 8. They force from the poor whatever they have, till they reduce them to absolute misery, in a state similar to that of wild beasts. 9–11. While they inhumanly deprive infants of their provision, that the enslaved mothers may work, and deprive their poor underlings of the meanest necessaries of life, they force them to labour in the hardest services. 12. Those whom they have oppressed, wounded, or unjustly condemned, mightily cry to God for judgment against them; yet he punishes them not, even in the slightest manner. 13. They sin impudently in the face of the sun, and against the light of nature, conscience, and revelation: they do not approve, delight in, or observe God's laws; and if at any time they stumble on a good action they quickly give it over, however easy and reasonable. 14–17. Hating the light, robbers and unclean persons, in defiance of an all-seeing God, earnestly carry on their murder and whoredom in the night season. 18. Lighter than froth, they rush on every opportunity of uncleanness or bloodshed; their inheritance is spent in the most accursed manner; and they quite disregard the management of the vineyards or other most profitable business. 19. After all the grave, in a quick and easy manner, consumes these notorious sinners. 20. Their very mothers easily forget their death, it is apparently so pleasant. Rottenness shall be sweet to them. They do not become infamous in the world, but their crimes are quickly and altogether forgotten. 21, 22. They abuse barren women, injure widows, and with great activity, craft, and cruelty oppress everybody around. 23. And though men give them presents, that they may have their protection and friendship, they still watch for opportunities to injure these dependants. 24. After being exalted a while they come to their graves as seasonably in appearance, and as easily, as their neighbours. 25. But if you will insist that the wicked are always fearfully punished in this life, I dare challenge the whole world to find me the person who can disprove the facts which I have now stated.

N.B. Ver. 18–20, 23, 24, may be interpreted as a representation of the miserable state of wicked men after all their prosperity.

Ver. 5. [The wild ass—intractable, untamable, rejoicing in its freedom—is an emblem of the nomad Ishmaelite of the Arabian desert. Such too as are poor, who are driven from settled habitations by oppression, seek a refuge in the wide and free desert. It is often the case in the present day that those who are ground down by the tyranny and avarice of Turkish rulers, desert their homes in the agricultural districts of eastern Syria, and escape to the wilderness. P.——Go they forth. Who? Not the poor (ver. 4), but the unjust oppressors described in ver. 2, 3, &c., whose work becomes the robbery of the caravans in the wilderness, as it has continued downwards through all their generations. C.]

Ver. 18. [The general idea here is the quickness with which the wicked man passes away. True he may live to an old age; yet at length he must return to dust. There is no hope for him. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—There is no doubt but that all sin will be punished; and none can know either love or hatred by all that is before him in his outward lot. While the saints and poor, who are in the mind of God, are remarkably afflicted, the most daring sinners are often remarkably prosperous in this world. But the Lord has not forsaken the earth: he takes notice of every injury done to his children. And however long his patience may bear with the presumptuous insult of sinners to his character and government, he will resent their wickedness at last. Even when they are most secure they are least safe. Though their success promise them impunity a while, which they had marked for themselves in the day-time:[2] they [f]know not the light.

17 For the morning is to them even [g]as the shadow of death: if one know them, they are in the terrors of the shadow of death.

20 The womb shall forget him;[6] the worm shall [a]feed sweetly on him; he [b]shall be no more remembered; and wickedness shall [c]be broken as a tree.

21 He [d]evil-entreateth the barren that beareth not: and doeth [e]not good to the widow.

22 He [f]draweth also the mighty with his power: he riseth up, and no man is sure of life.[7]

Bildad asserteth the sovereignty of God, before whom man cannot be justified.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said,

2 Dominion[a] and fear are with him; he [b]maketh peace in his high places.[1]

3 Is there any [c]number of his armies? and [d]upon whom doth not his light arise?[2]

5 Behold [g]even to the moon, and it shineth not; yea, the stars are not pure in his sight:

6 How [h]much less man, that is a worm; and the son of man, which is a worm?

CHAPTER XXVI.

1 Job, reproving the uncharitable spirit of Bildad, 5 acknowledgeth the power of God to be infinite and unsearchable.

BUT Job answered and said,

2 How hast thou [a]helped him that is without power?[1] how savest thou the arm that hath no strength?

3 How hast [b]thou counselled him that hath no wisdom? and [c]how hast thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?

4 To[d] whom hast thou uttered words? and [e]whose spirit[2] came from thee?

5 Dead[f] things are formed from under the waters, [g]and the inhabitants thereof.

and though their crimes should be concealed on earth, they will be openly discovered at last and punished for ever. Amidst the perpetration of crimes terror often seizes them; but how much more in sharing the certain, the fearful, the eternal punishment of them!

CHAPTER XXV. Bildad replied, 2. To God belongs that supreme authority over all things in heaven and earth, and that infinite majesty which strikes every beholder into solemn awe. In perfect quietness and order he rules all the luminaries in the firmament; and all the angels and glorified saints above. Why then darest thou pretend to find fault with him? 3. His creatures are absolutely innumerable to us, and every one shares of his light, his benefits of nature or grace;—why then contend with him? 4. And how then can a poor wretched man stand as righteous before God? And he that is born of a sinful woman be pure before him? 5. In his view the bright luminaries of heaven are spotted and dark. 6. How mean and vile then must the frail and dying children of a corrupted progenitor and federal head be in his sight!

Ver. 6. [This closing speech of Bildad is beautiful and true, but it does not touch the point at issue. The friends had argued that Job was punished because of his sin—his sin was great, though concealed beneath a cloak of hypocrisy, therefore his punishment was great. In reply Job affirmed a great fact, namely, that the ungodly often live happily and prosperous; and from this he argues with conclusive force that punishment does not always overtake the sinner. Consequently the fact of his being greatly afflicted was no certain proof of his having grievously sinned. P.——Worm. This word rather signifies a maggot, a creature bred of corruption. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—After long and hot disputing, people often come to see that there was less difference between them than they thought. Job's friends were obliged to acknowledge that wicked persons might prosper for a time, and Job owned that they would be destroyed at last. It were a great mercy for religious disputants to have their hearts always filled with awful thoughts of God and humble thoughts of themselves. But how infinite is the condescension of God to hold fellowship with men, so mean, so loathsome! Let me never forget how JEHOVAH assumed my nature, and in it, for me, became a worm and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people! What manner of love hath the Father bestowed on us in thus sending forth his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, that we, sinful worms, might, through his blood, become the sons of God!

CHAPTER XXVI. To this Job, in a derisive manner, answered, 2, 3. To what purpose serve these hints, either to support the cause of the Almighty, or to direct him in his government of the world, or to comfort a dispirited and instruct an ignorant soul? Who can be a whit bettered by aught you have so confidently uttered, that is quite foreign to the point in hand? 4. Do you imagine that I need to be instructed in these points? or that you, as one inspired of God, can by such hints revive and refresh my spirit? 5. I myself can discourse to far better purpose concerning God. While terrible monsters, minerals, pearl, coral, and the like, are formed in the bottom of the sea or heart of the earth, and fishes and animals on the surface of it, the departed ghosts tremble and travail in pain in the deep and dark regions of misery. 6. The whole state of the dead, whether of soul or body, is perfectly obvious to God's all-seeing eye; and all the depths and miseries of hell are perpetually visible to him. 7. He spreads the heavens over the apparently empty regions of air; and so balances the earth by his power, that it hangs like a ball in the air supported by nothing. 8. He binds up large collections of water in the clouds (by which he covers his glory, and on which he rides in majesty) as in firm bags, till he please to make them distil in dew, rain, snow, or hail. 9. He conceals his own glorious abodes; he firmly fixes the visible heavens, and spreads his veiling collection of clouds over them, to conceal his glory and restrain the scorching beams of the sun. 10. Everywhere, while the revolutions of day and night continue, he has fixed the shores and boundaries of the sea, that, rage as it will, it cannot exceed them. 11. The lofty mountains, which seem the supporting pillars of heaven, tremble and shake when he corrects men by earthquakes, thunders, or tempests. 12. By his power he tosses the sea into a terrible fury, and as it were divides it into ridges and mountainous billows; and by his wise government he again calms it at pleasure, and mortally wounds the crocodiles and other proud monsters which inhabit it. 13. By the influence of his Holy Spirit he at first adorned the heavens by his power; he formed the Milky Way and all their winding constellations. By his wind he clears up the sky; and his almighty power strikes prostrate the most direful and destructive monsters of sea or land. 14. Nay, behold, these are but the outlines and a very small parcel of his works. It is but very little that we either hear or know concerning him; but the thunder-like declarations of his prevailing, his infinite excellency, who can comprehend?

Ver. 5. [The mighty dead (the giants of the antediluvian world, Ge. 6. 4) are laid open from below, and the (living) inhabitants thereof 'are naked before God.' C.——Job's object in this sublime speech is to show that his view of the power, wisdom, and goodness of God is far more comprehensive than that of Bildad. God's dominion is not confined to the heavens, it extends to the grave, to the world of spirits:—in universal nature, in fact, Jehovah reigns supreme. P.]

Ver. 13. ['By his Spirit (his creative, omnipotent Spirit) the heavens are beautiful;' i.e. it was the Spirit's work which made them so. P.——The crooked serpent. The zodiac, whose constellations mark the apparent annual place of the sun in the heavens. C.——Others think reference is made either to the constellation of the Dragon, which lies between the Greater and Lesser Bears, and winds round a great part of the Polar Circle; others, again, suppose the Milky Way is meant. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Sometimes self-conceited persons may be ridiculed out of their notions when reasoning is not effectual: and in disputes much is ordinarily said that is not to the present purpose; and not the edification of their neighbour, but victory over him, is the great aim of the disputants. Little is it remembered, that not the displays of God's highness, but of his grace in Christ, can give ease to a wounded spirit. But it is happy when disputes end in men's glorifying God with one mind and one mouth. The perfections of the Deity are plainly marked in all his works of nature and grace; and all things must be well done where God himself is the sole or principal agent. Let me therefore in all behold his hand, his face. If he conceal the glories of his throne from this lower world, let me walk by faith, not by sight. If he has garnished the heavens, let me set my affections on things above and not on things of the earth. If his perfections are unsearchable, let me always admire and adore him.

CHAPTER XXVII. None offering to speak, Job continued his substantial but dark and mysterious dis-

6 [h]Hell[3] is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering.

7 He [i]stretcheth out the north[4] over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing.

course, saying, 2. I protest by the Almighty God, who refuses me an opportunity of clearing myself before him, and who has tormented me with all these fearful strokes of his judgment. 3, 4. That while I live I will never utter an untruth, either to vindicate myself where I am guilty, or to condemn myself where I am innocent. 5, 6. God forbid that ever I should justify your opinions and censures, deny my own sincerity, and confess myself to be a hypocrite! 7. It is mine enemies and opposers whom God will condemn and punish as wicked. And indeed I could wish nothing worse to my greatest enemy and injurer than to be wicked. So much I detest it. 8. For what avails the firmest hopes of a hypocrite in all his covetously-gained prosperity, or even inward tranquillity of soul, when he comes to die? 9. Will God always hear his prayers in the time of trouble and death? 10. Or will he find comfort in God when the world affords none? or will he in prosperity, as well as in adversity, continue in the earnest worship and service of God? 11. Attend, therefore, while, by God's assistance, I candidly inform you of some of the mysteries of his almighty providence. 12. Certain it is that every one of you knows from experience the truth of what I am to say. Why then should you thus absurdly attempt to prove the contrary? 13. Far be it from me to imagine that God loves hypocrites and oppressors. No; though for a time they prosper, the Almighty has reserved treasures of judgment for them and their posterity as the just reward of their wickedness. 14. Their numerous and once flourishing families are condemned to destruction by the sword of justice or war, or to be starved by famine. 15. Such as escape the sword and famine shall be cut off by the noisome pestilence. And none adventuring to bury them, they shall lie unburied, or be interred in an ignominious manner; and their widows shall either want affection, or not be in life, to bewail their unhappy end. 16, 17. Though these wicked men should treasure up ever so much wealth or costly apparel, they shall have only the labour of procuring it; for God shall destroy them, and bestow their wealth upon such as will do more good with it. 18. They may build their houses as strong as they please, and settle their estates in the surest forms; but God will quickly shake them out of all, or render them useless to them. 19. In the twinkling of an eye death shall overtake these rich sinners, and carry them off, as wretchedly poor, into the eternal state; and even perhaps without an honourable burial or monument on earth. 20. Manifold terrors seize upon them; and some surprising calamity often hurries them unexpectedly into the other world, where the terrors of God shall overwhelm them, as the waters did the old world; and in that eternal night shall the sweeping tempest of infinite wrath unexpectedly seize on and ruin them. 21. Some violent and pestilential affliction, some raging and burning storm of God's just judgment, hurls them out of their wonted felicity, residence, and life, and deprives them of all the good which they expected. 22, 23. While God pursues them with manifold forms of unmixed and unavoidable judgment, men, who are thereby delivered from their oppressions, shall return thanks to God for their deliverance.

REFLECTIONS.—Appeals to God ought to be necessary, deliberate, serious, and in matters of importance. Prevarication or concealment is as much perjury before God as direct falsehood asserted. But how often our high praises of God are mingled with something unkindly and disparaging! Not our most solemn vows, but Jesus' blood and Spirit, must chiefly maintain our purity of conscience and integrity of life. And while he enables to exercise a conscience void of offence towards God and men, we ought never to believe either devils or men suggesting that we are hypocrites. But it is best to refute the calumnies cast upon us by living well. Miserable indeed are hypocrites, whose hopes will never be crowned with enjoyment, their prayers never accepted nor graciously answered, and whose religion is neither comfortable nor constant! And yet, alas! how many such, amidst a glare of profession, continue with hearts unrenewed! Miserable is the condition of the wicked, even at its best, in this life: and what then must it be in hell? When once dead, their riches strangely vanish, and even fall into the hands of the godly, whom they hated: nor is any habitation secure and lasting but that which is not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. And in the most alarming forms of death God often ushers wicked men into eternal fire.

CHAPTER XXVIII. No wonder that I cannot tell you the reasons why God punishes some wicked men in this world and not all, when, after all our researches, we have so scanty a knowledge of natural things. There are secret mines for the silver, and a country for gold, which men melt and refine. 2. And iron is, with art and labour, dragged from the dust, and stones are melted into brass; 3. The miners, in the most earnest and daring manner, dig till they have quite lost the light of day, and bring their ore from the dark caverns of the earth, where pestilential damps and other dangers often prove mortal. 4. While, with infinite labour, they drain off the springs that disturb them, they break into veins of metal about the bottom of mountains; and, unheeded by the men who walk above them, they wander in the dark bowels of the earth. 5, 6. While the surface of the ground produces herbs and corn for food to animals; lime, brimstone, and such other combustibles are found in its bowels; nay, the most precious stones and gold in some parts of it. 7, 8. So mysterious are the passages of these miners that the most quick-sighted fowls never looked into them, and the most fierce and courageous animals never dared to enter them. 9. But the miners artfully cut their way through rocks of flint, and dig to the bottoms of mountains, to come at the precious metals. 10. They make passages for draining off the water that breaks in upon them, and cleave asunder the veins of ore, and earnestly discover the precious stones and metals. 11. They stop the springs from overflowing their mine, turning them another way, and bring up these precious gems or metals which had been long sealed up in the heart of the earth. 12. But to find out solid wisdom, or obtain the knowledge of God's reasons in his providential conduct, is still more difficult. 13. God hath so disposed it that no man knows the order, method, or importance of his procedure; and no man on earth can attain to it. 14. No search into the depths of the earth or sea can procure it. 15–19. Not all the precious metals or gems in the world can purchase it. 20, 21. No, not the most quick-sighted creatures on earth can point out a method to obtain it. 22. The solid consideration of death and hell are a proper introduction to true wisdom; and yet in death and damnation there are manifold instances of God's wise procedure which are not sufficiently comprehended in the reasons of them. 23–27. God alone—who is infinite in wisdom and knowledge, and who rules and governs all things for the best—who manages winds, waters, rains, and thunders in all their circumstances, degree, time, place, or form—properly understands the reasons of whatever he does, particularly his dealings with men. 28. But what he inculcates and bestows upon men as their proper wisdom is such a knowledge and filial awe of his unbounded excellencies, as makes them to flee to him as their only refuge and portion; and, hating everything sinful, to love him and keep his commandments.

Ver. 1. [The general scope of this address on mining operations is well indicated by Delitzsch:—'According to the most natural connection Job desires to show that the final lot of the rich man is well merited, because the treasures which he made the object of his avarice and pride, though ever so costly, are still earthly in their nature and origin.' It is interesting to inquire where Job got his knowledge of mining. There is monumental evidence that mining operations were carried on in the peninsula of Sinai long before the exodus. The remains of smelting furnaces, the dwellings of the miners, the temples they erected, and the works they undertook, may be seen on the spot to this day; and they are testimonies to the scientific acquirements and enterprising spirit of some great primeval nation. With these or kindred works Job must have been acquainted. P.]

Ver. 4. [Delitzsch's translation of this difficult passage is as follows:—'He breaketh away a shaft from those who tarry above; there, forgotten by every foot, they hang and swing far from men.' Allusion is manifestly made to the operations of the miner, especially in the copper-mines. 'The shaft' is the perpendicular aperture to the mine. Down it the miners are let by a rope, on which they hang and swing unseen by those above. P.]

Ver. 5. [That is, the surface of the earth is heaved up and tossed by the operations of the miner, just as volcanic fire heaves up a mountain. P.]

Ver. 11. [Bindeth the floods. It is probable the reference of Job is to the ingenious methods and gigantic efforts whereby mines were drained in his days; but of the literal binding of the floods, many parts of the Low Countries of the European continent, rescued by embankment from the sea, afford the most striking examples. Roberts in his Illustrations refers the greater part of this chapter to the eastern works for irrigation; but we can see no good reason for supposing them so obscurely combined with the evident reference to mining. See ver. 1, 2. C.]

Ver. 25. [The writer here refers to those great fixed laws which regulate all physical nature. These laws are divine in origin. God appointed them. He appointed to the wind the measure of its force; he distributed the seas and oceans by measure; he appointed to the rains, the lightning, and the thunder their laws. God thus rules the world in every department. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how men rack their wits, and toil their members, to obtain riches, which, while enjoyed, are unsubstantial, and which quickly take to themselves wings and fly away, as an eagle towards heaven! Why are we not more industrious in digging for Jesus' hidden treasures, which answer all things and endure for ever! Surely Jesus and his mysteries, Jesus and his grace, must be strangely mistaken when men can thus prefer created trifles and rarities of dust! But how great is that God whose eye overlooks all, whose power effects all, whose purpose rules all things! Let me never dare to pry into his private counsels, whereby he regulates his conduct. Let me leave the secrets of other men's hearts and the deep mysteries of providence to the Lord. And let me and my children study what he has revealed to us as the standard of our faith and practice. Let us learn the wisdom which comes from above, which is pure and peaceable, manifested in fearing the Lord and departing from evil.

24 For [a]he looketh to the ends of the earth, and seeth under the whole heaven;

25 To [b]make the weight[3] for the winds; and he weigheth the waters by measure.

26 When [c]he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder:

27 Then did he see it, and [d]declare it; he prepared it, yea, and searched it out.

28 And [e]unto man he said, Behold, [f]the fear of the LORD, [g]that is wisdom; and to [h]depart from evil is understanding.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Job calleth to mind his former prosperity and honour, and the worthy use he had made of it.

MOREOVER, Job [a]continued his parable, and said,

2 Oh that I were as in [b]months past, as in the days when God preserved me;

3 When his [c]candle shined upon my head,[1] and when by his light I walked through darkness;

4 As I was in the days of my youth, when the [d]secret of God[2] was upon my tabernacle;

5 When the [e]Almighty was yet with me, when [f]my children were about me;

6 When [g]I washed my steps with butter, and the rock poured me[3] out rivers of oil;[4]

7 When I went out [h]to the gate through the city; when I prepared my seat in the street!

8 The young men saw me, and [i]hid themselves; and the aged [k]arose, and stood up.

9 The princes [l]refrained talking, and laid their hand on their mouth.

10 The nobles held their peace,[5] and their tongue [m]cleaved to the roof of their mouth.[6]

11 When[n] the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me:

12 Because [o]I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him.

13 The [p]blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me; and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy.

14 I[q] put on righteousness, and it clothed me: my judgment was as a robe and a diadem.

15 I was [r]eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame.

16 I was [s]a father to the poor: and the [t]cause which I knew not[7] I searched out.

17 And I [u]brake the jaws[8] of the wicked, and [x]plucked the spoil out of his teeth.

18 Then [y]I said, I shall die in my nest,[9] and I shall multiply my days [z]as the sand.

19 My [a]root was spread[1] out by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon my branch.

20 My [b]glory was fresh[2] in me, and my bow was renewed[3] in my hand.[4]

21 Unto[c] me men gave ear, and waited, and kept silence at my counsel.

22 After[d] my words they spake not again; and my speech [e]dropped upon them.

23 And [f]they waited for me as for the rain; and they opened their mouth wide as for the latter rain.

24 If I laughed on them, they [g]believed it not; and the light of my countenance they cast not down.

25 I[h] chose out their way, and sat chief, and dwelt as a king in the army, as one that [i]comforteth the mourners.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 Job's honour is turned into extreme contempt. 15 His prosperity into the deepest distress.

BUT now they that are younger[1] than I [a]have me in derision, whose fathers I would have [b]disdained to have set with the dogs of my [2]flock.

CHAPTER XXIX. After another pause, Job proceeded in his spirited vindication of himself, saying, 2. O that God would re-establish me in my former prosperity of person, family, and estate, as in the days wherein he watched over and protected me! 3. When his blessing and favour directed and prospered me in all my affairs, and made me to pass untouched through all the troubles and inconveniences of life, and the various dangers, difficulties, and calamities which befel others around me. 4. When I was in the days of my ripe prosperity, and had the authority, the oracles, and secrets of God with me; 5. When God Almighty continued so kind to and familiar with me, and my children and servants were round about me; 6. When whithersoever I turned myself I abounded in all sorts of the choicest blessings; 7. When I took my seat in the places of judicature and concourse, 8. The young men stood in the most profound awe of me, and the aged stood up in reverence and ceased to speak. 9, 10. Nay, from a regard to my superior authority, princes, the most noble not excepted, refrained from speaking. 11. They who heard me judge in a cause pronounced me highly favoured of God, and richly endowed with his gifts and grace, and prayed for his distinguished blessings upon me: and they who observed my just procedure attested my pious, just, and blameless conversation; 12. Because I never failed to redress the grievances of poor, fatherless, and destitute persons who complained to me. 13. Many blessed me as the instrument of delivering them when they were upon the point of being ruined by false accusations; and I caused the widow's heart to sing with joy for her great and unexpected deliverances, and the favours which I granted her. 14. In all my sentences I fixed my attention on what was just and upright: and the decisions I gave were an honour to me. 15. I instructed, directed, and assisted such as could not manage their own affairs; and was ever ready to help and comfort such as could not help themselves. 16. I was a kind teacher, provider, and protector to the poor; and carefully inquired into their circumstances, as well as into their difficult and obscure pleas. 17. By proper punishments and restraints I rendered the wicked incapable of oppressing, and forced them to restore that which they had violently extorted. 18. Then I vainly imagined that, after a long life of amazing prosperity, I should die quietly in my own house among my children and friends; 19. That my remarkable happiness should certainly continue, as I had every mean of preserving and securing it; 20. That the honour and respect which I had from others, and my abilities and powers, should still continue with me; 21, 22. That men should still regard my advices and decisions with the profoundest respect; 23. That they should always be exceedingly desirous to hear my opinion and judgment on a point; 24. That, though I carried myself familiarly towards them, they should still stand in awe, and carefully avoid everything which might deprive them of my favour; 25. And that I should still be regarded as their principal director in their conduct, and affectionate comforter under their troubles.

N B. Ver. 20–25 may also be read in the past tense, as in our translation.

Ver. 7. [Seat. His seat for the administration of justice in the forum or market-place. C.——Not only in his own house, or on his own property among his own servants and retainers, was he respected and honoured; but even when he went to the city, and took his accustomed place in the public market, all men honoured him as a prince. P.]

Ver. 24. [If I laughed on them, they believed it not. 'If I smiled upon them they became not confident;' that is, my utmost familiarity never bred contempt; a result ever difficult to attain, and requiring the most exact tempering of affection with firmness, of condescension with dignity, and of rebuke with tenderness—a result of which polish may produce an imitation, while grace alone can exhibit the original. C.]

Ver. 25. [There is an amount of self-glorification in this passage which would be offensive in western society. The customs and feelings of the East, however, are very different from ours. Such language as this would not be considered egotistic when uttered by eastern magnates. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—What holiness, comfort, and honour God bestows upon all believers when it is for his glory and their good! But those who prosper in youth know little what dark and cloudy days may be in reserve for them. It is pleasant, however, to commemorate our early intimacies with God, and his kind protection of us, or communications of light, life, and comfort to our heart: and if they be lost, God allows us to pray for the restoration of our mercies, spiritual and temporal. Faith in God, and intimate fellowship with him, remarkably contribute to render men truly honourable and useful in this world. And it is comely

2 Yea, whereto might the strength of their hands profit me, in whom old age was perished?

3 For want and famine they were solitary;[3] fleeing[c] into the wilderness in former time[4] desolate and waste:

4 Who [d]cut up mallows[5] by the bushes, and juniper-roots[6] for their meat.

5 They [e]were driven forth from among men, (they cried after them as after a thief,)

6 To dwell in the cliffs of the valleys, in caves[7] of the earth, and in the rocks.

7 Among the bushes they [f]brayed; under the nettles[8] they were gathered together.

8 They were children of fools, yea, children of base men:[9] they were viler than the earth.

9 And [g]now am I their song; yea, I am their by-word.[h]

10 They[i] abhor me, they flee far from me, and spare not to spit in my face.[1]

11 Because[k] he hath loosed my cord,[2] and afflicted me, they have also [l]let loose the bridle before me.[3]

12 Upon my [m]right hand rise the youth; they push away my feet, and they raise up against me the ways of their destruction.

13 They [n]mar my path; they set forward my calamity; they have no helper.[4]

14 They came upon me [o]as a wide breaking in of waters: in the desolation they rolled themselves upon me.

15 Terrors[p] are turned upon me: they pursue my soul[5] as the wind; and my welfare passeth away [q]as a cloud.

16 And now my [r]soul is poured out upon me,[6] the days of affliction have taken hold upon me.

in a state when judges are grave, solemn and impartial helpers to the poor, and terrors to the oppressors; and when people are modest, submissive, and grateful: but when men have great wealth at home, and are regarded as the oracle, the darling sovereign, and comforter of their country, how apt are they to suppose their felicity secured, and to forget the evil day!

CHAPTER XXX. But now, alas! the youths, who durst scarcely look me in the face, mock and deride me, even those whose infamous parents I would have disdained to have employed in attending my dogs, or in other of the vilest services; 2. Being indeed so lazy, listless, and weak, that it was in vain to employ them in anything, after they had lived so long abandoning themselves to wickedness; 3–8. Base and beggarly fellows, who, ashamed of their poverty, and to prevent the punishment of their wickedness, had fled into deserts; and there, like wild beasts, lived upon roots and herbs, and lodged in dens, caves, and bushes. 9. But now they triumph over me, and make my calamities the subject of their songs and merry conversation. 10. Heartily abhorring me, they disdain to come near me, unless it be contemptuously to spit in my face. 11. Because God has deprived me of my authority, wealth, and honour, and has grievously afflicted me, they take an unrestrained liberty in their insolent behaviour towards me. 12. The very boys place themselves as my accusers; they insolently abuse me; and attempt, by different methods, to destroy me. 13. They endeavour to obstruct all means of comfort and relief to me. They so disturb my mind that I know not what to do. Without having or needing any assistance, they in the most presumptuous manner increase my calamities. 14. With the most furious and destructive violence they assault me: and when God has deprived me of my substance, family and health, they insult me in the most noisy forms. 15. Terrors directed by God against me, seize upon me in the most violent and irresistible manner; and my abundant prosperity is quickly, in a moment, over and gone. 16. By reason of my terrible afflictions my courage and resolution are quite exhausted, and the powers of my soul so wasted that I can do nothing but melt into tears and faint away with grief. 17. In the night, when others rest, my bones are, as it were, pierced and bruised with pain; and the worms, terrors, and agonies that torment me never take rest. 18. By their fearful force my boils, which cover me all over, are like an outer garment to me, and gird me round about; and their filthy matter stains my clothes, and glues them fast to my skin, that I can scarcely get them changed. 19. I am fearfully plunged into filthy troubles. My foul sores render me like dust and ashes, and reduce me to the point of death. 20. When I present myself before thee, O God, and continue instant in the most fervent supplications, thou dost but contemn me. 21, 22. Acting as an implacable enemy to me, thou exercisest thy almighty power to destroy me. Thou liftest me up to the wind of thy judgment, and makest me to ride upon it as stubble driven to and fro. My body is consumed by the violence of my trouble; and my firmest things are made to reel as the waters of the sea tossed with a storm. 23. Truly by thy thus dealing with me I see that I need look for nothing but death and the grave, that common sanctuary of mankind. 24. And I hope God will neither exert his almighty power to rescue me from the grave, nor let me in my passage cry out of pains, let friends entreat for my life as they will; nor use it to molest me there, but give me refreshing ease in the state of the dead. 25. Did not I always sympathize with others in their distress and poverty? And do not I now weep as one condemned to a period of trouble? Does not my soul, as a poor distressed object, pine away with grief? 26. For when I firmly expected great and lasting prosperity terrible miseries came upon me. 27. How insupportable are the inward torments of my body and the anguish of my soul! Days of fearful affliction have rushed upon me before I was aware. 28. I spend my days without any comfort; and sadness makes me quite unconcerned about light or any other agreeable object. My trouble forces me to cry out, be as many around me as will. 29. I can do nothing but seek to be alone, and hiss and howl over my dreadful case. 30. The hot moisture of my boils has rendered my skin black, and has inflamed all my bones. 31. All my joy and mirth are laid aside; and nothing but weeping and wailing are come in their stead.

Ver. 2. ['In whom old age (untaught by experience) had become profligate.'—Note, However melancholy be the sight of a thoughtless young man, still there is hope that time may teach him a better lesson; but of an abandoned old man, lost to all experience, what can we hope? Grace alone can teach either the young or the old; but the aged sinner is surely the more frightful picture. C.]

Ver. 24. [The 'stretching out' of God's hand, signifies his afflicting judgments. See Is. 9. 12, 17, 21. They will not pursue to the grave. C.]

Ver. 31. [That is, of them that weep for the dead. Of the plaintive and doleful cries for the dead, eastern travellers assure us that Europeans can form no conception without the actual hearing. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Unsubstantial, uncertain, and transient are all things but God and the spiritual blessings of his blessed word. But sin, even on earth, makes many the most base and miserable of wretches; the youngest in age, the meanest in extraction, the poorest in property, and the most scandalous in character, are generally the most ready to contemn, insult,

CHAPTER XXXI.

Job maketh a solemn protestation of his integrity in several duties.

I MADE[a] a covenant with mine eyes; why then should I think upon a maid?

2 For [b]what portion of God is there from above?[1] and what inheritance of the Almighty from on high?

3 Is[c] not destruction to the wicked? and a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity?

4 Doth[d] not he see my ways, and count all my steps?

5 If[e] I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath hasted to deceit;

6 Let[f] me be weighed in an even balance, that God may know mine integrity.

7 If[g] my step hath turned out of the way, and mine heart walked after mine eyes,[2] and if any blot hath cleaved to mine hands;

8 Then [h]let me sow, and let another eat; yea, let my offspring be rooted out.

9 If [i]mine heart have been deceived by a woman,[3] or if I have laid wait at my neighbour's door;

10 Then let my wife [k]grind unto another,[4] and let others bow down upon her.

11 For this is an [l]heinous crime; yea, it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges.

12 For it is a [m]fire that consumeth to destruction, and would root out all mine increase.

13 If I [n]did despise the cause of my manservant or of my maid-servant, when they contended with me;

14 What then shall I do when [o]God riseth up?[5] and when he visiteth, what shall I answer him?

15 Did[p] not he that made me in the womb make him? and did not one fashion us in the womb?[6]

16 If I have [q]withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail;

17 Or have [r]eaten my morsel myself alone,[7] and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof;

18 (For from my youth [s]he was brought up with me, as with a father, and I have guided her[8] from my mother's womb,)[9]

19 If I have [t]seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering;

20 If [u]his loins have not blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep;

21 If I have [v]lifted up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate:

22 Then [w]let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the [x]bone.

23 For [y]destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his [z]highness I could not endure.

24 If I [a]have made gold my hope, or have said to the fine gold, Thou art my [2]confidence;

25 If I [b]rejoiced because my wealth was great, and because mine hand had gotten [3]much;

26 If [c]I beheld the sun[4] when it shined, or the moon walking in [5]brightness;[6]

27 And my heart hath been secretly enticed, or my mouth[7] hath [d]kissed my hand:[8]

28 This also were [e]an iniquity to be punished by the judge: for I should have [f]denied the God that is above.

29 If I [g]rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated me, or lifted up myself when evil found him;

30 (Neither have I suffered my mouth[9] to sin, by wishing [h]a curse to his soul;)

31 If[i] the men of my tabernacle said not, Oh that we had of his flesh![1] we cannot be satisfied:

32 The [j]stranger did not lodge in the street: but I opened my doors to the traveller;[2]

33 If I covered my transgressions as [3]Adam, by hiding [k]mine iniquity in my bosom:

34 Did [m]I fear a great multitude, or did the contempt of families terrify me, that I kept silence, and went not out of the door?[4]

35 Oh[n] that one would hear me! behold, my desire is, that the Almighty would answer [5]me, and that mine adversary had written a book:[6]

36 Surely I would take it [o]upon my shoulder, and bind it as a crown to me:

37 I [p]would declare unto him the number of my steps; as a prince would I go near unto him.

and abuse the greatest and best, when Providence once frowns upon them. And it is hard for wounded spirits to bear up under complicated troubles, terrors of mind, loathsome and painful diseases of body, and frowns of God. But happy are they who can by faith take up the eternal enjoyment of God as a full balance to all the troubles which they can suffer on earth! Happy are they who have the testimony of a good conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity they have had their conversation in this world!

CHAPTER XXXI. Ver. 6. Let me be tried by an upright impartial judge, that God may acknowledge and approve mine integrity. 7, 8. If I have knowingly, willingly, and ordinarily wandered out of the way of my duty, have indulged my heart in covetousness or lust, or my hands in bribery and injustice, let all that I have be bestowed on others, and my children, plants, and trees be rooted up. 9, 10. If I have been enticed to unclean lust by any woman, or if I have watched for opportunities to defile my neighbour's bed, let my own wife be a slave and a whore to others. 26, 27. If I have beheld the sun or moon with any idolatrous regard, or have had any inward inclination to esteem them as deities, or have given them any external worship. 34. Did ever fear of men terrify me from candid confession of my sin or from any other duty? or if I have concealed my faults, let me be overwhelmed with the terror and contempt of men till I be ashamed to be seen. 35–37. O that I had but an impartial judge, and that my accuser would give me a written charge! I should prize it as an honour, since every article would then be proved false: I would, with undaunted courage and confidence of success, give a candid account of my past conduct, to see of what he would accuse me.

Ver. 1. [Job was charged with the commission of secret sins. His friends alleged that he would not have been so heavily punished had he not been guilty of grievous offences. In reply Job reviews his whole conduct, both public and private. He enters into particulars so as to show that the charge preferred against him was entirely false. It may be noted that while Job indignantly repudiates the charge of hypocrisy, he is wanting in that humility which must ever characterize the true child of God. Paul boasted of his faith, and endurance, and labours; but he ascribed all his power and grace to Christ, 1 Co. 15. 10; Phi. 2. 13. Job speaks only of himself. P.]

Ver. 15. [Job here means that he had been kind and indulgent as a master. He admitted the great principle that all men are by nature equal. No man has a right to rule or tyrannize over his fellows. In all his dealings with his servants he acted in accordance with this principle. P.]

Ver. 22. [This imprecatory conclusion has reference to all the hypothetical expressions from ver. 16. Job adopts this strong mode of affirming his innocence and purity of heart, as well as of life. P.]

Ver. 35. ['Job refers to the procedure in ancient courts of justice, where the accused party appended his

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 Elihu is angry with Job and his three friends. 6 Because wisdom cometh not from age, he excuseth the boldness of his youth. 11 He reproveth them for not satisfying of Job. 16 His zeal to speak.

SO these three men ceased to answer[1] Job, because he was [a]righteous in his own eyes.

2 Then was [b]kindled the wrath of Elihu[2] the son of Barachel the [c]Buzite, of the kindred of Ram; against Job was his wrath kindled, because [d]he justified himself[3] rather than God.

3 Also against his three friends was his wrath kindled,[4] because they had found no answer, and yet had condemned [e]Job.

4 Now Elihu had [f]waited till Job had [g]spoken, because they were [h]elder than he.

5 When Elihu saw that there was no answer in the mouth of these three men, then his wrath was kindled.

6 And Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite answered and said, I am [i]young, and ye are very old; wherefore I was afraid, and [j]durst not show you mine opinion.

7 I said, [k]Days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom.

mark to the legal instruments in the cause, and he means that he would gladly affix his signature to articles of impeachment laid against him, in token of his desire to debate the question of his own integrity' (Wordsworth). Job feels strong in the consciousness of his innocence. He has now put the three friends to silence; and he makes a general appeal to any one who will hear him. He boldly appeals to God himself to try and judge him. Seeing only with human eye, comparing himself only with a human standard, Job forgets man's frail and guilty nature. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—How diversified are the forms in which inward corruption breaks forth among mankind! And there is great need of purifying the heart, of solemn dedication to God, of watchfulness over both soul and senses, and of constant, awful, and engaging impressions of God, to promote a holy and circumspect life. It is highly honourable to be followers of those ancient patriarchs who through faith and patience inherited the promises. But, alas! that many things, by them held horrid and detestable, are now become common and fashionable!—What dangerous enemies to our souls are fleshly lusts! And they call for especial watchfulness. If we would keep our heart pure our eye must be single. However unexceptionable our outward conduct appear, there is a God who marks our secret sins; and no impurity of temper can consist with the enjoyment of him. Such as will lodge sin in their heart now must lodge in hell for ever. How rare truly honest men are in this world! None are more to be suspected of fraud than such as are full of talk in their worldly dealings. Honesty needs no varnish. The gains of covetousness, however secret, leave a blot in the sight of God, which nothing but Jesus' atoning blood can wash away. The fruits of injustice must either be restored or they will damn us: and they who are conscious of integrity never shun a trial. What a crying sin is adultery; and how damning!—Great humanity and tenderness is due to servants and the poor, who have the same Maker and God as ourselves: and there is great need of grace to wean our heart from this world and from every rival of God. It is a hard task to forgive injuries without reluctance. But to rejoice in the fall of an enemy is malicious and murderous. The greatest provocation will never justify our revenge. Hypocritically to hide our sins is destructive to our souls. And it is very dangerous to be partakers with other men in their sins. Let us therefore avoid the fear of man, which causeth a snare. Let us never hear a good cause run down without vindicating it, nor see injustice committed without remonstrating against it. In all our conduct let us study to approve ourselves unto God.

CHAPTER XXXII. Ver. 1. He was resolutely bent to justify himself, let them say what they would. 2. He insisted too much upon his own vindication. Yea, not without reflecting upon the severity of God. 7, 8. Old men ought to instruct their inferiors in age in the matters of God. But I find that, whatever advantage old age may give for knowledge and experience, it is chiefly men's own rational soul, and the inspiring Spirit of God, which qualify them to apprehend the mysteries of religion and providence. 13. Lest you should think you have said all that needs to be said in the cause, and that God's immediate strokes upon Job are an evidence that he is a hypocrite.—14. Job hath given me no provocation to speak; nor will I use such weak reasoning and provoking language as you have done.—21. Do not expect that I should flatter you in your errors and mistakes out of respect to your age, gravity, or the like; for I am resolved to deal freely, plainly, and impartially with you.

Ver. 1. [The first three verses of this chapter are introductory. They explain the appearance of the new speaker upon the scene. Elihu, as it appears, had heard the whole controversy—alike the charges brought against Job and his reply. He observed both the illogical reasoning and its effect. Job was confirmed in his high idea of his integrity, while the friends were silenced. Elihu waited to the end of the discussion in hopes of hearing something calculated to convince Job of his real error. It was in vain. He heard nothing. The three friends failed to reply to Job; and Job justified himself in the sight of God. P.]

Ver. 8. ['But the Spirit in man it is, and the inspiration of the Almighty, that giveth him understanding.' Whatever opinion may be entertained regarding the person and character of Elihu, there can be no doubt that he here lays claim to divine inspiration. He acknowledges that all wisdom must come from God. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—In angry disputes there is ordinarily much to reprove on both sides. But when the disputants are warm they are loath to own that they have lost the cause. Yet it is much better to say nothing than to talk error and nonsense. When we have fault to find, it should be done before men, not behind their backs. A gracious heart is jealous for the honour of God, and cannot, unmoved, see him slighted. And it is highly commendable to show a holy indignation against sin and warmth in the cause of truth. In disputes it is proper that each should speak in his own order, and that each be animated by a true and discreet zeal for God. And it is extremely agreeable when great sense and courage are directed by great humility and modesty. In matters of doubtful disputation we ought to be diffident of our own judgment, and to be more swift to hear than to speak. Yet after we have given others a long and patient hearing it is but reasonable that we should be heard in our turn. And by-standers, who hear without prejudice, often see further into a dispute than those who have their minds blinded by passion. God deals very sove-reignly in the disposal of knowledge or other gifts. Men may have rational souls and yet know little: but they ought to cultivate this distinguished privilege. All the wisdom of fallen men in spiritual matters is but darkness till the Spirit of God enlighten their mind.—And, alas! how often disputes are closed before the question be rightly stated or impartially handled! And hence the issue is so seldom a seeing eye to eye in the truth. They have therefore good right to speak who can set the cause of truth in a more convincing and striking light than had been formerly done. And they who speak for God ought to be earnest in their discourses, inflamed with zeal for his glory and the good of souls; and to be so impressed with his perfections and laws as to regard neither the fear nor the favour of men.

CHAPTER XXXIII. Ver. 3. I shall not speak from passion or prejudice, as others have done before me; but from a sincere desire of doing thee good, and in such a clear manner that thou mayest be fully convinced of the truth of what I say. 4–6. I am a man like thyself, fit to reason with thee on equal terms, and inclined to plead the cause of God against thee. 7. There is nothing about me to terrify or torment thee. 8–11. Nor do I intend to charge thee with hypocrisy, but with uttering of self-justifying language, dishonourable to God, as if he had dealt more severely than was just with thee. 12, 13. Let thy former life be as holy and unblamable as it will, yet thou art certainly culpable in quarrelling with the dispensations of God, who is infinitely superior to thee in every respect, and accountable to none for his conduct. 14–18. Nay, so dull are men that, when God takes repeated pains in dreams, visions, or the like, to instruct them effectually for their humiliation and eternal salvation, they do not take notice of, or do not understand, his meaning. 19–22. Hence, for their awakening to a proper attention, he severely afflicts them, till they are brought to the very point of death. 23, 24. If then, by the instruction of some faithful minister, and especially by the instruction of Jesus Christ, the unparalleled Angel and Interpreter of the new kingdom, the afflicted man be brought, not only to discern the equity of God in afflicting him, but to discern, and by faith apply, Jesus' blessed righteousness to himself, God intimates to his soul a full and free redemption through that all-inclusive atonement. 25, 26. In consequence hereof not only the man's body and mind recover their wonted health and alacrity, but he is enabled, with boldness and success, to pour forth his requests before God, who allows him the comfortable sense and gracious reward of that righteousness imparted to or implanted in him. 27, 28. While God exactly observes, the man, all influenced by cordial gratitude, shall publicly confess his sinfulness of heart and life, and that the due reward of his deeds has never been rendered unto him; and shall profess his full assurance of faith, that God has redeemed him by the mighty power of his Son's blood, and will bestow his fulness of grace and glory upon him.

Ver. 3. [It appears to me that Elihu here contrasts his own motives and form of address with those of the three friends who had preceded him. They spake ignorantly, bitterly, and reproachfully; Elihu, on the other hand, addresses Job in words of well-meaning kindness and sincerity. Delitzsch translates the verse thus:—'Sincere as my heart are my utterances, and knowledge that is pure my lips declare.' P.]

Ver. 4. [The twofold nature of man is here indicated—the material organization and the spiritual soul. The Spirit of God made—moulded and framed—the body of clay; then the breath of the Almighty breathed into the moulded framework gave it life. The body was made, not created; the soul was created, not made. The spirit of man was a direct emanation from God. P.]

Ver. 6. [Yet though in God's stead, a body is prepared for me of clay like thine own, so that while my arguments convince, my terrors may not affright, alluding to what Job had said, ch. 9. 34. C.]

Ver. 23. [A messenger—Christ the Angel of the covenant, Mal. 3. 1. An interpreter—Christ as a prophet, preaching the gospel to the poor and afflicted, Lu. 4. 14–32. One among a thousand—Christ as a leader and commander, Is. 55. 4. His uprightness—his duty, as was shown to the jailer at Philippi, Ac. 16. 31. C.]

[Ver. 9–11 are the statements attributed by Elihu to Job. They are substantially accurate, as may be seen by comparing them with ch. 9. 21; 16. 7; 12. 4. The tendency of Job's arguments was to indicate that as an innocent man he had been exceptionally if not unfairly treated. Elihu shows that there was a grand fundamental error in all his speeches, for God alone is pure, and all men are guilty before him. P.]

Ver. 18. [The first object of God in putting man through a course of discipline is indicated in ver. 17, 18—it is to free him from the dangerous sin of carnal security and pride. God warns him in dreams and visions. P.]

Ver. 22. [Ver. 19–22 indicate another mode in which God is pleased to instruct man. It is painful and exhausting to the body; but the final result is glorious. The same great truth is embodied by our Lord in his parable of the vine:—'And every branch in me

29 Lo, all these things worketh God [f]oftentimes with man,

30 To [g]bring back his soul from the pit, to be enlightened with the [h]light of the living.

31 Mark[i] well, O Job; hearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I will speak.

32 If thou hast anything to say, [j]answer me: speak; for I desire to justify thee.[3]

33 If not, [k]hearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I shall teach thee wisdom.[4]

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 Elihu accuseth Job for charging God with injustice. 10 God omnipotent cannot be unjust. 31 Man must humble himself before God. 34 Job is blamed for his rash discourses.

FURTHERMORE, Elihu answered and said,

2 Hear my words, O [a]ye wise men; and give ear unto me, ye that have knowledge;

3 For[b] the ear trieth words, as the mouth[1] tasteth meat.

4 Let us [c]choose to us judgment: let us know among ourselves what is good.

5 For Job hath said, [d]I am righteous: and God hath taken away my judgment.

6 Should[e] I lie against my right? [f]my wound is incurable without transgression.[2]

7 What man is like Job, who [g]drinketh up scorning like water?[3]

8 Which [h]goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.

9 For he hath said, It [i]profiteth a man nothing that he should delight himself with God.

10 Therefore hearken unto me, ye [k]men of understanding: [l]far be it from God, that he should do wickedness; and from the Almighty, that he should commit iniquity.

11 For the [m]work of a man shall he render unto him, and cause every man to find according to his ways.

12 Yea, [n]surely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert judgment.

13 Who [o]hath given him a charge over the earth? or who hath disposed the whole[4] world?

14 If [p]he set his heart upon[5] man,[6] if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath;

15 All [q]flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust.

16 If now thou [r]hast understanding, hear this; hearken to the voice of my words:

17 Shall [s]even he that hateth [7]right [8]govern? and wilt thou condemn him that is most just?

18 Is[t] it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? and to princes, Ye are ungodly?

19 How [u]much less to him that [v]accepteth not the persons of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor? for they all are [w]the work of his hands.

20 In [x]a moment shall they die, and the people shall be troubled at midnight, and pass away: and the mighty shall be taken [9]away [z]without hand.[1]

21 For [a]his eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings.

22 There is [b]no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may [c]hide themselves.

23 For [d]he will not lay upon man more than right, that he should enter into judgment with God.[2]

24 He shall [e]break in pieces mighty men without number,[3] and set others in their stead.

25 Therefore he [f]knoweth[4] their works, and that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.' It is also embodied in the statement, 'Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.' P.]

Ver. 30. [This is a summary of God's gracious design in all the chastenings and afflictions which he sends upon his elect. It is to redeem them from sin's power. Elihu just develops the same principle which the apostle Paul enunciates; that 'all things work together for good to them that love God.' P.]

REFLECTIONS.—We ought seriously to hear out a discourse before we form a judgment on it. And they who speak for God ought to speak with great deliberation and plainness. Those who are in great trouble ought to be tenderly, as well as convincingly, dealt with. And yet a faithful testimony must be borne against the dishonours which we see or hear done to God by even the greatest of saints. In the rage of temptation or dispute, or in the depth of trouble, they often speak things very unadvisedly; and yet their words are apt to be taken in a worse sense than they meant them. To make us conceive aright of God's providence we must carefully keep in view his infinite greatness, sovereignty, grace, and wisdom. And there is great need to keep our heart with all diligence, that even in our dreams we may enjoy profitable fellowship with and instruction from God, which may humble our pride and secure the salvation of our soul. For God, at his pleasure, makes the most fearful changes upon the bodies or minds of men. But honourable to God and profitable to men are sanctified troubles. They lead to Jesus and his word as our instructors; to Jesus and his blood as our atonement and ransom; to Jesus and his law as our way in which we must walk; in our grateful returns for his mercies. They render our sins bitter and heavy, and our deliverances admired, and invigorate us to invite others to a share of his goodness. And often God brings men through great tribulation to their comforts on earth as well as to their glories in heaven. Departures from God issue in ruin unless he recover us by grace. And so manifold are his admonitions that, if we perish, our ruin lies at our own door. The wiser men are, they are the more humble and willing to learn; and the more desirous to be undeceived if they have been mistaken.

CHAPTER XXXIV. Ver. 2. I appeal to you, O men of sense, and I beseech you seriously to consider what I say. 3. For the mind can judge of the truth or falsehood of doctrines, as well as the mouth can judge of the taste of food. 4. Let us, without any passion or prejudice, thoroughly examine this cause: 5, 6. For Job has uttered some very dangerous expressions in his own justification, as if he could not vindicate himself without accusing God of unjust severity towards him. 7, 8. Did ever a good man deride, not only his friends, but even his God, with such greediness and delight? Did ever a good man under trouble speak and act so like the wicked? 10–12. It is impossible that God can deny justice to any, or punish without cause, or forbear to reward men according to their deeds, either in this life or in that which is to come. 13–17. Without supposing him perfectly just he could never govern the world; and men are so far from being able to give him his charge or directions, that their existence and life depend wholly upon his mere good pleasure and bounty. 18, 19. If it be improper rudely to charge earthly princes with wickedness and impiety, how daring is it to accuse him who formed all mankind equally subject to his power and pleasure, and therefore regards the greatest no more than the least, and can never do anything unjust to gain their favour or to avoid their anger. 20. At his pleasure whole nations, in their midnight security, are in a terrible manner, by earthquakes or the like, hurried into eternity; and the mightiest princes or warriors are, by his immediate influence, displaced from their station or deprived of their life. 21. His omniscient eye discerns enough in men for which he may justly punish them. 25. He takes a full and exact account of their works; and because they are wicked he rolls a night of destructive judgment upon them; and they are bruised, as in a mortar, under the weight of it. 26. He suddenly, and with shame, hisses away these eminent ones in the open view of unnumbered spectators. 27. Because of their manifest apostasy from and obstinate rebellion against him: 28. That he may encourage mean persons to apply to him for relief; and may graciously hear the plaintive cries of the poor and afflicted. 29. And if he give deliverance, rest, and comfort, none can make trouble. If he withhold his favourable smiles, none can procure help from him. 30. He also punishes wicked men, that their insolence may be controlled, and that their subjects may not be encouraged to imitate their impieties or be perpetually held in the fetters of tyranny and oppression. 31, 32. Instead of quarrelling with God's afflictive providences, we should kindly submit to them, and with holy resolution to avoid it, beseech him to discover to us the sinful cause of them, however secret. 33. Has not God inflicted these troubles upon thee as a part of thy due reward, because thou hast grievously murmured against him? Since thou hast chosen what I never would, declare plainly thy reason for it.

Ver. 8. [Not as if Job had ever practically or intentionally taken part with these, but that his doctrines finally coincided with theirs, and rendered him a party to all their erroneous conclusions.—Note, How easily may any one, through oversight, be found in the sight of God walking with the very men whom, in his judgment and heart, he fancies that he most abhors! C.]

Ver. 20. Delitzsch translates, 'For one, in bed,

27 Because they [i]turned back from him,[6] and would not [j]consider any of his ways:

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 Comparison is not to be made with God, because our good or evil cannot extend unto him. 9 Many cry in their afflictions, but are not heard for want of faith.

ELIHU spake moreover, and said,

2 Thinkest[a] thou this to be right, that thou saidst, [b]My righteousness is more than [1]God's?

3 For thou saidst, [c]What advantage will it be unto thee? and, What profit shall I have if I be cleansed from my sin?[2]

4 I will answer thee,[3] and thy companions with thee.

5 Look[d] unto the heavens, and see; and behold the clouds[4] which are higher than thou.

6 If thou sinnest, what doest thou [e]against him? or if thy transgressions be [5]multiplied, what doest thou unto him?

7 If[f] thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand?

8 Thy wickedness may hurt [g]a man as thou art, and thy righteousness may profit the son of man.

9 By[h] reason of the multitude of oppressions they make the oppressed to cry: they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty:[6]

10 But [i]none saith, Where is God my [k]maker, who [l]giveth songs in the night; saith to God, I have been proud, I will not do evil; what I see not, show thou me; if I have done wrong, I will do it no more.' This is given by Elihu as a model confession. It is not directly urged upon Job; but indirectly it is recommended to his consideration. Job was proud of his own integrity. To humble him, and bring him a suppliant to the throne of grace, was the object of all Job's afflictions. P.]

Ver. 33. [Speak what thou knowest. What thou truly knowest upon divine evidence, and not what is the product of thine own dissatisfied feelings. C.]

Ver. 36. ['O would that Job were proved to the extreme on account of his answers after the manner of evil men' (Delitzsch). The Hebrew word translated in the text 'my desire,' and in the margin 'my father,' appears to be from an Arabic root, and is equivalent to our expression 'O that.' It expresses an earnest wish or petition. The wish here is that Job's trials may continue until the whole controversy regarding his boasted uprightness be decided. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—Mutual assistance is necessary in searching out truth or convincing the mistaken. But often good men, in the heat of their spirit, speak worse than they mean; and reproach both themselves and their God, in speaking or acting like the profane world. Just views of God's perfections are requisite to prevent our sinful freedoms with him, or to render us penitent for them. The eye of God constantly observes our hearts and ways. How foolish is it then to hide our sin! Rejection of his warnings, and obstinate disregard of his will, fill up men's iniquity. And they who will not be guided by his word shall be smitten with his rod of judgment: and quickly will he resent the groans of the poor and oppressed, and redress their grievances. What God gives to nations or persons none but himself can take from them. If a soul enjoy a sense of his favour through faith in Jesus, no accusations of sin, nor fears of death or hell, can any longer disturb him. And when God is our enemy the whole world cannot protect us. Let wicked men crouch as they will, and profess as they will, in order to obtain power, he can easily disappoint them in mercy to mankind. The more persons are humbled for sin the less they will complain of their sufferings; but, conscious of the depth of iniquity in their heart, and the spread of it in their life, will search out the cause, and turn from it to God. Humble confessions of our ignorance and crimes, earnest supplications for necessary instructions and supplies of grace, and holy resolutions to walk in his way, are necessary in all our dealings with God. To struggle with him who best knows how to manage us, and does all things well, is at once extremely foolish and criminal. But, alas! how often the best of men, when left to their own passions under heavy troubles, practically take part with God's enemies, insult his friends, and obstinately murmur against himself! And it is then a distinguished kindness faithfully to reprove them, and to help them to see and be affected with their offence.

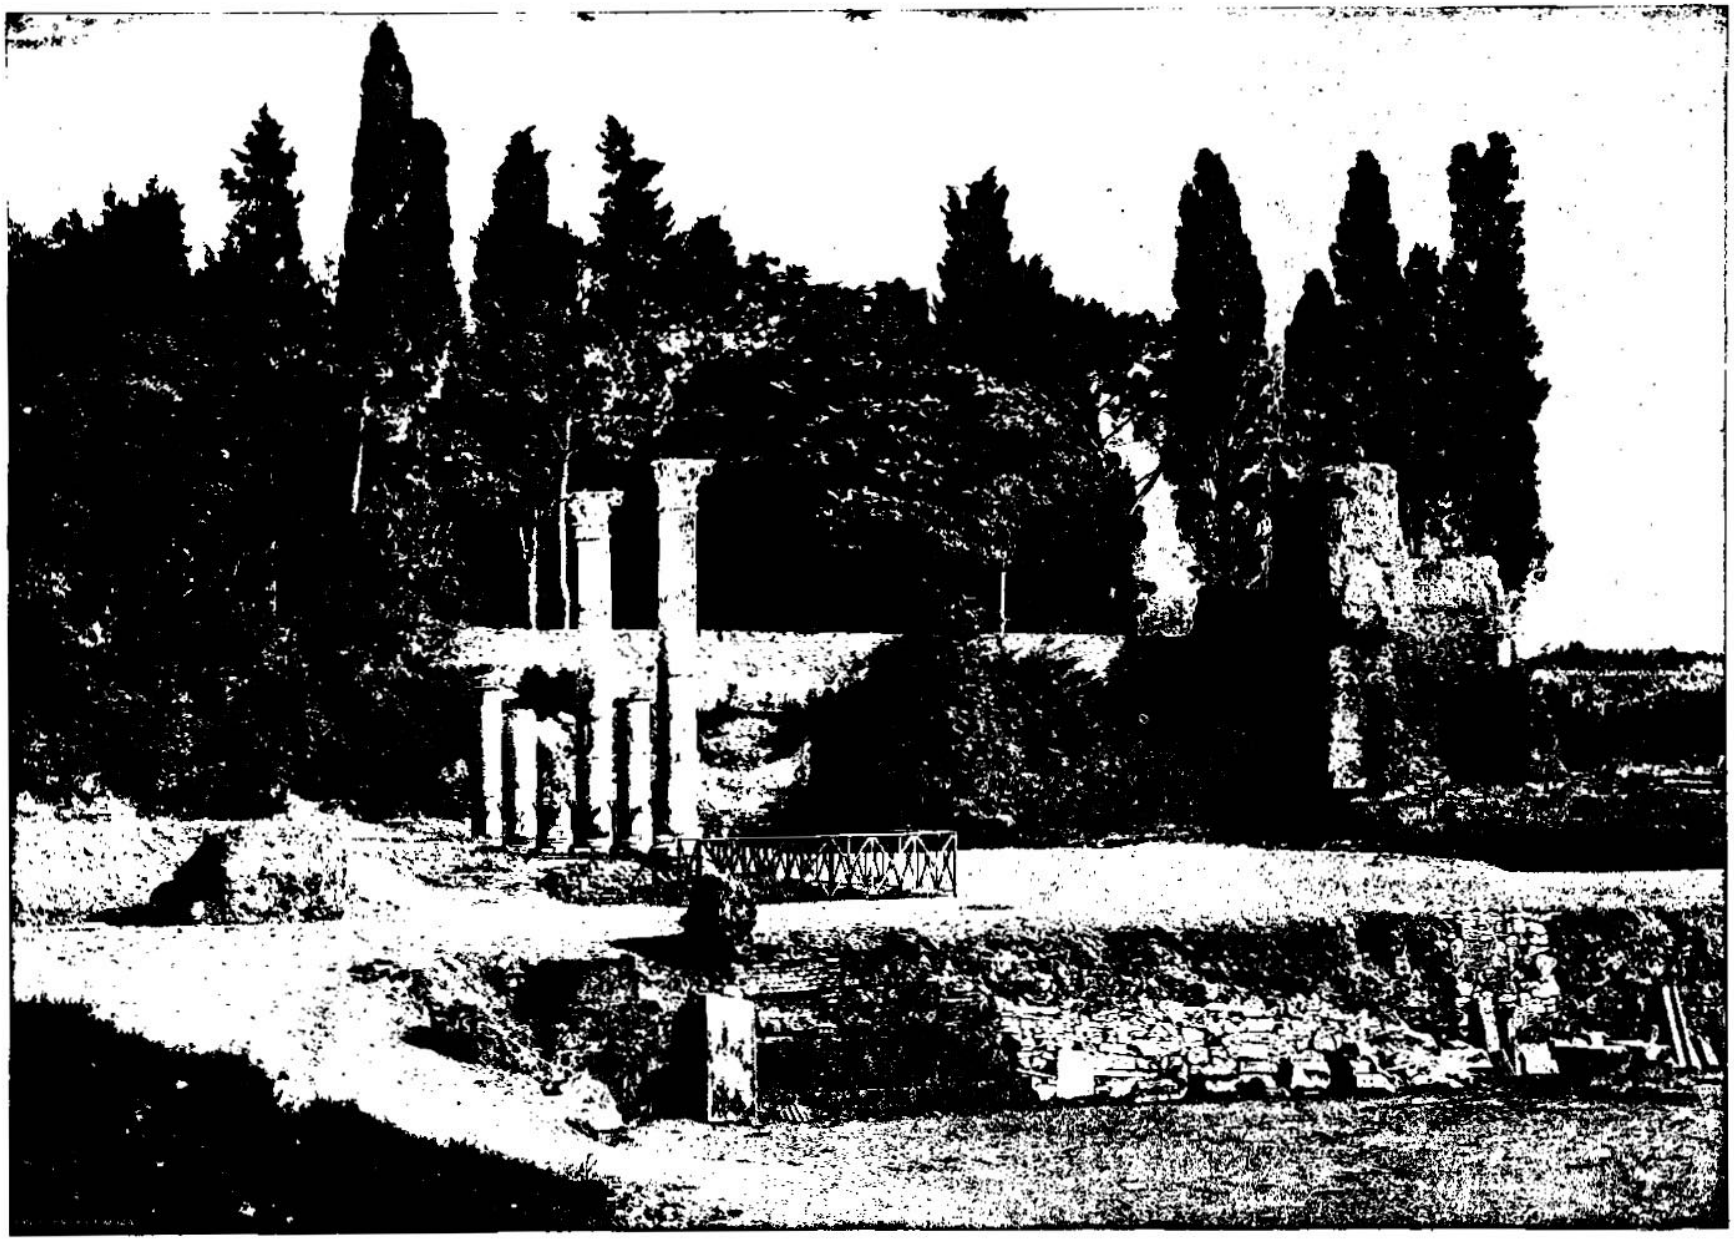
CHAPTER XXXV. Ver. 9–13. Many, under terrible troubles and inhuman oppressions, cry to God for relief, and for vengeance on their oppressors: but as their prayers are mingled with no faith in God or kind sense of his goodness, but merely forced from them by the pressure of their distress and the haughty violence of their oppressors, God pays no regard to them. 14, 15. Therefore, although thou complainest that he hath not, and despairest that he will ever appear for thy relief, yet he still attends to wisdom and equity in every dispensation; therefore do thou patiently wait and earnestly look for him; and remember that it is because there is nothing of this in thy carriage that God has thus severely afflicted thee; and because of thy excessive pride he quite disregards thy former prosperity, and overlooks thy present extremity of trouble. 16. And it is owing to thy ignorance or thoughtlessness of this that so many foolish and wicked words have proceeded out of thy mouth.



Ver. 10. [To glory in afflictions, and to render thanks for disappointments and persecutions, are undoubtedly beyond the power of 'flesh and blood,' but are the constant evidences and products of divine grace. See Ps. 42. 8; 77. 6; Ac. 5. 41; Ro. 5. 3; Ep. 5. 20. C.]

Ver. 16. ['The sense is, And now, because his (God's) wrath hath not visited (the wicked), but sometimes leaves them unpunished in this world, and because he (God) does not clearly take cognizance of guilt, . . . therefore Job will open his mouth in vanity, and will multiply words without knowledge' (Wordsworth). P.]

REFLECTIONS.—There is great need to be well rooted in the knowledge and faith of God's infinite greatness and goodness, in order to prevent many fatal mistakes in principle or practice. We can never make him our debtor. The best we do is unworthy of his notice; and the worst he dispenses to us is less than our iniquities deserve. Whatever trouble now attends his service, it will appear infinitely profitable at last. But many groan under their troubles who never show any humiliation for sin or desire after God. Yet irreligious poverty and suffering is, of all human miseries on earth, one of the most deplorable. It cannot be expected that such men's selfish prayers, without any regard to God or the good of their soul, should issue in help from him. While they are insensible of the most distinguishing mercies they enjoy, they cannot reasonably expect deliverance from the evils they feel, or the experience of those divine joys which overbalance every sorrow and pain. While our unhumbled hearts only murmur and groan under our troubles, it is a mercy to be denied the removal of them. But when God corrects his saints severely for their humiliation, Satan is ever ready to drive them to despair. The greatness of their sufferings makes them to overlook their unbelief, impatience, and rashness; by which means they lose the comforts and defer the removal of them. It is only strong faith in God that can guide us aright through temptations and trouble. Despair of relief is as high a reflection upon his power and grace as impatience is on his goodness and wisdom. And if our troubles are not removed but increased, it becomes us to look well if we have not provoked God by our insolent behaviour under th. m.

CHAPTER XXXVI. Ver. 2. Patiently permit me to inform thee a little further, for I have yet something more to speak on God's behalf. 3. While I treat of distant matters, and fetch my arguments from the inspiration of God's Spirit, or from his wonderful works, I will maintain the justice of God in all his proceedings, and give him the glory thereof. 4. And assure thyself I will not attempt to baffle thee with sophistical arguments; but as I have thoroughly studied the point, I will make use of no reasoning but what is sincere and solid. 5. Behold, such is the infinite the earth, and maketh us wiser than the fowls of heaven?

LIBRARY OF CÆSAR AUGUSTUS. [JOB XXXV : 16.]—"He multiplieth words without knowledge." The above picture is of a scene on the Palatine hill, known as the Library of Cæsar Augustus. Reference is made in this sixteenth verse of the thirty-fifth chapter of Job to multiplying words without knowledge. It would be very interesting to go back through the centuries and look at the volumes in the library of Cæsar Augustus. We would find, however, by comparing his library with one of the modern period, that the difference between ancient books and modern books consists in the fact that ancient books, especially outside of the range of history, were made up of words without knowledge, while it is characteristic of the books of modern times, that the words they contain must be based upon accurate knowledge of the facts which they describe.

12 There [n]they cry,[7] but none giveth answer, because of the pride of evil men.

13 Surely God will not hear [o]vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it.

14 Although thou sayest [p]thou shalt not see him, yet [q]judgment is before him; therefore trust thou in him.

15 But now, [r]because it is not so, he[8] hath visited in his anger; yet he[9] knoweth it not in great[s] extremity:[1]

16 Therefore doth Job [t]open his mouth in vain: he multiplieth words without knowledge.

ELIHU also proceeded, and said,

2 Suffer[a] me a little, and I will show thee that I have yet to speak on God's behalf.[1]

3 I will [b]fetch my knowledge from afar,[2] and will [c]ascribe righteousness to my Maker.

4 For [d]truly my words shall not be false: he that is [e]perfect in knowledge[3] is with thee.[4]

5 Behold, God is mighty, and [f]despiseth not[5] any: he is [g]mighty in strength and wisdom.[6]

6 He [h]preserveth not the life of the wicked; but [i]giveth right to the poor.[7]

7 He [k]withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous: but with kings are [l]they on the throne; yea, he doth establish them for ever, and they are exalted.

8 And if [m]they be bound in fetters, and be holden in cords of affliction, power and wisdom of God that he never despises any, however mean! 6. He will bestow no solid happiness upon wicked men, but will do justice to the humble, poor, and afflicted. 7. He never ceases his special care of the righteous; but sometimes advances them, however poor, to the highest stations; and continues, establishes, and exalts them therein. 8–10. Or if they be brought into and fixed in sore troubles, he by that means makes them to consider their ways, discern their sinfulness, and turn from it to himself. 11. If their afflictions effect their reformation to piety and virtue, great and manifold shall be the blessings and comforts bestowed upon them here and hereafter. 12. But if, notwithstanding their troubles, they continue obstinate in wickedness, they shall be cut off by some fearful calamity, and shall perish in their ignorance, folly, and sin. 13. 14. Thus hypocrites heap up treasures of wrath for themselves; they neglect to implore God's help and deliverance in their troubles; therefore their life is early cut off, in a fearful storm of his wrath, by some exemplary judgment in death; and through eternity he reckons them with, and punishes them as, the cursed and abominable. 15. But he delivers the poor and humble in their affliction, and teaches them to know and practise their duty under it. 16. And hadst thou behaved thyself aright under thy pressures, he would even now have delivered thee from thy pressing and tormenting troubles into a state of freedom and affluence, in which there should be nothing to straiten thee; and that which fell from heaven upon thy table should be full of fatness. 17. But thou hast earnestly pleaded the cause of the wicked, and justified their reproachful murmurings against the providence of God: therefore his just indignation has already seized thee, and holds thee fast in bonds of fearful affliction. 18, 19. Since he is manifesting his hot displeasure against thee, take heed lest he cut thee off without remedy; and then no ransom, however great, can redeem thy life again; nor will all the united power and virtue in the world be able to deliver thee, if God resolve to destroy thee. 20. Never wish for a period of awful judgments, in which multitudes of men are often destroyed amidst all their comforts and enjoyments. 21. Never give way to sinning, particularly to rash and intemperate speeches concerning God's providential procedure. Thus shalt thou be chosen in, and plucked out of the furnace of affliction. But, alas! hitherto thou hast preferred rash censuring of God's ways to a patient bearing of thy afflictions. 22. It is God alone who can effectually deliver and exalt men; and none can cast down, scourge, instruct, or govern like him. Pretend not therefore to direct him. 23. None hath directed him how to govern the world, or can call him to account for his management. None can charge him with anything unjust or imprudent. Never therefore rashly complain of him. 24. Instead of censuring, always admire and speak honourably of his works of creation and providence, which men cheerfully behold, and should cordially celebrate. 25. There are scarcely any so ignorant but they must observe these, and acknowledge his greatness and excellency in them. 26. Behold, such is the unbounded perfection of God, that we can never comprehend it; and such his eternal duration that we cannot search it out. How unfit are we then to judge of and censure his conduct? 27, 28. It is he who exhales from the sea, and forms the drops of rain which fall from the clouds. 29. How incomprehensible are his spreadings of the thick clouds all along the face of the heavens, and the crashing thunder of his cloudy residence! 30. How marvellously he extends the flashing lightning all over the sky, makes it penetrate to the bottom of, or vails it with the rainy waters exhaled from the sea! 31. By such rains, thunder, and lightning, he punishes wicked men for their sins; and by rendering the earth fruitful, makes liberal and magnificent provision for his creatures. 32. By his hollow clouds he conceals the thundering flash as well as the bright and scorching sun, and restrains it by their interposing influence. 33. Its crashing noise informs concerning it: as a red flaming treasure of wrath it hangs over the proud; or the noise of the clouds, as well as the motions of animals, portends the approach of the rain formed of vapours exhaled from the sea by the sun.

Ver. 7. [Good translates the first part thus:—'He withdraweth not his eyes from the judge, nor even from kings on the throne.' The authorized version, however, seems more consonant with Ps. 34. 15, and those promises of exaltation which are not given to kings, as such, but to the righteous of whatever rank, Ps. 89. 16; Ja. 1. 9; 1 Pe. 5. 6, and also perfectly accordant with fact, for even when the righteous are not on the throne in person, they are there by influence. See Mar. 6. 20. C.]

1 God is to be feared because of his great works. 15 His wisdom is unsearchable in them.

AT this also my heart [a]trembleth, and is moved out of his place.

2 Hear attentively[1] the [b]noise of his voice, and the sound that goeth out of his mouth.

3 He [c]directeth it under the whole heaven, and his lightning[2] unto the ends of the earth.[3]

4 After it a [d]voice roareth: he thundereth with the voice of his excellency; and he will not stay [e]them when his voice is heard.[4]

5 God [f]thundereth marvellously with his voice; [g]great things doeth he, which we cannot comprehend.

6 For [h]he saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth;[5] likewise to the small rain, and to the great rain of his strength.[6]

---

Ver. 18. ['Because of anger rebel not against his stroke; let not the greatness of the ransom (which you may be able to offer) tempt thee to sin.' P.]

Ver. 27. [Because rain is so common, men seldom calculate the power exhibited in its production and distribution. Yet, lo! without hand, it waters and fructifies the whole earth, while all the men of the world could not so irrigate a single kingdom. C.]

