37 Behold, [f]I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to [h]dwell safely:[6]

38 And[i] they shall be my people, and I will be their God;

39 And I will [j]give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever,[7] for[k] the good of them, and of their children after them:

40 And I will make an [l]everlasting [8]covenant with them, that [m]I will not turn away [9]from them to do them good; but [o]I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me.

41 Yea, [p]I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I [q]will plant them in this land assuredly[1] with my whole heart, and with my whole soul.

42 For thus saith the LORD, [r]Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, [s]so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them.[2]

43 And [t]fields shall be bought in this land, whereof [u]ye say, It is desolate[3] without man or beast; it is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

44 Men[v] shall buy fields for money, and subscribe evidences, and seal them, and take witnesses [x]in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, and in the cities of the south: [y]for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

1 God promiseth to the captivity a gracious return, 9 a joyful state, 12 a settled government, 15 Christ the Branch of righteousness, 17 a continuance of kingdom and priesthood, 19 and a stability of a blessed seed.

MOREOVER, the[a] word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the second time, while he was yet [b]shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

2 Thus saith [c]the LORD, the Maker[1] thereof,

[1] This safety the Jews did not enjoy after the return from the Babylonish captivity, but were continuously distressed by the Persians, Egyptians, Macedonians, and finally destroyed by the Romans; the fulfilment of the prophecy therefore, future; the partial restoration under Zerubbabel being a mere shadow of the complete restoration yet to come.—C.

[2] Ver. 10. One kind of money was in uncoined gold or silver ingots, another in thin rolls that could be easily cut, and both required to be weighed. But there is no reason to conclude that all Jewish money was, at this period, uncoined; for the arts had long ago made great progress in the East. The weighing is rather indicative of a period of fraudulence which required constant watchfulness against minute deductions from the value of the coin. C.

[3] Ver. 27. Is there any event beyond my power? Did I not give this land to Israel? Can I not convey it to the Chaldeans? And, when the fulness of the time is come, can I not restore it again to my renewed people? C.

[4] Ver. 32. Jerusalem. Jerusalem, though belonging partly to the tribe of Judah, and partly to the tribe of Benjamin, was a city common to all the tribes, and might therefore represent the common character of the whole people, particularly those classes by whom the nation was governed—the rulers, the prophets, priests, lawyers, and merchants. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How obstinately men persist in persecution, and other wickedness, even when the Lord is punishing them for it! No afflictions can drag men from their lusts. By what strange tokens God confirms his own oracles! An exact honesty, prudent discretion, and a firm dependence on the promise and providence of God, ought to meet together in all our civil transactions.—The more honourable views we have of God and his mercies, the more humble and penitent will be our views of our own and others' rebellion against him. And the former experiences of God's people ought to encourage us, even when his providence seems to contradict his promises. When we have God's orders, we have nothing to do but obey, and trust him with the issue. And if we are in the dark concerning his dispensations, we may humbly beg his instructions. No crimes are too horrid for apostate professors to commit, and no judgments too severe to punish them. Deep carnal security ordinarily ends in deep despair; but blessed mornings of deliverance, conversion, and reformation frequently succeed long and dark nights of trouble. And unchangeable is their flourishing of God's church.—How delightful is it to have JEHOVAH rejoicing over us to do us good! And no wonder sin against him be bitterness in its latter end. But infinitely gracious is his covenant, and suited in form, in matter, in order, and in firmness, to our every need. And while all things in nature are pregnant with important instructions and comforts, it is holiness, connected with outward privileges, that renders them truly steadfast and durable.

CHAPTER XXXII. Ver. 3. Zedekiah king of Judah had shut him up. Zedekiah presents a melancholy, but common, example of anger against the messenger of unwelcome news, or the offerer of good advice. If, instead of treating him with harshness and cruelty, Zedekiah had asked for an evidence of his divine commission, Jeremiah could have easily satisfied him by referring to his prophecy against Pashur and his friends, ch. 20. 6, and that against Hananiah, ch. 28. 16, 17; both of which had received such evident fulfilment as to put the commission of the prophet beyond all dispute. C.

HOUSE OF ANANIAS, DAMASCUS—SITE OF THE HOUSE OF ANANIAS, WHO WAS DIRECTED TO INQUIRE FOR SAUL AT THE HOUSE OF JUDAS IN DAMASCUS. [Jeremiah, xxxiii:17, 18.]—"For thus saith the Lord, David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel; Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt offerings, and to kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifice continually." Reference is made to these verses by St. Paul in Romans, xii:1, and Romans, xv:16, and by Peter in I. Peter, ii:5, and by St John in Revelations, i:6. Jesus Christ was the man who was to set forever upon the throne of the house of Israel, and the ministers were to be the priests who were to offer burnt offerings and to kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifice continually. We give a picture of the house of Ananias in Damascus, said to stand upon the site of the house of Ananias, related to St. Paul at the time of his conversion. St. Paul was he leader of the living, everlasting Christain priesthood.

the LORD that formed it, to establish it; the LORD[2] is [d]his name;

3 Call[e] unto me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty[3] things, which thou knowest not.[4]

4 For thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning the houses of this city, and concerning the houses of the kings of Judah, which are thrown[g] down by the mounts,[5] and by the sword;[6]

5 They[h] come to fight with the Chaldeans, but it is to fill them with the dead bodies of men,[7] whom I have slain in mine anger, and in my fury, and for all whose wickedness [i]I have hid my face from this city.

6 Behold,[j] I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them,[8] and [k]will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth.

7 And[l] I will cause the captivity of Judah, and the captivity of Israel, to return, and [m]will build them as at the first.

8 And [n]I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me.

9 And [p]it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise[q] and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they [r]shall fear and tremble for all the goodness, and for all the prosperity, that I procure unto it.[9]

10 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, Again there shall be heard in this place, which [s]ye say shall be desolate without man and without beast, even in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, that are desolate without man, and without inhabitant, and without beast,[1]

11 The[t] voice of joy, and the voice of gladness; the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; the voice of them that shall say, [u]Praise the LORD of hosts: for the LORD is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: [v]and of them that shall bring the sacrifice of praise into the house of the LORD. For [z]I will cause to return the captivity of the land, as at the first,[2] saith the LORD.

12 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Again in this place, which is desolate[3] without man and without beast, and in all the cities thereof, shall[y] be an habitation of shepherds causing their flocks to lie down.

13 In[z] the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, shall the flocks [a]pass again under the hands of him that telleth them, saith the LORD.

14 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, [b]that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah.

15 ¶ In those days, and at that time, will I cause the [c]Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he [d]shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land.[4]

16 In those days [e]shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely: and [f]this is the name wherewith she shall be called, [g]The [h]LORD our Righteousness.[7]

17 ¶ For thus saith the LORD, David shall never [k]want[8] a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel;[9]

18 Neither [l]shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt-offerings, and to kindle meat-offerings, and to do sacrifice continually.[1]

19 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah, saying,

20 Thus saith the LORD, [m]If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season;

21 Then may also [n]my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers.

22 As[o] the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured; so [p]will I multiply the seed of David[2] my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me.

23 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah, saying,

24 Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, [q]The two families[3] which the LORD hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? [r]Thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them.

25 Thus saith the LORD; [s]If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth;

26 Then will I cast away [t]the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for [u]I will cause their captivity to return, [v]and have mercy on them.

state, stable and permanent their holiness and happiness, and cordial their harmony, who have God for their God, and the performer of all things in and for them.

CHAPTER XXXIII. Ver. 8. And I will cleanse. How wonderful! They shall be 'cleansed from all their iniquity,' by the very blood which their wicked fathers murderously shed: for it is 'the blood of Jesus,' and that alone, 'that cleanseth from all sin,' 1 Jn. 1. 7. 'O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!' Ro. 11. 33. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's power and goodness in creation and providence should encourage us to believe his promises; and fervent prayer is an excellent means of obtaining divine and marvellous instructions. Dreadful is the ruin procured by sin! but where sin abounded, grace can much more abound. Saving instructions and gracious forgiveness must introduce all other new-covenant favours. No case on this side hell is so deplorable but God's mercy can relieve from it. And the greater the salvation which he works, the more will he be glorified in it. Yea, all the abundant joys of his people, after their nights of grief, will tend to his praise. But it is Jesus Christ alone that is the substance of all divine favours, that communicates sweetness, value, and usefulness to them; and notwithstanding all opposition and contempt, his kingdom

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 Jeremiah prophesieth the captivity of Zedekiah and the city. 8 The princes and the people having dismissed their bond-servants, contrary to the covenant of God, afterward re-assume them. 12 Jeremiah, for their disobedience, giveth them and Zedekiah into the hands of their enemies.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, [a]when Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and all his army, and all the kingdoms of the earth of his dominion,[1] and all the people, fought against Jerusalem, and against all [b]the cities thereof, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, Go and speak to Zedekiah king of Judah, and tell him, Thus saith the LORD, [c]Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire.

3 And [d]thou shalt not escape[2] out of his hand, but shalt surely be taken, and delivered into his hand; and [e]thine eyes[3] shall behold the eyes of the king of Babylon, and he shall speak with thee mouth to mouth,[4] and thou shalt go to Babylon.

4 Yet hear the word of the LORD, O Zedekiah king of Judah; Thus saith the LORD of thee, Thou[f] shalt not die by the sword;

5 But thou shalt die in peace: and [g]with the burnings[5] of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so shall they burn odours for thee; and [h]they will lament thee, saying, Ah, lord! for I have pronounced the word, saith the LORD.

6 Then Jeremiah the prophet [i]spake all these words unto Zedekiah king of Judah in Jerusalem,

7 When the king of Babylon's army fought against[7] Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judah that were left, against [k]Lachish, and against Azekah: for [l]these defenced cities remained of the cities of Judah.

8 ¶ This is the word that came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, after that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people which were at Jerusalem, to proclaim [m]liberty unto them;

9 That every man should let his man-servant, and every man his maid-servant, being an Hebrew or an Hebrewess, go free; that none should [n]serve himself of them, to wit, of a Jew his[8] brother.

10 Now, when all the [o]princes, and all the people which had entered into the covenant, heard that every one should let his man-servant, and every one his maid-servant, go free, that none should serve themselves of them any more, then they obeyed,[6] and let them go.

11 But [p]afterward[7] they turned, and caused the servants and the handmaids, whom they had let go free, to return, and brought them into subjection for servants and for handmaids.

12 ¶ Therefore the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

13 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, I made a covenant with your fathers [q]in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying,

14 At[r] the end of seven years, let ye go every man his brother an Hebrew, which hath been sold[8] unto thee; and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee: but [s]your fathers hearkened not unto me, neither inclined their ear.

15 And [t]ye were now[9] turned, and had done right[1] in my sight, in proclaiming liberty every man to his neighbour: and [u]ye had made a covenant before me in the house which is called by my name:[2]

16 But ye turned, and [v]polluted[3] my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom he had set at liberty at their pleasure, to return, and brought them into [w]subjection, to be unto you for servants and for handmaids.

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty, every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbour: behold, [x]I proclaim a liberty[4] for you, saith the LORD, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you to be removed[5] into all the kingdoms of the earth.

18 And[b] I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they had made before me, when they [c]cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof,[6]

19 The[d] princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs,[7] and the priests, and all the people of the land, which passed between the parts of the calf;[8]

20 I will even give them into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life: and [e]their dead bodies shall be for meat unto the fowls of the heaven, and to the beasts of the earth.

21 And[g] Zedekiah king of Judah and his princes, will I give into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life, and into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which are [h]gone up from you.

22 Behold, [i]I will command, saith the LORD, and cause them to return to this city; [j]and they shall fight against it, and take it, and burn it with fire: and I will make the cities of Judah a desolation [k]without an inhabitant.

CHAPTER XXXV.

1 By the obedience of the Rechabites to their father's command, 12 Jeremiah condemneth the disobedience of the Jews. 18 God blesseth the Rechabites for their obedience.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, [a]in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,[1]

2 Go unto the house of the [b]Rechabites,[2] and speak unto them, and bring them [c]into the house of the LORD, into one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink.

3 Then [d]I took Jaazaniah the son of Jeremiah, the son of Habaziniah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites;

4 And I brought them into the house of the LORD, into the [e]chamber of the sons of [f]Hanan, the son of Igdaliah, a man of God, which was by [h]the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maaseiah, the son of Shallum, the [i]keeper of the door:[3]

5 And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine, and cups, and I said unto them, [j]Drink ye wine.[4]

6 But they said, We will drink no wine: for [k]Jonadab the son of Rechab, our father, commanded us, saying, [l]Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye nor your sons for ever:

7 Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any: but all your days ye shall dwell in tents; [m]that ye may live many days in the land where ye be [n]strangers.[5]

8 Thus have we [o]obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab, our father, in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters;

9 Nor to build houses for us to dwell in: neither[q] have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed:

10 But we have [r]dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us.[6]

11 But it came to pass, when [s]Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came up into the land, that we said, [t]Come, and let us go to Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians: so we dwell at Jerusalem.

12 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

13 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Go and tell the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, [u]Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words? saith the LORD.

14 The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment: notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early [v]and speaking; but ye hearkened not unto me.

15 I[x] have sent also unto you all my servants the [y]prophets, rising up early[7] and sending them, saying, [z]Return ye now every man[8] from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after other gods to serve them, and ye shall dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your fathers; but ye [a]have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto me.

16 Because the sons of Jonadab the son of Rechab have performed the commandment of their father, which he commanded them; [b]but this people hath not hearkened unto me:

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of hosts, the God of Israel, [c]Behold, I will bring upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, all the evil that I have pronounced against them: [d]because I have spoken unto them, but they have not heard; and I have called unto them, but they have not answered.

18 ¶ And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [e]Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you;

19 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, [g]Jonadab the son of Rechab shall [g]not want a man to stand before me for ever.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 Jeremiah causeth Baruch to write his prophecies, 5 and publicly to read them. 11 The princes, having intelligence thereof by Michaiah, send Jehudi to fetch the roll, and read it. They counsel Baruch to hide himself and Jeremiah. 20 The king, being certified thereof, heareth part of it, and burneth the roll. 27 Jeremiah denounceth his judgment. 32 Baruch writeth a new copy.

AND it came to pass, [a]in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that this word came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

2 Take[b] thee a roll[1] of a book, and write therein [c]all the words that I have spoken unto thee [d]against Israel, and against Judah,[2] and

1 All the prophecies from chap. xxi. belong to the reign of Zedekiah, and consequently posterior to this chapter and the following, which, together with ch. xlv., were delivered in the days of Jehoiakim. There is, however, no reason to conclude that the prophecies were not arranged with order and design. On the contrary they appear to be introduced here to enforce the prophecies against Zedekiah, who had no dread of captivity, for the recollection of the captivity of Jehoiakim, and the spoliation of the temple. The Rechabites were descended from the Kenites (1 Ch. 2.55); they were never considered strictly incorporated with the Jews (ver. 11), but were treated as friends and allies, 1 Sa.15.6. Their rules forbade architecture and husbandry, and confined them to pasturage and tents. They had now, however, fled to Jerusalem to avoid the depredations of the Chaldean army.—C.

7 The prompt office of a prophet, an apostle, a minister of the word, is to call upon 'all flesh,' upon 'every man,' every where to 'repent and believe the Gospel.' The comparison of the Temple never confined to a congregation or a single church: such limitation may be convenient, but is sadly narrow and sectarian. The commission of the Lord's ancient as well as servant to all churches, to every man he meets, to every fellow-subject, to every fellow-citizen, to every saint whom he is to comfort, to every sinner whom he is to reprove, and to invite to Jesus for pardon and salvation.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—God mixes his judgments here with mercy, even to the wicked. It is a great advantage for kings and others to have faithful ministers to tell them the fatal consequences of their sins, that they may repent and live. And it is well if captivity and imprisonment lead to true reformation. God's compassion towards us ought to influence our compassion towards our inferiors and neighbours. But reformations occasioned by fear and danger are seldom sincere and lasting. The most solemn vows will not long restrain them whose hearts are not right with God. But if his reprieves from judgment be abused, he will quickly proceed to execution. None ever hardened their hearts against him and prospered. And broken vows especially hasten his fearful judgments. If men will not subject themselves to his law, he must subject them to his wrath and curse. If judgments depart from us before we are humbled, they will return with redoubled force. And promising beginnings, to which the end does not correspond, only produce more aggravated guilt and surer destruction.

CHAPTER XXXV. Ver. 19. 'To stand before me' denotes attendance on the person and service of a prince, 1 Ki. 10. 8. And as it appears that some of the Rechabites, or Kenites, returned from the captivity, 1 Ch. 2. 55, it has been inferred that they were admitted into some office about the temple. All, however, that is necessarily implied in the phrase is the perpetuation of the family of Rechab. And of this fact there seems the most unquestionable evidence. Benjamin of Tudela professes to have found them in Arabia in great prosperity. Niebuhr obtained information of the Beni Kheiber inhabiting the mountains on the north-east of Medina, and holding no intercourse with the other Jews. And Joseph Wolf learned from Rabbi Mose Secot at Jerusalem, that, in his opinion, the Beni Kheiber were the Rechabites, who firmly adhere to the precepts of the son of Jonadab, have neither house, nor field, nor vineyard, and observe the law of Moses by tradition (Missionary Journal, 1824, p. 257, 267). C.

REFLECTIONS.—Never let us be ashamed of the honest employment of our ancestors, however mean against[e] all the nations, from the day I spake unto thee, from the days of Josiah,[3] even unto this day.[4]

3 It[g] may be[5] that the house of Judah will hear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way, that I may [h]forgive their iniquity and their sin.

4 Then Jeremiah called [i]Baruch the son of Neriah: and Baruch [j]wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the LORD, which he had spoken unto him, upon a [k]roll of a book.

5 And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying, I am shut up:[6] I cannot go into the house of the LORD:

6 Therefore go thou, and [m]read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the LORD, [n]in the ears of the people, in the LORD's house upon the [o]fasting day: and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that [p]come out of their cities.

7 It may be[7] they will present their supplication[8] before the LORD, and will return every one from his evil way: for [q]great is the anger and the fury that the LORD hath pronounced against this people.

8 And Baruch the son of Neriah [r]did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of the LORD in [s]the LORD's house.

9 And it came to pass, in the fifth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, in the ninth month, that they [t]proclaimed a fast before the LORD to all the people in Jerusalem, and to all the people that came from the cities of Judah unto Jerusalem.

10 Then [u]read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of the LORD, in the chamber[9] of Gemariah the son of Shaphan the scribe,[1] in the higher court, at the [x]entry[2] of the new gate of the LORD's house, in the ears of all the people.[3]

11 ¶ When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of [y]Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the LORD,

12 Then he went down into the king's house, into the scribe's[4] chamber; and, lo, [z]all the princes sat there, even Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah the son of Shemaiah, and Elnathan the son of Achbor, and Gemariah the son of Shaphan, and Zedekiah the son of Hananiah, and all the princes.

13 Then Michaiah [a]declared unto them all the words[5] that he had heard, when Baruch read the book in the ears of the people.

14 Therefore all the princes sent Jehudi the son of Nethaniah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Cushi, unto Baruch, saying, Take in thine hand the roll wherein thou hast read in the ears of the people, and come. So Baruch the son of Neriah [b]took the roll in his hand, and came unto them.

15 And they said unto him, Sit down now, and read it in our ears. So Baruch read it in their ears.

16 Now it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, [c]they were afraid[6] both one and other, and said unto Baruch, We will surely tell the king of all these words.

17 And they asked Baruch, saying, Tell us now, how didst thou write all these words at his mouth?

18 Then Baruch answered them, [d]He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink[7] in the book.

19 Then said the princes unto Baruch, [e]Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah, and let no man know where ye be.

20 ¶ And they went in to the king into the court, but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king.

21 So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll: and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber: and Jehudi [g]read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king.

22 Now the king sat in the [h]winter-house, in the ninth month: and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him.[8]

23 And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves,[9] he [i]cut it[1] with the penknife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth.

24 Yet they were not afraid, nor [j]rent their garments, neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words.

25 Nevertheless, Elnathan, and Delaiah, and Gemariah, [k]had made intercession to the king

1 The Jews, no doubt, engraved many of their records upon tablets of various kinds. But it is also evident that "ink" was familiar to them even in the days of Moses. See Nu. 5. 23. And it is matchless and wonderful that any one acquainted with the remains of ancient Egypt could have supposed the Israelites ignorant of ink and writing. Ezekiel mentions the "inkhorn" as familiar in his time. ch. 9. 2, 3, 11. Wilkinson and others have shown that the ink of the ancients was a species of paint, differing little if anything from what is still extensively used by many Orientals. It is usually composed of lamp-black, or powdered charcoal, gum, and water; as each substance is nearly the same as modern painters' ink; and the pen is usually a pointed reed.—C.

2 A reference to Lu. 22. 55 will exhibit the ordinary method of warming an eastern apartment. Fireplaces and chimneys are unknown in many of the warmer regions of Asia; and when fire is required it is usually a chafing dish or brazier of wood, charcoal, or other combustible is introduced. So it was here. The original Hebrew does not intimate that the king sat before the fire, but that the fire was brought before the king—"There was set before him a hearth with burning coals" (Blayney).—Note. To what a sad use does a sinful heart pervert the comforts God bestows! It is grievous to endure cold, God bestows the warmth of a fire, and man employs it to burn the message and testimony of Almighty God.—C.

And let us prudently accommodate ourselves to our place, rank, and condition; but never live above it. Humility and contentment in obscurity are often the best policy and surest protection. If we be strangers in this world, we should abstain from fleshly lusts, and treat the objects of sense with a gracious and generous disdain. The more we are confirmed in so doing, temptation will have the less force. The more mortified we are to this world, the more meet we are for the next, and the more willing shall we be to go to it; nay, we are the more meet for suffering here. But no rules of external discipline ought to exclude a dispensation when necessity requires. To neglect proper means of safety is to tempt God. It is superlatively absurd and wicked to refuse doing as much in obedience to God as we would be ready to do in obedience to a progenitor who is long since dead, and can never remind us of our obligation; and such as are guilty may expect judgment, sure, however slow. But while sinners are ruined, the temperate and obedient are often preserved in this world. And often such as live soberly on small estates have the most numerous and flourishing families. Nay, temperance, and mortification to this world, do much befriend the exercises of piety, and help to transmit the observance thereof to posterity, as their principal honour.