Ver. 31. [Judgeth he the people. The old world with the deluge; Sodom and Gomorrah with lightning, thunder, &c. Yet by them he also fructifies the earth and provides food for every living thing. So various are the purposes for which his wisdom employs the same natural agency. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Plain and important speeches for God deserve the most fixed attention. Faithful souls are always zealous to vindicate God's dispensations from men's foolish and sinful aspersions; and truth and simplicity of speech always become such as profess themselves teachers of God's good ways. It is proper that we should always retain exalted thoughts of God: that he thinks none below his notice, however mean; countenances none of the wicked, however great; is always ready to redress the injured; takes a peculiar pleasure to protect those that are good; and brings special ruin on hypocrites, as the treacherous enemies of his government. If God exalt me to honour, let me exert myself for the welfare of mankind, and prepare for giving my account to him. If he afflict me, let me thankfully believe it done to discover my past sins, and to dispose me to receive his sanctifying instructions; fully persuaded that deliverance and comfort shall appear whenever his merciful end is gained. If my deliverance be delayed, my continued sin is the cause. But if I am not bettered by his rod, let me fear, lest my stupidity and dissimulation should issue in the suffering of his everlasting judgment. In affliction let me never be secure or make light of his stroke. Let me never hope to find out ways of my own to withstand or avoid it. Let me never dare to persevere in self-vindication or quarrelling with God;—never dare to prescribe to him who is an absolute ruler, an incomparable teacher, and unexceptionably just in all his procedure; and with whom neither riches can bribe nor darkness conceal. In the glory of his works let me discern the perfections of his nature. If he makes the clouds fountains to the lower world and vails to the upper, let me view everything formed in them—rain, hail, snow, or thunder—as his workmanship. And while I am here, let me live by faith, not by sight. Whom, having not seen, let me love; and in whom, though now I see him not, let me rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

CHAPTER XXXVII. Just now my heart trembles, and is like to start out of its place, at the thought or hearing of the terrible thunder. 2. Hear attentively the roaring noise of JEHOVAH'S voice, and the breathing murmur that proceeds from his lips. 3. By his providence he guides the forcible and straight darting of the thunderbolts along the whole extent of the sky, and makes the blaze of lightning to fly over the confines of the earth. 4. After the blazing flash of lightning the noise roars. He thunders with the voice of his majesty: nor will he restrain the storm and rain when the roaring of his thunder is heard. 5. By thundering the mighty God produces many marvellous effects: he does many things in nature which we cannot comprehend. 6. At his command the snow falls, as also the gentle showers and the deluging rains, the impetuous showers and tempestuous storms. By the winter storm he restrains men from labour, and keeps them within doors, that they may have opportunity to consider his works. 8. The very wild beasts are obliged to shut up themselves in their thickets and dens. 9. The whirlwind is generated in the moist clouds of the south as in a chamber; and cold proceeds from the scattering north wind. 10. By God's will and appointment the frost is produced, and the rivers are congealed that they cannot flow. 11. As by pouring down continual showers he wearieth the thick cloud, so his clear brightness dispels it; and by his light he disperses the transparent duskiness of the sky. 12. While the clouds are carried hither and thither at his pleasure, he himself, on every side, holds the reins of their motions, that he may accomplish his own purposes by them all over the world; 13. Whether it be for punishing the guilty by pestilential vapours and storms, or for rendering the earth fruitful, or for graciously rewarding his people with remarkable plenty. 14. Stop therefore thy censures of, and murmurings at, the dispensations of God's providence; seriously consider his wondrous works; and think how little thou understandest of the most obvious of them. 15. Knowest thou how God lays his orders or impresses his powerful influence upon them? or how he makes the rainbow-light of the transparent cloud to shine? 16. Canst thou tell how, in his marvellous wisdom, he hangs the clouds in the air, as if balanced by one another? 17. Dost thou know how thy garments wax warm when the earth is calmed by the southern sun and the pleasant gale? 18. Hast thou assisted him in clearing the sky after rain; and in making it to stand fast by its own strength, as a mirror, in which we may behold his admirable wisdom, power, goodness, and glory? 19. Teach us, if thou canst, how to speak to or of God: for by reason of his incomprehensible excellencies, and our great ignorance, we cannot speak of him to any purpose. 20. Nothing which I have said is worthy of his notice or answerable to the subject. If any attempt to describe his excellencies he will be quite confounded by their dazzling glory. 21. And just now men cannot look upon the bright shining of the sun in the sky when the wind has dispelled every cloud. 22. The godlike glancing sun shines clearly by the purifying north winds: and upon God is a robe of terrible majesty. 23. We cannot comprehend his essence, perfections, purposes, or works. His power indeed is infinite: but he will not afflict his people in strict judgment or severity of justice. 24. Men should therefore stand in awe of him and beware of quarrelling with his conduct; for he regards none who are wise in their own conceit, or who dare to contend with their Maker, or presume to censure his proceedings.

Ver. 2. [Man may speak by the mouth, by the trumpet, or other such instrument, and, in either case, the utterance is called his voice, because his will is the moving cause, and the sound is the interpreter of his spirit. So whatever organ the will of God may select is called his voice and mouth, because it speaks to the ear of reason, and interprets the secrets of his Spirit. C.]

Ver. 6. [Great rain. The rains of the tropical and bordering climates, such as that of Edom, are often such torrents, that they are justly characterized as the 'great rain of his strength.' C.]

Ver. 7. [The meaning of this verse is:—He sendeth cold so intense that man cannot perform his ordinary work in the field; and this he does that all men may be taught to see and acknowledge him and his work in everything. P.]

Ver. 9. [Out of the inmost recesses of the south—out of the depths of the great Arabian desert, come the burning sirocco, and the sweeping and destructive whirlwind which often prove fatal to travellers. P.]

Ver. 11. ['Also by watering he wearieth the thick cloud'—or, 'He loadeth the dense clouds with water,' maketh them carry it through the air, and scatter it wherever he willeth. P.]

Ver. 15. [It is to the clouds, or vapours, more or less densely commingling with the atmosphere, and not to direct light itself, that we are indebted for the chief beauties of the earth and sky. See Somerville's Physical Sciences, Herschel's Astron., Tomlinson's Nat. Phil. C.]

Ver. 16. [Balancings. So that they ascend and descend in the exact proportion required. C.]

Ver. 17. [Delitzsch translates:—'Those whose garments become hot when the land is sultry from the south (that is, by the influence of the south wind); dost thou with him spread out the sky?' P.]

Ver. 21. [Even now we cannot look at the light when it is resplendent in the heavens, and a wind from the north hath swept along and cleared them. M. Good.]

Ver. 23. ['The Almighty—we cannot discover him; the excellent in power, judgment, and justice, he perverteth not.' This is one of the most sublime passages in the Bible. With equal clearness and beauty the speaker sets forth the majesty, the power, and the perfection of God in government. P.]

Ver. 24. ['In this last speech Elihu's chief aim is to defend God against Job's charge of injustice. He shows how omnipotence, love, and justice are all found in God. When judging of God's omnipotence, we are to beware of censuring him who is absolutely exalted above us and our comprehension; when judging of God's love, we are to beware of interpreting his afflictive dispensations, which are designed for our well-being, as the persecution of an enemy; when judging of his justice, we are to beware of maintaining our own righteousness at the cost of the divine, and of thus avoiding the penitent humbling of one's self under his well-meant chastisement' (Delitzsch). P.]

REFLECTIONS.—O how much of God is to be seen in the works of nature, in the forms of clouds, and in the changes and forms of weather! If all creatures thus fulfil his pleasure, why should men be rebels and refuse his direction and government! Why do we not improve his corrections and mercies! It is absurd for 7 He [s]sealeth up the hand[7] of every man; that all men may [t]know his work.

8 Then the beasts [u]go into dens, and remain in their places.[8]

9 Out of the south[9] cometh the [v]whirlwind, and cold out of the [w]north.

10 By [x]the breath[1] of God frost is given; and the breadth of the waters is straitened.

11 Also by [y]watering he wearieth the thick cloud: he [z]scattereth his bright[2] cloud:[3]

12 And it is [a]turned round about by his counsels;[4] that they may do [b]whatsoever he commandeth them upon the face of the world in the earth.

13 He [c]causeth it to come, whether for correction,[5] or for his land, [d]or for mercy.[6]

14 Hearken unto this, O Job; [e]stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God.

15 Dost[f] thou know when God disposed them, and caused the light of his cloud to shine?

16 Dost thou know the [g]balancings of the clouds, the wondrous works of him which is perfect[a] in knowledge?

17 How [h]thy garments are warm, when he quieteth the earth by the south wind?

18 Hast thou with him [i]spread out the sky, which is strong, and as a molten looking-glass?

19 Teach[a] us what we shall say unto him; for we[b] cannot order our speech by reason of darkness.

20 Shall it be told him that I speak? If a man speak, surely [k]he shall be swallowed up.[7]

21 And now men [l]see not the bright light which is in the clouds: but the wind passeth, and cleanseth them.

22 Fair[8] weather cometh [m]out of the north: with God [n]is terrible majesty.[9]

23 Touching the Almighty, [o]we cannot find him out: he is [p]excellent in power, and in [q]judgment, and in [r]plenty of justice: he [s]will not afflict.[1]

24 Men do [t]therefore fear him:[2] he [u]respecteth not any that are wise of heart.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

1 God out of the whirlwind challengeth Job to answer. 4 God, by his mighty works, convinceth Job of ignorance, 31 and of weakness.

THEN the LORD answered Job out of the whirlwind,[a] and said,

2 Who[b] is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?

3 Gird[c] up now thy loins like a man; for I [d]will demand of thee, and answer thou me.[1]

4 Where[e] wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare, if thou hast understanding.[2]

5 Who [f]hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it?

6 Whereupon [g]are the foundations[3] thereof fastened?[4] or who laid the corner-stone thereof;

7 When [h]the morning stars sang together, and all the [i]sons of God shouted for joy?

8 Or [k]who shut up the sea with doors, when it brake forth, as if it had issued out of the womb?

9 When [l]I made the cloud the garment thereof, and thick darkness a swaddling-band for it,

10 And [m]brake up for it my decreed place, and set [n]bars and doors,

11 And said, [o]Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further: and here shall thy proud waves[5] be stayed?

12 Hast [p]thou commanded the morning since thy days; and caused the day-spring to know his place, 13 That it might take hold of the [q]ends of the earth, that the wicked [r]might be shaken out of it?

14 It[s] is turned as clay to the seal; and they stand as a garment.[6]

15 And [t]from the wicked their light[7] is withholden, and the [u]high arm shall be broken.

16 Hast[x] thou entered into the springs of the sea? or hast thou walked in the search of the depth?

17 Have the [y]gates of death been opened unto thee? or hast thou seen the doors of the shadow of death?

18 Hast [z]thou perceived the breadth of the earth? declare if thou knowest it all.[8]

19 Where [a]is the way where light dwelleth? and as for darkness, where is the place [b]thereof, 20 That thou shouldest take it to[1] the bound thereof, and that thou shouldest know [c]the paths to the house thereof?

as to quarrel with him when we understand so little of his nature, or even of his most obvious works. And it is highly necessary to maintain the most awful, kind, and honourable thoughts of him, and the most cordial submission to everything which he does. But by what terrible harbingers doth he sometimes introduce himself to his people? If clouds thicken, if thunders roar, if lightnings flash, if rains descend, and winds blow, let me hope that my God is near, my God that saveth me.

CHAPTER XXXVIII. Ushered in by a terrible whirlwind, to make Job more humble and attentive, God himself next addressed him, saying, 2. Who art thou that hast sought to eclipse, misrepresent, and censure the wisdom and justice of my providence, by discourses proceeding from ignorance, mistake, inconsiderateness, and passion? 3. Now, according to thy proud challenges, prepare thyself to debate the cause with me; nay, to answer me a few plain questions; that convinced by these of the weakness of thy understanding, thou mayest perceive how incapable thou art of judging as to my secret counsels or mysterious providences. 4–7. If thou art so skilful as thou pretendest, tell me how I laid the foundations of the earth: how I planned and adjusted the whole form and boundaries of it: how, without any foundation to stand on, I settled it upon its own centre, and firmly connected all the parts of it, while angels, whom I had previously created to be my honorary guard, celebrated the wisdom, goodness, and power which I therein manifested! 8–11. Tell me how with banks, or even sand, I set bounds to the newly formed ocean, which often rages as if it would cover the earth, from which its waters were separated; how I covered it with thick mists and fogs, restraining its fury; how I made hollow places in the earth for it; and notwithstanding its furious raging, confined it in them! 12. Hast thou, before or since thy birth, governed the morning light, making it to observe its punctual time, and orderly to appear in its ever-varying place; 13. That it might suddenly spread itself over the whole hemisphere, that wicked men who rage in the night, being detected, might by condign punishment be restrained or cut off; 14. That the earth, as the wax beneath the seal, may put on a new form, and the things on it appear as its adorning garment; 15. And that by this light the wicked may be deprived of that success and comfort which they promised themselves in their crimes, and their tyrannical power may be repressed? 16. KNOWEST thou the time when the [a]wild goats[1] of the rock bring forth? or canst thou mark when the [b]hinds do calve?

CHAP. XXXIX.

1 The wild goat (yaal), is a beautiful creature, commonly called the ibex, dwelling among the lofty rocks of Arabia and other eastern countries. bottom of the ocean, or walked, as in state, through the inmost corners of the deep, to know and direct everything there? 17. Art thou fully acquainted with all the dark caverns and inmost parts of the earth; or with the whole nature and circumstances of death and the grave, and of the eternal state? 18. Are the dimensions of the earth, with its whole substance and product, perfectly known to thee? 19 21. Dost thou, by thy great experience and long observation, fully understand the orderly returns of light and darkness, day and night? or canst thou direct their motions in a proper manner? 22, 23. Art thou fully acquainted with the collections of snow and hail in the clouds? and canst thou, like me, regularly bring them forth in the winter season or in the seasons of wrathful calamities? 24. How is the light of the sun, moon, or stars so equally and so widely diffused? How is the way prepared for the overflowing rains, or for the lightning and thunder? and how are their motions so regularly directed? 26, 27. Is it by thy direction that the rain waters those places of the earth where no one lives to do it, or which, without seasonable rains, could produce nothing? 28–30. Canst thou form drops of rain or dew; or produce ice or hoar-frost; or tell how they are formed; and how the surface of the waters is congealed into a kind of stone? 31. Canst thou alter the seasons of the year by restraining the influences of the heat and summer-boding stars? or free the earth from the tempestuous influence of the winter and sloth-boding stars? 32. Canst thou make to appear, and lead round, the luminaries of the middle region of heaven in their season? Canst thou direct the round whirling pole-stars and their attendants? 33. Knowest thou all the order and laws of the heavenly bodies? Couldest thou settle the whole government of them, and their influence upon the earth? 34, 35. Canst thou, just now, by a call bring down an abundant rain on the place where thou art, or make the thunder to dart forth its flames over thine head; or do whatever thou pleasest? 36. Canst thou direct the random darting of thunder and lightning to strike as regularly as if it had solid wisdom and distinct perception? or didst thou give thyself rational understanding? Canst thou tell how a single thought is formed? 37, 38. Canst thou number and govern all the clouds of heaven; or restrain the rain when the earth is sufficiently watered? 39–41. Canst thou provide food even for the most ravenous creatures, particularly for the lioness and her whelps, or for old lions incapable of leaving their dens; or for the young ravens when by their dams they are expelled from the nest?

Ver. 1. [No notice is taken of the transition from Elihu, God visible in human form, to JEHOVAH invisible in the whirlwind or stormy cloud. To those who feel any difficulty in identifying Elihu (God himself, see Mat. 1. 23) with JEHOVAH, it may be useful to examine the appearance of JEHOVAH to Abraham, and his familiar converse with him, Ge. 18. 13–33; and afterwards his appearance to Moses, Ex. 3. 2; 19. 9, 16, 18, 21; 20. 18, 22; and recollect that in each case this was the same JEHOVAH variously manifested; and when these facts are compared, the various appearances in Job will be more easily understood as alike manifesting 'the Word that was with God, and was God.' C.]

Ver. 2. [This ought rather to be rendered—'Who then darkeneth counsel,' &c. The words are addressed not to Elihu, who had just concluded speaking, but to Job, who said (ch. 31. 35), 'O that the Almighty would answer me!' And Job applies them to himself in ch. 42. 3. P.]

Ver. 7. [This is a suggestive as well as a beautiful passage. In the lofty imagery peculiar to the East there is embodied the truth that 'the sons of God,' or angelic hosts, existed before the formation of the world in its present state, and rejoiced at the construction of the splendid home of the future human family. It farther seems to indicate that the stars had been created previous to the preparation of this earth for man. P.]

Ver. 10. [Bars and doors. How wonderful that the iron-bound rock and the loose disconnected sand should alike barrier out the encroachments of the ocean! The chief bars and doors, however, are the balancing of the relative attractions of the sun and moon, on the one hand, and of the earth on the other. Were the attractions of the sun and moon greater, and of the earth less, the earth would be swept over by a continuous ocean tide. C.]

Ver. 13. [The figure is taken from the shaking of a great floor-cloth or carpet. The morning light taking hold, as it were, of the whole covering of the earth's surface, shakes off from it all evil doers. They flee from the light lest their deeds should be seen. P.]

Ver. 14. [The meaning seems to be, that it (the earth) when turned round to the full light of the sun, is like the clay on which the debmte impress of the signet-ring is stamped. When all was dark the lineaments upon its surface were invisible, but the light revealed them, and made them stand out in bold relief. P.]

Ver. 15. [Darkness is the light of the wicked. They love it, and work in it. The morning sun dispels the darkness, and the power ('the high arm') of the wicked is then broken. P.]

Ver. 24. [East wind. The east wind of Scripture geography is uniformly that of destruction. See Ge. 41. 6; Job 27. 21; Ps. 48. 7; Je. 18. 17; Eze. 17. 10; 18. 12; Jn. 4. 8. C.]

Ver. 25. [The water-course refers not to river-beds, but to the aerial channel by which the rain descends, when produced by the lightning in the sky; as by passing the electric spark through oxygen and hydrogen gases water is formed. C.]

Ver. 31. [Orion. Kesil in Arabic signifies cold, inactivity, torpor, and seems justly applied by Aben Ezra to the star Antares in the heart of the constellation Scorpio; and it is opposed to Pleiades by nearly half the heavens, and would consequently denote the benumbing influences of winter. C.]

Ver. 32. [Mazzaroth. The twelve monthly signs of the zodiac.—Arcturus. Most probably the Great Bear, the apparent nightly changes of which always render it a most remarkable object to observers. C.]

Ver. 36. [The Hebrew word here rendered 'heart' has been variously interpreted. It is derived from a root which signifies to 'look at' or 'contemplate;' and hence it is natural to understand it as meaning the intellect. This is the meaning given to it by the best Jewish authorities. In the Vulgate version it is translated cock, as the bird which announces the coming of the morning. P.]

See Campbell's Travels in S. Africa vol. ii. p. 294. Robinson (see Biblical Researches, vol. iii. p. 906) thinks it is the buffalo, but this animal does not seem to correspond with the powerful creature described in the text. difficult is it to converse with God than is generally thought by those who appeal to him! Infinite is his wisdom who knows all things! and great his power who can do, and has made, and manages all things. All things around us are full of God: all monitors to teach us concerning him, and to stir us up to worship and glorify him! But the boasted knowledge of mankind is vain and scanty, which can everywhere be nonplussed in the most common things of nature. Let me then never contend with God;—never pretend to be a judge of his nature, purposes, or works:—but be always content with things as they are; and to be led by him, as one blind, in the ways which I know not. If he has made all things in nature so well, my new-covenant portion and lot is certainly exactly wise and kind. And if he take such care of the works of his hands, the most ravenous not excepted, it is impossible that he should forget, forsake, starve, or mismanage any of those who believe.

CHAPTER XXXIX. Ver. 1–4. Is it by thy wisdom, power, care, and providence, that the wild goats and hinds are assisted in their painful births, or their young ones so well nourished? 5–8. Or that while the tame ass is so dull and stupid, the wild ass is so nimble, untractable, regardless of mankind, and lodged and maintained in the desert mountains? 9–12. Art thou capable, by all thy power and skill, to tame a wild bull, and train him to the labours of the field performed by the ox? 13–18. Dost thou adorn with wings and feathers the ostrich, that is so careless of her eggs and young, that the sun must hatch the former, and Providence alone takes care of the latter, and so fleet in running with extended wings? 19–25. Hast thou given strength and bravery to the horse? Dost thou produce the triumphant shaking of his mane, or the neighing and snorting of his throat, when he is bent upon the battle? Canst thou make him to bounce like a grasshopper? The disdainful and courageous snortings of his nostrils are terrible. When armies meet for battle he paweth in the valley, fiercely priding himself in his strength: he springs forth to meet the armour of war, rushing into the battle without any fear of danger. Quite unaffrighted he laughs at the terror of the battle: he turns not back from the sword. Over him regardless rattle and hiss the arrows of the quiver, the flaming spear, and ruinous lance. With fierceness and rage he gallops over and tears up the ground. For joy he reckons the sound of the trumpet but an encouraging blast: and at the full blowing of the trumpet he dances and sports for joy. He smells the battle afar off, the thunder-like roaring of the princes, and the alarm of war. 26. Is it by thy direction that hawks fly away so strongly, steadily, swiftly, unweariedly, and cunningly, to catch their prey; and that they bask in the sun, or remove to warmer climates in the winter? 27–30. Is it by thy direction that eagles fly directly upward, or choose their rocky residence, or spy out and rush upon their prey?

Ver. 9. [The term 'unicorn,' or 'one-horned,' is a misnomer. The Hebrew word is reem, and it is evident from De. 33. 17, where 'the horns of an unicorn' are mentioned, that the animal referred to had two horns. P.]

Ver. 13. [Rather—'The wings of the ostrich vibrate, but are they as the pinions of the stork and the falcon?' The wings of the ostrich never lift her from the earth, yet God compensates this defect by swiftness, so that she is as safe as the soaring falcon. God has deprived her of parental instincts, yet her young are protected by Providence as well as the young of the stork, the example and the emblem of maternal tenderness. C. ——This is a very obscure passage. The true meaning of the verse seems to be, 'The wing of the ostrich (renanim, 'the female ostrich;' so called on account of her peculiar cry) vibrates joyously; but is wing and feather affectionate?' i.e. as explained in the context, does she exhibit ordinary parental instinct or affection, when abandoning her eggs in the desert? P.]

Ver. 17. [It is a singular fact that among the Bedawin 'more foolish than an ostrich' is a common proverb; and it is evidently as old as the time of Job. 'Fleeter than an ostrich' is another proverb almost as common as the former. P.]

Ver. 24. [Rather—'And he standeth not still when the trumpet soundeth;' i.e. so soon as his ear catches the sound of the war-trumpet he will scarcely bear restraint, he rushes to the battle. A remark of Layard, the truth of which I can myself verify, beautifully illustrates this passage:—'Although docile as a lamb, and requiring no other guide than the halter, when the Arab mare hears the war-cry of the tribe, and sees the quivering spear of her rider, her eyes glitter with fire, her blood-red nostrils open wide, her neck is nobly arched, and her tail and mane are raised and spread out to the wind.' P.]

Ver. 29. [Her eyes behold afar off. The extraordinary far-sightedness of the eagle is well known. It can descry its prey on the ground when, to the human eye, it is perfectly invisible in the clouds; those species that live upon the dead fully realize our Lord's description, Mat. 24. 28, and an animal is scarcely fallen until they appear on the verge of the horizon hastening to its destruction. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—Behold how all things mark the excellencies of their Maker and depend on God! The eyes of all wait on him; and he giveth them their meat in due season. And surely it is absurd for men to boast of beauty, strength, swiftness, or other bodily endowments, when one or more of the brute animals excel them in all these. But, alas! how often are we like them in their worst qualities, like hinds in sinful cowardice; like wild asses in our unsettled temper; like unicorns or wild bulls in untamableness and rage in the net of affliction; like ostriches in stupidity and unconcern about the real welfare of children; like horses in pride and fury; like hawks and eagles in ambition, greediness, and cruelty! But if God feed these, he will never let the redeemed sheep of his pasture want. Lo, in what lofty manner he speaks of these animals! But how much sweeter to my soul are his descriptions of Jesus and his love, Jesus and his work, Jesus and his fulness!—All for men! all for me!

CHAPTER XL. Ver. 2. Has there not been enough said to chastise and convince thee of thy mistakes in contending with and censuring the providence of God? 3. Job replied to the Lord, 4. Behold, with grief and shame, I acknowledge my own meanness, folly, and filthiness. I have nothing to say against thee or for myself. 5. I have too often desired a dispute with thee; but I dare not defend my conduct. I dare not proceed further in such bold and presumptuous expressions and accusations of thy providence. 6. Job's acknowledgment of his sin and profession of

SOURCE OF THE JORDAN. [Job, xl:23.]—"Behold, he drinketh up a river, and hasteneth not: he trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth." Perhaps the two leading sources of the river are found in the Hasbany arm and the Banias tributary. The view we give above was taken at Banias or ancient Cæsarea Philippi. Nothing can be imagined more beautiful than the very vigorous way the Jordan breaks from under the Hermon range of mountains, creating in ancient Cæsarea Philippi a tropical vegetation. This is a very beautiful historic spot. Here is the temple with its Greek inscriptions dedicating the place to Pan and the nymphs of the fountain. Then here is abundance of game. Wild boars, foxes, jackals, gazelles, deer, hare, wolves, hyenas, bears and panthers are said to infest this region.

29 From thence she seeketh the prey, and her eyes behold afar off.

30 Her young ones also suck up blood: and where[o] the slain are, there is she.

CHAPTER XL.

1 God challengeth an answer. 3 Job humbleth himself. 6 God calleth upon Job to shew by instances of power that he is able to save himself. 15 God's great power is seen in the behemoth.

MOREOVER the LORD answered Job, and said,

2 Shall he that [a]contendeth[1] with the Almighty instruct him? he that [b]reproveth God, let him answer it.

3 ¶ Then Job answered the LORD, and said,

4 Behold, [c]I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will [d]lay mine hand upon my mouth.

5 Once have I spoken, but I will not answer; yea, twice, but I will [e]proceed no further.[2]

6 ¶ Then answered the LORD unto Job [f]out of the whirlwind, and said,

7 Gird[g] up thy loins now like a man: I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

8 Wilt[h] thou also disannul my judgment? wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayest be righteous?

9 Hast thou [i]an arm like God? or canst thou thunder with a voice like him?

10 Deck[j] thyself now with majesty and excellency, and array thyself with glory and beauty.

11 Cast abroad [k]the rage of thy wrath: and behold[l] every one that is proud, and abase him.

12 Look on [m]every one that is proud, and bring him low; and tread down the wicked in their place.

13 Hide[n] them in the dust together, and bind[o] their faces in secret.

14 Then will I also confess unto thee that thine own right hand can save thee.

15 ¶ Behold now [3]behemoth,[4] which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox.

The more ancient commentators supposed leviathan to be the whale; Schultens concluded it was an enormous serpent; and several have received it to be directly descriptive of Satan. Since the days of Bochart it has generally been supposed the crocodile. See Michael. and Harris' Natural History of the Bible.—C.]

18 His bones are as strong pieces of brass; his bones are like bars of iron.

19 He is the chief of the [p]ways of God: he that made him can make his sword to [9]approach unto him.

20 Surely the mountains [q]bring him forth food, where all the beasts of the field play.

21 He lieth under the shady trees, in the covert of the reed, and fens.

CHAPTER XLI.

God's great power seen in the leviathan.

CANST thou draw out [a]leviathan with an hook? or his tongue with a cord which thou lettest down?[1]

2 Canst thou put an [b]hook into his nose? or bore his jaw through with a thorn?

3 Will he make many supplications unto thee? will he speak soft words unto thee?

4 Will he make a covenant with thee? wilt thou take him for a servant for ever?

5 Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?

6 Shall thy companions make a banquet of him? shall they part him among the merchants?

7 Canst thou [c]fill his skin with barbed irons? or his head with fish-spears?

8 Lay[d] thine hand upon him, remember the battle, do no more.[2]

his repentance not being sufficiently full, God further required him to pluck up his spirits if he could, and answer some further interrogations. 8. Wilt thou, in the manner of wicked men, arraign and attempt to overturn my sentence against thee, and my government of human affairs? Wilt thou censure me as unjust in afflicting thee that thou mayest appear innocent? 9, 10. Art thou God's equal in infinite power, majesty, or glory? 11–14. Canst thou, as God, scatter abroad the tokens of thine anger; or exhibit thy frowns for the debasement and destruction of thy most powerful and insolent enemies? If so, I will acknowledge thou canst uphold thyself, and hast some pretence to contend with me; but if not, it becomes thee humbly to submit to my most afflictive providences. 15–24. But that thou mayest be further convinced of thy inability to contend with me, behold how incapable thou art of contending with the elephant or river-horse, which I formed along with thee as thy fellow-creature, and not far from thy residence? He quietly feeds upon the herbs produced by the earth. Behold what strength is in his loins; what mighty force is in the warped sinews of his belly! His tail is large, stiff, and strong as a cedar; and with it, or his trunk, he could rend cedars. The sinews of his thighs are interwoven and wrapped together; his smaller bones are as pipes of brass, and the larger ones as bars of iron for strength. He is a principal creature on earth. The mighty God, who made him and gives him his power, can easily subdue and destroy him. The mountains afford him pasture, while the other wild beasts securely sport themselves around him. His ordinary residence is under the shadow of trees or reeds, growing in fens or on the banks of rivers. No outrageous overflowing of waters affrights him, or makes him to run off in haste. And while he dives into a river, or drinks excessively, no terror can make him leave off till his thirst be altogether quenched.

Ver. 11. [First try thy power against man, and if thou fail in humbling or conquering him, thy fellow, how wilt thou contend with God thy maker and judge? C.]

Ver. 19. [Chief of the ways of God. The greatest size of the hippopotamus is 17 feet in length and 7 in height—a description that in point of animal size and power, the only points in question, could never entitle it to the character in the text. C.]

REFLECTIONS.—To what arrogant quarrelling with God afflicted saints sometimes proceed! but it always issues in great shame and grief at last. Communion with God himself effectually convinces and humbles a saint, and makes him glad to part with his most beloved sins. But there is need of thorough convictions and humiliation to prepare us for remarkable deliverance. And it is unsafe to heal wounded consciences slightly, or to catch at comforts to be rid of convictions. Men may be humbled and yet not duly humbled. God takes pleasure in debasing the proud who attempt to rival his honours. And woe to him that contends with his Maker! But easily can that God who made, manages, feeds, lodges, and works these monstrous animals, provide for and manage me and all my concerns!

CHAPTER XLI. Ver. 1, 2. And to give thee another evidence of thy weakness even to contend with one of my creatures, canst thou, by a hook fastened in his tongue, nose, or jaw, draw the crocodile or the toothed whale out of the water! 3–5. Canst thou force him to supplicate thy favour to let him go, or make him enter into an agreement to serve thee? or canst thou make him a mean of diverting thyself and children? 6. Wilt thou and thy partners in catching him make a feast upon his flesh, or part your shares of him among the merchants? 7. Where is the dart with which thou canst penetrate his skin, or the fish-spear that can wound his head? 8. Touch him if thou darest; immediate destruction will prevent thy remembrance of the conflict or repeating thy blow. 9. The hope of taking him is quite vain. The very sight of him is enough to terrify and dispirit one. 10. No, not the fiercest dare awake him when sleeping or stir him up when resting himself. Who then is able to contend with me, who am infinitely more strong and terrible? 11. And since everything in the world is my sole property, who hath prevented me with favours that I should repay them? or who, by first attacking me, hath forced me to submit to his terms of peace? 12. But 9 Behold, the hope of him is in vain:[3] shall not one be cast down even at the sight of him?

10 None is so fierce that dare stir him up: who[e] then is able to stand before me?

11 Who [f]hath prevented me, that I should repay[4] him? [g]whatsoever is under the whole heaven is mine.

12 I will not conceal his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion.[5]

13 Who can discover the face of his garment? or who can come to him with[6] his double bridle?

14 Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about.

15 His [h]scales are his pride, shut up together as with a close seal.

16 One is so near to another, that no air can come between them.

17 They are joined one to another, they stick together, that they cannot be sundered.

18 By his neesings a light doth shine, and his eyes are like the eyelids of the morning.

19 Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out.

20 Out of his nostrils goeth smoke, as out of a seething pot or caldron.[7]

21 His breath kindleth coals, and a flame goeth out of his mouth.[8]

22 In his neck remaineth strength, and sorrow is turned[9] into joy before him.[1]

23 The flakes[2] of his flesh are joined together: they are firm in themselves; they cannot be moved.

24 His heart is as firm as a stone; yea, as hard as a piece of the nether millstone.

25 When he raiseth up himself, the mighty are afraid: by reason of breakings they purify themselves.[3]

26 The sword of him that layeth at him cannot hold;[4] the spear, the dart,[5] nor the [6]habergeon.[7]

27 He esteemeth iron as straw, and brass as rotten wood.

28 The arrow cannot make him flee: slingstones are turned with him into stubble.

[8] It must be readily admitted, that if behemoth and leviathan be the river-horse and the crocodile, then no one would dream of interpreting these words literally; but if, on the other hand, behemoth, as stands here in this same book, be a generic and not a specific name; and if leviathan be, for strength, courage, and natural defence, 'chief of the ways of God,' and, by consequence, one of those extinct animals described by Cuvier and others, then might it be question able were the description pronounced merely figurative. To the observers of nature, who have examined the wonderful night lamps afforded by various creatures both by land and sea, to those who have further examined the terrible electrical powers possessed by others the existence of an animal whose breath became luminous, and possessed of the electric power of literally sending 'sparks of fire out of his mouth, will appear neither extravagant in supposition nor impossible in fact. Indeed some ancient traveller spoken of a fish that 'wielded the lightning, and smote to death the invader of its waters,' this some years ago, would have been pronounced absolutely false, or, at best, figurative; but the student of natural history would now instantly recognize it as a literal description of the gymnotus.—C.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 Job submitteth himself unto God. 7 God, preferring Job's cause, maketh his three friends submit themselves to him. 9 He accepteth and blesseth Job. 16 His age and death.

THEN Job answered the LORD, and said,

2 I know that [a]thou canst do every thing, and that [b]no thought can be withholden[1] from thee.

3 Who[c] is he that hideth counsel without knowledge?[2] therefore have I uttered that I understood not; things [d]too wonderful for me, which I knew not.

4 Hear, [e]I beseech thee, and I will speak: I will demand[3] of thee, and declare thou unto me.

5 I have [f]heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now [g]mine eye seeth thee:[4]

6 Wherefore[h] I abhor myself, and repent in [i]dust and ashes.

7 ¶ And it was so, that, after the LORD had spoken these words unto Job, the LORD said to [j]Eliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends: for ye have not [k]spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath.[5]

8 Therefore take unto you now [l]seven bullocks and seven rams, and [m]go to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering; and my servant Job shall [n]pray for you: for [o]him will I accept: lest I deal with you [p]after your folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job.

9 ¶ So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite [q]went, to take a particular view of the strength and well-proportioned parts of the monster which I have mentioned; 13. Who dare strip him of his scaly skin, or put a bridle in his mouth? 14. Who dare open his jaws? The surrounding rows of his teeth are terror itself. 15–17. They, as well as his scales, are closely and inseparably connected. 18. His neesings, while he lies gaping in the sun, make a light to shine, and the water which he spouts up into the air reflects the sunbeams. His sparkling eyes emit a reddish and bright shining light. 19–21. How terribly hot is the stream of breath which proceeds from his mouth or nostrils? 22. In his neck strength lodges to an amazing degree. Before his face sorrow and desolation triumphantly leap, as, without fear or pity, he destroys every animal he meets with. 23. The flakes of his flesh are, as it were, soldered into a lump of metal, which cannot be moved or easily cut asunder. 24. His heart consists of the most solid flesh; and is quite destitute of every form of compassion. 25. When he appears above water the courageous mariners are rendered almost distracted with terror, and forced to their confessions and prayers, expecting nothing but present death. 26–29. No sword, spear, dart, javelin, arrows, or slinged stones can be made to penetrate his body. 30. Without hurt or pain he makes his bed on sharp-pointed rocks, stones, or pieces of ice. 31. When he breathes and tumbles about in the water, he makes it to foam and rage as if it were a boiling pot full of ointment. 32. When he swims along, he leaves the furrows behind him all marked with froth and foam, on the surface of the sea. 33. No animal on earth is equally fearless and terrible. 34. With contempt he beholds the highest animals or loftiest ships, and brings them down with a sweep of his tail, tearing and rending them at his pleasure. He is king of all the huge and fierce-looking monsters.

Ver. 1. [Leviathan. From the description of ver. 33, we believe leviathan to be some of those extinct species of animals whose gigantic remains prove the existence of creatures 60 feet and upwards in length and 25 in height; but of whose instinctive endowments and habits we can know nothing, unless they be contained in the wonderful description of this chapter. C.——The minute description given of leviathan in this sublime passage will leave no doubt on the mind of the naturalist that the crocodile is the animal here referred to. The enormous tail, 'like a cedar;' the impenetrable skin (ver. 7); the great mouth and formidable teeth (ver. 14); his lair among the reeds by the river's brink—all point to the great crocodile. P.]

REFLECTIONS.—If I am so unacquainted with animals, how scanty must be my knowledge of their infinite Maker! If these are a terror to me, how much more ought the Almighty and his infinite majesty! If I could not tame or manage some one of these, how dare I presume to attempt wresting the government of providence out of God's hand! Surely then, above all, I must not dare to imagine him my debtor, or to interrogate him concerning his conduct. And if my God governs these monsters, I need not be afraid of either men or devils. But why should I indulge pride, when, after all my boastings, I am to have some ugly and ravenous monster my superior in it?

CHAPTER XLII. [Ver. 3. Job here refers to his own previous conduct. He had attempted by his rash statements, and his insinuations of injustice on God's part, and injured innocence on his own part, to obscure the gracious purpose the Almighty had in view and did according as the LORD commanded them: the LORD also accepted [r]Job.[6]

10 And the LORD [s]turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the LORD gave[t] Job twice as much as he had before.

11 Then[u] came there unto him all his brethren, and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house; and they bemoaned[v] him, and comforted him over all the evil that the LORD had brought upon him: every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an ear-ring of gold.[7]

12 So the LORD [y]blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning: for he had four-

REFLECTIONS.—How serious and humble fellowship with God makes a soul! And it is a great mercy that, when he demands of us answers of obedience, we may freely demand of him knowledge and grace to answer his requirements. If his gracious convictions render us exceeding vile and loathsome in our own view, let us expect that our deliverance is at hand. Jesus' blood and grace can more than balance our sins. Whom God humbles and pardons he delights to honour and acknowledge as his own. Yea, tenderly he regards his afflicted saints, notwithstanding their peevish quarrellings with him. He resents in the most humiliating manner the injuries done to them by their angry friends: and he often finds them sadly mistaken who were positive of their being in the right. But it is pleasant to see saints reconciled to one another through Jesus' death, in order to their enjoyment of comfortable fellowship with God. And our consolation is certainly approaching when our repentance towards God, faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, and forgiving kindness to and prayer for injurious friends, are become remarkable. God can easily make all things concur for the welfare or enrichment of his people. And it is absurd therefore to despair in distress, when this very book was written for our encouragement in it.—But was not Job a type of our blessed Redeemer? He was infinitely rich and righteous; yet for our sakes he became poor, till he had not where to lay his head. Quickly was he reduced to the depths of abasement: and behold how he lay bearing our sins, and carrying our sorrows, in the stable—in the manger—in the garden—on the cross—and in the grave! Stupendous and amazing were the troubles, the assaults, he suffered from God—from sinners—from saints! How tempted—how reproached—how afflicted and tormented! But marvellous was his faith, resignation, and patience; and undeserved and powerful his intercession; till at last he arose into illustrious and lasting glory and honour; and a great church of Jewish and Gentile saints succeeded and proceeded from his troubles.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Book of Psalms is one of the most extensive and useful in Holy Scripture, as it is everywhere suited to the case of the saints. It is at first much mixed with complaints and supplications, and at last issues in pure and lasting praise. That Heman composed Ps. lxxxviii., Ethan the lxxxixth, and Moses the xcth is certain. But whether those under the name of Asaph were mostly penned by him, or only assigned to be sung by him as a master of the temple music, as others were to Jeduthun, or to the sons of Korah, or other chief musicians, we cannot determine. Some, as Ps. lxxiv. lxxix. cxxvi. cxxxvii., appear to have been composed after the captivity to Babylon was begun; but by whom we know not. The rest, including those two marked with the name of Solomon, might be composed by David, the sweet Psalmist of Israel.

Twenty-five of the psalms have no title at all; and whether the titles of the rest are of divine authority is not altogether agreed. But when it is considered that these titles everywhere appear in the Hebrew originals, and how often they serve as a key to the psalm, and are sometimes connected with it by the accentuating points, there is no real ground to suspect their authenticity. Nor are interpreters agreed with respect to the signification of some of the Hebrew words standing in these titles. We think that MASCHIL always signifies that the psalm is designed for instruction, Ps. xxxii. xlii. xliii. xlv. lii. liii. liv. lv. lxxiv. lxxviii. lxxxviii. lxxxix. MICHTAM denotes the precious or golden nature of the psalm; as Ps. xvi. lvi.–lx. ALTASCHITH, that the scope of the psalm is to deprecate destruction, Ps. lvii. lviii. lix. MUTHLABBEN, that the psalm was composed on the occasion of the death of his son, or of Goliath the duellist, Ps. ix. AIJELETH SHAHAR, that its subject is Jesus Christ, the hind of the morning, Ps. xxii. JONATH-ELEM-REHOKIM, that David is therein represented as a mute dove among foreigners, Ps. lvi. SHOSHANNIM, SHOSHANNIM-EDUTH, or SHUSHAN-EDUTH, may either signify that Christ and his people, who are lilies, or lilies of the congregation or testimony, are the subject of it; or that it was sung on an instrument of six strings, Ps. xlv. lx. lxix. lxxx., as SHEMINITH denotes an instrument of eight strings, Ps. vi. xii. MAHALATH may either signify the disease, and MAHALATH-LEANOTH the afflicting disease; or MAHALOTH may signify a wind-instrument of music, Ps. liii. lxxxviii. NEGINATH and NEGINOTH denote stringed instruments of music, Ps. lxi. iv. vi. liv. lv. lxvii. lxxvi. NEHILOTH, wind ones, Ps. v. GITTITH, a musical instrument, or tune invented at Gath, Ps. viii. lxxxi. lxxxiv. ALAMOTH, the virginals, or a song to be sung by the virgins, Ps. xlvi. SHIGGAION, or SHIGIONOTH, may denote the diversified matter or tune of the psalm, Ps. vii. The cxxth and fourteen next following are called SONGS OF DEGREES; perhaps because they were sung on the different steps of the temple-stairs; or were sung at certain halts made by David and the Israelites when they brought up the ark of God from Kirjath-jearim to Jerusalem, 2 Sa. vi.; or were sung by the Hebrews at their different rests when they came up from the country to their three solemn feasts; or were partly sung by the Jews at their different resting-places in their return from Babylon, Le. xxiii.; Ezr. ii.

The Hebrews divided this book into FIVE, ending with Ps. xli. lxxii. lxxxix. cvi. and cl.; the first four of which are concluded with AMEN. Interpreters have attempted to arrange or class the Psalms into a variety of different forms. To me it appears not improper to distinguish them into, I. INSTRUCTIVE; which are either (1) HISTORICAL, relating what God had done for the psalmist or for the Jewish nation, &c., as Ps. xviii. lxviii. lxxiii. civ. cv. cvi. cxiv. cxxxv. cxxxvi. (most of which are also EUCHARISTIC); or (2) DOCTRINAL, declaring and explaining the principles and duties of religion; as Ps. i. xiv. xv. xix. xxxvi. xxxvii. xlix. l. liii. lxiv. lxxvi. lxxvii. lxxviii. lxxxi. lxxxii. xc. ci. cxii. cxix. cxxvii. cxxxi. cxxxiii. cxxxix.—II. PROPHETIC; foretelling events relative to Christ or his church; as Ps. ii. viii. xvi. xxi. xxii. xxiv. xxix. xl. xlv. xlvii. xlviii. lxvii. lxviii. lxix. lxxii. lxxxvii. lxxxix. xciii. xcv. xcvi. xcvii. xcviii. c. cx. cxvii. cxxxii. cxlix.; not a few of which are also EUCHARISTIC. III. CONSOLATORY; in which the psalmist comforts himself and others in the promises, perfections, or works of God; as Ps. iv. xi. xxiii. xxvii.

xxxi. xxxvii. xlvi. lviii. lxxiii. xci. cxxi. cxxv. cxxviii cxxix. IV. PETITIONARY; in which he bewails his own or the church's condition, and supplicates deliverance; as Ps. iii. v. vi. vii. x. xii. xiii. xvii. xx. xxv. xxvi. xxvii. xxviii. xxxv. xxxviii. xli. xlii. xliii. xliv. li. liv. lv. lvi. lix. lx. lxi. lxiii. lxiv. lxx. lxxi. lxxiv. lxxix. lxxx. lxxxiii. lxxxv. lxxxvi. lxxxviii. cii. cxix. cxx. cxxiii. cxxx. cxxxii. cxxxvii. cxl. cxli. cxlii. xviii. Seven of these, in which the psalmist makes confession of his sin, viz. Ps. vi. xxii. xxxviii. li. cii. cxxx. cxliii., are called PENITENTIAL. V. EUCHARISTIC; in which he stirs up himself and others to praise and thank the Lord for his favours; as Ps. ix. xviii. xxx. xxxiii. xxxiv. lx. lxv.–lxviii. xcv.–c. ciii.–cviii. cxi. cxiii. cxv.–cxviii. cxxii. cxxiv. cxxvi. cxxxiv.–cxxxvi. cxxxviii. cxliv.–cxlviii. cxlix. cl. But indeed historical narratives, doctrinal instructions, prophecies, consolations, supplications, praises, and thanksgivings, are often so pleasantly and profitably connected in the same psalm that it is difficult to assign it to one class rather than to another. And what is HISTORICAL, as it relates to David and the Jewish church, is often TYPICAL and so PROPHETIC, as it relates to Jesus Christ and the gospel church or heavenly state. Many, too, of the SUPPLICATIONS respecting deliverances from or the destruction of enemies, are to be considered as real PREDICTIONS of the events, they being dictated by the inspiration of Him who can declare the end from the beginning.

[The Book of Psalms presents itself before the Editor united to all the music of the ear, the voice, and the heart. It has occupied much of his study, not as a mere subject of criticism, but as a light to Jesus in all his offices of Prophet, Priest, and King—and specially as a key to his inmost heart—a spiritual revelation and record of those 'prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears,' which he offered up 'in the days of his flesh,' He. 5. 7, as well as a descriptive history of his kingdom of providence, grace, judgment, and glory, in all its periods, past, present, or to come.

To this conclusion the Editor was conducted by a process nearly as follows:—

1. From the confident reference to the Psalms made by our Lord himself.

2. From the equally confident reference of the apostles to the same authority; as, for example, amongst many others, Ac. 13. 33, where a psalm not unfrequently represented as descriptive of the instalment of David on his throne in Israel, is distinctly affirmed by the Holy Spirit to be descriptive of the sitting down of the glorified Saviour upon his throne in heaven.

3. By the evident insufficiency of every other principle of interpretation. Throughout the entire series of Psalms, he found so frequently and so constantly the character of some one so righteous, that to apply it to David would outrage all his history; and which, to apply to any mere man, would gainsay all observation and experience. But this righteous character, in all its various forms of exhibition, he found most exactly to correspond to the evangelical history of Christ: the conclusion was therefore inevitable—this character was that of Christ. It was in contemplating the first psalm that this conclusion first forced itself upon his mind. He had often heard that psalm, by what is called the principle of 'accommodation,' expounded as descriptive of the 'happiness of the godly,' contrasted with 'the misery of the ungodly;' and in this interpretation all ordinary authority induced him to acquiesce. Yet still did he feel himself unable to account for the fact—that the description so far exceeded the reality. 'Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful: but his delight is in the law of the LORD; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season: his leaf also shall not wither: and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.' In real life he had never seen such a man; he had never read of such a one amongst the most eminent Scripture saints. Why then did the Spirit of God, in full command of all the words of truth, proceed to draw a moral picture so far surpassing the alleged original? This was a question to which no satisfactory answer was ever presented to his mind. Yet this was the very question that never ceased to recur demanding a solution. True he had found some excellent commentators, amongst whom may be recorded the honoured names of Gill, Romaine, and Horne, who had taught that the opening of this psalm was descriptive of Christ; but whereas for this opinion they assigned no obvious principle of interpretation, he found in it no positive satisfaction, because it appeared as much depending upon the principle of accommodation as that from which he was anxious to retreat. It was while thus puzzled between these two forms of authority, in neither of which he could discover any principle of interpretation, that his mind was earnestly turned to inquire whether any such principle actually existed. In human science he readily and clearly perceived its existence. He saw that if a book contained the names and descriptions of a thousand plants, the accomplished botanist might have some search, but no difficulty, in discovering, amidst the thousand, any plant whatsoever, and declaring its name, provided merely that the description were truly and fully drawn. To the inexperienced eye, many of the plants might appear not merely similar but the same; but the distinctive characteristics would, to the eye of the botanist, be as obvious as the sun at noonday. And were there, in the Scriptures, any such simple principle of interpretation as this, how easily might it be applied in directing our inquiries and settling our conclusions. And was there not such a principle, and was not this the very principle—the mere, but exact correspondence of the recorded description with the object described, and its obvious want of such exact correspondence with any other object? Of the existence and application of this principle the Editor soon found numerous examples in the New Testament; for instance, Ac. 2. 29–36. Now in many copies of the Scriptures lying before him he found this psalm distinctly interpreted as primarily descriptive of David, and only in some secondary or derivative and typical sense applicable to Christ. It is remarkable, however, that the apostle makes no such distinction, but directly affirms that it is a prophecy concerning our Lord. Now from what principle of interpretation does he draw this conclusion? From the simple and obvious principle that it is not true concerning David, 'for David (when he speaks) is not ascended into the heavens;' but is literally true concerning Christ, whom God hath 'raised up,' of which fact the apostles 'all are witnesses.' This principle perceived—and perceived it irresistibly commends itself to adoption—the meaning of the first psalm became most obvious. It did not describe any of the mere children of men from Adam, their head, downward. But the moment Christ is discovered, it is found exactly to correspond to the evangelical history of 'the days of his flesh.' It is, therefore, not a prophecy but a description of Christ—a moral, a spiritual picture of his character drawn by the Holy Ghost, by whom the holy men of old being moved did speak; and by which, before he appeared, the church knew what to expect; and by which, when he did appear, she should have instantly recognized her Lord.

The following are accordingly the principal rules of interpretation by which the Editor has been guided, and to which, however unimportant they may appear, he ventures to solicit the earnest attention of the disciples of the Bible.

1. The Old Testament is interpreted by the Spirit speaking in the New Testament; even as the 'perfect day' more clearly exhibits, but does not change, what is dimly seen at the dawn.

2. When one part of a psalm is thus, by the Holy Ghost, applied to Christ, every other part of the psalm must be applied to him in a way consistent with the analogy of faith in the other Scriptures.

3. When one psalm is found, by quotation in the New Testament, to apply to Christ, every parallel psalm must likewise apply to him.

4. When a description in the whole or part of a psalm is found absolutely inapplicable to any of the patriarchs, prophets, apostles, or other saints, but, at the same time, perfectly applicable to Christ, then, according to the principle above developed, that psalm is not to be interpreted of such patriarch, prophet, apostle, or saint, but of Christ in his person, qualifications, trials, warfare, victories, or kingdom.

5. A large amount of interpretation must, as in the other Scriptures, be referred to the grammatical construction, especially in the bearing of the words 'I, thou, he,' and their plurals, taken in conjunction with the attributes or acts ascribed to them respectively. C.]

[The Book of Psalms is a connecting link between the Old Testament and the New. In them the great purposes and lessons of the Mosaic law are set forth. In them is expressed the very essence of the symbolical institutions and manifold transactions of Providence, through which the members of the old covenant were instructed in the knowledge and trained to the service of the true God. In them the Jew was taught that the form without the spirit was vain—that a spiritual God required spiritual worship. In them the mind of the worshipper was concentrated upon the Messiah—the Shepherd, the Saviour, the King of his people. While the Psalms were thus wondrously adapted for the expression of praise under the old economy, they were no less adapted, from the fulness and clearness of their typical bearings, to give expression to the devout praise, and to give right direction to the spiritual thoughts, of the Christian. There is not a feature in the divine character now developed in the gospel—there is not an aspiration in the heart of the enlightened disciple of Jesus—there is not a matter of vital experience in the divine life—of which the record is not to be found in the Psalms of David. To say that they are wholly Jewish in their cast and character, is totally to mistake their object and to misapprehend their meaning. The poetry, even the Christian poetry of the world, is as far behind the inspired Psalms in lofty Christian sentiment, and in depth and fulness of Christian doctrine, as it is in sublimity of thought and beauty of expression. I would refer in proof to Ps. xxiii. xlvi. li. lxvii. c. ciii.

cxlv. The old and the new meet and blend gloriously in the Psalms;—the old, with its gorgeous but instructive ritual, and its sublime but suggestive imagery; and the new, with its simple but glorious and cheering truths. Thus the Book of Psalms, standing midway between both covenants, and serving equally to the members of each as the handmaid of a living piety, is a witness of the essential identity of their primary and fundamental ideas. The Psalms can never be superseded in the service of the sanctuary. Alike in seasons of deepest sorrow and holiest rapture, the Christian will instinctively turn to them. P.]

PSALM I.

1 The happiness of the godly. 4 The unhappiness of the ungodly.

BLESSED is the man that [a]walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the [1]scornful:[2]

2 But [b]his delight[3] is in the law of the LORD; and[c] in his law doth he meditate day and night.

3 And he shall [d]be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season: his leaf also shall not wither;[4] and whatsoever[e] he doeth shall prosper.[5]

4 The ungodly are not so: [f]but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away.

5 Therefore the ungodly [h]shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous.

6 For the LORD [i]knoweth the way of the righteous: but the [j]way of the ungodly shall perish.

PSALM II.

1 The kingdom of Christ. 10 Kings are exhorted to accept it.

WHY do[a] the heathen rage,[1] and the people imagine[2] a vain thing?

2 The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, [b]against the LORD, and against [c]his Anointed, saying,

3 Let [d]us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us.

4 He[e] that sitteth in the heavens [g]shall laugh: the LORD shall have them in derision.

5 Then [h]shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex[3] them in his sore displeasure.

6 Yet [i]have I set[4] my King upon my holy hill of Zion.[5]

7 I will declare the decree:[6] the LORD hath said unto me, [j]Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee.[7]

8 Ask[k] of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.

9 Thou[l] shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.

10 Be[m] wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth.

11 Serve[o] the LORD with fear, and rejoice with trembling.

12 Kiss[p] the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled [q]but a little. [r]Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

PSALM III.

The security of God's protection.

A psalm of David [a]when he fled from Absalom his son.

LORD, how[b] are they increased that trouble me? many are they that rise up against me.[1]

2 Many there be which say of my soul, [c]There is no help for him in God. [d]Selah.

3 But thou, O LORD, art [e]a shield for[2] me; my [g]glory, and the [h]lifter up of mine head.

4 I[f] cried unto the LORD with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy hill. Selah.

5 I[g] laid me down and slept; I awaked: for the LORD sustained me.

6 I[k] will not be afraid of ten thousands of

PSALM III.

B.C. cir. 1021.

a 2 Sa. xv.—xviii.

b 2 Sa. 15. 12. 17. 11–24.

1 If this psalm was written, as the title states, when David fled from Absalom, it exhibits in a noble light the character of the psalmist. In the midst of an unnatural rebellion, when to human eye all seemed lost, David declares his implicit faith in God, and his conviction of the final triumph of truth, and the welfare of God's people.—P.

PSALM I. Ver. 1. Blessed is the man. Rather, 'O the blessedness of that man,' that man of a thousand, who walketh not in the counsel of the unjust, who withhold God's due of love and obedience: who standeth not in the way of transgressors, to meet them, or converse with them on their own terms, who sitteth not in the seat of the mocker of God's authority and institutions. Has any son of Adam ever realized these three negatives in character but Christ? Is not this then the Christ described by character? C.

Ver. 4. The imagery of the psalm is thoroughly oriental. The 'tree planted by the rivers of water' would not be exposed to the withering influence of a parched soil and scorching sun during the long rainless and cloudless summers. The chaff of the threshing-floor, driven away by the wind from the midst of the rich grain—what a picture of the wicked! P.

Ver. 6. Christ the truth is the way of the righteous to glory, Jn. 14. 6. Satan and lies are the way of the wicked to destruction. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How dangerous is the company of wicked men, and how headlong the progress of sin! They who walk in the counsel of sinners will quickly wait for opportunities of sinning, and will with pleasure accompany with scorners. But precious and useful are the oracles of God, as means to preserve us from temptation, and to animate us to every good word and work. And it is the heavenly-minded and thoughtful Christian that will be the thriving one. It is absurd for saints to study conformity to this world, when God has marked such a difference, such an opposition, between them and the men of it. And when their end answers so exactly to their life and to the glory of the divine perfections. May God's company, God's word, God's influences, God's approbation, and God's final judgment, and the eternity consequent thereon, be ever dear to my heart!

PSALM II. Ver. 1. Why do the heathen rage? The heathen nations being madly attached to idolatry and the Jewish people to self-righteousness, united in opposition to Christ, Ac. 4. 26; and for the same reasons all who inherit their principles still persevere in the same opposition. C.

Ver. 2. The kings of the earth set themselves, &c. 'Array or marshal' their hosts—their military power and cruel legal enactments and agents, as in the Jewish and Roman persecutions of the early Christians, or the terrible machinery of the Inquisition in the later days of the Reformation. C.

Ver. 3. The main purpose or object of this psalm is to celebrate the dignity, power, and ultimate triumph of the Anointed One. The ode is divided into four parts of three stanzas each. In the first, the presumptuous rebellion of the princes of the earth is mentioned, ver. 1–3. In the second, the Lord Jehovah expresses his contempt for the rebels, and announces his purpose to overthrow them by the agency of his Anointed One, ver. 4–6. In the third, the Anointed One declares his office, and his resolve to carry out Jehovah's will, and execute vengeance, ver. 7–9. In the fourth, a practical and solemn warning and admonition is given to the whole princes and people of the earth. P.

Ver. 4. LORD, ADONAI, not JEHOVAH, as in ver. 2, 7, 11. Adonai signifies my pillars, God in the character of providential upholder. C.

Ver. 7. My Son. A title of the 'Word that was God' (Jn. 1. 1), that 'eternal life that was with the Father' (1 Jn. 1. 1), and who thus being 'eternal life with the Father,' must have been his eternal Son; for as Father necessarily implies a Son, if the Father were eternal, a point that cannot be disputed, so must the Son have been eternal. C.

Ver. 12. The Son is the Anointed of ver. 2; the King of ver. 6; and the omnipotent Conqueror of ver. 9. The Hebrew word translated 'Son' is different from that used in ver. 7. It is an older, and appears to have been a more dignified, term. It will be observed that the three last verses of the psalm correspond to the three first. The revolt against the Lord and his Anointed finds its parallel in the injunction to serve the Lord and to kiss the Son. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Bitter and inveterate is the enmity of mankind against Jesus Christ our Saviour. The agents of hell, Jews and Gentiles, readily drop their private animosities to harmonize in opposition to him! If his cause is to be run down they cordially unite in the work! And not well-grounded fear, but enraged enmity, makes the princes of the earth to oppose his kingdom, which is not of this world. But in vain are all their contrivances and fury. His church, and every believer, is fixed on a rock, against which the powers of hell and earth can never prevail. Jesus' person, as the only begotten Son of God from eternity, and declared to be such in his resurrection from the dead, and the new covenant made with him, are their everlasting foundation. His intercession, and the saving power of his Spirit, endear them to himself. But dreadful is the judgment executed on his Jewish, heathen, antichristian, or other opposers! And if the great are not good they shall receive the deeper damnation. O how mixed is the service of Christ on earth! Whilst we rejoice in him and his fulness, we need to tremble on account of our own guilt and corruption, and the snares and dangers that attend us. But holy jealousy and filial fear produce joys unspeakable and full of glory. While the world contemn him and riot in wantonness, let my soul kiss, receive, love, adore, and submit to God's Son; so shall I be blessed in him with all spiritual blessings in time and eternity.

PSALM III. Ver. 2. Selah. Though this word occurs upwards of seventy times in the Psalms, its meaning is much disputed. By some it has been reckoned a musical pause, by others a mark of attention; by others a repetition; by others as equivalent to Amen! while some consider it indicative of the eternal value of the preceding passage. C.

RUINS OF THE SYNAGOGUE AT CAPERNAUM—WHERE CHRIST HEALED THE MAN WITH THE WITHERED HAND. [PSALMS, ii:7.]—"I will declare the decree: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." We give this view of the ruins of the synagogue at Capernaum because it was at Capernaum that our Saviour wrought the majority of his miracles and delivered many of his discourses. The ruins at Capernaum indicate that this was once a place of importance, but now it is in a state of perfect decay and desolation. The ruins extend for half a mile along the coast and as far back into the interior. Here are fragments of ancient walls and foundations. The rank growth of bushes and weeds almost prevent travelers from making careful measurements. There are architectural fragments in the above synagogue which belong to a very ancient period. There are pieces of Corinthian capitals, architraves, elaborate friezes and pedestals.

people, that have set themselves against me round about.

7 Arise,[1] O LORD; save me, O my God: for thou hast [n]smitten all mine enemies upon the cheek-bone; thou hast broken the teeth of the ungodly.

8 Salvation[o] belongeth unto the LORD: [p]thy blessing is upon thy people. Selah.

PSALM IV.

1 David prayeth God to hear him. 2 He reproveth and exhorteth his enemies. 6 Man's happiness consisteth in God's favour.

To the chief[1] musician on [a]Neginoth, A psalm of David.

HEAR me when I call, O [b]God of my righteousness:[2] thou [c]hast enlarged me when I was in distress;[3] have mercy upon me,[4] and hear my prayer.

2 O ye [d]sons of men, how long will ye turn my[e] glory[5] into shame? how long [g]will ye love vanity, and seek after leasing? Selah.

3 But know that the LORD [h]hath set apart him that is godly for himself: the LORD [i]will hear when I call unto him.

4 Stand[j] in awe, and sin not: [k]commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still. Selah.

5 Offer [l]the sacrifices of righteousness, and put[m] your trust in the LORD.

6 There be [o]many that say, Who will show us any good? LORD, [p]lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.

7 Thou [q]hast put gladness in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased.

8 I [r]will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety.

PSALM V.

1 David prayeth, and professeth to be constant in prayer. 4 God favoureth not the wicked. 7 David, professing his faith, prayeth unto God to guide him, 10 to destroy his enemies, 11 and to preserve the godly.

To the chief musician upon Nehiloth, A psalm of David.

GIVE [a]ear to my words, O LORD; consider my [b]meditation.

2 Hearken unto the voice of my cry, [c]my King, and my God: for unto thee will I pray.

3 My [d]voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O LORD; in the morning will I direct[1] my prayer unto thee, and will look up.[2]

4 For thou art not a God [e]that hath pleasure in wickedness; neither [g]shall evil dwell with thee.

5 The [h]foolish shall not stand in thy [i]sight: thou hatest all workers of iniquity.

6 Thou [k]shalt destroy them that speak leasing:[4] the LORD [l]will abhor the bloody and deceitful man.[5]

7 But [k]as for me, I will come into thy house in the multitude of thy mercy; and in thy fear will I worship toward thy holy temple.[6]

8 Lead [l]me, O LORD, in thy righteousness, because of [n]mine enemies; [o]make thy way straight before my face.

9 For[p] there is no faithfulness[7] in their mouth;[8] their inward part is very [9]wickedness; their throat is an open sepulchre; they flatter with their tongue.

10 Destroy [9]thou them,[1] O God; [r]let them fall by their own counsels;[2] cast them out in the multitude of their transgressions; for they have rebelled against thee.

11 But [s]let all those that put their trust in

Ver. 7. This was never true of David the son of Jesse, hence it must be interpreted of the final victory of David's Lord. The parallelism of this with the second Psalm clearly refers it to Christ. C.——Allusion is probably made to wild beasts, to which David compares his enemies. God disarms them as one would disarm a lion or tiger, by breaking its jaw, or dashing out its teeth. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Whilst I here behold Jesus conflicting, crying, and conquering, and entering into his glory, let me think how often the greatest trials spring from whence we least expected them! from our own house, our near relations! How numerous the seed of the serpent; and how furious their opposition to Christ and his people! But if troubles drive us to our God and our duty, we shall be effectually protected and honourably exalted. Our cries of faith shall be speedily answered from his temple, his heaven, his Christ. Confederacies of foes unnumbered, and savage as wild beasts, shall but enhance and sweeten our salvation and blessings, and shall bring upon themselves fearful and lasting ruin.

PSALM IV. Ver. 6. Who will show us. The word us here discovers the believing church offering the only 'sacrifices of righteousness,' a confident reliance upon the finished work and gracious countenance of her Lord, 2 Co. 4. 6; He. 9. 23; 1 Pe. 2. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In every distress God is a safe refuge to flee to: and the more of his kindness we have experienced, the more bold ought to be our prayers and the stronger our faith. But base is the work, contemptible the character, and vile the desires of the wicked, when compared with those of the godly. What fear of God and his judgments, what serious self-examination, what cordial dedication to God through Christ, are necessary in them that are saved! The wishes of the unregenerate are senseless and sensual: but exalted are the desires, readily granted the felicity, and unmoved the rest of them who firmly believe.

PSALM V. Ver. 1. Who speaks these words, David or some other? whosoever he be, it appears from ver. 12 that his confidence lies in his being righteous. Now there is none righteous but Christ (comp. Ro. 3. 10; 1 Jn. 2. 1), the conclusion is therefore inevitable: this is a prayer of Christ, the Holy Spirit speaking by the prophet, foreshowing to the church how he would pray, as the same Spirit speaking in the evangelists has recorded for the church how he did pray. See especially Jn. xvii. C.

Ver. 7. The Hebrew word here translated 'temple' was applied to the sanctuary before Solomon's temple was built. Thus it is said Eli sat 'by a post of the temple of the Lord' at Shiloh, 1 Sa. 1. 9. Consequently the use of this word cannot be adduced as a proof that David was not the author of the psalm. P.

Ver. 10. Such petitions against enemies frequently occurring in the psalm have afforded occasion for infidels to object, and even for believers to plead a difference between the spirit of the Jewish and Christian dispensations. With those who sit in the 'seat of the scorner' we may not here plead, but with believers we must. 1. To them we say, By whom spake the prophets of old? by the Holy Ghost (2 Pe. 1. 22), never by their own spirit. 2. Does not God punish rebellious sinners according to this word? Certainly. Then does God ever do what the holiest may not entreat him to do? 3. Do not men, the very objectors, appeal to courts of law for redress of injuries? And may not Christ then appeal to his Father for the destruction of the works of the devil? 1 Jn. 3. 8. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Meditation is the director, fervour the life, faith the presenter, and a reconciled God in Christ, as our own, the object, the morning a principal season, and atient expectation the attendant of every true prayer. And while the holiness, justice, and mercy of God in Christ demand our sincerity, and encourage our boldness in approaching to his throne of grace, the wickedness and danger of sinners, the number and mischievous intentions of our enemies, the difficulty of our duty, and our need of immediate blessings, should keep us firmly in the exercise. Never should our brethren of mankind, and especially our fellow-saints, lack our warm remembrance in it: and from the prayer of faith we may confidently expect the answer of peace. But, alas! miserable are the sinners, the rebels, against God and his Christ! How universal their corruption of heart—of tongue—of practice! How fearful the ruin that awaits them! But their contrivances to dishonour Jesus Christ, and afflict his people, or to deliver themselves, shall be made the means of their aggravated woe.

PSALM VI. Ver. 1. Rebuke me. There is here but one speaker, and that he is Christ will appear from the quotation of ver. 8 in Mat. 7. 23. Let the candid and pious student of Scripture also consult He. 5. 7. C.

Ver. 5. These words are literal facts; God is not remembered by the dead—the dead bodies that lie in the grave, which very death and grave Christ came to conquer and destroy, He. 13. 14; 1 Co. 15. 57. C.

Ver. 7. There is great graphic power, and at the same time deep pathos, in this verse. The eye wasted away—its fire, and brightness, and beauty extinguished by continuous weeping. Dimness as of age creeping over it. All this arising from the unceasing persecutions of his enemies. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Not even kings are exempted from the common miseries of life! But it is hard to support under sore sickness and a wounded spirit at once: and yet God's dearest saints have often the largest shares of them. There is no relief under such a burden but to cast it on God. And when our sins have been great so must be our sorrow. The removal of the sense of God's displeasure must be more earnestly desired, than abatement of or relief from our sufferings. And if God ever regard us, it is neither for our righteousness, nor for our sorrows or sufferings, but for his mercy in Christ. However desirable it is to be with Christ in heaven, saints are to wish for life, while it is for the glory of God and the good of his church. But quickly they who sow in tears shall reap in joy. And if God answer one prayer, he will answer all that follow in faith. He is the same Hearer of prayer yesterday, to-day, and for ever. But close fellowship with God really draws the saints from delight in or intimacy with the wicked: and quick and inevitable ruin awaits their impenitent injurers.

thee rejoice: let them ever shout for joy, because thou defendest them:[3] let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee.

12 For thou, LORD, [t]wilt bless the righteous; with favour wilt thou compass him[4] as with a shield.

PSALM VI.

1 David's complaint in his sickness. 8 By faith he triumpheth over his enemies.

To the chief musician on Neginoth upon Sheminith, A psalm of David.

O LORD,[b] rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy [c]hot displeasure.

2 Have mercy upon me, O LORD; for I am weak:[d] O LORD, [e]heal me; for [f]my bones are vexed.[1]

3 My [g]soul is also sore vexed: but thou, O LORD, how long?

4 Return, O LORD, [h]deliver my soul: oh save me [i]for thy mercies' sake.

5 For[j] in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?

6 I[k] am weary with my groaning; all the [l]night[2] make I my bed to swim; I water my couch with my tears.

7 Mine[m] eye is consumed because of grief; it waxeth old because of all mine enemies.

8 Depart[n] from me, all ye workers of iniquity; for the LORD hath [o]heard the voice of my weeping.

9 The[q] LORD hath heard my supplication; the LORD will receive my prayer.[3]

10 Let[r] all mine enemies be ashamed and sore vexed:[4] let them return and be ashamed suddenly.

PSALM VII.

1 David prayeth against the malice of his enemies, professing his innocence. 10 By faith he seeth his defence, and the destruction of his enemies.

[a]Shiggaion of David, which he sang unto the LORD, concerning the words[1] of [b]Cush the Benjamite.

O LORD[c] my God, in thee do I put my trust: save me from all them that persecute me, and deliver me:

2 Lest he [d]tear my soul like a lion, rending it in pieces, while there is none to deliver.[2]

3 O LORD my God, [e]if I have done this; if there be iniquity in my hands;

4 If I have rewarded evil unto him that was at peace with me; (yea, [f]I have delivered him that without cause is mine enemy;)[3]

2 The pure air and cloudless sky of Palestine make the starry heaven a scene of wondrous beauty and glory. We cannot in this country form any just conception of the brilliancy of the stars and the soft mellow radiance of the moon. David was a shepherd. During the mild nights of summer he watched his flocks in the wilderness of Judah. How natural then that he, in these noble odes, should celebrate the splendour of the starry skies!—P.

5 Let the enemy persecute my soul, and take it; yea, let him [h]tread down my life upon the earth, and lay [i]mine honour in the dust. [4]Selah.

6 Arise,[j] O LORD, in thine anger; lift up thyself because of the rage of mine enemies: and awake for me to the judgment that thou hast commanded.[5]

7 So [k]shall the congregation of the people compass thee about: for their sakes therefore [l]return thou on high.[6]

8 The LORD shall judge the people: [m]judge me, O LORD, according to my righteousness, and according to mine integrity that is in me.[7]

9 Oh[n] let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but [o]establish the just: [q]for the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins.

10 My [r]defence is of God,[8] which saveth the upright in heart.

11 God [s]judgeth the righteous,[9] and [t]God is angry with the wicked every day.

12 If[u] he turn not, he will [v]whet his sword; he hath bent his bow, and made it ready.

13 He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death; he [x]ordaineth his arrows against the persecutors.

14 Behold,[y] he travaileth with iniquity, and hath conceived mischief, and brought forth falsehood.

15 He made a pit,[1] and digged it, [z]and is fallen into the ditch which he made.

16 His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate.

17 I[a] will praise the LORD according to his righteousness; and will sing praise to the name of the LORD most high.

PSALM VIII.

God's glory is magnified by his works, and by his love to man.

To the chief musician upon [a]Gittith, A psalm of David.

O LORD our Lord, [b]how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens.

2 Out[c] of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained[1] strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest [d]still the enemy and the avenger.

3 When I [e]consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained;[2]

PSALM VII. Title. It ought not to be forgotten that the superscriptions or titles prefixed to many of the Psalms are not inspired. They are generally of late date, and of questionable authenticity. Nothing is known of Cush the Benjamite. He is not mentioned elsewhere; but he may possibly have been one of the followers of Saul when he was in pursuit of David amid the wilds and strongholds of the desert. P.

Ver. 1. The denial of all iniquity, ver. 3, and the appeal to judgment on the ground of righteousness and integrity (ver. 8–11), could never have proceeded from David the son of Jesse. He confessed his sin, and the Holy Spirit hath recorded that sin for our warning, and his repentance and pardon for our encouragement. But the denial of iniquity, and the appeal to judgment on the ground of righteousness, are most becoming in David's Lord (Mat. 22. 43), who knew no sin. These verses, therefore, being absolutely untrue of David, but perfectly true of Christ, we have the utmost evidence that this psalm is a prayer of Christ. C.