CHAPTER XXXVI. REFLECTIONS.—A serious and believing consideration of the certain and fatal consequences of our sin promotes a cordial repentance; and in all their work ministers ought to endeavour at the conversion of sinners from their evil ways. For this the writing of God's Word is designed; and all the writing or repeating of sermons must be directed to the same. Such as truly discern the need of repentance will supplicate God for it. But there may be great pretences, even to extraordinary devotion, while men continue enemies to the power of it. And national fasts, without national reformation, will never turn away national judgments. When we profess to be supplicating for mercy, it is very useful to be faithfully told of our sins and our duty; and we ought to com-that he would not burn the roll; but he [t]would not hear them.

26 But the king commanded Jerahmeel the son of Hammelech,[2] and Seraiah the son of Azriel, and Shelemiah the son of Abdeel, [u]to take Baruch the scribe, and Jeremiah the prophet: [v]but the LORD hid them.[3]

27 ¶ Then the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah, [w]after that the king had burned the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah, saying,

28 Take[x] thee again another roll, and write in it all the [y]former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim the king of Judah hath burned.

29 And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim king of Judah, Thus saith the LORD, Thou hast burned this roll, saying, [z]Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast?

30 Therefore thus saith the LORD of Jehoiakim king of Judah, [a]He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David; and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost.[4]

31 And I [b]will punish[5] him, and his seed, and his servants, for their iniquity; and [c]I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil that I have pronounced against them: but they[z] hearkened not.

32 ¶ Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who[y] wrote therein, from the mouth of Jeremiah, all the words of the book[6] which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burned in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many like words.[7]

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1 The Egyptians having raised the siege of the Chaldeans, king Zedekiah sendeth to Jeremiah to pray for the people. 6 Jeremiah prophesieth the Chaldeans' certain return and victory. 11 He is taken up for a fugitive, beaten, and put in prison. 16 He assureth Zedekiah of the captivity. 18 Entreating for his liberty, he obtaineth some favour.

AND king [a]Zedekiah, the son of Josiah, reigned instead of Coniah the son of Jehoiakim, whom Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon [b]made king in the land of Judah.[1]

2 But [c]neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the LORD, which he spake by the [2]prophet Jeremiah.

3 And [d]Zedekiah the king sent Jehucal the son of Shelemiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, to the prophet Jeremiah, saying, [e]Pray now unto the LORD our God for [f]us.

4 Now Jeremiah came in and went out among the people; for [g]they had not put him into prison.

5 Then [h]Pharaoh's army was come forth out of Egypt: and when the Chaldeans that besieged Jerusalem heard tidings of them, they [i]departed from Jerusalem.

6 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto the prophet Jeremiah, saying,

7 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah, [j]that sent you unto me to inquire of me; [k]Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return[4] to Egypt into their own land.

8 And [l]the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city, and take it, and burn it with fire.

9 Thus saith the LORD, [m]Deceive not yourselves,[5] saying, The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart.

10 For, though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wounded[6] men among them, [n]yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire.[7]

11 ¶ And it came to pass, that when the army of the Chaldeans was broken[8] up from Jerusalem for fear of Pharaoh's army,

12 Then Jeremiah went forth out of Jerusalem to go into the land of [p]Benjamin, to separate himself[9] thence in the midst of the [q]people.

13 And when he was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah: and he took Jeremiah the prophet, saying, [r]Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans.

14 Then said Jeremiah, It is false,[2] I fall not away to the Chaldeans. But he hearkened not to him: so Irijah took Jeremiah, and brought him to the princes.

15 Wherefore[r] the princes were wroth with municate to others those divine truths which have been peculiarly affecting to ourselves. God's ministers should lay hold on every opportunity, private or public, for teaching and warning their hearers. And there is need of very close dealing, as, by delay or otherwise, sinners will do all they can to evade convictions, or to shake them off. Nay, hardened sinners, especially in high stations, stick at nothing to disgrace the oracles of God, to destroy his messengers, and discover their own determinate resolution to continue in sin. And while they, who for God's cause boldly put their life in their hands, are wonderfully protected, they who contend with God, and obstinately resist his counsels, do only treasure up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath. By contending with his curses, they but prepare heavier ones for themselves; and silent accomplices in guilt may look for a share in the punishment.

3 A call for more necessary prayer is no proof either of the fault or repentance of him that calls for it. It is possible to have just such confidence in prayer as the ignorant and superstitious often have in amulets and charms. Such was evidently the case with Zedekiah, for "neither he nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the Lord by Jeremiah," and yet they expect that God will hear Jeremiah for them, while they refuse to hear God.—Note, Intercessory prayer for the sick is undoubtedly an ordinance of God (Ja. 5. 14, 15), both for healing and for giveness; but it is carefully to be observed, that the apostle places the personal prayer of the sick himself before the intercessory. ver. 13. "Is any among you afflicted in any manner, sickness included, let him pray." "Is any sick (a special affliction), let him send for the elders, and let them pray over him." In dealing with the sick this is a matter that requires much tenderness, but much faithfulness; for the heart is deceitful and souls are precious.—C.

CHAPTER XXXVII. Ver. 15. Eastern prisons are not public buildings, but a part of the house of the criminal judge. And such confinement in private houses was common in great Britain down to a period comparatively modern. The city of Aberdeen still contains the private dwelling in which Rutherford was imprisoned: and many continue to look upon it with great 'searchings of heart,' and deep musings both on the past and the present. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Hard are their hearts who can both see and feel the judgments of God without being humbled. And often they who in health and prosperity despised Christ's ministers, entreat their counsels and prayers in a day of distress. Many would gladly be rid of their sufferings who have no heart to part with their sins. And often they use the intermissions, or slow progress, of God's judgments to harden themselves, while they easily credit the flatteries and lies which their corrupt inclinations wish to be true. Even Satan could not deceive men if they deceived not themselves. No created help can avail but as God pleases; and no created power can withstand the weakest instruments in his hand. When we have no call from God to stay, it is prudent to retire into privacy, and shun the evils which we foresee. But the purest characters and conduct may be blackened with the vilest aspersions; and every lie, however improbable, is easily believed against a man obnoxious for his piety and reproofs. And if passion and prejudice ascend the chair of the magistrate, we need not expect any justice

Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison in[a] the house of Jonathan the scribe; for they had made that the prison.

16 ¶ When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the [b]cabins,[4] and Jeremiah had remained there many days;

17 Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took him out; and the king asked him secretly[5] in his house, and said, [c]Is there any word from the LORD? And Jeremiah said, There is: for, said he, [d]thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon.

18 Moreover, Jeremiah said unto king Zedekiah, [e]What have I offended against thee, or against thy servants, or against this people, that ye have put me in prison?

19 Where[a] are now your prophets which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon [g]shall not come against you, nor against this land?

20 Therefore hear now, I pray thee, O my lord the king: let my supplication, I pray thee, be accepted[6] before thee; that thou cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan the scribe, [e]lest I die there.[7]

21 Then Zedekiah the king commanded that they should commit Jeremiah into [e]the court of the prison, and that they [h]should give him daily a piece of bread out of the bakers' street, [e]until all the bread in the city were spent. [d]Thus Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

1 Jeremiah, by a false suggestion, is put into the dungeon of Malchiah. 7 Ebed-melech, his suit, getteth him some enlargement. 14 In a secret conference he counselleth the king by yielding to save his life. 24 By the king's instructions he concealeth the conference from the princes.

THEN Shephatiah[a] the son of Mattan, and Gedaliah the son of Pashur, and Jucal the son of Shelemiah, and Pashur the son of Malchiah, [b]heard the words that Jeremiah had spoken unto all the people, saying,[1]

2 Thus saith the LORD, [c]He that remaineth in this city shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth forth to the Chaldeans shall live; for he shall have his life for a prey, and shall live.

3 Thus saith the LORD, This city shall surely be given into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which shall take it.

4 Therefore [d]the princes said unto the king, We beseech thee, let this man be put to death; for [f]thus he weakeneth the hands of the men of war that remain in this city, and the hands of all the people, in speaking such words unto them; for this man seeketh not the welfare[2] of this people, but the hurt.

5 Then Zedekiah the king said, [g]Behold, he is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you.

6 Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the [h]dungeon[3] of Malchiah the son of Hammelech,[4] that was in the court of the prison: and they let down Jeremiah with cords. And in the dungeon there was no water, but mire; so Jeremiah sunk in the mire.[5]

7 ¶ Now when Ebed-melech [i]the [6]Ethiopian, one of the [j]eunuchs which was in the king's house, heard that they had put Jeremiah in the dungeon, the king then [k]sitting[7] in the gate of Benjamin,

8 Ebed-melech[i] went forth out of the king's house, and spake to the king, saying,

9 My lord the king, these men [l]have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon; and he is like to[8] die for hunger in the place where he is; [e]for there is no more bread in the city.

10 Then[a] the king commanded Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Take from hence [g]thirty men with thee,[1] and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the dungeon, before he die.

11 So Ebed-melech took the men with him, and went into the house of the king under the treasury, and took thence old cast clouts, and old rotten rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah.

12 And Ebed-melech the Ethiopian said unto Jeremiah, [g]Put now these old cast clouts and rotten rags under thine arm-holes under the cords.[2] And Jeremiah did so.

13 So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: and [f]Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

14 ¶ Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took Jeremiah the prophet unto him into the [g]third entry that is in the house of the LORD: and the king said unto Jeremiah, [e]I will ask thee a thing; hide nothing from me.

15 Then Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, If I declare it unto thee, [f]wilt thou not surely put me to death? and if I give thee counsel, wilt thou not hearken unto me?[4]

16 So Zedekiah the king sware secretly unto Jeremiah, saying, [k]As the LORD liveth, [l]that made us this soul,[5] I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand of [e]these men that seek thy life.

It is the best of men that have to suffer most for conscience' sake. But God can provide them relief from whence they little expected it. If men will cheerfully, but prudently, expose their life for God, he will take care that they shall be no losers, but their very affliction be the mean of substantial blessing. But they who will not regard God's calls to repentance, need not expect messages of peace. And they who have wilfully shut their eyes to their danger, deserve to be upbraided with their folly.

CHAPTER XXXVIII. REFLECTIONS. — It is better to submit to the rebukes of Providence than to contend with them. If we cannot have our liberties, let us never throw away our lives. And let God's ministers act faithfully and friendly, though impenitent sinners should reward them with hatred and murder. It forebodes ill when magistrates are daily growing worse [compare ch. xxvi. xxxiv. xxxvi.]; when great men weakly yield to their inferiors in the cause of God and truth; and when they who have a friendship for 17 Then said Jeremiah unto Zedekiah, Thus saith the LORD, the [v]God of hosts, the [w]God of Israel, [x]If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire; and thou shalt live, and thine house:

18 But [y]if thou wilt not go forth to the king of Babylon's princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand.

19 And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, [z]I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me.[6]

20 But Jeremiah said, They shall not deliver thee. Obey, [a]I beseech thee, the voice of the LORD, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee, and thy [b]soul shall live.

21 But if thou [c]refuse to go forth, [d]this is the word that the LORD hath showed me:

22 And, behold, all the women that are left[7] in the king of Judah's house, shall be brought forth to the king of Babylon's princes; and those[e] women shall say, Thy [f]friends[8] have set thee on, and have prevailed against thee: thy feet are sunk in the [g]mire, and they are [h]turned away back.

23 So[h] they shall bring out all thy wives and thy children to the Chaldeans; and thou shalt not escape out of their hand, but [i]shall be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon: and thou shalt cause[9] this city to be burned[1] with fire.

24 ¶ Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no man know of these words, and thou shalt not die.

25 But if [k]the princes hear that I have talked with thee, and they come unto thee, and say unto thee, Declare unto us now what thou hast said unto the king, hide it not from us, and we will not put thee to death: also what the king said unto thee:

26 Then thou shalt say unto them, I[2] presented my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return to Jonathan's house, to die there.

27 Then came all the princes unto Jeremiah, and asked him: and he told them according to all these words that the king had commanded.[3] So they left off speaking with[4] him: for the matter was not perceived.

28 So Jeremiah [l]abode in the court of the prison until the day that Jerusalem was taken: and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 Jerusalem is taken. 4 Zedekiah is made blind, and sent to Babylon. 8 The city laid in ruins, 9 and the people carried captive. 11 Nebuchadrezzar's charge for the good usage of Jeremiah. 15 God's promise to Ebed-melech.

IN the [a]ninth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the tenth month, came Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon and all his army against Jerusalem, and they besieged it.

2 And in the eleventh year[1] of Zedekiah, in the [b]fourth month, the ninth day of the month, the city was broken up.[2]

3 And [c]all the princes of the king of Babylon [d]came in, and sat in the middle gate, even [e]Nergal-sharezer, Samgar-nebo, Sarsechim, Rab-saris, Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, with all the residue of the princes of the king of Babylon.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, [g]that when Zedekiah the king of Judah saw them, and all the men of war, then they fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the king's garden, by the gate [h]betwixt the two walls; and he went out the way of the plain.[3]

5 But [i]the Chaldeans' army pursued after them, and [j]overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and when they [k]had taken him, they brought him up to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon to Riblah,[4] in the land of Hamath, where he gave judgment upon him.[5]

6 Then the king of Babylon slew [l]the sons of Zedekiah in Riblah before his eyes: also the king of Babylon slew all the nobles of Judah.

7 Moreover, [m]he put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bound him with chains,[6] to carry him to Babylon.

8 ¶ And the Chaldeans [o]burned the king's house, and the [p]houses of the people, with fire, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem.

9 Then Nebuzar-adan, the captain of the guard,[7] carried[q] away captive into Babylon the remnant[8] of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to him, with the rest of the people that remained.

10 But Nebuzar-adan, the captain of the guard, [r]left of the poor of the people, which had nothing, in the land of Judah, and gave them vineyards and fields at the same time.[9]

11 ¶ Now Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon [s]gave charge concerning Jeremiah to[t] Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard, saying,

12 Take him, and look well to him,[2] and [u]do him no harm, but do unto him even as he shall say unto thee.

his faithful servants will not own it as they might in time of need, when perhaps their enemies attempt privately to murder them. But, lo, how God cares for them, and raises up and emboldens friends beyond expectation! How early Ethiopia stretches out her hands to God! And what sense of justice and piety is found in a Gentile, living amidst the most degenerate professors! With speed and compassion we ought to relieve the distressed; and with great meekness and earnestness should ministers instruct such as oppose themselves, and render good for evil. Nor is a readiness to die in the cause of truth inconsistent with every prudent precaution to preserve ourselves. Sinners fondly desire that God would alter his purposes or threatenings for their sake, even when they continue deaf to his admonitions, and refuse submission, the only real means of deliverance. They often deter themselves from duty by fears trifling and groundless; and that which they seek to avoid by sin is brought on them by the justice of God; and by sinning to avoid shame, they often bring both sin and ruin upon them.

15 ¶ Now[a] the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah, [b]while he was shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

16 Go and speak [c]to Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; [d]Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good; and they shall be accomplished in that day [e]before thee.

17 But [f]I will deliver thee in that day, saith the LORD; and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the [h]men of whom thou art afraid.

18 For I will surely deliver thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword, [i]but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee: [j]because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER XL.

1 Jeremiah, being set free by Nebuzar-adan, goeth to Gedaliah. 7 The dispersed Jews resort unto him. 13 Johanan, recealing Ishmael's conspiracy, is not believed.

THE [a]word[1] that came to Jeremiah from the LORD, after that [b]Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had let him go from [c]Ramah, when he had taken him, being bound in chains[2] among all that were carried away captive of Jerusalem and Judah, which were carried away captive unto Babylon.

2 And the captain of the guard took Jeremiah, and said unto him, [d]The LORD thy God hath pronounced this evil upon this place.[3]

3 Now the LORD hath brought it, and done according as he hath [e]said: because ye have sinned against the LORD, and have not obeyed his voice, therefore this thing is come upon you.

4 And now, behold, I loose thee this day from the chains which were[4] upon thine hand. If it seem good unto thee to come with me into Babylon, come, and I will look well unto thee:[5] but if it seem ill unto thee to come with me into Babylon, forbear: behold, [g]all the land is before thee: whither it seemeth good and convenient for thee to go, thither go.

5 Now, while he was not yet gone back, he said, Go back also to [h]Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon hath made governor over the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people; or [i]go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee to go. So the captain of the guard [j]gave him victuals and a reward, and let him go.

6 Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, to [k]Mizpah;[6] and dwelt with him among the people that were left in the land.

7 ¶ Now when all [l]the captains of the forces which were in the fields,[7] even they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor in the land, and had committed unto him men, and women, and children, and of the [m]poor of the land, of them that were not carried away captive to Babylon;

8 Then they came to Gedaliah to [n]Mizpah, [o]even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and [p]Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephai the [r]Netophathite, and Jezaniah the son of a [s]Maachathite, they and their men.

9 And Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, [t]sware unto them, and to their men, saying, [u]Fear not to serve the Chaldeans: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you.

10 As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah, to serve[8] the Chaldeans[9] which will come unto us: but ye, [v]gather ye wine, and summer fruits, and oil, and put them in your vessels, and dwell in your cities that ye have taken.

11 Likewise, when all the Jews [x]that were in Moab, and among the Ammonites, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had left a remnant of Judah, and that he had set over them [y]Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan;

12 Even [z]all the Jews returned out of all places whither they were driven, and came to the land of Judah, to Gedaliah, unto Mizpah, and gathered wine and summer fruits very much.

13 ¶ Moreover, Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the fields, came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, selves and their subjects. To avoid shame, they will not avow before men the regard which their conscience obliges them to have for the faithful servants of God; nay, to preserve their reputation before wicked men, they will risk their eternal salvation. We had need then to be wise as serpents, as well as harmless as doves. And though we must never tell a lie, yet we must not tell all that we know to every impertinent inquirer.

CHAPTER XXXIX. Ver. 2. The city was broken up. The walls being breached by battering-rams, the city sacked, and the inhabitants driven away or made prisoners.—Note. By a barbarous common consent, called 'a law of nations,' certainly, however, not a law of God, a city whose garrison has bravely held out till it is taken by storm, is delivered up to plunder. In such cases the infuriated soldiery are let loose from all restraint, their officers lose all control, and the city is literally 'broken up' by the hands of merciless destroyers. Lord, hasten the time when they shall 'beat their swords into ploughshares, and men shall learn war no more!' C.

Ver. 4. Between the two walls. The Chaldeans had taken the city, but the citadel of Zion, in the south-west, was still, most probably, in the hands of Zedekiah. 'Betwixt the two walls' may accordingly mean that part of Zion to the north where the walls of the city and citadel approached: and the passage was, most likely, the way to the royal gardens in the vale of Gihon. The Jews have a tradition that the escape was by a subterraneous passage reaching to Jericho: and that the king would have escaped but that a hind, hunted by the Chaldeans, took refuge in the cave where the passage ended just as the king was emerging, and that he was thus miraculously made prisoner by the exulting Chaldeans. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how the families of the north sit in the gates of Jerusalem, and the lords of the heathen where their gods had been worshipped! God's judgments fearfully convince such as would not believe his threatenings. And fruitless are all attempts to flee from his judgment. But it will be awfully piercing to see our children murdered or lost through our obstinacy in sinning; and shut up at last in spiritual and eternal darkness through our obstinate ignorance of God's will! Marvellous, but just, are the changes and retributions of Providence; and the ruin of oppressors is the rise of the oppressed. God comforts his people, while the wicked are tormented; and heathens deliver them when hypocrites persecute them: yea, even prisons protect and mark them out for particular favours. Nor shall a cordial kindness to God's servants in trouble ever pass without distinguished honour and reward; and he will suit his comforts to the fears and griefs of his people. None that trust in him shall ever perish or be confounded.

CHAPTER XL. REFLECTIONS.—Heathens sometimes honour God and his ministers more than many

14 And said unto him, Dost thou certainly know that Baalis the king of the Ammonites hath[1] sent Ishmael the son of Nethaniah to slay thee?[2] But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not.[3]

15 Then Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in Mizpah secretly, saying, Let me go, I pray thee, and I will slay Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and no man shall know it: wherefore should he slay thee, that all the Jews which are gathered unto thee should be scattered, and the remnant in Judah perish?

16 But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, [c]Thou shalt not do this thing: for thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

CHAPTER XLI.

1 Ishmael, having treacherously killed Gedaliah and others, purposeth with the rest to flee unto the Ammonites. 11 Johanan recovereth the captives, and mindeth to flee into Egypt.

NOW it came to pass in the [a]seventh[1] month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, [b]of the seed royal, and [c]the princes of the king, even ten[2] men, with him, came unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, to Mizpah; and there they did [d]eat bread[3] together in Mizpah.

2 Then arose Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and the ten men that were with him, and [e]smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, with the sword, and slew him, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land.

3 Ishmael also slew [g]all the Jews that were with him, even with Gedaliah at Mizpah, and the Chaldeans that were found there, and the men of war.

4 And it came to pass, the second day after he had slain Gedaliah, and no man [h]knew it,[4]

5 That there came certain from [i]Shechem, from [j]Shiloh, and from [k]Samaria, even fourscore men, having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut[5] themselves, with offerings[l] and incense in their hand, to bring them to the [6]house[7] of the LORD.

6 And Ishmael the son of Nethaniah went forth from Mizpah to meet them, [8]weeping[8] all along as he went: and it came to pass, as he met them, he said unto them, Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.

7 And it was so, when they came into the midst of the city, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah [n]slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit, he, and the men that were with him.

[2] This unbelief was just what was to be expected in a man of Gedaliah's character. Himself unsuspicious of malice or deceit, he can not imagine it possible in another. The most virtuous are always the least suspicious: and though they may occasionally suffer from unmerited censure, they enjoy a peace of mind to which conscious guilt and a suspicious temper must always be strangers. The man of a sprinkled conscience, and a pure heart, is untroubled by fear, and does not, once, the guilty and the suspicious are always in dread and doubt.—C.

9 Now the pit wherein Ishmael had cast all the dead bodies of the men, whom he had slain because of[4] Gedaliah, was it which [p]Asa[5] the king had made for fear of Baasha king of Israel: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with them that were slain.

10 Then Ishmael carried away captive [q]all the residue of the people that were in Mizpah, even the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizpah, whom Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had committed to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah carried them away captive, and departed [r]to go over to the Ammonites.[6] professors. It will at last appear that God is faithful, and sin ruinous. And all loss sustained for God will be made up in the end. If his servants have hardships when sinners have liberty, they will obtain liberty when sinners shall be in misery.—What honour God puts on the son of Jeremiah's late protector, ch. 26. 24! But short glimmerings of prosperity often introduce fearful strokes of adversity. It is only the deputies and servants of heaven's great Monarch who are secured in complete and lasting protection. O what baseness and barbarity can human minds contrive and perpetrate! Great men have need to be cautious of their own preservation, as well as charitable concerning their neighbours. But of little worth are earthly honours, which but tempt miscreants to murder us.

CHAPTER XLI. REFLECTIONS.—By the most unexpected and unnatural means God can punish men who have ripened themselves in wickedness. And a righteous God can make the malice, the baseness, the barbarity of the most hardened monsters in iniquity to glorify himself and ruin his enemies. Misery, death, and despair often meet men when, where, and whence, they least expected. And not the laws of God or men, but covetousness, frequently makes sinners to abstain from crimes. The most unnatural criminals may for a time escape punishment from men. And groundless fear, real or pretended, often leads men into ruinous guilt.

CHAPTER XLII. REFLECTIONS.—Ministers have need to be men of fervent prayer, faithfulness, and intimacy with God. And if people would profit by their ministers' prayers, they should seriously attend to their preaching. We can never be sincere with God if we do not obey his will so far as it is known to us.

afraid[4] of them, because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, [d]whom the king of Babylon made governor in the land.

CHAPTER XLII.

1 Johanan desireth Jeremiah to inquire of God, promising obedience to his will. 7 Jeremiah assureth him of safety in Judea, 13 but of destruction in Egypt. 19 He reproveth their hypocrisy, in asking counsel of God, which they meant not to follow.

THEN all the captains of the forces, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and [a]Jezaniah the son of Hoshaiah, and all the people from the least even unto the greatest, [b]came near,

2 And said unto Jeremiah the prophet, Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted[1] before thee, and [c]pray for us unto the LORD thy God, even for all this remnant; (for we are left but[d] a few of many, as thine eyes do behold us;)

3 That the LORD thy God [e]may show us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing [g]that we may do.[2]

4 Then Jeremiah the prophet said unto them, I have heard you; behold, I [h]will pray unto the LORD your God according to your words; and it shall come to pass, that [i]whatsoever thing the LORD shall answer you, I will declare it unto you; I will keep nothing back from you.

5 Then they said to Jeremiah, The LORD be [j]a true and faithful witness between us; if we do not even according to all things for the which the LORD thy God shall send thee to us.

6 Whether [k]it be good, or whether it be evil, we will obey the voice of the LORD our God, to whom we send thee; [l]that it may be well with us, when we obey the voice of the LORD our God.

7 ¶ And it came to pass, after ten[3] days, that the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah.

8 Then called he [n]Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces which were with him, and all the people, from the least even to the greatest,

9 And said unto them, [o]Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, unto whom ye sent me to present your supplication before him;

10 If ye will still abide in this land, then will[p] I build you, and not pull you down; and I will plant you, and not pluck you up; for [q]I repent[4] me of the evil that I have done unto you.

11 Be[r] not afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid; be not afraid of him, saith the LORD: for I am with you to save you, and to deliver you from his hand.

12 And I will show mercies unto you, [s]that he may have mercy upon you, and cause you to return to your own [5]land.[6]

13 But if ye say, We will not dwell in this land, [t]neither obey the voice of the LORD your God,

6 Fear and the horrors of war had driven them away from their homes, their villages, and their fields. They had fled apparently to mountain fastnesses. The promise in this verse therefore is not that they would be restored to their native country, from which they had never departed; but that, if they rested with implicit faith in God's providential care and protection, he would give them peace and perfect security in returning to and occupying their houses and properties. The Hebrew tense rendered "cause you to return" expresses here permission rather than execution—God would give them power to return if they so willed.—P.

9 The divine promises to the Jews, here as elsewhere, are conditional. Unbelief was the grand source of all their sins as a nation. They would not trust in God. No amount of persuasion, no amount of past experience alike of judgments and mercy, would induce them to yield to him implicit obedience, and rely on his promises. Hence their decline as a nation, their exile, and their final dispersion among the Gentiles.—P.

CHAPTER XLIII.

1 Johanan discrediting Jeremiah's prophecy, carrieth Jeremiah and others into Egypt. 8 Jeremiah prophesieth by a type the conquest of Egypt by the Babylonians.

AND it came to pass, that when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking unto all the people all the words of the LORD their God, for which the LORD their God had sent him to them, even all these words,

2 Then spake [1]Azariah[2] the son of Hoshaiah, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and all [a]the proud men,[3] saying unto Jeremiah, Thou speakest [b]falsely: the LORD our God hath not sent

But what a cloak of religion will hypocrites put on to serve a particular turn! They will avouch God as their God, and make great pretences to unreserved readiness to obey his will in all things. How strange it is that he should return such dissemblers so plain, so gracious, an answer! But his mercy is the foundation of all our hopes and happiness. He can turn the hearts of kings to favour or to hate us as he pleases. And they who carefully obey his will may humbly expect

THE SPHINX—A MONUMENT WHICH HAS BEEN STANDING THROUGHOUT THE WHOLE OF OLD TESTAMENT TIMES, AND IS THUS A SILENT WITNESS OF ALL THAT IS RECORDED IN THE BIBLE. [JEREMIAH, xlii: 13, 14.]—"But if ye say, We will not dwell in this land, neither obey the voice of the Lord your God, saying, No; but we will go into the land of Egypt, where we shall see no war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor have hunger of bread; and there will we dwell." By words like these Jeremiah was seeking to keep the remnant of Judah from going into Egypt out of fear of the king of Babylon. But the words of the prophet fell on unwilling ears, and in spite of all his efforts they went down into Egypt. But this remnant of Judah found to their cost that Jeremiah was right. The king of Babylon invaded Egypt also, and the remnant of Judah that fled from Babylon's king into the land of Egypt were consumed there by the sword and famine. We give as an illustration of this Scripture, the Sphinx which was the silent witness of the events here recorded thee to say, Go not into Egypt to sojourn there:

8 But [c]Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, for to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that [d]they might put us to death, and carry us away captives into Babylon.

4 So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, [e]obeyed not the voice of the LORD, [f]to dwell in the land of Judah.

5 But [g]Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all nations whither they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah;

6 Even men, and women, and children, and the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had left with Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, and [i]Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah.

7 So [j]they came into the land of Egypt: for they obeyed not the voice of the LORD. Thus came they even to [k]Tahpanhes.

8 ¶ Then [l]came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying,

9 Take[m] great stones in thine hand, and hide them in the clay in the brick-kiln,[4] which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes, in the sight of the men of Judah;

10 And say unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, [o]I will send and take Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will set his throne upon these stones that I have hid: and he shall spread his royal pavilion over them.[5]

11 And when he cometh, [p]he shall smite the land of Egypt, and deliver [q]such as are for death to death; and such as are for captivity to captivity; and such as are for the sword to the sword.

12 And I will kindle a fire [r]in the houses of the gods of Egypt; and he shall burn them, and carry them away captives; and he shall array[6] himself with the land of Egypt, as a shepherd putteth on his garment;[7] and he shall go forth from thence [s]in peace.

13 He shall break also the images[8] of [9]Beth-shemesh,[1] that is in the land of Egypt; and the houses of the gods of the Egyptians shall he burn with fire.

CHAPTER XLIV.

1 Jeremiah expresseth the desolation of Judah for their idolatry. 11 He prophesieth their destruction, who commit idolatry in Egypt. 15 The obstinacy of the Jews. 20 Jeremiah threateneth them for the same, 29 and for a sign foretelleth the ruin of the king of Egypt.

THE word[a] that came to Jeremiah concerning all the Jews which dwell in the land of Egypt, which dwell at [b]Migdol,[1] and at [c]Tahpanhes,[2] and at [3]Noph,[4] and in the country of [5]Pathros,[6] saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, behold, this day [d]they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein;[7]

3 Because[e] of their wickedness which they have committed, to provoke me to anger, in that they went to burn incense, and to serve other gods, whom they knew not, neither they, ye, nor your fathers.

4 Howbeit [f]I sent unto you all my servants the prophets, rising early, and sending them, saying, Oh, do not this [h]abominable thing that I hate.

5 But[i] they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear to turn from their wickedness, to [j]burn no incense unto other gods.

6 Wherefore my fury and mine anger [k]was poured forth, and was kindled in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem: and they are wasted and desolate, as at this day.

7 Therefore now thus saith the LORD, the God of hosts, the God of Israel, [l]Wherefore commit ye this great evil against [m]your souls, to cut off from you man and woman, child and suckling, out of[8] Judah, [n]to leave you none to remain;

8 In that [o]ye provoke me unto wrath with the works of your hands, burning incense unto other gods in the land of Egypt, whither ye be gone to dwell, that ye might cut yourselves off, and that ye [9]might be a curse and a reproach among all the nations of the earth?

9 Have ye forgotten [r]the wickedness[9] of your fathers, and the wickedness of the kings of Judah, and the wickedness of their wives, and your own wickedness, and the wickedness of your wives, which they have committed in the land of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem?

10 They are not humbled[1] even unto this day, [s]neither have they [t]feared, nor walked in my law, nor in my statutes, that I set before you, and before your fathers.

his blessing. But it is madness to dissemble with a God of truth, who searches our hearts; or to quit our station, especially in his holy land, because we find trouble in it. If we think to escape suffering by sinning, we only rush upon the thick bosses of his buckler. If we make him our enemy, we shall find him a consuming fire wherever we go; and that upon which we most set our hearts will prove most fatal to us. If we make ourselves vile by our sins, he will make us viler by his judgments.

REFLECTIONS.—Pride is among the most awful sins—a root of infidelity, and a sure road to ruin. They who are full of ill designs themselves, ordinarily reproach the true friends of their church and nation as traitors. They who hate to conform themselves to the Scripture, are ready to deny the divinity of it. And they who wish to contradict the ends of a gospel ministry, study to put it under an ill name. Proud men hate contradiction; and if they cannot obtain consent, they will force compliance, and even drag those who fear God along with them. But a sinful flight from God's judgments only hastens them upon us, and renders them heavier; and even draws down his wrath upon such as receive us into their friendship. And, very contrary to their intentions, he makes one nation a scourge to another.

CHAPTER XLIV. Ver. 6. There are those who object against the ascription of 'fury and anger' to God. The objections would disappear if they were not viewed as human passions, but as sources of the divine judgments. The ruin and desolation of idolatrous lands are visible facts; the justice that

HEAD OF THE PROCESSION OF THE FESTIVAL OF THE MAH 'MAL.

[Jeremiah, xliv:8.]—"In that ye provoke me unto wrath with the works of your hands, burning incense unto other gods in the land of Egypt, whither ye be gone to dwell." It has been characteristic of Egypt in all ages to burn incense unto other gods than the true God. The festival of the Mah 'Mal is perhaps the best illustration we could have of the recent form of idolatry in this land so intimately connected with the Israelites, and from whom God's peculiar people seemed to have learned most of the erroneous forms of religion which brought upon them the judgments of Jehovah. The Mah 'Mal is a litter, built of wood in pyramidal form, and is hung by embroidered fabrics. These hangings or coverings accompany the litter in the annual pilgrimage to Mecca, and are intended for the interior sanctuary of the Mosque at that holy Moslem city.

11 ¶ Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I [u]will set my face against you for evil, and to cut off all Judah.

12 And [v]I will take the remnant of Judah, that have set their faces to go into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, and they shall all be consumed,[2] and fall in the land of Egypt; they shall even be consumed by the sword and by the famine: they shall die, from the [w]least even unto the greatest, by the sword and by the famine; and they shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach.

13 For I will punish[3] them that dwell in the land of Egypt, as I have punished Jerusalem, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence:

14 So that none of the remnant of Judah, which are [b]gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall escape or remain, that they should return into the land of Judah, to the which they have a desire[4] to return to dwell there; [c]for none shall return but such as shall [d]escape.[5]

15 ¶ Then [e]all the men which knew that their wives[6] had burned incense unto other gods, and all the women that stood by, a great multitude, even all the people that dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros, answered Jeremiah, saying,

16 As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the LORD, [f]we will not hearken unto thee.

17 But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth[g] forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the queen[7] of heaven, and to pour out[8] drink-offerings unto her, as we have done, we, and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem: for [h]then had we plenty of victuals,[9] and were well, and saw no evil.

18 But since we left off to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword and by the famine.

19 And when we[1] burned incense to the queen of heaven, and poured out drink-offerings unto her, did we make her cakes to worship her, and pour out drink-offerings unto her,[2] without our [3]men?[4]

20 ¶ Then Jeremiah said unto all the people, to the men, and to the women, and to all the people which had given him that answer, saying,

21 The incense that ye burned in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes, and the people of the land, [i]did not the LORD remember them, and came it not into his mind?

22 So that the LORD [k]could no longer bear, because of the evil of your doings, and because of the abominations which ye have committed, therefore is your land [l]a desolation, and an astonishment, and a curse, without an inhabitant, as at this day.

23 Because[5] ye have burned incense, and because ye have sinned against the LORD, and have not obeyed the voice of the LORD, nor [m]walked in his law, nor [n]in his statutes, nor [o]in his testimonies; therefore [p]this evil is happened unto you, as at this day.

24 Moreover,[p] Jeremiah said unto all the people, and to all the women, Hear the word of the LORD, all [q]Judah that are in the land of Egypt;

25 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Ye and your wives [r]have both spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hand, saying, We will surely perform our vows[5] that we have vowed, to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her: ye will surely [s]accomplish your vows, and surely perform your vows.

26 Therefore hear ye the word of the LORD, all Judah that dwell in the land of Egypt; Behold, [t]I have sworn by my great name, saith the LORD, that [u]my name shall no more be named[6] in the mouth of any man of Judah, in all the land of Egypt, saying, The Lord GOD liveth.

27 Behold, [v]I will watch over them for evil, and not for good; and all the men of Judah that are in the land of Egypt shall be [x]consumed by the sword, and by the famine, until there be an end of them.

28 Yet[v] a small number that escape the sword shall return out of the land of Egypt into the land of Judah; and all the remnant of Judah, [z]that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know whose words shall stand, mine or theirs.[7]

29 ¶ And this shall be [a]a sign unto you, saith the LORD, that I will punish you in this place, that ye may know that my words shall surely stand against you for evil:

30 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, [b]I will give Pharaoh-hophra[8] king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies,[9] and into the hand of them that seek his life, [c]as I gave Zedekiah king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon his enemy, and that sought his life.

[1] This utterance belongs in point of time to ch 43.8-13, but is introduced here as an example and encouragement to the few that did still sigh and cry for all the abominations that were done in the land. Thus, and similar dislocations throughout this book, are not to be considered as evidences that the arrangement of the several parts was without any principle of order. The principle is obvious: it is not time, but instruction.—C.

Ver. 7. This is a very remarkable remonstrance:—'Why do ye commit great wickedness against yourselves?' The Jews are represented as their own worst enemies, as their own executioners in fact. How can this be? God's law is clear. The nation that rebels against him shall perish. The Jews knew the law. Yet they deliberately rebelled. They had repeated experience of it in their own past history; yet that did not restrain them. They rebelled again more grievously than before, and by that rebellion necessarily entailed upon themselves the judgment here referred to. P.

Jeremiah uttered by divine inspiration a number of independent prophecies relating to different nations, periods, and circumstances, having no relation to each other, and no strictly logical connection. These have been combined in one book, and the order may perhaps have been different in different copies; but this does not in any way affect the integrity and inspiration of each prophecy or of the whole collectively. The one relates to the overthrow of the Egyptian army on the banks of the Euphrates; the other to the conquest of Egypt itself by the king of Babylon, which took place at a later period, sixteen years after the capture and destruction of Jerusalem. The Jews had thus but a short time of rest in Egypt. The judgments predicted by Jeremiah soon came upon them.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dreadful is the malignity of sin; infinitely God hates it, and earnestly should his ministers warn against it. It is a dreadful token of a reprobate mind when, with judgments upon us or around us, we harden ourselves in sin, and a certain sign that almighty judgment is at hand to destroy us. They who will not be ruled by God's word, must be broken by his rod. And if men will prefer their own projects to God's promises and providence, it is just that they should meet with disappointments. No antiquity, authority, custom, or prosperity, can ever warrant what God forbids. And it is dreadful when the means which God uses to draw or drive us from our sins are perverted to harden us in them; or when those who should assist one another in the way to heaven are mutual tempters to and hardeners in sin. But God will effectually refute his obstinate opponents by the ruinous strokes of his wrath. Nor can a greater curse light upon sinners than to be given up to the devices of their own heart. Quickly will God ruin the created comforts and confidences which we put in his room. And indeed nothing is to us what we fancy it, but what he makes it.

CHAPTER XLV. REFLECTIONS.—Alas, how unwilling our hearts are to take up our cross and follow Christ! Very small difficulties are apt to discourage young beginners in the service of God. And often it is more their unbelieving fears than their real dangers that make them to complain. If we had less desire after and less expectation from creatures, and more faith in Christ's word and views of the spiritual nature of his kingdom, external events would trouble us less. While therefore God so exactly observes me, let me never seek my own more than the public welfare. Let me never seek great things here, where everything is less than nothing and vanity, and as uncertain as a shadow or a vapour. If God preserve and protect me in evil times, it is more than I deserve, or perhaps could expect.

CHAPTER XLVI. Ver. 1. There are here two prophecies. The first before a battle between the Egyptians and Babylonians near Carchemish, in which the Egyptians suffered a severe defeat. The second begins at ver. 13, and the desolation foretold took place in the 23th year of Jehoiakim's captivity, and the 16th after the destruction of Jerusalem, as may be collected from Eze. 29. 17, where Nebuchadnezzar's army receives a promise of the spoils of Egypt as wages for their fruitless toils and dangers in the siege of Tyre, which promise was fulfilled the same year. See Josephus' Antiq. b. x. c. 9; and Rollin's An. Hist. vol. i. b. i. C.

Ver. 9. The original words are Cush, Phut, and Lud, three nations who were allies of Egypt, Eze. 30. 5. The first, Arabians, near the Red Sea, east of Egypt (see 2 Ch. 21. 16; Is. 20. 3-5), but who seem also to have had settlements in Egypt itself, or in some adjoining district in Africa, situated higher on the Nile; see Is. 18. 1. The second, Libyans, west of Egypt. The third, the descendants of Lud, the son of Misraim, who settled in Egypt, Ge. 10. 13. These Lydians are to be distinguished from the Lydians of Asia Minor, familiar to history on account of the riches of Croesus, their king, and who are supposed to be the descendants of Lud, the son of Shem, Ge. 10. 22. C.

Ver. 25. Multitude of No. No, or 'Amon No,' generally supposed to be the Egyptian Thebes. It stood on both sides of the Nile, about 300 miles from the sea. In time of war it could furnish 20,000 men and 200 chariots. It was taken and destroyed by the Assyrians, Na. 3. 8–10. It afterwards arose to still greater splendour, and is said to have extended to 52 miles in circumference. It was again reduced to ruins by Cyaxares of Persia, Eze. 30. 15, 16. It was partially rebuilt again, and finally destroyed by C. Gallus. Four villages now rise upon its ruins—perhaps the most magnificent in the world. Ruins that compel the traveller to gaze and wonder how man could become so brutal as to devastate such miracles of architecture and splendour—ruins which the believer points out to the infidel as evidences of divine revelation and abiding monuments of God's judgments upon idolatry. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God will reckon with sinners at last. And, alas, at what expense, and with what parade, they rush forward into their own destruction! When they think to magnify themselves by their wicked enterprises, he glorifies himself in blasting their designs and cutting them off. At infinite hazard do kings, in their pride, march multitudes into sudden death and damnation. And the more confident they are, the nearer is their ruin. No numbers, no armour, no

Rameses II. was the "king who knew not Joseph." We see him now in limestone lying prostrate amid the ruins of the city he enriched and oppressed. The first in her glory, he is the last in her desolation. The prophecy is literally true, "Memphis shall be without an inhabitant." The companions of the once proud Rameses the Second now are the jackals, whose wierd howl lends a melancholy interest to the solemn moan of the palms, the only sentinels left to guard the proud Egyptian king. Tall, rank weeds grow about his mighty form, and lean their dying heads upon his cold and bloodless bosom. He is so quiet and harmless in his limestone form that the lizards play hide and seek on the surface of his vast face.

26 And I will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their lives, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of his servants; and [s]afterward it shall be inhabited, as in the days of old, saith the LORD.[8]

27 ¶ But[t] fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel: for, behold, I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid.

28 Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the LORD; for I am with thee: for [u]I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee; [x]but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure; [z]yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished.[9]

VIEW EAST FROM THE ACROPOLIS—SHOWING THE HILL WHERE ST. PAUL PREACHED. [Jeremiah, xlviii.]—In the year 588 B. C., Jeremiah was prophesying the conquest of Egypt by the Babylonians. At the same time in Greece, Solon, of the family of Nelidae, had come to great influence by the recapture of Salamis and by his share in the first sacred war against Crisa and Cirrha whose inhabitants had robbed the temple of Apollo in Delphi. It was during this time that Solon was writing the constitution and laws for the citizens of Athens. Standing upon the Acropolis and looking east toward Hymettus, we see the natural features of the country which surrounded Athens in the time of Jeremiah. It is interesting to place ourselves in the time of the prophet and look toward Greece, for this classical country is regarded as one of the lands of the Bible. From Greece some 200 years after Jeremiah, Alexander the Great came and conquered Palestine.

5 For in the going up of Luhith continual weeping[7] shall go up; for in the going down of Horonaim the enemies have heard a cry of destruction.

6 Flee, save your lives,[8] and be like the heath[9] in the wilderness.[1]

7 ¶ For because [a]thou hast trusted in thy works, and in thy treasures, thou shalt also be taken;[2] and [b]Chemosh[4] shall go forth into captivity, with his [c]priests and his princes together.

8 And the spoiler[5] shall come upon every city, [d]and no city shall escape; the valley also shall perish, and the plain[6] shall be destroyed, as the LORD hath spoken.

9 Give[i] wings unto Moab, that it may flee and get away: for [e]the cities thereof shall be desolate, without any to dwell therein.[7]

10 Cursed[k] be he that doeth the work of the LORD deceitfully,[8] and cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood.

11 ¶ Moab hath been at ease[9] from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees,[1] and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity:[2] therefore his taste[3] remained[4] in him, and his scent is not changed.

12 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will send unto him [f]wanderers,[6] that shall cause him to wander, and shall empty his vessels, and break their bottles.

13 And[l] Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh, as the house of Israel was ashamed of Beth-el[7] their confidence.

14 ¶ How say ye, [m]We are mighty and strong men for the war?

15 Moab is spoiled,[8] and gone up out of her cities, and his chosen[9] young men are gone down to the slaughter, saith [n]the King, [p]whose name is the LORD of hosts.

16 The calamity of Moab [q]is near[1] to come, and his affliction hasteth fast.

17 All[r] ye that are about him, bemoan him; and all ye that know his name, say, [s]How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod!