Ver. 13. This and the following verses point to an individual. But who is he? Read Ac. 1. 16, 20; Ps. 69. 25, and then say, is not this also a description of the arch-traitor, the prototype of all the subsequent persecutors of Christ and his church—in principle, covetousness; in practice, cruelty; and in the end, self-destruction. C.

Ver. 16. These verses contain a graphic description of the career of the wicked man. Sin of every form and character is recklessly indulged in. One is reminded by it of Paul's statements in the epistle to the Romans. P.

REFLECTIONS.—While I here behold the much persecuted and reproached Jesus, in his perfect righteousness, justified by his Father, and avenged of all his enemies, Jewish, heathen, &c., let me think how complete and commodious a refuge God is in every time of trouble! In him we can never be moved. However brutish and cruel our enemies be, while we are weak we are strong. No false accusation need dismay us while we are conscious of our innocence, and have a gracious God to appeal to as our witness and judge. There is no kindness which he will not grant for the benefit of his people and the glory of his own perfections. Out of his favour there is no safety, and in it there is no danger. If he justify us none dare accuse or condemn us. And though our faith is truly a condition of our eternal happiness, dreadful and unavoidable is the ruin of impenitent sinners. Their contrivances and attempts against the godly shall prove means of their own destruction; when they who trusted in the Lord, and kept his way, triumph in notes of endless praise.

PSALM VIII. Ver. 1. The excellence of the name of God

4 What[g] is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?

5 For[h] thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honour.

6 Thou[i] madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet:

7 All sheep and oxen,[3] yea, and the beasts of the field;[4]

8 The fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas.

9 O LORD our Lord, [j]how excellent is thy name in all the earth!

PSALM IX.

1 David praiseth God for executing of judgment. 11 He inciteth others to praise him. 13 He prayeth that he may have cause to praise him.

To the chief musician upon Muth-labben, A psalm of David.

I WILL[a] praise thee, O LORD, with [b]my whole heart: I will show forth all thy marvellous works.

2 I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, [c]O thou most High.

3 When mine enemies are turned back, [d]they shall fall and perish at thy presence.

4 For thou hast [e]maintained my right[1] and my cause; thou satest in the throne judging right.[2]

5 Thou hast [f]rebuked the heathen, thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name for ever and ever.

6 O thou enemy, [h]destructions are come to a perpetual end:[3] and [i]thou hast destroyed cities; their memorial is perished with them.[4]

7 But[j] the LORD shall endure for ever: [k]he hath prepared his throne for judgment;

8 And[l] he shall judge the world in righteousness, he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness.

9 The[m] LORD also will be a refuge[5] for the oppressed, a refuge in times of trouble.

10 And they that [o]know thy name will put their trust in thee: for thou, LORD, [p]hast not forsaken them that seek thee.

11 Sing praises to the LORD, which [q]dwelleth in Zion: declare among the people his doings.

12 When[r] he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he [s]forgetteth not the cry of the humble.[6]

13 Have mercy upon me, O LORD: [t]consider my trouble which I suffer of them that hate me, thou that [u]liftest me up from the gates of death;

14 That[v] I may show forth all thy praise in the gates of the daughter of Zion: I will rejoice in thy salvation.

15 The[x] heathen are sunk down in the pit that they made: in the net which they hid is their own foot taken.

16 The [y]LORD is known by the judgment which he executeth: [z]the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. [a]Higgaion.[7] Selah.

17 The [b]wicked shall be turned into [8]hell, and all the nations that forget God.

18 For[c] the needy shall not alway be forgotten: the expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever.

19 Arise,[d] O LORD; let not man prevail: let the heathen be judged in thy sight.

20 Put[e] them in fear, O LORD; that the nations may know themselves to be but men. Selah.

PSALM X.

1 David complaineth to God of the outrages of the wicked. 12 He prayeth for redress. 16 He professeth his confidence.

7 Eminent authorities understand by this word a musical pause. It may be translated solemn meditation, a sense applicable to all.—C.

always appears in its full development of such grace as the believer requires under his peculiar circumstances. Thus to Abraham (Ge. 17. 1) it was 'the Almighty God,' when his defenceless state constantly suggested the need of protection. Again to Moses in the solitudes of Horeb (Ex. 3. 14) it was 'I AM,' when the changes of years suggested the excellence of an unchanging God. But to that same Moses, in the midst of the 'thousands of Israel,' the name is expanded, as it were, to embrace all the necessities of the time, and assure the faith of Moses in discharge of his arduous duties, Ex. 34. 6, 7. And when, in the fulness of the time, God hath sent forth his Son (Ga. 4. 4), and the Spirit of his Son (Ga. 4. 6), the excellence of his name is still further manifested in the baptismal title and the apostolical benediction, revealing and glorifying Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, Mat. 28. 19; 2 Co. 13. 14. C.

Ver. 5. A little lower than the angels. The quotation of ver. 6 by our Lord, Mat. 11. 25; He. 2. 6, 7, evidences, beyond all doubt, that it is a description of Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How glorious is the name of our exalted IMMANUEL, and of God in him! Quickly shall his kingdom fill both heaven and earth, however despicable its oracles, ordinances, and professors now appear to a carnal world. By the weakest instruments he accomplishes his greatest purposes, displays his power and grace, and treads and triumphs over Satan and his votaries. The glories of nature, but especially the graces of redemption, should continually lead our hearts to the contemplation of their glorious Author. How astonishing is it to see so many creatures subjected to miserable man: and especially to behold them all subjected to the once lowly Christ!

PSALM IX. Ver. 1. Of whom the Spirit here speaks, will be evident from considering first, that Ro. 15. 9 ascribes Ps. 18. 49 to Christ. This is the key of the interpretation. Next, with Ps. 18. 49, compare Ps. 57. 9; 35. 18, then all with this opening verse ascribing praise to Jehovah with the whole heart, and with ver. 14, proposing to show forth 'all his praise,' and it will be impossible to deny that the psalm is prophetically spoken in the person of Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—All success granted by God to us ought to animate us to the most hearty praises and thanksgiving for that and all other deliverances. And while prosperity renders us thankful, our chief joy must be in the God of our mercies. It is himself, as the most High in Christ, that is our infallible security against fear or danger. And though the wicked prosper for a time, they are marked for lasting destruction. And when God begins he will make an end. Thrice happy are they, however poor and oppressed, who have this God of Jacob, this high Sovereign, this righteous Judge for the object of their knowledge and trust! The more they know of him the more they will trust in him. Sweet shall be their songs of deliverance in the church in the ordinances below, but especially in the heavenly Zion above. But while God remembers them in mercy, and grants their long waited for requests, fearfully will he manifest his holiness, equity, and power in the temporal and eternal ruin of his and their wicked enemies. But ought we not here chiefly to contemplate, with joy and thankfulness, the blessings of redemption, and the victories of our Redeemer over sin, death, and hell, Jews, heathens, and anti-christians, and all other incorrigible opposers; and to believe that we through him shall be more than conquerors!

PSALM X. Ver. 1. Read Ps. 22. 1, 18, which the Holy Spirit expressly applies to Christ, then compare the whole of Ps. xxiii. with Ps. x., and their perfect parallelism will clearly show that this psalm is a description of Christ cruelly persecuted by Herod, ungratefully betrayed by Judas, impiously denounced by Caiaphas, and unjustly condemned by Pilate. C.

Ver. 9. The poor, that is, the poor in spirit, whose hearts have been emptied of all vanity and self-righteousness. Mat. 5. 3. C.

Ver. 10. The true meaning of this verse seems to be 'crushed, he sinks down; the poor man faileth under the power of the mighty.' The reference is not to oppressor, but to the oppressed; not to the tyrant, but the victim. P.——Strong ones. Literally exemplified in that affected humility with which the Inquisition was wont to deliver the martyrs of truth to the secular arm, and hypocritically to commend her victims to mercy. C.

Ver. 12. Seing the tyranny and power of the wicked, and the helplessness of the oppressed, the psalmist appeals to God. He alone, infinite in wisdom and power, can succour and save the poor and needy. P.

Ver. 15. The appeal is here made to God as a righteous ruler. It is justice and not vengeance that the writer asks. There is nothing either harsh or cruel in justice. P.

Ver. 16. Heathen are perished out of his land. This expression refers the fulfilment of the psalm to that time when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, Re. 11. 15, and which shall eventuate in that glorious day, when 'Babylon shall be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all,' Re. 19. 21. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a heavy burden to an exercised saint are the hidings and frowns of his God! and the greatest saints undergo the severest trials of their faith. Men's persecutions, or Satan's temptations, often unite with God's absence to distress the soul. Behold into what dreadful monsters sin has transformed men—proud—persecutors—boasters—covetous—prayerless—careless of God and religion—disobedient—impenitent—insolent—secure—profane—treacherous—heretical—murderous—hypocritical—blasphemous! But their wickedness is all before the Lord. And to revenge their affronting of himself, to

2 The [b]wicked in his pride doth persecute[1] the poor: [c]let them[2] be taken in the devices that they have imagined.[3]

3 For the wicked [d]boasteth of his heart's[4] desire, and [e]blesseth the covetous, whom the LORD [f]abhorreth.[5]

4 The wicked, [g]through the pride of his countenance, will not seek after God: [h]God is not in all his thoughts.

5 His[i] ways are always grievous; thy judgments are [j]far above out of his sight: as for all his enemies, he [k]puffeth at them.

6 He hath said in his heart, [l]I shall not be moved: for I shall never[7] be in adversity.

7 His[m] mouth is full of cursing, and deceit,[8] and fraud: under his tongue[9] is mischief[1] and vanity.[2]

8 He [n]sitteth in the lurking places of the villages; in the secret places doth he murder the innocent: his eyes are privily set[3] against the poor.

9 He lieth in wait secretly[4] as a lion in his den: he lieth in wait to catch the poor: he doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net.

10 He croucheth,[5] and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall by his strong ones.[6]

11 He [p]hath said in his heart, [q]God hath forgotten: he hideth his face; he will never see it.

12 Arise, O LORD; O God, [r]lift up thine hand: forget not the humble.[7]

13 Wherefore[s] doth the wicked contemn God? he hath said in his heart, Thou wilt not require[t] it.

14 Thou [u]hast seen it; for thou beholdest mischief and spite, to requite it with thy hand: the poor committeth[8] himself unto thee; thou art the [v]helper of the fatherless.

15 Break[w] thou the arm of the wicked and the evil man: [x]seek out his wickedness till thou find none.

16 The[y] LORD is King for ever and ever: the heathen [z]are perished out of his land.

17 LORD, [a]thou hast heard the desire of the humble: thou wilt prepare[9] their heart, [b]thou wilt cause thine ear to hear;

18 To [c]judge the fatherless and the oppressed, that the [d]man of the earth may no more oppress.[1]

2 This psalm is a record of the victory of faith over weakness of body and anguish of soul. 'Like Job, the psalmist is afflicted with sickness, which has prostrated his energies, and threatens to cut short his career of service in God's cause: by an untimely death, and is at the same time assailed by persecutors, who, as birds of prey over the sinking traveller, exult over the progress of his malady, and long for his death, as a crowning triumph in their war of persecution against the godly.'—P.

2 For, lo, [c]the wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrow upon the string, that they may privily[1] shoot at the upright in heart.[2]

3 If [d]the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?

4 The[e] LORD is in his holy temple, the LORD's throne is in heaven: [g]his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men.

5 The[h] LORD trieth the righteous: [i]but the wicked, and him that loveth violence, his soul hateth.

6 Upon[j] the wicked he shall rain snares,[3] fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest:[4] this shall be the [k]portion of their cup.

7 For[l] the righteous LORD loveth righteousness; [m]his countenance doth behold the upright.

PSALM XII.

1 David, destitute of human comfort, craveth help of God. 3 He comforteth himself in the assurance of God's judgments on the wicked, 6 and in the faithfulness of his promises.

To the chief musician [a]upon Sheminith, A psalm of David.

HELP,[1] LORD; for [b]the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men.

2 They[c] speak vanity every one with his neighbour: with flattering lips and with a double heart[2] do they speak.

3 The[d] LORD shall cut off all flattering lips, and the tongue that speaketh proud things:[3]

4 Who[e] have said, With our tongue will we prevail; our lips are our own:[4] who is lord over us?

5 For[g] the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the LORD; I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him.[5]

6 The[h] words of the LORD are pure words; as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times.

7 Thou[i] shalt keep them, O LORD, thou shalt preserve them[6] from this generation for ever.

8 The[j] wicked walk on every side, when the vilest men are exalted.[7]

PSALM XIII.

1 David complaineth of God's delay to help him. 3 He prayeth for preventing grace. 5 He trusteth in the divine mercy.

To the chief musician,[1] A psalm of David.

HOW[a] long wilt thou forget me, O LORD? for ever? how long wilt thou [b]hide thy face from me?[2]

2 How[c] long shall I take counsel in my soul, having sorrow in my heart daily? [d]how long shall mine enemy be exalted over me?

3 Consider[e] and hear me, O LORD my God: lighten mine eyes, lest I sleep the sleep of death; honour his people's relation to, dependence on, and expectations from him, and to manifest his wonted readiness to appear in their behalf, he will quickly arise to punish them. And when God breaks the power, and in awful judgment manifests the wickedness, of their enemies, he deals kindly with his people. When the wicked are cast down, they are lifted up to safety, holiness, and honour. And he usually pours out upon them a remarkable spirit of humility, and of earnest supplication, as the mean of ushering in their deliverance.

PSALM XI. Ver. 3. If the foundations be destroyed, i.e. if all regard to the laws of God, all regard to order and justice, be gone, what safety can the most innocent or virtuous expect!

Ver. 6. Snares, fire, and brimstone, &c., signify all the terrible and unavoidable judgments which God executes upon the wicked in time and eternity; such as he executed upon Saul and his agents.

Ver. 1. 'This psalm must be referred to the early times of David's life, when he had to maintain an unequal struggle against the unrelenting jealousy of Saul. Well might his friends despair: they were already imperilled on every side

4 Lest[g] mine enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved.

5 But[h] I have trusted in thy mercy; my heart shall rejoice in thy salvation.

6 I[i] will sing unto the LORD, because he hath dealt bountifully with me.[3]

PSALM XIV.

1 David describeth the corruption of a natural man. 4 He convinceth the wicked by the light of their conscience. 7 He glorieth in the salvation of God.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

THE fool [a]hath said in his heart, There is no God. [b]They are corrupt; they have done abominable works; there is none that doeth good.

2 The [c]LORD looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, and seek God.

3 They are all [d]gone aside; they are all together become [1]filthy; [e]there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

4 Have[f] all the workers of iniquity no knowledge? who [h]eat up my people as they eat bread, and call not upon the LORD.

5 There[i] were they in great fear:[2] for [j]God is in the generation of the righteous.[3]

6 Ye have [k]shamed the counsel of the poor, because the LORD is his refuge.

7 Oh that[4] the [l]salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! when the LORD [m]bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

3 The psalm closes with expressions of joy, thankfulness, and triumph. Though it begins with depression and sadness, it ends with joy. This is often observable in the Psalms. In the commencement it often occurs that the mind is overwhelmed with sorrow, and there is earnest pleading with God. Light, under the influence of prayer, breaks in gradually upon the soul. The clouds disperse, the darkness disappears; new views of the goodness and mercy of God are imparted; an assurance of his favour is brought to the soul; confidence in his mercy springs up in the heart; and the psalm that began with sorrowful complaining, ends with the language of praise and joy' (Barnes).—P.

A psalm of David.

LORD, who[c] shall abide[1] in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?

2 He that [b]walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart.

3 He that [c]backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor taketh [2]up a reproach against his neighbour.

4 In whose eyes [d]a vile person is contemned; but he honoureth them that fear the LORD. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and [e]changeth not.[3]

5 He [g]that putteth not out his money to usury, nor [h]taketh reward against the innocent. [i]He that doeth these things shall never be moved.

PSALM XVI.

1 David, in distrust of merits, and hatred of idolatry, fleeth to God for preservation. 5 He showeth the hope of his calling, of a future resurrection, and life everlasting.

Michtam[1] of David.

PRESERVE me,[a] O God: for in thee do I put my trust.[2]

2 O my soul, thou [b]hast said[3] unto the LORD, Thou art my [4]LORD: [c]my goodness[5] extendeth not to thee;

3 But[d] to the saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent,[6] in whom is all my delight.

4 Their sorrows shall be multiplied that [e]hasten after another god:[7] their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer, nor [g]take up their names into my lips.

by the treachery of an unscrupulous foe, and now they saw opening before them an interminable vista of dangers, which would be the lot of the righteous in a time of anarchy and misrule. But the cowardly fears of his friends, so far from shaking David's trust in God, only gave him an occasion for pouring forth in song the firm and simple faith with which his heart was full.' The psalm divides itself into two parts;—the first part (ver. 1–3) contains the questions put to David by timid followers, suggesting flight. The second part contains David's reply, expressing unshaken confidence in God. P.

Ver. 6. So he rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah, which are 'set forth for an example,' Jude 7, and so will he punish the finally impenitent in 'the lake of fire,' Re. 20. 15. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The saints' sorest temptations come as often from carnal friends as from their inveterate enemies; and often the most upright and blameless meet with the greatest malignity on earth. When wicked rulers have once unhinged the fundamental laws of equity, the greatest virtue often exposes men to the greatest danger. But while God is in Christ, in the church, and in heaven, they who trust in him need never despair. Nothing escapes his notice, and nothing shall escape without a due reward. While in his afflicting the righteous he but tries them for their purification and honour, the holiness and equity of his nature demand that his unavoidable judgments should in a terrible manner reward the wicked.

PSALM XII. Ver. 1. The speaker here is 'poor and needy,' ver. 5. Now to find who he is, consult, first, Ps. 40. 17, then ver. 6–8, and compare He. 10. 7, 9; and thus finding that 'the poor and needy' is Christ, there will be no difficulty in discovering that this psalm is a prayer of Christ. C.

Ver. 6. Seven being the amount of a perfect week, is the emblem of anything perfected by successive acts or exhibitions; so silver is refined from the alloy of baser metals by successive exposures to the fire; and so is the word of God separated from all the alloy of human misconceptions and errors, till it stands forth unadulterated truth—'the truth as it is in Jesus.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is fearfully ominous when those distinguished saints, who support nations or churches, are removed by death, while none are raised up to fill their room. Perilous are the times when piety towards God and integrity towards men cease—when all men seek their own, not the things of Jesus Christ—when hypocrites by fair speeches deceive the simple! But pride must have a fall, either before the throne of grace, or into the depths of hell! And though God for a time may seemingly overlook his people, he will never forget, disregard, or cast them off. He best knows when to deliver; and if we have but faith he will never fail. When the saints' night of trouble is at the darkest, and their prayer fervent, their deliverance is near. While God's pure and precious promises stand fast in Christ, no increase, activity, or malice of wicked men shall ever be able utterly to destroy or deceive his people.

PSALM XIII. Ver. 2. The 'Man of sorrows,' who knew no joy but 'the joy set before him,' here speaks while he 'endures the cross,' and bears 'the contradiction of sinners.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—How painful to an exercised believer is the sense of God's absence and frowns! An hour is an age without his love! But the most precious saints are often exercised with long and constant sorrows: and their anxiety and vain contrivances to help themselves will but add to their burden, entangle them more and more, and bring them to the brink of despair. But though God hide, and frown, and smite, his love for all men cannot be broken. Let Satan and his agents triumph as they may in their fall, there is full hope of their recovery; nay, it is at hand. Trust in God's mercy and prayers poured into his bosom will quickly issue in great deliverance and joy.

PSALM XIV. REFLECTIONS.—How desperately wicked are human hearts! If all their thoughts were manifested, how horrible and shameful the sight! Atheism in heart is the source of all our corruption in life! Men are very similar in sin, particularly in inward corruption. And there is great reason to bless God for the riches of his grace, if anything good is implanted in us by his Spirit. How absurdly, and against conscience, must men act when they eat up with pleasure, hate, reproach, persecute, and oppress the people of God, or neglect prayer to him! Or when they attempt to shame and banter poor saints out of their religion and dependence on him! But if God be for us, who can be against us? Secret terrors shall apprehend our most jovial persecutors. How fervent are right desires for salvation through Christ; and how ravishing our enjoyment of it! For now is come Jesus, and his salvation and strength! Let Jews and Gentiles magnify the Lord, and rejoice in God their Saviour.

PSALM XV. Ver. 2. Let him that would search the Scriptures, not to give them a meaning, but to find it, read Je. 17. 9; Ro. 3. 10, 11, 19, and compare them with the character described in this verse, and then say, Is not this certainly the Christ? C.

Ver. 4. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. Beareth true testimony, even when he knows it will be turned to his hurt. This Christ did when adjured by the high-priest, and, on his own testimony, perverted by the high-priest and council, the righteous was condemned, Mat. 26. 63–66. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Professors of religion have great need to examine themselves. Many have a place in God's church below who will never be admitted into his holy heaven. And if we would know our true state, God's word must be the sole standard, and his Spirit the great director and manager of our trial. It is not fair words, nor high pretences, but uniform obedience in heart and life to God's law, that will prove the reality of our grace. We must exercise ourselves to keep a conscience void of offence towards God and man; to keep good company; and to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather to reprove them. Though our holiness and virtue be not the foundation of our unchangeable happiness, they are the marks of our being rooted and grounded in Christ, our infallible establisher.

5 The[h] LORD is the portion of mine inheritance[8] and of my cup: [i]thou maintainest my lot.

6 The [j]lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, [k]I have a goodly heritage.

7 I will [l]bless the LORD, who hath given me counsel; my reins also instruct me in the night-seasons.

8 I[m] have set the LORD always before me: because he is [n]at my right hand, I shall not be moved.

9 Therefore my heart is glad, and my [p]glory rejoiceth;[9] my flesh also shall rest in hope:[1]

10 For [q]thou wilt not leave my soul in hell;[2] neither wilt thou suffer [r]thine Holy One to see corruption.

11 Thou[s] wilt show me the path of life: [t]in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are [u]pleasures for evermore.

PSALM XVII.

1 David, in confidence of his integrity, craveth defence of God against his enemies. 10 He showeth their pride and eagerness to ruin him. 13 He prayeth against them in confidence of his hope.

A prayer of David.

HEAR [a]the right,[1] O LORD, [b]attend unto my cry, give ear unto my prayer, that goeth not out of feigned lips.[2]

2 Let[c] my sentence come forth from thy presence; let thine eyes behold the things that are equal.

3 Thou[d] hast proved mine heart; thou hast visited me in the night; thou hast tried me, and shalt find nothing:[3] I [e]am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress.

4 Concerning the works of men, [f]by the word of thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer.[4]

5 Hold[h] up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not.[5]

6 I [i]have called upon thee; for thou wilt hear me, O God: incline thine ear unto me, and hear my speech.

1 This noble psalm, one of the most sublime in this book, was composed by David toward the close of his long and eventful life. It is the fervent expression of his gratitude to God for all past mercies and deliverances. His bodily strength, his mental vigour, his relief in suffering, his deliverance from danger, his success in life, his triumph over his foes, he attributes to the love, wisdom, and power of God.—C.

9 From the wicked that oppress me,[7] from my deadly enemies,[8] who compass me about.

10 They[m] are enclosed in their own fat: [o]with their mouth they speak proudly.

11 They[p] have now compassed us in our steps: they have [q]set their eyes bowing down to the earth;

15 As for me, [v]I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be [z]satisfied, when I awake, with thy [y]likeness.

PSALM XVIII.

David's psalm of thanksgiving for God's mighty deliverances and manifold blessings.

To the chief musician, [a]A psalm of David [b]the servant of the LORD, who spake unto the LORD [c]the words of this song, in the day that [d]the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul: And he said,

I WILL[e] love thee, O LORD, my strength.[1]

2 The LORD is my [g]rock, and my fortress, and my [h]deliverer; [i]my God, my strength,[2] in whom I will trust; my [j]buckler, and [k]the horn of my salvation, and my [l]high tower.

3 I[n] will call upon the LORD, [o]who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies.

4 The[p] sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of ungodly[3] men made me afraid.

5 The sorrows[4] of hell compassed me about; the [q]snares of death prevented me.

PSALM XVI. Ver. 5. The Lord and his fulness, answerable to every need, every desire, is represented as a lot or portion, in allusion to the shares of Canaan, which were divided by lot, Nu. xxiv.; and to the shares of liquor in cups at feasts; importing how permanent, unalterable, refreshing, and strengthening he is to the enjoyers.

Ver. 10. Hell, with respect to David or Christ, cannot signify the place of the damned; for thither they never went: but it may include great distress of spirit, the grave, and the state of the dead.

Ver. 4. Another —god is not in the original, and the word supplied should rather be Messiah. The Jews have sought another, and have been in sorrow for upwards of 1800 years. C.

Ver. 5. Lot. The resolution in ver. 3 is spoken by Messiah as a priest. The tribe of Levi had no inheritance but JEHOVAH: Messiah has the same, and besides is 'heir of all things.' C.

Ver. 9. 'My glory rejoiceth;' i.e. my soul rejoiceth. The soul being the most dignified—the noblest part of man, is termed in poetic imagery his glory. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Trust in God does not merit but it secures divine preservation, as God cannot disappoint one who believes his word or rests on his new-covenant characters. Our holiness cannot profit God, but it marks us his, and tends to our advantage; and next to fellowship with God that with ourselves is the most excellent and useful. But the more a believer advances in holiness, the more humble thoughts he will have of himself, in view of the pure and all-sufficient JEHOVAH. They who delight in God will delight in those who bear his image as the most excellent on earth. Such as have Jesus Christ as their atonement, and God in him, need no idols or other sacrifices. And if we want to banish idolatry, the most distant appearances of it ought to be avoided and abhorred. But happy are they who have God as their portion, their wealth and comfort by his own gospel grant! This secures against want as well as against ruin. This secures direction in time, comfort in death, and glory through eternity. And O how pleasant death and eternity appear, when Christ is considered as our way, as our forerunner, and God in him as our everlasting ALL in ALL.

PSALM XVII. Ver. 1. Prayer is called meditation, because our requests ought to be seriously considered before we present them to God. It is called a lifting up of our souls, and pouring out of our hearts, because our requests must be the earnest desires of our soul. It is called supplication, seeking, knocking, inquiring, to denote the humility and earnestness of our petitions. It is represented as a crying, sighing, groaning, and breathing, to signify our great pressures and necessities, and the great earnestness of our desires after relief. It is represented as a looking to, talking with, and taking hold of God, to denote the humble familiarity, importunate earnestness, and patient resignation necessary therein. From the gestures used in it, it is represented as a bowing, kneeling, falling down, or standing before God; and, from its acceptableness to God, it is represented as odours or incense.

Ver. 1. Hear the right. A prayer for God to hear the right, the absolutely right, can never be the prayer of a sinner, who must ever cry, 'God be merciful.' It is the prayer of 'Jesus Christ the righteous,' 'who knew no sin,' and who ever liveth to make intercession for us on the ground of his perfect righteousness. C.

Ver. 3. It is manifest from the scope of this whole psalm that the enemies to whom the author refers had, like Job's friends, charged him with some secret crimes. He repudiates the charge. He calls upon God, the searcher of hearts, to examine and try him, so as to testify to his innocence. The psalmist does not presume to declare his purity before God; he does not speak of personal holiness. He refers simply to the charges brought against him by reckless persecutors. P.

6 In[r] my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God: [s]he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears.

7 Then [t]the earth shook and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wroth.[5]

8 There went up a [u]smoke out of his[6] nostrils,[7] and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

9 He [v]bowed the heavens also, and came down: and darkness[8] was under his feet.

10 And [w]he rode upon a cherub, and did fly; yea, he did fly upon the wings of the wind.

11 He[x] made darkness his secret place; his pavilion round about him were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies.

12 At [y]the brightness that was before him his thick clouds passed, hail-stones and coals of fire.

13 The[z] LORD also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice; hail-stones and coals of fire.

14 Yea, [a]he sent out his arrows, and scattered them; and he shot out lightnings, and discomfited them.

15 Then[b] the channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered at thy rebuke, O LORD, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.[9]

16 He[c] sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of [d]many waters.

17 He [e]delivered me from my strong enemy,[1] and from them which hated me: for they were too [f]strong for me.

18 They[h] prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the LORD was my stay.

19 He[i] brought me forth also into a large place; he delivered me, because he delighted in me.

20 The LORD [j]rewarded me according to my righteousness; according to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

21 For [k]I have kept the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

22 For[l] all his judgments were before me, and I did not put away his statutes from me.

23 I was also [m]upright before[2] him; and I kept myself from [n]mine iniquity.[3]

26 With the pure thou wilt show thyself pure; [r]and with the froward thou wilt show thyself froward.[6]

27 For[s] thou wilt save the afflicted[7] people; [t]but wilt bring down high looks.

28 For[u] thou wilt light my candle:[8] the LORD my God will enlighten my darkness.

29 For[v] by thee I have run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall.

35 Thou hast also given me [e]the shield of thy salvation: and thy right hand hath holden me up, and thy gentleness [f]hath made me great.[2]

36 Thou hast [h]enlarged my steps under me, that my feet[3] did not slip.

37 I[i] have pursued mine enemies, and overtaken them; neither did I turn again till they were consumed.

38 I have wounded them, that they were not able to rise: they are fallen under my feet.

39 For thou [j]hast girded me with strength unto the battle: thou hast subdued[4] under me those that rose up against me.

40 Thou hast also given me [k]the necks of mine enemies; that I might destroy them that hate me.[5]

41 They[l] cried, but there was none to save them; even unto the LORD, but he answered them not.[8]

3 There appears to be an acknowledgment here on the part of the psalmist that he had a corrupt nature, that he had a tendency to sin, which, had he not restrained, would have led him into open and grievous violations of God's law. He curbed his evil propensities, and governed his passions; and now he shows that the Lord who had endowed him with restraining grace, had also showered down upon him temporal favours. P.—Mine iniquity may seem to identify the psalm with 130. 8, and disallow its applicability to Christ. But it is said by Isaiah (53.6) that the 'Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all.' Iniquity therefore he calls mine as a burden, though ours as a production. —C.

malice of Satan and his agents, cast down their power, a prayer to which it is not easy to discover how either infidelity or sentimental Pharisaism can object. C.

Ver. 15. The psalmist here contrasts his hopes and aspirations with those of the mere worldling. He does not rest his happiness on temporal things. He looks beyond earth to a heavenly inheritance and home. The presence and favour of God can alone satisfy him. He hopes for and believes in a participation in the divine nature and graces. The doctrine of a future state and of a resurrection is here clearly shadowed forth. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who, when traduced by men, have the testimony of a good conscience to their uprightness before God: his providence will manifest injured innocence at last! And happy are they who in all their trials improve God's word as their preservative from evil; and who, assisted by his gracious influence, watch over their heart, their tongue, their feet, cleaving to that which is good, and abhorring that which is evil! But not the strongest saint hath a fund of grace to support himself, without constant supplies from Jesus Christ our living fountain. And a deep sense of our own weakness and insufficiency is the surest way to be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Every saint walks in a slippery path, where many watch for his halting. He ought therefore always to watch and pray that he faint not. Our salvation is by faith, and is of infinite love from first to last. In vain Satan rages against those who put all their trust in God. No luxurious, proud, active, crafty, or cruel devourers shall ever pluck them out of his hand. Trials are God's sword and hand, by which he corrects his people, or manages, in his providence, as is best. And how wretched are the wicked in all affluence and wealth, as these things without God become their everlasting misery! But happy are they who through their much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God! Happy they whose transient views of God, and imperfect likeness to him, issue at last in endless and immediate vision of him, and in perfect conformity to his image!

PSALM XVIII. Ver. 3. Mine enemies. Whose enemies? A somewhat similar psalm is said to have been spoken by David on his deliverance from all his enemies and from Saul; and the day was most appropriate for celebrating, not typically, but prophetically, the glorious deliverance of Messiah. For that David does not speak in his own person is obvious from comparing Ro. 15. 8 with head of the heathen: a people whom I have not known shall serve me.

44 As soon as they hear[7] of me, they shall obey me: the strangers[8] shall submit[9] themselves unto me.

45 The strangers shall fade away, and [9]be afraid out of their close places.[1]

46 The [r]LORD liveth; and [s]blessed be my rock; and let the God of my salvation be exalted.

47 It is God that avengeth me,[2] and [t]subdueth the people under me.

48 He delivereth me from mine enemies; yea,[u] thou liftest me up above those that rise up against me: thou hast delivered me from the violent man.[3]

49 Therefore[v] will I give thanks unto thee, O LORD, among the heathen, and sing praises unto thy name.

50 Great[w] deliverance giveth he to his [v]king; and showeth mercy to his [x]anointed, to David, and to his seed[4] for evermore.

PSALM XIX.

1 The creatures show God's glory. 7 The excellency of the divine law. 12 David prayeth for God's grace.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

THE heavens [a]declare the glory of God; and the firmament[1] showeth his handy-work.

2 Day[b] unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge.

3 There is [c]no speech nor language[2] where their voice is not heard.[3]

4 Their[d] line[4] is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun;

5 Which is [e]as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.

6 His[g] going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

7 The [h]law[5] of the LORD is perfect, [6]converting the soul: [i]the testimony of the LORD is sure, making wise the simple.

8 The [j]statutes of the LORD are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the LORD is [k]pure, enlightening the eyes.

9 The fear of the LORD [l]is clean, enduring for ever:[7] the judgments of the LORD are [m]true[8] and righteous altogether.

10 More[o] to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold; [p]sweeter also than honey, and the honey-comb.[9]

11 Moreover by them is thy servant [q]warned: and in keeping of them there is [r]great reward.

12 Who[s] can understand his errors? [1]cleanse thou me from secret[2] faults.

13 Keep[t] back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great[3] transgression.

14 Let[u] the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O LORD, my strength,[4] and my [v]redeemer.

ver. 49, and from considering the character the speaker gives of himself, ver. 20, 23, 24, a character that David could never appropriate to himself, but which in every feature so perfectly accords with the character of the Christ. C.

Ver. 31. Who is God save the LORD? From these words it follows that whosoever is called LORD (JEHOVAH) is God. But Christ is so called, Jn. 12. 41, compare with Is. 6. 1. See also He. 1. 10, compare with Ps. 102. 25. Therefore being called JEHOVAH he is God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How close and marvellous is the connection between Christ and his people, that the same relations of God, the same words and works of God, and exercises towards God, will apply to both! Let Jesus then be at once my Saviour, my Forerunner, and my Pattern. Pleasant and profitable is God to the souls that find him. He is their ALL and IN ALL! Sure is their help in time of need who trust in and love him! though God may take the most awful manner to answer the prayers of his people in delivering them out of their distress, and exalting them to safety and joy. Those deliverances demand the most solemn and hearty thanksgivings, which are from great and imminent danger, and in exact answer to earnest prayers, and which are granted by wonderful appearances, in the midst of great difficulties, and have great and lasting good fruits. Happy are they who, interested in Jesus' righteousness, have their corruptions subdued by his grace, and are by his Spirit enabled to conquer every spiritual foe! God fights for them! who can be against them! What knowledge and skill—what strength—what activity—what courage—what protection—what success and victory—what a high throne—is allotted them by the living, the faithful, the powerful, and unparalleled God of their salvation! By firm faith may such expect the Lord's perfecting all that grace and glory which concerns them.

PSALM XIX. Ver. 1. In this beautiful psalm natural and revealed religion are sketched in outline. It is shown that in each God, as a God of wisdom, power, and holiness, is placed before the mind of man. The works of nature as seen during the day, the glories of the starry skies in the night season, proclaim to men of every nation and language the being and attributes of the Creator. The law of the Lord, recorded in his Word—perfect, pure, holy, sanctifying in its influence, affords a still clearer and deeper insight into the character and government of Jehovah than the contemplation of his works. P.

Ver. 2. As the spiritual eye 'seeth him that is invisible,' Mat. 11. 27, so the spiritual ear heareth that which is inaudible. So says the dying believer,

'I see a hand you cannot see, that beckons me away;
I hear a voice you cannot hear, that says, I must not stay.'—C.

Ver. 4. Their line, &c. These words are applied to the preaching of the apostles (Ro. 10. 18); whose silent writings are now speaking with the power of the Spirit to all ends of the earth. C.

Ver. 6. This is literally fulfilled in the natural heavens, as the light and heat of the sun alternately reach the poles.—Note, So grace visits the darkest and the coldest heart. Even so, Lord, visit ours. C.

Ver. 13. Upright . . . innocent. To none can the character of upright and innocent truly apply but to Christ, all others have reason to be ashamed and repent in dust and ashes.—Great transgression. From all our sins which he bore in his own body on the tree, 1 Pe. 2. 24. One sin of his own would have invalidated his sacrifice. But he knew no sin—therefore sinners were saved, He. 9. 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How inexcusable are atheists and idolaters, when the ever-obvious heavens, the regular succession of nights and days, and the enlightening and warming sun, teach men so much of God! But much more they who enjoy the heavens, the firmament of the gospel-church, all illuminated by Jesus Christ the Sun of Righteousness, and his oracles, ordinances, and ministers, if they offend! Happy those hearts in which his word, so pure, so perfect, so true, so righteous, so precious, and pleasant, is hid: and in which its enlightening, instructing, converting, comforting, nourishing, and healing influence is felt! The more we look into this blessed glass, the more cause we shall see of deep humiliation before God, on account of the number and strength of our secret corruptions. But terrible are presumptuous sins—sins done against light and love! and yet the best need to watch and pray against them. Great then is the mercy that all our salvation from sin, and all the acceptance of our holy services, is in Christ the beloved and his infinitely valuable righteousness.

PSALM XX. Ver. 1. God of Jacob. This title implies: 1. The God of him that values his birthright. 2. Of the exile trusting in God. 3. Of the industrious servant. 4. Kind husband and parent. 5. The wrestler in prayer. All which meet conspicuously in Jacob. C.

Ver. 9. Evidently a prayer to Christ the King and Head of his church, and whom men are bound to honour even as they honour the Father, Jn. 5. 23. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Neither piety nor power can exempt men from sore troubles. All then have need for prayer; and even the greatest need this assistance from the meanest. But what an almighty helper, a kind accepter, and a liberal bestower is God in Christ, as the God of his people! Such as make him the object of their trust shall soon have reason to make him the ground of their praise. An assured trust in him is the best way to preferment and establishment. They who renounce all their confidences, and persevere in prayer to him, shall abide in his love, and be assured of his protection.

PSALM XXI. Ver. 3. Pure gold, the emblem of kingly power over the world, and in the church, that 'crown of righteousness' which Jesus won, and which through his grace believers receive, 2 Ti. 4. 8. C.

Ver. 8. At this point the address of the church is generally represented as turning directly to Messiah the Son of God. But there appears no good reason for this supposed change, which neither the grammar of the passage nor parallel scriptures require. Does it not rather appear an address to the Father who has seated, at his right hand, his beloved Son until he shall have put all things under his feet, and destroyed even the last of his enemies? 1 Co. 15. 24–28. C.

Ver. 11. Mischievous device. The mischievous devices both of Jews and Gentiles against the 'mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ,' Col. 2. 2. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Chiefly, my soul, behold here the everlasting honours, joys, happiness, and blissful influences of thy Redeemer! Behold how fixed is his kingdom and dignity in the infinite, everlasting, and unchangeable wisdom, power, mercy, equity, goodness, and truth of the Most High! Behold the inexpressible judgment which kindles upon and destroys his Jewish—his heathen—his antichristian—and other incorrigible enemies! But rejoice, my soul, in this God thy Saviour. Rejoice at the glory with which he is crowned—at the life granted to and lodged in him; and in his

PSALM XX.

1 The church blesseth the king in his exploits. 7 Her confidence in God's succour.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

THE LORD[a] hear thee in the day of trouble;[1] the [b]name of the God of Jacob defend thee.[2]

2 Send thee help[3] from [c]the sanctuary, and strengthen thee[4] out of Zion.

3 Remember all thy offerings, and [d]accept thy burnt-sacrifice. Selah.[5]

4 Grant[e] thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel.

5 We will [f]rejoice in thy salvation, and [h]in the name of our God we will set up our banners: the LORD fulfil all thy petitions.

6 Now know I that [i]the LORD saveth his anointed: he will hear him from his holy heaven[6] with the saving strength of his right hand.[7]

7 Some[j] trust in chariots, and some in horses: but we will [k]remember the name[8] of the LORD our God.

8 They [l]are brought down and fallen: but we are risen, and stand upright.

9 Save,[n] LORD: let the king hear us when we call.

PSALM XXI.

1 A thanksgiving for victory. 7 Confidence of further success.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

THE king[a] shall joy in thy strength,[1] O LORD; and [b]in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice![2]

2 Thou[c] hast given him his heart's desire, and hast not withholden the request of his lips. Selah.[3]

3 For[d] thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness: thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head.[4]

4 He[e] asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever.[f]

5 His[g] glory is great in thy salvation: honour and majesty hast thou laid upon him.

6 For[h] thou hast made him most blessed[i] for ever: thou hast [j]made him exceeding glad with thy countenance.

7 For[k] the king trusteth in the LORD; and through the mercy of the most High he shall not be moved.

8 Thine[l] hand shall find out all thine enemies; thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee.

9 Thou[m] shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the LORD shall swallow them up in his wrath, and the fire shall devour them.

10 Their[n] fruit shalt thou destroy from the earth, and their seed from among the children of men.

11 For they intended evil against thee: they imagined a mischievous device, [o]which they are not able to perform.

12 Therefore[5] shalt thou make them turn their back,[6] when thou [p]shalt make ready thine arrows upon thy strings against the face of them.

13 Be[q] thou exalted, LORD, in thine own strength: so will we sing and [r]praise thy power.

PSALM XXII.

1 David complaineth in great discouragement. 9 He prayeth in great distress. 22 He praiseth God for mercy shown him.

To the chief musician upon Aijeleth Shahar,[1] A psalm of David.

MY God,[a] my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far from helping [z]me, and from the words of my roaring?

2 O my God, [b]I cry in the day-time, but thou hearest not; and in the night-season, and am not silent.[3]

3 But[c] thou art holy, O thou that [d]inhabitest the praises of Israel.[4]

4 Our [e]fathers trusted in thee: they trusted, and thou didst deliver them.

5 They cried unto thee, and were delivered: they trusted in thee, and were [g]not confounded.

6 But I [h]am a worm,[5] and no man; [i]a reproach of men, and despised of the people.

7 All[j] they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying,

8 He trusted on the LORD[6] that he would deliver him: [k]let him deliver him, [l]seeing he delighted in him.[8]

9 But thou art he that [l]took me out of the womb: [m]thou didst make me hope[9] when I was upon my mother's breasts.

10 I[n] was cast upon thee from the womb: thou art my God from my mother's belly.

11 Be[p] not far from me; for trouble is near; for there is none to help.[1]

12 Many[q] bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round.

13 They[r] gaped upon me with their [z]mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion.

14 I[s] am poured out like water, and all my bones are out of joint:[3] my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels.

15 My[t] strength is dried up like a potsherd; and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws;[4] and [u]thou hast brought me into the dust of death.

16 For [v]dogs have compassed me: the assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: [z]they pierced my hands and my feet.

17 I[y] may tell all my bones: [z]they look and stare upon me.

PSALM XX

a Ps 50.15,91 15. Is 41.8 63.24 58.9.

1 Tim. Is a hymn designed to be used before battle. It was customary on such occasions to offer up special sacrifices at the national sanctuary, and to make special supplications. David composed this beautiful and appropriate psalm as part of the special liturgy. It breathes forth a spirit of earnest piety, of trusting faith, and of hope in ultimate victory, even in the face of a power ful foe.—C.

STONE CARVED WORK IN THE SYNAGOGUE, CAPERNAUM — WHERE CHRIST HEALED PETER'S MOTHER-IN-LAW AND MANY OTHERS. [PSALMS, xxi : 1.]— "The king shall joy in thy strength, O Lord; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!" This first verse of the twenty-first Psalm is accepted as a prophecy relating to the mission of Christ. We give to illustrate this portion of Scripture a piece of stone work in the synagogue at Capernaum. This view was photographed on Wednesday, May 9, 1894. It was with difficulty that we reached the site of this synagogue that originally stood in Capernaum, because of the deep tangled mass of weeds and thorn bushes. The relic we see is supposed to have formed part of the synagogue which was found in Capernaum at the time of our Savior, and in which he delivered many of his discourses. Christ performed more miracles in Capernaum than in any other place. We are, as we stand in the presence of this stone, at least upon ground made sacred by the words and deeds of our Lord.

The latter part of the psalm is arranged for being chanted by two choirs, the one carrying the ark, the other standing at the gates of Zion. ## PSALM XXIII.

David's confidence in God's care and goodness.

A psalm of David.

THE LORD is my [a]shepherd;[1] I [b]shall not want.

2 He[c] maketh me to lie down in green pastures:[2] he leadeth me beside the still waters.[3]

3 He[d] restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

4 Yea, though I walk through the [e]valley of the shadow of death, [f]I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod[4] and thy staff they comfort me.

5 Thou [h]preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest[5] my head with oil;[6] my cup [i]runneth over.

6 Surely [j]goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: [k]and I will dwell in the house of the LORD for ever.[7]

PSALM XXIV.

1 God's sovereignty over the whole world. 3 The citizens of his spiritual kingdom. 7 The solemn entrance of the Lord into his sanctuary.

A psalm of David.

THE earth[a] is the LORD'S, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.[1]

2 For[b] he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods.

3 Who[c] shall ascend into the hill of the LORD? and who shall stand in his holy place?

4 He[d] that hath clean hands,[2] and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully.

5 He shall receive [e]the blessing from the LORD, and [f]righteousness from the God of his salvation.

6 This is [h]the generation of them that seek him, that seek thy face, O Jacob.[3] Selah.

is generally, as history proves, the reward of their sin. And the ruin of the wicked, or those who reject Jesus Christ, is but the reward of their own sin.

PSALM XXII. Ver. 1. Forsaken me. These words, adopted by our Lord in the dark hour of his crucifixion, sufficiently demonstrate that the whole psalm is a prayer of Christ. Forsaken is interpreted by far from helping. God cannot forsake in presence, but he may as to immediate forth-putting of power to deliver. Compare ver.16,18, 22, with Jn. 20. 25, 27; Mat. 27. 35; He. 2.12. C.

Ver. 12. Many bulls. Prophetic language, that it may suit all generations, must be emblematical: for words change, but emblems abide. These bulls, accordingly, are the emblems of aggressive power—the ecclesiastical rulers of the Jews, and the imperial rulers of the Roman empire, by whom Christ was persecuted to the death. C.

Ver. 13. Gaped . . . mouths. The marginal reading is better, and describes the bellowing of the bulls against their victim, well exemplified in the cry of the multitude, 'Away with him, away with him: crucify him, crucify him!' C.

Ver. 16. They pierced my hands and my feet. The translation of this clause has been much disputed. The Hebrew words in our received text will scarcely bear out the present rendering. The word rendered 'they pierced' almost any Hebrew scholar would translate 'as a lion,' and thus Gesenius and Hengstenberg translate it. It is worthy of note that some ancient MSS. have a different reading, slightly changing the final letter of the word, and thus making it signify 'they pierced,' with this reading agree all the ancient versions, and I therefore conclude that it is the true reading. It is possible that some fanatical Jew, finding that this passage was applied by Christians to our Lord, changed the original form of the word, and thus attempted to corrupt the text and obscure the meaning. P.

Ver. 21. Unicorns. There is no real unicorn known in nature, except the rhinoceros; the unicorn of heraldry is a creature of imagination. The meaning is well explained in a beautiful and consolatory proverb, 'Man's extremity is God's opportunity.' C.

Ver. 26. Your heart, &c. Your heart, your affections, being 'set upon things which are above,' Col. 3. 3. Christ, who is eternal life with the Father, 1 Jn. 1. 2, will be your life, Col. 3. 4, and give you eternal life, Jn. 10. 28. C.

Ver. 29. Fat upon earth, &c. Abundance of food produces forgetfulness of God, Is. 5. 12. To remedy this evil tendency, the Father, even by the example of the Son, always united worship with eating. So likewise does the apostolic injunction, 1 Co. 10. 31. The same principle is still more specially developed in the holy feast of the Lord's supper, 1 Co. 10. 16; 11. 28. C.

Ver. 30. A seed. Not seeds, as of many, but a seed: the one seed, they that are born of water, even of the Spirit, Jn. 3. 5; 1 Pe. 1. 23. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How fearful is the nature of sin, which drew such tremendous desertion and pain upon God's only begotten Son, when he came to the world! With the most holy resignation ought God's hidings and frowns to be endured, when they are sanctified by Jesus Christ's bearing them as our forerunner; and should be attended with kind thoughts of God, trust in him, and fervent prayers for deliverance. What earnest supplications are occasioned by a deep sense of need! But it is happy, in great distress, to have our blessed relation to God, and our own and others' experience of former deliverances, to encourage us to hope and wait for what we now need. What sinners before the Lord exceedingly were these dogs, these bulls, these wicked men, who with devils thus raged against the great God our Saviour! But, oh! what a debt of love and of praise the redeemed owe to their Lord, who so bare their sins, their griefs! And what ought they not cheerfully to suffer for his sake! What tidings—what supplies—what conquests—what continuance—what glories of grace—issue from the sufferings of our great IMMANUEL! Himself opens the triumphant song, and exhibits his experience for the comfort of his distressed brethren; and with joy declares his adherence to all his covenant engagements. Sweet is the entertainment of his flesh and blood—yea, of all the fulness of God which he has prepared for the poor, the afflicted, and meek! Precious and lasting is their life who by faith feed upon him! He goes forth persuading the nations high and low, to the obedience of faith. Let then his cause be oppressed as it may, in every age it will prove triumphant.

PSALM XXIII. Ver. 1. This is an exquisite spiritual pastoral, and is a characteristic ode of the shepherd-king. The imagery, taken from shepherd life, is graphic and appropriate. The Good Shepherd leading his flock to the best pastures, to the brink of the quiet waters, along safe paths. His watchful care dispels all idea of fear; and permanent peace is finally secured. P.

Ver. 3. There are no paths of righteousness but those trodden by Christ, Ro. 3. 10; 5. 17, 19; therefore the speaker is Christ, for he walked in righteousness. C.

REFLECTIONS.—O the advantages, the pleasures, of experimental godliness! God, whose knowledge and care are infinite—God, who is ALL and giveth all—is his people's Shepherd! What can they then want when all the fulness of God is opened for their supply! He makes them to rest and feed in the pastures of his ordinances and promises; and leads them, for their refreshment, to the still waters of his gospel truth, gracious influence, redeeming blood, and everlasting love. He restores their souls when under

PSALM XXV.

1 David's confidence in prayer. 7 He prayeth for remission of sins, 16 and for help in affliction.

A psalm of David.[1]

UNTO thee,[a] O LORD, do I lift up my soul.

2 O my God, I [b]trust in thee: let me not be ashamed; let not mine enemies [c]triumph over me.

3 Yea, [d]let none that wait on thee be ashamed: let them be ashamed which transgress without cause.

4 Show[e] me thy ways, O LORD; teach me thy paths.

5 Lead[g] me in thy truth, and teach me: for thou art the God of my salvation;[2] on thee do I wait all the day.[3]

6 Remember,[h] O LORD, thy tender mercies[4] and thy loving-kindnesses; for they have been ever of old.

7 Remember[i] not the [j]sins of my youth, nor my transgressions:[5] according[k] to thy mercy remember thou me for thy goodness' sake, O LORD.

8 Good[l] and upright is the LORD: therefore will he teach sinners in the way.[6]

9 The[n] meek will he [o]guide in judgment; and the meek will he teach his way.

10 All[p] the paths of the LORD are mercy and truth unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies.

11 For[q] thy name's sake, O LORD, pardon mine iniquity;[7] for [r]it is great.[8]

PSALM XXV.

A.M. cir. 2956.

1 This psalm, like Ps. xxxiv. cxix. and several others, is acrostic in its plan. Each letter of the Hebrew alphabet conventionally begins a verse. The sixth letter is omitted, but the eighteenth is repeated, and thus the number of verses corresponds exactly with the number of the alphabet.—P.

A psalm of David.

2 Examine[c] me, O LORD, and prove me; try my reins and my heart.

4 I[g] have not sat with vain persons, neither will I go in with dissemblers.

5 I[h] have hated the congregation of evil-doers and will not sit with the wicked.

6 I[i] will wash mine hands in [1]innocency: so will I compass thine altar, O LORD;

7 That[k] I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works.

8 LORD,[l] I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place [2]where thine honour dwelleth.[3]

9 Gather not[4] my soul with sinners, nor my life with bloody men;[5]

10 In[m] whose hands is mischief, and their right hand is full of[6] bribes.

disease or decay, and, moved by his own blessed grace, leads them in Jesus and his word as their way, and enables them to perfect holiness in his fear. Amidst all the pains and the fears of death, his gracious presence, his drawing and sealing influence, and his supporting promises, are their sufficient encouragement. Amidst their unnumbered enemies of lusts, of devils, and of men, not only necessaries, but even abundant comforts, are allowed them. The mercy and goodness of God, in streams of spiritual and temporal blessings, attend the faithful, till at last they are for ever filled with all the fulness of God in his heavenly temple.

PSALM XXIV. Ver. 1. Earth is the Lord's. It is his by right of creation, Ju. 1. 3: it is his by right of redemption, Ep. 1. 14: it is his by right of final victory, 1 Co. 15. 26, of which this psalm is a prophetic celebration. C.

Ver. 3. This is an inquiry after him who has been described, Ps. 7. 6, an abiding priest to make intercession in the holy place. —

Ver. 4. Here are two positive and two negative characteristics that never belonged to any son of man but Christ. This psalm is therefore a prophetic description of Christ. C.

Ver. 6. This is the generation, that is, they who appear at his right hand to inherit the blessing, and receive the gift of righteousness, when the earth becomes the Lord's by final victory, 2 Co. 15. 26, and by a new creation, 2 Pe. 3. 13.—O Jacob. Jacob, being interpreted, signifies supplanter; and he supplanted profane Esau by purchasing the blessing. As such, the name is an appropriate title of Christ, who purchased the heirship of all things at the cost of his own blood, 2 Co. 6. 20; 7. 23.—Selah. See note on Ps. 3. 2. C.

Ver. 7. Everlasting doors. This can be no allusion to either tabernacle or temple; for David never imagined their gates or doors to be everlasting. The everlasting gates and doors are those of righteousness, Ps. 118. 19, by which Christ has entered into the heavens, He. 4. 14; 9. 11, 12, 24. C.

Ver. 9. The gates and doors are twice summoned, because Christ has two entrances into glory; one after his resurrection, when he entered alone, 'mighty in battle,' ver. 8; the other after the resurrection of his saints, when he enters with them and his angels, 'Lord of hosts,' Mat. 26. 27. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How great is Christ, who is Lord of all! Surely it is proper that all persons should praise and serve him; and that all things should be received as from his hand and used to his honour. But what change of state and nature—what holiness in heart and life—is necessary to constitute us true members of his church on earth, or inhabitants of his heaven above! There is great need of serious self-examination, lest he at last reject us; for without holiness no man shall see the Lord. But however sincere our hearts, blameless our lives, or fervent our prayers, not these, but a living faith in the Lord Jesus, must found our title to eternal felicity. O how transcendently glorious is Jesus' entrance into manhood—his exaltation to heaven—and his entrance into men's hearts and assemblies on earth! And, in fine, his solemn return to his celestial mansions, attended by all the ransomed millions, after the last judgment!

PSALM XXV. Ver. 2 Let not mine enemies triumph over me. He that would discover the speaker in this psalm requires, as in other cases, to search the Scriptures, and compare spiritual

THE LORD is [a]my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear?[1] the [b]LORD is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?

3 Though[e] an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident.

4 One[g] thing have I desired of the LORD, that will I [h]seek after; [i]that I may dwell in the house of the LORD all the days of my life, to behold the beauty[3] of the LORD, and to inquire in his temple.[4]

5 For[j] in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion: in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me up [k]upon a rock.

6 And[l] now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me: [m]therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices of joy;[5] I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the LORD.[6] with spiritual. Accordingly let him prayerfully and candidly consult Ps. 40. 11, and compare the same with Ps. 25. 7–11, and it must be confessed they are alike. Then let him turn to He. 10. 5, and compare the same with Ps. 40. 6–8, and he will find that he who confesses his iniquities is no other than Christ: no other than he who, though he 'knew no sin,' yet 'bore all our sins in his own body,' yea, upon whom 'the Lord laid the iniquities of us all.' C.

Ver. 6. Rather 'for they are eternal.' The psalmist's knowledge of God's nature and attributes, and the experience of his wondrous mercy, prompt him to this grateful acknowledgment. P.

Ver. 14. Secret—'the mystery hid from ages and generations, but now made manifest to the saints; Christ in them: the hope of glory,' Col. 1. 26, 27. Covenant—that new covenant promised, He. 8. 6–13; 10. 16, 17, and sealed by the mediation of Christ, He. 9. 15–17. C.

Ver. 21. Integrity and uprightness. No sinner could compose, adopt, or utter this prayer; for the fact of being a sinner implies the want of both these qualities. The sinner rests his plea upon the mercy of God, and not upon his own merits; but Christ addresses the Father as one who magnified the law and made it honourable. C.

REFLECTIONS.—An interest in God and his love is the surest protection from shame and danger; and the more our hearts and desires are weaned from earthly vanities, and set upon God and things above, we are the more sure that our hopes shall not be disappointed. He that believeth shall not be ashamed. God never fails them that seek him. But the short-lived triumphs of obstinate transgressors shall issue in everlasting misery and confusion. When we pray for ourselves we must never forget our brethren. Being by nature blind and impotent, our whole direction in, and strength for, duty must come from God. And none who wait on him as the God of their salvation shall ever wait in vain. Hopes fixed on his everlasting love can never be disappointed: and what others have found an infallible support we may boldly depend upon. Sins of youth, though pardoned by God, ought to be remembered by us for our humiliation. And our only hope of God's favour must be founded on a living faith in Jesus' blood. All true knowledge of God and his ways, and wisdom to walk therein, spring from his own mercy and faithfulness. Sense of sin must drive us to implore the forgiveness and destruction of it: but no sin, however great, ought to render us desperate. God, by his infinite power and grace, can pardon the greatest as well as the least. And the more sin God forgives to us, the more we are obliged to love, fear, and serve him: and the more we serve him, the greater shall be our happiness in life and intimacy with him. Whatever God does, however afflicting, shall work together for our good. Though God and men should concur to entangle us in nets of trouble, and Satan distress our minds with his accusations, the fruit of all is not to destroy us but to purge away our sin. But our kindliest resignation to afflictions must be attended with prayer for the removal of them. Though we must love our enemies, we must pray against their wickedness. And while we earnestly study the utmost uprightness in our practice, the church in general, and every member thereof, ought to share in our fervent requests.

PSALM XXVI. Ver. 1. Mine integrity. No conscious sinner ever called for judgment, but for mercy; none ever asserted integrity, being guilty of sin. This is therefore a prayer of Christ, who, though he bore our sins, knew no sin; and who, on behalf of his redeemed members, pleads his perfect righteousness. C.

Ver. 3. Who can boldly say unto God, I have walked in thy truth—not merely man's truth, but God's truth? Adam did not so walk; Eve did not so walk; Aaron did not so walk; David did not so walk, the apostles did not so walk. All these, as their histories testify, came short of the glory of God. Christ alone so walked, he alone could so affirm.—Note, How blessed are believers, to whom the promises of mercy, pardon, and salvation are all confirmed by Him who is the truth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While here we behold Jesus Christ in a figure, as holy, harmless, undefiled, and separated from sinners, and wash our heart and hands in his blood and grace, let us observe how comfortable under calumny it is to possess conscious innocence. They who trust in God are kept by his mighty power through faith unto salvation; and the faith or sense of Jesus' love, and a due regard to his word, will tend to restrain from sin. But nothing is more dangerous to souls than fellowship with the ungodly. To sit long amidst light, vain, and unprofitable discourse, perhaps more deadens the heart than that which is notoriously profane. No man appears really gracious who does not study to avoid the company of the wicked. No man rightly approaches God's ordinances but in the way of washing his heart and life in the sin expiating and subduing fountain of Jesus' blood and Spirit. None can love God without loving his ordinances, and counting his service perfect freedom, and his works of grace inexpressibly marvellous. However joyous the assemblies of sinners may be now, it will be infinitely dreadful to be gathered with them in death or in the last judgment. And even those who walk in their uprightness, must before God stand on the foundation of Jesus' redeeming blood and infinite mercy; and all their steadfastness in Christ or his way must be thankfully ascribed to their faith.

PSALM XXVII. Ver. 2. My foes came upon me to eat up my flesh. When Satan, who has the power of death, He. 2. 14, and the high-priest, who had the power of indictment, and Pilate, who had the power of condemnation, came against me, to deliver me up to the devouring grave. C.

Ver. 3. David never escaped from trouble; but Christ is gone into the heavens, waiting till all his enemies be made his footstool. C.

Ver. 10. It is not to be overlooked that, after the commencement of our Lord's ministry, Joseph, his reputed father, is not mentioned, being most probably dead: and when his mother and brethren endeavoured to approach him, Mat. 12. 46; Mar. 3. 32–35; Lu. 8. 19–21, he defines his nearest and dearest relatives to be 'those who hear the word of God, and do it.' Now that literally, and also in this spiritual sense, Christ was forsaken of all earthly relations, is evident from the history of his malicious trial and barbarous crucifixion, Mat. 26. 56; Jn. 16. 32. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they to whom Jesus Christ is a blessed instructor, saviour, strengthener, and quickener! He is at once the source, the price, the means, the matter, and the bestower of all our spiritual and eternal blessings. Where faith in him, through his word, keeps strong and steady, no enemies or dangers can make us either to fear or faint. To live near him, and to behold his and his Father's glory in ordinances here, and in heaven above, is the pleasure, the protection, the honour of a saint, and the matter of his thankful praise. Nothing can be dearer to his heart than divine encouragements to intimate and gracious fellowship with God. A sense of his favour is the greatest help and comfort under manifold troubles and wants. His instructions direct to safe and honourable walking amidst the most malignant enemies. And though all men should forsake us, or even hate us, it is enough if he love and support us. Faith in his promises and characters will keep us from fainting amidst raging lusts, powerful temptations and distresses, and enemies unnumbered. And the more of his goodness we experience in waiting for him, the more we should encourage others to patient expectations of his grace.

PSALM XXVIII. Ver. 2. The construction of these prayers, which are all in the speaker's own name, sufficiently testify to him who knows the Scriptures, Job 24. 13–16; 16. 23, 26, that this is a psalm, not of a sinner asking in Christ's name, but of Christ asking in his own right. C.

Ver. 4. Such prayers throughout the Psalms have often afforded matter of scorn or reproach to the infidel, and called forth timid and ignorant apologies from believers. The answer to all such to me, I become like them that go down into the pit.[2]

2 Hear[d] the voice of my supplications, when I cry unto thee, when I [e]lift up my hands toward thy holy oracle.[3]

3 Draw[g] me not away with the wicked, and with the workers of iniquity, [h]which speak peace to their neighbours, but mischief is in their hearts.

4 Give[i] them according to their deeds, and according to the wickedness of their endeavours: give them after the work of their hands; render to them their desert.

5 Because[j] they regard not the works of the LORD, nor the operation of his hands,[4] he shall destroy them, and not build them up.

6 Blessed[k] be the LORD, because he hath heard the voice of my supplications.

7 The[l] LORD is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped: therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise him.

8 The LORD is their[5] strength,[6] and he is the saving strength[7] of his [n]anointed.

9 Save[o] thy people, and bless thine inheritance: feed[8] them also, and lift them up for ever.

PSALM XXIX.

1 David exhorteth princes to give glory to God, 3 by reason of his power, 11 and protection of his people.

A psalm of David.

GIVE unto[a] the LORD, O ye mighty,[1] give unto the LORD glory and strength.

2 Give unto the LORD the glory due unto his name:[2] worship [b]the LORD in the beauty[3] of holiness.

3 The [c]voice of the LORD is upon the waters: the God of glory thundereth: the LORD is upon many[4] waters.[5]

4 The voice of the LORD is powerful;[6] the voice of the LORD is full of majesty.[7]

5 The voice of the LORD breaketh the cedars; yea, the LORD breaketh the cedars of Lebanon.

6 He maketh them also to skip like a calf; Lebanon[d] and [e]Sirion like a young unicorn.

7 The voice of the LORD divideth[8] the [g]flames of fire.

8 The voice of the LORD [h]shaketh the wilderness; the LORD shaketh the wilderness of Kadesh.

9 The voice of the LORD maketh the [g]hinds to calve, and discovereth the forests:[1] and [j]in his temple doth every one speak of his glory.[2]

10 The LORD [k]sitteth upon the flood; [l]yea, the LORD sitteth King for ever.

11 The[n] LORD will give strength unto his people; [o]the LORD will bless his people with peace.

PSALM XXX.

1 David praiseth God for his deliverance. 4 He exhorteth others to praise him by the example of God's dealing with him.

A psalm and song at the [a]dedication of the house of David.

I WILL[b] extol thee, O LORD; for thou hast lifted me up, and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me.[1]

2 O[c] LORD my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me.

3 O[d] LORD, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave;[2] thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit.

4 Sing[e] unto the LORD, O ye saints of his, and give thanks at the remembrance[3] of his holiness.

5 For[g] his anger endureth but a moment;[4] in his favour is life: weeping may endure for a night,[5] but joy[6] cometh in the morning.

6 And[h] in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

7 LORD,[i] by thy favour thou hast made my mountain to stand strong:[7] thou [j]didst hide thy face, and I was troubled.

8 I[k] cried to thee, O LORD; and unto the LORD I made supplication.

9 What[l] profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? shall the dust praise thee? shall it declare thy truth?

10 Hear,[n] O LORD, and have mercy upon me: LORD, be thou my helper.

11 Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing: thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness;

12 To the end that [o]my glory[8] may sing praise to thee, and not be silent. [p]O LORD my God, I will give thanks unto thee for ever.

5 It appears that on this occasion the psalmist's religious fervour was awakened by one of those terrible storms which sometimes visit the shores of Palestine. His description of it is most graphic. It first appears upon the sea, where its roar is heard as it sweeps along from the west. It approaches the land. The thunder-clouds ascend the lofty sides of Lebanon, and the lightning and tempest rend the great cedar forests. It passes on eastward to the wilderness of Kadesh, where its fury is at length exhausted.—P.

1 The psalmist passes now from the almost despairing cry to the joyful thanksgiving. In the calm after the storm he sees in quiet retrospect the working of God's ways in all that before had been perplexing to his faith, and in his gratitude he feels his heart warmed to warn others who are still in sufferings and pours forth his experience as a lesson of trust to them, and an indication of God's mode of dealing with mankind.—P.

cavils is easy—this is that very thing which God will do—and which therefore the believer, even Christ in the days of his flesh, might justly pray him to do. C.——This is a prayer for justice. It is surely right to seek it and to pray for it. The psalmist desires that by the execution of a righteous judgment the wicked may be restrained from evil, and God's people saved from persecution. There is no evidence here of malice or vindictiveness. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Deep distress should awaken strong cries to God. Not the Jewish holy of holies, but Christ, is our oracle, in which dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; and through him our prayers are sure to speed. What a burden to exercised saints are sin and sinners while they live in this world! Seducing sinners are always busy; and they who would avoid their ruin must shun their ways. But great are the thankful praises which saints owe to their God for the mercies which have been granted in answer to their prayer, and which faith assures them he will grant. And what almighty power and grace Jesus Christ, and every one of his true members, have engaged on their side to prevent their miscarriage! Clusters of well-connected and everlasting blessings are secured by God for his people. And great should be the joy they have in, and care for, one another's spiritual and eternal welfare.

PSALM XXIX. Ver. 2. Beauty of holiness. A call to worship either in the beauty conferred by holiness, that is, by separation from worldly defilement, Ja. 1. 27; Ro. 12. 2, and dedication of body and spirit to God, Ro. 12. 1; or to worship him amidst the emblematic beauties of the holy place, in a ritual every jot of which was of divine appointment. C.

Ver. 3. Voice. Any voice in nature that God employs to manifest his power, may truly be called his, because all creation and its laws are his—a mere emanation of his will, sustained by the energies of eternal power. C.

Ver. 9. The worship and temple here are the same as in ver. 2; and the reference seems to be to the influence of storms, irresistibly to lead man to the only refuge of a weak creature—the bended knee, the earnest cry, the throne of grace, the arm of the Almighty. C.——By the 'temple' is here probably meant the world, which is God's habitation. Everything in it declares the glory of his wisdom and power. P.

Ver. 11. The Lord will bless his people with peace. Life at best is a variable climate, and visited by many storms. Still the man justified by faith enjoys peace of conscience, and when the storms of life are over, all will be calm in heaven. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how shameful it is that we should need repeated calls to the solemn worship and service of God; and that great men are but seldom shining examples of devotion! Formal ceremony of words is too often the whole of our worship, which is neither performed in Jesus' holy name, nor in beautiful holiness of heart. But infinitely great is the glory of JEHOVAH! His voice in thunder, in stormy tempests, is not more awful and effective than his voice in his word is on my heart, and hath been, or shall be, in the gospel church. There he speaks to multitudes numerous as the waters; he awakens and seeks to convert the sinner, humble the proud, and draw the obstin

PSALM XXXI.

1 David showing his confidence in God craveth his help. 7 He rejoiceth in God's mercy. 9 He prayeth in his calamity. 19 He praiseth God for his goodness.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

IN thee,[a] O LORD, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed: [b]deliver me in thy righteousness.[1]

2 Bow[c] down thine ear to me; deliver me speedily: be thou my strong rock,[2] for an house of defence to save me.

3 For thou art my rock and my fortress; therefore[d] for thy name's sake, lead me, and guide me.

4 Pull me [e]out of the net that they have laid privily for me: for thou art my strength.

5 Into[g] thine hand I commit my spirit:[3] thou hast redeemed[4] me, O LORD [h]God of truth.

6 I[i] have hated them that regard lying vanities: but I trust in the LORD.

7 I[j] will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy: for thou hast [k]considered my trouble; [l]thou hast known my soul in adversities;

8 And[m] hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou hast set my feet in a large room.

9 Have[o] mercy upon me, O LORD, for I am in trouble: mine eye is consumed with grief, yea, my soul and my belly.

10 For my life is spent with grief, and my years with sighing:[5] my strength faileth because of mine iniquity,[6] and my bones are consumed.

11 I[p] was a reproach among all mine enemies, but especially among my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did see me without fled from me.[7]

12 I[q] am forgotten as a dead man out of mind; I am like a broken vessel.[8]

13 For I have heard the [r]slander of many: [s]fear was on every side: while they took counsel together against me, they devised to take away my life.

14 But[t] I trusted in thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my God.

15 My[u] times are in thy hand: [v]deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me.

16 Make[x] thy face to shine upon thy servant: [y]save me for thy mercies' sake.

17 Let[z] me not be ashamed,[9] O LORD; for I have called upon thee: [a]let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be silent in the grave.[1]

18 Let[b] the lying lips be put to silence; which speak grievous things[2] proudly[c] and contemptuously against the righteous.

19 Oh[d] how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee; which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men!

20 Thou[e] shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues.

21 Blessed be the LORD; [g]for he hath showed me his marvellous kindness in a strong[3] city.[4]

22 For I said [h]in my haste,[5] I am cut off from before thine eyes: [i]nevertheless thou heardest the voice of my supplications when I cried unto thee.

23 O[j] love the LORD, all ye his saints: for the LORD [k]preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer.

24 Be[l] of good courage, and he shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the LORD.

1 The tenderness and deep pathos breathed forth in the beautiful language of this psalm have led some to attribute it to Jeremiah. ate, fast rooted as the mountains, dart light and love into their heart, and bring forth many sons and daughters to glory, for the advancement of his own honour. He strengthens them against every danger and enemy, and blesses them with that peace which passeth all understanding.

PSALM XXX. Ver. 5. It was early in the morning 'as it began to dawn,' that the resurrection of Jesus was discovered, Mat. 28. 1; and then did the late weepers of the night run 'with fear and great joy,' Mat. 28. 8, to communicate the blessed news. C.

Ver. 7. Didst hide thy face, &c. Jesus, the Man of Sorrows, realized this sad description: 'Now is my soul troubled: and what shall I say?' See also Mat. 26. 38. And hear of the bidings of his Father's face, when he exclaims, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' Mat. 27. 46. C.

Ver. 9. The meaning of this verse is:—'What advantage would it be to God's kingdom on earth if I should die? Could my lifeless body—my mouldering remains—advance his cause? Could the dust of the tomb declare the truth of God to mankind?' It is in this bold form that the psalmist pleads with his God. P.

REFLECTIONS.—To what plagues and sickness the best of saints are by sin obnoxious in this world! But the prayer of faith is always availing under every trouble. And there is great ground of praise and thanksgiving in every deliverance which comes through Jesus Christ. How delightful to saints is God's infinite and sanctifying holiness! His favours are greatly beneficial: and short-lived, but preciously fruitful, are his frowns and his people's griefs. Fellowship with him on earth, and chiefly in heaven, turns their mourning into joys unspeakable and full of glory. Outward prosperity, or even ravishing frames of spiritual joy, quickly occasion security and pride; and become means of casting us down into the depths of desertion and trouble. There is great need then to be always humble and watchful amidst smiles of Providence, and to believe and pray amidst depths of distress. And it is not our own advantages, but the services we can render to God on earth, that should make us desire to live! Quickly God changes the lot and frame of his people, and fills their lips with his praise. And it is delightful when high songs of redeeming love are remarkably begun on earth.