18 Thou [t]daughter that dost inhabit Dibon, come down from thy glory, and sit in thirst; for the spoiler of Moab shall come upon thee, and he shall destroy thy strong holds.

19 O inhabitant[2] of [u]Aroer, stand by the way, and espy; [v]ask him that fleeth, and her that escapeth, and say, What is done?

20 Moab[x] is confounded; for it is broken down: howl and cry; tell ye it in [y]Arnon, that Moab is spoiled,

21 And judgment is come upon the [z]plain country;[3] upon [a]Holon, and upon [b]Jahazah, and upon Mephaath,

22 And upon [c]Dibon, and upon Nebo, and upon Beth-diblathaim,

23 And upon [d]Kiriathaim, and upon Beth-gamul, and upon Beth-meon,

24 And upon [e]Kerioth, and upon [g]Bozrah, and upon all the cities of the land of Moab, far or near.[4]

25 The[h] horn of Moab is cut off, and his [i]arm is broken, saith the LORD.

26 Make[j] ye him drunken; for he [k]magnified himself against the LORD: Moab also[l] shall wallow in his vomit, and he also [m]shall be in derision.

27 For [o]was not Israel a derision unto thee? was he found among thieves?[5] for since thou spakest of him, thou skippedst[6] for joy.

28 O ye that dwell in Moab, leave the [7]cities, and dwell in the rock, and be like the dove that maketh her nest in the sides of the hole's mouth.

29 We have heard the pride of Moab, (he is exceeding proud,)[9] his loftiness, and his arrogancy, and his pride, and the haughtiness of his heart.

30 I know his wrath,[9] saith the LORD: but it shall not be so; his lies [p]shall not so effect it.[1]

31 Therefore[q] will I howl for Moab, and I will cry out for all Moab; mine heart shall mourn for the men of Kir-heres.

32 O[r] vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer; thy plants are gone over the sea, they reach even to the [s]sea of Jazer: [t]the spoiler is fallen upon thy summer fruits, and upon thy vintage.

33 And [u]joy and gladness is taken from the plentiful field, and from the land of Moab; and I have caused wine to fail from the wine-presses: none shall tread with shouting; their shouting [v]shall be no shouting.[2]

34 From the cry of Heshbon even unto [g]Elealeh, and even unto Jahaz, have they uttered their voice, from Zoar even unto Horonaim, as an heifer of three years old; for the waters also of Nimrim shall be desolate.[4]

35 Moreover, I will cause to cease in Moab, saith the LORD, [w]him that offereth in the high places, and him that burneth incense to his gods.

36 Therefore[y] mine heart shall sound for Moab like pipes, and mine heart shall sound like pipes for the men of Kir-heres: because [z]the riches that he hath gotten are perished.

37 For [a]every head shall be bald, and every beard clipped:[5] upon all the hands shall be cuttings; and upon the loins sackcloth.

38 There shall be lamentation generally [b]upon

7 It is most probable that the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar, the ruin of the cities, and the captivity of the inhabitants of Moab, took place in the days of Zedekiah.—P.

8 The idea of utter isolation is here expressed. Nothing but entire separation from the home and haunts of man could save any of the inhabitants of Moab from death. This remarkable statement is illustrated by the situation of Moab, and the habits of all dwellers in Syrian border-land. Moab was bounded on the east by the great desert of Arabia; and to this day when any invading force enters the territory of a transjordanic people, if unable to meet them in the field, they pack up their goods, collect their flocks and herds, and retire into the desert. This is the counsel given to the Moabites by the prophet.—P.

1 The whole of the extensive region which, at one time or another, was under the dominion of Moab, is here included in the sweeping denunciation of the prophet. The proper territory of Moab lay immediately upon the east. ern border of the Dead Sea, bounded on the north by Ammon, and on the south by Edom; but in prosperous times, during the internal conflicts of Israel, the Moabites conquered the extensive plain extending east of Gilead as far as the southern border of Bashan. Some of the cities here named lay in that plain, such as Bethharamul, Kerioth, and Bozrah.—P.

east by the deserts of Arabia. The Israelites were expressly forbidden to injure the Moabites, De. 2. 9; but this forbearance was repaid not only with inhospitality, but malice; for the Moabites hired Balaam to curse Israel, and joined with the Midianites in enticing them to sin, Nu. xxi. xxiv.; De. 23. 2. During the period of the judges, Moab held Israel in bondage for eighteen years, from which they were delivered by Ehud, Ju. iii. Moab was completely subdued by David; but, during the decline of the kingdom of Israel, they regained their independence, and seized on the greater part of the possessions of the tribe of Reuben, 2 Ki. 13. 20. After an invasion by Shalmaneser, Is. xv. xvi.; Am. 2. 2, Moab soon regained its strength, and became one of the most flourishing kingdoms of Asia. It was sadly devastated by Nebuchadnezzar, who carried into captivity the greater number of its inhabitants, 2 Ki. 24. 2; Eze. xxv. After various recoveries and disasters, it fell under the power of the Romans, and the whole country is studded with relics of that extinct empire. The natural fertility of the soil is nearly unparalleled, yet the whole all the house-tops of Moab, and in the streets thereof: for I have broken Moab like [a] a vessel wherein is no pleasure, saith the LORD.

39 They shall howl, saying, [d]How is it broken down! how hath Moab turned the back[6] with shame! so [e]shall Moab be a derision and a dismaying to all them about him.

40 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, he[7] shall fly as an eagle,[8] and shall spread his wings over Moab.

41 Kerioth is[9] taken, and the strongholds are surprised, and the mighty men's hearts in Moab at that day shall be as the heart of a woman in her pangs.[1]

42 And Moab shall be destroyed [g]from being a people, because [h]he hath magnified himself against the LORD.

43 Fear,[i] and the pit, and the snare, shall be upon thee, O inhabitant of Moab, saith the LORD.

44 He[j] that fleeth from the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that getteth up out of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for I will bring upon it, even upon Moab, [k]the year of their visitation, saith the LORD.

45 They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon, because of the force: but [l]a fire shall come forth out of Heshbon, and a flame from the midst of Sihon, and shall devour the corner of Moab, and the crown of the head of the tumultuous ones.[2]

46 Woe[m] be unto thee, O Moab! the people of Chemosh[3] perisheth: for thy sons are taken captives,[4] and thy daughters captives.

47 ¶ Yet[n] will I bring again the captivity of Moab in the latter days, saith the LORD. Thus far is the judgment of Moab.

CHAPTER XLIX.

1 The judgment of the Ammonites. 6 Their restoration. 7 The judgment of Edom, 23 of Damascus, 28 of Kedar, 30 of Hazor, 34 and of Elam. 39 The restoration of Elam.

CONCERNING[1] the[a] Ammonites, thus saith the LORD, Hath Israel no sons? hath he no heir? why then doth their [2]king [b]inherit [3]Gad, and his people [c]dwell in his cities?

2 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that [d]I will cause an alarm of war to be heard in Rabbah of the Ammonites; and it shall be a desolate heap, and her [4]daughters shall be burned with fire: then [e]shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs,[5] saith the LORD.

3 Howl,[f] O Heshbon; for [h]Ai is spoiled: cry, ye daughters of Rabbah, gird you with sackcloth; lament, and run to and fro by the hedges:[6] for[i] their king[7] shall go into captivity, and his priests and his princes together.

4 Wherefore[j] gloriest thou in the valleys, thy flowing valley,[8] O[k] backsliding[9] daughter? [l]that trusted in her treasures, saying, Who shall come unto me?

5 Behold, [m]I will bring a fear upon thee, saith the Lord GOD of hosts, from all those that be about thee; and ye [o]shall be driven out every man right forth; and none shall [p]gather up him that wandereth.

6 ¶ And [q]afterward I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon, saith the LORD.

7 ¶ Concerning[r] Edom, thus saith the LORD of hosts, Is wisdom no more in [s]Teman?[11] is [t]counsel perished from the prudent? is their wisdom vanished?

8 Flee[u] ye, turn back,[2] dwell [3]deep,[4] O inhabitants of Dedan; for I will bring [v]the calamity of Esau upon him, the time that I will visit him.

9 If [x]grape-gatherers come to thee, would they not leave some gleaning grapes? if thieves by night, they will destroy till they have [5]enough.

10 But I have made Esau [y]bare, I have uncovered his [z]secret places, and he shall not be able to hide himself: his [a]seed is spoiled, and his brethren,[6] and his neighbours, and he is [7]not.

country is a desert—a national monument of God's judgments upon national sins. See ver. 9. C.

Ver. 21. Holon, &c. These are the names of cities of Moab, some of them not elsewhere mentioned. It is stated by travellers that in no country of Europe are the towns and villages so numerous as the ruins that are scattered over Moab. C.

Ver. 26. Make ye him drunken —not 'with wine, wherein is excess;' for that is forbidden of God—but judicially condemn him to drink of the intoxicating draught of his own pride and vanity, ver. 29, and the cup of God's judgment against these rebellions of the heart. C.

Ver. 27. The people of one nation often take pleasure in deriding the people of another; and seem to think that by lowering their neighbours they are elevating themselves. The subject of this derision may be religion, government, poverty, dress, language, history, national peculiarities and habits, however inoffensive; nay, industry, riches, and comforts, can be turned into ridicule by those who envy what they are too ignorant or too idle to attain. The Moabites, by perverting history, seem to have ridiculed the Israelites as 'thieves,' and to have expressed that malignant joy at their disasters which is the surest evidence of a weak understanding and a bad heart: and the certain forerunner of that divine judgment against private or public malice which prophecy occasionally reveals as a part of God's uniform and unalterable government. C.

Ver. 30. His lies shall not so effect his evil purposes, nor enable him to gratify his malignant and causeless wrath. The probability is, that the Moabites had been active in misrepresenting the Jews to the Chaldeans. C.

Ver. 32. Thy plants are gone over the sea. Thy people are carried captive beyond the sea, but to what place is unknown: the word translated 'sea' being applicable to the ocean, the Mediterranean, the Red Sea, the Dead Sea, or to any considerable lake of fresh water. C.

Ver. 34. Three years old, as the date of maturity, and the consequent emblem of perfection, was the age required by JEHOVAH for every animal of the covenant-sacrifice with Abraham, Ge. 15. 9; of which sacrifice the 'heifer' was the first. It is therefore not probable that the allusion is, as Blayney supposes, to a heifer 'lowing after her lost calf'—for such instinctive language of maternal affection is not peculiar to any age; but to an animal devoted to sacrifice, as Moab was to divine judgment. C.

Ver. 36. There are two views of every national calamity. (1) As it is the effect of God's judgment. (2) As it is the work of Satan's malice. Viewed in the first aspect, the believer always acquiesces, frequently rejoices; viewed in the second, he always acquiesces, but often weeps. Thus our Lord wept over Jerusalem at the very moment he announced her doom. Thus the prophet condemns Moab for her sins, but weeps over the ruin her sins are about to accomplish. C.

Ver. 38. House-tops of Moab. The roofs of eastern houses being generally flat, the 'house-top' served as a principal apartment for the assembling of families. C.

Ver. 42. Magnified himself. Set up his own opinion—calling it 'reason'—in opposition to God's revelation; his idols, made by his own hands, in opposition to God's worship; and his own appetites and passions, in opposition to God's law. C.

Ver. 47. Whether this prophecy has yet received any accomplishment is uncertain; but, most probably, the humane policy of Cyrus would extend beyond the Jews to other captives. Its full accomplishment, however, is still future, and waits for the time when 'the kingdoms of this world shall [all] become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ.' Re. 11. 15. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God is the author and manager of all the awful judgments executed upon nations or persons. And with tremendous exactness, activity, and fury, his agents perform their work. Such as could not be ashamed out of their idolatry by his word must be made ashamed of it by his rod, and be convinced by experience that their idols cannot help them. Long outward prosperity is a snare to men's souls; and by it wicked men encourage themselves to more ungodliness. When men enjoy their good things here, they have none to expect in eternity. When God has borne long with sinful nations, they may expect calamities, surprising, terrible, lamentable, shameful, and complicated, but all of them righteous. And it is of infinite mercy if they issue not in everlasting destruction. Nor need presumptuous mockers of God and his people to wonder if their bands be made strong, or if their presumption become the prelude of their ruin.

CHAPTER XLIX.—Ver. 19, 20. Behold, Nebuchadnezzar shall invade your country, as furious as a lion driven from his den by the swelling of Jordan. He shall attack your strongest cities; and, acting under the direction and influence, of all embracing ambition and desire for glory he shall, without control, ravage your whole country.

Ver. 1. Why then doth their king inherit Gad? Rather, 'Why doth' Milcom 'inherit Gad?' Milcom was the chief idol of the Ammonites; see 1 Ki. 11. 5. The Gadites were carried captive into Assyria (2 Ki. 15. 29; 1 Ch. 5. 26), when, it is most probable, the Ammonites took possession of the vacant country. C.

Ver. 12. Whose judgment was not to drink. In every national calamity there is a number of the godly who suffer with the ungodly; and whom, though God may preserve, he yet severely tries by the judgments that fall upon their relatives and friends. See Eze. 14. 12-23. And thus it comes to pass that they 'whose 11 Leave thy fatherless children, [b]I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in me.

12 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, [c]they whose judgment was not to drink of the cup have assuredly drunken; and art thou he that shall [d]altogether go unpunished? thou shalt not go unpunished, but thou shalt surely drink of it.

13 For I have [e]sworn by myself, saith the LORD, that [f]Bozrah shall become a desolation, a reproach, a waste, and a curse; and all the cities thereof shall be perpetual wastes.[g]

14 I have heard a [h]rumour from the LORD, and an ambassador is sent unto the heathen, saying, Gather ye together, and come against her, and rise up to the battle.

15 For, lo, [i]I will make thee small among the heathen, and [j]despised among men.

16 Thy[k] terribleness hath deceived thee, and the pride of thine heart, O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock,[l] that holdest the height of the hill: [m]though thou shouldest make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, saith the LORD.

17 Also[n] Edom shall be a desolation; every one that goeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss at all the plagues thereof.

18 As[o] in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the neighbour cities thereof, saith the LORD, no man shall abide there, neither shall a son of man dwell in it.

19 Behold, he shall come up [p]like a lion[1] from [q]the swelling of Jordan against the habitation of the strong: but I will suddenly make him run away [r]from her;[2] and who is [s]a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for [t]who is like me? and who will appoint me the time?[3] and who is [u]that shepherd[4] that will [v]stand before me?

20 Therefore hear the [w]counsel of the LORD, that he hath taken against Edom; and his purposes, that he hath purposed against the inhabitants of [x]Teman: surely [y]the least of the flock[5] shall draw them out;[6] surely he [z]shall make their habitations desolate with them.

21 The[a] earth is moved at the noise of their fall; at the cry, the noise thereof was heard in the Red sea.[b]

22 Behold, he shall come up and [c]fly as the eagle, and spread his wings over Bozrah: and at that day shall the heart of the mighty men of Edom [d]be [e]as the heart of a woman in her pangs.

23 ¶ Concerning[f] Damascus: Hamath is confounded, and Arpad; for they have heard evil tidings; they are [g]faint-hearted:[7] there is sorrow on the sea;[8] it cannot be quiet.

24 Damascus is [h]waxed feeble, and turneth herself to flee, and fear hath seized on her: anguish and sorrows have taken her, as a woman in travail.

25 How is the [i]city of praise not left, the city of my joy!

26 Therefore[9] her[j] young men shall fall in her streets, and all the men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the LORD of hosts.

27 And I will kindle a [k]fire in the wall of Damascus, and it shall consume the palaces of [l]Ben-hadad.

28 ¶ Concerning[m] Kedar, and concerning the kingdoms[10] of [n]Hazor, which Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon shall smite, thus saith the LORD, [o]Arise ye, go up to Kedar, and spoil the men [p]of the east.[11]

29 Their[q] tents and their flocks shall they take away: they shall take to themselves their curtains, and all their vessels, and their camels; and they shall cry unto them, [r]Fear is on every side.

30 ¶ Flee,[s] get you far off,[12] dwell deep,[13] O ye inhabitants of Hazor, saith the LORD; for [t]Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you, and hath conceived a purpose against you.

31 Arise, get you up unto the wealthy nation,[14] that [u]dwelleth without care, saith the LORD, which have neither gates nor bars, which [v]dwell alone.

32 And their camels [w]shall be a booty, and the multitude of their cattle a spoil; and [x]I will scatter into all winds them that are in the utmost corners;[1] and I will bring their calamity from all sides thereof, saith the LORD.

33 And Hazor[y] shall be a dwelling for [z]dragons, and a desolation for ever: there shall no man abide there, nor any son of man dwell in it.

34 ¶ The word of the LORD that came to Jeremiah the prophet against [a]Elam,[4] in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, saying, 35 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will break [b]the bow of Elam, the chief of their might.

36 And upon Elam will I bring [c]the four winds[5] from the four quarters of heaven, and will[a] scatter them toward all those winds; and there shall be no nation whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come.

BRIDGE OVER THE JORDAN—NEAR WHERE THE ISRAELITES WORSHIPED THE EGYPTIAN CALF. [Jeremiah, xlix:19]—"Behold, he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan against the habitation of the strong." This bridge is over the Hasbeiya branch of the Jordan. The bridge is said to date to the time of the Romans, but is thought to belong to a later date. It has a very solid look and is in need of repairs, but one peculiarity of the Turk is that nothing with which he has to do is ever repaired. The rock-paved roadway you see coming down to the bridge is the road along which we pass from the plain of Huleh to Cæsarea Philippi. This is a wild and picturesque place, and the river underneath is fitly represented by Jeremiah in the sentence "the swelling of the Jordan." The Jordan here dashes down the steep descent, covering the shrubbery on the banks with its spray. It passes in a channel nearly 200 feet deep.

37 For [b]I will cause Elam to be dismayed before their enemies, and before them that seek their life; and I will bring evil upon them, even my fierce anger, saith the LORD; and I [c]will send the sword after them, till I have consumed them:

38 And I will set my throne[e] in Elam, and will destroy from thence the king and the princes, saith the LORD.

39 ¶ But[d] it shall come to pass in the latter days, that I will bring again the captivity of Elam, saith the LORD.[7]

1, 9, 21, 35 The judgment of Babylon. 4, 17, 33 The redemption of Israel.

THE word that the LORD spake [a]against Babylon, and against the land of the Chaldeans, by[1] Jeremiah the prophet.

2 Declare[b] ye among the nations, and publish, and set up[2] a standard;[3] publish, and conceal not: say, Babylon is taken, [c]Bel is confounded, Merodach[4] is broken in pieces; her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces.

3 For [d]out of the north[5] there cometh up a nation against her, which [e]shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein: they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast.

4 ¶ In[g] those days, and in that time, saith the LORD, [h]the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, [i]going and weeping: they shall go, and [j]seek the LORD their God.

5 They [k]shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us [l]join ourselves to the LORD [m]in a perpetual covenant[6] that shall not be forgotten.

6 My people hath been [n]lost sheep; their shepherds[o] have caused them to go astray, they have[q] turned them away on the mountains: they have [r]gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their [s]resting-place.[7]

5 The Elamites it is now impossible to distinguish by name; but many tribes of foreigners, whose original countries are unknown, are to be found in various quarters of the world —of whom the people called 'gipsies' are best known in Europe. But by whatever name the original Elamites are now known, or wherever they may now be captive, God gives them promise of restoration, which, after the example of his promise to the Jews, seems to indicate, not merely conversion to the gospel, but a return to their ancient dwellings.—C.

8 This has been the very language of those (so called) Christian countries in which the Jews have, in former times, been persecuted. Their persecution, whether in the form of assault or robbery, was counted no crime, because the Jews had been guilty of crucifying the Lord, and their persecutors believed or feigned themselves authorized by Providence to inflict retributive punishment. punished, it is in vain for us to hope for an escape. Yea, if he continue his hand on us, we can never recover from our ruins, but must be dreadful and lasting monuments of his justice.—All earthly joy, pomp, power, or bravery in the day of his wrath, do but render our ruin more dreadful. Nor can the most securely situated or the most inoffensive escape from his anger. The most retired are forced into the open world, and made to share in the common misery. And God often wonderfully debases nations before he signally advances them.

CHAPTER L. Ver. 4. In those days. That is, during the days of Babylon's desolation. That desolation still continues, and the conversion and restoration of Israel is still future: but the visible ruin of Babylon is not more certain than the fulfilment of the promise of God to his people Judah and Israel. C.

Ver. 13. Wholly desolate. 'The abundance of the country has vanished as clean away as if the besom of desolation had swept it from north to south,—the whole land from the outskirts of Babylon to the farthest stretch of sight, lying a melancholy waste. Not a habitable spot appears for countless miles' (Sir R. K. Porter's Travels; see Rich, Keith, &c.).—Note, He that would interpret the awful phrase 'wrath of the Lord,' will find a most intelligible exposition in comparing the histories of ancient and modern Babylon. The picture will present conquest pursued, pride inflated, idolatry established, luxury indulged, slavery maintained, mercy forgotten, and ruin, utter ruin, inflicted in return by the hand of a righteous God! C.

Ver. 19. Israel. The distinction between Judah and Israel is not to be overlooked. Judah was restored under Zerubbabel, Ne.i.—Israel never returned. But God has given the promise, and it will yet be fulfilled. See ver. 33. C.

Ver. 20 Satan, as the 'accuser,' will seek for their iniquity, as he did for iniquity in Job, but it shall not be found; because 'they shall have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.' See He. 8.8-12. C.

Ver. 40. Let the infidel compare the ancient with the modern state of Babylon, and the whole with this prophecy—not a description vague and general, but specific and particular—and then let him acknowledge that 'the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy,' and remain an infidel no longer. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Certain but dreadful is the ruin of arrogant sinners, and especially those who oppress or murder the people of God. How unstable are all earthly things! The Medes and Persians, whom the Chaldeans had but lately subdued, now tread their conquerors under their feet. And no idols, no princes, no counsellors, no diviners, no armies, no lofty walls or deep rivers, no wealth or bravery can protect them from the weakest foe. The measure which they had meted out to others is meted out to them again, pressed down and running over. And their fearful judgments exactly correspond to their horrid iniquities.—But in what fearful things in righteousness doth God answer the prayers of his people! Yet certain is their deliverance, their restoration to fellowship with God, to safety, comfort, and full forgiveness. And if we begin to be tenderly affected under God's corrections, it is a token that our merciful deliverance is near. In promoting a good cause, it is good to be zealously affected, and to be among the first to lead the way. It is highly honourable to return to God and our covenant obligations to him. And happy is it when the cruel insults and upbraiding of our enemies are exchanged for the smiles, the vindications of our God. And when our hath devoured him, and last this Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones.[2]

18 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will punish the king of Babylon and his land, [v]as I have punished the king of Assyria.[3]

19 And[w] I will bring Israel again to his habitation, and he shall feed on [x]Carmel and Bashan, and his soul shall be satisfied upon mount Ephraim and [y]Gilead.