PSALM XXXI. Ver. 6. I have hated, &c. Could Christ hate? Does God hate? See, for answer, Ps. lv. But, as amongst men, there is a most unholy love, so likewise is there a most unholy hatred: but this cannot gainsay there being in God and his Christ a holy love to what is good, and as holy a hatred of what is evil. C.

Ver. 13. There is not upon record such a remarkable illustration of the deep depravity of the human heart, as the continuous stream of slander that it poured out upon the spotless Lamb of God—'Friend of publicans and sinners,' wine-bibber, glutton, madman, devil-possessed, devil aided, Sabbath breaker, seditious rebel against Cæsar, impious blasphemer against God, formed the staple of those calumnies that pursued him through life and finally succeeded in conducting him to the cross. C.

Ver. 15. My times are in thy hand. Everything relating to the manifestation of the Son lies in the hand of the Father. He sends him forth in the 'fulness of the times,' Ga. 4. 4: and the 'times and the seasons' of his glorious coming 'the second time without sin unto salvation' it is not for us to know, for 'the Father hath put them in his own power,' Ac. 1. 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Trust in God never issues in confounding disappointments. Both Jesus and JEHOVAH'S righteousness secures to believing supplicants a speedy deliverance out of every trouble and snare; and fervent prayers in Jesus' name insure a quick and comfortable answer. The more we commit ourselves to God, the more we shall experience of his faithfulness in performing his promises: and the more we know of his redeeming power and grace and of his faithfulness, the more fully we shall commit ourselves to his care in life or in death. When God is our portion we may renounce everything else as lying vanities. And his unceasing mercies, his sympathy under trouble, his protection from evils, and his increase of blessings, deserve our constant returns of praise. But though the sins of saints may not damn them, yet they often severely distress them on earth. And through much conformity to Christ, in the enduring of hatred, reproach, and persecution, they must enter into the celestial kingdom of God. The wicked often abandon themselves to the most false and virulent reproach against Jesus Christ and his people: but distress, death, and judgment will quickly silence them. Meanwhile, God's present protection of his people, and the unbounded happiness of heaven, are comforts more than sufficient for the saints to balance all their troubles on earth. Often his great and unexpected mercies shame their unbelief and rebuke their carnal fear. And O what reason the best have to bewail their repeated and deep despondencies under trouble, and to encourage others to avoid them! For when we consider our God and his mercies, alas! how cold is our love, how weak our faith, and languid our hopes.

PSALM XXXII. Ver. 2. The apostle applies this and the foregoing verse (Ro. 4. 6) to explain the blessedness of 'the man to whom the Lord imputes righteousness without works, even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe.' Ro. 3. 22. C.

Ver. 3. When I kept silence. Upon two remarkable occasions Christ kept silence. Before the treacherous and guilty accusers of the woman, Jn. 8. 6-8: and again, before Caiaphas and Pilate, Mat. 26. 63; 27. 14, as it had been prophesied, Is. 53. 7. While he thus kept silence for a little from reproving hypocrites, or instructing and comforting penitents, or from defending himself against false accusations, his bones waxed old—premature old age came on—through the previous and subsequent roaring which, with this brief interval, his sorrows wrung from him all the day long. C.

Ver. 5. That the speaker is Christ will not be readily acknow

PSALM XXXII.

1 Blessedness consisteth in remission of sins. 3 Confession of sins giveth ease to the conscience. 8 God's promises bring joy.

A psalm of David, Maschil.[1]

BLESSED is he whose [a]transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.[2]

2 Blessed is the man unto whom the LORD imputeth not iniquity, and [b]in whose spirit there is no guile.

3 When[c] I kept silence, my bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long.

4 For[d] day and night thy hand was heavy upon me: my moisture is turned into the drought of summer. Selah.

5 I[e] acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. [f]I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the LORD; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah.

6 For[h] this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found:[3] surely in the [i]floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him.

7 Thou[j] art my hiding-place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; [k]thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah.

8 I[l] will instruct thee,[4] and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye.[5]

9 Be[m] ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding; whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee.[6]

10 Many[o] sorrows shall be to the wicked: but[p] he that trusteth in the LORD, mercy shall compass him about.

11 Be[q] glad in the LORD, and rejoice, ye righteous: and shout for joy, all ye that are upright[r] in heart.

PSALM XXXIII.

1 God is to be praised for his goodness, 6 for his power, 12 and for his providence. 20 Confidence is therefore to be placed in God.

REJOICE in[a] the LORD, O ye righteous;[1] for praise [b]is comely for the upright.[2]

2 Praise[c] the LORD with harp: sing unto him with the psaltery and an instrument of ten strings.

3 Sing[d] unto him a new song; play skilfully with a loud noise.

4 For[e] the word of the LORD is right; and all his works are done in truth.

5 He[g] loveth righteousness and judgment: the earth is [h]full of the goodness[3] of the LORD.

6 By[i] the word of the LORD were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.[4]

7 He[j] gathereth the waters of the sea together as an heap:[5] he layeth up the depth in storehouses.

8 Let[k] all the earth fear the LORD: let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him.

9 For[l] he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast.

10 The[n] LORD bringeth[6] the counsel of the heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect.

11 The[o] counsel of the LORD standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations.[7]

12 Blessed[p] is the nation whose God is the LORD; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance.

13 The[q] LORD looketh from heaven; he beholdeth all the sons of men.

14 From[r] the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth.

15 He[s] fashioneth their hearts alike;[8] he [t]considereth all their works.

16 There[u] is no king saved by the multitude of an host: a mighty man is not delivered by much strength.

17 An[v] horse is a vain thing for safety: neither shall he deliver any by his great strength.

18 Behold,[x] the eye of the LORD is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy;

19 To[y] deliver their soul from death, [z]and to keep them alive in famine.

20 [a]Our[9] soul waiteth for the LORD: he is our help and our shield.

And the hope expressed in ver. 22, compared with Rom. 8. 24, 25, shows that the psalm is provided for a glorious state of the church on earth, when faith, and not mere profession, will be completely nationalized. Lord, hasten the time!—C.

ledged by those who will not agree patiently to search the Scriptures. But let those who determine by the grace of God to examine, see Ps. 40. 12, compare Ps. 32. 3, 5, and then ask, who speaks? Ps. 40. 12. To find the answer, compare ver. 6–8 with He. 10. 5–7, and the speaker is found to be Christ. But how could Christ confess sin, seeing he knew no sin? He confessed the sins of his mystical body the church, Ep. 1. 22, 23; 5. 30. Those sins which he bore in his own body on the tree, 1 Pe. 2. 24. Those 'iniquities of us all,' which the Lord laid upon him, Is. 53. 6, 11, 12. Sins and iniquities that were his by onlaying and bearing, as his righteousness is ours by gift and impartation. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dreadful is the nature of sin! It, and nothing else, renders us miserable. But rich is the grace of God, and efficacious the merit of Jesus' blood, which freely removes it. And justification through faith in Christ constantly promotes integrity and holiness of heart and life! But the remains of sin must be purged out by sore troubles and wounding convictions. For there is a close connection between gospel repentance and pardon of sin. It is not, however, our repentance, but God's mercy in Christ and our faith, that is the cause of our pardon. Hopeful is a sinner's case when he is once brought to humble applications to a gracious God, who is more ready to pardon than we are to pray for it. They who seek him, even in trouble, shall surely find him; the more imminently terrible their danger, the more shall his grace and love be magnified in their salvation. And it is no small encouragement to their seeking of God in their distress, that others, like themselves, have found mercy in like cases. But great is the protection, preservation, deliverance, instruction, and direction which believers in Christ constantly find, while the impenitent are loaded with sorrows everlasting and unnumbered. It is necessary then to receive his instructions, and to bend before his warnings, that we may rejoice in his mercy and triumph in his praise.

PSALM XXXIII. Ver. 12. This is a national psalm, an expression of faith by an entire people. And though it be descriptive of a state never yet fully realized, the divine counsel will not be frustrated: and not merely individuals, but nations and peoples, shall yet be born of the Spirit to national salvation. Ro. 11. 7–26. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How great, glorious, and good is our God! and as extensive is the matter and reasonable the exercise of our praise. All that God is in himself, all that he hath declared in his word, all that he hath done in his works, is the matter of his gift and subject of our songs. Thrice happy are his faithful people, to whom he is their Portion, their kind Observer, their powerful Protector, their almighty Deliverer, their gracious Provider, and constant Preserver! The thoughts of his universal power, influence, and operations, and the vanity of all things beside him, should effectually engage us to contented resignation of ourselves and all that we have into his hand.

PSALM XXXIV. Ver. 5. They looked—Who? the humble, ver. 2. Boothroyd, however, and most versions, render the verse —'Look to him (the Lord), and be enlightened, and your faces shall not be ashamed;' and then ver. 6 introduces 'this poor (rather this afflicted) man' (Christ) as an encouraging specimen of the power of faith and prayer. C.

Ver. 12. To this general question every auditor seems to respond, 'I am that man:' and then ver. 13 commences the lesson, addressed like the commandments, not to a collective body, but to each individual. C.

Ver. 18. The Lord is nigh, &c. How near is the Lord to the broken heart—the heart broken off from the love of the world and the service of sin (1 Jn. 2. 15; Ro. 6. 6)—even in that heart. For 'if any man love me,' saith Christ, 'my Father will love him; and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him,' Jn. 14. 23. C.

Ver. 22. Desolate. They will not want friends, for God is their Father, and all believers are brethren. They will not want

PSALM XXXIV.

1 David praiseth God, and exhorteth others thereto by his experience. 8 They are blessed that trust in God. 11 He exhorteth to the fear of God. 15 The privileges of the righteous.

A psalm of David, when [a]he changed his behaviour before Abimelech;[1] who drove him away, and he departed.

I WILL[b] bless the LORD at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth.[2]

2 My[c] soul shall make her boast in the LORD: the[d] humble shall hear thereof, and be glad.

3 O[e] magnify the LORD with me, and let us exalt his name together.[3]

4 I[f] sought the LORD, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears.

5 They[h] looked[4] unto him, and were lightened; and their faces were not ashamed.[5]

6 This[i] poor man cried, and the LORD heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles.

7 The[j] angel of the LORD encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.

8 O[k] taste and see that the LORD is good: blessed[l] is the man that trusteth in him.

9 O[m] fear the LORD, ye his saints: [n]for there is no want to them that fear him.

10 The[o] young lions do lack, and suffer hunger: but they that seek the LORD shall not want any good thing.

11 Come, [q]ye children, hearken unto me; I will[r] teach you the fear of the LORD.

12 What[s] man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good?

13 Keep[t] thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile.

14 Depart[u] from evil, and do good; [v]seek peace, and pursue it.

15 The[w] eyes of the LORD are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry.

16 The[y] face of the LORD is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth.

17 The[z] righteous cry, and the LORD heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles.

18 The[a] LORD is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart;[6] and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit.[7]

19 Many[b] are the afflictions of the righteous: but the LORD delivereth him out of them all.

20 He[c] keepeth all his bones: not one of them is broken.

21 Evil[d] shall slay the wicked: and they that hate the righteous shall be desolate.[8]

22 The[e] LORD redeemeth the soul of his servants: [g]and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate.[9]

[h] The change of person from the first singular in ver. 4 to the third plural in ver. 5 may be explained by a consideration of ver. 3. David is the writer. He calls upon his companions to praise the Lord with him. He then tells what he did himself, and what was the result:—I sought the Lord, and he delivered me. He next speaks of his companions, and tells what they did:—they looked to him and were lightened,' i.e. their fears were removed. In ver. 6 the psalmist returns to himself, but speaks now in the third person, evidently for the purpose of bringing out more emphatically his distressed and almost hopeless state.—C.

[1] In this psalm the writer evidently records the result of a painful experience in regard to the treatment he had received from men. They had professed great friendship and devoted attachment in time of prosperity, but when adversity, suffering, and sorrow came upon him, they put away deserted him, but they rejoiced in his very calamities. So is it often in the world. The faithlessness and ingratitude of men lead the psalmist to a faithful and loving God, in whom he found a true friend and an omnipotent defender and deliverer.—P.

PSALM XXXV.

1 David prayeth for his own safety, and his enemies' confusion. 11 He complaineth of their wrongful dealing. 22 Thereby he inciteth God against them.

A psalm of David.

PLEAD [a]my cause, O LORD, with them that strive with me; fight against them that fight against me.[1]

2 Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.[2]

3 Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me: [b]say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

4 Let [c]them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul: let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.

5 Let[d] them be as chaff before the wind: [e]and let the angel of the LORD chase them.

6 Let their way be dark and slippery:[3] and let the angel of the LORD persecute them.

7 For[g] without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul.

8 Let[h] destruction come upon him at unawares;[4] and [i]let his net that he hath hid catch himself: into that very destruction let him fall.

9 And[j] my soul shall be joyful in the LORD: it shall rejoice in his salvation.

10 All[k] my bones[5] shall say, LORD, who is like unto thee, which [l]deliverest the poor from him that is too strong for him, yea, the poor and the needy from him that spoileth him?

11 False[n] witnesses[6] did rise up; they laid to my charge[7] things that I knew not.

12 They[o] rewarded me evil for good, to the spoiling[8] of my soul.

13 But[p] as for me, when they were sick, my clothing was sackcloth: I humbled[9] my soul with fasting; and my prayer [r]returned[1] into mine own bosom.

14 I behaved[2] myself as though he had been my friend[3] or brother:[4] I bowed down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother.

15 But in mine [s]adversity [s]they rejoiced, and gathered themselves together: yea, the [5]abjects gathered themselves together against me, and I knew it not;[6] they did tear me, and ceased not:

16 With[t] hypocritical mockers in feasts, [u]they gnashed upon me with their teeth.

17 LORD,[v] how long wilt thou look on? [s]rescue my soul from their destructions, my [7]darling[8] from the lions.

18 I[y] will give thee thanks in the great congregation: I will praise thee among [9]much people.

19 Let not them that are mine enemies wrongfully[1] rejoice over me: neither let [s]them

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the tenderness of God in smiling upon all people, when their folly richly deserves his fearful frowns! He can wonderfully change their heaviest loads of fear into shouts of praise; and certain and speedy are his gracious returns to the prayers of faith. None wait on him. None cry to him and are disappointed. What angelic guards pro-

VIA DOLOROSA—OVER WHICH CHRIST WALKED TO THE CROSS OF CALVARY. [PSALMS, XXXV: 7.]—"For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul." The Via Dolorosa is known as the sorrowful way over which our Saviour passed from the judgment hall to Calvary. This is a gloomy street where are arched passages, and an honored stone that has been so often pressed by the lips of pious pilgrims. It is very interesting, however, from the standpoint of the historian and the artist, for from this neighborhood the original ideas have been secured which take form in some of the most celebrated works of European art. The way begins with the palace of Pilate and ends in the church of the Holy Sepulcher. At the commencement of the Via Dolorosa there once stood the Scala Santa or staircase which was removed by Constantine to the Basilica of Saint John Lateran in Rome.

wink with the eye that hate [a]me without a cause.

20 For[b] they speak not peace: [c]but they devise deceitful matters against them that are quiet in the land.

21 Yea,[d] they opened their mouth wide against me, and said, Aha, aha! our eye hath seen it.

22 This thou hast seen, O LORD: [e]keep not silence. O LORD, be not far from me.

23 Stir[g] up thyself, and awake to my judgment, even unto my cause, [h]my God and my LORD.

24 Judge[i] me, O LORD my God, according to thy righteousness; and [j]let them not rejoice over me.

25 Let them not say in their hearts, Ah, so would we have it:[2] let them not say, We have swallowed him up.

26 Let[k] them be ashamed and brought to confusion together that rejoice at mine hurt: let them be clothed with shame and dishonour that [l]magnify themselves against me.

27 Let[m] them shout for joy, and be glad, that favour my righteous cause:[3] yea, [n]let them say continually, Let the LORD be magnified, [o]which hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servant.

28 And [q]my tongue shall speak of thy righteousness and of thy praise all the day long.

PSALM XXXVI.

1 The grievous state of the wicked. 5 The excellency of God's mercy. 10 David prayeth for favour to God's children.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David the servant of the LORD.

THE transgression of the wicked saith within my [1]heart, [a]that there is no fear of God before his eyes.

2 For [b]he flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found[2] to be hateful.[3]

3 The[c] words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit: he [d]hath left off to be wise, and to do good.

4 He[e] deviseth mischief[4] upon his bed; he setteth himself [f]in a way that is not good; [h]he abhorreth not evil.

PSALM XXXV. Ver. 1. The speaker in this psalm is one; and the interpretation must depend upon discovering who he is. Compare therefore ver. 19 with Jn. 15. 25, and the speaker is found to be Christ. And never lived there another who could say, 'They hated me without a cause.' See also ver. 7. C.

Ver. 8. But if the speaker be Christ, how can he thus pray against his enemies, seeing that he teaches us to love and to pray for them? This is a question originating in great inattention to 'things that differ,' Phi. 1. 10. For (1) does not this prayer detail what God in judgment will do? And can there be any reason against praying him to do his own will? But (2) can any one neglect to pray that Satan's kingdom may be destroyed? And what is there in these words but a prayer for God's righteous judgment upon Satan's causeless enmity? C.

Ver. 13. Sick. Sin is a sickness of the soul, a sickness unto death, against which no physician but the Conqueror of death can prevail. But such a physician is Jesus, Mat. 9. 12. C.

Ver. 22. O Lord, be not far from me. Distant in space, God can never be; but distant in time his help frequently is. For thus he tries the faith and increases the glory of his servants, and finally magnifies his own grace and salvation. C.

Ver. 24. Here is another evidence that the speaker who prays to be judged in righteousness is no other than Christ the righteous; for every conscious sinner must rather cry for mercy. See also ver. 27. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The best of men are often most cruelly persecuted. But a good God to plead their cause, and a good conscience to witness their integrity, are enough to comfort them. And a time is at hand when God will sufficiently recompense all the injuries done to them. However little persecutors see it, their feet stand on a slippery place, and a dreadful pit of ruin is just before them. And though we may not wish evil to our worst enemies, yet we may safely wish confusion to the implacable enemies of Christ and his church. Base ingratitude grievously wounds a generous spirit, when the greatest services meet with an ill requital. But let men use us as they will, it is our duty to pray for them. Though our kindness may be lost upon them, and our prayers slighted by them, they shall not return without a blessing to ourselves. And if we are made the reproach of the meanest, we but fill up what is behind of the sufferings of Christ. But short-lived is the triumphing, fearful and lasting the misery, of those who are enemies to Christ and his people; while ravishing and lasting are the prosperity that wait upon the LORD, they shall inherit the earth.[5]

10 For[k] yet a little while,[6] and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be.

11 But[l] the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

12 The[m] wicked plotteth[7] against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth.

13 The[n] LORD shall laugh at him: for he seeth that [o]his day is coming.

14 The[p] wicked have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and to slay such as be of upright conversation.[8]

15 Their[q] sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken.

16 A[r] little[9] that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked.

17 For[s] the arms of the wicked shall be broken: but the LORD upholdeth the righteous.

18 The[t] LORD knoweth the days of the upright, and their inheritance shall be [u]for ever.[1]

19 They shall not be ashamed in the evil time: and [v]in the days of famine they shall be satisfied.

20 But[w] the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the LORD shall be as the [2]fat of lambs:[3] they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away.

21 The[y] wicked borroweth, and payeth not again: but the righteous showeth mercy, and giveth.

22 For[z] such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off.

23 The[a] steps of a good man are ordered by the LORD; and he delighteth in his way.

24 Though[b] he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down: for the LORD upholdeth him with his hand.

25 I have been young, and now am old; yet [c]have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.

26 He[d] is ever[4] merciful, and lendeth; and his seed is blessed.

27 Depart[e] from evil, and do good; and dwell for evermore.[5]

28 For[g] the LORD loveth judgment, and forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved for ever: [h]but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off.

29 The[i] righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever.

30 The[j] mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment.

31 The[k] law of his God is in his heart; [l]none of his steps[6] shall slide.[7]

32 The wicked [m]watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him.

33 The[o] LORD will not leave him in his hand, nor condemn him when he is judged.

34 Wait[p] on the LORD, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: [q]when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.

35 I have seen the wicked [r]in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay-tree.[8]

36 Yet[s] he passed away, and, lo, he was not; yea, I sought him, but he could not be found.

37 Mark[t] the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.

38 But [u]the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off.

39 But[v] the salvation of the righteous is of the LORD: he is their strength in the time of trouble.

40 And[x] the LORD shall help them, and deliver them: he shall deliver them from the wicked, and save them, because they trust in him.

and joys of the godly in the kind delight and favour of their God! All our comforts come from his hand, through active faith in his Son: and therefore he ought to be praised on their account.

PSALM XXXVI. Ver. 1. The form of this sentence is involved. It is dramatic, and may be explained in this way:—The writer introduces himself as scrutinizing the character and conduct of the wicked. His heart pronounces judgment upon them: and the substance of his judgment is, that they are not influenced by the fear of God. Pleasure, passion, and worldly aggrandizement are the great mainsprings of their actions. P.

Ver. 4. The whole description well applies to Judas, into whom Satan entered, and taught to betray his Lord. Lu. 22. 3. C.

Ver. 6. Great mountains. Conspicuous from afar, elevated above the clouds, the battlements of kingdoms, the storehouses of inexhaustible wealth, the immovable monuments of almighty power. C.

Ver. 9. In thy light, &c. God dwells in light, 1 Ti. 6. 16. God is light, 1 Jn. 1. 5. In Christ was light, Jn. 1. 9. In Christ, therefore, God's light, the believer sees light—the light of doctrine in ignorance, 2 Pe. 1. 19, and of immortality in death, 2 Ti. 1. 10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Living in open sin is a certain mark of an unregenerate heart. And how deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, are the hearts of men by nature! What self-flattery—what abominable thoughts and devices—what false and mischievous words—what horrid deeds proceed from them! Night and day they perpetrate crimes. And none are worse than apostate professors: their deliberate wickedness shows the power of the devil uncontrolled within them! And they who, when awake on their beds, have their thoughts unoccupied in God's words, will find the devil at hand to suggest evil to them. But how high—how fixed—how unsearchable are the excellencies of God! Unbounded is his mercy—unchangeable his veracity—conspicuous his justice—unsearchable his words—and awful his works! Benevolent and extensive is his providential care. Precious and engaging his love. And powerfully considerate and delightful are the provision, the comfort, the life, the light, the love, the righteousness, which he bestows upon all people. But inevitable is the ruin and intolerable the everlasting misery of all who reject them.

PSALM XXXVII. Ver. 1. The preceptive parts of this psalm select an individual as the object of instruction—the Spirit speaking forth the observation and experience of an aged prophet. That the Spirit directly addresses Christ, will be evident from ver. 6, for there never was any other who had righteousness to bring forth. See Ro. 3. 10: 1 Jn. 2. 1. And through the perfect instructions addressed to him his members learn the nature and obligations of universal holiness. C.

Ver. 23. Good man. 'Good' is not in the original, and the Hebrew signifies 'a mighty man,' even the mighty Lord, the King of glory, described Ps. 24. 8, the man Christ Jesus, who with 'clean hands and a pure heart,' ascends into the 'hill of God,' and abides in the 'holy place' a Priest for ever, He. 6. 20; 7. 24–28. C.

Ver. 25. Many have stumbled at this unlimited statement, for they have seen the children of believers reduced to want. But children are not mentioned, but seed—which signifies an entire race—a stream of life from the fountain of the righteous. Now, in this sense, the true sense, all experience verifies the statement. The lazzaroni of Naples are a race of beggars; their birth, their heirship, their education, their inheritance, is begging. So are many of the hapless people called gipsies. But, during all their dispersion and calamities, the Jews have never become a seed, a race of beggars; their employments, alas! are often low and ignoble, but still they are a race of workers, and as a seed they beg not. The same important fact is ever verified in the history of true Christians. There is not, there never was, there cannot be, a seed, a race of Christian beggars. C.

Ver. 38. 'Keep in innocence, and regard uprightness; for the perfect man hath a posterity, but the rebellious shall be destroyed together; the posterity of the wicked shall be cut off' (Horsley). This amendment seems necessary, for that 'the end of the wicked shall be cut off,' is scarcely intelligible. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Even eminent saints are apt to fret at the prosperity of the wicked—and yet how little reason is there for it! Be the apparent happiness of the wicked what it will in this world, it is mingled with the poisoning curse of God: it gives no solid satisfaction while it lasts, and it is quickly at an end. And never is their ruin nearer than when their prosperity spreads and flourishes like a green bay-tree. It brings them to everlasting wrath, and hastens them rapidly to the suffering of endless woe. But godliness hath great gain, having the promise of this life and of that which is to come. If rooted and grounded in Christ, we trust and delight in the Lord, and wait on him in the faith of his promises and obedience to his laws.

David moveth God to take compassion of his sad condition, confessing his sins to have been the cause of it.

A psalm of David, [a]to bring to remembrance.

O LORD, [b]rebuke me not in thy wrath; neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

2 For [c]thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore.

3 There is [d]no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any rest[1] in my bones because of my sin.

4 For[e] mine iniquities[2] are gone over mine head: as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me.

5 My[g] wounds stink, and are corrupt, because of my foolishness.

6 I[h] am troubled; I am bowed down greatly; I go mourning all the day long.

7 For [i]my loins are filled with a loathsome disease; and there is no soundness in my flesh.

8 I[j] am feeble and sore broken: [k]I have roared by reason of the disquietness of my heart.[3]

9 LORD, [l]all my desire is before thee; and my groaning is not hid from thee.

10 My[n] heart panteth, my strength faileth me: as for the light of mine eyes, it also is gone from me.[4] extensive and glorious shall be our inheritance—pleasure, support, honour, safety, plenty, protection, peace, happy death, and everlasting salvation.

PSALM XXXVIII. Ver. 1. There is not on record such another memorial of affliction as we find presented in this psalm. The wrath and arrows of the Almighty—a body tasked with disease and pain—an agonized spirit, the desertion of friends—the plottings and assaults of inveterate enemies—all concentrate upon one sufferer. And who is he that can sustain the assault? Surely this can be none but the 'Man of Sorrows,' whom 'it pleased the Lord to bruise.' C.

Ver. 12. Lay snares. This was fulfilled when the Pharisees and Herodians combined to entangle him in his speech, Mat. 22. 15–22: and when, as in Jn. 8. 6, they thought to ensnare him into a decision in favour of immorality, or into pronouncing a sentence of death, which they might construe into usurpation of the executive power. See also Lu. 6. 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How tremendous is even God's fatherly wrath! But how much more his awful judgment against the ungodly! Sin makes fearful work even in saints. But much more terrible is its effects in sinners! Yea, where real grace is, sin will be more painful and bitter than all the arrows, strokes, and wounds of trouble. And however painful the wounds and groans of the soul are, they are symptoms of life. It is hopeful when outward distempers make men to search out and bewail their sinful causes. But nothing is a more fatal sign than insensibility. No human strength can withstand God's afflicting hand. No sinews of brass, nor bones of iron, can resist the strokes of fierce disease. And often our worldly friends, who flutter around us in our prosperity, treacherously forsake us in our adversity. But what a comfort it is that we have a compassionate God to trust to, who knows and can cure our maladies! How many, how malicious and active, are the enemies of Christ and his saints! Their enmity at God himself and his image is the cause of their quarrel. So fixed is their hatred at godliness, that they abhor it though benefited by it. It is hard, but wise, to imitate Jesus Christ in calm composure under severe provocation;—in silently suffering and in overlooking manifold unkindness done to us. But to take notice of malicious and clamorous enemies is ordinarily to make evil worse. Hope in God will sufficiently support us against every oppression and injury. They who contentedly leave their cause with him shall never be disappointed nor want an advocate to plead for them; and the more sense we have of our offences against him, the greater will be our penitential grief and our patience under the provocation of men. Our blessed relation to him as our Friend, Saviour, and God, improved by the prayer of faith, will quickly bring him to our relief.

PSALM XXXIX. Ver. 1. I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue. He who could, without vain self-confidence, make and keep this resolution, must be more than man. Man might pray to be so upheld, Christ alone could so resolve. C.

Ver. 4. This is a lesson the worldly mind is most unwilling to learn, partly through fear of death, and partly through fear of losing life's vain enjoyments. Our Lord learned it in answer to prayer, leaving us here also 'an example that we should follow his steps.' C.

Ver. 12. Jesus wept at the tomb of Lazarus: over impenitent Jerusalem: and in the days of his flesh 'made supplication with strong crying and tears;' of these, because they must often have been by night and in secret, the Spirit, that searcheth the deep things both of God and man, here and elsewhere in the Psalms, makes discovery and gives the record. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great watchfulness and circumspection are necessary to our walking aright in this wicked and ensnaring world. For careless hearts will make crooked ways; and next to the heart nothing is harder to guide than the tongue: but the stronger the temptation is, the stronger ought to be our resolution against it. We are very apt to run from one extreme to another. If we restrain our lips from evil, we are ready to neglect that speech which is with grace seasoned with salt. And when our mind, long in silence, ruminates upon sorrows and the instrumental causes of them, it galls its sores and aggravates its discontent. But there is great need to consider what death is, and how near it is; and that it is continually working in us: for vain and transient are men, with all their joys and honours, their griefs and fears, their toils and cares. And the more we see death and vanity stamped upon all things here, the more we ought to be weaned from them in our affections, and the more solicitous should we be in securing the ever-living, the substantial, and eternal GOOD. The more our lying refuges are swept away, the more reason we have to trust in and call on God, who never disappoints any. With holy resignation to his strokes, we must earnestly beg the forgiveness of the cause and the removal of the rod. We cannot impeach the equity of his judgments, nor withstand their force. But if they set us a weeping and praying, and render us weaned from this world, GOD, our friend and companion, will quickly give us relief. And by his grace he will ripen us for heaven before he give the mortal stroke.

PSALM XL. Ver. 1. I waited patiently for the Lord. It is here to be remarked, as in several other psalms, that the speaker is one; and that the Holy Spirit, speaking by Paul, He. 10. 5–9, declares this one to be Christ. But when Christ is found to be the speaker in one part, he must, if there be any confidence in the grammar of any language, be the speaker in the whole psalm. C.

Ver. 6. Mine ears hast thou opened. From Ex. 21. 6 it will appear that this expression signifies 'thou hast made me a servant for ever,' an expression perfectly equivalent to that wondrous mystery revealed 1 Co. 15. 28. Paul, He. 10. 5, quotes from the Septuagint translation, which gives an expository not a literal translation. C.

Ver. 12. Mine iniquities, &c. Instead of labouring to evade the inevitable conclusion that these words were, in the Spirit, spoken by Christ—an attempt made by supposing the psalm should end at ver. 10, or by inserting afflictions instead of iniquities—the peace of the believer rests in the very fact that Christ, by sacrifice, and in virtue of his union of headship, made the believers' sins his own, and felt them, and confessed them, and died for them. See notes on Ps. 32. 5; 25. 2. C.

Ver. 15. See notes on Ps. 5. 10; 35. 8. Several high authorities endeavour to elude the apparent objection that lies against such prayers by translating them prophetically and not as imprecatory. The Greek translation, however, employed by the Spirit of truth, Ac. 1. 20, sets the point at rest in favour of the authorized version. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! what fearful and lasting troubles of body and mind Jesus and his people have allotted them on earth! What patience is necessary under them! But GOD is their deliverer. And greatly exalting, establishing, joyous, and encouraging is their deliverance at last. Happy are those who, renouncing all other confidences, trust in GOD alone. Great is the number, the marvellous grace of his thoughts and acts towards Jesus Christ and his children in the work of redemption. But how insignificant were Jewish sacrifices in respect of holy obedience: and infinitely more mouth with a bridle,[1] while the wicked is before me.[2]

2 I[c] was dumb with silence;[3] I held my peace, even from good; and my sorrow was stirred.[4]

3 My[d] heart was hot within me; while I was musing[5] the fire burned: then spake I with my tongue.

4 LORD,[e] make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am.[6]

5 Behold,[g] thou hast made my days as an hand-breadth, and mine age is as nothing before thee: [h]verily every man at his best state[7] is altogether vanity. Selah.[8]

6 Surely every man walketh in a vain show:[9] surely they are disquieted in vain: [i]he heapeth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them.

7 And now, LORD, what wait I for? [j]my hope is in thee.

8 Deliver[k] me from all my transgressions:[1] make[l] me not the reproach of the foolish.

9 I[m] was dumb, I opened not my mouth; because thou didst it.

10 Remove[o] thy stroke away from me: I am consumed by the blow[2] of thine hand.

11 When [p]thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity,[3] thou makest his beauty to consume[q] away[4] like a moth: surely every man is vanity. Selah.

12 Hear[r] my prayer, O LORD, and give ear unto my cry; hold not thy peace at my tears: for[s] I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were.

13 O [t]spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more.

PSALM XL.

1 The benefit of confidence in God. 6 Obedience is the best sacrifice. 11 He prayeth for salvation to himself, and confusion to his enemies.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

I WAITED[a] patiently[1] for the LORD; and he[b] inclined unto me, and heard my cry.

2 He brought me up also out of [c]an horrible pit,[2] out of the miry clay, and [d]set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings.

3 And he hath [e]put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God: [g]many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the LORD.

1 Heb. a bridle or muzzle for my mouth.

2 It has been truly said that this is 'the most beautiful of all the elegies in the Psalter. The struggle depicted here is not a struggle with wicked men, but with the terrors of a mortal sickness, which to the men of those early times were so great, that even the bravest, who felt no fear before the attacks of the enemy, quailed before the fear of death.' But even the fear of death could not shake the psalmist's trust in God. Faith was triumphant. The psalmist by his divinely enlightened mind was made to see that his very chastisements were blessings, that all things tended to promote his spiritual and eternal welfare.—P.

7 This passage is quoted by Paul in He. 10. 5–7; but in that quotation there is a remarkable variation from the original text. Instead of the words, 'mine ears hast thou opened,' the apostle has 'a body didst thou prepare for me.' The original language is metaphorical, and its plain meaning is:—'Thou hast formed in me a willing and obedient spirit, so that I persevere an open ear to all thy commands.' In substance the apostle's quotation is the same:—'A body hast thou prepared for me:' i.e. a body formed and fitted for the service of God, ready to render the fullest obedience. The contrast is drawn between the sacrifices of slain victims and the free-will offerings of a living body.—P.

10 I have not hid [p]thy righteousness within my heart; I have declared thy [q]faithfulness and thy [r]salvation: I have not concealed thy [s]loving-kindness and thy truth from the great congregation.

11 Withhold[t] not thou thy tender mercies from me, O LORD: [u]let thy loving-kindness and thy truth continually preserve me.

12 For[v] innumerable evils have compassed me about: mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up: they are more than the hairs of mine head; therefore my heart faileth[8] me.

13 Be[w] pleased, O LORD, to deliver me: O LORD, make haste to help me.

14 Let[y] them be ashamed and confounded together that seek after my soul to destroy it; [z]let them be driven backward, and put to shame that wish me evil.

15 Let[a] them be desolate for a reward of their shame that say unto me, Aha, aha!

16 Let[b] all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: let such as love thy [c]salvation say continually, The LORD be magnified.

17 But[d] I am poor and needy; [e]yet the LORD thinketh upon me: thou [g]art my help and my deliverer; make no tarrying, O my God.

so in comparison of Jesus the Son of God, and his complete holiness of nature, obedience of life, and remedial sufferings! With great cheerfulness he sought for us the blessed rewards of peace. And with a steady purpose of love he fulfilled his work, in executing every saving office for our good. Dreadful was the load of our iniquities laid upon him. But he finished transgression, and made an end of sin, and publishes to men the declarations and offers of gospel-grace. Let us then embrace every promise as ratified by his blood: and in the faith of his suffering death for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, let us cheerfully and gratefully devote ourselves, by the most solemn ties, to his service. In his name let us fight the good fight of faith and finish our course. Behold how the prayers of saints, but chiefly the intercession of Jesus Christ, issued in the downfall of evil and the prosperity and deliverance of believers. It is infinitely dangerous to mock gracious mercy. But no griefs, no poverty, can render them miserable who fear him. There is a throne of grace to which they have the boldest access. Their God, and all that he hath or doth, is the ground of their joy. His inexhaustible fulness, adapted to their wants, the prayers of faith can unlock. The promises are sure; and the moment of fulfilment hastens forward.

PSALM XLI. Ver. 1. 'This psalm, like Ps. xxxviii., which it so much resembles, is one that will be always eminently useful to those who are visited with sickness, and who, at the same time, are deprived of the sympathy in their sufferings which the afflicted so much need and desire, and who, instead of sympathy, are subjected to detraction and calumny—their enemies taking advantage of their condition to circulate unfavourable reports in regard to them, and their heretofore professed friends withdrawing from them and uniting with their calumniators and detractors.' From man's cruelty the psalmist teaches us to turn to divine mercy. As a friend and helper God never fails. P.

Ver. 4. Our Lord (Jn. 13. 18, compare with ver. 9) declares this scripture fulfilled by the treachery of Judas; our Lord is therefore the speaker. To set aside this evidence, he is said to have quoted by accommodation, a principle totally unsupported by divine authority, a principle which, if once adopted, puts an end to interpretation: for no man could determine where accommodation ends and reality begins. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Whilst here also we behold Jesus Christ through poverty, affliction, malicious and treacherous enemies, entering into his glory, to the endless honour of his Father, and the joy of his heart, let us observe, that kindness to God's poor and afflicted is as much our interest as our duty, and God's blessing is the only comfort of every estate. It can give rest in trouble, and make even grief to smile. And pleasant under trouble are penitent confessions and fervent requests founded on the promise and mercy of God. Sin

GENERAL VIEW OF THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE—WHERE CHRIST PRAYED THE LAST PRAYER. [Psalms, xl:7, 8.]—"Then said I, Lo, I come; in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O, my God; yea, the law is within my heart." Alphonse de Lamartine, member of the French Academy, after losing in Palestine his only daughter, Julia, wrote in the Garden of Gethsemane one of the saddest poems, part of which we quote:

"At the dry, dusty base of Olive's Mount
Under the shade of Zion's ruined walls,
Lies a dark valley whence the sun's clear light
Is quite shut out. There Cedron slowly rolls
His scanty waves between his arid banks;
There in the hillside lies Jehoshaphat entombed.
Instead of grass the barren soil bears only ruins,
And the ancient trees cleave with their straggling roots the stony tombs.
There between two high rocks is dimly seen
The lonely grot to which the Man of Grief Went to experience death before it came."

PSALM XLI.

1 The recompense of the charitable man. 4 David prayeth for mercy, complaining of the treachery of his enemies and apostate friends: 11 He acknowledgeth God's favour, and blesseth him.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

BLESSED is[a] he that considereth the [1]poor:[2] the LORD will deliver him[3] in time of trouble.[4]

2 The[b] LORD will preserve him, and keep him alive; and [c]he shall be blessed upon the earth: and thou wilt not deliver[5] him unto the will of his enemies.

3 The LORD [d]will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: thou wilt make[6] all his bed in his sickness.

4 I said, LORD, [e]be merciful unto me: heal my soul; for I have sinned against thee.

5 Mine[g] enemies speak evil of me, When shall he die, and his name perish?

6 And [h]if he come to see me, he speaketh vanity: his heart gathereth iniquity to itself; when he goeth abroad, he telleth it.

7 All[k] that hate me whisper together against me: against me do they devise my hurt.[7]

8 An evil disease,[8] say they, cleaveth fast unto him: [j]and now that he lieth, he shall rise up no more.

9 Yea,[k] mine own familiar friend,[9] in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up[1] his heel against me.

10 But thou, [l]O LORD, be merciful unto me, and raise me up, that I may requite them.

11 By[m] this I know that thou favourest me, because mine enemy doth not triumph over me.

12 And as for me, [n]thou upholdest me in mine integrity,[2] and [p]settest me before thy face for ever.

13 Blessed[q] be the LORD God of Israel from everlasting, and to everlasting. Amen, and Amen.

PSALM XLII.

1 David's zeal to serve God in the temple. 5 He encourageth his dejected soul to trust in God.

To the chief musician, Maschil,[1] for the sons of Korah.

AS the hart panteth[2] after the water-brooks, so [a]panteth my soul after thee, O God.[3]

2 My soul thirsteth for God, for the [b]living God: when shall I come and appear before God?

3 My[c] tears have been my meat day and night, while they continually say unto me, Where is thy God?

4 When[d] I remember these things, I pour out my soul in me: for I had gone with the multitude; I went with them to the house of God,[e] with the voice of joy and praise, with a multitude that kept holy-day.

5 Why[g] art thou cast down,[4] O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise[5] him for the help of his countenance.[6]

6 O[k] my God, my soul is cast down within me: [l]therefore will I remember thee from [j]the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites,[7] from [k]the hill Mizar.[8]

7 Deep[l] calleth unto deep at the noise of thy water-spouts: all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.

8 Yet the LORD [m]will command his loving-kindness in the day-time, and [o]in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life.

9 I will say unto God my rock, [p]Why hast thou forgotten me? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

10 As[q] with a [s]sword[1] in my bones, mine enemies reproach me; while they say daily unto me, Where is thy God?

11 Why[r] art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

PSALM XLIII.[1]

1 The psalmist, praying to be restored to the temple, promiseth to serve God joyfully. 5 He encourageth his soul to trust in God.

JUDGE[2] me,[a] O God, and plead my cause against an ungodly[3] nation: O deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man.[4]

2 For thou art [b]the God of my strength: [c]why dost thou cast me off? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

1 Or, the weak or sick.

2 That is, him who is poor in every sense, "exhausted" of wealth, riches, and friends. Who is he that considereth the poor? man, or the Lord? The word is very generally interpreted of a charitable, sympathizing man; but do they not rather describe the consideration of the Lord himself? C.

3 Deliver him — Whom? a man that considers the poor, or the poor himself who is in trouble? for if these words applied to a considerate man, that man might never come into the trouble described in ver. 1-3; and no one can attain the promise.—C.

fills men's hearts and tongues with enmity against Christ and his people: yet vile are their efforts and as vain their hopes. But happy trials are those which excite our prayers, animate our faith, increase our dependence on God, and tune our hearts to his praise; and which make JEHOVAH'S love to our souls more evident and precious.

PSALM XLII. Ver. 6. The general idea is—'Wherever, to whatever region I am led or driven in thy providence, I will remember and praise thee.' The psalmist was probably in exile when the psalm was penned. If David wrote it, as is probable, then the general scope would seem to indicate that he had sought a refuge from his enemies somewhere in the northern valley of the Jordan. We know he fled thither on the rebellion of Absalom, and this psalm may refer to that period. P.— Jordan. The word signifies 'the river of judgment.' There John baptized, Mat. 3.6; there was our Lord himself baptized, ver. 13; and there did the Spirit descend upon him visibly, ver. 16; and there did the Father from heaven acknowledge him, for his beloved, that is, the true David his son, ver. 17. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Nothing but God himself can satisfy believing souls. If the sense of his love be withdrawn, every enjoyment is tasteless. No cisterns of earthly comforts can quench their thirst, their earnest desire for the LIVING FOUNTAIN. Constrained absence from the public means of fellowship with God is a heavy and tormenting burden to a faithful soul, and quickens his longings after them. No wonder then that he groans earnestly to be clothed upon with his house which is from heaven. O what terrible afflictions and sorrows are in the lot of God's favourite saints! When outward distress lies heavy, inward temptations are often violent. And the joys which we have tasted in God make the withdrawment of his presence and comforts the more grievous. But we often cause our own dejections under trouble, by poring on our corruptions or distress, and forgetting the promises, grace, and faithfulness of our Redeemer. We had need therefore to call our soul's to account for their conduct. And if we cannot get relief by pleading with our burdened spirits, we should commit our case to our gracious God. And the more furious and manifold the storms of trouble are, the more earnest ought to be our believing applications to and dependence on God. Let providence cast us where it will, our God and our prayers should still attend us. Our faith may be enfeebled and sore shaken, but should never fail. Remembrance of what God is to us, and hath done for us, should suppress our unbelieving fears. If by faith we accept salvation, neither earth nor hell can hinder us from the benefit of it. In our darkest nights of trouble, desertion, and temptation, we have always why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

PSALM XLIV.

1 The church, calling to mind former favours, 9 complaineth of present evils. 17 Professing her integrity, 23 she fervently prayeth for succour.

To the chief musician for the sons of Korah, Maschil.

WE have[c] heard with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old:

2 How[b] thou didst drive out the heathen with thy hand, and plantedst them; how thou didst afflict the people, and cast them out.

3 For[c] they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them; but thy right hand, and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, because thou hadst a favour unto them.

4 Thou[d] art my King, O God: command deliverances for Jacob.

5 Through[e] thee will we push down our enemies: through thy name will we tread them under that rise up against us.[1]

6 For[g] I will not trust in my bow, neither shall my sword save me.

7 But[h] thou hast saved us from our enemies, and hast put them to shame that hated us.

8 In[i] God we boast all the day long, and praise thy name for ever. Selah.[2]

9 But[j] thou hast cast off, and put us to shame; and goest not forth with our armies.

10 Thou[k] makest us to turn back from the enemy; and they which hate us spoil for themselves.

11 Thou[l] hast given us like sheep appointed for meat;[3] and hast scattered us among the heathen.[4]

12 Thou[m] sellest thy people for nought,[5] and dost not increase thy wealth by their price.

13 Thou[o] makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us.

14 Thou[p] makest us a by-word among the heathen, a shaking of the head among the people.

15 My[q] confusion is continually before me, and the shame of my face hath covered me, 16 For the voice of him that reproacheth and blasphemeth; [r]by reason of the enemy and avenger.

17 All[s] this is come upon us; yet have we not [t]forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant.[6]

18 Our[u] heart is not turned back, neither have our steps[7] declined from thy way,

19 Though[v] thou hast sore broken us in [w]the place of dragons, and covered us with [x]the shadow of death.[8]

20 If[z] we have [a]forgotten the name of our God, or stretched out our hands to a strange god;

21 Shall[b] not God search this out? for he knoweth the secrets of the heart.

22 Yea,[c] for thy sake[8] are we killed all the day long; we are counted as sheep for the slaughter.

23 Awake,[d] why sleepest thou, O LORD? arise, cast us not off for ever.

24 Wherefore[e] hidest thou thy face, and forgettest our affliction and our oppression?

25 For[g] our soul is bowed down to the dust; our belly cleaveth unto the earth.

26 Arise[h] for our help,[1] and redeem us, for thy mercies' sake.

much mercy to thank God for. Whatever repeated encouragement our feeble minds may need, if God be our God, our life, and the health of our countenance, neither earth, nor death, nor hell is able to hurt us.

PSALM XLIII. Ver. 1. The meaning is, not that the writer desired the Lord to try and judge him as a culprit; but rather to interfere in his behalf to save him from the unjust accusations of the wicked. The psalmist was conscious that he was guiltless in regard to the charges brought against him, and therefore he made his appeal from unjust men to a just and righteous God. He does not represent himself as absolutely pure, or perfectly holy before God; but simply as innocent of the crimes laid against him by men. P.

Ver. 2. Why dost thou cast me off? This expostulation was exemplified in the crucifixion, Mat. 27. 46, when our Lord cried with a loud voice, as if it were a special thing that all should hear, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' C.

REFLECTIONS.—When men wrong us and God deserts us, our only refuge is still in God himself. He may frown, but he cannot cease to love his people, however hard they find it to believe so amidst deep convictions and raging lusts. It may be for a time difficult to reconcile God's providences with his promises; but with a little patience the mystery will be unveiled. Such as love Christ's appearance shall have their cause judged far sooner than their enemies wish, and far better than themselves conceive. Next to God himself, the saints love nothing more dearly than the ordinances of his grace. But none can approach ordinances aright unless they exercise faith in their hearts; and it is for his sake the saints delight to be there. Men never attend ordinances aright but when they have fellowship with Christ as their altar, their atonement, their food, their God, their joy. Intimate fellowship with God cannot but tune our hearts and tongues to his praise. And the more we deal with God by faith, we shall see the more sin and evil in inward despondency.

PSALM XLIV. Ver. 1. The grammar here presents a plurality of speakers, and their statements and complaints indicate a faithful but a persecuted church, ver. 11, 17–22. Occasionally (ver. 4, 6, 15) a single speaker interferes, who, it appears from ver. 15, can be no other than Christ; for no man who knows the versatility of frail human nature can imagine any but Christ truly to utter that verse. C.

Ver. 3. Infidels have frequently objected against JEHOVAH for expelling the nations of Canaan. There are two answers—1. God has a sovereign right over his own world. 2. The Canaanites were righteously expelled on account of their wickedness, Le. 19. 23, 24. C.

Ver. 9. The true followers of Jesus are all soldiers of the cross, and must follow the Lamb, and like him be often put to shame, and like him despise it for the joy set before them, 1 Ti. 6. 12; 2 Ti. 2. 3, 4; 4. 7; He. 12. 2. C.

Ver. 12. This has often in times of persecution been literally fulfilled, when the mere sentence of the judge, deciding that the accused, under some opprobrious name, was a true Christian, was sufficient to deliver him over as a slave to the galleys, or transport him to distant penal colonies. C.

Ver. 15. This is true only of the Son of God, and there is an awful sense in which it is ever true, seeing there are those in the professing church who ever 'crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame,' He. 6. 6. C.

Ver. 19. The place of dragons. The persecution of the church the Spirit of God attributes to the malice of Satan under the emblem of a dragon, Re. 12. 3–9; and the scenes of persecution may well be termed the 'place of dragons,' where his servants rule, Ep. 6. 12. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Memorials of past mercies ought to be carefully recorded and transmitted from age to age, as an encouragement in time of need as well as a ground of thankfulness. It is never outward force, but Jesus Christ's Word and Spirit, that build up the church and triumph over the powers of darkness. If we want help in trouble, we must renounce all other confidences, and take God alone to be our kind deliverer and boast; so shall our troubles and griefs be quickly turned into everlasting praise.—It is common, but sinful, for them whom God casts down to think themselves utterly cast off, and to shrink under reproach and suffering, as if they were not our appointed cross. For it is not now but hereafter that God will make us to know and admire the mystery of his providence. It is especially distressing to the faithful when they falsely apprehend that God gets no glory by the afflictions of his people; nay, instead thereof, is dishonoured and reproached.—All God's people, though not called to be proper martyrs, have their particular sufferings allotted to them for his sake. But it is dangerous to comply with sins in order to shun troubles. Highly provoking to God are treachery, apostasy, and idolatry; and fearfully he will search out and punish them. But great is the mercy that nothing can break his promise of grace with the faithful; and that not sins of mere infirmity, but indulged provocations, are held as a violation of their round of duties. And if he appear

2 Thou[a] art fairer[4] than the children of men; grace[g] is poured into thy lips:[5] therefore God hath [h]blessed thee for ever.

3 Gird thy [i]sword[6] upon thy thigh, O [j]most Mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty.

4 And in thy majesty [k]ride prosperously,[7] because of truth, and meekness, and righteousness; and [l]thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things.

5 Thine[m] arrows are sharp in the heart of the King's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee.

9 Kings'[v] daughters were among thy honourable women: upon thy right hand did stand the[x] queen in gold of Ophir.[1]

10 Hearken,[y] O daughter,[2] and consider, and incline thine ear; [z]forget also thine own people, and thy father's house:

11 So[a] shall the King greatly desire thy beauty: for he is thy [b]Lord; and worship thou him.

12 And[c] the daughter of Tyre shall be there with a gift; even the [d]rich among the people shall entreat thy favour.

PSALM XLVI.

1 The confidence of the church in God's protection. 8 An exhortation to contemplate his works.

To the chief musician for[1] the sons of Korah, [a]A song upon [b]Alamoth.

GOD is [c]our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble:

2 Therefore[d] will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea;[2]

3 Though[e] the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. Selah.[3]

4 There[f] is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad [h]the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the most High.

5 God[i] is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved: God shall help her, and that right early.[4] asleep amidst our troubles, it is to humble us under his mighty hand, to awaken our importunate prayers, and that he may the more magnify his mercy and power in our deliverance.

6 The[j] heathen raged; the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice; the earth melted.

PSALM XLV. Ver. 1. It was the general opinion of the ancient Jewish rabbins and commentators that this beautiful psalm had direct if not exclusive reference to the Messiah. Its general scope, and some of its more remarkable expressions, prove this. There are passages in it such as cannot, by any fair canon of interpretation, be applied to any man, however pure in character or exalted in rank. Besides Paul, in the epistle to the Hebrews, distinctly applies it to our Lord, ch. 1. 8, 9. When thus interpreted it is clear, consistent, and noble. P.——The King. This King is Messiah, 'God manifest in the flesh,' exalted to glory; and the words given by the Spirit to the prophet are the words of the Father to his beloved Son. See He. 1. 1, 5, 6, 8–13. C.

Ver. 9. The queen, not the church universal as 'the bride, the Lamb's wife,' for then could that queen have no 'companions,' Re. 21. 9. Is not this queen rather the primitive Christian church, gathered to the Son of God, Ja. 1. 18; Re. 14. 4, and of which all subsequent ages produce but descendants or companions? C.

Ver. 12. Tyre is particularized as the emblem of all mercantile nations.—Note, In the merciful and overruling providence of God the mercantile has been made the great agent of the missionary enterprise; and the desire of acquiring the wealth of this world has led to the diffusion of the unsearchable riches of Christ. C.

Ver. 16. These words apply not to the bride but to the Bridegroom—the Messiah. The first clause signifies that great though his glory might be as the descendant (after the flesh) of a long line of kings, it would be far surpassed by the glory of his posterity—his spiritual seed. Their name would be more illustrious, their acts would be more noble, and their dominion would be wider and more enduring. How true is this of King Jesus! P.——Fathers. Instead of prophets and apostles, whom I will successively remove from thy head (see 2 Ki. 2. 3; Ro. 9. 5; 1 Co. 4. 15; Re. 21. 14), shall be thine own spiritual children, converted to God by means of thy faithful testimony. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Discoveries of Jesus' glory powerfully animate our hearts and tune our tongues to commend him. How glorious is his person as God-man! Rich in grace are the qualities of his heart and words of his mouth. In him it pleased the Father that all fulness of blessings for men should dwell. In almighty power, by his word and influences of his Spirit, he persuaded multitudes in the apostolic age to the obedience of faith; and by the strokes of his justice did and shall destroy his Jewish or other implacable opposers. Having by himself purged our sins, he, as our righteous Saviour, sat down at the right hand of God, as the reward of his righteous service; and is, in the most transcendent manner, filled with the Holy Ghost to shed on us abundantly. In a most glorious and heart-engaging manner his manhood, mediatorial offices, and righteousness appear in the heavens above and in his church and ordinances below. And his people, adorned with gifts and graces, are raised up together, and made to sit together with him. Faithful men, both Jews and Gentiles, in the day of his power, are persuaded to accept the gospel, to renounce all others, and devote themselves entirely to him and his service, as the objects of his gracious and everlasting delight. In shining robes of righteousness, grace, and holy conversation, each in their order are adorned; and after serving their generation by the will of God, they shall be brought and admitted into his heavenly palace with exceeding joy. Instead of Jewish fathers shall there be Gentile converts; and instead of glorified saints shall there be another generation, begotten by the power of his grace, all made kings and priests unto God! Thus by the spread and influence of the gospel shall Jesus' renown and honour be perpetuated on earth, while those in heaven above shall praise him for ever and ever.

PSALM XLVI. Ver. 1. This has been called Luther's psalm. 'It was that he was accustomed to sing in trouble. When the times were dark—when the enemies of truth appeared to triumph—when disaster seemed to come over the cause in which he was engaged, and the friends of the Reformation were dispirited and sad—he was accustomed to say to his fellow-labourers, Come, let us sing the 46th psalm.' No other passage in the whole Word of God is more adapted for rousing the drooping faith of the church. The thoughts are noble and the words sublime. God omnipotent—God ever present—God infinite in mercy—God the king, defender, and sustainer of his church, is the grand theme of the psalmist. P.——God is our refuge. The assembled church here exemplifies the fulfilment of the gracious promise of the foregoing psalm, ver. 17, the highest praise being that which is due for deliverance from trouble and strength for duty. C.

Ver. 4. 'The holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High is a stream, the branches whereof gladden the city of God' (Margin). The stream is the truth in Jesus: the branches, reading, hearing, holy converse, prayer, exhortation, reproof, correction, instruction in righteousness, furnishing the man of God to all good works. C.

REFLECTIONS.—When dangers appear greatest our faith in God's promise and perfections should be strongest. If we can triumph in God as our own God we may triumph over every trouble and danger. The revolutions on earth can little affect them whose hearts are duly fixed on things above. They need never fear, and they can never fail, who take God for their refuge and their strength. Notwithstanding all her enemies, his church shall in him obtain joy, establishment, and deliverance. If by his word, his Spirit, and his blood, we enjoy communications of grace and comfort, we are amply repaid for all the storms that can be raised by the world that lieth in wickedness. But in what a tremendous and awful manner he from age to age revenges the injuries done to his church, the ruin of the nations around Canaan, and of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, Syro-Grecians, Romans, Anti-christians, Mahometans, and others, have or shall manifest. And it is highly proper to contemplate his infinite perfections, displayed in all his conquests of judgment or grace; that in every age, in every case, we may have faith in him as our Protector, Deliverer, and Strength.

PSALM XLVII. Ver. 1. This noble song of praise and joy was probably composed at the dedication of the temple and was

ARENA OF AMPHITHEATRE, PUTEOLI—NEAR WHERE ST. PAUL LANDED IN ITALY. [PSALMS, xlvii:8.]—"God reigneth over the heathen: God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness." We learn from history that wicked men are no less under law than righteous men. The laws of God which wicked men violate destroy them, while the righteous are preserved by observing them. This arena of the amphitheater at Puteoli is a very good illustration of the wreck and ruin which have come to the fame and the fortunes of the men who built it, and found, as Nero did, upon its arena, a scene for wild and unbridled actions. Puteoli is rich in historic associations. Scipio sailed from this place to Spain. Cicero had a villa here, and here Nero planned the murder of his mother. This was the famous watering place of the rich and luxurious Romans

PSALM XLVII.

The nations are exhorted cheerfully to entertain the kingdom of Christ.

To the chief musician. A psalm for[1] the sons of Korah.

O CLAP[a] your hands, all ye people; shout unto God with the voice of triumph.

2 For the LORD most High is [b]terrible;[2] he is a great King over all the earth.

3 He[c] shall subdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet.

4 He[d] shall choose our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved. Selah.[3]

5 God[e] is gone up with a shout, the LORD with the sound of a trumpet.

6 Sing praises to God, sing praises: sing praises unto our King, sing praises.

7 For[g] God is the King of all the earth: sing ye praises with [4]understanding.[5]

8 God[h] reigneth over the heathen: God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness.

GREAT is [b]the LORD, and greatly to be praised in the [c]city[2] of our God, in the mountain[3] of his holiness.

2 Beautiful[d] for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the [e]sides of the north,[4] the city of the [2]great King.

3 God[h] is known in her palaces for a refuge.

4 For,[i] lo, the kings were assembled, they passed by together.

5 They saw it, and so they marvelled; they were troubled, and hasted away.

6 Fear[j] took hold upon them there, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

7 Thou[k] breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind.

9 We[o] have thought of thy loving-kindness, O God, in the midst of thy temple.

10 According[q] to thy name, O God, so is thy praise unto the ends of the earth: [r]thy right hand is full of righteousness.

11 Let mount Zion rejoice, let the daughters of Judah be glad, [s]because of thy judgments.

12 Walk[t] about Zion, and go round about her: [u]tell the towers thereof.

13 Mark ye well her [5]bulwarks, [6]consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generation following.

intended to be sung during the solemn service. It is in every way adapted for such an event. D.—O clap your hands. There are feelings and sentiments which words cannot express, and then the aid of action is commanded, and specially the hands as the organs and emblems of all activity. See 2 Ki. 11. 12. C.

Ver. 3. He shall subdue, &c. Not by any earthly, but by a spiritual conquest; for the 'weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty (nevertheless) to the pulling down of strongholds,' 2 Co. 10. 4. C.

Ver. 5. This psalm when written was a prophecy, but is now a record of the ascension of Christ, Ep. 4. 8, and of that joy with which the heavenly powers hailed his triumph over sin and death. C.

Ver. 9. The princes of the people are gathered together, even the people of the God of Abraham. This verse carries us beyond the ascension, to a period when Jew and Gentile shall be 'both one in Christ'—not merely in principle, as they are now, but in fact, according to the sure word of prophecy. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold, my soul, our exalted Lord Jesus, terrible to his enemies because of their rejection of him; but kind to believers in blessing them throughout all the world in himself—in choosing for them, when having faith, their portion in the new-covenant and in the heavenly state! Behold how, amidst surrounding troops of hymning angels, he ascended on high; had all power in heaven and earth given him: and by his gospel, word, and gracious influence, he gathers the nations to himself, that they may be blessed together with faithful Abraham; and even makes the rulers of nations submit to his yoke or helpful to his cause!

PSALM XLVIII. Ver. 6. That these words are not a historic reference or narrative, but a historic prophecy, will be evident from considering that they introduce to faith the perpetual establishment of Zion, ver. 8, whereas it yet presents to sense nothing but the feature of 'perpetual desolations.' C.

Ver. 8. In the city of our God: God will establish it for ever. How can this be reconciled with the destruction of all things foretold, 2 Pe. 3. 7? Most easily: God will establish Zion for ever in the person of her King, in the happiness of her subjects, in the fulfilment of her prophecies, the realization of her types, the demonstration of her faith, the beauty of her holiness, and the brightness of her glory. C.

Ver. 11. The daughters of Judah. Not the inferior cities, but literally, the daughters of Judah: as Miriam and her attendants rejoiced at passing the Red Sea, Ex. 15. 20, 21; or the women out of all the cities of Israel, to hail and celebrate the victory of David over Goliath, 1 Sa. 18. 6, 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great, and greatly to be praised, is our exalted Redeemer. Glorious is his gospel-church in which his presence dwells. And in a marvellous manner hath he, in instances unnumbered, been known for her refuge. When ravaging invaders and furious persecutors have concurred in attempts to destroy her, their plots and fury have often issued in their own ruin, and his people's triumph and praise of his kindness. Quickly shall her remaining enemies be undone; and no gates of hell have, or ever shall, prevail against her. Her bulwarks, palaces of ordinances, and officers, are built on Jesus the Rock of ages, and are protected by his arm of omnipotence. Let us then declare his wondrous works and our relation to him to posterity, as an honour to him, and an encouragement to them to come and cleave to him and triumph in his praise.

PSALM XLIX. Ver. 1. Four things prove the prophetic speaker to be Christ. (1) The confident spirit, and universality of the call, as of one entitled to audience, ver. 1. (2) The theme of wisdom so confidently announced, ver. 2. (3) The direct quotation of ver. 4 by Mat. 13. 35, as fulfilled in the parables of our Lord. (4) The confident trust of the speaker in a glorious resurrection and acceptance with God, ver. 15. C.

Ver. 5. The leading idea of the psalm is embodied in this verse. Confident in the power and mercy of God the writer lays aside all fear. Evil days may come; life may not all be sunshine; but in the darkest days of sorrow and suffering God will save him. The word translated 'heels,' means also the impression of the heel, the footprint. Then it came to mean 'a lier in wait,' or one who watches for an advantage. This is its meaning here; and the sense of the clause therefore is: 'When I am exposed to the craft and cunning of those who lie in wait for me, what have I in reality to fear? God is on my side.' P.—Heels. This word is translated by high authorities supplanters, that is, false Christs, seeking to supplant me in name—of the world supplanting me in the hearts, and of worldly rulers supplanting me in my authority over the kingdoms of this world. But does it not rather signify the iniquity of his followers—of Judas who betrayed him, of the disciples who forsook him, and of the whole host of believers whose accumulated iniquities he bore in his body on the tree? C.

Ver. 10. Wise men die. And if even the wise man cannot rescue himself from temporal death, how can any save himself or his brother from death spiritual and eternal? C.

Ver. 12. That is, when he so far forgets himself as altogether to neglect salvation, or trusts to his own power to avoid death, or his own merit to meet the judgment. C.

Ver. 13. The traditionary or writer sayings of men are often called immortal, though their authors be dead; and works the least godly are, alas! often the most popular. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how the hearts of men cleave to earthly enjoyments! The poor need as much to be warned against envy and discontentment as the rich against pride and carnal confidence. And the truths of God ought to be inculcated with the greatest seriousness, both by word and by example. Never ought saints (no, not when they suffer the charges and chastisements of their sins of conversation) to abandon themselves to unbelieving fears and doubts of God's all-sufficiency and love.—The day of death is a trying time with respect to true happiness. And then a sense of God's love, and a prospect of eternal glory, are infinitely more precious than thousands of gold and silver. O the dreadful folly of most men, who seek for, hold delight in, and depend on things of this world as if they were their God, their ALL IN ALL! and yet

ZION GATE—ON MT. ZION, WHERE DAVID LIVED. [Psalms, xlviii:2]—"Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King." The Zion Gate is called in Arabic, "The Gate of the Prophet David." It is on the summit of the ridge of Zion between the Armenian convent and the tomb of David. The Zion Gate opens into several footpaths which lead down to the valley of Hinnom. We pass through this gate to go to the tomb of David in the possession of the Mohammedans. A little further north, near the wall, is the Armenian church with the house of Caiaphas, and between the two is the place the monks point out as the spot where the cock crowed and where Peter wept after denying his Master. The Armenian church is almost due southwest of Zion Gate.

PSALM XLIX.

1 The psalmist calleth upon all the earth to join him in his meditations. 5 He showeth the vanity of trusting in worldly wealth.

To the chief musician, A psalm for[1] the sons of Korah.

HEAR this,[a] all ye people; give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world:

2 Both low and high, rich and poor, together.

3 My[b] mouth shall speak of wisdom; and the meditation of my heart shall be of understanding.

4 I[c] will incline mine ear to a parable; I will open my dark saying upon the harp.

5 Wherefore[d] should I fear in the days of evil, when the [e]iniquity of my heels shall compass me about?

6 They that [g]trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches;

7 None[h] of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him;

8 (For[i] the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth for ever;)[2]

9 That[j] he should still live for ever, and not see corruption.

10 For he seeth [k]that wise men die, likewise the fool and the brutish person perish, and leave their wealth to others.

11 Their[l] inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever, and their dwelling-places to all generations;[3] they call their lands after their own names.

12 Nevertheless [n]man being in honour abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish.

13 This their way is their folly; yet their posterity approve their sayings.[4] Selah.

14 Like[o] sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and [p]the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their [q]beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling.[5]

15 But God [r]will redeem my soul from the power[6] of the grave:[7] for he shall receive me. Selah.

16 Be[s] not thou afraid when one is made rich, when the [t]glory of his house is increased:

17 For[u] when he dieth he shall carry nothing away; his glory shall not descend after him.

18 Though while he lived[8] he [v]blessed his soul, (and men [w]will praise thee when thou doest well to thyself,)

19 He[9] shall go [y]to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see light.[1]

20 Man[z] that is in honour, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish.[2]

PSALM L.

1 The majesty of God in the church. 5 His command to gather his saints. 7 The pleasure of God is not in ceremonies, 14 but in sincerity of obedience.

A psalm [a]of [1]Asaph.[2]

THE mighty[b] God, even the LORD, hath spoken,[3] and called [c]the earth, from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.

2 Out of Zion, [d]the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.[4]

3 Our[e] God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.

4 He[g] shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may [h]judge his people.

5 Gather[i] my saints together unto me; those that [j]have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.

6 And[k] the heavens shall declare his righteousness: [l]for God is judge himself. Selah.

7 Hear,[n] O my people, and I will speak; O Israel, and I will testify against thee: I am God, even thy God.

8 I[o] will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices or thy burnt-offerings, to have been continually before me.

9 I[p] will take no bullock out of thy house, nor he-goats out of thy folds:

10 For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills.

11 I[q] know all the fowls of the mountains; and the wild beasts of the field are mine.[5]

12 If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: [r]for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof.

13 Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats?

14 Offer[s] unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the most High:

15 And[t] call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt [u]glorify [6]me.

16 But unto the wicked God saith, [v]What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth?

17 Seeing [w]thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee.

18 When thou sawest a thief, then [y]thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with adulterers.[7]

19 Thou[z] givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit.

20 Thou [a]sittest and speakest against thy brother; thou slanderest thine own mother's son.

21 These things hast thou done, and I [b]kept silence; thou [c]thoughtest that I was altogether how unavailable to ransom the soul, perpetuate the life, or preserve from hell! To judge of things aright we must weigh time with eternity. It is neither wealth nor poverty, but Jesus Christ's righteousness and grace, that can render us respected of God, or really happy, in time or eternity. It is redemption through his blood that gives hope in death. It is not their own vaunts, or the world's admiration, but the word of God, that adjusts men's real character. It is not what we have here, but what we can carry into the other world, that constitutes the true riches. They are only wise who consider their latter end. Nay, in death, the state of the most loathsome animal is infinitely preferable to that of the unregenerate sinner.

PSALM L. Ver. 3. A fire. A fire of the Spirit to baptize his children, Mat. 3. 11: a fire of judgment to consume the imperfections of his people, 1 Co. 3. 13, and the strongholds of his enemies, He. 12. 25. C.

Ver. 6. The heavens shall declare his righteousness. The heavens, into which Christ has entered, as a 'Lamb without spot,' will declare by the fact of his admission and appearance, and glory there, the perfect righteousness, in virtue of which he ascended to glory, and sits upon the throne. He. 9. 14, 24: 10. 12, 20.—God is judge. God is judge now by the books written; he will be judge hereafter by the opening of the books sitting upon the throne — the assembling of all nations, and the pronouncing of his final decision, Mat. 25. 31. C.

Ver. 8. Some forms of sacrifice, as the show bread, were continually, that is, without interruption, before God; others at short intervals, as the morning and evening sacrifice; others at longer intervals, as the passover and sacrifices of atonement. But all were mere pictures, of which Christ was the great original—and those pictures are of no value before God, but as they testify to 'Christ in us, the hope of glory.' C.

Ver. 18. This was verified when the high-priest and his friends consented with Judas, who was a thief, Jn. 12. 6, and were partakers in guilt with an adulterous generation, Mar. 18. 38. C. such an one as thyself: but I [d]will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes.

22 Now consider this, ye that [e]forget God, lest I [f]tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver.

23 Whoso[h] offereth praise glorifieth me: and to him[3] that ordereth his conversation aright will I show the [i]salvation of God.

PSALM LI.

1 David prayeth for remission of his sins, whereof he maketh a deep confession. 6 He prayeth for sanctification. 13 God delighteth not in sacrifice, but in sincerity. 18 He prayeth for the church.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David, [a]when Nathan the prophet came unto him, after he had gone in to Bath-sheba.

HAVE mercy[b] upon me, O God, according to thy loving-kindness; according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies [c]blot out my transgressions.[1]

2 Wash[d] me throughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.

3 For [e]I acknowledge my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me.

4 Against[g] thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight: [h]that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest.

5 Behold, I [i]was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive[3] me.

6 Behold, [j]thou desirest truth in the inward parts; and in the hidden part thou shalt make me to know wisdom.

7 Purge[k] me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.

8 Make[l] me to hear joy[4] and gladness; that the bones which thou hast [m]broken may rejoice.

9 Hide[n] thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities.[5]

10 Create[p] in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit[6] within me.

11 Cast[q] me not away from thy presence; and take not thy [r]Holy Spirit from me.

12 Restore unto me the [s]joy of thy salvation; and [t]uphold me with thy free Spirit.

13 Then[u] will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee.

14 Deliver me from blood-guiltiness,[7] O God, thou God of my salvation; and [v]my tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness.

15 O LORD, [w]open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise.

16 For thou [y]desirest not sacrifice, else would I give it:[8] thou delightest not in burnt-offering.

17 The[z] sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

18 Do[a] good in thy good pleasure unto Zion; build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

19 Then[b] shalt thou be pleased with the [c]sacrifices of righteousness,[9] with burnt-offering, and whole burnt-offering: then shall they offer bullocks upon thine altar.

PSALM LII.

1 David, reproving the spiteful malice of Doeg, prophesieth his destruction. 6 The righteous shall rejoice at it. 8 David, in confidence of God's mercy, giveth him thanks.

To the chief musician, Maschil, A psalm of David, [a]when Doeg the Edomite [b]came and told Saul, and said unto him, David is come to the house of Ahimelech.

WHY boastest[c] thou thyself in mischief, O mighty man? [d]the goodness of God endureth continually.

2 Thy[e] tongue deviseth mischiefs; like a sharp razor, working deceitfully.

3 Thou [g]lovest evil more than good, and lying rather than to speak righteousness. [h]Selah.

4 Thou lovest [i]all-devouring words, O thou deceitful tongue.[2]

5 God[k] shall likewise destroy thee[3] for ever: he shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwelling-place, and [l]root thee out of the land of the living. Selah.

6 The[k] righteous also shall see, and fear, and shall laugh at him:

7 Lo, this is the man that made not God

1 This psalm is a beautiful model for prayer—logical in arrangement; simple, yet earnest in language; comprehensive in scope. Ver. 20. Christ, who 'came unto his own,' was not only 'despised and rejected' by his brethren; but the 'days of his flesh' were spent amidst the 'strife of tongues,' and he sat as a mark for every arrow of slander. C.