20 In those days, and in that time, saith the LORD, [z]the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and [a]there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: for I will pardon them whom [b]I reserve.

21 ¶ Go[c] up against the land of Merathaim,[4] even against it, and against the inhabitants of [d]Pekod:[5] waste and utterly destroy after them, saith the LORD, and do [e]according to all that I have commanded thee.

22 A [f]sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction.

23 How[g] is the hammer[6] of the whole earth cut asunder and broken! how is Babylon become a desolation among the nations!

24 I[h] have laid a snare for thee, and thou art also taken, O Babylon, and thou wast not aware: thou art found, and also caught, because thou hast[i] striven against the LORD.[7]

25 The[j] LORD hath opened his armoury, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation: for this [k]is the work of the Lord GOD of hosts in the land of the Chaldeans.

26 Come[l] against her from the utmost[8] border, open her [m]storehouses; [n]cast her[1] up as heaps, and destroy her utterly: let nothing of her be left.

27 Slay all her bullocks;[2] let them go down to the slaughter: woe unto them! for [o]their day is come, the time of their visitation.[3]

28 The[p] voice of them that flee and escape out of the land of Babylon, to declare in Zion the vengeance of the LORD our God, the vengeance of his [q]temple.[4]

29 Call[r] together the archers against Babylon: all ye that bend the bow, camp against it round about; let none thereof escape: [s]recompense her according to her work; according to all that she hath done, do unto her: for [t]she hath been proud against the LORD, against the Holy One of Israel.

30 Therefore[u] shall her young men fall in the streets, and all her men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the LORD.

31 Behold, I am against thee, [v]O thou most proud,[5] saith the Lord GOD of hosts: [w]for thy day is come, the time that I will visit thee.

32 And[x] the most proud[6] shall stumble and fall, and none shall raise him up: and I [y]will kindle a fire in his cities, and it shall devour all round about him.

33 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [z]The children of Israel and the children of Judah were oppressed together; and all that took them captives held them fast; they refused to let them go.

34 Their[a] Redeemer is strong; the LORD of hosts is his name; he shall [b]throughly plead their cause, that he may [c]give rest to the land, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon.

35 ¶ A sword is upon the Chaldeans, saith the LORD, and upon the inhabitants of Babylon, [d]and upon her princes, and upon her wise men.

36 A sword is upon the [7]liars,[8] and they shall [e]dote: a sword is [f]upon her mighty men, and they shall be dismayed.

37 A sword is upon their horses, and upon their chariots, and upon all [g]the mingled [9]people that are in the midst of her; and they shall become [h]as women: a sword is upon her treasures; and [i]they shall be robbed.

38 A drought is upon her waters;[1] and they shall be dried up: for it is [k]the land of graven images, and they are mad[2] upon their idols.[3]

39 Therefore[l] the wild beasts of the desert, with the wild beasts of the islands, shall dwell there, and the owls shall dwell therein: and it shall be no more inhabited for [m]ever: neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation.[4]

40 As[n] God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and the neighbour cities thereof, saith the LORD; so shall no man abide there, neither shall any son of man dwell therein.

41 Behold,[o] a people shall come from the north, and a great nation, and many kings shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

42 They[p] shall hold the bow and the lance; [q]they are cruel,[5] and will not show mercy: [r]their voice shall roar like the sea, and they shall ride upon horses, every one put in array, like a man to the battle, against thee, O daughter of Babylon.

43 The[s] king of Babylon hath heard the report of them, and his hands waxed feeble; anguish took hold of him, and pangs as of a woman in travail.

44 Behold, he shall come up [t]like a lion from [9] This is a bold but graphic figure. It describes in a very striking manner alike the cruelty and impunity exercised upon the Jews by the Assyrians and Babylonians. In God's mysterious providence they were his instruments for punishing the Israelites because of their sin: but they themselves were not on that account free from blame. Love of conquest, military glory, and human passion moved them to acts of barbarity, for which they and their countries were in turn terribly punished. The desolation of Babylon is a wonderful commentary on the words of the prophet.—C.

[6] This remarkable prophecy has been fulfilled. The site of Babylon is now occupied by heaps of rubbish, dry beds of ancient canals, vast mounds of crumbling brick, mingled with fragments of glass and pottery. The soil is nitrous, and destroys vegetation, rendering the region a naked and hideous waste, re-echoing only the dismal sounds of the owl and jackal, of the hyæna and lawless robber.' So terribly desolate is the place, so completely has the great city been swept away, that its site was long a mystery. Now that it has been identified, modern research has resulted more and more to illustrate the prophetic judgments.—C.

CHAPTER LI. Ver. 13. Thou Babylon, situated upon the great river Euphrates, and who rulest over many nations, the wealth of which thou hast collected by thy conquests, now the time fixed by God for the increase of thy wealth is finished. 38–46. Their mad roaring at their drunken and idolatrous revels shall be turned into fearful howlings: and while they are inflamed with wine the Persians shall murder them, their king, and their princes. At their idolatrous festival in honour of their god Sheshach, shall Babylon be surprised by multitudes of irresistible enemies, and at last become quite desolate, and a fen or lake.—And while their idols shall be destroyed by the Persians, who hate images, the spoils which they took from the the swelling of Jordan unto the habitation of the strong; but I will make them suddenly run away from her:[6] and who is [a]a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for who is like me? and [a]who will appoint me the time?[7] and who is that [b]shepherd that will stand before me?[8]

45 Therefore hear ye [c]the counsel of the LORD that he hath taken against Babylon, and his purposes that he hath purposed against the land of the Chaldeans; surely [d]the least of the flock shall draw them out; surely he shall make their habitation desolate with them.

46 At[e] the noise of the taking of Babylon the earth is moved, and the cry is heard among the nations.

CHAPTER LI.

1 The severe judgment of God against Babylon in revenge of Israel. 59 Jeremiah delivereth the book of this prophecy to Seraiah, to be cast into Euphrates, in token of the perpetual sinking of Babylon.

THUS saith the LORD, Behold, [a]I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in the midst[1] of them [b]that rise up against me, a [c]destroying wind;[2]

2 And will send unto Babylon [d]fanners, that shall fan her, and shall empty her land: for in the day of [e]trouble they shall be against her round about.

3 Against him that bendeth [f]let the archer bend his bow, and against him that lifteth himself up in his brigandine:[3] and [h]spare ye not her young men; destroy ye utterly all her host.

4 Thus the slain shall fall in the land of the Chaldeans, and they that are [i]thrust through in her streets.

5 For[j] Israel hath not been forsaken, [k]nor Judah of his God, of the LORD of hosts; [l]though their land was filled with sin against[4] the Holy One of Israel.

6 Flee[m] out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity: for this is [n]the time of the LORD's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompense.

7 Babylon hath been a [p]golden cup in the LORD's hand, that [q]made all the earth drunken: the nations have drunken of her wine; therefore the nations are mad.

8 Babylon is [r]suddenly fallen and destroyed: howl[s] for her; [t]take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed.

9 We would have healed Babylon,[5] but she is [u]not healed: [v]forsake her, and let us go every one into his own country; for [w]her judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies.

10 The LORD hath brought forth our righteousness:[6] come, and let us declare in Zion the work of the LORD our God.

9 Some think these words addressed to Cyrus, 'king of the Medes,' ver. 11, 27, names to Babylon and its king (comp. ver.25). But are they not rather addressed to 'Israel, the rod of his inheritance,' and to be explained by reference to Ps.2.9-12; 149.6-8, in which the final destruction of all idolatrous and wicked nations, as the enemies of Messiah, is described and celebrated? This interpretation seems sustained by ver. 24, in which the party addressed as 'God's battle-axe' appears to have been spectators of the cruelty of the Chaldeans in Zion. Comp. ver. 34, 35.—C.

12 Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon,[8] make the watch strong, set up the watchmen, prepare the ambushes:[9] for the LORD [b]hath both devised and done that which he spake against the inhabitants of Babylon.[1]

13 O thou that dwellest upon [c]many [2]waters, [d]abundant in treasures, [e]thine end is come, and [g]the measure of thy covetousness.

15 He[j] hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heaven by his [k]understanding.

16 When[l] he uttereth his voice, there is a multitude[5] of waters in the heavens, and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth: he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

17 Every[m] man is brutish by his [6]knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image:[7] for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

nations around, especially from the Jewish temple, and dedicated to their idols, shall be forced back, and restored to the owners: and no more shall multitudes bring presents, or come to worship their idols. Hasten out of Babylon as far as ye can, O ye Jews, and let not the rumours of Cyrus' invasion, or the revolt of the Chaldean lords, in the least terrify you, for God will by these very means work out your deliverance. 50, 51. O ye Jews who have been preserved from the slaughter at the taking of Babylon, embrace the first opportunity of returning to Canaan, to rebuild your temple to God; deeply ashamed that, for your fathers'

25 Behold, I am against thee, O [a]destroying mountain,[2] saith the LORD, which destroyest[3] all the earth; and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain.

26 And [z]they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations; but thou shalt be desolate for ever,[4] saith the LORD.

27 Set[y] ye up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, [x]call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz; appoint a captain against her; [5]cause the horses to come up as the rough caterpillars.[6]

28 Prepare against her the nations, with [c]the kings of the Medes, the captains thereof, and all the rulers thereof, and all the land of his dominion.

29 And [b]the land shall tremble and sorrow: for [c]every purpose of the LORD shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant.

30 The[d] mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, they have remained in their holds; their might hath failed; they [e]became as women: [g]they have burned her dwelling-places; her[h] bars are broken.

31 One[i] post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to show [j]the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end, 32 And that the [k]passages[7] are stopped, and the [8]reeds[9] they have burned with fire, and the men of war are affrighted.

33 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, The daughter of Babylon is like a[l] threshing-floor, it is time to thresh her:[1] yet a little while, and the time of her [m]harvest shall come.

34 Nebuchadrezzar[o] the king of Babylon hath devoured me, he hath crushed me, he hath made me an empty vessel, he hath swallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delicates, he hath cast me out.

35 The[p] violence[2] done to me and to [q]my flesh[3] be [r]upon Babylon, shall the inhabitant[4] of Zion say; and, My blood upon the inhabitants of Chaldea, shall Jerusalem say.

36 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, [s]I will plead thy cause, and take vengeance for thee; and I [t]will dry up her sea,[5] and make her springs dry.

37 And[u] Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment and an hissing without an inhabitant.

38 They[v] shall roar together like lions: they shall yell[6] as lions' whelps.

39 In[w] their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken,[7] that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the LORD.

40 I[y] will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter, like rams with he-goats.

41 How is [8]Sheshach[8] taken! and how is the praise of the whole [a]earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations!

42 The[b] sea[9] is come up upon Babylon: she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof.

43 Her[c] cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness, a land wherein no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby.

44 And[d] I will punish Bel in Babylon, and [e]I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up:[1] and the nations shall not flow together any more unto him; yea, [f]the wall of Babylon shall fall.

45 My people, [h]go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver ye every man his soul from the fierce anger of the LORD.

46 And, lest[2] your heart faint, and ye fear for the [i]rumour that shall be heard in the land: [j]a rumour shall both come one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumour, and [k]violence in the land, ruler against ruler.

47 Therefore, behold, the days come, that [l]I will do judgment[3] upon the graven images of Babylon: and [n]her whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall in the midst of her.

48 Then[o] the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, shall sing for Babylon: for [p]the spoilers shall come unto her from the north, saith the LORD.

49 [4]As[q] Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall, so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth.[5]

50 Ye[r] that have escaped the sword, go away, stand not still: remember the LORD afar off, and let [s]Jerusalem come into your mind.

51 We[t] are confounded,[6] because we have heard reproach: shame hath covered our faces; for [u]strangers are come into the sanctuaries of the LORD's house.

52 Wherefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that [v]I will do judgment upon her graven images: and through all her land the [z]wounded shall groan.

thiquities, it has so long lain in rubbish, and God been so much reproached on that account.

Ver. 7. The prosperity that God graciously bestowed upon Babylon, the nations admired, the luxury into which her prosperity betrayed her, the nations imitated, the idolatry into which her vain imagination fell, the nations adopted: in her drunkenness they became drunken, and in her ruin they were overwhelmed. C.

Ver. 19. The Portion. God is called the 'portion'—the parof her strength, yet [z]from me shall spoilers come unto her, saith the LORD.

54 [a]A sound of a cry cometh from Babylon, and great destruction from the land of the Chaldeans:

55 Because [b]the LORD hath spoiled Babylon, and destroyed out of her the great voice;[7] when her waves[8] do roar like great waters, a noise of their voice is uttered:

56 Because[c] the spoiler is come upon her, even upon Babylon, and [d]her mighty men are taken; every one of [e]their bows is broken: for the[f] LORD God of recompenses shall surely requite.

57 And [h]I will make drunk[9] her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the [i]King, whose name is The LORD of hosts.

58 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [j]The broad walls[2] of Babylon[3] shall be utterly broken,[4] and her [k]high gates shall [l]be burned with fire; and the[l] people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.

59 ¶ The word which Jeremiah the prophet commanded Seraiah the son of [m]Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, when he went with[5] Zedekiah the king of Judah into Babylon, in the fourth year of his reign. And this Seraiah was a [6]quiet prince.[7]

60 So Jeremiah [o]wrote in a book all the evil that should come upon Babylon, even [p]all these words that are written against Babylon.

61 And Jeremiah said to [q]Seraiah, When thou comest to Babylon, and shalt see, and shalt [r]read all these words;

62 Then shalt thou say, O LORD, thou hast spoken against this place, [s]to cut it off, that none shall remain in it, neither man nor beast, but that it shall be desolate[8] for ever.

63 And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that [t]thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates:

64 And thou shalt say, [u]Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her: and [v]they shall be weary. Thus[9] far[1] are the words of Jeremiah.

* The first 27 verses of this chapter are in substance, and to a great extent also in language, identical with 2 Ki. xxiv. 18–xxv. 21. The two passages are no doubt only different versions of the same document, and were written by the same author. It has been questioned by many whether Jeremiah could have been the author, as the short remark which precedes appears to convey the idea that they were composed by another. It seems to me highly probable that as the books of Jeremiah and Lamentations were originally one, the book of the Prophecies concluded with ch. li., and ch. lii. formed the historical introduction to the Lamentations.—F.

No. But being angry with Zedekiah on account of his sin, he adjudged him to be given over to his own pride, impatience, and evil counsel: stimulated by which, he devised the revolt against which he had been prophetically warned; and thus far, and no further, 'through the anger of the Lord,' he 'rebelled.'—C.

t In 2 Ki. 25. 8 Nebuzar-adan is said to have come to Jerusalem on 'the seventh,' here he is said to have come 'on the tenth day of the month.' How may these apparent contradictions be reconciled? Most easily. He came on the seventh, and continued collecting the spoil day after day, retiring, it may be, from the city at night, till the tenth, when he again 'came' back and burned both the temple and the city. The Jews still keep two fasts in memory of these calamities.—C.

eleven years in Jerusalem: and his mother's name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.[2]

2 And [b]he did that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD, [c]according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

3 For [d]through the anger of the LORD[3] it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, till he had cast them out from his presence, that [e]Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

4 ¶ And it came to pass in the [f]ninth year of his reign, in the [h]tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came, he and all his army, against Jerusalem, [i]and pitched against it, and built forts against it round about.

5 So the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

6 And in [j]the fourth month, in the ninth day of the month, [k]the famine was sore in the city, so that there was no bread for the people of the land.[4]

7 Then [l]the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the gate between the two walls, which was by the king's garden; (now the Chaldeans were by the city round about;) and they went by the way of the plain.

8 ¶ But the army of the Chaldeans [m]pursued after the king, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho; and all his army was scattered from him.

9 Then [o]they took the king, and carried him up unto the king of Babylon to Riblah, in the land of Hamath; where he gave judgment upon him.

10 And[p] the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes: he slew also all the princes of Judah in Riblah.

11 Then [q]he put out the eyes of[5] Zedekiah; and the king of Babylon bound him in [6]chains, and carried him to Babylon, and put him in prison[7] till the day of his death.

12 ¶ Now in the [r]fifth month, in the tenth day of the month, which was the nineteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard,[8] which served[9] the king of Babylon, into Jerusalem,[1]

13 And[s] burned the house of the LORD, and the king's house; and all the houses of Jerusalem, and all the houses of the great men, burned he with fire.

14 And all the army of the Chaldeans, that ental endowment of his people—because, in the act of faith, the believer makes choice of 'God in Christ,' as his own God, his 'all and in all,' Ps. 119. 57, even that Christ 'by whom, and for whom,' all things are and were created, Col. 1. 16: Re. 5. 11. C.

Ver. 25. A burnt mountain. A burning mountain often overwhelms with lava the cities and plains in its neighbourhood. So the fall of Babylon, by the sudden revulsion of trade, and wreck of property, must have overwhelmed its connected or dependent countries in common if not equal ruin. C.

Ver. 31. Babylon is described by most credible ancient writers as a square of 15 miles each side; the Euphrates running through the middle. The city was taken by turning the river out of its ordinary course—the enemy entering through the empty channel. Such a city might, therefore, readily be taken 'at one end' before any alarm had reached the other. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Fearful are the destructions which await those who have long been employed in executing God's judgments upon others. And nothing more hastens their ruin than their insolence against God and abuse of his people. Even when he frowns upon these himself, he cannot endure others to insult, murder, or oppress them. And it is easy for that almighty God who is infinitely superior to idols, to make his counsel to stand, and to do all his pleasure. Strong and brave are the weakest when God animates them to the battle: and weak and dispirited the strongest when God fights against them. Vain is everything earthly, as all may issue at last in such misery and desolation. But, alas! how dreadful must be the last, the eternal, destruction

SUMMER HOUSE OF SHAMMIAH, DAMASCUS—WHERE NAAMAN THE SYRIAN LIVED (I. Kings, xx, xxii; II. Kings, v:6). [Jeremiah, lii:9.]—"Then they took the king, and carried him unto the king of Babylon to Riblah, in the land of Hamath; where he gave judgment upon him." The army of the Chaldeans pursued after and overtook King Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho. In going from Jericho to Riblah and Hamath they would necessarily pass through Damascus, for it was the most direct route between Jericho andRiblah. We give a picture of a summer house in Damascus to illustrate this important event in Jewish history. It was at Riblah that the Eyyptian king Pharaoh Necho put the youthful Jehoahaz in chains, and made Eliakim king, as we learn from II. Kings, xxiii:29-35. Nebuchadnezzar also encamped here while he directed his military operations in Palestine. This summer house in Damascus is the property of Shammiah, a very wealthy Jew.

REVOLT IN PRISON, DAMASCUS—A CITY CONQUERED AND GARRISONED BY DAVID. [Jeremiah, lii:25-26.]—In the Scripture above referred to, we have an account of the taking of Seraiah, the chief priest, and Zephaniah, the second priest, and others found in the city of Jerusalem, to the king of Babylon at Riblah. Damascus is upon the direct route between Jerusalem and Riblah, and the prisoners above referred to passed this city before reaching Riblah, where they were smitten and put to death by the king of Babylon. The illustration we give above is of a scene witnessed by the writer. The building to the right is the city prison. Five hundred men confined here for various offenses had mutinied, and were being shot to death from the top of the prison by the guards. We witnessed the whole scene from the veranda of our hotel which stood just across the Abana river from the prison. Several men were killed before the mutiny was quelled.

were with the captain of the guard, brake down all the walls of Jerusalem round about.

15 Then[t] Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive certain of the poor of the people, and the residue of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to the king of Babylon, and the rest of the multitude.

16 But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard left certain of the poor of the land,[2] for vine-dressers[3] and for husbandmen.

17 ¶ Also[x] the pillars of brass that were in the house of the LORD, and the bases, and the brazen sea that was in the house of the LORD, the Chaldeans brake, and carried all the brass of them to Babylon.

18 The caldrons also, and the shovels,[4] and the snuffers, and the bowls,[5] and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass, wherewith they ministered, took they away.

19 And the basons, and the fire-pans,[6] and the bowls, and the caldrons,[7] and the candlesticks, and the spoons, and the cups; that which was of gold in gold, and that which was of silver in silver, took the captain of the guard away.

20 The[z] two pillars, one sea, and twelve brazen bulls that were under the bases, which king Solomon had made in the house of the LORD: the brass[7] of all these vessels was without weight.

21 And concerning the pillars, [y]the height of one pillar was eighteen cubits, and a fillet[8] of twelve cubits did compass it; and the thickness thereof was four fingers: it was hollow.

22 And a [c]chapiter of brass was upon it; and the height of one chapiter was five cubits,[9] with net-work and pomegranates upon the chapiters round about, all of brass: the second pillar also and the pomegranates were like unto these.

23 And there were ninety and six pomegranates on a side; and all the pomegranates upon the net-work were an hundred[1] round about.

24 ¶ And[b] the captain of the guard took Seraiah[c] the chief priest, and [d]Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door:[2]

25 He took also out of the city an [e]eunuch, which had the charge of the men of war; and seven men of them that were near the king's person,[4] which were found in the city; and the principal scribe of the host,[5] who mustered the people of the land; and threescore men of the people of the land, that were found in the midst of the city.

26 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard took them, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah.

27 And[e] the king of Babylon smote them, and put them to death in [g]Riblah, in the land of Hamath. Thus [h]Judah was carried away captive out of his own land.

28 ¶ This is the people whom Nebuchadrezzar carried away [6]captive: [i]in the seventh year, three thousand Jews and three and twenty:[7]

29 In[j] the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar he carried away captive from Jerusalem eight hundred thirty and two persons:[8]

30 In the three and twentieth year of Nebuchadrezzar, Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive of the Jews seven hundred forty and five persons:[9] all the persons were four thousand and six hundred.

31 ¶ And [k]it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, in the five and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon, in the first year of his reign, [l]lifted up[1] the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah, and brought him forth out of prison,

32 And spake kindly[2] unto him, and set his throne above the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon, 33 And [n]changed his prison garments; and he did continually [o]eat bread before him all the days of his life.

34 And for his diet,[3] there was a continual diet given him of the king of Babylon, every [p]day a portion,[4] until the day of his death, all the days of his life.

of the wicked, of which all the overthrows of cities and nations are but alarming preludes! Quickly should we flee from among them, that we share not in their sins and their plagues. In every affliction we suffer on earth, let us think on God, and remember his mercy and truth. And though the accomplishment of his words be ever so unlikely, let us never stagger at his promise through unbelief. Is there anything too hard for the LORD?

CHAPTER LII. REFLECTIONS.—How corrupt dignified persons, churches, and nations sometimes become! But God casts out none from his church or protection till they first cast off him. If sinners wilfully depart from him he gives them up to their own folly; and often nothing more is necessary for their destruction. Iniquity not only deserves, but hastens men's ruin upon them. And however sweet rebellion against God be at first, it is dreadful and bitter in its fruits. And the folly of parents often plunges their children into ruin. Divine ordinances, long abused, are removed at last. And external privileges, instead of exercising our sins, or exempting from miseries, become a grievous aggravation of both. Nor can our unbelief make void God's promises any more than his threatenings.—In this world all things are in a perpetual revolution; new kings, new laws, new conditions, new frames. And long nights of trouble often usher in joyful deliverances. Our times are all in God's hand, as well as the hearts of all men with whom we deal. And he can make our most wicked and infatuated oppressors to favour us whenever he sees meet.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF JEREMIAH.

Jeremiah, as a prophet, 'hated without a cause,' or simply for telling the truth, for denouncing sin and exhorting to holiness; and persecuted to bonds, imprisonment, and most probably to a cruel and ignominious death, may justly be regarded as an eminent type of Messiah in his prophetic office. Each typical person is one who has just a certain measure of the Spirit of Christ bestowed upon him—is placed in circumstances, to a certain extent, similar to those in which Messiah is to be placed—and consequently exhibits a certain measure of the temper and character which, 'in the fulness of the time,' Christ was intended to exhibit, of the work he was fitted to accomplish, and of the suffering he was destined to endure. In all these respects Jeremiah was eminently a type of Messiah, whose day and kingdom he so clearly foresaw; see especially ch. 23. 5, 6; 33. 14–18. In one point of view, the character and circumstances of their respective times, there seems, no doubt, a wide difference; yet the sensual idolatry of the days of Jeremiah was not more idolatrous than the self-righteousness and traditions of the days of Christ, that had made 'void the law of God,' and converted the proud Pharisees into worshippers of themselves. The opposition, ingratitude, hatred, and cruelty with which Jeremiah was treated by his countrymen, are striking similitudes of their subsequent treatment of Messiah. All these things, however, the Lord bore patiently, and prayed for the forgiveness of them that crucified him; and here Jeremiah has been supposed to have come short, and has been accused of an impatience and vehemence indicative of the spirit of a mere man, rather than of an inspired prophet. That neither Jeremiah nor any other has ever attained the full 'measure of the stature of Christ,' will readily be admitted; but that the accusations against him are unfounded, the offspring rather of a spurious sentimentalism, than of the 'charity that thinketh no evil,' it is hoped the previous notes have demonstrated. And while it is neither right, necessary, nor permissible, to defend, or even to palliate, an error in the servants of God; it is right, and an imperative duty, to defend them against every unfounded accusation. In all the other attributes of a type Jeremiah will be seen a striking image of his future Lord, and especially in the following points:—(1) In the spirit of self-sacrifice, when he prefers the companionship of his wretched and ungrateful kindred to all the splendour and respect so generously proffered at the court of Babylon. (2) In the grief of heart he was called to endure. How accurately does he therein resemble the 'Man of Sorrows,' when he longs to weep 'day and night for the slain of the daughter of his people!' (3) In the unshrinking boldness with which he denounced sin, and the affectionate earnestness with which he called sinners to repentance. (4) In the untiring energy with which, during a long and turbulent period, he continued to prosecute the work of his ministry; so that, like his Lord, he might well nigh say, 'The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up.' All these, with other graces, combined to shadow out in the servant, what his Master would be at his appearing. And 'all these things happened for our ensamples, and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come,' 1 Co. 10. 11.

As an internal evidence of the antiquity of the book, it is not unworthy of remark that the months are reckoned by numbers; first, second, &c., a mode which was not used after the captivity, for during the seventy years the Jews had learned, and afterwards continued to use, the Chaldaic names.

THE # LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH

Are an appendix to his predictions; written not in the foresight, but on observing the desolations which they bewail;—not for Josiah's death, of whom there is not the smallest hint in the book, but for the destruction of Jerusalem and its temple, and the unhinging of the Jewish church and state by Nebuchadnezzar. The composition is poetic and singular, each verse, in each chapter, beginning with a different letter of the alphabet, in order, as in some of the Psalms; only in the third every three verses begin with the same letter, somewhat in the form of Ps. cxix. Nothing can be conceived more tender, expressive, and affecting than the descriptions. The grand design of them is to lead the captives to repentance and humiliation for their sins before God, and to inspire them with some hopes of deliverance.

[The author's name is not mentioned in this book, and therefore some have questioned whether it proceeded from the pen of Jeremiah. There is no good reason, however, to doubt the authorship. Jewish tradition reaching back beyond the Christian era ascribes it to Jeremiah; and in a verse prefixed to the Septuagint translation, and apparently of the same date, Jeremiah is mentioned as the author. The verse is as follows: 'And it came to pass after Israel had been carried away captive, and Jerusalem had been laid waste, that Jeremiah sat weeping, and lamented with this lamentation, and said.' The internal evidence is in entire accord with the historical. The writer was manifestly an eye-witness of the troubles he laments. The language and style, too, closely resemble those of the prophecies. P.

The Book of LAMENTATIONS may be considered as a sequel to those prophecies of Jeremiah which related to the Chaldean invasion, and the subsequent ruin of Judea, and the captivity or dispersion of the Jews. And although by Josephus, Usher, and others, it has been considered as referring to the death of Josiah (2 Ch. 35. 25), yet the description of the 'captivity' (ch. 1. 3), of the complete ruin of Jerusalem (ch. 4. 5, 12), and of the capture of the king (ch. 4. 20), seems quite conclusive for referring the whole book to the days of Zedekiah.

The book is divided into five chapters, each of which contains a distinct subject of lamentation, subdivided into twenty-two stanzas, according to the letters of the Hebrew alphabet. In the first four chapters the stanzas begin with the letters following in alphabetical order. In the first two chapters each stanza forms a triplet, except the seventh of the first, and the nineteenth of the second, which have each a supernumerary line. In the third chapter each stanza consists of three verses, which all commence with the same letter; so that the whole alphabet is thrice repeated. In the fourth and fifth chapters the stanzas are merely couplets, the fifth chapter being the only one not alphabetically arranged.

This arrangement is not to be considered as originating merely in the personal taste of the prophet, but as divinely directed for some special purposes. Among these purposes, it may be useful to note the following. (1) The Jewish and the Christian religions (and which yet are not two, but one religion, under two forms or dispensations, and calculated for two conditions of mankind, the local and the diffused, the self-governing and the governed); these are the only religions that have ever made education—the education of all ranks, without exception, an integral and necessary part of their constitution. They are, in a word, the only intellectual forms of religion; every false form being calculated either to tolerate ignorance or foster sensuality; and every false, superstitious, and apostatical form of Judaism and Christianity being more or less perverted to the same purposes. Now the alphabet containing the elements of all intellectual education, it is not surprising that an intellectual religion should embody some of its most important documents in an alphabetical form, so that the minds of children under instruction (see De. 6. 6) might associate their first steps in learning with the holy Word of the Lord. No doubt there are those who would pronounce such association unfavourable to future religious impressions; inasmuch as the first steps in learning are generally felt as a toil, and endured but as a slavery. But this, be it remembered, depends altogether upon the temper and the manner of the instructor, who generally has it in his power, by a judicious commixture of kindness and authority, to render a really intellectual education not only tolerable, but agreeable and delightful. (2) It is by no means improbable that, by adopting the alphabetical arrangement in his 'LAMENTATIONS,' the prophet meant to inculcate that sorrow was now the proper lesson which Judah and Israel were called to study; while the threefold repetition would, not ineptly, shadow forth the long-continued succession of afflictions which they were destined to undergo. Nor is it contrary to the emblematical manner of the prophets to conclude, that the dropping of the alphabetical form in the last chapter—which consists of an earnest prayer—was intended to show, that when Judah and Israel should return and call upon the name of the Lord, then should their lesson of sorrows have an end, and the joy of their heart be renewed, ver. 15, 21. (3) This alphabetic elegy, this funeral dirge of Zion, may well remind the believer of Him who came near 'the city, and wept over it.' And by comparing ch. 5. 18, 19, with Ps. 102. 25, and He. 1. 10–12, the LORD, before whom the prophet pleads and bemoans the melancholy ruin of his church and his country, is found to be the 'King of Zion,' the Lord Christ, who, in the book of Revelation, ch. 1. 8, is styled the Alpha and Omega, the whole alphabet, as it were the study and instructor of his church. C.]

CHAPTER I.

1 The miserable estate of Jerusalem by reason of her sin. 12 She complaineth of her grief, 18 and confesseth God's judgments to be righteous.

HOW doth the city [c]sit solitary, that [b]was full of people! how is she become [c]as a widow! she that was [d]great[1] among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become [e]tributary!

2 She [f]weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks; [k]among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her: all her friends have dealt treacherously with her, they are become her enemies.

3 Judah[i] is gone into captivity, because of affliction, and because of great[2] servitude; [j]she dwelleth among the heathen, she findeth no rest: all [k]her persecutors overtook her between the straits.[3]

4 The[l] ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts: all her gates are desolate; [m]her priests sigh, her virgins are afflicted, and she is in bitterness.

5 Her[o] adversaries are the chief, her enemies prosper: for [p]the LORD hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions: [q]her children are gone into captivity before the enemy.

6 And from the daughter of Zion [r]all her beauty is departed: [s]her princes are become like harts that find no pasture, and they are gone without strength before the pursuer.

7 Jerusalem [r]remembered, in the days of her affliction and of her miseries, all her pleasant[4] things that she had in the days of old, when her[u] people fell into the hand of the enemy, and none did help her: the adversaries [v]saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths.

8 Jerusalem[w] hath grievously sinned; [y]therefore she is removed:[5] all that honoured her, despise her, because [z]they have seen her nakedness; yea, she sigheth, and turneth backward.

9 Her[a] filthiness is in her skirts; she [b]remembereth not her last end; therefore she [c]came down wonderfully: [d]she had no comforter. O LORD, behold my affliction; for the enemy hath magnified[e] himself.

10 The adversary [g]hath spread out his hand upon all her pleasant[6] things: for she hath seen that [h]the heathen entered into her sanctuary, whom thou didst command that [i]they should not enter into thy congregation.

11 All her people sigh, [j]they seek bread; they have given their pleasant things for meat to relieve the soul:[7] see,[k] O LORD, and consider; for I am [l]become vile.

12 ¶ Is it[8] nothing to you, all ye that pass by?[9] behold, and see if [n]there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the LORD hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger.

13 From [o]above hath he sent fire into my bones, and it prevaileth against them: [p]he hath spread a net for my feet; he hath turned me back; [q]he hath made me desolate and faint all the day.

14 The[r] yoke of my transgressions is bound by his hand; they are wreathed, and come up upon my neck; he hath made my strength to fall; the Lord [s]hath delivered me [t]into their hands, from whom [u]I am not able to rise up.

15 The Lord [v]hath trodden under foot all my mighty men in the midst of me; he hath called an assembly against me to crush my young men: the Lord [w]hath trodden the [1]virgin, the daughter of Judah, as in a wine-press.[2]

16 For[x] these things I weep: mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the comforter that should relieve[3] my soul is far from me: [y]my children are desolate, because the enemy prevailed.

17 Zion[z] spreadeth forth her hands, and there is none to comfort her: [a]the LORD hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be [b]round about him: Jerusalem is [c]as a menstruous woman among them.

18 ¶ The[d] LORD is righteous; for [e]I have rebelled against his commandment:[4] hear,[f] I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow: [h]my virgins and my young men are gone into captivity.

19 I[i] called for my lovers, but they deceived me; [j]my priests and mine elders gave up the ghost in the city, while they sought their meat to relieve their souls.[5]

20 Behold,[k] O LORD, for I am in distress; [l]my bowels are troubled; mine heart is turned within me; [m]for I have [o]grievously rebelled: [p]abroad the sword bereaveth, at home there is as death.

21 They[q] have heard that I sigh; there is none to comfort me: all mine enemies have heard

CHAPTER I. Ver. 13, 14. By his devouring judgments he has consumed all our strength. He has entangled us so that we cannot escape. He has most furiously debased and destroyed us and all that we had. The punishment and bondage which we undergo for our sins, are bound so fast on us that we cannot shake them off: and our sufferings are so twisted together that we cannot break through them and escape.

Ver. 1. How doth the city sit solitary! When Jerusalem was taken by Titus Vespasian, the Roman emperor had a coin struck, upon which is a palm-tree, the emblem of Judea, and beneath it a solitary woman, the emblem of Jerusalem, sitting with her head leaning sadly upon her hand, with the legend, 'Judea capta.'—How is she become as a widow! Deprived of her earthly king, who is a captive, and rejected, and outcast from her God,—a widow indeed: for 'her Maker was her husband,' Is. 54. 5.—How hath she become tributary! First to Pharaoh-necho, king of Egypt, and now to the emperor of Babylon. C.

Ver. 3. Because of great servitude. As a punishment for her sins in not emancipating her slaves. See Je. 34. 17; Ne. 5. 1–13. And O that slave-holding nations, called Christian, would take warning from the recorded judgments of the slave-holding Jews! C.

Ver. 7. Did mock at her sabbaths. The offence of the Sabbath is not its existence:—for all nations are willing to keep days of rest and festival. Its offence is its strictness, and its religious separation from all unnecessary secular employments and vain amusements. And it is well worthy of remark, that in every effort made for the 'better observance of the Lord's-day,' which is the 'Christian Sabbath,' a system of 'mocking' similar to that of the days of Jeremiah has uniformly been employed as one of the chief weapons of libertine opposition. C.

Ver. 11. Their pleasant things. Their jewels, to which the civilized nations of the East are strongly attached, either as personal ornaments or family relics, and with which they will not part unless in the last extremity of hunger. C.

Ver. 12. All ye that pass by. An appeal to all travellers, whether those who originally visited, or continue to visit, the actual ruins of Jerusalem and Judea, or to those who read at a distance the account of these ruins, either as matter of curiosity, historic research, or prophetical illustration. The parable of the traveller, Lu. 10. 30, who lay plundered, wounded, and half-dead, while the priest, the chief official of mercy, only glances at him, and 'passes by on the other side;' and the Levite, the priest's subordinate agent, 'comes and looks upon him,' and then, like his superior, also 'passes by on the other side,' forms an apt illustration of the grounds of this complaint; and, alas! too true a picture of the cold-blooded charity of the world—a charity which Christianity has done much to vitalize; but which still comes far short of the glory of the living God. C.

Ver. 21. They are glad, &c. To be indifferent to the calamity of my trouble; they [r]are glad that thou hast done it: [s]thou wilt bring the day[6] that thou hast called,[7] and they shall be [t]like unto me.

22 Let[u] all their wickedness come before thee; and do unto them as [v]thou hast done unto me[8] for all my transgressions: for [x]my sighs are many, and my heart is faint.

CHAPTER II.

1 Jeremiah lamenteth the misery of Jerusalem. 20 He complaineth thereof to God.

HOW hath the Lord [a]covered the daughter of Zion with a [b]cloud in his anger, and cast[c] down from heaven unto the earth the beauty[d] of Israel, and remembered not his [1]footstool[2] in the day of his anger!

2 The Lord [e]hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath [f]not pitied: he hath thrown down in his wrath the strong holds of the daughter of Judah; he hath brought them down to[3] the ground: he [h]hath polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof.

3 He hath cut off in his fierce anger [i]all the horn of Israel: he [j]hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned against Jacob like a flaming fire, which devoureth round about.

4 He [k]hath bent his bow like an enemy: he stood with his right hand as an adversary, and slew all that were pleasant to the eye[4] in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion: he [l]poured out his fury like fire.

5 The Lord was as an enemy; he hath [m]swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces; he hath destroyed his strong holds, and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation.

6 And he hath violently taken away[5] his [6]tabernacle,[7] as if it were of a garden; he hath destroyed his places of the assembly: the LORD hath[o] caused the solemn feasts and sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion, and hath despised, in the indignation of his anger, [p]the king and the priest.

7 The[q] Lord hath cast off his altar, he hath [r]abhorred his sanctuary, he hath given up[8] into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; [9]they have made a noise[t] in the house of the LORD, as in the day of a solemn feast.

8 The LORD [s]hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion; he hath stretched out a [2]line,[3] he hath not withdrawn his hand from [t]destroying:[5] therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament;[6] they languished together.

9 Her[t] gates are sunk into the ground;[7] he hath destroyed and broken her bars: [u]her king and her princes are among the Gentiles: [v]the law is no more;[8] her prophets also find no vision from the LORD.

10 The elders of the daughter of Zion [x]sit upon the ground, and keep silence: they have cast up dust upon their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth: the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground.[9]

11 Mine[y] eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my [z]liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children and the sucklings swoon[1] in the streets of the city.

12 They say to their mothers, Where is corn and wine? when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mothers' bosom.[2]

13 What[a] thing shall I take to witness for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? for [b]thy breach is great like the sea;[3] who can heal thee?

14 Thy [c]prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee; and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but of strangers, careless about relieving friends, and joyous at the fall and distress of enemies, are some of the most common and most decided symptoms of the 'desperate wickedness' of the carnal and unrenewed heart. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how great is the desolation when God withdraws and we are deprived of a magistracy or ministry. Great is the slavery, the sorrow, the contempt, the poverty to which sin brings men. And what neglect, profanation, and derision of everything sacred it occasions! If we wilfully depart from God, the rest of our soul, we must not hope to find rest in anything else. And all afflictions are doubly heavy when we apprehend them coming from an incensed God. Affluence abused is the ready way to pining want: and cruel oppression of others prepares the like misery for ourselves. When sins become numerous and notorious, it is proper that God should rise to punish them. And amidst desolating judgments, nothing is more painful to gracious souls than the violation and contempt of God's ordinances, and the loss of those comforts which they once enjoyed in him and his favours. But it is a mercy that we may apply to him in hope, when all our friends forsake us, and our enemies abuse us. And it is doubly bitter if he then keeps himself at a distance.—But if comforts be withdrawn, children murdered, friends turn enemies or be buried in death, if sword, famine, and pestilence devour, or if enemies insult, it is but the just punishment of our iniquities. No fiery judgments devour, no entangling providences befall, no servitude or misery crushes, but what are all framed out of our own transgressions. Let us therefore always justify God, and blame ourselves; and the more that created friends, confidences, and comforts disappoint us, let us the more earnestly supplicate his favour. A praying heart and a prayer-hearing God will quickly produce the destruction of our enemies and our own deliverance. And after he has glorified himself in our corrections, he will magnify himself in the tremendous ruin of our destroyers.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 13, 14. What can equal your calamity? Your breaches are like those made by the sea, great and incurable. Your prophets of your own choosing, instead of charging your sins faithfully upon you to bring you to repentance, and so prevent those judgments, preached their own flatteries, which hardened you in your sins, and hastened your ruin.

Ver. 1. Cast down from heaven unto the earth. Believers can always say, 'Our conversation (or citizenship) is in heaven.' And this 'conversation,' or citizenship, is twofold inward, that of faith: outward, that of church fellowship and enjoyment of ordinances. From this inward citizenship as a right, the believer is never 'cast down,' but of all its outward benefits, as an enjoyment, he may be, and often is, deprived. But while through all storms the true believer clings to the Saviour by whom he has been 'apprehended,' there are individuals, nations, and churches who are judicially 'cast down from heaven unto the earth,' are deprived of church fellowship and ordinances; because never having had the root of faith, but the mere leaves of profession, they are condemned to wither away as severed branches, and all their 'beauty' perishes. C.

Ver. 2. Swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob. The flood of invasion that in wrath has passed over the land, has swept away in its violence, and 'swallowed up' in its depths, all the habitations, the villages, and cities of the land. See Wylie's Modern Judea, Ch. x. C.

Ver. 11. My liver. The learned editor of the Pictorial Bible considers this expression metaphorical, and as used in the same way as the heart is used for the affections of the mind. But there seems no necessity for this figurative sense, for the word 'liver,' may be translated 'bile,' and the expression will import some grievous form of cholera, produced by excessive grief and unwholesome and insufficient food. See ver. 12; ch. 1. 11. C.

Ver. 16. The causes of this deep-rooted antipathy may have been many, arising from the recollections of the conquests gained over them by David, and from collision of commercial interests, &c. But the chief cause is to be sought in the hatred of the heathen against the religion of the Jews. For while heathenism has generally been tolerant of heathenism, it has uniformly been intolerant of Judaism and Christianity. C.

Ver. 17. He hath caused, &c. God did not efficiently 'cause' the cruel and vengeful disposition of the enemies of Jerusalem; but by his judgments upon her sins, he gave them occasion of joy; and in that sense, but in no other, did he 'cause' them to rejoice. C.

Ver. 19. The top of every street. This expression is used ch. 4. 1. Is. 51. 20. Na. 3. 10, and is, most probably, to be explained by the fact, that Jerusalem was built upon hills, on the tops of which the streets generally terminated in public market-places, or bazaars, whither the children had gone in search of food. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Terrible is the issue when God becomes our enemy and fights against us: and corre-have seen for thee [d]false burdens, and causes of banishment.[4]

15 All that pass by[5] clap[e] their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call [f]the perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole earth?

16 All thine enemies [h]have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash the teeth: they say, [i]We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it.

17 The LORD hath done that which he had devised;[j] he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: [k]he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied: and [l]he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee; he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries.[6]

18 Their[m] heart cried unto the Lord, [n]O wall of the daughter of Zion, [p]let tears run down like a river day and night: give thyself no rest; let not the apple of thine eye[7] cease.

19 Arise,[q] cry out in the night; in the beginning of the [r]watches [s]pour out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord: lift up thy hands toward him for the life of thy young children, [t]that faint for hunger in the top of every street.

20 ¶ Behold, O LORD, and consider [u]to whom thou hast done this. Shall the women [v]eat their fruit,[8] and children [g]of a span long?[1] shall[x] the priest and the prophet be slain in the sanctuary of the Lord?

21 The [y]young and the old lie on the ground in the streets: my virgins and my young men are fallen by the sword; thou hast slain them in the day of thine anger; thou hast killed, and not pitied.