Ver. 22. Ye that forget God. Few are so atheistical as to 'forget God,' as he exists in a mere opinion; but how many forget him as the 'living God,' seeing, knowing, and judging all things! C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the majesty, extensive the high domain, and terrible the wrath of God! And great is his care of those who have accepted through faith Jesus Christ and have walked in him as they received him. But God hath full power to change the positive institutions of his own worship at his pleasure, and to reject his long professed people for their contempt of his Son. No obedience is acceptable to him but what proceeds from the faith of his being our own God in Christ. To obey was always better than sacrifice; and prayer to and praise of God more than burnt-offerings. And since Jesus' death, and Jerusalem's destruction, Jewish ceremonies are not only vain but hurtful. But never is our gracious God more ready to hear our supplications than in a day of trouble: and what grateful vows and thanksgivings doth he then deserve at our hands! Notwithstanding antecedent gospel declarations, how rarely doth the Son of man, when he cometh, either in remarkable mercy or judgment, find faith in the earth, or indeed aught but empty formalities and gross wickedness. And none are worse than profane clergymen, stained with hypocrisy, covetousness, whoredom, slander of Christ and his saints, blasphemy of God, and everything horrid. But graciously he warns ere he strikes. And to bow before the sceptre of his grace, receive his gospel offers, and practise holiness in his fear, is the way to escape the rod of his judgments and to share his eternal favours.

PSALM LI. Ver. 1. According unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions. The Hebrew title attributes this psalm to David penitentially bowing to the rebuke of Nathan, 2 Sa. xi. &c. Horsley, however, justly observes that this title cannot be correct, as ver. 4 describes the sin of the speaker as solely against God, whereas that of David was also against both Uriah and Bath-sheba. Who then is the speaker? The answer lies (1) In comparing Ps. 40. 6 with He. 10. 5, and these with Ps. 51. 16. (2) From considering that, though Christ is certainly the speaker in Ps. xl., he nevertheless confesses the oppression of the 'iniquities laid upon him,' and in that just sense calls them his own, in correspondence with Ps. 25. 11; 32. 5. (3) That none but Christ could truly utter the perpetual view of sin described (ver. 3), 'My sin is ever before me'—even the sin of his people which he bore, the defilement of which he ever saw, and the pressure of which he ever felt. C.

Ver. 5. The iniquity and sin belonged, by ordinary descent, to the mother; but the 'body prepared' for Christ by the power of the Holy Ghost, Mat. 1. 20, was itself holy, and his spirit filled with truth and wisdom, and his life with righteousness, He. 7. 2, 6. C.

Ver. 7. Hyssop was employed in sprinkling the blood of the sacrifice in the ceremonial cleansing of the leper, Le. 14. 4–6. Christ, by his own blood, 1 Jn. 1. 7, cleansed away our sins, which he 'bore in his own body on the tree,' 1 Pe. 2. 24. C.

Ver. 13. Though Christ was always a teacher of righteousness, it was not until the 'joy of salvation,' ver. 12, had been restored after his resurrection from the dead, that his full qualifications as a Saviour were developed in the conversion of sinners. See Ac. 2. 41. C.

Ver. 14. Deliver me from blood-guiltiness. Not from the sin of murder committed, but from any guilt that would arise from neglecting to 'declare all the counsel of God' to sinners. See Ac. 18. 6; 20. 26. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Into what grievous iniquities the best of men, if left to themselves, quickly fall!—but never into any from which their gracious God may not recover them. Such as sin publicly ought to take to themselves public shame, for the honour of their God and for a warning to others. Sin is a heavy burden to a penitent soul. It forces from his heart importunate cries for pardoning and purging mercy. And nothing less than promises of mercy can encourage him to pray in faith: and nothing less than merciful pardons and cleansings through Jesus' blood can save him from hell. God's blotting out of sin fixes a penitential remembrance of it, and repeated grief on account of it in the heart of a saint. And a heart truly broken for sin never seeks exculpation, but desires to take all shame and confusion. The exceeding sinfulness of sin his strength; but [t]trusted in the abundance of his riches, and strengthened himself in his [u]wickedness.[5]

8 But I am[6] like a green olive-tree in the house of God:[7] I [v]trust in the mercy of God for ever and ever.

9 I [w]will praise thee for ever, because thou hast done it:[8] and [x]I will wait on thy name; for it[9] is good before thy saints.

PSALM LIII.

1 David describeth the corruption of a natural man. 4 He convinceth the wicked by the light of their own conscience. 6 He wisheth to see the salvation of God.

To the chief musician upon Mahalath, Maschil, A psalm of David.

THE [a]fool[1] hath said in his heart, There is no God. [b]Corrupt are they, and have done abominable iniquity: there is none that doeth good.

2 God[c] looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, that did seek God.

3 Every[d] one of them is gone back; they are altogether become filthy: there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

4 Have the workers of iniquity [e]no knowledge? who [2]eat up my people as they eat bread: they have not called upon God.

5 There were they in great fear,[3] where no fear was; for God hath [h]scattered the bones of him that encampeth against thee: thou hast put them to shame, [i]because God hath despised them.

6 Oh that the salvation[4] of Israel were come out of Zion! When [j]God bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

[j] There is a close resemblance, not merely in sentiment but in language, between this psalm and Ps. xiv. 1 David in his prayer complaineth of his fearful case. 9 He prayeth against his enemies, of whose wickedness and treachery he complaineth. 16 He comforteth himself in God's preservation of him, and confusion of his enemies.

To the chief musician on [a]Neginoth, Maschil, A psalm of David.

GIVE ear[b] to my prayer, O God; and hide not thyself from my supplication.

lies in its opposition to God's nature and law. And true penitents justify God in all his judgments, however heavy upon them. No person was ever really humbled for sin till brought to see the inward and natural corruption of his heart. It is not outward forms, but inward reality of grace, that God primarily requires; and it is he alone that offers it to us. He alone must forgive our sins, purging our conscience by the blood of his Son. He alone must sanctify and renew our hearts, pour out his Spirit, restore our joys, and grant us his comfortable presence. What anguish and breaking of soul, loads of guilt, and of sorrow for it, can produce! But God who gives the pardon must also give the comfort of it. Renewed souls count the service of God the most perfect freedom: and the experience of God's remarkable kindness really animates to zeal for his glory, the instruction of others, and the welfare of his church. Broken-hearted penitents, viewing themselves as Achans in the camp, are the most earnest wrestlers with God for the happiness of the church. And all the returns of service and praise to God therein must be founded on his special favours, received or secured in Christ and his blood.

PSALM LII. Ver. 1. The occasion on which this psalm was written is stated in the title: and the affecting narrative may be seen in 1 Sa. xxi. The psalm is divided into three parts. In the first (ver. 1–4), the character of the writer's enemy and calumniator is briefly but graphically depicted. In the second (ver. 5–7), the terrible punishment in store for him is described. In the third, the psalmist shows his own security and trust in God. P.

——Mighty man. An appeal to man, who, when exalted to power, is so often perverted by pride, that 'the insolence of office' has become a proverb. O ye mighty, humble yourselves before God, and remember ye are but dust! C.

Ver. 5. God successively roots out the wicked: and the destruction of the 'great city Babylon,' Re. 18. 21, will complete the work of extirpation. C.

Ver. 9. Thou hast done it—appointed me to this unchanging office and glory of Prophet, Priest, and King—a Saviour, He. 6. 20. 7. 16; 24. 28. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Hardened indeed is the sinner who abuses the goodness of God to glory in his wickedness. Malice, lying, and craft are the abhorrence of God and the image of the devil; and quickly shall they render men miserable in life and lost in hell. Quickly shall those who trust in wealth or wickedness remove into everlasting woe. And the striking judgments of God on the wicked ought to be carefully observed and improved as warnings, while we thank him for sending us his Son so that he is the means of our deliverance. God marvellously founds the prosperity and promised honours of his people on their active faith. And what he has promised we must patiently wait for. None that trust in his mercy shall be disappointed, but ever flourish in grace and triumph in praise.

PSALM LIII. Ver. 4. My people was the specific title given to Israel in Egypt, Ex. 3. 7; 5. 1, and he who so names them here can be no other than Christ, 'the Lord that bought them,' the Angel of the covenant 'who redeemed them.' C.

Ver. 5. There—that is, where the enemy had cruelly attempted to devour God's people.—Who were in 'great fear?' The people of God; and while they trembled, 'no fear was,' for God immediately 'scattered the bones' of all their assailants. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a fountain of atheism is in our hearts! What folly—what filth—what evil—is in every sin? and yet what unnumbered acts and fearful fruits of it everywhere abound in the world! But fear and shame shall at last overwhelm the sinners, particularly those who ate up, persecuted, and oppressed the people of God. Even the marvellous salvation of men through Christ shall contribute to the everlasting undoing of obstinate sinners. We are taught in the Scriptures that Christ is a Saviour of life or a Saviour of death.

PSALM LIV. Ver. 1. Judge me. As no sinner would dare to pray for judgment, and as the humble penitent ever cries for mercy, he that utters this petition can be no other than 'the holy One of God,' prophetically described in the days of his flesh. C.

Ver. 5. 'In thy truth,' i.e. in thy regard for what is just and right. Inflict upon them the punishment which their crimes deserve. There is no sinful enmity or hatred here; there are no vengeful feelings on the part of the psalmist. Justice is what he demands: and he demands it on the grounds of public weal and individual safety. P.

Ver. 7. A prophetic vision of that blessed period when 'all trouble' shall cease in the body of Christ the church, Ep. 1. 22, and the 'last enemy' shall be destroyed, which is death, 1 Co. 15. 25, 26. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The prayer of faith is a sovereign remedy in every distress: and all salvation is of God, who never fails those that seek him. Nearest neighbours and relations are often the saints' bitterest enemies. And when men leave God out of their sight there is no wickedness too great for them. But if he be our helper he will soon raise us up friends and rid us of our enemies, according to his promise. The soul may rejoice that has the security of God's infallible promise. And past experience is the ground of cordial thanksgiving, and the earnest of continual support and future deliverance.

PSALM LV. Ver. 2. The speaker is to be ascertained, 1. By some parallel psalm already expounded by New Testament quotation. 2. By some internal sentiment, necessarily confined to an individual character. For the first point, see Ps. 69. 5; Ac. 1. 20, then compare Ps. 55. 12–15, 20, 21; and as Christ speaks in Ps. lxix., he also speaks in its perfect parallel, Ps. lv. The second point directs us to ver. 16–18, 22, where the positive character of the speaker's faith demonstrates that speaker to be Christ: see also ver. 4, 5, where the agony can characterize none but our Lord in Gethsemane, Lu. 22. 44. C.

Ver. 13. Mine equal—in all the natural conditions of humanity—in descent from Abraham—in claim to the promises—in possession of the oracles of God—in access to him through the ordinances of religion—and in all the familiarities of a kind, condescending, and holy intercourse. C.

Ver. 15. Let death seize upon them, &c. This judgment was exemplified in the case of Korah and his company, Nu. 16, 30, 33; and will be still more awfully inflicted in the destructive judgment of the mystical Babylon, Re. 18. 8. C.

5 Fearfulness[g] and trembling are come upon me, and horror hath overwhelmed me.[1]

6 And I said, [h]Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest.

7 Lo, then would I wander far off, and remain in the wilderness. Selah.[2]

8 I[i] would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest.[3]

9 [4]Destroy,[5] O LORD, and[j] divide their tongues: for I have seen [k]violence and strife in the city.

10 Day and night they go about it upon the walls thereof; [l]mischief also and sorrow are in the midst of it.

11 Wickedness is in the midst thereof; deceit and guile depart not from her streets.

12 For [m]it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it: neither was it he that hated me that did magnify himself against me; then I would have hid myself from him:

13 But[o] it was thou, a man mine equal,[6] my[p] guide, and mine acquaintance.[7]

14 We[q] took sweet counsel[8] together, and walked unto the house of God in company.

15 Let death seize upon them, and let them go[r] down quick into hell:[9] for wickedness is in their dwellings, and among them.[*]

16 As[s] for me, I will call upon God; and the LORD shall save me.

17 Evening,[t] and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud; and he shall hear my voice.

18 He[u] hath delivered my soul in peace from the battle that was against me: [v]for there were many with me.[2]

19 God shall [w]hear, and afflict them, even he that abideth[3] of old. Selah. Because they have no changes, therefore they fear not God.[4]

20 He [x]hath put forth his hands against such as be at peace with him: he hath broken[5] his covenant.

21 The[y] words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart: his words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords.

22 Cast[z] thy burden[6] upon the LORD, and he shall sustain thee: [a]he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved.

23 But thou, O God, [b]shalt bring them down into the pit of destruction: bloody and deceitful men[7] shall not live out half their days;[8] but I will trust in thee.

PSALM LVI.

1 David, praying to God in confidence of his word, complaineth of his enemies. 9 He professeth his confidence in God's word, and promiseth to praise him.

To the chief musician upon Jonath-elem-rechokim, Michtam[1] of David, when the [c]Philistines took him in Gath.

BE merciful[b] unto me, O God; for [2]man would swallow me up: he fighting daily oppresseth me.

2 Mine enemies[3] would daily [c]swallow me up: for they be [d]many that fight against me, O [e]thou most High.[4]

3 What[g] time I am afraid, I will trust in thee.

4 In[h] God I will praise his word: in God I have put my trust;[5] I will not fear what flesh can do unto me.

5 Every day they [i]wrest my words:[6] all their thoughts are against me for evil.

6 They[j] gather themselves together, they hide themselves, [k]they mark my steps, when they wait for my soul.

7 Shall[l] they escape by iniquity? in thine anger [m]cast down the people, O God.[7]

8 Thou[o] tellest my wanderings: put thou my tears into thy bottle: are they not in thy book?

9 When[p] I cry unto thee, then shall mine enemies turn back: this I know; [q]for God is for me.

10 In[r] God will I praise his word: in the LORD will I praise his word.

11 In[s] God have I put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me.

12 Thy[t] vows are upon me, O God: I will render praises unto thee.

13 For[u] thou hast delivered my soul from death:[8] wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before God in the light of the living?

---

Ver. 22. Cast thy burden. The Father here addresses his beloved Son Jesus, when he 'bore our griefs and carried our sorrows,' and through him he addresses every believer, saying, 'Cast your care upon him (the Lord), for he careth for you,' 1 Pe. 5. 7. C.

Ver. 23. Turbulent combinations of bloody and deceitful men will not be judicially permitted to live half the days to which, as peaceful individuals, they would naturally have attained. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While here, as in a glass, we behold Jesus, hated, reproached, betrayed, and murdered at Jerusalem; and the judgment of God overtaking his persecutors in the destruction and dispersion of the Jewish nation, let us observe that the best of men are ordinarily most exposed to the hatred and reproach of a carnal world: and good men may, in great trials, find their fears strong and their faith shaken; but it is a great mercy that they have Jesus' bosom and the state of glory above to flee to when they can get no peace nor rest in this world. The city, the church of God, may soon be fearfully corrupted by the influence of wicked rulers. And none are more apt to promote the corruption or betray the saints than apostate or empty professors. There has always been a sad mixture of such in the church. Carnal policy and selfish ends may carry men far and long in a religious profession, even where there is no sincerity of heart. Earnest prayers of faith are effectual to bring salvation from God. How shameful then is it that they are so little used; and that the stated meals for our bodies are more frequent than those for our souls! It is God's being on our side that raises us above fear from our adversaries. Too often want of trouble hardens men in bold impiety. But impenitence and perdition are inseparably linked together. Falsehood and perfidy will quickly find a holy God. But happy, happy for ever, are they who trust in the Lord, and by the prayers of faith cast all their burdens, troubles, works, and cares upon God, as their God and Father in Christ!

PSALM LVI. Ver. 8. David wandered over nearly the whole of southern Palestine when Saul was pursuing him. In no spot was he safe, save amid the strongholds of the mountains. There is allusion in the mention of the bottle for tears, to the very ancient custom of preserving tears in little glass vessels, called lachrymatories. The last clause is somewhat obscure. The meaning would seem to be that all the afflictions and sorrows which visited him were well known to God. P.——A map of the recorded 'wanderings,' or journeying of our Lord, is one of the most impressive sights for the human eye. Of his 'tears,' we know that twice he publicly wept, Lu. 19. 41; Jn. 11. 35; and that they flowed more frequently than recorded, Paul clearly declares. But his wanderings give us rest; his tears secured our joy. C.

Ver. 10. See note on ver. 4. In God—that is, in God, as revealed by his name or attribute of power to Abraham, Ge. 17. 1; and in Jehovah, as revealed to Moses by his name or attribute of uncaused and eternal existence, Ex. 3. 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How inveterate is the enmity of the wicked against Jesus Christ and his people! With unanimity, cruelty, malice, restlessness, and craft, they exert themselves to destroy them, while they spy out their ways, wrest their words, and wait for their halting. But blessed are those trials which drive us nearer to God. Strong faith is necessary when troubles and dangers are very great. But the unchangeable promise of God, yea and amen in Christ, is not only sufficient ground of trust but of cordial praise. No enemies that we can have are too great for God to humble, or too secure, strong, or daring to withstand his blow. They who have him for their friend need not fear the impotent threats or strokes of human worms.

PSALM LVII.

1 David in prayer fleeing unto God, complaineth of his dangerous case. 7 He encourageth himself to praise God.

To the chief musician, Al-taschith, Michtam[1] of David, [a]when he fled from Saul in the cave.

BE merciful[b] unto me, O God; be merciful unto me; for my soul trusteth in thee: yea, in[c] the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast.

2 I will cry unto [d]God most high; unto God that[e] performeth all things for me.

3 He[g] shall send from heaven, and save me from the reproach of him that would swallow me[2] up. Selah. God [h]shall send forth his mercy and his truth.

4 My soul is among [i]lions: and I lie even among them that are set on fire,[3] even the sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword.[4]

5 Be[j] thou exalted, O God, above the heavens; let thy glory be above all the earth.

6 They[k] have prepared a net for my steps; my soul is bowed down: they have digged a pit before me, into the midst whereof they are fallen themselves. Selah.

7 My[l] heart is fixed,[5] O God, my heart is fixed; I will sing and give praise.[6]

8 Awake[m] up, my glory;[7] awake, psaltery and harp: I myself will awake early.

9 I will praise thee, O LORD, among the people:[8] I will sing unto thee among the nations:

10 For[o] thy mercy is great unto the heavens,[9] and thy truth unto the clouds.

11 Be[p] thou exalted, O God, above the heavens; let thy glory be above all the earth.

PSALM LVIII.

1 This verse affords a key to the whole psalm. In strong and indignant language the writer denounces the wicked and relentless persecutors of God's people; he shows that nothing short of the extermination of the guilty will satisfy them. He therefore prays in earnestness for God to interfere in defence of his own. He prays for—he demands justice; and he shows it at the exercise of that justice will re-establish the drooping faith of God's people, and prove to them that 'he is a God who judgeth in the earth.'—P.

PSALM LIX.

1 David, in great danger, prayeth to be saved from his enemies. 6 He complaineth of their cruelty. 8 He trusteth in God. 11 He prayeth against them. 16 He promiseth to praise God continually.

To the chief musician, Al-Taschith, Michtam[1] of David; [a]when Saul sent, and they watched the house to kill him.

DELIVER me[b] from mine enemies, O my God: defend me[2] from them that rise up against me.

2 Deliver me from the [c]workers of iniquity, and save me from bloody men.

3 For, lo, [d]they lie in wait for my soul: the mighty are gathered against me; [e]not for my transgression, nor for my sin, O LORD.

Saints may, nay must, weep in prayer for a time; but God regards every word, every tear; and will soon make them issue in praise to the weepers and in lasting ruin to their enemies. It is reasonable then that vows made, as well as mercies received, should animate us to trust in, pray to, serve and praise him, while we live in the enjoyment of the light of his countenance.

PSALM LVII. Ver. 2. This psalm being quoted, Ro. 15. 9, forms a key for opening the true meaning of many parallel psalms. The complainant is there found to be Christ, 'offering prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death,' He. 5. 7. C.

Ver. 3. Messiah was reproached with meanness of rank, want of literature, base companionship, madness, leaguing with devils, sedition, blasphemy; and finally with the death of a malefactor—the cross. From all he was saved, by 'the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven,' 1 Pe. 1. 12, and raising him from the dead, Ro. 1. 4. C.

Ver. 10. Unto the clouds—which, though apparently the most variable of all things, yet constantly testify by the rainbow the truth of the divine covenant, Ge. 9. 12–17. C.

REFLECTIONS. — While saints continue on earth they will still need prayer from their heart and mercy from their God. For into what devouring beasts, and deceitful devils, hath sin transformed their enemies! Heart, lips, and hands appear all animated by infernal malice and craft. But they have a God of salvation, a new relation in Jesus' blood, to secure their safety from all their enemies. And often, because of blindness, these enemies perish in the snares which they had laid for others. With what fixed thought, wonder, desire, and delight, with what ardour of inward powers, ought we then to praise and glorify God for the mercy that made and fulfils, and the faithfulness which establishes, every gracious promise! And with great fervour ought we to desire our Almighty Lord to glorify himself in heaven above and in all the earth below.

PSALM LVIII. Ver. 1. That Ps. xxxv. is a psalm of Christ, is obvious from comparing ver. 19 with Jn. 15. 25; and its parallelism with Ps. lviii. conducts to the conclusion that the congregation (ver. 1) is an appeal against the Sanhedrim who pronounced sentence against our Lord. C.

Ver. 4. Deaf adder. The deafness here attributed to the adder, is not deafness to sound, but to charming; so the ear of our Lord's judges was not deaf to evidence, but to just conclusions.—Note, The many statements made by travellers concerning serpent-charming in the East, seem to be nothing more than the evidences of inattention and credulity of false pretensions, and successful juggling: nor do they receive any countenance; but, on the contrary, a flat contradiction, from the statement of the psalmist. C.

Ver. 6. Break their teeth, O God. For explanation and vindication of this and similar prayers in relation to the enemies of our Lord, see note on Ps. 5. 10; 35. 8. C.

Ver. 9. Before your pots can feel the thorns. Before the blaze from the dried thorn can ascend to the pot placed over it, the wicked shall be swept away: an expression of suddenness expressively equivalent to that of the apostle, 'in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye,' 1 Co. 15. 52. C.

REFLECTIONS. — What a plague to a church or nation are unjust rulers! Oppression by law is the most grievous tyranny; and good men often suffer by the partiality of unjust judges. Greatly humbling to such as see it is the wickedness of the human heart. And it makes those in whom it reigns earnest and obstinate in sinful courses. Neither the terrors of God's wrath nor the hopes of the gospel can effectually change it, only the Spirit of God can help to instruction. But it is a mercy for the saints that God cares for and protects them amidst such barbarous, brutish, and deceitful men, who have power on their sides; that he restrains these enemies by his power so that they waste themselves. In a sudden and tremendous manner they are sometimes destroyed. And however the godly now pity the folly and bewail the conduct of sinners, they will hereafter see God's justice in their punishment and bewail in their ruin. At last God will make the most haughty and brutish to know that he governs the world; and that it is only in the way of holiness and virtue that real happiness is to be found.

PSALM LIX. Ver. 1. The speaker declaring his innocence from transgression, sin, or fault, ver. 3, 4, can surely be no other than Jesus, who, while 'he bore our sins,' because 'the Lord laid' them on him, was yet in his own person 'holy, harmless, and undefiled.' C.

Ver. 6. The dogs which, in eastern cities, have neither masters nor homes, go about the streets by night in search of food—always noisy, and often troublesome. C.

THE WALLS OF TIBERIAS—NEAR HAMATH, OF OLD TESTAMENT TIMES. [Psalms,, lxviii:27.]—"There is little Benjamin with their ruler, the princes of Judah and their council, the princes of Zebulun, and the princes of Naphtali." Tiberias was a city of Zebulun, and was formerly occupied, according to Joshua, xix:35, by Rakkath, and is also near the hot baths referred to in Joshua, xix:35 as Hamath. The walls of the city were rebuilt by Justinian. The city was captured by the Persians under Khosrees in 614 B. C. In 1738 Dhahr-el-'Amr built a fort on the hill north of Tiberias and repaired the walls of the city, which suffered terrible damage through the earthquake of 1837. There are now in Tiberias about six thousand people, four thousand of whom are Jews, three hundred are Christians and the rest Moslems. This is one of the four sacred cities of the Jews in Palestine.

4 They [a]run and prepare themselves without my fault: [b]awake to help me,[3] and behold.

5 Thou therefore, [c]O LORD God of hosts, the God of Israel, awake to visit all the [d]heathen: be[k] not merciful to any wicked [e]transgressors.[5] Selah.[6]

6 They[l] return at evening: they make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city.

7 Behold, [m]they belch out with their mouth: swords are in their lips: for [n]who, say they, doth hear?

8 But thou, O LORD, shalt [o]laugh at them; thou shalt have all the heathen in derision.

9 Because[q] of his strength[7] will I wait upon thee: for God is my defence.[8]

10 The[r] God of my mercy shall prevent me: God[s] shall let me see my desire upon mine enemies.[9]

11 Slay[t] them not, lest my people forget: scatter[u] them by thy power; and bring them down, O LORD our shield.

12 For[v] the sin of their mouth, and the words of their lips, let them even be taken in their pride; and for cursing and lying which they speak.

13 Consume[x] them in wrath, consume them, that they may not be;[1] and[y] let them know that God ruleth in Jacob unto the ends of the earth. Selah.[2]

14 And [z]at evening let them return; and let them make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city.

15 Let them wander up and down for meat,[3] and grudge if they be not satisfied.[4]

16 But[a] I will sing of thy power; yea, I will sing aloud of thy mercy in the morning: for thou[b] hast been my defence and refuge in the day of my trouble.

17 Unto[c] thee, O my strength, will I sing: for God is my defence, and the God of my mercy.

PSALM LX.

1 David, complaining to God of former judgments, 4 now, upon better hope, prayeth for deliverance. 6 Comforting himself in God's promises, he craveth that help whereon he trusteth.

To the chief musician [a]upon Shushan-eduth, Michtam[1] of David, to teach; when he strove with Aram-naharaim and with Aram-zobah,[2] when Joab returned, and smote of Edom in the Valley of Salt twelve thousand.

O GOD, [b]thou hast cast us off, thou hast scattered[3] us, thou hast been displeased; O[c] turn thyself to us again.

PSALM LXI.

1 David fleeth to God in prayer upon his former experience. 4 He voweth perpetual service unto him, because of past, and in prospect of future mercies.

To the chief musician upon [a]Neginah, A psalm of David.

HEAR my[b] cry, O God; attend unto my prayer.

2 From[c] the end of the earth[1] will I cry unto thee, when [d]my heart is overwhelmed: lead me to [e]the Rock that is higher than I.

3 For[g] thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy.

4 I[h] will abide in thy tabernacle for ever; I will trust[2] in the covert of thy wings.[3] Selah.[4]

5 For thou, O God, [i]hast heard my vows: thou hast given me [j]the heritage of those that fear thy name.

6 Thou wilt prolong the king's life;[5] and his years as many generations.[6]

7 He shall abide [k]before God for ever: O prepare [l]mercy and truth, which may preserve him.

---

Ver. 10. My desire. Not the revengeful desire of personal gratification by their punishment; but the holy desire of seeing their wicked counsels frustrated, and their impious combination dissolved. See ver. 11. C.

Ver. 11. Slay them not. Had the Jews and heathens who combined and plotted against Christ, Ps. ii.: Ac. ii., been utterly cut off, as for their sins they deserved, a large portion of the Scriptures would now be nearly unintelligible—and some of their brightest evidences almost extinguished. They still abide, lest believers should 'forget' any record either of the 'goodness' or 'severity of God,' Ro. 11. 22. C.

Ver. 14. This prophecy is still literally fulfilled. The poor unbelieving Jew 'returns,' and stealthily, 'in the evening, goes round about the city,' and is called 'a dog,' in contempt, by the Gentiles who tread under foot the home of his fathers. In Zion, the Jew and the dog are alike despised and homeless. O Lord! O Lord! how long? Appear in thy Glory; and repair and build thy Zion! Ps. cii. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Firm faith of our spiritual interest in God encourages to bold supplications in a day of trouble. None can destroy if he defend us. Though none be innocent before God, they may be so before men, at least with respect to particular crimes. And such innocence, though it cannot protect us from evil men, may encourage our appeals to God for redress. It is common for sinners to think that God overlooks their wickedness; but the awful punishment thereof will make them know that he observed it. If we wait on God and depend on his mercy, we are sure of preservation in trials and even of prevention with favours. But how dreadful is their danger against whom the prayers of Christ and his people ascend! The tongue, defiled with slander, cursing, and falsehood, will bring to itself misery. The punishment which God inflicts on men, correspondent to their sins, will force them to know his existence and government: and the sufferings of Jesus Christ and his people shall at last issue in everlasting honours, triumphs in their God, and praises for his mercy and kindness.

PSALM LX. Ver. 1. Scattered. Though Israel and Judah were both led captive, they were never scattered among the nations (De. 28. 64) till after the crucifixion of our Lord. This psalm is therefore mainly a prophetic prayer prepared for the believing penitent Jews, when their heart shall turn to the Lord. C.

Ver. 5. Messiah, who is the 'truth,' ver. 4: Jn. 14. 6, here intercedes, because him 'the Father heareth always,' Jn. 11. 42, and prophesies the future allotment of the land to the children of 8 So[n] will I sing praise unto thy name for ever, that I may daily perform my vows.

PSALM LXII.

1 David, professing his confidence in God, discourageth his enemies. 5 In the same confidence he encourageth the godly. 9 No trust is to be put in worldly things. 11 Power and mercy belong to God.

To the chief musician, to [a]Jeduthun. A psalm of David.

TRULY[1] my[b] soul waiteth[2] upon God: [c]from him cometh my salvation.

2 He[d] only is my rock and my salvation; he is my defence;[3] I[e] shall not be greatly moved.

3 How[g] long will ye imagine mischief against a man? ye shall be slain all of you: [h]as a bowing wall shall ye be, and as a tottering fence.

4 They[i] only consult to cast him down from his excellency: they delight in lies: they bless with their mouth, but they curse inwardly.[4] Selah.[5]

5 My soul, [j]wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him.

6 He [k]only is my rock and my salvation; he is my defence: I shall not be moved.

7 In God is my salvation and my [l]glory: the rock of my strength, and my refuge, is in God.

8 Trust[n] in him at all times; ye people, [o]pour out your heart[6] before him: God is a refuge for us. Selah.

1 David's thirst after God. 4 His manner of blessing God. 9 His confidence of his enemies' destruction, and of his own rejoicing.

A psalm of David, [a]when he was in the wilderness of Judah.

O GOD, thou[b] art my God; [c]early will I seek thee: my soul [d]thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and [1]thirsty [2]land, where no water is;

2 To[e] see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary.

3 Because [f]thy loving-kindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee.

4 Thus [h]will I bless thee while I live: I will [i]lift up my hands in thy name.

5 My soul shall be [j]satisfied as with [3]marrow the restoration, the emblem also of the spiritual endowment and temporal blessedness of the Gentile church. C.

Ver. 6. Shechem was the first place in Canaan where ground was purchased for the permanent erection of the altar El-elohe-Israel, Ge. 33. 19. It was also the place to which Joshua summoned the tribes, and where they ratified their covenant with God, Jos. 24. 1, 25. It was also a city of refuge, Jos. 20. 7. It literally signifies a portion. From which four particulars, the meaning of the promise may be fully gathered. C.

Ver. 8. Washpot, or basin; not a phrase of contempt, or sign of servility, but rather of tender friendship and hospitable entertainment, see Lu. 7. 44; Jn. 13. 14, 15.—Cast my shoe. This phrase some interpret of taking possession; others of servile subjugation: is it not rather a token of friendly visitation, and peaceful entering into all the dwellings of the land, according to the eastern custom of putting off the shoes at the entrance of a dwelling or chamber?—Philistia! land of hereditary enemies, triumph in my victory of love that has conquered thy enmity. C.

Ver. 11. Vain is the help of man. Hence we learn that the victory expected is not that which can be wrought by the power or wrath of man—and not a victory over the literal Moab, Edom, and Philistia, but a spiritual victory of truth and love over the enemies of Jesus, represented by those nations. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What terrible rejection of God, what fearful convulsions and miseries in nations and churches, are occasioned by sin! But the deeper our distresses are, the more is the power and grace of our God magnified in our deliverance. Not David raised to a throne, according to promise, but Jesus exalted to his Father's right hand, and manifested in the truth of the gospel, is our banner displayed,—our means of victory and deliverance: let us then look to him and be saved. If sin has made deadly breaches, the sovereign grace of God can repair them. If we turn to him in prayer we may expect his return in mercy to us. Having loved us freely his right hand can save us. Our deliverance may be delayed, but faith triumphs. While Jesus subdues his opposers in mercy, or destroys all opposition, let us gladly receive him, and every promised blessing of grace or glory will necessarily follow. It may often happen that our bitterest enemies become our friends. At his pleasure he can unite nations and churches. Whatever difficulties then stand in our way let faith overcome them. Though we seem cast off, let us cleave fast to the promise, and trust and wait for the salvation of God. The greater our danger, our cries and prayers ought to be the more earnest. Let us put no trust in human helps; but in God's name and strength encounter our spiritual enemies; and so shall our victory be sure.

PSALM LXI. Ver. 1. That this is a prophetic prayer of the Messiah cannot be doubted, when the description of his immortal person and reign, ver. 6, 7, are considered. Of no other can they be spoken—of him they are literally true, therefore to him they infallibly belong. C.

Ver. 2. This is the prayer of an exile, far from home, and far from God's sanctuary. If written by David, as is probable, it must have been during Absalom's rebellion. Even then, when in trouble and in imminent danger, his faith in God does not desert him. Sustained by it he rises above temporary calamities and predicts his triumphant return to his home, and concludes with the noble declaration, 'So will I sing praise unto thy name for ever; that I may daily perform my vows.' P.——Higher than I. He that was 'in the form of God,' and who 'counted it not robbery to be equal with God,' having taken 'the form of a servant, and humbled himself,' uses these words, sustained by 'the joy set before him,' Phi. 2. 6–11; He. 12. 2. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Often are the saints overwhelmed with their sense of sin, their troubles, temptations, and fears. But whatever we be, and in whatever condition, a throne of grace and a prayer-hearing God are at hand to apply to. Jesus, the establishing and protecting Rock, is near; and his Word and Spirit are ready to lead us to him. And every former experience of protection or deliverance ought to encourage our flight to his refuge. Our trusting to his promises, perfections, and providences, and our cordial worship of him here, will issue in our being for ever with him in his mansions of glory above.—God hears our prayers, regards our vows, and will provide for us everything good. We are heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ. Since King Jesus for ever lives, for ever sits enthroned amidst mercy and truth, we may confidently expect to live and reign with him in everlasting felicity and praise. Let then the vows which we have made be conscientiously performed; and let praising of God and paying of our vows be our daily employment.

PSALM LXII. Ver. 1. The speaker is one who boldly affirms, ver. 6, 'I shall not be moved.' He who can so speak cannot be David the son of Jesse, who was subject to so many vicissitudes; but his greater Son, who was never 'moved' from his purpose of grace, and cannot be 'moved' from his kingdom of glory. C.

Ver. 3. The second clause of this verse may be translated as follows:—'How long will ye assail (or attempt to slay)? all of you shall be as a bowing wall, a tottering fence:' that is, though you attempt my life, ye shall fail; you will fall to the ground helpless as a shattered wall. P.

Ver. 9. A lie—not necessarily liars, but a lie, appearing to enjoy happiness, and secure a stable perpetuity, yet subject to as many sorrows and vicissitudes as the men of 'low degree,' by whom they are so often envied. C.

Ver. 10. Neither the pursuit, nor the acquirement, nor the possession of riches, is evil: the evil lies in the 'love of money,' and the consequent expulsion of God from the heart, 1 Jn. 2. 15. C.

Ver. 12. The general idea is that rank, wealth, worldly power, though good and useful in themselves when fairly acquired and rightly used, can never secure peace, or free man from trouble and death. To God alone belongeth true power, and he alone can give an eternal reward. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Patient and submissive resignation of our souls to God is the certain mean of a happy issue of all our troubles. He is the alone author and finisher of all our salvation. In so doing corruptions and temptations can shake us, but not drive us, either fully or finally, from grace. While liars and traitors meet with destruction from God, they who trust in him may defy hell or death to hurt them. In him they are saved, secured, strengthened, and protected; and in him, not in themselves, do they glory. The more their faith in him is exercised the stronger it becomes. The more we trust in men, or in worldly enjoyments, the more disappointment and hurt we shall meet with. But the more we depend on, cry to, or consider God, we shall find the more pleasure, safety, and comfort. The mercy and power which we see in him shall be employed to furnish, protect, and reward us, and to cut off our enemies.

PSALM LXIII. Ver. 1. David was away from the sanctuary when this psalm was written. It expresses the earnest longing desire of his soul for communion with God once again in his courts. The imagery is graphic. The desert traveller can fully realize it. As one longs for water in the parched wilderness, where the heaven is as brass and the earth as iron, so the psalmist longs for God. P.——On comparing Ac. 4. 25, 26 with Ps. ii.; 61. 66; 63. 11, there can remain no doubt that the King who speaks in this psalm is the Son of God, with whose supplications in the days of his flesh the ancient church was thus prophetically edified. C.

Ver. 2. This exactly corresponds with the prayer of our Lord, Jn. 17. 5, 'And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory that I had with thee before the world was.' C.

Ver. 11. Every one that sweareth by him shall glory. Every one that reverences his name, and acknowledges his omniscience and judgment. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a dry and barren wilderness is this world, with nothing in it that can satisfy the longings of a soul! And the more we find of the emptiness of created enjoyments the more we should fly to the fulness of God, as our God and all-sufficient portion. They who have experienced fellowship with him, and discoveries of his glory in public ordinances, will feelingly regret the want of them, and ardently desire the re-enjoyment of them. But great is the mercy that God himself, the fountain of happiness, and his throne of grace, are everywhere accessible. And if our hearts be refreshed with the tokens of his favour they ought to be enlarged in his praise. Happy and delightful is it to meditate on his loving-kindness—and in his strength to follow him closely in the means of grace and paths of duty. It is his help and favour only that can tune our hearts to praise him while we enjoy his protection.—Dreadful is the destruction of the enemies of Jesus Christ and his people! But eternal shall be the honours and unspeakable the joys of him and his children, while all their malicious reproachers and and fatness; [k]and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips;

6 When I [l]remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night-watches.

7 Because[m] thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings[4] will I rejoice.

8 My soul [n]followeth hard after thee: [o]thy right hand upholdeth me.

9 But[q] those that seek my soul, to destroy it, shall go into the lower parts of the earth.

10 They shall [r]fall by the sword:[5] they shall be a [s]portion for foxes.[6]

11 But the [t]king shall rejoice in God; every one that [u]sweareth by him shall glory: [v]but the mouth of them that speak lies shall be stopped.

PSALM LXIV.

1 David prayeth for deliverance, complaining of his enemies. 7 He promiseth himself to see such an evident destruction of his enemies, that the righteous shall rejoice at it.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

HEAR my[a] voice, O God, in my prayer: preserve[b] my life from fear of the enemy.

2 Hide[c] me from the [d]secret counsel of the wicked; from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity:

3 Who[e] whet their tongue like a sword, and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words;

4 That they may shoot [f]in secret at the perfect: [h]suddenly do they shoot at him, and fear not.

5 They[i] encourage themselves in an evil matter:[1] they commune of laying snares [2]privily;[3] they[j] say, Who shall see them?

6 They [k]search out iniquities; [4]they accomplish a diligent search:[5] both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart, is [l]deep.

7 But[n] God shall shoot at them with an arrow: suddenly shall they be wounded.[6]

8 So they [o]shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves:[7] all[p] that see them shall flee away.[8]

9 And [q]all men shall fear, and shall declare the work of God: for they shall [r]wisely consider of his doing.

PSALM LXV.

1 David praiseth God. 4 The blessedness of God's chosen, because of his infinite power and goodness.

To the chief musician, A psalm and song of David.

PRAISE waiteth[1] for thee, O God, [a]in Zion: and unto thee [b]shall the vow be performed.

2 O thou [c]that hearest prayer, unto thee shall [d]all flesh come.

3 [e]Iniquities[2] prevail against me: as for our transgressions, thou shalt purge them away.

4 Blessed[g] is the man whom thou choosest, and causest to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts: we shall be [h]satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple.[3]

5 By[i] terrible things in righteousness wilt thou answer us, O [j]God of our salvation; who art the [k]confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the sea:

6 Which by his strength [l]setteth fast the mountains; being [n]girded with power:

7 Which [o]stilleth the noise of the seas, the noise of their waves, and the [p]tumult of the people.

8 They also that dwell in the uttermost parts are afraid at [q]thy tokens: [r]thou makest the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice.[4]

9 Thou visitest the earth, and waterest [5]it; [s]thou greatly enrichest it with the river of [6]God, which is full of water; thou preparest them corn, when thou hast so provided for it.

10 Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly; thou settlest the furrows thereof:[7] thou makest it soft[8] with showers; thou [t]blessest the springing thereof:

11 Thou crownest the year with thy goodness;[9] and thy [1]paths[2] drop fatness.

12 They[u] drop upon the pastures of the wilderness; and the little hills[3] rejoice on every side.[4] discouragers shall be filled with astonishment, and struck into endless silence and confusion.

PSALM LXIV. Ver. 1. The exact similarity of this psalm to Ps. lxiii. is sufficient external evidence that it is a prophetic prayer of Messiah; but there is an internal evidence that renders other proof unnecessary. The speaker (ver. 4) describes himself as the perfect, a description utterly inapplicable to any sinful man, and true only of the Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—A believer's troubles and enemies often fill his heart with fear, and drive him to his prayers. And in every age and place the bitterest words of reproach and infamy are liberally shot forth against the most faithful saints. Being perfect in Jesus' blessed sacrifice, and having the truth of grace in their hearts, they are hated by the world, who cannot bear their holy and heavenly conversation. Daring in wickedness, their enemies often neither fear God nor regard man, but encourage one another in sin; nor do they stick at anything to accomplish their malicious designs. With what care they pry into the faults of the godly, suborn false witnesses, wrest their words, and eke out their defamations with impudent falsehoods! but God will at last adjudge the injuries done to his people. And when he strikes home there is no escaping. Then the reproaches of the wicked, and their horrid imprecations, shall draw down judgment on their own heads. And it is our wisdom to profit by the judgments of others. Too often warnings are lost through inconsideration. Even persecutors ought to learn and tremble while the door of mercy is yet open. And saints should rejoice in God's manifestation of his power and justice, and in their own deliverance; and trust in him, and make him their glory.

PSALM LXV. Ver. 1. Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion. 'Praise is silent for thee, O Lord:' silent, as if the heart of the church was too full of gratitude to find utterance: or, as an eastern servant, waiting in silence for a word or sign. C.

Ver. 3. 'Our iniquities have prevailed over us: but our trespasses thou hast covered.'—Boothroyd. An exact description of justification by grace. See Ro. 4. 6–8. C.

Ver. 4. Blessed is the man, &c. The church here describes Messiah, upon whom all gifts originally descend, Ps. 68. 18; Ep. 4. 8, and from whom they come down in rich and plenteous effusion of the Spirit showing the things of Christ. C.

Ver. 5. By terrible things. The answer to all the prayers of faith is concentred in the Father's sending his Son: and most terrible of all the works of God was the deliverance of that Son to the death for the church that he loved, Ep. 5. 25–27. And when the church prays 'Thy kingdom come,' terrible are the judgments that will respond in the coming destruction of Satan's kingdom. C.

Ver. 8. There is no people, even in the uttermost parts of the earth, so barbarous as to deny the being and power of God. God's tokens in the heavens, in the seasons, in thunder, in earthquakes, and storms, produce in the ignorant a superstitious terror, and in the most instructed and pious humble and reverential awe. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Patient expectations for God shall be succeeded with joyful praises of him in his church and ordinances. And candid vows must be followed with conscientious fulfilment. God's readiness to hear prayer should encourage every one earnestly and hopefully to address him in every case: and sense of loading guilt or prevalent lusts ought not to make us despair, but to implore, believe, and admire the pardoning and sanctifying mercy of God. Fellowship with God is our greatest happiness. And it is not our merit, but his gracious love and blessed grace, that brings us to it. Nor must it be by transient starts, but by a fixed attendance on the ordinances of his grace, as nothing but the fulness of God in Christ can satisfy our hungry souls. And however terrible the answer must be, God never disappoints the prayers or hopes of his people. Wherever they may be in the world, they have equal access to him as their trust and salvation. Everywhere in the works of nature we may discern the power, wisdom, goodness, and greatness of God. And everything we receive from mountains, from seas, from lumi-

PSALM LXVI.

1 David exhorteth to praise God, 5 to observe the great works, 8 to bless him for his gracious benefits. 13 He voweth for himself religious service to God. 16 He declareth God's special goodness to himself.

To the chief musician, A song or psalm.

MAKE a joyful noise unto God, [1]all ye lands:[2]

2 Sing[a] forth the honour of his name; make his praise glorious.

3 Say [b]unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! [c]through the greatness of thy power[3] shall thine enemies [4]submit themselves[5] unto thee.

4 All[d] the earth shall worship thee, and shall sing unto thee; they shall sing to thy name. Selah.[6]

5 Come[e] and see the works of God: he is terrible in his doing toward the children of men.

6 He[g] turned the sea into dry land: they went through the flood on foot: there did we rejoice in him.

7 He[h] ruleth by his power for ever; [i]his eyes behold the nations: [j]let not the rebellious exalt themselves. Selah.

8 O[k] bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise to be heard;

9 Which holdeth[7] our soul in life, and suffereth not our feet to be moved.

10 For[8] thou, O God, [l]hast proved us: thou hast tried us, as silver is tried.

11 Thou [m]broughtest us into the net;[9] thou laidest affliction upon our loins.

12 Thou hast caused men [o]to ride over our heads; we went [p]through fire and through water; but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy[1] place.

13 I[q] will go into thy house with burnt-offerings; I will pay thee my vows, 14 Which my lips have uttered,[2] and my mouth hath spoken, [r]when I was in trouble.

15 I will offer unto thee burnt-sacrifices of fatlings,[3] with the incense of rams; I will offer bullocks with goats. Selah.[4]

16 Come[s] and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul.

17 I[t] cried unto him with my mouth, and he [u]was extolled with my tongue.

18 If I [v]regard iniquity in my heart, the LORD will [x]not hear me:[5]

19 But [y]verily God hath heard me; he hath attended to the voice of my prayer.

20 Blessed[z] be God, which hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me.

PSALM LXVII.

1 A prayer for the enlargement of God's kingdom, 3 to the joy of the people, 6 and to the increase of God's blessings.

To the chief musician on [a]Neginoth, A psalm or song.

GOD be[b] merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face [c]to shine upon[1] us. [2]Selah.

2 That[d] thy way[3] may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

3 Let[e] the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

4 O let the nations be glad, and sing for joy; [g]for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern[4] the nations upon earth. Selah.

5 Let[h] the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

6 Then[i] shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even [j]our own God, shall [k]bless us.

7 God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall [l]fear him.

PSALM LXVIII.

1 A prayer at the removing of the ark. 4 An exhortation to praise God for his mercies, 7 for his care of the church, 19 and for his great works,

To the chief musician, A psalm or song of David.

LET God[a] arise, let his enemies be scattered: let them also that hate him flee before [1]him.

2 As[b] smoke is driven away, so drive them away: [c]as wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish[2] at the presence of God.

3 But [d]let the righteous be glad; let them rejoice before God: yea, let them exceedingly rejoice.[3]

4 Sing[e] unto God, sing praises to his name: extol him that [g]rideth upon the heavens[4] by his name JAH,[5] and rejoice before him.

5 A [h]father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in [i]his holy habitation.

aaries, from rains, from pastures, from fields, ought, with thankful admiration and praise, to be received as his gift. But in these let me discern, as in a figure, how he establishes his church, his ordinances, and his people. He limits, restrains, and directs their raging troubles. He enlightens by the word of his grace and the influences of his Spirit. And while Jesus, the Sun of Righteousness, rises with healing under his wings, his showers of gospel declarations and spiritual influences drop down abundantly, for the nourishment, satisfaction, and joy of the human race.

PSALM LXVI. Ver. 12. Thou hast caused men, &c. The Egyptian horsemen, whose representative descendants continue to this day to pay little regard to the safety of the humbler classes; and would, without compunction or rebuke, literally 'ride over their heads.' The expression here may probably refer to some elevated position in which the Egyptian horse appeared when pursuing Moses and the Israelites to the Red Sea. See ver. 6. C.

Ver. 13. The speaker here, and to the end, is one—one who pays all his vows, and keeps all his resolutions—one so thoroughly wise, that he knows his own heart; and so thoroughly pure, that (ver. 18) he disclaims all iniquity: one whose prayer, consequently, God hath not turned away, ver. 20. Are not these marks sufficient to show that this perfect one is the Christ, entering as High-priest into the holy place? C.

Ver. 15. Rams. These were the offerings of Aaron, the type of our Lord, at the time of his consecration, Le. 8. 18, 22, 28.—Bullocks. One bullock was Aaron's own offering for sin, Le. 8. 1, 14. The second for the peace-offerings of the people, Le. 9. 4. Goats were the sin-offerings of the people, Le. 9. 3, 15,—all types of that 'one sacrifice,' whereby Christ hath 'perfected for ever them that are sanctified.' He. 10. 12, 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With cordiality and joy ought all men to celebrate the praises of that God who is so great and so good to all. And as our fathers' sins should awaken our sorrows, their mercies should inflame our praise. But quickly shall antichristians and other enemies of our all-governing Lord Jesus be made to bow or be destroyed before him! All the trials of churches or saints, their support and protection in them, and the happy issue of them, ought, and shall be, matter of cordial and lasting praise: and to make vows in an evangelical manner when under trouble is truly commendable; but much care must always be taken for the speedy and exact performance of them. To testify our gratitude to God, and to encourage others in his way, we ought prudently to communicate our most noted experiences of his goodness and grace. No duty performed amidst indulged wickedness can be acceptable to God. But such as in faith pour out their hearts unto God without any allowed guile, may now begin their praises and thanksgiving, in the confidence that their requests are accepted, and shall in due time be answered.

PSALM LXVII. Ver. 1. The choir of believers, that, in the last portion of the foregoing psalm, have been silently listening to their Lord, here resume their part in the worship of Jehovah, the light of whose glory they desire to behold in the face of Jesus Christ. 2 Co. 4. 6. C.

Ver. 2. Thy saving health among all nations. Literally 'thy salvation among all nations.' It is a prayer for the universal diffusion of the knowledge of God, and especially the knowledge of the way in which he saves sinners. P.

Ver. 4. This psalm is evidently a prophetic preparation for that 6 God [1]setteth the solitary in [e]families: [k]he bringeth out those which are bound with chains:[7] but [l]the rebellious dwell in a dry land.

7 O God, when thou [m]wentest forth before thy people, when thou didst march through the wilderness; Selah:[8]

8 The[n] earth shook, the heavens also dropped[9] at the presence of God: even Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God, the God of Israel.

9 Thou, O God, [o]didst send[1] a plentiful rain,[2] whereby thou didst [3]confirm[4] thine inheritance when it was weary.[5]

10 Thy[q] congregation hath dwelt therein: thou, O God, [r]hast prepared of thy goodness for the poor.

11 The Lord gave the word: [s]great was the company[6] of those that published it.

12 Kings of armies did flee apace:[7] and she that tarried at home[t] divided the spoil.

13 Though ye have [u]lien among the pots, yet shall ye be as [v]the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold.

14 When[w] the Almighty scattered kings in it,[9] it [x]was[1] white as snow[2] in Salmon.

15 The[y] hill of God[3] is as the hill of Bashan; an high hill, as [z]the hill of Bashan.

16 Why leap ye, ye high hills? [a]this is the hill which God desireth to dwell in; yea, the Lord will dwell in it for ever.

17 The[b] chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands[4] of angels: the Lord is among them, as in Sinai, [c]in the holy place.

18 Thou[d] hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive: thou [e]hast received gifts for men;[5] yea, for [f]the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them.

19 Blessed[h] be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the [i]God of our salvation.[6] Selah.[7]

20 He that is our God is the God of salvation; and unto God the Lord belong [j]the issues[8] from death.

21 But[k] God shall wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy scalp of such an one as goeth on still in his trespasses.

22 The [l]Lord said, I will bring again from Bashan, I will bring my people again from the depths of the sea;

23 That[n] thy foot may be dipped[9] in the blood of thine enemies, and the tongue of thy dogs in the same.

24 They have seen [o]thy goings,[1] O God; even the goings of my God, my King, in the sanctuary.

25 The[p] singers went before, the players on instruments followed after; among them were the damsels playing with timbrels.

26 Bless[q] ye God in the congregations, even the Lord, from [r]the fountain of [s]Israel.[3]

27 There[s] is[t] little Benjamin with their ruler, the princes of Judah and their council,[4] the princes of Zebulun, and the princes of Naphtali.

28 Thy God [u]hath commanded thy strength: [v]strengthen, O God, that which thou hast wrought for us.

29 Because[v] of thy temple at Jerusalem shall kings bring presents unto thee.

30 Rebuke[y] the company[5] of spearmen,[6] the multitude of the bulls, with the calves of the people, till every one submit himself with pieces of silver: scatter thou[7] the people that delight in war.

31 Princes[z] shall come out of Egypt: Ethiopia[8] shall soon [a]stretch out her hands unto God.

32 Sing[b] unto God, ye kingdoms of the earth; O sing praises unto the Lord; Selah:[9]

33 To him [c]that rideth upon the heavens of heavens, which were of old; lo, he doth [1]send out [2]his voice, and that a mighty voice.

34 Ascribe[e] ye strength unto God: [3]his excellency is over Israel, and his strength is in the clouds.[2]

35 O God, [h]thou art terrible[3] out of thy holy places: the God of Israel is he [i]that giveth strength and power unto his people. Blessed be God.

PSALM LXIX.

1 David complaineth of his affliction. 13 He prayeth for deliverance. 22 He devoteth his enemies to destruction. 30 He engageth to praise God with thanksgiving.

To the chief musician upon [a]Shoshannim, A psalm of David.

SAVE me, O God; for [b]the waters are come in unto my soul.

2 I[c] sink in deep mire,[1] where there is no standing: I am come into deep waters,[2] where the floods overflow me.

3 I[d] am weary of my crying: my throat is dried: mine eyes fail while I wait for my God.

4 They[e] that hate me without a cause are more than the hairs of mine head: they that would destroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty: then I restored that which I took not away.[3]

5 O God, [g]thou knowest my foolishness; and my [h]sins[5] are not hid from thee.

blessed time when 'the kingdoms of this world shall have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.' Re. 11. 15. C.

Ver. 6. This psalm sets forth a great principle which people and nations ought never to forget: that true religion can alone secure national blessing—peace, progress, temporal prosperity, and social happiness. P.

REFLECTIONS.—God's mercy is the spring and matter of all the blessings we need. His favour manifested is our whole joy and comfort. And the more kindness he bestows upon any person or church, the more they wish his gospel and kingdom to spread. His method of redeeming and saving men through Christ is health to their soul and marrow to their bones. It is an unspeakable mercy to be judged and governed according to the gospel and promise of grace. The service of Christ is the freedom and happiness of his people; and his government introduces the most inestimable benefits and exalted praises. What a harvest of converted souls the world yields as he pours forth his influences! And blessings innumerable flow from a spiritual relation to God as our God: while reverential love and holy obedience always attend the firm faith thereof.

PSALM LXVIII. Ver. 1. These opening words were employed by Moses, Nu. 10. 35, when the ark was removed in the wilderness. The whole psalm, however, is a description of the resurrection, ascension, and glorification of Christ. Compare ver. 18 with Ep. 4. 8. C.

A.M. cir. 2983. B.C. cir. 1021.

6 Let[h] not them that wait on thee, O Lord GOD of hosts, be ashamed for my sake: let not those that seek thee be confounded for my sake, O God of Israel.

7 Because for thy sake [i]I have borne reproach; shame hath covered my face.

8 I[j] am become a stranger unto my brethren, and an alien unto my mother's children.

9 For[k] the zeal of thine house hath eaten[6] me up; [l]and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me.

10 When[m] I wept, and chastened my soul with fasting, that was to my reproach.

11 I[o] made sackcloth also my garment; and I became a proverb to them.

12 They[p] that sit in the gate speak against me; and I was [q]the song of the drunkards.[7]

13 But as for me, [r]my prayer is unto thee, O LORD, in [s]an acceptable time: O God, [t]in the multitude of thy mercy hear me, in the truth of thy salvation.

14 Deliver[u] me out of the mire, and let me not sink: let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters.

15 Let[v] not the water-flood overflow me, neither let the deep swallow me up, and let not the[e] pit shut her mouth[8] upon me.

16 Hear me, O LORD; [w]for thy loving-kindness is good: turn unto me, [x]according to the multitude of thy tender mercies.

17 And[a] hide not thy face from thy servant; for I am in trouble: hear me speedily.[9]

18 Draw[b] nigh unto my soul, and redeem it: deliver me, [c]because of mine enemies.

19 Thou hast known my [d]reproach, and my shame, and my dishonour: [e]mine adversaries are all before thee.

20 Reproach[g] hath broken my heart; and I am full of heaviness: and I looked for some to take pity,[1] but[h] there was none;[2] and for comforters, but I found none.

21 They gave me also gall for my meat; [i]and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink.

22 Let[j] their table become a snare before them: and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap.[3]

23 Let[k] their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake.

24 Pour[l] out thine indignation upon them, and let thy wrathful anger take hold of them.

25 Let their habitation[4] be desolate; and let none dwell[5] in their tents.

26 For[m] they persecute him whom thou hast smitten; and they talk to the grief of those whom thou hast wounded.[6]

27 Add[o] iniquity[7] unto their iniquity;[8] and let them not come into thy righteousness.

28 Let[p] them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous.

29 But[q] I am poor and sorrowful: [r]let thy salvation, O God, set me up on high.

30 I[s] will praise the name of God with a song, and will magnify him with thanksgiving.

31 This[t] also shall please the LORD better than an ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs.

32 The [u]humble[9] shall see this, and be glad; and your heart shall live that seek God.

33 For[v] the LORD heareth the poor, and despiseth not his prisoners.[1]

34 Let[x] the heaven and earth praise him, the seas, and every thing that moveth[2] therein.

35 For[y] God will save Zion, and will build the cities of Judah; that they may dwell there, and have it in possession.

36 The[z] seed also of his servants shall inherit it; [a]and they that love his name shall dwell therein.

Ver. 4. 'Magnify him who rideth over the Arabah by his name JAH, and rejoice before him.' Reference is here made to the journey of the Israelites through the wilderness, and especially along the valley of Arabah to and from Kadesh. There God went before them in the cloudy pillar; there he proclaimed to them his name JEHOVAH; there he gave them displays of his power and mercy, such as had never been witnessed. P.——By his name JAH. 'In JAH is his name,' Horsley. That is, Christ, who was with the church through the wilderness, has his personal and official name in JAH, the unity of the self-existent Trinity. C.

Ver. 11. Company. The original directs to those female choirs (see ver. 25) who, in sweet, and holy, and joyful song, published the mercies of the Lord. See, as examples, Ex. 15. 20; 1 Sa. 18. 6. C.

Ver. 12. Allusion is made to the conquests of Moses and Joshua on entering Palestine. P.

Ver. 13. The whole book of Psalms presents no greater difficulty than this verse, and conjectures and emendations have been proportionally numerous. The words supplied in the authorized version render the passage prophetical; but the adjoining verses are merely narrative. May we not therefore rather understand the passage thus:—'Ye have shared the spoil (though ye lay timidly at home, hid among the pots), and are now garnished in these spoils as the wings of a dove covered with silver,' &c.† C.

Ver. 22. My people. Is it not rather the enemy, that God proposes to bring from Bashan on the east, and the sea on the west, that judgment may be executed upon their sins? Joel 3. 2, 12; Re. 16. 16. C.

Ver. 27. In the solemn procession, mentioned in ver. 24, all these tribes were present:—Benjamin on this occasion leading the way; the vast multitudes of Judah following: then the chiefs of Zebulun and Naphtali, representing probably the confederation of the northern tribes. P.

Ver. 30. 'The meaning of the whole verse is, that the most formidable enemies of the people of God, represented here by wild beasts, would be subdued, and would be made to show their submission by bringing presents,—by 'pieces of silver,'—or with tribute. Thus the idea corresponds with that in the previous verse, that kings would bring presents (Barnes). P.——Calves of the people. The idolatrous worshippers of the Egyptian calf-gods.—Note, Such is the blindness of the human heart, that the cow is still worshipped as a deity in India! C.

REFLECTIONS.—No hatred, no opposition of men or devils, could exclude our Redeemer from his glory. However strong or obstinate his enemies, they are overcome by his power. But happy—thrice happy are they who have by faith accepted this glorious, this gracious JEHOVAH to be their God! Behold how he protects his afflicted church and people; raises up families of saints in our Gentile world; delivers the prisoners of sin and Satan from their chains of corruptions and curses! while sinners bring to themselves eternal ruin! Behold him leading up his people from their spiritual bondage, and by his Word and Spirit directing them in their paths! By his almighty influence he brought down all opposition. By showers of gospel truths and spiritual influences he quickens all who yield themselves to Christ. By the multitudes of his apostles and ministers he published the glad tidings of salvation. Through their faith he saves hell-enslaved sinners by his blood, and adorns them with his righteousness and grace. He establishes his church firm and high as mountains which cannot be moved, and from which he will never depart. While angelic hosts are her guard, the ascending Redeemer is her conquering head, her treasury, and almoner. How great are his triumphs, his grace, his glory! Never pardoned rebel owed such gratitude to his generous prince as every pardoned sinner owes to his Lord. Never is he weary of showing mercy. And even death is disarmed to them who by faith accept him and his salvation. But dreadful is the fate of obstinate Jews and others who oppose the designs of his grace: and behold, when he went forth in the ordinances of the gospel, by his apostles and other missionaries, how Jews and Gentiles saw his glory, sang his praise, and submitted themselves to his government!

PSALM LXIX. Ver. 1. It is impossible to question that this is a prayer of our Lord. See especially ver. 9, first clause, compare with Jn. 2. 17, also ver. 9, second clause, with Ro. 15. 3, and ver. 25, also with Jn. 19. 28; and surely it is impossible to doubt that Christ is the speaker of the whole psalm! See also farther references, Jn. 15. 25; Lu. 23. 34–38; Ro. 11. 9, 10; Ac. 1. 16, 20. C.

Ver. 22. Nothing is more certain than that God judicially delivers wicked men over to the counsels of their own hearts, and surely what God will righteously do, Christ as Judge may righteously call upon him to do. In this case, he calls upon him to deliver over the epicurean idolater, 'whose god is his belly,' Phi. 3. 19, so that his love of gluttony and drunkenness may become his punishment. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I read these things let me, with deep concern, by faith behold my Redeemer charged in law with my sins and bearing their punishment. Let me learn with patience to run the race of holy obedience, and of necessary trials set before me, looking to Jesus as my pattern, and as the author and finisher of my faith. While I behold the tremendous severity of God's judgments against his ancient people for rejecting and murdering his Son, let me not be high-minded, but fear.—Let me behold the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich.—And let me be a living and lively

PSALM LXX.

David prayeth for God's speedy help and deliverance, to the confusion of his enemies, and triumph of the godly.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David, [a]to bring to remembrance.

MAKE haste, [b]O God, to deliver me; make haste to help me,[1] O LORD.[2]

2 Let[c] them be ashamed and confounded that seek after my soul; let them be turned backward, and put to confusion, that desire my hurt.

3 Let them be turned back for a reward of their shame that say, Aha, aha!

4 Let[d] all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: and let such as love thy salvation say continually, Let God be magnified.

5 But[e] I am poor and needy: make haste unto me, O God: thou art my help and my deliverer; O LORD, make no tarrying.

PSALM LXXI.

1 David, in confidence of faith, and experience of God's favour, prayeth both for himself, and against the enemies of his soul. 14 He promiseth acts of praise. 17 He prayeth not to be abandoned in the decline of life. 19 He praiseth God, and promiseth to do it cheerfully.

IN thee,[a] O LORD, do I put my trust: let me never be put to confusion.

2 Deliver[b] me in thy righteousness, and cause me to escape: [c]incline thine ear unto me, and save me.

3 Be thou my strong habitation,[1] whereunto I may continually resort: [d]thou hast given commandment to save me; for thou art my rock and my fortress.

4 Deliver[e] me, O my God, out of the hand of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man.

5 For [f]thou art my hope, O Lord GOD: thou art my trust from my youth.

6 By[h] thee have I been holden up from the womb: thou art he that took me out of my mother's bowels: [i]my praise shall be continually of thee.

[1] This is the faithful and grateful song of an old man. He speaks of a long experience of God's mercy. He feels that his physical strength is fast waning: the vigour of youth and manhood is gone: the weakness and helplessness of old age are beginning to be painfully realized; his enemies are still watchful and persevering. Yet he does not despair. God is still his God: as time strength increases as bodily strength fails; the eye of faith brightens as the eye of sense becomes dim; he is able even to look beyond death and the grave, and to exclaim triumphantly:—'Thou shalt quicken me again, and shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth.' How cheering then is this noble psalm to the aged Christian! —P.

member of that church which is founded in his blood, and blessed in him with all spiritual blessings.

PSALM LXX. Ver. 1. This psalm exemplifies the two chief principles for interpretation of the Psalms, viz. 1. Quotation and exposition in the New Testament. 2. Parallelism of sentiment between those which New Testament quotation applies to Christ and those not so quoted. The parallelism between Ps. lxix. and lxx. proves Ps. lxx. to belong to Christ: but this fact is put beyond question by its identity with Ps. 40. 13-17, which psalm is distinctly applied to Christ, He. 10. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While here also I behold Jesus Christ in great abasement, poverty, and distress, denouncing just and fearful punishment on his Jewish, heathen, antichristian, and other enemies; and interceding for the joy and happiness of all people; to his Father's honour let me apply these things to my own troubled circumstances, and so, in a believing manner, bring them and the sinful causes thereof to my remembrance. Urgent trials should always awaken fervent prayers.

PSALM LXXI. Ver. 2. Deliver me in thy righteousness. A sinner is to be delivered only in mercy—the sin-bearing Saviour alone in righteousness. By this mark it is evident, that if the speaker was guided by the Spirit of knowledge, a point not to be doubted, he must be the Christ. C.

Ver. 9. Old age. Inasmuch as our Lord died literally young, this verse is supposed necessarily to indicate another speaker. But old age is not absolute, but comparative. Thus it is common to speak of premature old age, a fact evidently true of our Lord, whom a little after thirty the Jews supposed fifty. The period referred to, when, as in old age, his strength failed, seems literally, that, when worn out with sleeplessness, buffetings, and scourgings, and, tottering under his cross, Simon of Cyrene was compelled to carry it, Jn. 19. 17; Lu. 23. 26. C.

Ver. 18. When I am old, &c. Better, as in the margin, 'Now also unto old age and gray hairs, O God, forsake me not.' That our Lord was, in the ordinary acceptation of the word, prematurely old—consumed by his zeal—both himself and the Jews testified. Nor is anything more probable, that his incessant sorrows had produced, what sorrow has often produced—premature gray hairs, the snows of an unnatural winter enshrouding the greenness of spring. C.

Ver. 21. This is surely not descriptive of David's expectations or experience. God had positively told him, 'the sword should never depart from his house,' 2 Sa. 12. 10, 11, and from that hour onwards his whole life was a succession of troubles. But of Jesus the description is true; for his declarative greatness is ever increasing, and 'the joy set before him' was his sun of comfort in the darkest hour of sorrows. C.

REFLECTIONS.—They who know God and his faithfulness and grace will with comfort and confidence be engaged to trust him in every time of need. The more we reflect on what God hath done for us, it will the more engage our trust and animate our praise. In the depth of our misery God delights to magnify his mercy. And they who confidently plead his faithfulness shall never be disappointed. In old age we must expect infirmities; but God can give an increase of faith and patience to bear them. His aged servants are never cast off by him; but when they experience most weakness, they shall most assuredly experience abundant support in time of need. He may afflict his people, but never rejects believers. Their enemies may boast in vain a while, but just ruin shall reward them at last. Happy they whose grand supports are the power and promise of God, and whose early and long-continued experience of his favours encourages them to maintain their hopes and increase in their holiness. And if we hope for eternal happiness, let us do what we can to spread the honour and good savour of Christ on earth! For how becoming is it for aged saints to be remarkable in cheerfully expecting good at the hand of God; and to have heart, and lips, and life all filled with his praise! How pleasant is it to step as it were into heaven, scarcely needing to change either our work or our song!

PSALM LXXII. Ver. 1. The strict parallelism of the opening of this with Ps. ii., and the New Testament application of that psalm to Christ, necessarily leads to a similar application here. Christ was King, as chosen, sent, and exalted of the Father; he was also the King's Son, as, according to the flesh, he was the Son of David. C.

Ver. 5. This exemplifies an important principle of interpretation, viz. what cannot be true of David or any other mere man, but is true of Messiah, is not to be applied to any mere man, but to 'the Word that was God,' and was, for our salvation, 'made flesh,' and of whom the description is strictly accurate. See also ver. 7. C.

Ver. 7. The moon is here introduced as the emblem of successive change of aspect, with permanence of nature, and faithfulness of service; the measuring out of the returning periods for renovated joy, in which she places before the world at once the character both of providence and grace. C.

Ver. 11. This can only be true of Messiah, never of David or Solomon, whose kingdom, in its highest splendour, was of very limited extent and of brief duration. C.

Ver. 17. The marks of Messiah are here so distinct, that they must be acknowledged. How sweet the name of Jesus to the ear, how glorious to the eye—it is the theme of heaven's loudest song, it is the light of heaven's brightest sun, 'and blessed be his glorious name to all eternity. The whole earth let his glory fill. Amen: so let it be!' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold how Jesus Christ, endowed with the Holy Ghost above measure, and with all 21 Thou[a] shalt increase my greatness, and comfort me on every side.

22 I[g] will also praise thee with the psaltery,[2] even [h]thy truth, O my God: unto thee will I sing with the harp, O thou [i]Holy One of Israel.

23 My[j] lips shall greatly rejoice when I sing unto thee; and my soul, which thou hast redeemed.

24 My tongue also shall talk of thy righteousness all the day long: for they are confounded, for[k] they are brought unto shame, that seek my hurt.[3]

[2] Or, of. Ps. 127. title.

[3] It is highly probable that this psalm was composed by David when Solomon was crowned as his successor on the throne. The general scope accords with this idea. But at the same time it is evident that, in the fulness of its meaning, the psalm is not, and cannot be, applicable to Solomon and his reign. It has a higher reference. Solomon was but the type of a greater King. The Messiah was the real type, and the ultimate sense of many of the expressions culminated in him.—P.

power in heaven and earth, reigns over his gospel church! In infinite equity and wisdom he conducts his whole administration. By his righteousness he secured, by his intercession he procures, and by his word, ordinances, and Spirit, he confers on men peace with God, peace in the conscience, and with one another. Poor destitute sinners he supplies from his fulness of blessings, and delivers them from the hand of sin, Satan, and the world, their oppressors. His spiritual influences, coming down in their season, shall render believers flourishing and fruitful in holiness. And how extensive his gospel church, comprehending both Jews and Gentiles—the wildest Arabs and most distant islanders not excepted! In it persons of every station, but chiefly of the poor, submit to his yoke, and devote themselves and all that they have to his service. Earnest are their prayers for his presence and power in his ordinances, and for his coming in the clouds; and high their songs of praise to his name. What commendations of him are in the word of the gospel! From him the corn of wheat, sown in death upon Calvary, and from the handful of gospel truth, sown among hardened hearts, shall proceed converts, strong and tall in grace as the cedars of Lebanon, and numerous as the piles of grass. How lasting is his kingdom, and how certainly useful for diffusing every spiritual blessing among those who accept Jesus Christ! United to his person, and sharing of his benefits, let us wish well to his interests and honour, and admire, adore, and praise JEHOVAH in him, as the author of all the wonders of providence and grace.

PSALM LXXIII. Ver. 1. Israel. Those who wrestle with God for a blessing, and will not let him go till they receive it, and, with it or in it, that new name which the Spirit of adoption alone can bestow, Ge. 22. 24–30. C.

Ver. 5. The freedom of thoughtless sinners from trouble arises from ignorance of themselves, disregard of futurity, and want of sympathy with a world lying in misery, because lying in wickedness. C.

Ver. 9. Walketh. Their tongue assails every one: none can escape its ridicule, contempt, censure, calumnies, or condemnation. C.

Ver. 10. 'His people return hither.' Therefore his (God's) people turn aside hither, to the service of these prosperous men, and waters of a full cup (of oppression) are wrung out from them in bitter tears. C.

Ver. 17. Sanctuary. This word never signifies sanctuary, in the singular, but signifies 'the secret principles of God's providential government.' C.

Ver. 18. The wicked are here referred to, and the true nature of God's dealings with them. To human appearance they were prosperous and secure: but in reality their condition was one of uncertainty and danger, from which they must inevitably fall. Ultimate ruin is before them whatever may be their apparent security now. P.

Ver. 22. So foolish. The whole gospel of Christ is called foolishness by the world, and 'he that would be wise must become a fool.' The very apostles were 'fools for Christ's sake,' 1 Co. 1. 18; 3. 18; 4. 10. C.

Ver. 23. Notwithstanding this low estimation of men, I am still with thee. Here we have a distinct note that the speaker, inquirer, and expounder of providence, is no other than Christ. C.