22 Thou hast called, as in a solemn day, my terrors[z] round about; so that in the day of the LORD'S anger none escaped nor remained: those that I have swaddled and brought up [a]hath mine enemy consumed.

1 'The subject of this elegy,' says Henderson, 'is the personal experience of Jeremiah, on which he expatiates in the most touching strains in order partly to give vent to his own feelings, and partly to excite corresponding emotions in the breasts of his veiled countrymen. From the lively recollections which he had of the severe trials that he had endured in the course of his prophetic ministry, the merciful interpositions of the Lord on his behalf, and the unimpeached rectitude of the most High to inflict suffering on sinful men, he premises himself as an example from which they might receive instruction, and be induced, in the exercise of repentance and prayer, to hope for a restoration from their rejected duty.' This seems to me to be the true object of this touching elegy.—P.

CHAPTER III.

1 The prophet bewaileth his own calamities; 22 he acknowledgeth God's mercies and truth to be a proper ground of patient hope: 37 he maketh humble confession of the sins which had drawn down God's severe judgments: 55 he prayeth to be avenged of his enemies.

2 He hath led me, and brought me into darkness,[a] but not into light.

3 Surely [b]against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day.

4 My[c] flesh and my skin hath he made old: he hath broken my bones.

5 He[d] hath builded against me, and compassed me with gall and travail.

6 He[e] hath set me in dark places, as they that be dead of old.

7 He[g] hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out: he hath made my [h]chain heavy.

8 Also [i]when I cry and shout, he shutteth out my prayer.

9 He[j] hath inclosed my ways with hewn stone: he hath made my paths crooked.

10 He[k] was unto me as a bear lying in wait, and as a lion in secret places.

11 He[l] hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces: he hath made me desolate.

12 He[m] hath bent his bow, and set me as a mark for the arrow.

13 He hath caused the arrows[3] of his quiver to enter into my reins.

14 I[n] was a derision to all my people, and their song all the day.

15 He hath filled me with [4]bitterness, [p]he hath made me drunken with wormwood.[5]

16 He hath also [q]broken my teeth with gravel stones,[6] he hath covered me with[7] ashes.

spondent to the counsels of his heart are the judgments of his hand. Justly he debases by his judgments those who had debased themselves by their sins, and mingles the blood of sinners with their sacrifices; yea, deprives of sabbaths and solemn ordinances those who would not religiously observe them. Grievous sorrows follow upon grievous sinning. And men must either mourn over their sins or over the dreadful effects of them. Alas! what a fearful curse it is to be given up to the delusions of unsent and hypocritical ministers! nor is anything more destructive and damning. It is highly proper, in trouble, to observe the exact agreement between God's judgments and his word; and to ease our broken hearts by pouring our complaints into his bosom. He alone can help us; and none ever truly sought him in vain.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 3, 7, 9, 43, 53. He has so plunged and fixed me in miseries that it is impossible for me to get out; and my attempts to obtain relief do but render me still more and more miserable.—We are quite overwhelmed with trouble, and brought into a most desperate and remediless condition.

Ver. 1. The man. 'The strong, the mighty man.'—An attentive consideration of this chapter will suggest, at least the probability, that it is a prophetic picture of the suffering Messiah, drawn for the instruction of Zion in the duty of humiliation and patience under the hand of the Lord. This interpretation of the chapter is suggested on the following grounds:—1. The title, which is, literally, 'mighty man.' 2. The fact of his deep afflictions, Col. 1. 24. 3. The cruel mockery of his people, ver. 14; Mat. 27. 29. 4. The gall he gets to drink, Mat. 27. 34. 5. The cheek he turns to the smiter, ver. 30; Jn. 19. 3. 6. His sympathetic weeping, ver. 48; Lu. 19. 41. 7. His assertion that he was persecuted 'without cause,' ver. 52; Jn. 15. 25. 8. His life being 'cut off,' ver. 53, 54; comp. Is. 53. 8. 9. His redemption from death, ver. 58; Ps. 16. 10; Ac. 2. 24-36. 10. His fearless appeal to his judge, ver. 59; Jn. 8. 40; He. 9. 14. 11. The continuous plotting of his enemies, ver. 61, 62; Mat. 26. 16-20; 3. 15. 12. The corresponding language of his companions, the apostles, ver. 45; comp. 1 Co. 4. 13; also Ps. 44. 22, with Ro. 8. 36. 13. The experience of all believers, that the only argument that can reach the judgment or the heart of the afflicted, is derived from a recital and view of the sufferings of Christ, He. 12. 1-3. 14. That Christ and his sufferings are similarly introduced in the Psalms and the Prophets. The only objection to this interpretation arises from comparing ver. 4 with Jn. 19. 36. But the breaking of his bones there denied is the act of his enemies, the breaking in ver. 4 is the act of God: and, when compared with Ps. 51. 8; Is. 38. 13; Je. 50. 17, will be seen to be the emblem of extreme affliction, such as our Lord endured when he 'bore our griefs and carried our sorrows, was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities.' C.

Ver. 27. The yoke. 'Affliction.' Aben Ezra. It is rather the yoke of willing service, Mat. 11. 29, 30, which the believer puts on when he acknowledges Jesus to be Master and King; and in which service affliction may be, and generally are, more or less included.—Note, There are many blessings attendant upon early conversion, such as, 1. The follies of youth, and sins of riper years, which it prevents. 2. The many bitter weepings which are prevented by preservation from these follies. 3. The blessings to others which the instruction and example of early piety so frequently conveys. 4. The blessed hope which it works in the believer's own experience of continued mercy, Ps. 77. 6; Ro. 5. 4. 5. The continued opportunities which it furnishes, when days are lengthened, for glorifying God in the various periods or relations of life; and 6. The nearer resemblance to Christ into which it brings the believer.—Note, Let the aged sinner know that it is never too late—but, let the youthful remember, it is never too early—to believe and turn to the Lord. C.

Ver. 35. The verse condemns all oppression wherein men take advantage either of the mere letter or imperfection of a human law to inflict an injury in the name of law, and as in the presence of 'the most High,' by whom kings reign and princes decree justice. C.

Ver. 39. Wherefore doth a living man complain? Seeing the chief blessing, life, is still continued; and seeing that afflictions are intended for correction, why should man murmur at what he either wants or suffers? Why should the sick man reject the medicine, or accuse the Physician of cruelty? Is. 45. 7; Am. 3. 6; He. 12. 6. C.

Ver. 51. Mine eye affecteth mine heart. What my eye sees 'preys upon my heart.'—Note, Fools make a mock, a sport, a jest, an entertainment of sin: but the eye that sees sin as Jesus saw it—as God sees it—must often weep as Jesus wept. C.

Ver. 64-66. That ver. 64-66 may be rendered in the future, as 20 My soul hath them still in remembrance, and is humbled[1] in me.

21 This[u] I recall to my mind,[2] therefore[3] have[x] I [4]hope.[5]

22 ¶ It[y] is of the LORD's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not.

23 They are [z]new every morning: great is thy [a]faithfulness.

24 The LORD is [b]my portion, saith my soul; therefore will I [c]hope in him.

25 The[d] LORD is good unto them that wait for him, to the soul that seeketh him.

26 It[e] is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the LORD.

27 It[f] is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth.

28 He[h] sitteth alone and keepeth silence, because he hath borne it upon him.

29 He[i] putteth his mouth in the dust; if so be there may be hope.

30 He[j] giveth his cheek to him that smiteth him: he is filled full with reproach.

31 For[k] the Lord will not cast off for ever:

32 But though [l]he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies.

33 For[n] he doth not afflict [6]willingly,[7] nor grieve the children of men.

34 To[o] crush[8] under his feet all the prisoners of the earth,

35 To[p] turn aside the right of a man before the face of the Most High,[9]

36 To subvert a man in his cause, the Lord approveth not.[1]

37 ¶ Who[q] is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not?

38 Out[r] of the mouth of the Most High proceedeth not evil and good?[2]

39 Wherefore doth a living man complain,[3] a man for the punishment of his sins?

40 Let[s] us search and try our ways, and turn again to the LORD.

41 Let[t] us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens.

42 We[u] have transgressed and have rebelled: thou[v] hast not pardoned.

43 Thou[x] hast covered with anger, and persecuted us: thou hast slain, thou hast not pitied.

44 Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud, [y]that our prayer should not pass through.

45 Thou hast made us as the [z]offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people.

46 All our enemies [a]have opened their mouths against us.

47 Fear[b] and a snare is come upon us, desolation and destruction.

48 Mine[c] eye runneth down with rivers of water for the destruction of the daughter of my people.

49 Mine eye trickleth down, and ceaseth not, without any intermission,

50 Till[d] the LORD look down, and behold from heaven.

51 Mine eye affecteth mine heart[4] because [5]of [e]all the daughters of my city.

52 Mine[g] enemies chased me sore, like a bird, [h]without cause.

53 They[i] have cut off my life in the dungeon, and cast a stone[6] upon me.

54 [j]Waters[7] flowed over mine head; [k]then I said, I am cut off.

55 ¶ I[l] called upon thy name, O LORD, out of the low dungeon.[8]

56 Thou[n] hast heard my voice; hide not thine ear at my [o]breathing,[9] at my cry.

57 Thou[p] drewest near in the day that I called upon thee: thou saidst, [q]Fear not.[1]

58 O Lord, thou hast pleaded the causes of my soul; thou [r]hast redeemed my life.

59 O LORD, thou hast seen [s]my wrong; [t]judge thou my cause.

60 Thou hast seen [u]all their vengeance and all their imaginations against me.

61 Thou hast heard their reproach, O LORD, and all their imaginations against me;

62 The lips of those that rose up against me, and their device against me all the day.

63 Behold their [v]sitting down, and their rising up; I am [z]their music.

64 Render[y] unto them a recompense, O LORD, according to the work of their hands.

a The lesson Sion taught is very charming. All nations are sent unto, the soul is thoroughly humbled, until it is brought to feel and acknowledge its utter vileness and helplessness then the moment it turns to God in penitence and faith, seeking pardon, acceptance, and help, that moment the end is removed, and blessings begin to flow from the fountain of divine mercy. C.

declaratory and not imperatory, is certain; but similar scriptures quoted from the Old into the New Testament, being thus rendered into the Greek, which does not admit the uncertainty of the Hebrew see Ps. 69. 22; 109. 8, comp. with Ac. 1. 20, seem to require the authorized version to be retained, on the sound principle of analogy, and to call for exposition, rather than authorize escape from an apparent difficulty or objection. See for this exposition, and defence of similar prayers, Ps. 5. 10; 35. 8. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How tremendous are the fatherly corrections of JEHOVAH! and very criminal must be the sins which so provoke him against the objects of his love. The children of light, and heirs of joy, sometimes walk in the greatest darkness of calamity and grief, and even despondency: and many and diversified are God's arrows of affliction, flying swift and piercing deep. But if men will walk in crooked paths of iniquity, it is but just that God should cross their designs and break their measures; and if they will regard iniquity, it is just in him to shut out their prayers, than which few things are more galling to a gracious heart.—Saints can never enter the lowest hell, being preserved by grace: but by multiplied troubles from God, from devils, and from men, they may have a hell upon earth. Yet God will deliver his people and churches in due time, when they are thoroughly melted and purified in his furnace. In their worst cases they are neither helpless nor hopeless. Let us therefore always acknowledge him kind and faithful. If our troubles be heavy and sharp, let us eagerly claim and live upon him as our portion, and comfort ourselves with his compassion, and with a persuasion that all he does is the fulfilment of his gracious Word, on which he has caused us to hope. Let us complain to God, but never complain against him. And let us earnestly work together with God, and labour to promote the same self-debasing and soul-sanctifying ends. Experience of former kindness should encourage us to hope for more. And having cast our burdens on the Lord, we should continue waiting instant and patient in prayer; and at last we shall find an answer of peace. There is no prison so deep or dark but God can bring us out of it; no enemy so strong but God can destroy; and no request of faith so silent but he will hear it for our good. But woe to those, however powerful, haughty, merry, or scornful, against whom God's favourites plead! And think, my soul, what of all these troubles Jesus underwent—in infinite love underwent - and all for me!

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 13–15. Their priests and prophets have persecuted the Lord's prophets, and have ruined the nation by flattering them in their sins. They formerly wandered from God's law in acts of violence and murder, and now they cannot walk in the streets without polluting themselves by dead bodies.—Yea, every one, even the heathens, abhor them as unclean lepers, or persons too despicable to live on the earth.

Ver. 3. Sea-monsters. The word so translated is a general name for all large and cruel animals, whether of the land or water. Among sea-animals the phocæ are remarkable for maternal tenderness; amongst land-animals, the bear. So wonderfully has God distributed those preservative instincts amongst 65 Give them sorrow[z] of heart, thy [a]curse unto them.

66 Persecute[a] and destroy them in anger from [b]under the heavens of the LORD.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Zion bewaileth her pitiful estate. 13 She confesseth her sins. 21 Edom is threatened, and Zion comforted.

HOW is [a]the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed! the [b]stones of the sanctuary [c]are poured out in the top of every street.[1]

2 The[d] precious sons[2] of Zion, comparable to fine [e]gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter!

3 Even the sea-monsters[3] draw out the breast, they give suck to their young ones: [f]the daughter of my people is become cruel, [h]like the ostriches in the wilderness.

4 The[i] tongue of the sucking child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth for thirst; the young children ask bread, and [j]no man breaketh it unto them.

5 They that did feed delicately are [k]desolate in the streets; they that were brought up in scarlet [l]embrace dunghills.[4]

6 For the punishment of the iniquity[5] of the daughter of my people [m]is greater[6] than the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment,[7] and no hands stayed on her.

7 Her Nazarites[8] were purer than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of sapphire:

8 Their[o] visage is blacker than a coal;[9] they are not known in the streets:[1] their[p] skin cleaveth to their bones; [q]it is withered, it is become like a stick.

9 They that be slain with the sword are better than they that be slain with hunger: for these pine away,[2] stricken through for want of the fruits of the field.

10 The[r] hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own children: they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people.

14 They have [v]wandered as blind[5] men in the streets, they have polluted themselves with blood, so that [x]men could not touch[6] their garments.

15 They cried unto them, Depart ye; it is unclean;[7] depart, depart, touch not: when they fled away and wandered, they said among the heathen, [y]They shall no more sojourn there.[8]

16 The anger[9] of the LORD [z]hath divided them; he will no more regard them: [a]they respected not the persons of the priests, they favoured not the elders.

the lower creatures; which here serve as a lesson of reproof to man their appointed ruler.—Cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness. On the least noise says Dr. Shaw or trivial occasion, the ostrich forsakes her eggs or her young ones, to which, perhaps, she never returns; or if she does, it may be too late to restore life to the one, or preserve it to the others. The Arabs often meet with a few of the little ones, half-starved, straggling and moaning about, like so many distressed orphans, for their mother. C.

Ver. 7. Nazarites. The word either applies to those who were separated to God by a religious vow, Nu. 6. 2-20, or who are separated from their brethren by providential occurrences, Ge. 49. 26. The tenor of the description here would seem to refer it to those who were separated from their brethren by elevated rank. C.

Ver. 13. Iniquities of her priests. The priests, who should have been the ministers of mercy and justice, were the principal persecutors of Jeremiah, Je. 20. 1. Their successors were afterwards the chief persecutors of Christ, Mat. 27. 1. Again, the heathen priests and their satellites were the persecutors of the apostles and the primitive church, Ac. 4. 1-3. And finally, the priests of Rome were, and have been, the persecutors of the fathers and continuators of the blessed Reformation. C.

Ver. 16. The Lord hath divided them: he will no more regard them. How does this consist with the opinion of a Jewish restoration to Canaan? Perfectly. JEHOVAH 'will no more regard them' as a people—the restoration will be of the 'remnant according to the election of grace,' from whom the nation will be reconstructed, 2 Ki. 19. 31; 2 Ch. 30. 6; Ezr. 9. 8; Is. 37. 31-36; Je. 23. 3; Eze. 6. 8; Ro. 9. 27; 11. 5.—They respected not, &c. Who? Either the false prophets and their partisans, who respected not the true prophets and elders, ver. 13, 14, or the heathen nations among whom the people were scattered, ver. 15, who despised their persons, office, and religion.

Ver. 20. Under his shadow, &c. Either among the heathen that were now, to a considerable extent, commingled with them in the land, and most probably in possession of their principal garrisons: or among the surrounding heathen nations, from whose aggressions they expected Zedekiah's policy, and conformity with heathenism, 2 Ch. 36. 14, would preserve them, or from whose power they expected his arm might deliver them, 2 Ch. 36. 13. C.

Ver. 21. Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom. This is commonly interpreted as an irony; but such a figure seems very inconsistent with the serious and melancholy mood of the prophet's mind. Is it not rather a call to the representative of the 'widows' and 'fatherless children' of Edom, whom God promised to 'preserve' amidst the ruin of their country, Je. 49. 11, to 'rejoice' sympathetically and sincerely at the accomplished punishment of Zion, ver. 21, and that blessed restoration from which she will never more be carried into captivity, see ver. 22; intimating, that though Edom will never be restored as a nation, her 'daughter' will rejoice as a participator in the blessings of Zion? C.

REFLECTIONS.—When God forsakes a people, their honour leaves them. And if rulers will not act for God, it is but just that he should make them contemptible. They who live in the greatest plenty and pomp know not to what straits they may be reduced before they die. And delicate and high living renders hardships doubly grievous when they come to be experienced. God's judgment on his own people often astonishes his and their enemies. And scarcely ever does the judgment of God light upon nations and churches without clerical wickedness having a distinguished share in procuring it. No wonder then that the very monsters of wickedness at last contemn and abhor unfaithful ministers. There is no escaping from the judgment of God appointed for us. If we make creatures our trust, or the breath of our nostrils, God, who is our life, will confound them, and disappoint us.

CHAPTER V.

A pitiful complaint of Zion in prayer unto God.

REMEMBER,[c] O LORD, what is come upon us: consider, and behold our reproach.

2 Our inheritance is [b]turned to strangers, our houses to aliens.

3 We are [c]orphans and fatherless, our mothers are as widows.

4 We[d] have drunken our water for money; our wood is sold[1] unto us.

5 Our[e] necks are under [2]persecution: [g]we labour, and have no rest.

6 We have given the [3]hand[4] to the Egyptians, and to the Assyrians, to be satisfied with bread.

7 Our[k] fathers have sinned, and [i]are not; and we have borne their iniquities.

8 Servants[j] have ruled over us: there is none that doth deliver us out of their hand.

9 We gat our bread [k]with the peril of our lives, because of the sword of the [5]wilderness.[6]

10 Our[l] skin was black like an oven, because of the terrible[7] famine.

11 They[n] ravished the women in Zion, and the maids in the cities of Judah.

12 Princes[o] are hanged up by their [8]hand: the faces of elders were not honoured.

13 They[p] took the young men to grind,[9] and the children fell under the wood.[1]

14 The[q] elders have ceased from the gate, [r]the young men from their music.

15 The joy of our heart is ceased; our dance is turned into mourning.

16 The crown is fallen from our head:[2] woe unto us, [s]that we have sinned!

17 For[t] this our heart is faint; for these things our eyes are dim.

18 Because[u] of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate, the foxes walk upon it.

19 Thou, O LORD, [v]remainest for ever; thy throne from generation to generation.

20 Wherefore[x] dost thou forget us for ever, and forsake us so long time?[3]

21 Turn thou us unto thee,[4] O LORD, and we shall be turned; renew our days as of old.

22 But[5] thou hast [y]utterly rejected us;[6] thou art very wroth against us.

Yet the troubles of the godly will continue no longer than till they have accomplished the purification intended by them. But such as ridicule and insult Jesus Christ and his people or ordinances, will at last render themselves ridiculous and miserable. And in the end their sin shall be discovered and punished, however secret and hidden.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 4. Our water. The primitive history of Israel is much connected with wells, as may be seen in the history of Abraham, some of whose chief movements are associated with their names. See Ge. 21. 25, 30; 24. 13; 26. 15, 18. And the bringing of water into Jerusalem by conduits has not been thought unworthy of a place in the history of Israel's kings, 2 Ki. 20. 20; 2 Ch. 32. 30. The buying of the water of their fathers' wells seemed, therefore, to Israel, a grievous act of usurpation and oppression. It is clear the reference must be to a Chaldean impost upon the water in Jerusalem; for when carried away, the captives 'sat by the streams of Babel,' and had water in abundance.—Our wood. The Jews allege an ordinance of Joshua rendering certain forests common property, where all might cut such wood as they required for fuel; and such a law or custom prevails in all woody and thinly peopled countries, where the export of timber is not a trade, and where the clearing of the land for pasture or tillage is a principal object of the owner. The invaders, however, took exclusive possession of the forests. See Ne. 2. 8. C.

Ver. 7. How does this accord with Eze. 18. 1–28? The persons reproved by Ezekiel justified themselves, and cast the blame of their sufferings back upon their fathers. The confession of Jeremiah justified God, ch. 1. 18–20. 3. 37–42, and acknowledged that the accumulating sins of former ages had now come to such a crisis that mercy could no longer delay the hand of judgment. See ver. 16. C.

Ver. 18. The foxes walk upon it. The Scottish Deputation to Palestine for inquiring into the state, and taking measures for the enlightenment and conversion, of the Jews witnessed this fact in 1840, where they also found 'Zion ploughed like a field,' Je. 26. 18. Mi. 3. 12, and brought with them specimens of the barley that grew on the site of her palaces and towers. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! what hurt sin has done! through it this world is but a scene of awful changes! And peculiarly terrible is the misery of ravaged and conquered nations. But under all our trouble, it is a comfort to reflect that God sees all that comes upon us; and that, if we patiently and penitently suffer for the sins of our fathers, he will quickly return to us in mercy: yea, there is a Canaan above, of which none can deprive us; and though God frown, he will not forget us. If our earthly provision be scanty, our abundant spiritual provision can more than balance its defects; and if the Son has made us free, we shall be free indeed; yea, honoured, glad, and glorious for evermore. If the honour of his oracles and ordinances on earth go nearer our heart than our secular interests, he will quickly transport us to his sanctuary above, where we shall be ever with the Lord. His mercy may be hid, but it is not clean gone; and there is enough in it to redress all our grievances. If by his grace he renew our hearts, he will by his favour renew our days and restore our wonted prosperity. Let me therefore, under my afflictions, complain to, and plead with, my God; but never quarrel with his conduct, discredit his love, or despair of his favours.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF LAMENTATIONS.