Ver. 24. This is another mark of Christ, not a prayer for guidance and glory, but a confident announcement like that in Jn. 17. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In our perplexing difficulties we ought to recur to the first principles of our most holy faith. And never should we lose the views of God's kindness to those who are washed in the blood and sanctified by the Spirit of his Son. Often the strongest believers are most violently tempted, and dragged to the very brink of death and destruction: while God, in this world, marks his enemies and friends in the most perplexing manner. The sinner often prospers to his ruin; and whom he loves he corrects and scourges for their profit. What need then have we to attend closely to his word as our rule; and amidst perplexing providences to wait till we see the end of the Lord! The worst that a good man hath is better than the prosperity of many wicked, which but brings them to everlasting ruin and hastens them into it. But whatever sad lengths the afflictions and temptations of the godly draw them, they should lead to instruction, humiliation, comfort, and holiness. When atheistical thoughts arise in our hearts, they must be carefully and quickly suppressed. We must never grieve nor stumble the children of God by representing his service as vain and unprofitable. And it is not the strongest carnal reasoning, but fellowship with God in his word and ordinances, that can illuminate a darkened soul, or disentangle from an ensnaring temptation. Great is the mercy when God relieves his children who had, by their envy and fretfulness, become their own tormentors; and that even at their worst he never ceases to attend and support them as weak infants in his family. But bright views of God and eternal things are sometimes ushered in by great darkness and trouble of mind. Holiness here and glory hereafter are closely connected. And little reason hath one, guided of God, and an heir of everlasting happiness, nay, of God himself, and a joint-heir with Christ, to envy the earthly happiness of the wicked. How insignificant other things appear when compared with the everlasting enjoyment of the INFINITE ALL, the REDEEMING GOD-HEAD! How light and easy are death and trouble when considered as our way to it! While apostates from God hasten towards endless perdition, let me therefore draw near to him, in habitual fellowship with him. Let me by faith depend on his promise, that here and hereafter my lips may be filled with his praise.

PSALM LXXIV. Ver. 1. This title (compare Ps. 95. 7 with He. 3. 17), together with the plurality and circumstances of the form of speech, clearly point to a church cruelly persecuted, and a nation grievously oppressed, pouring out their complaints, not in the ears of men, but of God. C.

Ver. 5. 'As men are seen with uplifted axes, cutting down the thick wood, so the whole carved work of thy temple with chisel

ALTAR OF LATIN CHURCH, NAZARETH—ON THE SITE OF THE HOUSE WHERE CHRIST LIVED. [Psalms, lxxii:8]—"He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." It seems as if the prophesies quoted from the above Psalm have been fulfilled when we remember that churches now stand in nearly all of the great cities of the world. The Latin church in Nazareth is called the Church of the Annunciation. The modern city of Nazareth consists of stone houses with flat roofs. The Church of the Annunciation is small, but it is decorated with pictures of great beauty and with finely wrought marble. It is said to stand on the site of the house of Mary. The church was begun in 1620 out of materials which remained from the ruins of former structures of a similar character. It was destroyed by an earthquake in 1837, but has been rebuilt. The name of Nazareth does not occur in the Old Testament nor in Josephus.

PSALM LXXIII.

1 The psalmist, prevailing in a temptation, 2 showeth the occasion thereof, the prosperity of the wicked. 13 The wound given thereby, diffidence. 15 The victory over it, knowledge of God's purpose, in destroying of the wicked, and sustaining the righteous.

A psalm of Asaph.

TRULY[2] God[a] is good to Israel, even to such as are of a [b]clean heart.[3]

2 But as for me, [c]my feet were almost gone, my steps had well nigh slipped.[4]

3 For[d] I was envious[5] at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked:

4 For[e] there are no bands in their death; but their strength is [6]firm.[7]

5 They[g] are not in trouble as other men;[8] neither are they plagued like[h] other men:

6 Therefore[h] pride compasseth them about as a chain; violence covereth them as a garment.

7 Their[i] eyes stand out with fatness: they have more than heart could wish.[1]

8 They[j] are corrupt, and speak wickedly concerning oppression: they speak loftily.

9 They [k]set their mouth against the heavens, and their tongue walketh through the earth.

10 Therefore his people [l]return hither; and waters[m] of a full cup are wrung out to them

11 And they say,[2] How[n] doth God know? and is there knowledge in the most High?

12 Behold,[p] these are the ungodly, who prosper in the world; they increase in riches.

13 Verily[q] I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocency.[3]

14 For[r] all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened[4] every morning.

15 If I say, I will speak thus; behold, [s]I should offend against the generation of thy children.

16 When[t] I thought to know this, it was too painful[5] for me,[6]

17 Until[u] I went into the sanctuary of God; then understood I their end.

18 Surely[v] thou didst set them in slippery places; thou castedst them down into destruction.

19 How[w] are they brought into desolation, as in a moment! they are utterly consumed with terrors.

20 As[y] a dream when one awaketh; so, O LORD, when thou awakest, thou shalt despise their image.[7]

21 Thus[z] my heart was grieved, and I was pricked in my reins.

22 So[a] foolish was I, and [8]ignorant:[9] I was as a beast[1] before thee.[2]

23 Nevertheless[b] I am continually with thee: thou hast holden me by my right hand.

24 Thou[c] shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory.

25 Whom[d] have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee.

26 My[e] flesh and my heart faileth: but God is the strength[5] of my heart, and [g]my portion for ever.

27 For, lo, [h]they that are far from thee shall perish: thou hast destroyed all them that [i]go a whoring from thee.

28 But [j]it is good for me to draw near to God: [k]I have put my trust in the Lord GOD, that I may declare all thy works.[6]

PSALM LXXIV.

1 The psalmist complaineth of the desolation of the sanctuary. 10 He moveth God to help in consideration of his power, 18 of his reproachful enemies, of his children, and of his covenant.

Maschil of Asaph.[1]

O GOD, [c]why hast thou cast us off for ever? [b]why doth thine anger smoke against [c]the sheep of thy pasture?

2 Remember [d]thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old; the rod[2] of thine inheritance,[3] which thou hast redeemed; this [e]mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt.

3 Lift[g] up thy feet[4] unto the perpetual desolations; even all [h]that the enemy hath done wickedly in the sanctuary.[5]

4 Thine[i] enemies roar in the midst of thy congregations; they set up their ensigns for signs.[6]

5 A man was famous according as he [j]had lifted up axes upon the thick trees.

6 But now they break down [k]the carved work thereof at once with axes and hammers.

7 They have cast fire into thy [7]sanctuary; they have defiled by casting down the dwelling-place of thy name to the ground.

8 They said in their hearts, [l]Let us [8]destroy them together: they have burnt up all the [m]synagogues of God in the land.

9 We[o] see not our signs:[9] there is no more any prophet; neither is there among us any that knoweth how long.

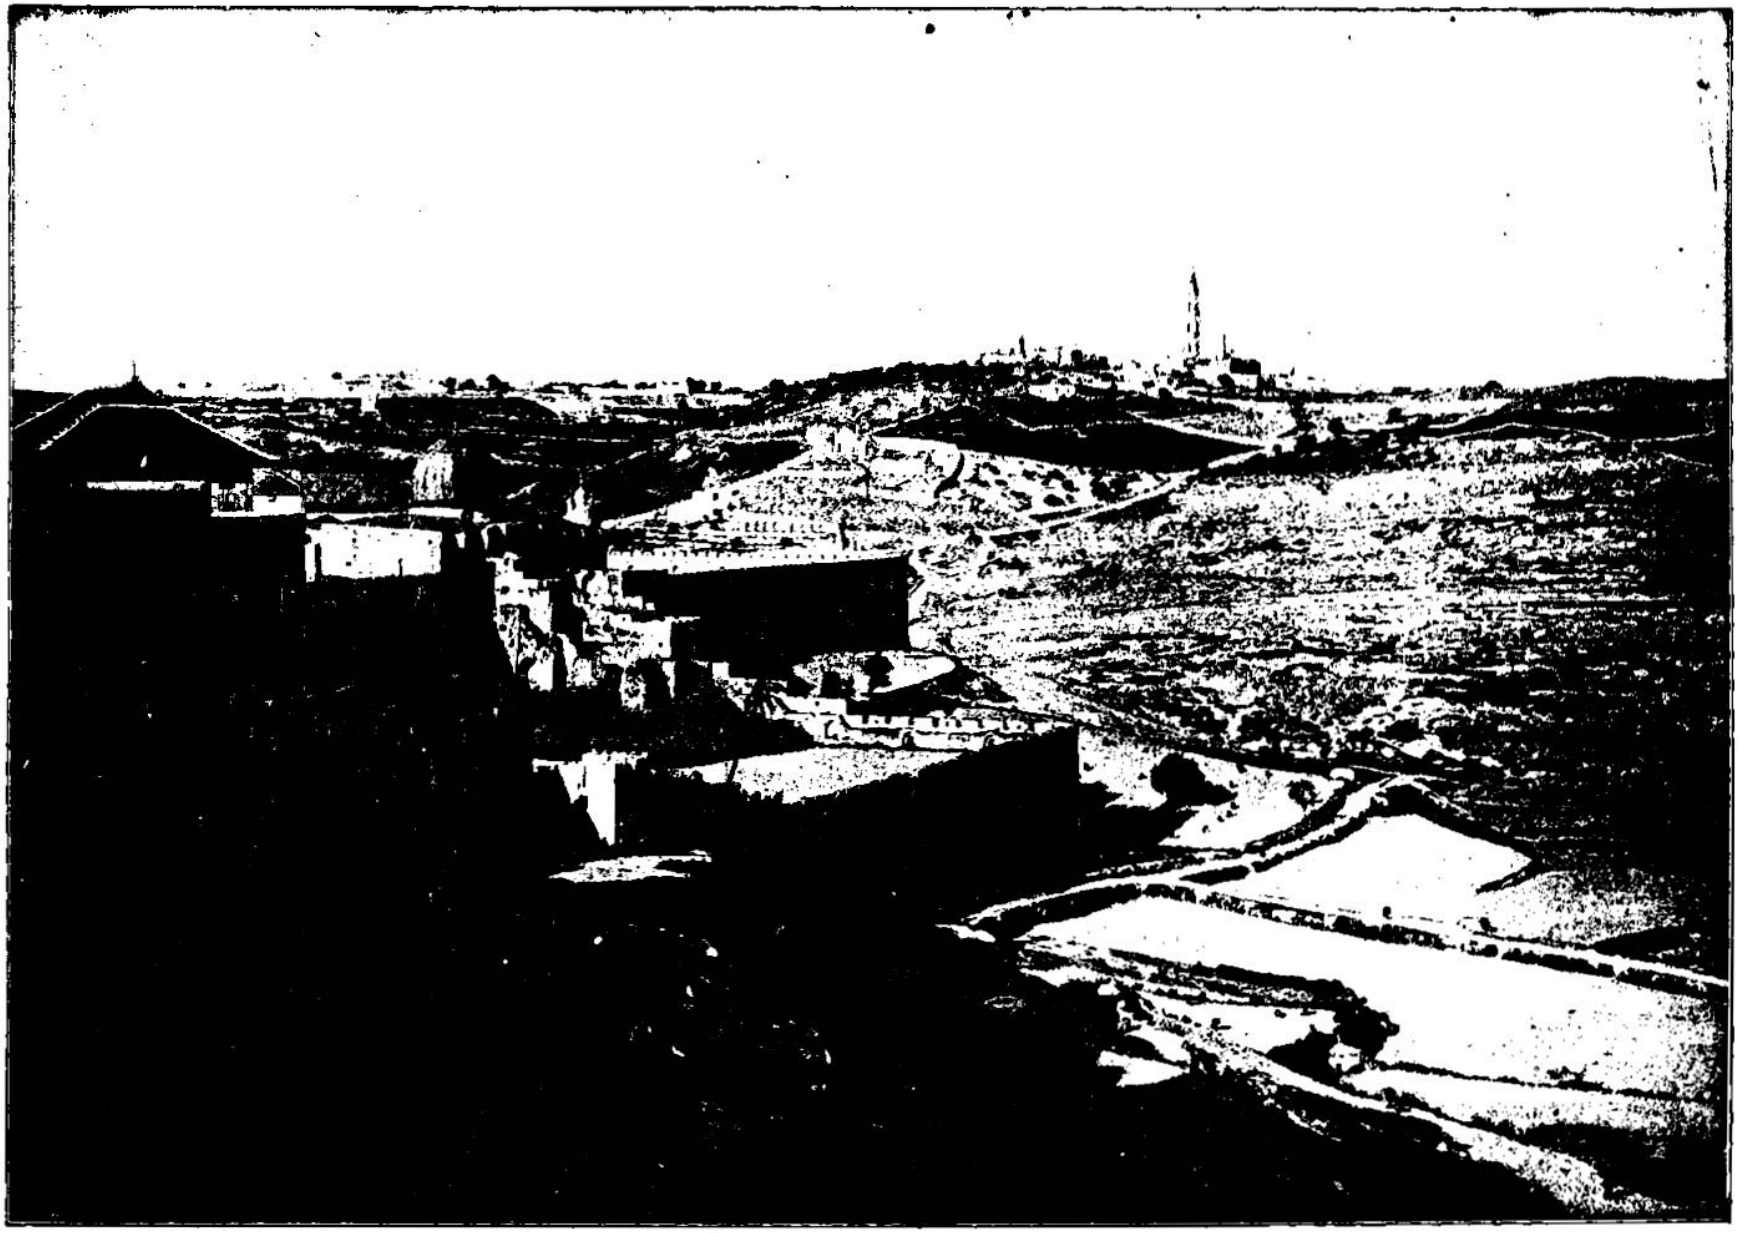
10 O God, [p]how long shall the adversary reproach? shall the enemy blaspheme thy name for ever?

11 Why[q] withdrawest thou thy hand, even thy right hand? pluck it out of thy bosom.

12 For[r] God is my King[1] of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth.

13 Thou[s] didst divide[2] the sea by thy strength: thou [t]brakest the heads of the dragons[3] in the waters.



14 Thou brakest the heads of leviathan in pieces, and gavest him to be [u]meat to the people inhabiting the wilderness.[4]

15 Thou [v]didst cleave the fountain[5] and the flood: [x]thou driedst up mighty rivers.[6] and mallet they have hewed down.'—Boothroyd. The imagery in this translation seems forced and incongruous. May it not better be paraphrased thus:—'In former times, the Tyrian woodsman acquired respect and honour, even from his own Gentile fellow-citizens, by cutting down timber in the mountains for Solomon; but now, our Gentile invaders with axes and hammers, recklessly tear down the exquisite carved work of the temple, dedicated by the piety of former years.' C.

Ver. 9. No more any prophet. This statement has been supposed to carry the date of the psalm beyond the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar, because the prophet Jeremiah was then alive. But may not the psalm have been composed by one of the pious resi-

MOUNT OF OLIVES FROM ZION'S GATE—OVER WHICH DAVID WALKED AND WEPT DURING ABSALOM'S REBELLION. [Psalms, lxxiv:2.]- "Remember thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old; the rod of thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed; this Mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt." Mount Zion occupies the southwest section of the city. The west and south sides rise abruptly from the valley of Hinnom, and the south brow of Zion is bold and prominent. The Mount of Olives from Mount Zion is an inspiring sight. The graceful outlines of the Mount of Olives are conspicuous from every part of the city. We see on the summit of the central crest the lofty tower erected by the Russians. There are many buildings upon the Mount of Olives and they interfere with the simple beauty of the sacred hill. It is over the Mount of Olives that David ascended when fleeing from his rebel son Absalom (II. Samuel, xv:30).

16 The[v] day is thine, the night also is thine: thou hast prepared the light and the sun.

17 Thou[w] hast set all the borders of the earth: thou hast made[7] summer and winter.

18 Remember[x] this, that the enemy hath reproached, O LORD, and that the foolish people have blasphemed thy name.

19 O deliver not the soul of thy [b]turtle-dove[8] unto the multitude[9] of the wicked: forget not the congregation of thy poor for ever.

20 Have[c] respect unto the covenant:[1] for the [2]dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty.

21 O [d]let not the oppressed return ashamed: let the poor and needy praise thy name.

22 Arise,[e] O God, plead thine own cause: remember how the foolish man [h]reproacheth thee daily.

23 Forget not the voice of thine enemies: the[i] tumult of those that rise up against thee increaseth[2] continually.

PSALM LXXV.

1 The psalmist praiseth God. 2 He promiseth to judge uprightly. 4 He rebuketh the proud by consideration of God's providence. 9 He promiseth to praise God and execute justice.

To the chief musician, Al-taschith,[1] A psalm or song of[2] Asaph.

UNTO thee,[a] O God, do we give thanks, unto thee do we give thanks: for [b]that thy name[3] is near thy wondrous works declare.

2 When [c]I shall receive the congregation[4] I will judge uprightly.

3 The[d] earth and all the inhabitants thereof are dissolved: [e]I bear up the pillars of it. Selah.[5]

4 I[f] said unto the fools,[6] Deal not foolishly; and to the wicked, [h]Lift not up the horn:[7]

5 Lift not up your horn on high:[8] speak not with a stiff neck.

6 For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south;[9]

7 But[i] God is the judge: he putteth down one, and setteth up another.

PSALM LXXVI.

1 A declaration of God's majesty in the church. 11 An exhortation to serve him reverently.

To the chief musician on [a]Neginoth, A psalm or song of[1] Asaph.

IN Judah[b] is God known: his[c] name is great in Israel.

2 In[d] Salem also is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion.

3 There[e] brake he the arrows of the bow, the shield, and the sword, and the battle. [2]Selah.

4 Thou art more glorious and excellent than [g]the mountains of prey.

5 The[h] stout-hearted are spoiled, they have slept their sleep; and none of the men of might have found their hands.[3]

6 At[i] thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse[4] are cast into a dead sleep.

7 Thou,[j] even thou, art to be feared: and [k]who may stand in thy sight when once thou art angry?

8 Thou[l] didst cause judgment to be heard from heaven; the earth feared, and was still,

9 When [m]God arose to judgment, to save all the meek of the earth. Selah.

10 Surely[o] the wrath of man shall praise thee: the [p]remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain.

11 Vow,[q] and[5] pay unto the LORD your God: let [r]all that be round about him bring presents unto him that ought to be feared.[6]

12 He[s] shall cut off the spirit of princes: he is terrible to the kings of the earth.

nant that still lingered, in sorrow, amidst the ruins of the temple, after Jeremiah was carried down from Mizpah to Egypt (Je. 43. 6), and is it not, most probably, an expression of regret for that rebellious act of abduction?—C.

Ver. 17. Summer and winter. Therefore the God by whose power the glory of light emerges from the deformity of darkness, and the beauty of summer from the desolation of winter, is able to grant deliverance from enemies, and bring comfort out of sorrow. See ver. 10.—C.

Ver. 20. 'The prayer in this passage may with propriety be used by the people of God now. It is still true that "the dark parts of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty;" and in view of this fact, and of the utter hopelessness of the renovation of the world by any human means, or by any progress which society can make of itself, it is proper to seek God's interposition. And it is proper in such prayers to him now, to make the ground of our appeal to him his own gracious covenant: his promises made to his church; his solemn assurance that this state of things shall not always continue, but that the time will arrive when the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord' (Barnes).—P.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! to what melancholy apprehensions of their state and case are the people of God sometimes reduced! They fear that the rod of his correction is the sword of his judgment. But though he cast them down, he will not forsake believers. They who are redeemed by Jesus' blood should not come under the bondage of corruption. The favours which they have received are a presage, and ought to be made a plea for greater. While worldly minds feel only worldly crosses, the interests of religion and welfare of the church are incomparably dearest to the children of God. And however certain the ruin which will fall upon the destroyers of his church at last, it is extremely affecting to behold them making havoc of God's truths, ordinances, or people, while there is none to comfort us or to explain the dark providences. But under sore troubles it is proper to commemorate and plead upon God's former and distinguished mercies. He who divided the Red Sea and destroyed Pharaoh and his host, and who brought waters from the rock for Israel; he who is the Sovereign of nature, can, at his pleasure, command our and his church's deliverance. Importunate wrestlings and pleadings with God for the relief of his church, which is so dear to him, and for fulfilling his promise, of which he is ever mindful, and for destroying his daring and implacable reproachers, will not be long unanswered.

PSALM LXXV. Ver. 3. The single speaker can be no other than Messiah, prophetically arrived in his church. None but Christ alone could, without vain boasting and arrogance, attribute to himself such mighty power.—Note, The world, with all its institutions, is preserved from ruin merely that Christ may be glorified.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—While we think of Jesus Christ, whom God has marvellously crowned with glory and honour, and of the infinite danger of opposing his government, let us remark what wonderful works of God have been exercised to usward. Great is the praise which we owe to God on every review of his mercies. Important and useful is the charge which is committed to magistrates and ministers: and there is great need of activity and care in their administrations, as they must be accountable to God, from whom they received their power. One true patriot may sometimes save a disjointed church or state from impending ruin. But vain and dangerous is it to withstand God's deputies. The righteous shall be advanced and flourish, while obstinate sinners shall be plunged into everlasting misery.

PSALM LXXVI. Ver. 1. In Judah God is known. God was known in the doctrine that expressed his nature—in the commandments that prescribed his will—in the history that recorded his acts—and the prophecy that foretold his coming to salvation, victory, and judgment.—C.

Ver. 4. This is a passage of great difficulty. May it not be paraphrased thus: 'Thou Zion, undistinguished among cities, art yet, as the dwelling-place of God, more excellent than them all; and thou, Salem, taught by thy very name to cultivate peace, art yet, in that peace of God, more glorious than the mountains of the warriors—their strongholds and fortresses—enriched and stored with all the spoils of conquest.'—C.

Ver. 9. Though spoken of as an event past, these words are evidently a description of a time still future—a mode of speech common with the prophets (see, for example, Is. 5. 3), the time at which God will arise and have mercy upon Zion, and save in his judgment all the meek of the earth.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those nations and churches which have the knowledge and presence of God in them! How profitable, pleasant, and enriching! Gloriously he protects them in danger, and destroys their enemies, however mighty or numerous. Their tyrannical oppressors, though like mountains of prey, shall destroy themselves utterly. His meek ones must indeed patiently wait awhile; but at last he will, to the terror of all around, appear for their relief. Whatever his people suffer shall but brighten their graces and

PSALM LXXVII.

1 The psalmist showeth what fierce combat he had with diffidence. 10 The victory which he had by considering God's great and gracious works.

To the chief musician, to [a]Jeduthun, A psalm of[1] Asaph.

I CRIED[b] unto God with my voice, even unto God with my voice; and he gave ear unto me.[2]

2 In[c] the day of my trouble I sought the LORD: my [3]sore[4] ran[d] in the night, and ceased not: [e]my soul refused to be comforted.

3 I[g] remembered God, and was troubled: I[h] complained, and my spirit was overwhelmed. Selah.[5]

4 Thou[i] holdest mine eyes waking: I am so troubled that I cannot speak.

5 I[j] have considered the days of old, the years of ancient times.

6 I call to remembrance my [k]song in the night: [l]I commune with mine own heart; and my spirit made diligent search.

7 Will[m] the LORD cast off for ever? and will he be favourable no more?

8 Is[o] his mercy clean gone for ever? doth his promise fail for evermore?[6]

9 Hath[p] God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies? Selah.

10 And I said, [q]This is my infirmity: but I will remember the [r]years of the right hand of the most High.[7]

11 I[s] will remember the works of the LORD; surely I will remember thy wonders of old.

12 I will [t]meditate also of all thy work, and talk of thy doings.[8]

13 Thy[u] way, O God, is in the sanctuary:[9] who[v] is so great a God as our God?

14 Thou[x] art the God that doest wonders: thou[y] hast declared thy strength among the people.

15 Thou[z] hast with thine arm redeemed thy people, the sons of Jacob and Joseph. Selah.

16 The[a] waters saw thee, O God, the waters saw thee; they were afraid: the depths also were troubled.

17 The clouds poured out water:[1] the skies sent out a sound: thine [b]arrows also went abroad.

18 The[c] voice of thy thunder was in the heaven: the lightnings lightened the world: the earth trembled and shook.

2 The sustaining and comforting influence of a study of God's goodness, as displayed in the history of his church in all ages, is here indirectly shown. It is sufficient to cheer the soul under all circumstances. It is calculated to preserve the church from infidelity, to strengthen faith in the midst of the most appalling dangers, and to encourage the hearts of God's people, no matter how great the calamities that beset her. Let churches and individuals alike learn the lesson.—C.

PSALM LXXVIII.

1 An exhortation both to learn and to preach the law of God. 9 The story of God's wrath against the incredulous and disobedient. 67 The Israelites being rejected, God chose Judah, Zion, and David.

Maschil of Asaph.[1]

GIVE [a]ear, O [b]my people, to my law:[2] incline your ears to the words of my mouth.

2 I[c] will open my mouth in a parable;[3] I will utter dark savings of old;[4]

3 Which[d] we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us.

4 We[e] will not hide them from their children, showing to the generation to come the praises of the LORD, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.[5]

5 For[g] he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, [h]that they should make them known to their children:

6 That[i] the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children:

7 That[j] they might set their hope in God, [k]and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments:

8 And might not be [l]as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation; a generation that set not their heart aright,[6] and whose spirit was not steadfast with God.

9 The children of Ephraim, being armed, and carrying[7] bows, [m]turned back in the day of battle.

10 They[o] kept not the covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law;

11 And[p] forgat his works, and his wonders that he had showed them.

12 Marvellous[q] things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the field of [r]Zoan.

13 He[s] divided the sea, and caused them to pass through; and he made the waters to stand as an heap.

14 In[t] the day-time also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire.

redound to his glory. And whatever of his enemies' fury hath not this tendency he restrains. The more awful our God and our deliverances are, the more ought we to wait on him, fear him, and make and pay grateful vows to him.

PSALM LXXVII. Ver. 1. There is one, and one only, 'whom the Father heareth always,' Jn. 11. 42, and in whose name alone are the prayers of sinners heard—that one is Christ. C.

Ver. 15. The sons of Joseph who was sold into slavery—the sons of Jacob who were brought into it in search of food, and hope of protection and prosperity. The first, the emblem of the natural man, 'sold under sin;' the second, the emblem of the spiritual man, for a time seduced, like Peter, to forget and deny his Lord. C.

Ver. 18. There is here a description of a storm of rain, hail, thunder, and lightning, with most probably an earthquake, not recorded in any of the books of Moses. The occasional supply of such omissions, when thus furnished by the Spirit, is serviceable as reminding us that the Scriptures were written, not to be histories of men, but of God and his government—a consideration that will often solve the most remarkable Scripture difficulties. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What days of trouble saints have to endure from temptations, corruptions, afflictions, and desertions! But in distress we must flee to the compassionate bosom of our God, and pour out our complaints before him. And if we would speed we must be both importunate and unwearied in our application. If we but speak in groans God can understand us and will answer. But often, under strong temptations, saints feed their sorrows and reject the consolations which God suggests to them in his Word: often they indulge the melancholy apprehension that he hath forsaken them and left them to eternal perdition. Terrible then is their case: and dishonourable to God is this their distrust. But hopeful is the appearance when they are brought to condemn their own unbelief, and to cast themselves on his almighty power and mercy; and when they continue meditating on and declaring his former almighty works of providence or grace. This awakens themselves and others to honourable thoughts of his conduct and to grateful praise. However deep and mysterious the dispensations of his providence, they are all holy and just. And however awful, they are infinitely gracious, and issue in the deliverance of believers from their manifold bondage, and in their guidance, by Jesus their great Leader and Priest, to the Canaan above.

PSALM LXXVIII. Ver. 8. Steadfast. Steadfastness is essential to religion, and is equally required in doctrine, testimony, and practice. Versatility and compliance will save for a time from many inconveniences that consistency must bear; but steadfastness will triumph in the end, while Reuben, unstable as water, will never excel. C.

15 He[u] clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of the great depths.

16 He brought [v]streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.

17 And [w]they sinned yet more against him, by provoking the most High in the wilderness.

18 And[y] they tempted God in their heart, by asking meat for their lust.

19 Yea, they spake against God; they said, Can[z] God furnish[6] a table in the wilderness?

20 Behold,[a] he smote the rock, that the waters gushed out, and the streams overflowed; can he give bread also? can he provide flesh for his people?

21 Therefore the LORD heard this, and [b]was wroth; so a fire[9] was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel;

22 Because [c]they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation;[1]

23 Though he [d]had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the [e]doors of heaven, 24 And[g] had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

25 Man did eat [2]angels'[3] food: he sent them meat to the full.

26 He[h] caused an east wind to blow[4] in the heaven; and by his power he brought in the [5]south wind.

27 He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and feathered fowls[5] like as the sand of the sea;

28 And he let it fall in the midst of their camp, round about their habitations.

29 So[i] they did eat, and were well filled: for he gave them their own desire;

30 They[j] were not estranged from their lust: but while their meat was yet in their mouths,

31 The wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and smote down[6] the chosen men[7] of Israel.

32 For[k] all this they sinned still, and believed not for his wondrous works.

Ver. 9. Ephraim. Ephraim is selected to exemplify the result of unsteadiness, (1) Because, as the chief son of Joseph, he inherited peculiar promises, Ge. 48. 20. (2) Because Ephraim was the ruling tribe at entering Canaan under Joshua. (3) Because Ephraim attained to supreme power in the ten tribes, Is. 7. 9. (4) Because Ephraim became conspicuous among the tribes for dissolution of morals and idolatry, Is. 17. 28: Ho. 8. 11. (5) Because in their danger they sought not God, but Assyria, Ho. 5. 13. And (6) Because God visited them with calamities as conspicuous as the privileges they abused, Ho. 5. 9, 12. C.

Ver. 32. To many unthinking persons it appears strange, almost, if not altogether, beyond credibility, that the Israelites could receive so many mercies, and feel so many judgments, and yet remain the sensual, stupid, stiff-necked, rebellious, and incorrigible people they are represented to have been. A little consideration of the disregard of God's mercies and judgments that may still be seen in the world would soon remove this surprise or incredulity, and enforce the conviction, that the providence of God, and the blindness and rebellion of men, still continue, as in the days of Moses, to refuse to be enlightened, and to spurn the hand that relieves and feeds them. C.

Ver. 34. When he slew them, &c. That is, when he was slaying them, then, out of fear, they sought him: an occurrence every day exemplified in sick-bed professions of sorrow for past sins, and resolutions of amendment for the future: professions and resolutions that are often forgotten so soon as returning health prepares the way for renewed temptation. C.

Ver. 57. Deceitful bow. The eastern bow is ordinarily composed of several pieces of different elastic materials, and when unstrung is recurved nearly into the form of a hoop; and, if the elastic tendency of the curvature vary in the least from the plane of the string, the bow, when the arrow is discharged, will unstring itself and spring back, and the arrow will fall at the feet of the archer. C.

Ver. 59. When God heard this. We know little more of the relations between men and angels, than that 'they are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation,' and that there is 'joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth'—but these words seem also to intimate that the idolatries and other apostasies of the church may be brought up in heavenly records, or—if such in heaven there may be—even in holy lamentations 'to the ears of the God of Sabaoth.' C.

Ver. 64. No lamentation. It has often been remarked that among the many evils of continued public calamities, none is more grievous than the almost total destruction of sympathy and natural affection, and the paramount domination of selfishness. No instance can be more remarkable than that of a widow whose heart has been rendered so callous that she drops no tear of sorrow to the memory of the husband of her youth! C.

REFLECTIONS.—Important are the great things of God's law and the matters of our eternal salvation; and they demand the most serious attention. With great care ought parents to instruct children in the knowledge of the great truths and works of God. Neglect of this issues in children's unbelief, hypocrisy, and lasting ruin. And to avoid the bad effects of parents' guilt, children of wicked men ought to be doubly careful to avoid imitating them. How weak men are when God is their enemy; and how cowardly when their consciences are burdened with guilt! No miracles, however gracious and striking, can melt an ignorant and hardened heart, or induce it to gratitude. No favours will satisfy a discontented spirit, and restrain its malicious murmurings against God. With amazing patience and kindness God provides for his abusers amongst mankind! But when he gratifies sinners in their requests, his gifts become their snare and curse: this world's abundance is abused to excess: reflection is banished: and men hurry headlong into ruin. They who make a god of their belly will find their end to be destruction: and they who will not be bowed by mercies or corrections must be broken by judgments. If sin be indulged sorrow must follow. Nor shall the stoutest be able to resist the uplifted arm of an angry God. Troubles often force men to their profession, prayers, or tears, whose wickedness is quickly thereafter discovered. The danger is scarcely blown over when all their convictions and promises are forgotten and contemned.—O the infinite compassion and patience of God towards all professing people! But, alas! his most singular favours and tremendous judgments are soon forgotten and despised!—The creatures of God sometimes become means, and in the most fearful manner cover his enemies with ruin. But abundant returns of thankfulness, love, and service are due to him from those to whom he has been liberal of his favours. How ready are most to imitate their wicked progenitors, to the dishonour of their gracious God! But more fearfully criminal is the unfaithfulnot their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence;[4]

51 And[h] smote all the first-born in Egypt; the chief of their strength in the tabernacles of Ham:[i]

52 But[j] made his own people to go forth like sheep, and guided them in the wilderness like a flock.[5]

53 And[k] he led them on safely, so that they feared not: but the sea [l]overwhelmed[6] their enemies.

54 And he brought them [m]to the border of his sanctuary,[7] even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased.

55 He[n] cast out the heathen also before them, and divided them an inheritance by line,[8] and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents.

56 Yet[p] they tempted and provoked the most high God, and kept not his testimonies:

57 But[q] turned back, and dealt unfaithfully like their fathers: they were turned aside [r]like a deceitful bow.

58 For[s] they provoked him to anger with their high places, and moved him to jealousy with their graven images.

59 When God [t]heard this, he [u]was wroth, and greatly abhorred Israel:

60 So[v] that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed among men;

61 And delivered his strength[9] into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand.[1]

62 He[x] gave his people over also unto the sword; and was wroth with his inheritance.

63 The[y] fire consumed their young men; and their maidens were not given[2] to marriage.

64 Their[z] priests fell by the sword; and their widows made no lamentation.

65 Then[a] the LORD awaked as one out of sleep, and like a mighty man that shouteth by reason of wine:

66 And he [b]smote his enemies in the hinder parts; he put them to a perpetual reproach.

67 Moreover [c]he refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim:

68 But[d] chose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion which he loved.

69 And[e] he built his sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which he hath established[3] for ever.[4]

70 He[g] chose David also his servant, and took him from the sheep-folds:

71 From following[5] the [h]ewes great with young he brought him [i]to feed Jacob his people, and Israel his inheritance.

72 So[j] he fed them according to the integrity[6] of his heart, and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands.

PSALM LXXIX.

1 The psalmist complaineth of the desolation of Jerusalem. 9 He prayeth for deliverance, 13 and promiseth thankfulness.

A psalm of[1] Asaph.

O GOD, [a]the heathen are come into [b]thine inheritance; [c]thy holy temple have they defiled; they have laid Jerusalem on heaps.

2 The[d] dead bodies of thy servants have they given to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven, the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth.

3 Their blood have they shed like water round about Jerusalem; [e]and there was none to bury them.

4 We[g] are become a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us.

5 How[h] long, LORD? wilt thou be angry for ever? [i]shall thy jealousy burn like fire?

6 Pour[j] out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee,[2] and upon the kingdoms that have not called upon thy name.

7 For[k] they have devoured Jacob, and laid waste his dwelling-place.

8 O[l] remember not against us former iniquities:[3] let[m] thy tender mercies speedily prevent us;[4] for we are brought very low.

9 Help[o] us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name;[5] and deliver us, and purge away our sins, for thy name's sake.

10 Wherefore[p] should the heathen say, Where is their God? [q]let him be known among the heathen in our sight by the [6]revenging[7] of the blood of thy servants which is shed.

11 Let[r] the sighing of the prisoner[8] come before thee: [s]according to the greatness of thy power[9] preserve thou those that are appointed to [1]die:[2]

12 And [t]render unto our neighbours sevenfold into their bosom[3] their [u]reproach, wherewith they have reproached thee, O LORD.

13 So[v] we thy people, and sheep of thy pasture, will give thee thanks for ever; we will [x]show forth thy praise to all generations.[4]

[5] The figure is equally beautiful and graphic. The eastern shepherd goes before his sheep, and they follow him. He leads them to the best pastures, along the safest paths, and to the choicest fountains. He keeps off all danger, meets and drives away wild beasts that would destroy and devour. So did God with Israel in the wilderness. In the cloudy pillar by day and the fiery pillar by night he led them. He made them encamp by the fountains in the desert. ness of those who profess to serve him; it draws tremendous destruction upon the transgressors. If we forsake God he will forsake us; and no tabernacle, no formalities in religion, can avail us when he is departed. —But however sharply he corrects faithful people, he hath still mercy in store for them. They who triumph over them a little shall quickly have their glory turned to shame: and he will maintain a church to himself for ever. If to punish one nation he remove their gospel candlestick, he will send the light of his truth to another, and often the most unlikely. And not David, but Jesus Christ, shall for ever feed God's flock of ransomed men, according to the integrity of his heart and good skill of his hands.

PSALM LXXIX. Ver. 1. There is no internal note of the precise date of this psalm, and conjecture is useless. It is enough to know that it records some one of those lamentable occasions upon which a righteous God gave up to judgment a backsliding and forgetful church. But let the Gentile churches recollect that such judgments are not confined to Israel, but are prophetically suspended over themselves, should they fall into the Jewish sins of self-righteousness and unbelief, Ro. 9. 31; 10. 3; 11. 20, 21. C.

Ver. 5. These words may have been, and probably were, descriptive of the ravages of the Babylonians, when the first temple was destroyed and Jerusalem laid waste; but they were also prophetic of more terrible calamities in the distant future. To this day the poor Jews assemble at stated times outside the massive wall of the ancient temple area, and, wailing, chant these lines. P.

REFLECTIONS. — To what fearful and lasting distress and desolation is the church of God sometimes brought, while forced to bear at once the cruelty and derision of men and the manifested displeasure of God! oppressed for a while, he will speedily rid them of their persecutors; and often their extremity ushers in their deliverance. And deliverances, founded in pardon through Jesus' blood, will animate to cordial praise and thankfulness.

PSALM LXXX. Ver. 1. Leadest Joseph. In the pastoral countries of the East, the flock intrusted to a shepherd is generally under a hundred (see Mat. 18. 12); because it must be sedulously watched, and kept within the view of the shepherd, for fear of the predatory bands by whom these countries are infested. The shepherd accordingly teaches his flock to know his voice, come at his call—he leads them, and they follow his movements, Jn. 10. 27. C.

Ver. 2. Before Ephraim—Joseph's first-born, by divine election; before Benjamin, Joseph's beloved brother; before Manasseh, his first-born in point of time, but placed last by divine appointment, to teach families that the Lord reigneth in all their arrangements. These three tribes marched immediately before the Kohathites who carried the ark, Nu. 2. 17—24; 10. 21—24. C.

Ver. 13. The boar, &c. This is a literal representation of fact at this day in some of the vine districts of the East, especially in Mesopotamia. In the lips of a Jew, the words had a meaning doubly emblematic of the persecutors of the church, as represented not merely by a destructive but an unclean animal. C.

Ver. 17. Man of thy right hand. Let thy hand, anointing him to office and power, by the Holy Ghost, be upon Messiah, the man who is to be exalted to thy 'right hand'—the 'Son of man' who comes to redeem the world. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the mercy that God is the shepherd, leader, and protector of his people—that he is a God reconciled in Christ, to the everlasting wonder of angels and men—and that now it is not the Jewish tribes who marched after the ark in the desert, but multitudes of Gentiles, that see his salvation. Awakened souls ardently desire reconciliation with God, and repeated manifestations of his favour. And if we are turned to God by faith, we cannot fail to inherit his eternal glory. But through seeming rejection of prayers and angry frowns from God, and through tears, griefs, and reproaches, must we sometimes go thither. With what kind care did God settle the Israelites in Canaan and make them flourish there! With how much more did he gather, found, and increase his gospel church! But, alas! the misery and ruin that sin draws down upon the best-constituted churches and nations. Enemies, furious as wild beasts, waste them when God withdraws his protection. Yet the design hereof is not his people's ruin; but to excite their prayers, quicken their repentance, and magnify the wonders of his power and grace in their deliverance. It is impossible for his church to be ruined when her help is laid on her almighty Redeemer, the man of God's right hand. God's love for us is the source of all our salvation, quickening, and blessedness of grace. Through him strengthening us, we can do all things. No wonder then that prayer is the daily employment of such as are spiritually alive; and that a sense of God's favour is more earnestly desired than the removal of any affliction.

PSALM LXXXI. Ver. 1. God is called the God of Jacob, in reference to the following circumstances in Jacob's history:—(1) He was a specimen, representative, or type of the electing grace of God, Ro. 9. 11. (2) He learned, by grace, to prize the birthright. (3) He was willing to purchase it with his food, the representative of his life. (4) He was forced into exile, and became a stranger, a pilgrim. (5) He was tried with hard measures by his friends. (6) He was a faithful servant. (7) He was an affectionate husband and parent. (8) He was a bold wrestler in prayer—utterly refusing to resign without a blessing. (9) He was the father of a numerous progeny. (10) He was, in the fulfilment of prophecy, and the designs of Providence, led down into Egypt. (11) He was brought up from it after death—an emblem of deliverance by the resurrection. (12) He rested in the land of promise. C.

Ver. 5. Understood not. Messiah, as prophet, is the speaker, and so speaks, as when he shall say to the wicked, 'I never knew you.' C.

Ver. 10. Ask what you need; make any request consonant with my holy will, and the granting of which will promote your own welfare, and I will liberally respond to every wish, and bestow to the utmost extent of your desire. 'There is not a want of our nature—of our bodies or our souls: a want pertaining to this life or the life to come—to ourselves, to our families, to our friends, to the church, or to our country—which God is not able to meet: and there is not a real necessity in any of these respects which he is not willing to meet.' P.

REFLECTIONS.—God's saving relations are a delightful foundation of our warmest praise. Deliverances from God, as well as his authoritative command, oblige us to a punctual observance of his ordinances of worship. And nothing can do it more effectually than our eternal redemption through Christ. How ready is God to help and to save those who call upon him in trouble! And all our obedience is delightfully founded.

thee out of the land of Egypt: [r]open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it.

11 But[s] my people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me.[9]

12 So[t] I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust;[1] and they walked in their own counsels.

13 Oh[u] that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways!

14 I should soon have subdued [v]their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries.

15 The haters of the LORD should have submitted themselves[2] unto him: [w]but their time[3] should have endured for ever.

16 He [x]should have fed them also with the finest of the wheat:[4] and with honey out of the rock should I have satisfied thee.

PSALM LXXXII.

1 The psalmist, having exhorted the judges, 5 and reproved their misconduct, 8 prayeth God to judge.

A psalm of Asaph.[1]

GOD standeth[2] in the [a]congregation of the mighty; he judgeth among the gods.

2 How long will ye [b]judge unjustly, and accept the persons of the wicked? Selah.[3]

3 Defend[4] the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy.

4 Deliver[c] the poor and needy: rid them out of the hand of the wicked.

5 They[d] know not, neither will they understand; they walk on in darkness: [e]all the foundations of the earth are out of course.[5]

6 I[g] have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High.[6]

7 But[h] ye shall die like men, and fall like one of the princes.[7]

8 Arise,[i] O God, judge the earth: for [j]thou shalt inherit all nations.

PSALM LXXXIII.

1 A complaint to God of the enemies' conspiracies. 9 A prayer against them that oppress the church.

A song or psalm of Asaph.[1]

KEEP not[a] thou silence, O God: hold not thy peace, and be not still, O God.

2 For, [b]lo, thine enemies make a tumult; and they that hate thee have lifted up the head.

3 They[c] have taken crafty counsel against thy people, and consulted against thy [d]hidden ones.[2]

4 They have said, 'Come, and let us cut them off from being a nation; that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance.

5 For[e] they have consulted together with one [3]consent;[4] they are confederate against thee:

6 The[h] tabernacles of Edom, and the Ishmaelites; of Moab, and the Hagarenes;[5]

7 Gebal,[i] and Ammon, and Amalek; the Philistines, with the inhabitants of Tyre;

13 O[r] my God, make them like a wheel;[8] as the stubble before the wind.

PSALM LXXXIV.

1 The psalmist, longing for the communion of the sanctuary, 4 showeth how blessed they are that dwell therein. 8 He prayeth to be restored unto it.

To the chief musician upon [a]Gittith, A psalm for[1] the sons of Korah.

HOW amiable[b] are thy tabernacles, O LORD of hosts!

2 My[c] soul longeth, yea, even fainteth, for the courts of the LORD: [d]my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God.

on his gospel grant of himself to us as OUR GOD. His service must then be our highest interest as well as duty. Past obligations are sufficient to engage our hearts, even though we had no future promises in view. And when God grants himself and his fulness, our desires or prayers for enjoyment can never be too much enlarged. They only who have him for their portion have all that heart can wish. But how terrible is the punishment of a wilful refusal of his gracious offers! What loss of victory over enemies, of perpetuated enjoyments, and of delightful provision! Alas! what enemies are sinners to their own souls! And they who resist God's Word and Spirit have only their own wilfulness to blame when their destruction comes. Their perishing is not through want of compassion in God, but through the hardness and impenitence of their own hearts.

PSALM LXXXII. Ver. 1. Among the gods. That is, among kings, judges, and magistrates, who are called gods, as bound by oath to execute justice; as God has bound himself by oath, for consolation of the 'heirs of promise.' He. 6. 17. C.

Ver. 5. Foundations. The principal foundations of society are truth, justice and mercy: and that these are continually out of course, is manifest in this, that the greatest efforts of human wisdom and power, either are, or pretend to be, employed in preserving or restoring them. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dignified is the office of magistrates, as the deputies of God. And with solemn awe and strict equity ought they to fix their decisions, as in God's presence, and as accountable to him. Yet how commonly do they indulge themselves in injustice and partiality! For want of substance to procure right to themselves the poor are ordinarily trampled on; but God is their guardian; and, let magistrates do their worst, he will at last redress the grievances of his poor ones. The high station and mighty influence of magistrates shall not long protect them from death; nor, if wicked, from damnation. If our rulers then be wicked, let us give ourselves to prayer, that God may rectify matters, and subdue the world to the righteous government of his Son.

PSALM LXXXIII. Ver. 2. To hate the God of philosophical imagination may be deemed impossible; but to hate the God of truth, holiness, and grace, is the very constitution of every unrenewed heart. Ro. 8. 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—To quicken his people's importunity in prayer the Lord sometimes appears for a time to disregard their distress. Whatever pretences men make for their opposition to God's people, the real cause is their enmity against God himself, whose holiness they cannot endure, and whose image they cannot but hate. But while saints are hid with Christ in God, no enemy can really hurt them. Wicked men, though

PSALM LXXXV.

1 The psalmist, out of the experience of former mercies, prayeth for the continuance thereof. 8 He promiseth to wait God's answer, in confidence of his manifold blessings.

To the chief musician, A psalm for[1] the sons of Korah.

LORD, thou[a] hast been favourable[2] unto thy land: [b]thou hast brought back the captivity of Jacob.

2 Thou[c] hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people: thou hast covered all their sin. Selah.[3]

3 Thou[d] hast taken away all thy wrath: thou hast turned thyself from the fierceness of thine anger.[4]

4 Turn[e] us, O God of our salvation, and cause thine anger toward us to cease.

5 Wilt[f] thou be angry with us for ever? wilt thou draw out thine anger to all generations?

6 Wilt[h] thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?

7 Show[i] us thy mercy, O LORD, and grant us thy salvation.

8 I[j] will hear[5] what God the LORD will speak: [k]for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints: but [l]let them not turn again to folly.

9 Surely[m] his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that [n]glory may dwell in our land.

10 Mercy[p] and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other.[6]

11 Truth[q] shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven.

12 Yea,[r] the LORD shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase.

13 Righteousness[s] shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.

PSALM LXXXVI.

1 David imploreth God's aid because of his need and religious faith, 5 and of the power and goodness of God. 11 He prayeth for grace, and promiseth praise for past mercies. 14 Complaining of the proud, he craveth some token of God's favour.

A prayer of[1] David.

BOW down[a] thine ear, O LORD, hear me: for I[b] am poor and needy.

2 Preserve[c] my soul; for I am holy:[2] O thou my God, save thy servant that [d]trusteth in thee.

3 Be merciful unto me, O LORD: [e]for I cry unto thee daily.[3]

4 Rejoice[g] the soul of thy servant: for unto thee, O LORD, do [h]I lift up my soul.

diversified by nations, humours, or interests, strongly unite in opposing the cause of God and truth. Glad would they be if neither preacher nor professor of the true religion were left upon earth. But though craft be employed to seduce, threatenings to intimidate, and fury to extirpate, the foundation of God standeth sure, God knoweth them that believe, and they shall never be moved. At the worst they have their all-sufficient Lord to flee to, who can check the madness of the devourers. And past interpositions of God in favour of his people should encourage us to plead and hope for the like mercy. All opposition to God and his church is but rushing headlong into certain ruin. Even in this life, sinners' terrors of mind often make their life a burden, and are a presage of more dreadful misery in hell for ever. Men must know at last that the Lord omnipotent reigneth; and the execution of deserved judgment on the ungodly but shows the tendency of sin. Meanwhile we ought to long for the conviction and conversion of our bitterest enemies of mankind, rather than their destruction.

PSALM LXXXIV. Ver. 3. Even is not in the Hebrew. The words between yea and young should rather be taken as a parenthesis, and the meaning stands thus—'My heart cries out for the living God, for thine altars, O Lord of hosts,' &c. That birds could not build in the altars, is evident both from their construction and constant use; nor can altars be put for courts, for they are already mentioned. The longing of the psalmist is for the altar of sacrifice, the one great sacrifice that perfects for ever them that are sanctified. He. 10. 12, 14. C.——'The idea here is, that the sparrows and the swallows seemed to have a happy lot: to be in a condition to be envied. Even they might come freely to the place where God was worshipped—to the very altars—and make their home there undisturbed. How strangely in contrast with this was the condition of the wandering—the exiled—author of the psalm!' (Barnes). P.

Ver. 6. Baca. Not any particular place; for the people, in ascending to the festivals, could not all pass through any one valley. It signifies, 'valley of weeping,' the emblem of the life of 'the Man of Sorrows,' 'in the fellowship of whose sufferings' every pilgrim of Zion must partake, Phi. 3. 10. C.

Ver. 5–7. The meaning of this difficult passage is probably this:—'Blessed is the man whose strength (or trust) is in thee, whose heart rejoiceth at the prospect of following the way to thy house. Even when passing through the vale of misery—through sorrow and suffering and persecution—make it as a well (or fountain of delight), and the early rain falleth upon it, and covereth it with verdure. They go from strength, and at length appear before God perfect in Zion. P.——Every one of them in Zion appeareth before God. 'The God of gods will appear to them.' (Williams). C.

Ver. 8. Give ear, O God of Jacob. See note on Ps. 81. 1. Christ here personally intercedes for the church, and him 'the Father heareth always,' Jn. 11. 42. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What inexpressible beauty gracious souls see in holiness and in holy work! Fellowship with God in Christ, in his ordinances, is the delight, the desire of their soul. The meanest abode, with his presence and ordinances, is preferred to a palace without them. Not only faithful ministers who attend to their work, but all who study a life of close fellowship with God, and faithful service of him, increase their joy in the Lord and their strength for his work. If our heart be once engaged we can walk with pleasure in God's ways, and in attending his solemn ordinances. However troublesome the way to heaven be, not one of those who truly set out need faint or miscarry. And O the inexpressible glories they there enjoy in the immediate vision and presence of God! If he be our own and our father's God we shall never seek him in vain. If he be our shield we shall be safe from fear of evil. If our confidence towards him be founded solely on the merit and intercession of Jesus his Anointed, he cannot but behold us in mercy and love. Infinitely preferable is fellowship with God in his ordinances, to all the pleasures of sin or sense that can be enjoyed on earth: and happy are those who have God ALL IN ALL to them, bestowing ALL on them; and who, in all cases, depend for ALL they need only upon him.

PSALM LXXXV. Ver. 2. This psalm must be descriptive of the times and sacrifice of Messiah; for at no other period did God 'cover all the sin' of his church. See Ro. 4. 7, 23–25. C.

Ver. 5. The believing remnant of the Jews here intercede for their unbelieving 'brethren, their kinsmen according to the flesh,' during the long dispersion that has succeeded the crucifixion of our Lord. C.

Ver. 11. Under a broken law there is no righteousness, except the finished work of Christ, in which all holy commandment was fulfilled, and the penalty of death endured. Righteousness looked down from heaven when Christ ascended, and 'through the eternal Spirit presented himself without spot before God.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Present distress should never obliterate the grateful memory of God's past favours. His pardons of sin, through active faith, are all free, full, and everlasting; and when guilt is removed wrath ceases of course. Though our unfaithfulness may have plunged us into distress, God is rich in mercy and ready to turn us to himself. But no salvation can be hoped for while we continue indulging our sins. And unless he save us freely, through faith in Christ, we are undone forever. Impenitent sinners must undergo eternal pain; but earnest believers are only corrected for a time. Having experienced the power of his quickening and restoring grace, they rejoice in God their Saviour, and speak, to his glory, of the wonders of his grace. And having expected and obtained an answer to their prayers, the peace which God speaks in his promise withdraws their heart from sinning. But how sure was the promise, near the fulfilment, and great the glory of Jesus' incarnation and office! Herein the mercy, faithfulness, and equity of God appear harmoniously and brightly displayed. While Jesus, the truth, grows upward from earth, his righteous Father

5 For[i] thou, LORD, art good, and ready to forgive; and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee.

6 Give[j] ear, O LORD, unto my prayer; and attend to the voice of my supplications.

7 In [k]the day of my trouble I will call upon thee: for thou wilt answer me.

8 Among[l] the gods[4] there is none like unto thee, O LORD; neither are there any works like unto thy works.

9 All[m] nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O LORD; and shall glorify thy name.

10 For[n] thou art great, and doest wondrous things: [o]thou art God alone.[5]

11 Teach[q] me thy way, O LORD; I will walk in thy truth: unite my heart[6] to fear thy name.

12 I[r] will praise thee, O LORD my God, with all my heart; and I will glorify thy name for evermore.

13 For[s] great is thy mercy toward me; and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest [t]hell.[8]

14 O God, the [u]proud are risen against me, and the assemblies of violent[9] men have sought after my soul, and [w]have not set thee before them.

15 But[x] thou, O LORD, art a God full of compassion, and gracious, long-suffering, and plenteous in mercy and truth.

16 O[z] turn unto me, and have mercy upon me; [a]give thy strength unto [b]thy servant, and save the son of thine handmaid.

17 Show me [c]a token[1] for good; [d]that they which hate me may see it, and be ashamed: because thou, LORD, [e]hast holpen me, and comforted me.

A prayer containing a grievous complaint.

A song or psalm for[1] the sons of Korah, to the chief musician upon Mahalath Leannoth, Maschil of [a]Heman the Ezrahite.[2]

O LORD [b]God of my salvation, [c]I have cried day and night before thee.[3]

2 Let[d] my prayer come before thee: incline thine ear unto my cry;

3 For[e] my soul is full of troubles; and my life draweth nigh unto the grave.

4 I[f] am counted with them that go down into the pit: I am as a man that hath no strength:[4]

5 Free[h] among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave,[5] whom thou rememberest no more: and they are cut off from thy hand.[6]

6 Thou[i] hast laid me in the lowest pit, in darkness, in the deeps.

7 Thy [k]wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Selah.[7]

8 Thou[k] hast put away mine acquaintance far from me; thou hast made me an abomination[8] unto them: I [l]am shut up, and I cannot come forth.

9 Mine[n] eye mourneth by reason of affliction: LORD, I have called daily upon thee; [o]I have stretched out my hands unto thee.

10 Wilt[p] thou show wonders to the dead? shall the dead arise and praise thee? Selah.

11 Shall thy loving-kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction?

12 Shall thy wonders be known in [q]the dark?

from heaven beholds him with pleasure. While the gospel and its influences take place among men, JEHOVAH manifests his righteousness in pardoning and blessing us with all spiritual blessings in Christ; in making us to abound in fruits of righteousness to the praise of his glory; and in directing us to Jesus and his law and example, that we may be led into the paths of everlasting peace.

PSALM LXXXVI. Ver. 2. I am holy. 'Thy favoured one' (Mudge). 'Thy gracious saint' (Ainsworth). But, however it may be translated, the confident assertion of the purity of his personal character, proves the speaker either to be a self-deceiving Pharisee, sporting a righteousness he did not possess, or 'Jesus Christ the righteous,' 'the Holy One of Israel.' The former he could not be, the latter therefore he must be. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I here behold Jesus as the holy but sacrificial servant of his Father, imploring his favours and triumphing in his praise, let me, in every case, pour forth importunate prayers; place all my confidence in God; lodge all my complaints and requests with him; and ascribe to him the glory of his own perfections, and of all my own and the people's deliverances.

PSALM LXXXVII. Ver. 1. The chief object of this psalm is to show the advantages of religious ordinances and religious training. Especially the psalmist illustrates the great benefit of having been born and educated in the holy city, where God is honoured, and where the enlightening, restraining, and quickening influences of his worship are felt. P.—The Lord's foundation is Christ, 1 Co. 3. 10, upon whom are builded, first apostles and prophets, then the whole church, Ep. 2. 20; and this foundation rests upon the mountains, the high raised strength of the Redeemer's holiness, ver. 2. See Ps. 78. 68. C.

Ver. 4. I will mention Egypt, Ps. 89. 10; Is. 51. 9, 10, whom I judged with many plagues, and whence I delivered my people at the first; and Babylon, which I have doomed to extirpation, because she led Zion captive. Behold, also, Philistia, whose persevering enmity I have foiled and punished; Tyre, that once great city, which I have left a desolate rock—with the whole land of Ethiopia (Cush), which I have swept with successive judgments—and all this I have done for my Zion's sake. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold how firmly and publicly our gospel church is founded upon Jesus Christ the Rock of ages! And how JEHOVAH delights in fellowship with his people in the public and private ordinances of his grace. Glorious things are spoken of her foundation, her ordinances, her members, her properties, her fulness. And under the influence of almighty grace the heathen nations on every side crowd into her. Behold also the exact and kind care which God takes of every true member! And great spiritual joy and rejoicing, and fresh springs of salvation, are found in her by the saints.

PSALM LXXXVIII. Ver. 7. Thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Surely in the lips of any but Messiah, upon whom 'the Lord laid the iniquities of us all,' these words would be nothing but selfish exaggeration; while in the lips of Messiah they are literally true, and are therefore to be absolutely interpreted of him alone. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How inexpressibly grievous are the afflictions of some of God's loving children! nay, of his Son! Their sorrows are enlarged. They are reduced to the very brink of despair; loaded and thy righteousness in the [v]land of forgetfulness?

13 But[w] unto thee have I cried, O LORD; and in the morning[g] shall my prayer prevent thee.

14 LORD, [h]why castest thou off my soul? why hidest thou thy face from me?[1]

15 I[x] am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up: while [y]I suffer thy terrors I am distracted.

16 Thy[z] fierce wrath[2] goeth over me; thy terrors have cut me off.

17 They[a] came round about me daily[3] like water; they compassed me about together.

18 Lover[b] and friend hast thou put far from me, and mine acquaintance into darkness.

PSALM LXXXIX.

1 The psalmist praiseth God for his covenant, 5 for his wonderful power, 15 for the care of his people, 19 for his favour to the kingdom of David. 38 Then complaining of contrary events, 46 he expostulateth, prayeth, and blesseth God.

Maschil of [a]Ethan the Ezrahite.[1]

I WILL[b] sing of the mercies of the LORD for ever: with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulness [2]to all generations.[3]

2 For I have said, [c]Mercy shall be built up for ever: thy faithfulness shalt thou establish in the very heavens.

3 I [d]have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto [e]David my servant,

4 Thy[f] seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Selah.[4]

5 And [h]the heavens shall praise thy wonders, O LORD: thy faithfulness also in the congregation of the saints.

6 For [i]who in the heaven can be compared unto the LORD? who among the sons of the mighty can be likened unto the LORD?

7 God[j] is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him.

8 O LORD God of [5]hosts, [k]who is a strong LORD like unto thee? or to thy faithfulness round about thee?

9 Thou[l] rulest the raging of the sea: when the waves thereof arise, thou stillest them.

10 Thou[m] hast broken [6]Rahab[7] in pieces, as one that is slain; thou hast scattered thine enemies with thy strong arm.[8]

11 The[o] heavens are thine, the earth also is thine: as for the world, and the fulness thereof, thou hast founded them.

12 The[p] north and the south thou hast created them: [q]Tabor[9] and Hermon[1] shall [r]rejoice in thy name.

13 Thou hast a mighty arm:[2] strong is thy hand, and high is thy right hand.

14 Justice[s] and judgment are the [3]habitation of thy throne; mercy and truth shall [t]go before thy face.

15 Blessed is the people that know the [u]joyful sound: [v]they shall walk, O LORD, in the light of thy countenance.[4]

16 In[x] thy name shall they rejoice all the day; and [y]in thy righteousness shall they be exalted.

17 For [z]thou art the glory of their strength; and [a]in thy favour our horn shall be exalted.

18 For[b] the LORD is our defence; and the Holy One of Israel is our [5]King.[6]

19 Then thou spakest in vision to thy Holy One, and saidst, [c]I have laid help upon one that is mighty; I have exalted one chosen out of the people.

20 I[d] have found David[7] my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him:

21 With[e] whom my hand shall be established; mine arm also shall strengthen him.

22 The[g] enemy shall not exact upon him; [h]nor the son of wickedness afflict him.

23 And[i] I will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him.

24 But[j] my faithfulness and my mercy shall be with him; [k]and in my name shall his horn be exalted.

25 I[l] will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers.

26 He[n] shall cry unto me, Thou art my Father, my God, and the Rock of my salvation.

27 Also I will make him my [o]first-born, higher than the kings of the earth.[8]

28 My[p] mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him.

29 His[q] seed also will I make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven.[9]

30 If[r] his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments;

31 If they break my statutes,[1] and keep not my commandments;

32 Then[s] will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes.

33 Nevertheless[t] my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from him,[2] nor suffer my faithfulness to fail.[3]

[3] The main object of this psalm is to declare the promises made to David regarding the perpetuity of his throne and kingdom. The promise had a double reference—typical and real. David's line and throne and kingdom were to continue until, in the person and work and reign of our Lord, David's great Son, the typical merged into the real—the temporal into the spiritual.—P.

with a sense of deep sorrow; deserted by friends; and, while their case is apparently remediless, their way lies along the road of pain. If I be cast into this depth, let me, though with a trembling heart, still claim the Lord as my God, my Saviour. Let me, with fervent cries and humble expostulations, pour out my complaints into his bosom. The more my afflictions press me, let my supplications be the more pressing and persevering. And if I wish to live longer on earth, let my great end be to serve God's interests and to show forth his praise.

PSALM LXXXIX. Ver. 1. None but Messiah could confidently adopt the opening resolution and prophecy of this verse: of him, accordingly, it has been interpreted by Rabbi Solomon, amongst the Jews: and by Aben Ezra, amongst Jewish converts to Christianity. C.

Ver. 3. In this verse, the Father addresses the Son, whom he designates as 'David my servant:' David signifies beloved, the name given to the Son by the Father from heaven, Mat. 3. 17: and the apostolic name by which his justifying grace is commended to the church, Ep. 1. 6.

And that it applies here, not to David the son of Jesse, but to David's Lord, will appear certain from considering ver. 4, which applies not to the desolated throne of David in Jerusalem, but to the abiding throne of Messiah in glory. C.

Ver. 5. The heavens shall praise thy wonders, O Lord. The comparison of this passage from verse 5–37, with He. 1. 10 and Ps. 102. 1, 25, will clearly demonstrate that it contains a continued address of the Father to the Son, delivered in prophecy for establishment of the faith of the ancient church. See Lu. 1. 39. C.

Ver. 30. His children. The church is called Christ's 'children,' He. 2. 13, and they are here warned against the terrible judgments upon the various forms of apostasy and infidelity, He. 3. 10; infidelity combined with self-righteousness, Ro. 10. 3, 11, 15; worldliness, 2 Co. 5. 11: final heresy, Tit. 3. 10; and impenitence, Re. 2. 21–23. C.

STAIRWAY TO TOWER OF CASTLE—NEAR THE PLACE WHERE CHRIST WAS TRANSFIGURED. [Psalms, lxxxix:12.]—"The North and the South thou hast created them: Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice in thy name." This is a view of the stairway to the tower of Subeibeh castle. It stands three miles from Cæsarea Philippi, and about one thousand feet higher than this town. It is in sight of Mount Hermon, where the Lord Jesus Christ was transfigured in the presence of Peter, James and John. We are looking toward the North. This castle figured largely in the wars of the Saracenes of Damascus against the Templars of Jerusalem. As it commands the passage from the Huleh to the plains of the Jordan over Hermon to Damascus and the East, it must have been a place of importance at least during those troublous times when such passes were dominated by a frowning castle.

34 My[u] covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips.

35 Once[v] have I sworn [w]by my holiness that I will not lie[4] unto David.[5]

37 It[z] shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah.

38 But[a] thou hast cast off and abhorred; thou hast been wroth with thine anointed.[7]

39 Thou[b] hast made void the covenant of thy servant; thou hast profaned his crown, by casting it to the ground.

40 Thou[c] hast broken down all his hedges; thou hast brought his strong holds to ruin.

41 All[d] that pass by the way spoil him: he is a reproach to his neighbours.

42 Thou hast set up the right hand of his adversaries; thou hast made all his enemies to rejoice.

43 Thou hast also turned the edge of his sword, and hast not made him to stand in the battle.

44 Thou[e] hast made his glory[8] to cease, and cast his throne down to the ground.

45 The[g] days of his youth hast thou shortened; thou hast covered him with shame. Selah.

46 How[h] long, LORD? wilt thou hide thyself for ever? shall thy wrath burn like fire?

47 Remember[i] how short my time is: wherefore hast thou made all men in vain?

48 What[j] man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave? Selah.

49 LORD, [k]where are thy former lovingkindnesses, which thou [l]swarest unto David in thy truth?

50 Remember, LORD, [m]the reproach of thy servants; how I do bear in my bosom the reproach of all the mighty people;

51 Wherewith[o] thine enemies have reproached,[9] O LORD; wherewith they have reproached the footsteps of thine anointed.

PSALM XC.

Title. This is one of the most remarkable, and, in some respects, one of the most beautiful, psalms in the whole book. It has been called the funeral hymn of the world. Human frailty is brought out in it with equal vividness and pathos; but it is brought out in such a way that it teaches man humble resignation rather than blank despair. It teaches the thoughtful man to utter in faith and hope the sublime prayer, 'Thy will be done,' for it shows him that God's will is the supreme good of the creature. It is called in the title a prayer of Moses; and Prof. Alexander has well said:—'The correctness of the title is confirmed by its unique simplicity and grandeur; its appropriateness to his times and circumstances; its resemblance to the law in urging the connection between sin and death; its simplicity of diction akin to the poetical parts of the Pentateuch, without the slightest trace of imitation or quotation; its marked unlikeness to the psalms of David, and still more to those of later date; and finally the proved impossibility of assigning it to any other age or author.' P.

Ver. 1. In all generations. In the days of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the slavery of Egypt, in the wanderings of the desert, in the wars with Philistia, &c., and even in the captivity and dispersion. Yea, still he is the refuge of his people, whenever their heart shall turn to the Lord. C.

Ver. 3. Return, ye children of men. That is, as some understand it, 'return to the dust from whence ye were taken.' But is it not more natural to understand the word return of the 'return of the spirit to God who gave it;' or of the resurrection, in which the body of his children, though 'sown in dishonour, is raised in glory?' C.

Ver. 11. Power of thine anger. None, in this life, can fully estimate the awful torment of 'the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched.'—'Yet who regardeth the power of thine anger, or thy wrath with reverence becoming thee?' (Boothroyd). C.

Ver. 16. Thy work of creation—thy work of providence—thy work of grace. Of the first, the natural man seeth but little: of the second, less: of the third, nothing; for, spiritual things must be spiritually discerned; and the 'pure in heart,' those renewed by the Holy Spirit, 'shall (alone) see God.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who, amidst a transitory and perishing world, have the eternal God for their ALL IN ALL. Wise is his dominion over mankind and unsearchable his duration. But weak and short-lived are men. And it is madness to seek satisfaction and happiness in things so fleeting and unsubstantial. With what armies of sorrows hath sin invaded and overspread our earth: and how exactly every crime is observed by God, in order to correct or punish on account of it! But it is unavailing to live, or live long, unless we live to and in Christ. Yea, intolerable is the woe which God has reserved for those who die in their sins. Every day, therefore, ought to be so numbered as to flee from them to Jesus Christ our refuge. The great business of life is to make ready for death. To ponder aright what is to become of us in eternity is wisdom indeed, and deserves the most serious application. Gracious souls cannot without sorrow abide the sense of God's displeasure. And they who have truly tasted the bitterness of sin cannot rest till the Lord return in pardoning mercy, speak peace to and earth by the rolling tides: measuring out the months of the life of man, and the returns of God's solemn festivals; and 'ruling the night,' as a 'faithful witness in heaven,' that though the sun be withdrawn for a time, his beams are not extinguished. In all which respects, the moon is a beautiful emblem of the covenant grace of God. Some interpret it of the rainbow, but there is no necessity for such straining. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Glorious is that promise of grace which JEHOVAH has made in Jesus Christ as the Head and Representative of all believers. The mercy and faithfulness of God are therein for ever clearly and comfortably manifested; and for ever adored, both in heaven and earth. How infinite are the greatness and majesty of our loving God! How unbounded his strength! No unruly elements in nature, nor outrageous nations of men, can control it. His dominion extends to all parts and ends of the earth; and in a powerful, steady, judicious, righteous, and merciful manner, he conducts his whole providential work, but chiefly that of redemption through the blood of his Son. Happy are they who experimentally know the joyful sound of the gospel, proclaiming Jesus' victories over sin, Satan, the world, death, and hell; and pardon, peace, liberty, and eternal happiness through his blood to sinful men. They walk in the light of JEHOVAH'S favour, direction, and joys! And gloriously are they justified, saved, strengthened, and honoured in Christ!—In these declarations of God to Samuel concerning David, let me contemplate how JEHOVAH found out and laid our help, our salvation, upon Jesus Christ. He it was that supported, strengthened, attended, honoured, and owned him. He it is that aids, favours, corrects, but blesses all believers.—Behold too the sufferings of Jesus and his church, from Satan, from Jews, from heathens, from the wicked: and how terrible the Almighty's displeasure! To be under it for ever constitutes hell. How short, how uncertain, are our days on earth! If through Jesus, as our risen life and quickening Head, we do not live to God's glory here, and with God in glory hereafter, our life is worse than in vain. But painful is it for exercised souls to want the sense of God's love, even though it be secured in the gracious promise. And grievous are the virulent reproaches of Christ, his Father, and his people, and hard to be borne by a tender saint.

STATIONS OF THE CROSS IN THE GARDEN. [Psalms, lxxxix:45.]—"The days of his youth hast thou shortened: thou hast covered him with shame." The Greek church, or the Eastern church, has placed within the Garden of Gethsemane little stations which represent the incidents of the crucifixion. Poor pilgrims from all parts of the world upon visiting Jerusalem make the rounds of these stations of the Cross, praying at each. One cannot stand in the Garden of Gethsemane during the Greek Easter week without having a new apprehension of the hold the Lord Jesus Christ has upon the hearts of the human race. To see people kissing the wood of which the stations representing the incidents of the crucifixion are built: to see them kissing the rocks made dear to their hearts because lying upon the ground over which the Lord Jesus Christ walked, is sufficient to bring tears to the eyes of the hardest heart.

11 Who[r] knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.[2]

12 So[s] teach us to number our days, that we may apply[3] our hearts unto wisdom.

13 Return,[t] O LORD, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.[4]

14 O[u] satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days.

15 Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16 Let[v] thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

17 And[w] let the beauty of the LORD our God be upon us: and [x]establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.[5]

PSALM XCI.

1 The state of the godly. 3 Their safety. 9 Their habitation. 11 Their servants. 14 Their friend; with the effects of them all.

HE that[a] dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide[1] under the shadow of the Almighty.[2]

2 I will say of the LORD, [b]He is my refuge and my fortress: [c]my God; in him will I trust.

3 Surely[d] he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence.

4 He[e] shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust: his truth shall be thy [g]shield and buckler.

5 Thou[h] shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day;

6 Nor for [i]the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon-day.

7 A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it [j]shall not come nigh thee.

8 Only[k] with thine eyes shalt thou behold, and see the reward of the wicked.

9 Because [l]thou hast made the LORD which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation;

PSALM XCII.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God, 4 for his great works, 6 for his judgments on the wicked, 10 and for his goodness to the godly.

A psalm or song for the sabbath-day.

IT is[a] a good thing to give thanks unto the LORD, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High:

2 To[b] show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night,[1]

3 Upon[c] an instrument of ten strings, and upon the psaltery; [2]upon the harp with a solemn sound.[2]

4 For thou, LORD, [d]hast made me glad through thy work:[4] I will triumph in the works of thy hands.

5 O LORD, [e]how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep.

6 A[g] brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool [h]understand this.

7 When[i] the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be [j]destroyed for ever:

8 But thou, LORD, art[k] most high for evermore.

9 For, lo, thine enemies, O LORD, for, lo, [l]thine enemies shall perish; all the workers of iniquity shall be scattered.

their conscience, and enable them to rejoice in himself. And such as are faithful to Christ will be greatly concerned that he may work all in them, do all for them, give all to them; and that he may herein be glorified, not only in them, but also in their posterity after them.

PSALM XCI. Ver. 1. Secret place. In the bosom of the Father, where the Son was in glory 'before the foundation of the world'—our only conception of eternity (see Jn. 1. 18; and 17. 5; 1 Jn. 1. 2); for he that was before creation was, must have been eternal. C.

Ver. 2. I will say. That the speaker is Christ, his own tacit acknowledgment (Mat. 4. 6, compared with ver. 11, 12) unfeignably demonstrates. The amended translation of Lowth, instead of 'I will say,' gives 'who saith,' which seems more natural. C.

Ver. 4. The wings and feathers which God adopted in the emblematic cherubim that overshadowed the mercy-seat—which, again, was the emblem of Jesus, the propitiation or mercy-seat for our sins. C.

Ver. 9. The Lord which is my refuge. By supplying the words which is, the sense is obscured. 'The Lord my refuge,' like 'the Lord our righteousness,' should be taken as a title of Jehovah, appropriating the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, as his refuge: and, through him, the refuge of every believer in his name. C.

Ver. 11. Satan quoted this text correctly, so far as he went; and, so far, our Lord acknowledges the interpretation. But yet he quoted falsely, because he quoted imperfectly, and misrepresented the truth, as he suppressed an essential part. And so, in all ages, have all his servants dealt. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I here contemplate Jesus Christ as the Father's Son, protecting, guarded, attended, heard in his prayers, honoured, and crowned with life and glory everlasting, let me with wonder behold the happiness of all people who make God their refuge and delightful habitation, who know his name, set their love on him, and call on him. Secured against every disappointment and danger, distinguished in the providence of God, guarded by angels, delivered from and victorious over the devil, that fowler, dragon, and lion of hell, JEHOVAH attends them in their troubles, hears their prayers, and gives them answers of peace. He exalts them on Christ their Rock, and makes them to sit with him on his throne; honours them with the relations of children, kings, and priests unto God, and decks them with blessed righteousness and imparted grace. And after preserving all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, he bestows upon them his unutterable blessedness above. May these things in Christ be the desire of my heart.

---

PSALM XCII. Ver. 3. Of the several musical instruments here enumerated, there is little, if any, certain knowledge. Nor is their specific nature important: as the object of the speaker is merely to show, that all instruments of music should be dedicated to the praise of God. 'to show forth his 'loving-kindness' in 'the morning,' because he has preserved his children while they slept—and his 'faithfulness every night,' because he has given them 'bread' through the day. C.

Ver. 12. Like the palm-tree—lofty and fruitful. Like the cedar—great and incorruptible. These characters meet in one, but are from him transfused to many. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Whatever our engagements be, we are bound at least to begin and end every day with prayer and praise. And they who have lively experience of God's love and faithfulness, will delight in daily showing forth his salvation. None but such as are ignorant or wicked will disregard his work of creation or providence; and much less that of redemption—but short-lived is the flourishing of wicked men, and dreadful the misery in which it issues; and yet this misery is the legitimate outcome of sin against God! But pleasant and profitable to themselves and others, and honourable to God, shall be the spiritual growth of those who are planted in Christ, and live in continued fellowship with him.

PSALM XCIII. Ver. 1. The Lord reigneth. The prophetic period to which this and some parallel psalms refer can be easily ascertained from comparing them with Re. 11. 17; 19. 6: at which time God shall 'take to him his mighty power and reign,' and when all the things that are now temporary and movable shall pass under that 'kingdom that cannot be moved,' He. 12. 28. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Solid and believing views of Jesus Christ are excellent means to subdue the pride and remove the fear of man. They who have him for their king and keeper have no reason to be moved from their steadfastness. No earthly dishonours need 10 But[n] my horn shalt thou exalt like the horn of an unicorn:[5] I [o]shall be anointed with fresh oil.

11 Mine[p] eye also shall see my desire on mine enemies; and mine ears shall hear my desire of the wicked that rise up against me.[6]

12 The[q] righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon.

13 Those that [r]be planted[7] in the house of the LORD shall flourish in the courts of our God.

14 They[s] shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing;[8]

15 To show [t]that the LORD is upright; he is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him.

PSALM XCIII.

The majesty, stability, power, and holiness of Christ's kingdom.

THE LORD[a] reigneth, [b]he is clothed with majesty; the LORD is clothed with strength, wherewith he hath [c]girded himself: [d]the world also is stablished, that it cannot be moved.

2 Thy[e] throne is established of old:[1] thou art[2] from everlasting.

3 The[h] floods have lifted up, O LORD, the floods have lifted up their voice; the floods lift up their waves.

4 The[i] LORD on high is mightier than the noise of many waters,[2] yea, than the mighty waves of the sea.

5 Thy[j] testimonies are very sure: [k]holiness becometh thine house, O LORD, for ever.[3]

PSALM XCIV.

1 The psalmist, calling for justice, complaineth of tyranny and impiety. 8 He showeth God's providence; 12 and teacheth the blessedness of affliction. 16 God is the defender of the afflicted.

O LORD God, to whom vengeance belongeth;[1] O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, show thyself.[2]

2 Lift[a] up thyself, [b]thou Judge of the earth: render[c] a reward to the proud.[3]

3 LORD, [d]how long shall the wicked, how long shall the wicked triumph?

4 How long shall they [e]utter and speak hard things? and all the workers of iniquity boast themselves?

5 They[g] break in pieces thy people, O LORD, and afflict thine heritage:

6 They slay the widow and the stranger, and murder the fatherless:

1 Heb. prevent his face, Ps. 95. 2; 100. 4.

7 Yet[h] they say, The LORD shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it.[4]

8 Understand,[i] ye brutish among the [5]people; and, ye fools, when will ye be wise?

9 He[j] that planted the ear, shall he not hear? he that formed the eye, shall he not see?

10 He that [k]chastiseth the heathen, shall not he correct? he that [l]teacheth man knowledge, shall not he know?

11 The[m] LORD knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity.

12 Blessed[o] is the man[6] whom thou chastenest, O LORD, and teachest him out of thy law;

13 That[p] thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity, until the pit be digged for the wicked.

14 For[q] the LORD will not cast off his people, neither will he forsake his inheritance:

15 But [r]judgment shall return unto righteousness; and all the upright in heart shall follow [7]it.

16 Who[s] will rise up for me against the evil-doers? or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity?

17 Unless[t] the LORD had been my help, my soul had almost[8] dwelt in silence.

18 When I said, [u]My foot slippeth; thy mercy, O LORD, held me up.

19 In[v] the multitude of my thoughts within me thy comforts delight my soul.

20 Shall[w] the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which [9]frameth mischief by a law?

21 They[x] gather themselves together against the soul of the righteous, and condemn the innocent blood.[9]

22 But[a] the LORD is my defence; and my God is the rock of my refuge.

23 And[b] he shall bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness, yea, the LORD our God shall cut them off.

PSALM XCV.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his greatness, 6 and for his goodness, 8 and not to tempt him as did Israel in the wilderness.

O COME,[a] let us sing unto the LORD; let us make a joyful noise to the [b]Rock of our salvation.

2 Let us come before his presence[1] with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.

disquiet those who have Christ, the Lord of all, to be their Father and portion. No troubles need dismay those who are by grace made one with the King eternal. No changes need discontent them who have God's sure testimonies for their heritage and the ground of their hope. None need be ashamed of holiness, which is the ornament of God's nature, of his renewed hearts, his church, and his heaven.

PSALM XCIV. Ver. 1. The infliction of punishment is essential to the character of justice in God, both as a corrective of the wicked, and a warning to the godly. It is in vain, then, for foolish men to quarrel with this appeal to him who hath said —'Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves;' but, at the same time, has added—'Vengeance is mine,—I will repay, saith the Lord.' C.

Ver. 6. Every period of the persecutions of the Christian church has fully and literally realized this description. But such, alas! is unrenewed human nature, ever prone, in its fatal selfishness, to assail the defenceless, and, in its blinded ignorance, to conclude that God will neither see, regard, nor requite.—C.

Ver. 15. Judgment shall return unto righteousness That is, the judgment of God which the Jews imprecate, and which now has left them to harden in their sins, will return and lead them through their afflictions, to the righteousness of faith, when they shall look upon him whom they pierced, and follow on to know the Lord. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Saints must always expect manifold injuries and oppressions in this world. But never must they usurp God's prerogative in avenging themselves, but patiently endure and wait for the day when he that judges righteously shall arise to judge their adversaries. When men leaving God are left to themselves, how their heart, hands, and tongue concur in abusing him and his people! Astonishing is their atheism and stupidity! They sink even below common sense. But God makes the correction of his people to issue in their instruction, and in their spiritual or eternal rest and safety, while hardened sinners are ruined. In due time he will rectify all seeming disorders; and the righteousness of his judgments shall be made clearly manifest to the encouragement of the upright to follow him, and to praise him for his providences. And thrice happy are they who have treasured up manifold experiences of God's support, comfort, and deliverance in their times of extreme distress! It will encourage them to expect the proper, seasonable, and righteous overthrow of opposition to the church, whether wicked courts in Israel, Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, obstinate Jews, Romish heathens, antichristians, or others.

PSALM XCV. Ver. 1. Let us sing. The church here exhorts all her members to praise God by united singing—a depart-

3 For[c] the LORD is a great God, and a great King above all gods.

4 In[d] his[2] hand are the deep places[3] of the earth: [e]the strength of the hills[4] is his also.

5 The sea is his,[5] and he made it; and his hands formed the dry land.

6 O come, [f]let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the LORD [g]our Maker.

7 For[i] he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand. [j]To-day, if ye will hear his voice,

8 Harden[k] not your heart, [l]as in the [6]provocation,[7] and as in the day of temptation in the wilderness;

9 When[n] your fathers tempted me,[8] proved me, and saw my work.

10 Forty[o] years long was I grieved with this generation, and said, It is a people that do err in their heart, and they have not known my ways:

11 Unto[p] whom I sware in my wrath, that they should not enter[9] into my rest.

PSALM XCVI.

1 An exhortation to praise God, 4 for his greatness, 8 for his kingdom, 10 and to rejoice in his righteous government of the world.

SING[a] unto the LORD a new song:[1] sing unto the LORD, all the earth.

2 Sing unto the LORD, bless his name; [b]show forth his salvation from day to day.

3 Declare[c] his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people.

4 For[d] the LORD is great, and greatly to be praised: he is to be feared above all gods.

5 For [e]all the gods of the nations are idols: but the LORD made the heavens.

6 Honour[g] and majesty are before him; strength and beauty are in his sanctuary.

7 Give[h] unto the LORD, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the LORD glory and strength.

8 Give[i] unto the LORD the glory due unto his name:[2] bring an offering, and come into his courts.

9 O worship the LORD in the beauty of holiness;[3] fear before him, all the earth.

10 Say among the heathen that [k]the LORD reigneth:[4] the [l]world also shall be established that it shall not be moved:[5] he [n]shall judge the people righteously.

11 Let[o] the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof.

12 Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein; then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice

13 Before the LORD: [p]for he cometh,[6] for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth.

PSALM XCVII.

1 The majesty of God's kingdom. 8 The church rejoiceth at God's judgments against idolaters. 10 An exhortation to godliness and joy in the Lord.

THE LORD[a] reigneth;[1] let [b]the earth rejoice; let the multitude of isles[2] be glad thereof.

2 Clouds[c] and darkness are round about him: [d]righteousness and judgment are the [3]habitation of his throne.

3 A[e] fire[4] goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about.

4 His[g] lightnings enlightened the world; the earth saw, and trembled.

5 The[h] hills melted like wax at the presence of the LORD, at the presence of the [i]LORD of the whole earth.

6 The[j] heavens declare his righteousness, and all the people see his glory.

7 Confounded[k] be all they that serve graven

ment of worship by many churches sadly neglected, or most imperfectly attempted- and a duty and privilege to which many professing Christians consider themselves in no wise obligated. In addition, however, to this, and similar calls of the Spirit, the example of Christ on earth, and of saints in heaven, demands the universal voice of the church to engage in the praises of Jehovah. C.

Ver. 3. The heathen worshipped false gods; the Jews also were addicted to idolatry. One great object of this noble song of praise is to celebrate the praises of the one only exalted God of heaven and earth. He is called by his peculiar and incommunicable name JEHOVAH. By it he made himself known to Moses and the whole Jewish nation. By it he was distinguished from all false deities. Hence in this verse the psalmist says: 'For JEHOVAH is a great God, and a great King over all gods.' P.

REFLECTIONS.—God richly deserves our highest and most cordial praise. And we should invite one another to this blessed employ. How great is he, possessed of every necessary, infinite, and eternal excellency! How glorious his formation of all things, and his extensive dominion over them! How delightful and effective of blessings unnumbered is his new-covenant relation to men! But if he be our Saviour and King, it is proper, it is necessary, that we be obedient subjects. To none but such is he the author of eternal salvation. To-day, without a moment's delay, we ought to hear his voice in the gospel, and to receive the offers of his grace. However slightly men pass over their sins, they are highly provoking in God's sight. And disbelief of his promises is one of the greatest insults that we can put upon him. That heart is hardened indeed whom the great and precious promises of the gospel cannot effect. Let us take warning by the ruin of others, that we fall not after the same example of unbelief. Though God bear long with us, he will not bear always. The mercies which we have received from him, as well as the wilfulness of our ignorance and our love to our errors, will fearfully aggravate our sin. And dreadful will be our case, if because of our sins he once exclude us from his new kingdom, his celestial rest, on account of our despising it when offered to us in the gospel.

PSALM XCVI. REFLECTIONS.—Since to us Gentiles Jesus Christ and his word of salvation are now come, let us, in songs ever fresh, ever cordial, publish the glories of his grace, and the wonders of his redeeming mercy, power, holiness, and majesty. Let us acknowledge him as our saving Lord, present ourselves to him as living sacrifices, and in the pure ordinances of his grace worship him with pure hearts and in a reverent and holy manner. Let us rejoice that his kingdom has been, is, and will be established among the Gentiles on earth. Let us, with joy, hope for these latter days, in which Satan shall be bound, and all the kingdoms on earth subjected to the righteous and merciful government of our Redeemer. And let us, with more exalted joy, expect his coming in the clouds, with power and great glory, to judge, and finally decide the eternal state of men and angels.

PSALM XCVII. Ver. 2. Clouds and darkness are the emblems of both his government of providence and plan of redemption, which are yet veiled from our eyes—in some parts by clouds, through which we see obscurely; and in others by darkness, through which we cannot see at all. C.

Ver. 7. Confounded. This is not any angry imprecation, but a humble prayer that God would confound the counsels of idolaters against truth and godliness, as he confounded the counsel of Ahithophel against David: that he would confound their combinations to do evil in the world, as he confounded the tongues of the Babel conspirators, and scattered them abroad upon the face of the whole earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—However mysterious and unsearchable God's providences be, they are always just and equal. A great shaking of the nations, by the Roman and other conquests, ushered in the gospel kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. A great destruction of obstinate Jews and heathens, and overturning of idolatry in the world, attended the erection and spread of it. And a great overturning of antichristians, Mahometans, and all their false worship, shall yet take place in its most glorious period. No exalted potentates, no mighty nations, nor fixed customs of wickedness, shall be able to withstand his conquering influence. Let saints then rejoice in his dignity of person, office, and state; in his gracious preservation and deliverance of his people; in the comforts and glory which he has prepared for them; and in his righteous judgments upon their implacable foes. And let their delight in his holiness inflame their love to himself and their hatred of sin.

PSALM XCVIII. Ver. 3. Ends—countries of the world, evidently carrying forward to the period foretold by our Lord, Mat. 24. 14. C.

Ver. 6. See note on Ps. 92. 3. But these instruments are now, almost without exception, dedicated to military pomp, theatrical spectacles, bacchanalian revellings, and worldly amusements; and, married to a sensual and degrading poetry, whereby they become the great auxiliaries of the world against God and are by many held inconsistent with the simplicity and purity of Christian worship. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I review these lofty notes,

PRISON, NAPLES. [Psalms, xcvi:10.]—"Say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth; the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved; he shall judge the people righteously." Perhaps there is no city on earth that furnishes a better point for the study of the judgments of God upon cities, nations, and individuals, than Naples. In no other city that has ever existed, have men gone further in defiance of the laws of God and man, and in no other city have they suffered more. Here, in the time of Rome's power and glory, her wealthy people reveled in vices too horrible to mention. And here the judgments of heaven have fallen with a fury and an emphasis almost without parallel. This region, so amply favored as one might be led to suppose it dropped from heaven, as the poet says, has done more to insult heaven than almost any other spot. But Naples has been judged, and here the Lord reigns, either to build those who obey or to destroy those who violate His law.

8 Zion[t] heard, and was glad; and the daughters of Judah rejoiced because of thy judgments, O LORD.

9 For[n] thou, LORD, art high above all the earth; thou art exalted far above all gods.[7]

10 Ye that love the LORD, [o]hate evil: [p]he preserveth the souls of his saints; he delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked.

11 Light[q] is sown[8] for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart.

12 Rejoice[r] in the LORD, ye righteous; and give thanks at the remembrance[9] of his holiness.

1 The psalmist exhorteth the Jews, 4 the Gentiles, 7 and all the creatures to praise God.

A psalm.

O SING[a] unto the LORD a new song;[1] for he hath done marvellous things: [b]his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory.

2 The[c] LORD hath made known his salvation: his righteousness hath he openly showed[2] in the sight of the heathen.

4 Make[g] a joyful noise unto the LORD, all the earth: make a loud noise, and rejoice, and sing praise.

5 Sing[h] unto the LORD with the harp; with the harp, and the voice of a psalm.

6 With trumpets and sound of cornet make a joyful noise before the LORD, the King.

7 Let[i] the sea roar, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

8 Let the floods clap their hands; let the hills be joyful together

9 Before[j] the LORD; for he cometh to judge the earth: with righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity.

1 The prophet, setting forth the kingdom of God in Zion, 5 exhorteth all, by the example of their forefathers, to worship God at his holy hill.

THE LORD [c]reigneth; let the people tremble: [b]he sitteth between the cherubims; let the earth be moved.[1]

2 The[c] LORD is great in Zion; [d]and he is high above all people.[2]

3 Let them praise thy [e]great and terrible name; for it is [f]holy.

5 Angels, He.1.6.
6 More literally: 'Let all those that serve graven images, that make boast of their idols, be ashamed.—Worship him all ye elohim.' Elohim is one of the names given in Scripture to God. It signifies power; and the same word was applied to all those who exercised, or were supposed to possess, power, such as angels, magistrates, princes, and false deities. That the word is intended in this place to signify 'angels' is proved by the quotation of the apostle in He.1.6.—P.

3 This psalm was, in all probability, composed to celebrate the dedication of the second temple. It was thus emphatically 'a new song'—a song in which the grateful nation expressed anew praise & thanks to Jehovah for restoring them to their fatherland, and giving them another temple. All nations had witnessed their humiliation and captivity; and now again all nations could see how JEHOVAH brought salvation to his people.—P.

An exhortation to serve God joyfully as our creator and preserver, and to praise him for his goodness, mercy, and truth.

A psalm of praise.[1]

MAKE a[a] joyful noise unto the LORD, all ye lands.[2]

2 Serve the LORD with gladness; come before his presence with singing.

3 Know[b] ye that the LORD he is God: it is he that hath [c]made us, and not we [3]ourselves: [d]we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.

4 Enter[e] into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him, and bless his name.

PSALM CI.

David maketh a vow and profession of godliness.

A psalm of David.

I WILL [a]sing of mercy and judgment: unto thee, O LORD, will I sing.

2 I[b] will behave myself wisely in a perfect way. [c]O when wilt thou come unto me? [d]I will walk within my house with a perfect heart.

3 I[e] will set no wicked thing[1] before mine eyes: I [f]hate the work of them that [h]turn aside; it shall not cleave to me.

4 A[i] froward heart shall depart from me; I will not [j]know[2] a wicked person.

let me think what is JEHOVAH! What is Jesus to my heart! What of his marvellous incarnation, miracles, life, death, resurrection, and ascension; of his love to sinners; and of his gifts of pardon, grace, and glory; have I seen! What of his victories over sin, Satan, the world, and death; and of his righteousness and salvation manifested in the gospel; have I known, believed, and embraced! What of his mercy and truth, in fulfilling his promises, have I experienced! What of his coming in power to gather the world to himself, and of his coming in glory to judge the world, do I know, believe, and rejoice in hope of!

PSALM XCIX. Ver. 1. The Lord reigneth. See note on Ps. 93. 1. 'The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice,' Ps. 97. 1. 'The Lord reigneth; let the people tremble.' Ps. 99. 1.—Why this contrariety? Because Ps. xcvii. addressed a people that loved the Lord ver. 10., a people made righteous by faith in a Saviour; but Ps. xcix. addresses a people who had 'sought out many inventions,' ver. 8. upon which, even a God of mercy takes, for the correction and ensample of others, severe and righteous judgment. C.

Ver. 8. Inventions. The calling for, contributing to, forming, setting up, and worshipping of the golden calf, and other such acts, in which their hearts seemed inexhaustibly prolific. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Terrible is Jesus' royal power and dominion to unbelievers; but comfortable and kindly awing to his saints. And in mercy, wisdom, and righteousness he executes his office. God honours and holds intimate fellowship with those who are remarkably given to prayer: and effectual are their intercessions for the preservation of nations and churches.

the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh in a perfect way,[4] he shall serve me.

7 He[o] that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house: he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight.[5]

8 I[p] will early destroy all the wicked of the land;[6] that I may cut off all wicked doers from the [q]city of the LORD.

PSALM CII.

1 The prophet in his prayer maketh a grievous complaint. 12 He taketh comfort in the eternity and mercy of God. 18 The mercies of God are worthy to be recorded. 23 The prophet, sensible of his own weakness, resteth his hope on the unchangeable nature of God.

A prayer of[1] the afflicted, when he is [a]overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint before the LORD.

HEAR my [b]prayer, O LORD, and let my cry come unto thee.[2]

2 Hide[c] not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble; incline thine ear unto me: in the day when I call, answer me speedily.

3 For[d] my days are consumed like smoke,[3] and[e] my bones are burnt as an hearth.

4 My[f] heart is smitten, and withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread.

5 By[h] reason of the voice of my groaning my bones cleave to my skin.[4]

6 I[i] am like a pelican of the wilderness: I am like an owl of the desert.

7 I[j] watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the house-top.

8 Mine[k] enemies reproach me all the day; and they that are [l]mad against me are sworn against me.

9 For[n] I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled[o] my drink with weeping,[5]

10 Because[p] of thine indignation and thy wrath: for thou [q]hast lifted me up, and cast me down.

11 My[r] days are like a shadow that declineth; and [s]I am withered like grass.

12 But thou, O LORD, [t]shalt endure for ever; and thy remembrance unto all generations.

But he will make the dearest of them to smart severely for their sin in this life, notwithstanding they may triumph through faith. Great praise is due to God for his mercies. And deep awe and inward purity are necessary in worshipping him that is infinitely holy.

PSALM C. Ver. 1. That this summons is not confined to 'the land of Judea' is obvious from ver. 4, in which the parties called are exhorted to enter Jehovah's courts. For, whereas the temple had within the gates an outward court, into which the Gentiles might freely enter—the converted Gentiles must here be united as 'God's sheep and people' with the believing Jews. See Jn. 10. 16: Is. 19. 25. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What joyful praise, what grateful thanksgiving, what cheerful and hearty service do we Gentiles owe to the Lord!—to him who is JEHOVAH, the infinite ALL!—to him who forms us both in nature and in grace!—to him who is our high proprietor and redeemer, our kind shepherd, leader, provider, and provision!—to him who is good in himself, and whose mercy and truth are for ever exerted in the fulfilment of gracious and ever-blessed promises to sinful men!

PSALM CI. Ver. 2. In a perfect way . . . with a perfect heart Surely he that so resolves, if he do it not in self-ignorance, as Peter resolved never to forsake his Master, must be the Christ. C.—This is a noble resolution, well worthy of 'the man after God's own heart.' Wisdom, divine wisdom, should guide him in everything. His principles and motives would be wise; his conduct and acts in all the relations of life, private as well as public, would be regulated by wisdom; his words and his very thoughts would be wise; his companions and friends would be selected wisely. In the verses which follow, the psalmist shows how he was resolved to carry out his noble resolution. What a lesson does this psalm teach us! P.

REFLECTIONS.—The lot of saints on earth is a strange mixture of mercies and judgments. But all of them, taken in their connection and tendency, are to be improved as matter of praise and thanksgiving. Fellowship with and influences from God must strengthen and animate us to every holy practice. Serious godliness is the most substantial wisdom; and to act for God in the religious management of families, kingdoms, or in other relative stations, is a noted branch of it. With the utmost care ought men, by whatever power they have, to discourage everything wicked, and to encourage everything virtuous and holy. But it is in vain to attempt instructing or reforming others if we do not set them an example in our own practice.

PSALM CII. Ver. 6, 7. What three birds are specifically intended it is impossible with certainty to say; two of them are, however, inhabitants of the deserts, far from the haunts of men; and one, though the inhabitant of cities, a solitary watcher on house-tops. The different habits of these birds formed admirable emblems of that solitary state into which our Lord was often forced in order to elude the watchful and incessant malice of his enemies. C.

Ver. 12. This address exactly corresponds with its continuation in ver. 25; and as there is apostolic authority for considering ver. 25 to be words of the Father to the Son, there can be no doubt that ver. 12 is the address of the Father likewise. C.

Ver. 13. Would not history rather prove that the time to punish Zion had come at the period of our Lord's prayer of distress? Not so. 'Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.' And though her salvation seem to linger in the eye of sense, it was then secured to the heart of faith; and all that now grows in the field of promise, shall be reaped in the harvest of vision. C.

Ver. 23. In this, and the first clause of ver. 24, the Son, in the days of his flesh, resumes his address to the Father. The reply of the Father, as quoted by the apostle, He. 1. 10, is one amongst the many and overwhelming evidences of the Godhead of the Son. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, Ge. 1. 1. But the Father being witness, the Son created the heavens and the earth; therefore—hear it, ye gainsayers, and be silent for ever—therefore the Son is God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—To what low condition God reduces his church and people for the exercise and trial of their grace, and for exciting their more importunate prayers. In darkness, vexation, and trouble, their days often post toward an end. Afflicted, dispirited, and pained in their heart, and their body wasted to skin and bones, like owls and pelicans, they shun converse and comfort, and pine away in melancholy solitude. Often, like lonely sparrows, they are debarred from rest and sleep, and are deserted by friends, or avoid their company: are exposed to the reproach and fury of inveterate enemies—oppressed with grief—overwhelmed with a sense of God's indignation, in his sudden and awful changing of their comforts into depths of misery, till near the grave, and apparently near the pit! But great is the mercy that they have, notwithstanding, a God, a hearer of prayer, to whom they may complain; and a heart to pour out before him. Be the afflictions of the righteous as numerous as they will, the eternal Saviour has, and does, and will deliver them out of

PSALM CIII.

1 An exhortation to bless God for his mercy, 15 and for the constancy thereof.

A psalm of David.

BLESS the [a]LORD, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name.

2 Bless the LORD, O my soul, and [b]forget not all his benefits:

3 Who [c]forgiveth all thine iniquities;[1] who healeth[d] all thy diseases;

4 Who[e] redeemeth thy life from destruction; who[f] crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies;

5 Who[h] satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that [i]thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.

6 The [j]LORD executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed.

7 He[k] made known his ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel.

8 The[l] LORD is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy.

9 He[m] will not always chide; neither will he keep his anger for ever.

10 He[o] hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities.

11 For as the heaven is high[2] above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him.

12 As[p] far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.

13 Like[q] as a father pitieth his children, so the LORD pitieth them that fear him.

14 For[r] he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust.

15 As[s] for man, his days are as grass; [t]as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth.

16 For[u] the wind passeth over it, and it is gone;[3] and the place thereof [v]shall know it no more.

17 But[w] the mercy of the LORD is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and [x]his righteousness unto children's children;

18 To [y]such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.

19 The[z] LORD hath prepared[4] his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all.

20 Bless[b] the LORD, ye his angels, that excel in strength,[5] that [c]do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word.[6]

21 Bless ye the LORD, all ye [d]his hosts; ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure.

22 Bless[e] the LORD, all his works in all places of his dominion: bless the LORD, O my soul.[7]

PSALM CIV.

1 A meditation upon the mighty power, 7 and wonderful providence of God. 31 God's glory is eternal. 33 The prophet voweth perpetually to praise God.

BLESS the [a]LORD, O my soul. O LORD my God, [b]thou art very great; [c]thou art clothed with honour and majesty:

2 Who coverest thyself [d]with light as with a garment; [e]who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain;

3 Who[g] layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters; [h]who maketh the clouds his chariot; [i]who walketh upon the wings of the wind;

4 Who[j] maketh his angels spirits, his ministers a flaming fire;[1]

5 Who laid the foundations of the [2]earth, that it should not be removed for ever.

6 Thou[k] coveredst it with the deep as with a garment: the waters stood above the mountains.

7 At[l] thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away.

8 They go up[3] by the mountains; they go down by the valleys[4] unto the place which thou hast founded for them.

9 Thou[n] hast set a bound that they may not pass over; that they turn not again to cover the earth.

10 [o]He[5] sendeth the springs into the valleys, which run[6] among the hills.[7]

11 They[p] give drink to every beast of the field: the wild asses quench[8] their thirst.

12 By them shall the fowls of the heaven have their habitation, which sing[9] among the branches.

13 He[q] watereth the hills from his chambers:[1] the earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy works.[2]

14 He[r] causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man; that he may bring forth food out of the earth,

15 And [s]wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and oil to make his face to shine,[3] and [t]bread which strengtheneth man's heart.

16 The[u] trees of the LORD are full of sap; the cedars of Lebanon, which he hath planted;

17 Where[v] the birds make their nests: as for the stork, [v]the fir-trees are her house.[4]

18 The[a] high hills are a refuge for the wild goats, and the rocks for [b]the conies.

19 He[c] appointed the moon for seasons; the sun knoweth his going down.

20 Thou[d] makest darkness, and it is night; them all. He has fixed the periods of his church's deliverance, and issued forth promises ascertaining the same. While with deep concern his servants are affected with her ruinous case, and pour forth their importunate prayers, he will flee to her relief, to the conversion of multitudes and the terror of obstinate opposers. What he did in former times, in delivering from Babylon, in erecting the New Testament church, and in destroying her Jewish and heathen persecutors, encourages us to hope for more glorious deliverances from Antichrist, and at last from the world that lieth in wickedness. And whatever distresses befall the faithful in their way to the heavenly mansions, Jesus' eternity secures the power and stability of his church, and of all who believe in Christ.

PSALM CIII. Ver. 2. Forget not all his benefits. A large portion of 'childhood and youth' are truly 'vanity,' are spent in much ignorance of God, and pass into forgetfulness of his mercies. He whose eye saw, and whose memory records, 'all the mercies' of Jehovah, can be no other than the all-perfect Son of God. C.

Ver. 5. Like the eagle's. This is no mere adoption of a popular opinion about the eagle's moulting in old age; nor any mere poetical ornament, which would be utterly inconsistent with simple and unchanging truth. Does not the entire difficulty arise from departing from the literal translation and natural position of the original? Literally translated and placed, the passage would read thus:— shall be renewed (not as an eagle's, but) as an eagle, thy youth.' That is, thy youthful strength, Is. 40. 31, shall be renewed: and, as an eagle spurns the earth, soars above the clouds, and hides him in the sunbeams; so, on wings of heavenly devotion, thou shalt mount, and, while yet on earth, establish thy conversation in heaven. C.

Ver. 14. From ver. 10, the true 'children of Israel' make full acknowledgment of the preceding character of God, and especially in the total removal of their sins (ver. 12), effected by the blood of the Lamb. The east and west can never meet, no more can the justified believer again encounter his sins. The waters of mercy have passed over them, and their remembrance is gone for ever. C.

Ver. 17. Righteousness here signifies that just, good, and gracious way in which he deals with all: those that are his true children. He deals justly with them in Christ their Saviour, counting them justified by his blood: he manifests his goodness to them in providing for all their wants, preserving them amid all dangers, wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth.[5]

21 The[e] young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God.

22 The [h]sun ariseth, they gather themselves together, and lay them down in their dens.

23 Man[i] goeth forth unto his work and to his labour until the evening.

24 O LORD, [j]how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of [k]thy riches:

25 So is [l]this great and wide sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts.

26 There[n] go the ships:[6] there is that [o]leviathan, whom thou hast made[7] to play therein.

27 These[p] wait all upon thee; that thou mayest give them their meat in due season.

28 That thou givest them they gather: thou openest thine hand, they are filled with good.

29 Thou[q] hidest thy face, they are troubled: thou[r] takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust.

30 Thou[s] sendest forth thy spirit, they are created: and thou [t]renewest the face of the earth.[8]

31 The[u] glory of the LORD shall endure[9] for ever; [v]the LORD shall rejoice in his works.

32 He[x] looketh on the earth, and it trembleth; he toucheth the hills, and they smoke.

33 I[y] will sing unto the LORD as long as I live; I will sing praise to my God while I have my being.[1]

34 My[z] meditation of him shall be sweet; I will be glad in the LORD.

35 Let[a] the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more.[2] Bless thou the LORD, O my soul. Praise ye the LORD.[3]

3 Among the many blessings derived from the sea, navigation is one of the most obvious: and that navigation by the means of the valuable interchanges of commerce, and consequently the great peace-preserver of the nations, but because of the blessed facilities which it affords for diffusing the knowledge of Jesus to regions that Christianity could never have approached had the highway of the ocean been occupied as now by heathen or Mohammedan nations.—C.

PSALM CV.

1 An exhortation to praise God, and to seek out his works. 8 His providence over Abraham, 16 over Joseph, 23 over Israel in Egypt, 26 over Moses delivering the Israelites, 37 over the Israelites brought out of Egypt, fed in the wilderness, and planted in Canaan.

O GIVE[a] thanks unto the LORD; call upon his name;[1] make [b]known his deeds among the people.

2 Sing[c] unto him, sing psalms unto him; talk ye of all his wondrous works.

3 Glory[d] ye in his holy name: [e]let the heart of them rejoice that seek the LORD.

4 Seek[g] the LORD, and his [2]strength;[3] seek his face evermore.

5 Remember[h] his marvellous works that he hath done; his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth,

6 O[i] ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob his chosen.

7 He[j] is the LORD our God:[4] his [k]judgments are in all the earth.

8 He[l] hath remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations:

9 Which[n] covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac;

10 And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant;

11 Saying, [o]Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot[5] of your inheritance:

12 When they were but [p]a few men in number; yea, very few, and [q]strangers in it.

13 When[r] they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people,

14 He[s] suffered no man to do them wrong; yea, he reproved kings for their sakes;

15 Saying, [t]Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.[6] enabling them to overcome all temptations; he deals graciously in showering down spiritual mercies, fulfilling to them promises, and cherishing them with bright and glorious hopes. P.

Ver. 18. Covenant. This is not that covenant of works which saith, 'Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law, to do them;' but that covenant of grace, recorded by Paul, Heb. 8. 8–12, wherein the cleansing of the believer lies in the Redeemer's blood, 1 Jn. 1. 7, and his completeness and acceptance in the Redeemer's righteousness, Col. 2. 10; Eph. 1. 6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Our hearts need to be much encouraged and excited, even to the most proper and most delightful exercises. And in dealing with God our hearts ought to be wholly engaged. But how shameful is it that we ever forget, that we so early forget, his mercies!—his mercies so great, so necessary, so numerous, so connected, so everlasting!—his unbounded compassion to us who are so mean, so frail, so polluted!—his free, full, and everlasting pardons should humble our hearts, and animate us to holy fear, love, and obedience. And while all his creatures in heaven and earth concur to bless and serve him, surely we, above all, whom Christ hath redeemed by his blood, should never be silent, never be slothful!

PSALM CIV. Ver. 1. Thou art very great. The greatness of God in power can be estimated only by his works. Accordingly, the Spirit, by Christ, as the prophet of the church, here catalogues, as it were, and expounds some of the most remarkable and intelligible departments, whereby man may learn his own comparative weakness, nay, nothingness, and humble himself beneath the mighty power of God. C.

Ver. 5. Not removed for ever. This is not contradicted by what is declared, Heb. 1. 10–12: for, in point of fact, it is completely demonstrable by mathematical evidence, that the 'foundations of the earth, and of the whole planetary system, are calculated to abide for ever, unless he that laid them be pleased again to overturn them, and make all things new. Both these views are in strict accordance with the assertion in this verse. C.

Ver. 7. Voice of thy thunder. Modern discovery is daily bringing to light more of the power of electricity in the works of creation; and though we do not affirm with some that the Scriptures contain a system of natural philosophy, yet it is satisfactory to the believer who may live within the polluted atmosphere of infidelity, to learn that no progress of philosophical discovery has ever detected a single philosophical error in the Bible. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the glory, the awful majesty, the infinite goodness, and mercy of our God! In what bright abodes of light is he enthroned! While clouds and winds convey the influences of his power, angelic hosts, made by himself, surround his seat, and bear his messages. Established earth and bounded seas confess his power. Springs below, rains from above, fruitful fields, and towering trees, nestling birds, shining luminaries, changing seasons, ravenous animals, swarming fishes and their spacious sea, and labouring man, his Maker's image, all preserved, all maintained, all governed by his power, his kindness, and his care, owe their whole selves and service to this mighty Lord! Can he then, who hangs a whole creation on his arm, and feeds them at his board, overlook a ransomed child, or let him starve! While he with pleasure upholds all, governs all, and rejoices in all his works, let my soul, touched by his grace, meditate and praise: and while obstinate sinners turn away from him and find themselves ruined, let my hosannas and hallelujahs ascend to him that loved me and gave himself for me.

PSALM CV. Ver. 16. Human skill and industry are instruments of abundance; and to cultivate and exercise them, a bounden duty: yet abundance is not attainable, nor famine avoidable, by their utmost exertion: every comfort, every blessing, is of God that showeth mercy. C.

Ver. 44. It has been customary for infidels to charge this as an act of injustice against the God of Israel. But how little do they consider, that even a human superior is universally held entitled to remove a wicked and dishonest occupant, who refuses to render his stipulated return. How much more had God a right to drive out the most wicked of all nations, who not only refused to acknowledge their righteous Lord paramount, but who worshipped devils, while they hated him? C.

REFLECTIONS.—How infinitely excellent is this God, who deserves such gratitude, such praise, such search, such confidence! Marvellous is his blessed relation to us, and tender mercies towards us: and thrice happy are they who have him their own and their fathers' God! Happy are they who know the judgments of his mouth, his word, and live thereby; and for whose welfare the judgments of his hand are executed in all the earth! From mean appearances God's great manifestations of himself take their rise. But great is the care he takes of his people in this world, where they are but few, and strangers. He that touches them touches the apple of his eye. And apparent difficulties easily vanish before the power of a promising God. But how mysterious are his ways of providence! When things seem most against us, they are often strongly working for our good. Even calumnies and sufferings are made to try and prepare men for and advance them to honour. His church shall never want a friend in time of need. He can raise them up protectors where they least expect to find favour. And if God advance us, our duty is to discern his hand, and to adorn our station, by making it subservient to his glory. No danger or difficulty must deter us when his work is to be done.—All creatures concur in executing God's will of judgment or mercy. His protection, deliverance, and care of his people are wonderfully connected with the most fearful plagues and ruin of the wicked. And through trials unnumbered, and of long continuance, God's 16 Moreover, he [t]called for [u]a famine upon the land: he brake the whole [v]staff of bread.

17 He[w] sent a man before them, even Joseph, who was sold for a servant;[7]

18 Whose[x] feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in iron;[8]

19 Until the time that his [a]word came: the word of the LORD tried him.

20 The[b] king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people, and let him go free.

21 He[c] made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his substance;[9]

22 To bind his princes at his pleasure, and teach his senators wisdom.

23 Israel[d] also came into Egypt, and Jacob sojourned in the land of Ham.[1]

24 And[e] he increased his people greatly, and made them stronger than their enemies.

25 He[g] turned their heart[2] to hate his people, to deal subtilely with his servants.

26 He[h] sent Moses his servant, and Aaron whom he had chosen.

27 They[i] showed his signs[3] among them, and wonders in the land of Ham.

28 He[j] sent darkness, and made it dark; and they[4] rebelled not against his word.[5]

29 He[k] turned their waters into blood, and slew their fish.

30 Their[l] land brought forth frogs in abundance in the chambers of their kings.

31 He[m] spake, and there came divers sorts of flies, and lice in all their coasts.

32 He[o] gave them hail for rain,[p] and flaming fire in their land.

33 He smote their vines also, and their fig-trees; and brake the trees of their coasts.

34 He[p] spake, and the locusts came, and caterpillars, and that without number,

35 And[q] did eat up all the herbs in their land, and devoured the fruit of their ground.

36 He[r] smote also all the first-born in their land, the chief of all their strength.

37 He[s] brought them forth[7] also with silver and gold: and there was not one feeble person among their tribes.[8]

38 Egypt[t] was glad when they departed: for the fear of them fell upon them.

39 He[u] spread a cloud for a covering; and fire to give light in the night.

40 The[v] people asked, and he brought quails, and satisfied them with the bread of heaven.

2 Who [c]can utter the mighty acts of the LORD? who can show forth all his praise?

3 Blessed are they that [d]keep judgment, and he that doeth righteousness at all times.[2]

4 Remember[e] me, O LORD, with the favour that thou bearest unto thy people: O visit me with thy salvation;

5 That I may see [f]the good of thy chosen, that I may rejoice in the gladness of thy nation, that I may glory with thine inheritance.

promises are at last perfectly accomplished in all who believe in Christ.

PSALM CVI. REFLECTIONS.—Wonderful and thank-worthy are all the deeds, the gracious deeds, of our God. Blessed are they who make his word their rule, and his compassion the ground of their acceptance, and the example of their holy practice! Happy are they who enjoy intimate fellowship with him in his saving works and benefits. But how horrid is sin, which seeks to trample him, and all his kindness, under foot! And awful is the reflection, that one generation should follow another in adding sin to sin. We need not upbraid the sinners who went before us, as we are involved in the same fearful crimes. Notwithstanding both mercies and judgments, how stupidly insensible, how strangely forgetful, how discontented with God's marvellous provision, how rebellious against his deputies and government—what distinguished idolaters, murmurers, infidels, adulterers, and how perversely disobedient—does sin make God's professed people! Often they proceed from evil to worse, till his indignation break forth against them without remedy. But great is the mercy, when sinful nations and churches have any among them who, by their prayers and their zeal, stand in the gap, and avert the Lord's indignation. With pleasure he looks upon such, and highly honours them on that account. But infinite is the goodness of our God, who, when provoked to add one stroke to another, and to make wicked tempters to sin cruel tormentors for it, is so ready to step in for our relief, and to rebuke, or even turn the hearts of them that destroyed us. Never is a penitent prayer poured out into his bosom but it returns in gracious preservation and deliverance. Let then all our troubles drive us to the throne of grace; and all our mercies, bestowed

18 And[v] a fire was kindled in their company;
the flame burnt up the wicked.
19 They[x] made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten image.[9]
20 Thus[y] they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass.
21 They[z] forgat God[1] their saviour, which had done [a]great things in Egypt;
22 Wondrous works in the land of Ham, and terrible things by the Red sea.
23 Therefore[b] he said that he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them.
24 Yea, [c]they despised the pleasant land;[2]
they[d] believed not his word;
25 But[e] murmured in their tents, and harkened not unto the voice of the LORD:
26 Therefore he [g]lifted up his hand against them, to overthrow them in the wilderness:
27 To overthrow[3] their seed also among the nations, and to [h]scatter them in the lands.
28 They[i] joined themselves also unto Baalpeor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead.[4] 29 Thus[k]they provoked him to anger with their inventions; and the [l]plague brake in upon them.
30 Then[n] stood up Phinehas, and executed judgment; and so [o]the plague was stayed:
31 And that was [p]counted unto him for righteousness unto all generations for evermore.
32 They[q] angered him also at the waters of strife, so that it went ill with Moses for their sakes:
33 Because they provoked his spirit, so that he [r]spake unadvisedly with his lips.[5]

1 They forgat God. If the longsuffering of years here charges upon Israel, appear strange to us, consider we, we only look at the years around them, and in no nation and condition of men he will discover exam, less or more. A forgetfulness of Sabbath and the Lord's Supper, with all their holy obligations and principles, not only as glaring as these of Israel; in the desert, but many times more strange and criminal, because of the greater light and the knowledge of all which Jesus Christ, the image of God, and in person of Israel with, but vastly set forth as exercise amongst us.—C.

5 The Israelites sinned grievously in thus provoking Moses; but Moses himself was not, therefore, excused. This teaches an important lesson. Moses 'spake unadvisedly,' i.e. rashly and therefore sinfully. Moses ought to have borne patiently with his people. Instead of doing so he exclaimed passionately: 'Hear now, ye rebels, must we fetch you waters out of the rock?'—C.

3 Within a few past years the Lord seems to mercy again to have remembered the hearts of Christians toward the Jews, in pity for their sufferings, and efforts for their conversion. It is one of the signs of the times, both in and to the church. The Lord turn the hearts of them into this channel of mercy, till Jacob be delivered, and Israel again dwell safely!—C.

34 They[a] did not destroy the nations, [t]concerning whom the LORD commanded them;
35 But[x] were mingled among the heathen, and learned their works.
36 And[y] they served their idols; which were a snare unto them.
37 Yea,[z] they sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils,[6]
38 And shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan: and the land was [u]polluted with blood.
39 Thus[z] were they defiled with their own works, [a]and went a whoring with their own inventions:
40 Therefore [b]was the wrath of the LORD kindled against his people, insomuch that he abhorred his own inheritance.
41 And[c] he gave them into the hand of the heathen; and they that hated them ruled over them.
42 Their enemies also oppressed them, and they were brought into subjection under their hand.
43 Many[d] times did he deliver them: but they provoked him with their counsel, and were [7]brought low for their iniquity.[8]
44 Nevertheless[e] he regarded their affliction,
[g]when he heard their cry:
45 And[h] he remembered for them his covenant, and [t]repented according to the multitude of his mercies.[9]
46 He[i] made them also to be pitied of all those that carried them captives.[1]
47 Save[k] us, O LORD our God, and gather us from among the heathen, [l]to give thanks unto thy holy name, and to triumph in thy praise.
48 Blessed[n] be the LORD God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting: and let all the people say, Amen. Praise ye the LORD.

or promised, encourage our prayers, and animate our praise.

PSALM CVII. Ver. 3. There is no characteristic mark by which the speaker can be identified; but from ver. 3, 16, compared with Is. 45. 2, it appears to have been written after the return from the Babylonish captivity. South. In the Hebrew, signifies sea, which evidently points to the Persian Gulf, lying south of Babylon. C.

Ver. 4. This cannot refer to the first wandering in the wilderness; for then the people were all gathered out of one land; on the return from Babylon, out of the many provinces of a vast empire. C.

Ver. 11. This verse develops most of the causes of national calamities; and whilst the wise men of the world are ascribing them to every cause but the true one, it traces them at once to rebellion against the word and contempt of the counsels of God. C.

Ver. 14. By comparing this verse with Mat. 4. 15, 16, where a similar description is applied to the rising of the light of Jesus, 'the Sun of Righteousness,' upon the earth, the psalm will be found, under natural emblems, to veil spiritual realities. C.

Ver. 24. Not even the earthquake is so terrible an example of the divine power, or emblem of the divine wrath, as the sea-storm: the earthquake soon passes over, and is generally confined to a few spots of an island or continent: but the sea-storm continues unabated or increasing for days, and rages over the vast expanse of an ocean, dispersing navies as the light foam upon its waves, and swallowing into its deep recesses the collected riches of distant lands. Yet this terrible storm is the Lord's voice to his children: and, when all other help is vain, 'they cry unto him, and he bringeth them out of their distresses.' Ah! Britain! Britain! remember the sailor boy: he is the trustee of all thy wealth, the right arm of all thy power. Instruct him when on land—save him from the misguidance of his own untutored simplicity: and follow him with thy prayers amid the perils of the great deep: so shall he return to bless thee in the calm of his 'desired haven.' C.

Ver. 33. Rivers. 'Well-watered ground. That such terrible changes have frequently taken place, by the operation of natural causes, geological observation abundantly testifies. Moral causes also operating upon the peace, security, and industry of a country, have often produced similar effects. Both causes, however, are alike the judgments of God, intended to teach man his dependence, and humble him before his Maker. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold the effects of sin in forms unnumbered! in wanderings, in imprisonments, sickness, storms, barrenness, poverty, &c. Behold also the power of effectual fervent prayer! —it brings speedy relief in every case. The holiness and equity, the goodness, mercy, and tenderness of God, are connectedly displayed in his providence to men. With exact and humble care ought we then to consider the doing of the Lord, and to compare it with his word, and with our prayers, and one part of it with another; so shall we understand the loving-kindness of the Lord. And, were we accurate observers of providence, constantly would our heart, our lips, and life, be filled with the high praises of his kindness, and of his wonderful works towards the children of men.

PSALM CVIII. REFLECTIONS.—Quickly God can change the lot, can change the frames, and change the songs of his people; and put high praises in the room of bitter wailings. How confidently then may saints expect to see the salvation of God! What he has promised faith can rejoice in as if already performed: and whatever difficulties be in the way, nothing is too hard for the Lord. However strong their enemies, if they are true, they shall prove more than conquerors through him that loveth them.

PSALM CIX. Ver. 6. This is one of those psalms against which, like its subject, the wicked infidel, and the unconverted believer, have unhappily concurred in 'open their mouth.' To evade the imaginary impropriety of its heavy curses, some have imagined ver. 6–17 to be uttered by David's enemies. But how come they, in so imagining, to overlook Ac. 1. 16–20, where Judas, and not David, is declared to be its prophetical object? C.

Ver. 8. To vindicate these curses, for they are literally such, will be easy, before those who read and believe, and tremble as they read, De. 27. 15–26, and who fully comprehending Ga. 3. 10, do acknowledge and feel that 'Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them.' C.

Ver. 14. Most probably the sin of early training Judas up to the love of money, pilfering, and malignant cursing, and, so far from repenting of this perverted education, or seeing its bitter fruits, only gnawing her spirit with grief at its want of a successful issue. C.

Ver. 22. Poor and needy. On comparing these epithets with Ps. 40. 17, and remembering that He. 10. 5 proves Ps. xl. to be descriptive of Christ, no doubt can reasonably remain that, in this, he is the speaker likewise. C.

Ver. 23. The shiftings and currents of the wind toss the dense swarms of locusts in a very extraordinary manner. Even so was our Lord tossed up and down—at one time borne over palm-leaves and garments, and hailed with loud hosannas!—at another followed with deepest execrations—Away with him; away with him! Crucify him; crucify him! C.

Ver. 30. The comparison of this verse with Ps. 18. 40 and Ro. 15. 9, affords another unquestionable parallel proof that he who speaks in the first person is Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dreadful must be the nature of sin, which makes men so desperate and outrageous enemies

PSALM CVII.

1 The psalmist exhorteth the redeemed, in praising God, to observe his manifold providence, 4 over travellers, 10 over captives, 17 over sick men, 23 over seamen, 33 and in divers varieties of life.

O GIVE[a] thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.[1]

2 Let the [b]redeemed of the LORD say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy;

3 And [c]gathered them out of the lands, from the east, and from the west, from the north, and from the south.[2]

4 They[d] wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way; they found no city to dwell in.

5 Hungry[e] and thirsty, their soul fainted in them.[3]

6 Then[g] they cried unto the LORD in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses.

7 And he [h]led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation.

8 Oh[i] that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

9 For[j] he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness.

10 Such[k] as sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death, being bound in affliction and iron;

11 Because[l] they rebelled against the words of God, and contemned the [m]counsel of the most High:

12 Therefore[o] he brought down their heart with labour: they fell down, and [p]there was none to help.

13 Then[q] they cried unto the LORD in their trouble, and he saved them out of their distresses.

14 He[r] brought them out of darkness and the shadow of death, and brake their bands in sunder.

15 Oh[s] that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

16 For[t] he hath broken the gates of brass, and cut the bars of iron in sunder.

17 [u]Fools [v]because of their transgression, and because of their iniquities, are afflicted.

18 Their[x] soul abhorreth all manner of meat; and they draw near unto the gates of death.

19 Then[y] they cry unto the LORD in their trouble, and he saveth them out of their distresses.

20 He[z] sent his word, and healed[4] them, and delivered them from their destructions.

21 Oh[a] that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

22 And[b] let them sacrifice the sacrifices of thanksgiving, and declare his works with [5]rejoicing.

23 They[c] that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters;

24 These see [d]the works of the LORD, and his wonders in the deep.

25 For[e] he commandeth, and [6]raiseth the stormy wind, which lifteth up the waves thereof.

26 They[g] mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths; [h]their soul is melted because of trouble.

27 They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wit's end.[7]

28 Then[i] they cry unto the LORD in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their distresses.

29 He[j] maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still.

30 Then are they glad, because they be quiet; so he bringeth them unto their desired haven.

31 Oh[k] that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

32 Let[l] them exalt him also in the congregation of the people, and praise him in the assembly of the elders.

33 He [n]turneth rivers into a wilderness, and the water-springs into dry ground;[8]

34 A fruitful land into barrenness,[9] for the wickedness of them that dwell therein.

35 He[o] turneth the wilderness into a standing water, and dry ground into water-springs:

36 And[p] there he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation;

37 And[q] sow the fields, and plant vineyards, which may yield fruits of increase.

38 He[r] blesseth them also, so that they are multiplied greatly, and suffereth not their cattle to decrease.

39 Again,[s] they are minished, and brought low through oppression, affliction, and sorrow.

40 He[t] poureth contempt upon princes,[1] and causeth them to wander in the [2]wilderness, where there is no way.

41 Yet[u] setteth he the poor on high [3]from affliction, and maketh him families like a [4]flock.

42 The[v] righteous shall see it, and rejoice; and all iniquity shall stop her mouth.

43 Whoso[x] is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the lovingkindness of the LORD.[5]

1 This beautiful psalm was probably composed to celebrate the return of the Jewish exiles from Babylon, and designed to be sung at the dedication of the temple. It is antiphonal in construction—the chorus commencing with the stanza of general thanksgiving:—"O give thanks unto Jehovah, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for ever." Then the leader chants the special causes of thanksgiving; the chorus breaking in at intervals (see ver. 8,15,21,31). Probably the concluding verse (43) may have been uttered by the high-priest, as a solemn exhortation to the whole people.—P.

5 This is the great lesson of the whole psalm. The thoughtful, philosophical observers of God's ways and works in providence and grace will obtain a knowledge of his infinite love such as will cheer their souls, and draw out their hearts in gratitude and thankful adoration to the great Ruler of the universe.—P.

PSALM CVIII.

B.C. cir. 1046.

1 My heart is fixed. Independent of the apostolic quotation (Ro. 15. 9), which determines the application, this very characteristic of a fixed heart would prove the speaker either to be a self-deceiver (see Je. 17. 9), or Christ. The former he cannot be—for the Spirit hath approved him; the latter he must be—for the Spirit hath so pointed him out to our discovery and confidence.—C.

2 'My glory,' i.e. the noblest part of me—my intellect, my soul.—P.

1 David encourageth himself to praise God. 5 He prayeth for God's assistance according to his promise. 11 His confidence in God's help.

to Christ and his people. But terrible, spreading, and extensive, lasting and yet most righteous, are the judgments which overtake them from heaven, from earth, and from hell! Deep marked was this truth on the enemies of David, on Judas the traitor, and his Jewish brethren, the murderers of our Lord and his saints; and on heathenish and popish Romans. But if men spitefully abuse us, let us give ourselves unto prayer. Though our God be long silent, he will

2 Awake, [c]psaltery and harp; I myself will awake early.

3 I [d]will praise thee, O LORD, among the people: and I will sing praises unto thee among the nations.

4 For[e] thy mercy is great above the heavens: and thy truth reacheth unto the clouds.[3]

5 Be[g] thou exalted, O God, above the heavens, and thy glory above all the earth;[4]

6 That[h] thy beloved may be delivered: [i]save with thy right hand, and answer me.

7 God[j] hath spoken in his holiness; I will rejoice, I will [k]divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of [l]Succoth.

9 Moab[q] is my wash-pot; over Edom will I cast out my shoe; over Philistia will I triumph.

11 Wilt not thou, O God, who [s]hast cast us off? and wilt not thou, O God, [t]go forth with our hosts?

12 Give[u] us help from trouble; for [v]vain is the help of man.

13 Through[x] God we shall do valiantly: [y]for he it is that shall tread down our enemies.

PSALM CIX.

1 David, complaining of his slanderous enemies, under the person of Judas, devoteth them. 16 He showeth their sin. 21 Complaining of his own misery, he prayeth for help. 30 He promiseth thankfulness.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

HOLD [a]not thy peace, O [b]God of my praise;
2 For[c] the mouth of the wicked, and the mouth of the deceitful,[1] are opened against me;[2] they[d] have spoken against me with a lying tongue.

3 They compassed me about also with words of hatred; and fought against me [e]without a cause.

4 For[g] my love they are my adversaries: [h]but I give myself unto prayer.[3]

5 And[i] they have rewarded me evil for good, and hatred for my love.

6 Set thou a wicked man over him; and let Satan[4] stand[j] at his right hand.[5]

7 When he shall be judged, let him be condemned;[6] and [k]let his prayer become sin.

8 Let[l] his days be few; and let another take his office.[7]

9 Let[n] his children be fatherless, and his wife a widow.

10 Let[o] his children be continually vagabonds, and beg; let them seek their bread also out of their desolate places.

* It ought not to be overlooked that the remaining portion of this psalm are prophetical rather than imprecatory; yet it is still quite true that the writer desires the punishment of those who had persecuted him with such intense bitterness. 'The first thing the psalmist asks is, that his foe might be subjected to the evil of having a man placed over him like himself—a man regardless of justice, truth, and right: a man who would respect character and propriety no more than he had himself done. It is in fact a prayer that he might be punished in the line of his offences. It cannot be wrong that a man should be treated as he treats others: and it cannot be in itself wrong to desire that a man should be treated according to his character and deserts; for this is the object of all law, and this is what all magistrates and legislators are endeavouring to secure.' There is much force in these words of Albert Barnes; yet still the spirit and real bearing of this psalm must be in a great measure lost if we lose sight of its prophetic character, and of the fact that it is the direct utterance of the divine and omniscient Spirit of God.—P.

11 Let[p] the extortioner catch all that he hath; and let the stranger spoil his labour.

12 Let there be none to extend mercy unto him; neither let there be any to favour his fatherless children.

13 Let[q] his posterity be cut off; and in the generation following let their name be blotted out.

14 Let[r] the iniquity of his fathers be remembered with the LORD; and let not the sin of his mother be blotted out.

15 Let[s] them be before the LORD continually, that he may [t]cut off the memory of them from the earth:

16 Because[u] that he remembered not to show mercy, but persecuted the poor and needy man, that he might even slay [v]the broken in heart.

17 As[x] he loved cursing, so let it come unto him; as he delighted not in blessing, so let it be far from him.

18 As he clothed himself with cursing like as with his garment, so let it come into his bowels[8] like water, and like oil into his bones.

19 Let[y] it be unto him as the garment which covereth him, and for a girdle wherewith he is girded continually.

20 Let[z] this be the reward of mine adversaries from the LORD, and of them that speak evil against my soul.

21 But[a] do thou for me,[9] O GOD the Lord, for thy name's sake: because thy mercy is good, deliver thou me.

22 For[b] I am poor and needy, and my heart is wounded within me.

23 I[c] am gone like the shadow when it declineth; I am [d]tossed up and down as the locust.

24 My [e]knees are weak through fasting; and my flesh faileth of fatness.

25 I[g] became also a reproach unto them: when they looked upon me they shaked their heads.

26 Help[h] me, O LORD my God: [i]O save me according to thy mercy:

27 That[j] they may know that this is thy hand; that thou, LORD, hast done it.

28 Let[k] them curse, but bless thou: when they arise, let them be ashamed; but let thy servant rejoice.

29 Let[l] mine adversaries be clothed with shame, and let them cover themselves with their own confusion, as with a mantle.

speak at the last. If he help, we need not regard who harass us. If he bless, we need not care who curse us. If all our hopes be placed on his boundless mercy and grace, no matter how we be loaded with poverty, wounds of spirit, decay of body, or revilings of men. He can quickly help and save us. The more shame we take to ourselves for our sins, we are in the less danger of suffering for them. And God's support and salvation shall quickly fill our mouths with high and everlasting praise.

PSALM CX. Ver. 1. The prophetic references in this psalm to the person, work, and kingdom of our Lord are placed beyond all doubt by the frequent quotations from it in the New Testament. Our Lord himself appropriates the words of the first verse, Mat. 22. 44; Mar. 12. 36; and Lu. 20. 42. They are so interpreted by Peter in Ac. 2. 34. In He. 5. 6, Paul applies the words of ver. 4 to Christ; so also in He. 7. 17–21. It is clear from these quotations that the Messianic interpretation of the psalm was universal among the Jews in ancient times. P.—The

PSALM CX.

1 A prediction of the kingdom, 4 priesthood, 5 triumphs, 7 and sufferings of Christ.

A psalm of David.

THE LORD[a] said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool.

2 The LORD shall send [b]the rod of thy strength out of Zion: [c]rule thou in the midst of thine enemies.

3 Thy[d] people shall be willing in the day of thy power, [e]in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning:[1] thou hast [f]the dew of thy youth.[2]

4 The LORD [g]hath sworn, and will not repent, 'Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

5 The[i] LORD at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath.

6 He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; [k]he shall wound the heads over many[3] countries.

7 He[l] shall drink of the brook in the way: therefore shall he lift up the head.[4]

PSALM CXI.

1 The psalmist by his example inciteth others to praise God for his glorious and gracious works. 10 The fear of God is the source of true wisdom.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] I[a] will praise the LORD with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation.

2 The[b] works of the LORD are great, [c]sought out of all them that have pleasure therein.

3 His[d] work is honourable and glorious; and his[e] righteousness endureth for ever.

4 He[g] hath made his wonderful works to be remembered: [h]the LORD is gracious, and full of compassion.

5 He[i] hath given meat[2] unto them that fear him: he [j]will ever be mindful of his covenant.

6 He[k] hath showed his people the power of his works, that he may give them the heritage of the heathen.

7 The[l] works of his hands are verity and judgment; [m]all his commandments are sure.

8 They [3]stand fast[4] for ever and ever, and are done [o]in truth and uprightness.

9 He[p] sent redemption[5] unto his people; [q]he hath commanded his covenant for ever: [r]holy and reverend is his name.

10 The[s] fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom: [t]a good understanding[6] have all they that do his commandments:[7] his [u]praise endureth for ever.[8]

PSALM CXII.

1 Godliness hath the promises of this life, 4 and of the life to come. 10 The prosperity of the godly shall be despised by the wicked.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] Blessed[a] is the man that feareth the LORD, that delighteth greatly in his commandments.

2 His[b] seed shall be mighty upon earth: the generation of the upright shall be blessed.

3 Wealth[c] and riches shall be in his house; [d]and his righteousness endureth for ever.

4 Unto[e] the upright there ariseth light in the darkness: [f]he is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous.

5 A[h] good man showeth favour, and lendeth: he will guide his affairs with discretion.[2]

6 Surely[i] he shall not be moved for ever: [j]the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.

7 He[k] shall not be afraid of evil [3]tidings: [l]his heart is fixed, trusting in the LORD.

8 His heart is established, he shall not be afraid, until [n]he see his desire upon his enemies.

9 He[o] hath dispersed; he hath given to the poor; [p]his righteousness endureth for [q]ever; [r]his horn shall be exalted with honour.

10 The[r] wicked[5] shall see it, and be grieved; [s]he shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away: [t]the desire of the wicked shall perish.

speaker here is David, who in spirit calls Jesus LORD, and thereby enabled him, in the days of his flesh, to establish unanswerably his superiority to David, Mat. 22. 43. C.

Ver. 3. Willing. To hear, search, judge, believe, love, deny themselves, take up their cross, follow, suffer, pray, praise: yea, utterly to devote themselves, with all they have and are, to the advancement of the kingdom of their great Priest and King. C.

Ver. 5. The LORD at thy right hand. It is distinctly to be remarked, that he who is called Adon, Lord, ver. 1, is placed at the right hand of JEHOVAH, God supreme. But now, ver. 5, he is distinctly called Jehovah- a mode of speech clearly evincing the Godhead equality of Father and Son, with the office-subordination of the Son to the Father. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How high is the dignity of our Redeemer! Glorious is his reward for his work of obedience and suffering. And all his enemies—sin, Satan, the world, and death—are made to bow under his feet. The everlasting gospel, sent forth into all the world, becomes powerful to men's salvation, and his kingdom is established, in despite of all opposition. Multitudes of his enemies surrender in the day of his power, cheerfully enlist themselves in his service, and worship him in the beauties of holiness. In the morning of the gospel period, through the heavenly influence of the blessed Spirit, multitudes, fresh and flourishing in heart, surrendered themselves to this Lord. And upon the most solid ground are believers' hopes and comforts founded—the all-sufficiency of Jesus Christ, and the oath of the eternal JEHOVAH. With confidence then ought we always to expect pardon, peace, and all the blessings of salvation, from this great High-priest of our profession. Horrid is the crime, if for a moment we dare question his power and grace, and stagger at promises confirmed by two immutable things—the word and oath of that God who cannot lie. And while Jesus, finishing his obedience, and strengthened by the Holy Ghost, lifts up his head in everlasting triumph, dreadful is the ruin of his malicious and powerful opposers, Jews, heathens, antichristians, and others.

PSALM CXI. Ver. 1. On comparing this ver. with Ps. 18. 49. explained by Ro. 15. 9. there can be no question that both are the words of Christ. But were this proof wanting, the confident dedication of the whole heart, would prove the speaker to be either an ignorant self-deceiver (see Jo. 17. 9), or Christ, who can neither deceive nor be deceived. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Praising of God ought to be hearty, candid, and avowed: and they who inculcate it upon others should carefully exemplify it in their own practice. How extensive are the grounds of it! A God infinitely gracious and faithful, ever mindful of his new relation, and every promise thereof; holy and reverend in nature and in name. His works are unsearchably glorious, memorable, powerful, just, and true; and all of them communicating provision and riches to them that fear him. Fixed, everlasting, true, and candid are all his counsels and words, exactly conformable to his righteous nature, and must be obeyed in simplicity by them that serve him. Everlasting, ordered in all things and sure, is his word, and all the redemption it offers and communicates to men. And they are the only wise persons who fear him and keep his commandments; everlasting shall be their honour and reward.

PSALM CXII. Ver. 3. Every torture of accommodation has been exhausted in applying this psalm to every believer, at least to every one of high attainments. But surely a comparison of this single verse with Ro. 3. 10, 21, 22, should have convinced every interpreter, that, though not altogether a prophecy, it was still a description, a spiritual picture of Messiah, whereby the church might recognize him at his coming. C.

Ver. 5. He hath dispersed. This is explained by what follows. It means he is liberal and benevolent. He scatters with a bountiful, and yet wise and prudent hand, whatever God commits to his stewardship. P.

REFLECTIONS.—What holy awe of God, delight in spiritual things, candour, kindness, and equity, are necessary in our obedience to God's law! And great profit, stability, honour, safety, quietness of mind, and victory over all our enemies, are secured for its reward. But how unhappy are the wicked, whose wishes shall be either cursed or denied: and to whom even the happiness of the godly is an insupportable vexation.

PSALM CXIII. REFLECTIONS.—O what an ever-any it will require for the redeemed servants of the Lord sufficiently to praise their high, their unparalleled, their condescending Redeemer, who, by his own debasement, raises faithful believers from the pit of corruption to the loftiest thrones of bliss; and now makes the Gentile world, after long barrenness, to bring forth millions of true converts to himself in his gospel church!

PSALM CXIV. REFLECTIONS.—In infinite tenderness God chooses all who accept Christ to be his peculiar people, and to be blessed with the Spirit's witness, and gracious influences. And nothing can detain his people in their spiritual bondage if they are faithful. Nothing, no not seas of tribulation, nor mountains of unbelief and corruption, can stop their passage to the heavenly Canaan. Nor while Jesus, our smitten Rock of ages, continues a fountain open, shall they want refreshment by the way. Tremble then, my carnal heart, at the presence of a God in Christ as my own. And let all my hardened powers be melted by his love.

PSALM CXV. Ver. 8. As really destitute of the use of eyes, &c., as the idols are of the possession of these organs. No man can have the use of his eyes who looks up to the heavens and attributes their formation to unintelligible and unintelligent chance, or a carved block of marble or wood. Indeed, did idolatry live merely in history, and were it not still an extensive and powerful system, it would be scarcely possible to conceive it ever had existed as described. But it lives, while Satan, its inventor, rules; and will not fall till his kingdom is overturned. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Let us be always nothing in our own eyes, and let Christ be all and in all. To his grace every good thing in us, or done by us, must be ascribed. But disgracing to human nature, as well as

An exhortation to praise God for his mercy and truth.

3 What comfort and joy does a psalm like this give the troubled soul! it is the record of a painful and yet glorious experience. Amid severe bodily suffering and deep mental anguish, when earthly comfort would have been vain, the writer looks to and trusts in God. At once heavenly joy is poured into the troubled heart, and with touching pathos he says, 'Return unto thy rest, O my soul.' In God is perfect rest found.—F.

[3] In the hour of his sorest trial and deepest affliction, when, humanly speaking, hope had vanished, he still had faith in God, in his promises and in his faithfulness. As a result, he realized divine sustaining grace, and therefore he was able to speak of God's love and mercy. These words are quoted by the apostle in 2 Co. 4. 13, to express his confidence in the truth of Christ's gospel, and the effect that confidence had upon him, causing him to proclaim the truth.—F.

PSALM CXVIII.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his mercy. 5 The psalmist by his own experience showeth how good it is to trust in God. 19 Under the type of the psalmist the coming of Christ in his kingdom is expressed.

O GIVE [a]thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: [b]because his mercy endureth for ever.

2 Let[c] Israel now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

3 Let[d] the house of Aaron now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

4 Let[e] them now that fear the LORD say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

5 I[f] called upon the LORD in distress:[1] the LORD answered me, and set me in a large place.

6 The[h] LORD is on my side;[2] I will not fear: what can man do unto me?

7 The[i] LORD taketh my part with them that help me; [j]therefore shall I see my desire upon them that hate me.

8 It[k] is better to trust in the LORD than to put confidence in man.

9 It[l] is better to trust in the LORD than to put confidence in princes.

10 All[m] nations compassed me about: but in the name of the LORD will I destroy them.[3]

11 They compassed me about; yea, they compassed me about: but in the name of the LORD I will destroy them.

12 They[o] compassed me about like bees; they are quenched as the fire of thorns: for in the name of the LORD I will [4]destroy them.[5]

13 [r]Thou[6] hast thrust sore at me that I might fall; but the LORD helped me.

14 The[s] LORD is my strength and song, and is become my salvation.

dishonouring to God, is the worshipping of idols. And how absurd it is for idolaters to upbraid the saints with their all-present, all-creating, and all-governing JEHOVAH. Great is their encouragement to trust in a God, who is so much, and gives so much to his people; nay, gives so much to men! They can never fail whose faith stands firm. And greatly then should we exert ourselves in praising and serving God here, as in death we shall have no such opportunities for it.

PSALM CXVI. Ver. 3. Can this be true of any but the 'Man of Sorrows, acquainted with grief?'—of him who was exceeding 'sorrowful even unto death,' which death lies within the dominion of Satan, by whom its power is still vindictively exercised? See He. 2. 14. C.

Ver. 10. Were there yet any question that Jesus, in his sorrows, is the speaker, the quotation of this verse by Paul (2 Co. 4. 13) would put the matter beyond controversy. 'The same spirit of faith' spoken of, ver. 13, cannot possibly have a correspondent, but 'the life of Jesus,' referred to in ver. 11. C.

Ver. 11. In my haste. 'In my ecstasy.'—Sept. 'My agitation.'—Horsley. All men are liars—'are deceitful.'—Green. The very fact which our Lord, returning from his agony in Gethsemane, implied, 'when he came to his disciples, and found them asleep,' and said, 'What! could ye not watch with me one hour?' C.

Ver. 15. As the eye of man gazes with delight on a precious gem, so the most lovely, the most precious of all things in the sight of God, is the patient and triumphant death of his saints. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who love the Lord! They are every moment laid under fresh obligations to this delightful exercise. Prayers heard by God should always make us love him more, and praise him more. And if we are in Christ, our troubles may be very sore, but our victory and deliverance are sure and near. Delightful consolation and rest succeed the bitterest tribulations to his saints. And pleasant is that rest which is enjoyed in a Saviour's arms, and under the covert of his blood. It is honourable, as well as dutiful, to walk always as under his eye, and in conformity to him; in subjection to his will as our Father, and in dependence on him as our all-sufficient portion. The consideration that we are in the land of the living should quicken us to it. And it is delightful to speak and practise that which our heart believes upon God's testimony, ratified by the blood of his Son. But often, under strong temptations and in deep afflictions, the strongest believers have had their faith shaken, and have been surprised into thoughts and words extremely dishonourable to God. Yet he upholds all believers, and makes them quickly to change their voice. And O how pleasant it is to be so overwhelmed with a sense of God's love, that we scarcely know what praise, what vows, or what service to return him in gratitude! But while we praise him for what we have received, we must eagerly drink more and more of his cup of salvation, and receive more and more out of his fulness, and grace for grace. How precious and delightful to God is the death of his saints for, or in, the Lord! But much more that unparalleled death of Jesus Christ for the world, who loosed all our bonds and secured all our blessings.

PSALM CXVII. REFLECTIONS.—Thrice happy is the Gentile world when blessed with the fulness of Christ! Behold mercy preached, offered, and given to us! mercy abounding to the chief of sinners; mercy extending to millions of lost souls, and securing to all who believe, purity, strength, comfort, and glory! Behold also the unchangeable faithfulness of God, confirmed by his oath and blood, and engaged to make good to us all the promises of his everlasting word!

PSALM CXVIII. Ver. 5. I called. There are sufficient characteristics in this psalm to demonstrate that Christ is the speaker. But it is unnecessary to examine them, as the psalm is thrice in the New Testament directly applied to Christ; and, on one of these occasions, in his own presence, see ver. 26, compare with Mat. 21. 9; on another by his own lips, Mat. 23. 39; and again, ver. 22 is applied to our Lord by Peter, Ac. 4. 11. C.

Ver. 10. All nations, &c. This was literally fulfilled when the Jews in the persons of the congregated multitude, and the Romans in the persons of Pilate and the soldiers, encompassed our Lord at his trial and crucifixion. C.

Ver. 12. Destroy them. This has been fully verified in the dispersion of the Jews, and the utter dismemberment of the Roman empire; nay, in the literal destruction of the effeminate emperors, their profligate legions, and idolatrous subjects—by the irruption of those northern nations that now occupy their fields, their cities, and adopt their name. C.

Ver. 19. Surely none but Christ ever entered by the gates of righteousness, presenting himself 'without spot' before God. Others follow, only because washed by his blood, and accepted in him. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Animated are the saints' praises to their God, when the mercy that is in his nature and relation to all is clearly discerned; the mercies he hath granted are kindly reviewed; and the mercies he hath in store and in promise are firmly believed! No wonder that such invite all around them to sing of his everlasting mercy and grace! No wonder they pour contempt on all created confidences, and disregard all opposition from earth and hell! No wonder they ascribe the glory of all to God; that they ask all from God; that they gratefully dedicate themselves, and all that they have, to his service; and exert all their powers to exalt his honour and spread his renown!—But chiefly let us here behold Jesus and his sure mercies.—He was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death. Terrible was his distress, innumerable his conflicts with the enemies of our salvation! But, trusting in God, complete was his victory, and glorious his deliverance! Solemn was his ascen-

15 The[r] voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous: [s]the right hand of the LORD doeth valiantly.

16 The right hand of the LORD is exalted: the right hand of the LORD doeth valiantly.

17 I[t] shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the LORD.

18 The[u] LORD hath chastened me sore; but he hath not given me over unto death.[7]

19 Open[v] to me the gates of righteousness: I will go into them, and I will praise the LORD:

20 This gate of the LORD, [w]into which the righteous shall enter.

21 I [x]will praise thee; for thou hast heard me, and art become my salvation.

22 The[y] stone which the builders refused is become the head-stone of the corner.[8]

23 This is the LORD's doing;[9] it [z]is marvellous in our eyes.

24 This[a] is the day which the LORD hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it.

25 Save[b] now, I beseech thee, O LORD: O LORD, I beseech thee, send now prosperity.

26 Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the LORD: [d]we have blessed[1] you out of the house of the LORD.

27 God[e] is the LORD, which hath showed us light: [g]bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar.

28 Thou[h] art my God, and I will praise thee: thou art my God, I will exalt thee.

29 O[i] give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

And believingly claiming him and his Father as our God, our all in all, let us ever exult in his praise.

PSALM CXIX. As in the works of God 'one star differeth from another star in glory,' it is not surprising if, in the Word of God, one portion is found to surpass another in the preciousness of its sacred contents. All parts of Scripture are alike true, yet are there various ways in which one portion may surpass another. Some parts surpass others because they concentrate truths of deeper interest; point the finger of their light towards fairer objects; stir up the weary spirit to higher aspirations; and minister to the sick soul the air and the sun of a brighter climate—and all this because they contain more than other portions do of the person, the humiliation, the sorrows, the fervent prayers, the strong cries, the flowing tears, and earnest supplications—and more of the death, the sacrifice, the resurrection, the righteousness, the intercession, and glory of Jesus!

Of Ps. CXIX. all this is specially true; other psalms shine as suns in the firmament; this is a constellation of suns—a galaxy of divine light and glory—Jesus its 'all and in all.' That this may appear, the attention of the unprejudiced and godly reader is humbly solicited to the following facts: (1) One speaker, whoever he be, speaks of himself throughout the whole psalm. (2) The following is the speaker's character, drawn by himself, under the sure guidance of the Spirit of God: 'With my whole heart have I sought thee, ver. 10.—Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee, 11.—With my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth, 13.—I will not forget thy word, 16.—My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times, 20.—I have kept thy testimonies, 22.—Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, and I shall keep it unto the end, 33.—I shall keep thy law. I shall observe it with my whole heart, 34.—I shall keep thy law continually, for ever and ever, 44.—I have not declined from thy law, 51.—I have kept thy law, 55.—I kept thy precepts, 56.—I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart, 69.—I forsook not; I will never forget thy precepts, 87, 88.—Thou, through thy commandments, hast made me wiser than all mine enemies; for they (the commandments) are ever with me, 98.—I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts, 100.—I have refrained my feet from every evil way, 101.—I have not departed from thy judgments, 102.—I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments, 106.—I do not forget thy law; I erred not from thy precepts; I have inclined my heart to perform thy statutes always, 109 112.—I will keep the commandments of my God, 115.—I will have respect unto thy statutes continually, 117.—I have done judgment and justice, 124.—Thy testimonies are wonderful, therefore doth my soul keep them, 129.—My zeal hath consumed me, 139.—I cried with my whole heart; hear me, O Lord, I will keep thy statutes, 145.—I do not decline from thy testimonies, 157.—I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments; I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies, for all my ways are before thee, 166–168.—I have chosen thy precepts; I do not forget thy commandments,' 173–176.

Now, that David never imagined such a character for himself is historically unquestionable. The finger of the Spirit of truth ever pointing to his sin renders the supposition impossible. Would Paul have mistaken the portrait for his own? When he dipped his pencil in colours of truth and light, he produced a portrait of himself, inscribed as 'the chief of sinners.' Who then is this? Say, is not this Jesus, the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely? Yes, this is unquestionably the guileless, the spotless Lamb, who magnified the law and made it honourable; who knew no sin, yet was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

In face of this inevitable conclusion, three difficulties present themselves: (1) In ver. 67 the speaker admits, 'Before I was afflicted, I went astray,' and does not this seem to imply an acknowledgment of personal error and sin? Not so, the difficulty arises from the translation. The word here translated 'went astray,' signifies to wander, either naturally or morally. Thus it is translated in a natural and not a moral sense, Ge. 21. 14; 37. 15. Now, if the natural sense explain the passage, and if the moral sense of wandering be utterly inconsistent with the as 24 Thy[s] testimonies also are my delight, and my counsellors.[8]

DALETH.

25 My[t] soul cleaveth unto the [9]dust: [h]quicken thou me according to thy word.

26 I[i] have declared my ways,[1] and thou heardest me; [j]teach me thy statutes.

27 Make me to understand the way of thy precepts: [k]so shall I talk of thy wondrous works.

28 My soul melteth[2] for heaviness: [l]strengthen thou me according unto thy word.

29 Remove[m] from me the way of lying;[3] and grant[n] me thy law graciously.

30 I[o] have chosen the way of truth: thy judgments have I [9]laid before me.

31 I[r] have stuck unto thy testimonies: O LORD, [s]put me not to shame.

32 I[t] will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt enlarge[4] my heart.

HE.

33 Teach[u] me, O LORD, the way of thy statutes; and [v]I shall keep it unto the end.

34 Give[x] me understanding, and I shall keep thy law; yea, I shall observe it [y]with my whole heart.

35 Make[z] me to go in the path of thy commandments; for therein do I delight.

36 Incline[a] my heart unto thy testimonies, and[b] not to covetousness.

37 Turn away[5] mine eyes [c]from beholding vanity; and [d]quicken thou me in thy way.[6]

38 Stablish[e] thy word unto thy servant, who is devoted to thy fear.

39 Turn[g] away my reproach which I fear: for thy judgments are good.

40 Behold, [h]I have longed after thy precepts: [i]quicken me in thy righteousness.

VAU.

41 Let[j] thy mercies come also unto me, O LORD, even thy salvation,[7] according to thy word.

42 So shall I have wherewith to answer him that reproacheth me:[8] for I trust in thy word.[9]

43 And[k] take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth: for [l]I have hoped in thy judgments.

44 So[m] shall I keep thy law continually for ever and ever.[1]

45 And I will walk at liberty:[2] for I seek thy precepts.

46 I[o] will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed.

47 And[p] I will delight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved.

48 My [q]hands also will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved; [r]and I will meditate in thy statutes.

ZAIN.

49 Remember[s] the word unto thy servant, [t]upon which thou hast caused me to hope.

50 This[u] is my comfort in my affliction: [v]for thy word hath quickened me.

51 The[x] proud have had me greatly in derision; [y]yet have I not declined from thy law.

52 I[z] remembered thy judgments of old, O LORD, and have comforted myself.

53 [a]Horror[3] hath taken hold upon me because of the wicked that forsake thy law.

54 Thy[b] statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage.

55 I[c] have remembered thy name, O LORD, in the night, and have kept thy law.

56 This[d] I had, because I kept thy precepts.

CHETH.

57 Thou[e] art my portion,[4] O LORD: I have said that I would keep thy words.

58 I[g] entreated thy favour[5] with my whole heart: be merciful unto me according to thy word.

59 I[h] thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies.[6]

60 I[i] made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.

61 The[j] bands[7] of the wicked have robbed me: but I have not forgotten thy law.

62 At[k] midnight I will rise to give thanks unto thee because of thy [l]righteous judgments.

63 I[m] am a companion of all them that fear thee, and of them that keep thy precepts.

64 The[o] earth, O LORD, is full of thy mercy: [p]teach me thy statutes.

TETH.

65 Thou[q] hast dealt well with thy servant, O LORD, according unto thy word.

66 Teach[r] me good judgment and knowledge: for I have believed thy commandments.

67 Before[s] I was afflicted I went astray: [t]but now have I kept thy word.

68 Thou[u] art good, and doest good: [v]teach me thy statutes.

69 The[x] proud have forged a lie against me:

sorted character of the speaker—a character, be it remembered, every word of which has passed the testing fire of the Holy Spirit, then surely there can be no doubt, that in the natural, and not in the moral sense, the word wanderred is here to be taken. (2) A second obstruction to the acknowledgment of Jesus in this psalm, arises from the frequent prayers of the speaker for teaching and guidance. But this obstruction arises merely from allowing the brilliancy of the Son's Godhead to dazzle and confuse the eyes in contemplating his manhood. Christ was truly God, Jn. 1. 1, 14; he was as truly man, made in all things like unto his brethren, yet without sin. Now, in this humbled condition he appeared not in 'the form of God,' but 'the form of a servant.' And hence, 'though he were a Son, yet (being in servant form) learned he obedience by the things that he suffered,' He. 5. 8. And, as the teaching Spirit descends to us only by the prayer of Christ to the Father, Jn. 14. 16, so we behold our Lord, in the days of his flesh, call upon the Father for the same heavenly instruction. (3) The third obstruction to the acknowledgment of Jesus in this psalm is found in ver. 176, 'I have gone astray like a lost sheep.' This obstruction, however, is but another mistranslation. The word here translated 'gone astray,' is not the same that occurs in ver. 67. The word here used signifies to pant, and is so translated, Is. 21. 4. A more correct rendering is unquestionably as follows:—'I have panted as a sheep perishing,' and this is in perfect keeping with the life, toils, and condition of our Lord in the sorrowful days of his flesh. C s The meaning is, that at creation God established those great natural laws by which the physical universe is governed. These laws were the product of the divine will, and they are sustained in operation by the direct exercise of divine power. They are the servants of God, acting in unbroken harmony with his commands, and subject to be regulated and changed at his pleasure. Law is not above God; it is the contrary, God is the author of law, as well that which regulates the physical, as that which regulates the moral world.—C.

LAMED.

89 For[h] ever, O LORD, thy word is settled in heaven.[7]

90 Thy[i] faithfulness is unto all [s]generations: thou hast established the earth, and it [a]abideth.

91 They[j] continue this day according to thine ordinances: for all are thy servants.[1]

92 Unless[k] thy law had been my delights, I should then have perished in mine affliction.

93 I[l] will never forget thy precepts: for with them thou hast quickened me.

94 I[n] am thine, save me: for I have sought thy precepts.

95 The[o] wicked have waited for me to destroy me: but [p]I will consider thy testimonies.

96 I[q] have seen an end of all perfection: but [r]thy commandment is exceeding broad.

MEM.

97 O[s] how love I thy law! [t]it is my meditation all the day.

98 Thou, through thy commandments, [u]hast made me wiser than mine enemies;[2] for they are ever with me.[3]

99 I[v] have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation.

100 I[x] understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts.

101 I[y] have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word.

102 I[z] have not departed from thy judgments: for thou hast taught me.

103 How[a] sweet are thy words unto my taste![4] yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!

104 Through[b] thy precepts I get understanding: therefore [c]I hate every false way.

NUN.

105 Thy[d] word is a lamp[5] unto my feet, and a light unto my path.

106 I[e] have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments.

107 I[g] am afflicted very much: quicken me, O LORD, according unto thy word.

108 Accept, I beseech thee, [h]the free-will offerings of my mouth, O LORD, and [i]teach me thy judgments.

mode of construction would give a somewhat stiff and constrained formality to the whole poem; yet such is not the case. The genius of the Hebrew poet overcame all restraints, and produced a work, perfect in form, and yet free, beautiful, and moving. It has been well said by a recent writer, —'If we would fathom the depth of meaning in the written law of Israel; if we would measure the elevation of soul, the hope, the confidence, even before princes and kings, which pious Jews derived from it, we must turn to this psalm. Here is an epitome of all true religion as conceived by the best spirits of that time.' P.

Ver. 1. Law. From a root signifying to teach. It here signifies all divine instruction. C.

Ver. 2. Testimonies. From a root comprehending the idea of futurity. The witnessings of God concerning things to come. C.

Ver. 4. Precepts. From a word signifying to visit, to inspect. Those orders and institutions that continually remind the church of the visitation of her omnipresent Head. C.

Ver. 5. Statutes. From a root signifying to engrave. These significant divine institutions in which man is specially required neither to add nor diminish. C.

Ver. 13. Were there no other note of character in the whole psalm, this alone seems sufficient to identify the speaker as Christ. Who else ever declared all the judgments of God?—Note. Law, testimonies, precepts, statutes, commandments, judgments, having been explained in notes on ver. 1–7, will not again be noticed. C.

Ver. 18. Those wondrous things that lay in its holy constitution—unbending justice, awful penalties, and glorious end; its successful teachings, bringing souls to Christ; and its marvellous result, in entering, that sin might abound; but effecting, in divine wisdom, that grace did much more abound. C.

Ver. 33. That Christ, though a Son, learned obedience through the things that he suffered, is the testimony of the Holy Spirit, He. 5. 8. He accordingly prays for the teaching he requires, and thereon resolves, as none but he could resolve without self-ignorance and self-reliance, that he shall keep the statutes of his Father to the end, that is, to the full production of everlasting righteousness, Ro. 10. 4. C.

Ver. 49. Wishes, expectations, and even hopes may be generated and sustained without any solid foundation. Thus it is said, the hypocrite's hope shall perish, Job 8. 13; see also Pr. 11. 7. True Christian hope can rest upon no foundation but the revealed Word of God, the word of truth and of promise that can never mislead into error, or make ashamed by disappointment. C.

Ver. 67. I went astray. Whether these be taken as the words of Christ or of some of the prophets, they cannot be taken morally, for that would contradict ver. 22, 31, 51, 55, 56, 61. But these verses describe a character applicable to none but Christ. The translation, therefore, must be (see preface to this psalm), 'I wandered,' that is, as a stranger in a strange land, till by affliction, I learned the end and business of my incarnation, ver 73, 'was made perfect,' He. 5. 8, as an example, 1 Pe. 2. 21, and as a High-priest and sacrifice, that my church might be saved, He. 8. 1–3; 9. 28. C.

Ver. 69. 'The word rendered forged means to patch together, and then it is applied to charges or accusations against any one, perhaps from their being made up (as they often are) of shreds and patches,—hints, small matters, things having no necessary connection in themselves, but brought together as if they pertained to the same transaction,—words dropped here and there in conversation, which, being artfully woven together, seem to make out a plausible case against a man. Most slanders are formed and sustained in this way: for it is rare that an absolutely forged slander is uttered against a man, or that a charge is brought which cannot be made to have plausibility from such circumstances as those referred to above' (Barnes). P.

109 My[j] soul is continually in my hand; yet[k] do I not forget thy law.

110 The[l] wicked have laid a snare for me: yet I erred not from thy precepts.

111 Thy[m] testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: [n]for they are the rejoicing of my heart.

112 I[p] have inclined mine heart to perform[6] thy statutes alway, [q]even unto the end.

SAMECH.

113 I[r] hate vain thoughts:[7] but[s] thy law do I love.

114 Thou[t] art my hiding-place[8] and my shield: I [u]hope in thy word.

115 Depart[v] from me, ye evil-doers: for I will keep the commandments of my God.

116 Uphold[x] me according unto thy word, that I may live: and let me not be [y]ashamed of my hope.

117 Hold[z] thou me up, and I shall be safe: and[a] I will have respect unto thy statutes continually.

118 Thou[b] hast trodden down all them that err from thy statutes: [c]for their deceit is falsehood.

119 Thou puttest away[9] all the wicked of the earth like dross: [d]therefore I love thy testimonies.

120 My[e] flesh trembleth for fear[f] of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments.

AIN.

121 I[g] have done judgment and justice: [h]leave me not to mine oppressors.[2]

122 Be[i] surety for thy servant for good: let not the proud oppress me.

123 Mine[j] eyes fail for thy salvation, and for the word of thy righteousness.

124 Deal[k] with thy servant according unto thy mercy, and [l]teach me thy statutes.

125 I[m] am thy servant; [n]give me understanding, that I may know thy testimonies.

126 It[p] is time for thee, LORD, to work: for they have made void thy law.[3]

127 [q]Therefore[4] I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold.

128 Therefore[r] I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and [s]I hate every false way.

PE.

129 Thy[t] testimonies are wonderful: therefore doth my soul keep them.[5]

[8] The perfection of the law of God is set forth with great force and beauty in this psalm. It extends to the outward acts of man, to his words, and to the inmost thoughts and affections of his heart. It is exceeding broad and comprehensive. The psalmist is fully conscious of this. Another great truth is brought out in connection with the perfection of the law — namely, man's natural weakness, and the necessity for spiritual quickening to enable him to keep the divine law. He therefore prays repeatedly for quickening power.—P.

135 Make[b] thy face to shine upon thy servant; [c]and teach me thy statutes.

136 Rivers[d] of waters run down mine eyes, because they keep not thy law.

TSADDI.

137 Righteous[e] art thou, O LORD, and upright are thy judgments.

138 Thy[g] testimonies that thou hast commanded are righteous and very faithful.[7]

139 My[h] zeal hath consumed me;[8] because mine enemies have forgotten thy words.

140 Thy word is very pure:[9] therefore thy servant loveth it.

141 I[i] am small and despised; yet do not I forget thy precepts.

142 Thy[j] righteousness is an everlasting righteousness, [k]and thy law is the truth.

143 Trouble[l] and anguish have taken hold on me;[1] yet [m]thy commandments are my delights.

144 The[o] righteousness of thy testimonies is everlasting: [p]give me understanding, and I shall live.

KOPH.

145 I[q] cried with my whole heart; hear me, O LORD: [r]I will keep thy statutes.

146 I cried unto thee; save me, and I shall keep[2] thy testimonies.

147 I[s] prevented the dawning of the morning, and cried: I hoped in thy word.

148 Mine[t] eyes prevent the night-watches, that I might meditate in thy word.

149 Hear[u] my voice according unto thy loving-kindness: O LORD, [v]quicken me according to thy judgment.[3]

150 They[x] draw nigh that follow after mischief: they [y]are far from thy law.

151 Thou[z] art near, O LORD; and [a]all thy commandments are truth.

152 Concerning thy testimonies, I have

---

Ver. 83. A bottle in the smoke. First the weary soul fainted for salvation, ver. 81; then the straining eyes failed for the comfort of the word of promise; lastly, the frame became as a skin-bottle, dried and blackened in the smoke — a mean and despised receptacle in such mean and uncomfortable dwellings as the smoky cottages of the East still continue to present, from the roofs of which the skin-bottles, both for solids and fluids, are still found suspended. C.

Ver. 96. I have seen, &c. (1) In the word and covenant, ver. 89, 90; (2) in the stability of the earth, and its ordinances of the seasons, ver. 90, 91; (3) in the holy precepts of life and testimonies to hope, ver. 93–95; (4) in the afflictions which Christ endured, ver. 92, 95; and in which the length and breadth of his love constantly filled up the length and breadth of the law, Ro. 10. 8. C.

Ver. 100. I understand more than the ancients. 'Thou hast made me wiser than mine enemies,' ver. 98. 'I have more understanding than all my teachers,' Lu. 2. 46, 47. 'I understand more than the ancients,' would surely in the lips of any mere man be nothing but great swelling words of vanity. Would either Moses, David, or Solomon so have spoken in their own names? None of them would have dared so to speak of himself: Christ alone, endowed with the sevenfold gifts of the Spirit, Is. 11. 2, 3, and learning obedience by the things that he suffered, He. 5. 8, could so speak, and of him alone could the assertion be true. C.

Ver. 106. I have sworn. The power of human promise when assailed, not by unexpected, but even by foreseen temptation, receives a full and melancholy illustration in the case of our Lord's disciples, Mat. 26. 33, 35. Nor is the instructed believer ever ready to promise, much less to swear what he will do, without a prayer for preventing and assisting grace: but here is one who has sworn without reservation to the Amen he has affixed to the holy law — and who promises, in full assurance of inherent ability, ver. 112, to perform and keep God's righteous judgments. Say, can this be any other than the Christ? C.

Ver. 115. Depart from me. Contrast these words with the prophetic anticipation of judgment, Mat. 7. 23 — and then say, are not these the words of Him who is appointed Judge of the quick and the dead? C.

Ver. 130. All human instruction comes by words spoken to the ear, or exhibited to the eye, or touch; these bring the light (manifestation) of natural things to the understanding. But these words always require more or less the aid of a teacher. So God known of old [b]that thou hast founded them for ever.

RESH.

153 Consider[c] mine affliction, and deliver me: for I do not forget thy law.

154 Plead [d]my cause, and deliver me: [e]quicken me according to thy word.

155 Salvation[g] is far from the wicked: for they seek not thy statutes.

156 [h]Great[4] are thy tender mercies, O LORD: quicken[i] me according to thy judgments.

157 Many[j] are my persecutors and mine enemies; yet [k]do I not decline from thy testimonies.

158 I[l] beheld the transgressors, and was grieved; because they kept not thy word.

159 Consider[m] how I love thy precepts: quicken[e] me, O LORD, according to thy loving-kindness.

160 Thy[p] word is true from the beginning:[5] and[q] every one of thy righteous judgments endureth for ever.

SCHIN.

161 Princes[r] have persecuted me without a cause: but my heart [s]standeth in awe of thy word.[6]

162 I[t] rejoice at thy word, as one that findeth great spoil.

163 I[u] hate and abhor lying: [v]but thy law do I love.

164 Seven[x] times a-day do I praise thee because of thy righteous judgments.

165 Great[y] peace have they which love thy law; and [7]nothing shall offend them.[8]

166 LORD, [z]I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments.

167 My[a] soul hath kept thy testimonies; and I love them exceedingly.

168 I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies: for all my ways are [b]before thee.

TAU.

169 Let[c] my cry come near before thee, O LORD: [d]give me understanding according to thy word.

170 Let my supplication come before thee: deliver me according to thy word.

171 My[e] lips shall utter praise, when thou hast taught me thy statutes.

172 My[g] tongue shall speak of thy word: [h]for all thy commandments are righteousness.

173 Let[i] thine hand help me: for [j]I have chosen thy precepts.

174 I[k] have longed for thy salvation, O LORD; [l]and thy law is my delight.

175 Let[n] my soul live, and it shall praise thee; and let thy judgments [o]help me.

176 I[p] have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek thy servant: for I do not forget thy commandments.[9]

PSALM CXX.

1 David, praying against Doeg, 3 reproveth his tongue, 5 complaineth of his necessary conversation with the wicked.

[a]A song of degrees.

IN my[b] distress I cried unto the LORD, and he heard me.

2 Deliver[c] my soul, O LORD, from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue.

3 What shall be given unto thee? or what shall be done[1] unto thee, thou false tongue?[2]

4 Sharp[d] arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper.[3]

5 Woe[e] is me that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar![4]

6 My soul hath long dwelt with him [g]that hateth peace.

7 I am for[5] peace:[6] but[h] when I speak, they are for war.

teaches by words; but his Spirit is the teacher that effects the entrance and diffuses the light of Jesus! C.

Ver. 139. My zeal hath consumed me. The quotation (Jn. 2. 17) from Ps. 69. 9, and, so far as it goes, its perfect parallelism to that in this verse, affords a farther evidence that this psalm is dictated by the Spirit in the person of Christ. C.

Ver. 142. The righteousness of God never means a rule of righteousness, any more than the love of God means a mere rule of love. The love of God means just the love of God: and the righteousness of God means just the righteousness of God, neither more nor less. It is the work which God the Father gave the Son to do; it is the work which God the Son performed. The creature righteousness was dissolved: the Godhead righteousness abideth for ever. C.

Ver. 148. Study, business, and piety alike court early and late hours. The student of nature, art, literature, or science awakes before the sun, outwatches the stars, and often disregards the sacrifice of health at the shrine of his beloved idol. The pursuit of riches claims votaries still more numerous and decided. And surely piety can claim no less. Wherefore, if its studies, privileges, and duties be shuffled into some mere corner of time and attention, what is it but a sure preparative for being speedily and finally cast away?—Note. The continuity of piety in thought, temper, reading, and prayer, is the only sufficient evidence of its sincerity and vitality. C.

Ver. 150. He that prays, 'O Lord, quicken me according to thy judgments,' must be one who has nothing to fear, because certain, when judged, to be justified in the Spirit, 1 Ti. 3. 16. C.

Ver. 157. Fear, favour, and covetousness are the three great causes of declining from a faithful adherence to the testimonies of God. Fear of suffering or loss begets base compliances with error. The favour of wicked men in power leads men away from truth by the influence of pride—while the 'love of money, the root of all evil,' bribes many to forsake what they believe to be true, follow what they know to be error, and practise what they feel to be sin. C.

Ver. 164. Seven times a-day. That seven signifies completeness is undoubted. It seems equally undoubted that here it signifies seven fixed and specific periods for secret prayer.—Note, Fixed times of prayer seem to many inconsistent with the freedom of Christianity and the circumstances of society. If piety were a restraint or a burden, this opinion might be true; but since it is a privilege and a blessing, it must be unfounded. C.

Ver. 169. Let my cry. A cry is the voice of a child in want or pain, or of man or woman in deep and poignant distress. Of the cries of our Lord in his distress we have no special record beyond that contained in Mat. 27. 46, 50. But Paul, by the Spirit, leads us more into the secret history of our Lord's heart, feelings, and sufferings, and declares, in accordance with all that is written of him in the Psalms, that, 'in the days of his flesh,' he 'offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared,' He. 5. 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Let this psalm be a touchstone by which I may try my heart and my life. Let me constantly inquire—Are these gracious tempers and holy exercises of faith, love, hope, humility, patience, and zeal, to be found in my soul? Has my heart, purged from an evil conscience in Jesus' blood, made these meditations, prayers, resolutions, and confessions truly my own? Is God's Word, his Testaments in Jesus' blood, the sole standard of all my faith and law of my practice? Is it the channel of Jesus' fulness of grace and comfort to my heart? Is it the instructor, the counsellor, the quickener, the medicine, the armour, the treasury, the wealth, the support, the guard, the joy, and the ALL of my soul? Do I receive it as a word to me from God, and use it as my plea with him for whatever I need? Happy is he that is thus living in these delightful exercises!

PSALM CXX. Title. This and the fourteen following psalms are entitled Songs of Degrees, or Ascending. Why or from whom they received this title, no man knows, and conjectures are manifold, but useless. C.

Ver. 1. In my distress. There can be no question that Ps. cxviii. is delivered in the name of Christ. See ver. 22. On comparing this verse with Ps. 118. 5, the identity of the speaker in the two psalms will scarcely be questioned. Comp. also Ps. lii. C.

Ver. 4. In ver. 3 a question is asked substantially as follows:—'What shall the deceitful tongue give thee—what will it do to thee?' Reference is made to the person who uses his tongue in this manner. What effect will it entail upon him—what punishment will it bring? The reply is given in ver. 4, in language highly figurative. It will entail such punishment as would be inflicted by the sharp arrows of the warrior; it will be such exquisite pain as would be produced by the glowing coals of juniper, the heat of which is intense. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Inveterate malice against the saints never refuses the basest means of venting itself: and it is the saints' ordinary lot to be virulently reproached by the wicked. But dreadful, penetrating, destructive, furious, and lasting is the ruin of their reproachers at last! It is grievous for the lovers of God to be long removed from public ordinances, or to be forced by necessity into continued connections with the wicked. But every one born of God ought to be a child of peace. Envy and strife are all from hell. And though others continue inveterate, we ought to abound in charity, and follow the things which make for peace.

PSALM CXXI. Ver. 1. The margin, Boothroyd, and other high authorities, read this verse as two questions, and this sense seems preferable. C.

Ver. 3. Recollecting first that this, being a promise of the Spirit, must be true—then there will be little difficulty in concluding that such a promise could only be realized in Christ. See also ver. 7, 8. Here the church, by the Spirit, replies to Christ, and ministers to him promises nearly parallel to those in Ps. xci. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In every difficulty our eyes ought to be fixed on God, in his temple, his Christ, his heaven, as the author of our help, protection, and deliverance. He is a sure refuge to them who flee to him; and with him nothing is impossible. In him nothing good can be wanting, no direction, no preservation; and in him no troubles can hurt us.

DAMASCUS GATE—OPENING TOWARDS NAZARETH. [Psalms, cxxii.2.]—"Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem." Damascus gate, or the gate of the column through which passes the north road to Galilee and Damascus, is the most ornamental of all the gates which stand in the walls of Jerusalem. It is made picturesque because of its many turrets and battlements. The Damascus gate, according to Bartlet, is a fine piece of Saracenic architecture. Other authorities claim that it dates back to a more remote antiquity than Bartlet supposes. This gate is not a great ways from the place supposed by many now to be the site of Mount Calvary. The tombs of the kings are about 1100 paces north of Damascus gate. Next to Jaffa gate, the Damascus gate is the one most frequently used of any in the Jerusalem walls.

PSALM CXXII. Ver. 1. I was glad. There is clearly but a single speaker in ver. 1, 8, 9, and this is the Prince of peace, who alone has power to grant true peace to his church. Jn. 14. 27. C.

Ver. 6. Pray. Intercession forms, at present, the great work of Christ in heaven. He. 7. 25: and if Christ be in us the hope of glory, Col. 1. 27, his power and presence will chiefly appear in the concurrence of our spirit with his. C.

Ver. 8. For my brethren. Can Christ ever call sinners brethren? The mystery is solved by their 'being born again of water and of the Spirit,' and therefore he is not ashamed to call them brethren. He. 2. 11, 12. C.

REFLECTIONS.—They who love God himself cannot but delight to draw near unto him in the ordinances of his worship; cannot but love his church, and be earnestly concerned in prayer and in practice for her real welfare. From regard to the saints, who are therein begotten and nourished up to eternal life, and especially from regard to the honour of her God, they will constantly seek her good.

PSALM CXXIII. Ver. 2. In several eastern countries, masters and mistresses call their servants by clapping the hands, and direct them in their work by signs, often imperceptible to strangers. Some interpreters think the verse refers to servants condemned to punishment, and watching for a sign of mitigation or forgiveness. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In what a humble, resigned, and obedient temper, and with what earnestness, ought we to look up to God for help and deliverance. While his great mercy encourages us, our great contempt and trouble should drive us to his throne of grace, and oblige us to wait upon him till he grant our requests.

PSALM CXXIV. REFLECTIONS.—How furiously the enemies of the church rage against her, and threaten to carry all before them! But power and policy in vain unite to destroy the souls faithful to our God. And when we are in appearance nearest to be overcome and perish, we then may be made more eminently to experience the salvation of God.

PSALM CXXV. Ver. 2. Jerusalem stands on the summit of a broad mountain ridge, which is broken into a wilderness of bare crowns of limestone, separated by deep ravines. Upon two of these crowns, Zion and Moriah, the ancient city was founded; and these two were bounded on the east by the valley of Kidron, and on the west and south by Hinnom. All around the site are loftier summits—nothing approaching to mountains, but rounded, irregular ridges, overtopping the buildings of the city from 50 to 200 ft. Thus it is that 'the mountains are round about Jerusalem.' P.

Ver. 3. Righteous. Those who, by faith of Jesus Christ, are endowed and clothed with 'the righteousness of God,' Phi. 3. 9. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who trust in the Lord! Immovable is their spiritual state. They

MOUNT OF OLIVES—OVER WHICH CHRIST WALKED TO THE HOME OF MARY AND MARTHA. [Psalms, cxxv:2.]—"As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even forever." East of the valley of Jehoshaphat rises the Mount of Olives. This is one of the mountains which the Psalmist refers to as standing round about Jerusalem. There are a number of olive trees still found upon the mountain, and upon its western base is a cluster of ancient ones known throughout the world to indicate the Garden of Gethsemane. The top of this mountain is held by many to be the place where the Savior left the earth, and his footsteps are still shown to those who are willing to believe extraordinary things. According to the Scripture, Christ ascended from Bethany. From the top of the Mount of Olives we have the most commanding view of the city of Jerusalem.

PSALM CXXVI.

1 The church, celebrating her incredible return out of captivity, 4 prayeth for, and prophesieth her own future joyfulness.

[a]A song of degrees.

WHEN the LORD turned again the captivity of Zion,[1] we[b] were like them that dream.

2 Then[c] was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing: then [d]said they among the heathen, The LORD hath done great things for them.[2]

3 The[e] LORD hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.

4 Turn[g] again our captivity, O LORD, as the streams in the [3]south.[4]

5 They[h] that sow in tears shall reap in joy.[5]

6 He[i] that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed,[6] shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

PSALM CXXVII.

1 The vanity of human endeavours without God's blessing. 3 Children are God's gift.

[a]A song of degrees for Solomon.[1]

EXCEPT [b]the LORD build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the LORD keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.

2 It is vain for you to [c]rise up early, to sit up late, to eat [d]the bread of sorrows; for [e]so he giveth his beloved sleep.

3 Lo,[f] children are an heritage of the LORD; and the fruit of the womb is his reward.

4 As[h] arrows are in the hand of a mighty man; so are children of the youth.

5 Happy[i] is the man that hath his quiver full of[2] them: they[j] shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak[3] with the enemies in the gate.

PSALM CXXVIII.

The sundry blessings which follow them that fear God.

[a]A song of degrees.

BLESSED [b]is every one that feareth the LORD; that walketh in his ways.

2 For[c] thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: [d]happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.

3 Thy[e] wife shall be as a fruitful vine by the sides of thine house; [g]thy children like olive plants round about thy table.

PSALM CXXIX.

1 An exhortation to praise God for saving Israel in their great afflictions. 5 The haters of the church are cursed.

[a]A song of degrees.

MANY a[b] time have they afflicted me from my [c]youth, may Israel now say:

2 Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth; yet [d]they have not prevailed against me.

3 The [e]ploughers ploughed upon my back: they made long their furrows.

4 The[g] LORD is righteous: he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked.[1]

5 Let[h] them all be confounded and turned back that hate Zion.

6 Let[i] them be as the grass upon the housetops, which withereth afore it groweth up;[2]

7 Wherewith the mower filleth not his hand, nor he that bindeth sheaves his bosom.

8 Neither do they which go by say, [j]The blessing of the LORD be upon you: we bless you in the name of the LORD.[3]

PSALM CXXX.

1 The psalmist, in distress, professeth his hope in prayer, 5 and his patience in hope. 7 He exhorteth Israel to hope in God.

[a]A song of degrees.

OUT of[b] the depths have I cried unto thee, O LORD.

2 LORD,[c] hear my voice: let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplications.

3 If[d] thou, LORD, shouldest mark iniquities, O LORD, who shall stand?

4 But there is [e]forgiveness with thee, [g]that thou mayest be feared.

5 I[h] wait for the LORD, my soul doth wait, and in his word do I hope.

are established, guarded, and protected by God; and, in performance of his promise, he will supply them with everything good. But dreadful and lasting is their misery who apostatize from him to the paths of wickedness!

PSALM CXXVI. Ver. 1. When. The when in this verse, like the now in Ps. 124. 1, is confined to no special period; for the whole history of Israel, from the moment they became a people, has been a history of captivities in the hands of enemies, and merciful deliverances by the hand of their God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's church is often in great tribulation for a time: and no deliverance comes till God himself effect it. Noted deliverances make observers to wonder, and saints to rejoice. But the more his people are now exercised in spiritual mourning, the more remarkable shall be their fruits of holiness and joy.

PSALM CXXVII. Ver. 2. So. 'Surely' (Horne). The affections of God's children are set upon things above; and though not free from sorrow or anxiety, they are always able to cast their cares upon him that careth for them, 1 Pe. 5. 7. Therefore, while the world watcheth, God's beloved sleep; yea, in hours of deepest calamity he sends them the repose that a purified conscience can alone confer. Argyle slept in calm composure the night before his martyrdom: his chief persecutor saw it, and never forgot this miracle of grace. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The less we depend upon our own schemes, or lean to our own understanding, and the more we look up to God for help and direction, the better shall we prosper. The most prudent projects and plans, the most anxious cares, and the most toilsome labours, are all to no purpose without God's blessing. But happy in their rest, and happier in their dutiful children, are they whom he blesses!

PSALM CXXVIII. Ver. 2. To many nothing appears more irksome or more degrading than labour. In the view of God it is blessed; and gratefully to enjoy the produce of a man's toil, is declared to be a special mark of the divine goodness. C.

Ver. 5. Thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem. The believer always sees the good, even of the natural Jerusalem; he sees it in her present converts to Jesus, and her future restoration. Of the spiritual Jerusalem, the good is visible to sense, as well as to faith. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How excellent and profitable is real and experimental godliness, issuing in a holy practice! It draws the blessing of God upon our labours, our families, on the church of God, and on our posterity.

PSALM CXXIX. Ver. 1. The now here, as in Ps. 124. 1, refers to no particular time in the history of Israel; but was true at all times since Israel was first persecuted by Esau. And surely till the end, 'all who live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution,' 2 Ti. 3. 12. C.

Ver. 2. Prevailed. That is, they have not prevailed to lead

8 And[f] he shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities.

PSALM CXXXI.

1 David, professing his humility, 3 exhorteth Israel to hope in God.

[c]A song of degrees of David.

LORD, [b]my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty; neither do I exercise[1] myself in great matters, or in things too high[2] for me.

2 Surely I have behaved and quieted [3]myself, [c]as a child that is weaned of his mother: my soul is even as a weaned child.

3 Let[d] Israel hope in the LORD from henceforth[4] and for ever.

PSALM CXXXII.

1 David, in his prayer, commendeth unto God the religious care he had for the ark. 8 His prayer at the removing of the ark, 11 with a repetition of God's promises.

[a]A song of degrees.

LORD, remember[b] David, and all his [c]afflictions: 2 How[d] he sware unto the LORD, and vowed unto [e]the mighty God of Jacob;

3 Surely I [g]will not come into the tabernacle of my house, nor go up into my bed;

4 I will not give sleep to mine eyes, or slumber to mine eyelids,

5 Until I find out [h]a place for the LORD, an habitation[1] for the mighty God of Jacob.

6 Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah:[2] we found it in the [3]fields of the wood.[4]

7 We[i] will go into his tabernacles: we will worship at his footstool.[5]

8 Arise,[j] O LORD, into thy rest; thou, and the ark of thy strength.

9 Let[k] thy priests be clothed with righteousness; and let thy saints shout for joy.

10 For[l] thy servant David's sake turn not away the face of thine anointed.

11 The[m] LORD hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; [o]Of the fruit of thy body[6] will I set upon thy throne.

12 If[p] thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for evermore.

13 For[q] the LORD hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation.

14 This[r] is my rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it.

15 I[s] will abundantly[7] bless her provision; [t]I will satisfy her poor with bread:

16 I[u] will also clothe her priests with salvation; and her saints shall shout aloud for joy.

17 There[v] will I make the horn of David to bud: I have ordained a lamp[8] for mine anointed.

18 His[x] enemies will I clothe with shame: but [y]upon himself shall his crown flourish.

PSALM CXXXIII.

The blessedness of unity among brethren.

[a]A song of degrees of David.

BEHOLD, how[b] good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity![1]

2 It is like the [c]precious ointment[2] upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard; that went down to the [3]skirts of his garments;

3 As the dew of [d]Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of [4]Zion: for [e]there the LORD commanded the blessing, even life for evermore.

PSALM CXXXIV.

An exhortation to God's servants to bless God.

[a]A song of degrees.

BEHOLD, bless[b] ye the LORD, all ye servants of the LORD, which by [c]night[1] stand in the house of the LORD.

4 The meaning of ver. 5, 6 is very obscure. Probably it is as follows:—The ark of the Lord was at a distance from the royal residence. When, therefore, it had been deposited in a house near Kirjath-jearim (whether it remained there stationary, or was occasionally carried about, does not appear), eventually David prepared a splendid tabernacle on Mount Zion for it, and when he had completed the tabernacle he sent to bring the ark. The event is celebrated in this passage. The messengers sent to bring it, heard of it at Ephratah—not Bethlehem, but some other place of that name near Kirjath-jearim. The last clause of ver. 6 may be rendered, "We found it in the fields of Jearim," i.e. in a house within the territory of Jearim, though outside the town.—C.

Israel into apostasy, as Midian, Nu. 25. 1, 3, and afterwards Antiochus, severally attempted—nor have they prevailed to extirpate the nation, as Haman sought, and several Gentile nations have since endeavoured. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In every age the seed of the serpent has raged in enmity against Jesus Christ and his church. There is no going honourably to heaven but through great tribulation. But let the wicked lay their plots, and execute them as they will, God will deliver all who accept Christ; and unbelievers shall plunge themselves at last into the most dreadful disappointment and ruin. The curse of God shall blast them, with all their schemes and attempts.

---

PSALM CXXX. Ver. 1. On comparing this verse with Ps. 40. 1, 2, &c., there can be no doubt of their parallelism: but that Ps. xl. is spoken in the person of Christ, is settled by the quotation, He. 10. 5, whence it follows that in this psalm the speaker also is Messiah. C.

Ver. 3. If thou shouldst mark down sins indelibly, instead of cleansing them away in the blood of the Lamb, who would dare to appear before thee under such innumerable and condemning stains? C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the most fearful manner God often corrects his own children in their way to his kingdom. But while there is a praying heart within them, and a prayer-hearing God above them, there is no ground of despair. Sense of guilt is the first thing that strikes the mind of a convinced sinner; and did not God manifest his forgiving mercy, it would drive him to despair. But the faith of God's forgiving our sins, for Christ's sake, destirs a holy awe of, regard to, and earnest waiting for him. And the more we taste of God's forgiving and redeeming goodness, the more shall we encourage others to flee to him, and hope in him, in the time of great guilt and trouble. And not only is God ready to, but he certainly will, accomplish the perfect redemption of all his people from sin and all its consequences.

PSALM CXXXI. Ver. 1. My heart is not haughty. The true description of him who said, 'Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden,' 'learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls,' Mat. 11. 28, 29. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Humility is the ornament of every station. A child-like spirit, meek and weaned from the things of this world, is a good symptom of a gracious heart. But to wade out of our depth, either in religion, learning, or power, is dangerous. And proud looks show a proud heart. If we are in trouble, let us patiently hope and wait till God bring us out of it. They who hope in Jesus Christ, and wait for his salvation, shall partake of it in time and in eternity.

PSALM CXXXII. Ver. 1. (1) Some suppose this psalm was written on occasion of bringing the ark from Baale, 2 Sa. vi. (2) Others, from comp. ver. 8, 9 with 2 Ch. 6. 41, 42, suppose it written by Solomon for the dedication of the temple. (3) While A. Clarke supposes it written for the dedication of the second temple. On the first of these suppositions, it is impossible to reconcile ver. 9–5 with the history in 2 Sa. 6. 9–15. And as to the second and third, neither can be reconciled with ver. 18, in which David is presented alive; whereas, at the dedication of the first temple he was ten or eleven years dead. Are we not, therefore, to understand by 'David and his afflictions,' the beloved Son of God and his sufferings? with his covenant obligations not to enter into his rest until he had found, in the heart of every believer, a residence for the Father and the Son? Jn. 14. 23. C.

Ver. 6. We heard of it. That is, of a place for the Lord—at Ephratah; that is, Bethlehem Ephratah, where the prophet foretold that Jesus (the true and living temple) should be born, Mi. 5. 2; Mat. 2. 6.—Fields of the wood. Synonymous with Ephratah—an obscure village, situated in the midst of woods. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the mercy to have fervent prayers of our own, or of our ancestors, lying before God's throne of grace. They shall receive a gracious answer at last. Lively and zealous saints can never be at ease till the ordinances of God be regularly and honourably settled, and his presence vouchsafed, to the comfort and edification of both ministers and people. However meanly the ark of God, or even Jesus Christ himself, reside for a time, its dwelling shall at last, and for ever, be glorious. Multitudes shall flock to it; and great fellowship with God shall be there enjoyed. Happy was David's family and kingdom on Christ's account: but infinitely happier in this is the family and church of God. In virtue of JEHOVAH's new covenant with him, his people are blessed with his presence, and with spiritual dignity, provision, salvation, and joy; while Jesus himself triumphs in everlasting honours, and unbelievers are reduced to disappointment, misery, and shame.

---

PSALM CXXXIII. REFLECTIONS.—Scarcely anything more ruinous hath befallen the church of God than the manifold divisions, disputes, and animosities of her members. Since God's children have one Father, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, they ought to have one heart and mind; to be united in the same worship, and affectionate in their regards to bearing with, forbearing, and forgiving one another; and only jealous who shall show the most abundant meekness, charity, and kindness to each other: this would mark them as anointed by the Spirit of Christ; would be refreshing and fructifying to their hearts and lives; and prepare them for the eternal life and blessedness above.

PSALM CXXXIV. REFLECTIONS.—How constant and active ought ministers to be in their service

2 Lift[e] up your hands in the sanctuary,[2] and bless the LORD.

3 The LORD, that made heaven and earth, bless[d] thee out of Zion.

PSALM CXXXV.

1 An exhortation to God's servants to praise him for his goodness, 6 for his power, 8 for his judgments. 15 The vanity of idols. 19 An exhortation to bless God.

PRAISE ye[a] the LORD. Praise ye the name[b] of the LORD; praise him, O ye servants of the LORD.

2 Ye that [b]stand in the house of the LORD, in the courts of the house of our God,

3 Praise[c] the LORD; for the LORD is good: sing praises unto his name; [d]for it is pleasant.

4 For[e] the LORD hath chosen Jacob[2] unto himself, and Israel[3] for his peculiar treasure.

5 For I know that [g]the LORD is great, and that our LORD is above all gods.

6 Whatsoever[h] the LORD pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places.[4]

7 He[i] causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; he maketh lightnings for the rain; he bringeth the wind out of his treasuries.

8 Who[j] smote the first-born of Egypt, both of man and beast.[5]

9 Who[k] sent tokens and wonders into the midst of thee, O Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his servants.

10 Who[l] smote great nations, and slew mighty kings;

11 Sihon king of the Amorites, and Og king of Bashan, and all the kingdoms of Canaan:

12 And gave their land for an [6]heritage, [7]an heritage unto Israel his people.

13 Thy[o] name, O LORD, endureth for ever; and thy memorial, O LORD, throughout all generations.[7]

14 For[p] the LORD will judge his people; and he will repent himself concerning his servants.[8]

15 The[q] idols of the heathen are silver and gold, the work of men's hands.

16 They have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not;

17 They have ears, but they hear not; neither is there any breath in their mouths.

18 They[r] that make them are like unto them: so is every one that trusteth in them.

An exhortation to give thanks to God for his mercies particularly enumerated.

O GIVE [a]thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.[1]

2 O give thanks unto the [b]God of gods:[2] for his mercy endureth for ever.

3 O give thanks unto the [c]LORD of lords: for his mercy endureth for ever.

7 To[h] him that made great lights: for his mercy endureth for ever:

8 The sun[4] to rule by day: for his mercy endureth for ever:

9 The moon and stars to rule by night: for his mercy endureth for ever.

10 To[i] him that smote Egypt in their first-born:[5] for his mercy endureth for ever:

of Christ and his church! how remarkably given to prayer and praise! And the more men wait upon God, the more they shall find the blessedness of his service. But it is only as enthroned in Zion, in his temple, in Christ, and his church, that God bestows his salvation.

PSALM CXXXV. Ver. 2, Those 'that stand in the house of the Lord' are the priests and Levites in office: those that 'stand in the courts' represent worshippers not in office.—Note. It is not visible office, but inward worship, that constitutes nearness to God. C.

Ver. 7. He causeth the vapours, &c. To the vaporization of water by heat, and its solution in the atmosphere, the earth and its inhabitants are indebted for the innumerable blessings derived from the clouds. The amount of vaporization is truly astonishing. The sacred Jordan flows into the Dead Sea—the mighty Wolga into the Caspian—the Atlantic flows into the Mediterranean—so does the Euxine with all its tributaries—so does the Nile, and so do many rivers from Asia Minor—yet none of these seas has any outlets, all their waters are vaporized, and carried in clouds either to veil or irrigate the most distant lands.—He maketh lightnings, &c. To restore the clouds to the state of water, electricity or lightning is necessary; and what philosophical observation has thus seemed to discover in modern times, Scripture has long since expressly revealed. C.

Ver. 18. Are like unto them. As blind intellectually as the idols are naturally; and as deaf to the voice that speaks to reason and conscience, as they to the voice that addresses the outward ear. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The people of God should be always exercised in the most solid, extensive, and lasting joys. Everything in God's purpose, promise, nature, and works is a delightful ground thereof. And the more he is to us, or does for us, and the more we are related to him, or trust in him, the more we ought to abound in his praise. Our view of the base and insignificant idols of others, and of the stupidity of their votaries, should stir us up the more to trust in, admire, and praise our God of unbounded perfection.

PSALM CXXXVI. Ver. 1. 'For his tender mercy is to the coming age;' which includes not merely the history of mercy in past deliverances and present blessings, but the (then) future mercies in the expected coming of Messiah, and the (now) future mercies and glories of his coming again 'the second time without sin to salvation.' C.

Ver. 4. Great wonders. Miracles, as in Egypt—at the Red Sea—and in the wilderness, where he fed his people with bread from heaven. C.

Ver. 25. When the extent of animal life is examined, and the amount of food for its support calculated—and when the living God, not unintelligent nature, is considered as the giver both of life and food, then will this verse suggest a most prolific source of praise. But when the sight is carried beyond the 'bread that perisheth,' to that which 'endures to eternal life; and when

21 And[r] gave their land[s] for an heritage: for his mercy endureth for ever:
22 Even an heritage unto Israel his servant:
for his mercy endureth for ever.
23 Who[t] remembered us in our low estate:
for his mercy endureth for ever:
24 And hath redeemed us from our enemies:
for his mercy endureth for ever.
25 Who[t] giveth food to all flesh: for his mercy endureth for ever.
26 O [u]give thanks unto the God of heaven:
for his mercy endureth for ever.

PSALM CXXXVII.

1 The constancy of the Jews in captivity. 7 The prophet curseth Edom and Babel.

BY the[a] rivers of Babylon, there we [b]sat down;
yea, we wept when [c]we remembered Zion.[1] 2 We[d] hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof.
3 For[e] there they that carried us away captive required of us a song;[2] and they that wasted us[3] required of us mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion.
4 How[g] shall we sing the LORD's song in a strange land?[4]
5 If[h] I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning.
6 If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; [i]if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.[5]
7 Remember, O LORD, [k]the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem; who said, Rase[6] it, rase it, even to the foundation thereof.
8 O daughter[7] of Babylon, [l]who art to be destroyed;[8] happy shall he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us.[9]
9 Happy shall he be that taketh and [m]dasheth thy little ones against the stones.[1]

PSALM CXXXVIII.

1 David praiseth God for the truth of his word. 4 He prophesieth that the kings of the earth shall praise God. 7 He professeth his confidence in God.

A psalm of David.

I WILL praise[a] thee with my whole heart:
before[b] the gods will I sing praise unto thee.
2 I[c] will worship toward thy holy temple, and[d] praise thy name for thy loving-kindness and for thy truth: for [e]thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name.
3 In[g] the day when I cried thou answeredst me, and [h]strengthenedst me with strength in my soul.
4 All[i] the kings of the earth shall praise thee, O LORD, when they hear the words of thy mouth.[1]
5 Yea, they shall sing in the ways of the LORD: for [j]great is the glory of the LORD.
6 Though[k] the LORD be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off.[2]
7 Though I walk in the midst of [l]trouble, thou wilt revive me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hand against the wrath of mine enemies, and thy right hand shall save me.
8 The[n] LORD will perfect that which con-cerneth me:[3] thy[o] mercy, O LORD, endureth for ever: [p]forsake not the works of thine own hands.

PSALM CXXXIX.

1 David praiseth God for his all-seeing providence, 17 and for his infinite mercies. 19 He defieth the wicked. 23 He prayeth for sincerity.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

O LORD, thou[a] hast searched me, and known me.
2 Thou knowest my [b]down-sitting, and mine up-rising; [c]thou understandest my thought afar off.[1]
3 Thou compassest[2] my path, and my lying down, and art [d]acquainted with all my ways.
4 For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O LORD, [e]thou knowest it altogether.
5 Thou[g] hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.
6 Such[h] knowledge is too wonderful for me;
it is high, I cannot attain[3] unto it.
7 Whither[i] shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?
8 If[j] I ascend up into heaven, thou art there:
if I make my bed in hell,[4] behold,[k] thou art
there.
9 If I take the wings of the morning,[5] and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;
10 Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.
11 If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; [l]even the night shall be light about me.
12 Yea, the darkness [m]hideth[6] not from thee;
but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike[7] to thee.

* This psalm relates to the omnipresence of God, and contains such reflections as would recur to one meditating on that attribute of Deity. It is the most distinct and full statement of that doctrine which is to be found in the Hebrew Scriptures, and the doctrine is presented in language which has never been surpassed for sublimity and beauty. The leading idea in the psalm seems to be that of comfort from the fact that God is everywhere; that he knows all that pertains to us; that we can never be hidden from his view; that he has known us from the beginning; that as he fashioned and formed us in making us what we are—he knows all our necessities and can supply them (Barnes).—P.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how averse are mankind to the infinitely reasonable and delightful duty of praise and thanksgiving! They need repeated calls to it, even after it has been attended with remarkable blessings. God's mercy and goodness delightfully fill his nature and works, the most awful and tremendous not excepted. And stupid and careless observers must they be of creatures and events, who do not everywhere perceive the manifold and everlasting mercy and kindness of God. Past mercies ought never to be forgotten, nor present ones overlooked; and all should issue in repeated returns of grateful praise

PSALM CXXXVII. Ver. 1. The chief rivers of the Babylonian empire were, the united Euphrates and Tigris, which, dividing into several branches, form many rivers. See Eze. 1. 1; Da. 8. 2. Of the united Euphrates and Tigris, and the canals traversing the city to water its palaces, parks, and gardens, the psalm evidently seems to speak. C.

Ver. 2. Babylon was a square sixty miles in circuit; its streets fifteen miles in length. There will, therefore, be no difficulty in imagining how in so many squares as the city afforded, there would be a profusion of willows for the harps of the melancholy exiles. C.

Ver. 3. Want of sympathy with the feelings of others is one of the commonest forms of human selfishness—of human sinfulness. C.

Ver. 9. Happy. This implies no praise of deeds of horror, but the honour due to the judge who pronounces sentence against an incorrigible criminal. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The sins of God's people often reduce them to great misery on earth. They are often taught the worth of ordinances by the want of them: and their temple songs are turned into howlings and grief. But cruel are the tender mercies of the wicked to God's suffering saints. And it is base and blasphemous to insult them with their worshipping of God. Sacred songs ill suit the call or company of profane scuffers. That which is holy ought not to be given to dogs, nor pearls cast before swine. The interest of Jesus' church and kingdom must ever be dearer to us than our life: and if duty be once clear, nothing must deter us from it. Not selfish desire, but holy zeal, must dictate our requests for the blessings of God on the church. Malicious and inhuman is all wickedness, and tremendous and correspondent is the punishment of it!

13 For [c]thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb.

14 I will praise thee; for [f]I am fearfully and wonderfully made: [g]marvellous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well.[8]

15 My[r] substance[9] was not hid from thee, when I was made in [s]secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth.[1]

16 Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all[2] my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned,[3] when[t] as yet there was none of them.[4]

17 How[u] precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them!

18 If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: [v]when I awake, I am still with thee.

19 Surely[x] thou wilt slay the wicked, O God: depart[y] from me therefore, ye bloody men.

20 For[z] they speak against thee wickedly, and thine enemies take thy name in vain.

21 Do[a] not I hate[5] them, O LORD, that hate thee? and am not I grieved with those that rise up against thee?

22 I hate them with perfect hatred; I count them mine enemies.

23 Search[b] me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts;

24 And[c] see if there be any [6]wicked way[7] in me, and lead me in [d]the way everlasting.

PSALM CXL.

1 David prayeth to be delivered from the mischief of his enemies. 6 He prayeth against them. 12 He comforteth himself by confidence in God.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

DELIVER me,[a] O LORD, from the evil man: preserve me from the violent man;[1]

2 Which[b] imagine mischiefs in their heart: continually are they gathered together for war.

3 They[c] have sharpened their tongues like a serpent: [d]adders' poison is under their lips. Selah.

4 Keep[d] me, O LORD, from the hands of the wicked; preserve me from the violent man, who have purposed to overthrow my goings.

5 The[e] proud have hid a snare for me, and cords; they have spread a net by the way-side; they have set gins for me. Selah.[2]

6 I[g] said unto the LORD, Thou art my God: hear the voice of my supplications, O LORD.

7 O GOD the Lord, [h]the strength of my salvation, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle.[3]

8 Grant[i] not, O LORD, the desires of the wicked: further not his wicked device,[4] lest they exalt themselves. Selah.

9 As[k] for the head of those that compass me about, let the mischief of their own lips cover them.[5]

10 Let[k] burning coals fall upon them: let them be cast into the fire; into [l]deep pits, that they rise not up again.[6]

11 Let not [7]an evil-speaker[8] be established in the earth: evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him.[9]

12 I know [n]that the LORD will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor.

13 Surely the [o]righteous shall give thanks unto thy name: the upright shall [p]dwell in thy presence.

PSALM CXLI.

1 David prayeth that his suit may be acceptable, 3 his conscience free from guilt, 7 and his life safe from the snares of the wicked.

A psalm of David.

LORD, I[a] cry unto thee: make haste unto [1]me; give ear unto my voice, when I cry unto thee.

2 Let my prayer be set forth[2] before thee [b]as incense; [c]and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice.

PSALM CXXXVIII. Ver. 1. When it is considered (1) That the speaker is one: (2) That he promises unreservedly his whole heart: and (3) That these words are a distinct parallel to Ps. 18. 49; Ro. 15. 9, then there can remain little question that the speaker is Christ.—C.

Ver. 2. Magnified thy word. Thy word of promise, in its actual fulfilment, has magnified thee beyond all that thy name had led thy people to expect. See notes on Ex. 34. 5; Ps. 8. 1.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—The greatest on earth need not be ashamed of the public and regular worship of God. And the more he manifests his loving-kindness and faithfulness in the fulfilment of his word to us, the more high and hearty ought to be our notes of praise. If we trust to his truth, he will display every perfection, and make every creature to work together for the glorious accomplishment of his word. If we flee to God in prayer, he will not leave us destitute. And if he, by our afflictions, strengthen us inwardly in our souls, we are great gainers. The cheerful behaviour of saints in the ways of God engages their neighbours to join with them in it. And the more humble men are, the more God regards and exalts them. And nothing is more detestable to him than indulged pride. Whatever trouble God casts his people into, he will protect and preserve them in it. And the good works of grace or salvation which he begins, he will perfect at last. He will never leave nor forsake his own. Let us then trust in him at all times, and pour out our hearts before him.

---

PSALM CXXXIX. Ver. 1. The speaker is one throughout the whole psalm—one still with God, ver. 18—one who drives far from him all 'bloody men,' ver. 19, who hates them with 'perfect hatred;' and who, so far from shrinking from the eye of omniscience, boldly requests to be both 'searched' and 'tried.' Let any one read and study these characteristics, and say, Is not this the Christ?—C.

Ver. 2. Afar off. 'of old,' that date described, Pr. 8. 22–31: from 'before God's works of old—from everlasting—from the beginning—before the earth was.'—C.

Ver. 7. Spirit, when contrasted with presence, literally faces, means the Holy Spirit, Jn. 14. 16, 17, 26. This passage asserts, in the strongest manner, the omnipresence of the Spirit: but whoever is omnipresent must be God.—C.

Ver. 12. That darkness to one creature is light to another is beyond question. This consideration may help our infirmity in discerning how much more to the Creator darkness must be as light—for 'God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.'—C.

Ver. 13. Reins. The kidneys—called the reins, from the governing and guiding power which the Hebrews attributed to them in the animal and mental economy—were primary parts of the inwards, offered in sacrifice to God. See Le. 3. 4, 10, 15. To 'possess the reins,' therefore, signifies to possess the whole internal powers, as a devoted sacrifice to the divine majesty.—C.

Ver. 24. Lead me, &c. Lead me 'in the old way' in which believers have worshipped thee, in spirit and in truth, since the beginning.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the faith of these things let me always live, and always act, whether in religious or in civil affairs, under the deepest impressions of God's eyes upon me, his perfect knowledge of my heart, my thoughts, and deeds; of his all-filling presence ever with me, to witness, support, or comfort me; of his marvellous formation of me in nature and grace; of his new-covenant marriage to me, and his everlasting redemption of my soul. Let my whole life, night and day, be filled up with precious, fixed, and delightful thoughts concerning these things, and with holy improvements of them. Let me never make the Lord's enemies my intimates. They who hate God hate his name and image wherever it appears. Let me therefore hate the ways of sinners, while I have true love and pity to their souls. And let a thorough cleansing from sin, and progress in holiness, be the earnest desire and ineffable delight of my soul.

PSALM CXL. Ver. 1. 'Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?' Ac. 8. 34. Let the prayerful inquirer consult Ps. xl., interpreted by He. 10. 5; then compare Ps. 2. 4, interpreted by Ac. 4. 26, with Ps. 59. 8, and consider its prayer for deliverance, compared with the similar prayer of this psalm, see also Ps. xliii. lv. lxiv. lxxi.—and the parallelism, nay the identity of the descriptions and petitions must point to Messiah in the days of his flesh, as the speaker in this psalm. The chief object of the prayer is deliverance from Judas and his employers, the high-priest and Pharisees, and from Antichrist, that wicked one, 2 Th. 2. 8, and his persecuting followers in apostate Babylon.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold, as in a glass, how maliciously Jesus Christ was reproached and persecuted; how he gave himself to prayer on account of it; and how the judgment of God overtook his Jewish murderers and persecutors! Let us likewise observe, that sin turns men into a kind of devils, in deceit, malice, and diligence in evil, and in inveterate opposition to the people of God. But the saints may attain, even amidst their troubles, to the most pleasant prayers and praises; for God terribly resents the injuries done to his people; and kindly will he maintain their cause, and for their protection afford them his presence.

PSALM CXLI. REFLECTIONS.—A deep sense of 3 Set[a] a watch, O LORD, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips.

4 Incline[e] not my heart to any evil thing, to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity: [g]and let me not eat of their dainties.[3]

5 [h]Let[4] the righteous smite me;[5] it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head: for [i]yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities.

6 When[j] their judges are overthrown in stony places, they shall hear my words; [k]for they are sweet.

7 Our[l] bones are scattered at the grave's mouth,[6] as when one cutteth and cleaveth wood upon the earth.

8 But[n] mine eyes are unto thee, O GOD the Lord: in thee is my trust; leave not my soul destitute.[7]

9 Keep me from the [o]snares which they have laid for me, and the gins of the workers of iniquity.

10 Let[p] the wicked fall into their own nets, whilst that I withal escape.[8]

PSALM CXLII.

David showeth that in his trouble all his comfort was in prayer unto God.

Maschil of David;[1] A prayer when he was [a]in the cave.

I CRIED unto[b] the LORD with my voice; with my voice unto the LORD did I make my supplication.

2 I[c] poured out my complaint before him; I showed before him my trouble.

3 When[d] my spirit was overwhelmed within me, then thou knewest my path: in the way wherein I walked [e]have they privily laid a snare for me.

4 I looked on my right hand, and beheld,[2] but[g] there was no man that would know me: refuge failed me;[3] no man cared for my soul.[4]

5 I[h] cried[5] unto thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my refuge and [i]my portion in the land of the living.

6 Attend unto my cry; for [j]I am brought very low: [k]deliver me from my persecutors; for they are stronger than I.

7 Bring[l] my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: [n]the righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt [o]deal bountifully with me.

PSALM CXLIII.

1 David prayeth for favour in judgment. 3 He complaineth of his griefs. 5 He strengtheneth his faith by meditation and prayer. 7 He prayeth for grace, 9 for deliverance, 10 for sanctification, 12 and for the destruction of his enemies.

A psalm of David.

HEAR my[a] prayer, O LORD; give ear to my supplications: [b]in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness.[1]

2 And[c] enter not into judgment with thy servant: for [d]in thy sight shall no man living be justified.

3 For[e] the enemy hath persecuted my soul; he hath smitten my life down to the ground; he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

4 Therefore[g] is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate.

5 I[h] remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands.

6 I [i]stretch forth my hands unto thee: [j]my soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. [2]Selah.

7 Hear[k] me speedily, O LORD; my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, lest I be like[8] unto them that go down into the pit.

8 Cause[l] me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning; [4] for in thee do I trust: [n]cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; [o]for I lift up my soul unto thee.

9 Deliver[p] me, O LORD, from mine enemies: [q]I flee unto thee to hide me.[5]

10 Teach[r] me to do thy will; for thou art my God: [s]thy Spirit is good, lead me into the [t]land of uprightness.

11 Quicken[u] me, O LORD, for thy name's sake: [x]for thy righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble.

12 And[z] of thy mercy cut off mine [6]enemies, need will make us importunate in prayer for speedy help, gracious acceptance, direction, preservation, and merciful restraints. Faithful and Christian reproof is a necessary and kind office of friendship. And to love reproof, and be thankful for it, is one of the surest symptoms of a gracious heart. But that reproof will be most effectual which comes from those whose unsuspected piety gives weight to their words, and whose tender manner of applying it renders it soft and penetrating. For men to pray to be put right, and yet to be displeased with rebuke for what is wrong, is base dissimulation. Often people never regard God's candidates for the magistracy or ministry, till their own be destroyed or shamefully disgraced. But let the case of the church or saints be ever so deplorable, fervent prayers will soon render it hopeful. And if our eyes be fixed on God, our feet shall not slip. But the destruction of the wicked is determined, and their devices to hurt others shall but hasten their own wretchedness.

PSALM CXLII. Ver. 1. This is a specimen of those 'prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears,' which Christ offered up 'in the days of his flesh' to 'Him that was able to save him, and was heard in that he feared,' He. 5. 7. If any desire more evidence of Christ speaking in these words, let them examine Ps. xvi. xxii. xxxiv. lxix., which various quotations in the New Testament have, by the Spirit, interpreted of him; and their parallelism with this psalm must equally assign it to Messiah. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Sore troubles ought to produce fervent prayers. They who have the God of all grace to flee to, may safely leave in his hand all their troubles. And when our consciences condemn us not, then have we confidence before him. We can never be brought so low but God can help us. If men forsake or disregard us, God, as our refuge and portion, will more than balance our want. If we are even fettered in the bands of corruption, temptation, or trouble, he can deliver us. And the mercies which our brethren enjoy should excite our praises, as members of the same body.

PSALM CXLIII. Ver. 2. Christ was not justified, that is, judged in the flesh, and legally pronounced righteous as a living man; but 'he was delivered (that is, to death) for our offences, and raised for our justification,' Ro. 4. 25, being 'put to death in the flesh, and quickened by the Spirit,' 1 Pe. 3. 18: and as Paul expresses it, 'God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit,' 1 Ti. 3. 16. C.

Ver. 10. Teach me. Let it never be forgot, that the Word that was truly God, became as truly flesh; and that Jesus, 'though a Son, learned obedience by the things that he suffered,' He. 5. 8. C.

Ver. 11. Quicken me—'God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, hath quickened us together with Christ,' Ep. 2. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.—If ever we hope for God's acceptance of us, it must not be for anything in us, but purely of grace, for his dear Son's sake, according to the promises of his Word. The most righteous cannot bear the severity of God's justice. They who best know their own hearts will ever be the first to condemn themselves, and to cry for mercy at God's hand. And they who plead guilty before the law, and flee to the grace of the gospel in Christ, shall be justified from all things. When our distress is greatest, God's power and grace shall be the more magnified in our deliverance. Though it be hard to exercise courageous faith under sore troubles, yet remembrance of God's kindness, to ourselves or others, in former times, is very encouraging. And they who thirst for his presence, favour, and love, shall never be sent away empty from his throne of grace; whatever manifestations of mercy, direction, instruction, deliverance, guidance, quickenand destroy all them that afflict my soul: [v]for I am thy servant.

1 This psalm is mainly a compilation made, probably by the author himself, from portions of other psalms, and arranged in one complete form for some special purpose. The principal portions of it are found in Ps. 18. 8; xxxiii. xcv. The general burden is a prayer to Jehovah for help and deliverance in prospect of some impending danger. It is the song of a warrior; but of one who feels that his courage, his skill, and his physical strength must be sustained by God.—P.

PSALM CXLV.

1 David praiseth God for his fame, 8 for his goodness, 11 for his kingdom, 14 for his providence, 17 and for his saving mercy.

[a]David's psalm of praise.[1]

I WILL [b]extol thee, my God, O King; and I will bless thy name[2] for ever and ever.

2 Every day will I bless thee; and I will praise thy name for ever and ever.

3 Great[c] is the LORD, and greatly to be praised; and his greatness is unsearchable.[3]

4 One[d] generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts.

5 I will speak of the glorious honour of thy majesty, and of thy wondrous works.[4]

6 And men shall speak of the might of thy terrible acts; and I will declare[5] thy greatness.

7 They shall abundantly utter[6] the memory of thy great goodness, and shall sing of thy righteousness.

8 The[e] LORD is gracious, and full of compassion; slow to anger, and of great mercy.[7]

9 The[g] LORD is good to all;[8] and his tender mercies are over all his works.[9]

10 All [h]thy works shall praise thee, O LORD; and thy saints shall bless thee.

11 They[i] shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power;

12 To make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom.

13 Thy[j] kingdom is an everlasting [l]kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations.

14 The[k] LORD upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up all those that be bowed down.

15 The[l] eyes of all wait upon thee;[2] and thou givest them their meat in due season.

16 Thou[m] openest thine hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing.

17 The[o] LORD is righteous in all his ways, and holy[3] in all his works.

18 The[p] LORD is nigh unto all them that call upon him,[4] to all that [q]call upon him in truth.

19 He[r] will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear their cry, and will save them.

ing for themselves, and destruction of enemies, they may ask.

PSALM CXLIV. Ver. 1. Teacheth my hands to war—'a good warfare,' 1 Ti. 1. 18, grasping and wielding 'the sword of the Spirit,' Ep. 6. 17; and my fingers to 'fight the good fight of faith,' 1 Ti. 6. 12, directing the arrows of truth to the hearts of the King's enemies, Ps. 45. 5. C.

Ver. 3. On comparing this verse with Ps. 8. 4 and He. 2. 6–9, it will appear that the speaker is Messiah, made a little—rather, for a little—lower than the angels; that for his obedience unto death he might be crowned with glory and honour. C.

Ver. 5. The Lord literally descended upon Mount Sinai, taking upon earth a local habitation, that he might manifest his visible glory, Ex. 19. 18. Here he is represented as causing the heavens to bow to the earth, not in a mere figure, but in a reality—when he shall be 'revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ,' 2 Th. 1. 8. C.

Ver. 11. A right hand of falsehood. False to every engagement, however solemnly ratified; obliterating their baptism by infidelity, and, in the Lord's supper, eating and drinking to their own condemnation. C.