For every possible circumstance of human life, the Scriptures seem to furnish, not merely a text, or a portion, but an entire book: Genesis furnishes genealogy; Exodus, emigration; Leviticus, religious rites; Numbers, organization; Deuteronomy, such repetition, explanation, and commentary, as the frailty of humanity requires; Joshua, conquest and government; Judges, a country often falling into sin and thraldom, but struggling for independence; Ruth, special providence; Samuel, the influence of a pious maternal education on the prophet and judge; the evil of an ungoverned temper in Saul; the blessing of self-restraint (not from himself arising, but from providence and grace) in David; Kings and Chronicles, a mirror for kings and nations; Ezra and Nehemiah, mirrors for patriotic reformers; Esther, a mirror for queens; Job, for men in adversity; Psalms, a mirror for hearts; Proverbs, mirror for parents in the work of private education; Ecclesiastes, for preachers in the work of public instruction; the Song of Solomon, for husbands and wives; Isaiah, reproof and encouragement for the church; Jeremiah, warning to the state; Lamentations, the sorrows of God's people for both church and state overturned by national sins.

It were easy to pursue such specialities to 'Revelation,' of which the particular object is to place and preserve the church in her proper attitude of prayer and watchfulness until the coming of her Lord. But it is needful to forbear.

'Wicked men and seducers wax worse and worse.' And so do nations, when any evil principle or object, such as profanity, sabbath desecration, licentiousness, covetousness, hasting to be rich, or lust of power and conquest, take possession of rulers or people. And so likewise do churches degenerate, when, under the specious pretence of 'free inquiry,' a false philosophy supersedes revelation—when a partial morality is substituted for universal holiness—a cold formality, for fervent devotion—when a sordid worldliness controls liberality, and an indulgent luxury banishes self-denial—when the love of ease, and the lust of power, combine to 'lay heavy (ritual) burdens upon men's shoulders,' but 'refuse to touch them with one of their fingers'—when Christ is followed, not for the 'miracles' he has performed, but for the 'loaves and fishes' he owns and distributes—when profession is all, and practice nothing; and finally, when obedience to the church is substituted for allegiance to her King, then may God spare for a little, amidst many warnings—but such 'vessels of wrath' are fitting themselves for destruction, and judgment is whetting its sword to begin at the house of the Lord.

In all such melancholy cases of defection, there is generally, however, a remnant 'that sigh and that cry for all the abominations that are done in the land;' and who live to lament over the ruin they have foreseen, and against the coming of which they vainly lifted up the voice of expostulation or warning. Such was Jeremiah. In the midst of a demoralized state, he warned kings and nobles, and lived to see and weep over their fall. In the midst of a heretical and idolatrous priesthood, he continued to preach JEHOVAH, to denounce idolatry, and to exhort to repentance; and he lived to see the vessels of the holy temple, which its priests had profaned, transferred to the temple of Bel, and the temple of Jerusalem itself reduced to the ruin he had foretold. And his book of Lamentations remains as the manual of sorrows uttered over a state misgoverned, impoverished, and ruined, by self-sufficient, covetous, and oppressive rulers—and a church infected, misled, and betrayed, by an immoral, heretical, and time-serving ministry. C.

EZEKIEL.

Ezekiel was also a priest: and prophesied among the captives in Chaldea while Jeremiah prophesied in Judea and Egypt. His predictions, especially the first and last nine chapters, are extremely figurative. But if we search them with reverence, humility, and diligence, we may from them find much encouragement to our faith and hope in God; even as in natural things we may reap much benefit from those, the nature, connections, and influences of which we do not well understand. We have in them (1) His divine call to his prophetical office. i.–iii. (2) His visions and messages of reproof and threatening to the Jews, iv.–xxiv. xxviii. (3) His predictions of ruin to the enemies of the Jews; particularly the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Philistines, Tyrians, Egyptians, and Turks, xxv.–xxxii. xxxv. xxxviii. xxxix. (4) Promises of mercy to the Jews after their captivity in Babylon and their present dispersion; which are likewise typical of the glorious privileges of the gospel church, xxxiv. xxxvi.–xlviii.

[Ezekiel and Jeremiah were both priests: were contemporaries, and prophesied mostly of the same events. Ezekiel, however, was carried captive to Babylon, and dwelt on the banks of the Chebar, a tributary of the Euphrates. Jeremiah remained in Judea, so that, in each country, God had his faithful witness. The prophecies of Ezekiel extend to a wide field, including not merely the Jews, but also the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, Philistines, Tyrians, Egyptians, and the northern nations, governed by Gog, designated the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal. Like the other prophets, he sets forth under various emblems the times and the glories of Messiah. He began to prophesy in the fifth year of his captivity, and continued in the faithful discharge of his duties for about twenty years. C.

Ezekiel was among the captives taken to Babylon with Jehoiachin in B.C. 599, when Nebuchadnezzar captured Jerusalem and carried away the treasures of the temple. His residence was at Tell Abib, on the banks of the river Chebar, in Mesopotamia. His prophetic mission began in the fifth year of his captivity (B.C. 594), and continued, so far as we have any record, to the twenty-seventh year (see ch. 29. 17). Ezekiel was a priest, and had studied deeply the ritualistic and symbolic lore of his people. He also appears to have been minutely acquainted with the sacred rites and strange idolatry of those among whom he dwelt. His brilliant imagination was thus prepared for decking his prophetic visions in a gorgeous symbolism without parallel elsewhere in Scripture. The events of his life are unknown, and we have no record of the date or manner of his death. P.]

CHAPTER I.

1 The time of Ezekiel's prophecy by the river Chebar. 4 His vision of four cherubims, 15 of the four wheels, 26 and of the glory of God.

NOW it came to pass in the thirtieth [1]year,[2] in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as [a]I was among the captives[3] by the river of [b]Chebar,[4] that [c]the heavens were opened, and [d]I saw visions of God.

2 In the fifth day of the month, which was [e]the fifth year[5] of king Jehoiachin's captivity,

3 The[g] word of the LORD came expressly unto Ezekiel[6] the priest, the son of Buzi, [h]in the land of the Chaldeans by the river Chebar; and the[i] hand of the LORD was there upon him.[7]

4 ¶ And I looked, and behold, a [j]whirlwind came out of the north, [k]a great cloud, and a fire infolding[8] itself, and a brightness was about it, and out of the midst thereof as [l]the colour of amber, out of the midst of the fire.

four[x] had the face of a man, and the face of a lion on the right side; and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle.[2]

11 Thus were their faces: and their wings were[y] stretched upward;[3] two wings of every one were joined one to another, and two [z]covered their bodies.

12 And [a]they went every one straight forward: [b]whither the spirit was to go, they went; and they turned not when they went.

13 As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was [c]like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: [d]it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning.

14 And the living creatures [e]ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.

15 Now, as I beheld the living creatures, behold, [g]one wheel[4] upon[h] the earth by the living creatures, with his [i]four faces.

16 The appearance of the wheels[5] and their work was like unto [j]the colour of a beryl; and they four [k]had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were [l]a wheel in the middle of a wheel.

17 When they went, they went upon their four sides; and [m]they turned not when they went.

18 As for their rings, [o]they were so high that they were dreadful; and their rings[6] were [p]full of eyes round about them four.

19 And[q] when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them; and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up.

20 Whithersoever[r] the spirit was to go,[7] they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for [s]the spirit of the living creature[8] was in the wheels.

21 When[t] those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature[9] was in the wheels.

22 And[u] the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as the colour of the [v]terrible crystal, stretched forth [z]over their heads above.

23 And under the firmament were [y]their wings straight, the one toward the other: [z]every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies.

24 And when they went, [a]I heard [b]the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the [c]voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an [d]host: when they [e]stood, they let down their wings.

25 And there was [g]a voice[1] from the firmament that was over their heads, when they stood, and had let down their wings.

26 ¶ And above the firmament that was [h]over their heads was the likeness of [i]a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone: and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of [j]a man[2] above upon it.

27 And I saw [k]as the colour of amber, as the o The student of Assyrian antiquities cannot fail to observe in the cherubim here described by the prophet a general resemblance to those sculptured beings, recently exhumed from the mounds of Nineveh and Babylon. The details differ, but the general features are the same. We have on those sculptures four distinct faces as here:—the face of a man, of a lion, of an ox, and of an eagle. We have also the wings, and the straight feet, like a calf's foot. All these were no doubt symbolical, but the symbolism was borrowed from that which was known to the Assyrians. God's universal sovereignty & omnipotent power were represented. The head of man symbolized intelligent and free power as rational ruling the lion, ox, king of wild beasts, symbolized God's power over them; the winged elements, air, &c. over the fowls of heaven.—C.

Ver. 9. Wings joined. Perfect consent of spirit, and unity of effort.—They needed not to 'turn;' having every one four faces, they lost no time in preparing for action; no enemy could come behind them. God's providential purposes cannot be eluded. C.

Ver. 10. A man—intellect with passion.—A lion—strength and readiness to assail, 2 Sa. 1. 23; Ps. 7. 2.—An ox—labour, productiveness, De. 25. 4; Pr. 14. 4. An eagle—soaring aloft, yet finding the prey, Is. 4. 31; Mat. 24. 28. C.

Ver. 17. Went upon their four sides. All moving together, by one consent and energy.—Turned not—to mark that God is never turned back from his purposes of grace or judgment. C.

Ver. 18. Their rings were so high. The designs of Providence are vast; reaching not merely from earth, but from hell to heaven, from everlasting to everlasting.—Full of eyes. No events dependent upon blind chance; all guided by certain foreknowledge and unerring design. C.

Ver. 20. The living God guides the spirit of the obedient, and controls and restrains the spirit of the refractory and rebellious, and so directs every movement of providence, according to the counsel of his sovereign and gracious will. C.

Ver. 22. To denote the inferiority of all agents to God, the firmament is 'upon their heads.' Terrible crystal—dazzling the eyes with its lustre, and so 'terrible' to the weakness of the organ. In this sense the sun is 'terrible.' But nothing is so terrible as to gaze upon the wheel of Providence reaching from the lowest hell to the highest heaven, and the firmament of his power over the heads of all his creatures, and the wonders of his omnipresence whereby, while here on earth, he is yet exalted 'far above the heavens.' C.

Ver. 23. Covered their bodies. When the purpose of Providence is most rapidly in progress, from the eyes of worldly men the agent is totally hid: and when they search for the origin of their disasters, even the true second causes they seldom discover; and the great cause of all—God judging them for their sins—the blindness of their eyes, and the hardness of their hearts, will not permit them to see. C.

Ver. 24. When a providential work is accomplished his servants have rest: Stephen 'fell asleep' in Jesus; when Paul had 'finished his course' he saw the crown waiting for him in the hand of his Lord. C.

Ver. 27. The appearance of fire. The manifested baptism of the Holy Ghost with fire, Mat. 4. 11; which baptism is seen perfect in Christ, from whom it is dispensed in measure to his disciples, Jo. 3. 34; 1 Co. 12. 11. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Wherever God has a people he will find ministers for them. And there is great need that these should have a clear and distinct call from him to their work, considering the important dangers attending, and the awful issues and accounts thereof. All discoveries of God ought to fill our minds with deep awe and reverence of him. May I then, like these living creatures, be endowed with the Holy Ghost, filled with spiritual knowledge and prudence, and be uniformly active and upright in the Lord's way; always under his direction and influence, and making my light so to shine before men as that they may see my good works, and glorify my Father which is in heaven. However strange and intricate the form of ordinances, churches, and providences be, let me revere them, as framed and managed by God for his own glory; and always look, above all, to his infinitely glorious self, particularly as manifested in my nature, and the Lamb as it had been slain in the midst of the throne.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1 6. The title son of man, so often given to Ezekiel, and sometimes to Daniel, who also prophesied in Chaldea, might be given them to render them humble under their enjoyment of so many divine visions: or as an honourable representation of them as types of the Son of God in our nature. And the Jews are called briers, thorns, and scorpions, to represent what cursed, mischievous, malignant, subtle, fierce, frowning, venomous, and murderous persecutors they would be to him.

Ver. 1. Son of man. This title is peculiar to Ezekiel and Daniel; and, according to the Hebrew rabbis, it was intended to remind them of their frailty, that they were but men, and not angels. C.

Ver. 6. Briers and thorns. What specific plants are meant it is impossible to determine. The general use of the words translated 'briers and thorns' leaves, however, no doubt that they are some of the many prickly plants with which many parts of Asia and Africa abound. 'One of the inconveniences,' says a learned traveller, 'of the vegetable thickets of Egypt is, that it is difficult to remain in them, seeing nine-tenths of the trees and plants are armed with inexorable thorns, which suffer only an unquiet enjoyment of the shadow.' The 'brier and thorn' are memorials of the curse originally pronounced upon the earth because of sin Ge. 3. 18; He. 6. 8.—Scorpions. According to some authorities the name is derived from two words that signify 'father-killers' and Pliny informs us that it is the property of the young scorpions to slay their parents. Parkhurst derives it from two words that signify to squeeze or pinch violently, as the creature is armed with forceps, and takes a violent hold. It is a small but very venomous animal, having a poisonous sting in its tail. It is an animal of a very hideous appearance; and, from its aspect and poisonous properties, furnishes an awful emblem of a malignant people. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Ministers had need always to keep in view their own infirmities, as well as the dignity of their office; and the Spirit of God must enable them to receive as well as to declare their instructions. Alas! how fast men's wickedness cleaves to them under the heaviest afflictions! God exactly knows what men are and will be, and what entertainment his Word and ordinances will get among them. And marvellous is his patience and pity in using all common methods to reform the most stubborn. And if ministers preach by his commission, and in his authority, whether men be edified or not, he will be glorified by appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about.

SITE OF THE ACADEMY—WHERE PLATO HAD VISIONS THE TRUEST EVER RECORDED OUTSIDE OF THOSE INSPIRED BY THE SPIRIT OF GOD. [Ezekiel, i.]—The first chapter of Ezekiel opens with a glorious vision of God. Ezekiel was among the captives, and exiled from his native land in a strange, depressing atmosphere, and yet we have evidences throughout his work of his deep spiritual insight. The book of Ezekiel may be called a song which the poet learned in sorrow. In some respects his work is the most imaginative and remarkable in the Scripture. We give a picture above of the site of the Academy where another seer lived and taught. It was amid the olive groves of the Academy that Plato had his visions of God, and which are nearer to those of the prophets than any others that ever took form among heathen writers. When Ezekiel was writing by the River Chebar in Babylon, Solon introduced a new standard of coinage in Athens whereby he reduced debts secured by mortgage 27 per cent. It is an interesting fact thus to know that Ezekiel, the seer, and Solon, the wise man of Greece, lived and wrought in the same age of the world's history.

28 As[j] the appearance of the bow[3] that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the [n]likeness of the glory of the LORD. And when I saw it, I [o]fell upon my face, and [p]I heard a voice of one that spake.

CHAPTER II.

1 Ezekiel's commission. 6 His instructions. 9 The roll of heavy judgments spread before him.

AND he said unto me, [a]Son of man, stand upon[b] thy feet, and I will speak unto thee.

2 And the [c]spirit[1] entered into me when he spake unto me, and [d]set me upon my feet, that I heard him that spake unto me.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, [e]I send thee to the children of Israel, to a [f]rebellious nation[2] that hath rebelled against me: they and their fathers have transgressed against me, even unto this very day.

4 For they are impudent[3] children, and stiff-hearted. I do [h]send thee unto them; and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD.

5 And they, [i]whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, (for they are a rebellious house,) yet [j]shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.

6 ¶ And thou, son of man, [k]be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briers[4] and thorns be [l]with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: [m]be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.

7 And[o] thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear; for they are most rebellious.[5]

8 But thou, son of man, hear what I say unto thee; [p]Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: open thy mouth, and eat[6] that I give thee.

9 ¶ And when I looked, behold, [q]an hand was sent unto me; and, lo, a [r]roll of a book was therein.

10 And he [s]spread it before me; and it was written[t] within and without; and there was written therein [u]lamentations, and mourning, and woe.[7]

[6] It must be borne in mind that the language of Ezekiel is highly symbolical. His figures are bolder than those of any of the other prophets. The roll symbolized the divine revelation made to the prophet. That revelation was an solemn recital of judgment about to be inflicted upon the Jews. The eating of the roll symbolized a full comprehension of the revelation by the prophetic mind, and the command, Be not thou rebellious, indicates the necessity laid upon him faithfully to deliver and record the whole revelation.—C. ver 4. [6] It will be observed how entirely the prophet was an instrument—a rational, willing, and accountable instrument it is true—in the hand of Jehovah. The Spirit commissioned him, strengthened him, invested in him the whole substance of the message he was to deliver, put the very words into his mouth, and here walled him away to his work. The power which operated in and by him was a power over which he himself had no control: it was a power distinct altogether from that which operates in the soul of the believer in regeneration and sanctification, it was a power given for a specific object, and not extending beyond it.—C.

CHAPTER III.

1 Ezekiel eateth the roll. 4 God encourageth him. 15 God showeth him the rule of prophecy. 22 God shutteth and openeth the prophet's mouth.

MOREOVER, he said unto me, Son of man, eat[a] that thou findest:[1] eat this roll, and [b]go speak unto the house of Israel.

2 So[c] I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat[2] that roll.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, [d]cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee. Then did I [e]eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.

4 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, [g]go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them.

5 For[h] thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech and of an hard language,[3] but to the house of Israel:

6 Not to many people of a strange speech and of an hard language, whose words thou canst not understand; surely, had I sent thee to them, they would[4] have hearkened unto thee.

7 But[i] the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee; for they will not hearken unto me: for all the house of Israel are impudent and hard-hearted.[5]

8 Behold, [j]I have made thy face strong against their faces, and thy forehead strong against their foreheads.

9 As an adamant, harder than flint, have I made thy forehead: [k]fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.

10 Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, [l]all my words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears.

11 And go, get thee [m]to them of the captivity, unto the children of [o]thy people, and [p]speak unto them, and tell them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.

12 Then[q] the spirit took me up,[6] and I heard behind me [r]a voice of a great rushing,[7] saying, [s]Blessed be the glory of the LORD from his place.

13 I heard also [t]the noise of the wings of the living creatures that touched[8] one another, and the noise of the wheels over against them, and a noise of a great rushing.

14 So[u] the spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went in bitterness,[9] in the heat of the faithful publication of his truths. They must indeed, in the discharge of their office, expect the most unnatural and infernal persecution; and from none more than from hardened hypocrites. But let them be used as they may, they must faithfully adhere to and publish God's truths, however mournful or cutting. And in order hereto, they must consider, understand, and experience the power of them on their own hearts, before they preach them to others.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1–3. This roll noted his prophetic commission, or the messages he was to deliver. The eating imported his cordial reception of his messages, and serious meditation on them, that he might understand them. Its being sweet in his mouth imported that his commission was delightful to him at first, though afterwards he was filled with grief and anguish, when he found that he was to deliver such terrible messages, and those to be so little regarded. 8, 9. I will endow thee with boldness to deliver my messages, and with courage and constancy to hold out against all opposition. 12–14. The great rushing, &c., denotes the great commotions and troubles which he was to foretell, and in which God would be glorified. —The noise of the wings of the animals, and of the wheels, denotes the great activity of angels, ministers, and others in executing God's threatenings and providences. 20. If a man, who is but apparently righteous, without any real principle of grace, abandon his seemingly virtuous course, and give up himself to a continued practice of wickedness, and I lay in his way what his lusts shall improve to his destruction, whatever seeming good things once appeared about him, they shall in no wise avail to prevent his punishment. And if thou hast not warned him, thou shalt be punished as guilty of his destruction. 25. These bands my spirit;[1] but[v] the hand of the LORD was strong upon me.

15 ¶ Then I came to [c]them of the captivity at Tel-abib, that dwelt by the river of Chebar, and I sat where they sat, and [d]remained there astonished among them seven days.[2]

16 And[x] it came to pass, at the end of seven days, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

17 Son of man, [e]I have made thee [b]a watchman unto the house of Israel: [c]therefore hear the word at my mouth,[3] and give them warning from me.

18 When I say unto the wicked, [d]Thou shalt surely die; and [e]thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, [f]to save his life; the same wicked man shall[h] die in his iniquity; but [i]his blood will I require at thine hand.

19 Yet[j] if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, [k]he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered[l] thy soul.[4]

20 Again, when a [n]righteous man doth turn from his righteousness,[5] and [o]commit iniquity, and I [p]lay a stumbling-block before him, he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, [q]he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; [r]but his blood will I require at thine hand.

21 Nevertheless, if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous [s]sin not, and he doth not sin, [t]he shall surely live, because he is warned; also [u]thou hast delivered thy soul.[6]

22 ¶ And[v] the hand of the LORD was there upon me; and he said unto me, Arise, [z]go forth into the plain, and I will there talk with thee.

23 Then I arose, and went forth into the plain; and, behold, the [y]glory of the LORD stood there, as the glory which I saw [z]by the river of Chebar: [a]and I fell on my face.

24 Then [b]the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, and said unto me, Go, [c]shut thyself within thine house.

25 But thou, O son of man, behold, [d]they shall put bands upon thee, and shalt bind thee with them, and thou shalt not go out among them:

26 And[e] I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou shalt be dumb, and [g]shalt not be to them a reprover;[7] for they are [h]a rebellious house.

27 But when I speak with thee, [i]I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [j]He that heareth, let him hear; and he that forbeareth, let him forbear: for they are a rebellious house.

5 Heb. righteousness.

* I entirely concur with the comment of Fairbairn on the doctrinal bearing of this passage, that it has nothing to do with the question as to the possibility of the righteous falling from a state of grace. "It seems to be a misdirection of the passage to apply it to such a purpose. Its direct and immediate bearing had respect only to the disparate connection between righteousness and life, sin and death, and certainly by the former a real participation of the divine likeness and blessing, and by the latter the loss of both. But whether this loss may ever be sustained by any who have properly enjoyed the good—whether those who have been truly renewed by grace ever fall back again into the corruption and ruin of nature—this is not to be determined by a passage like the present, which being intended only for a direction to the prophet, in regard to his public ministrations, of necessity spake of the appearances, as indicative of the realities of things."—C.

may either denote the restraints which God put upon him during his four hundred and thirty days' emblematical siege of Jerusalem [ch. iv.], or the restraints which the Jews would lay upon him, in order to prevent his denouncing judgments against them.

Ver. 3. Honey is the emblem of sweetness collected by industry, and preserved by care—of which the bee is one of the most remarkable natural examples. It here represents the sweetness of those reflections that arise from the knowledge and meditation of God's Word, and ready obedience to his will. C.

Ver. 4. This expression, Speak with my words unto them, is such a plain and explicit assertion of full and complete verbal inspiration in one prophet, that unless it be found explicitly disavowed, which it never is, the same amount of inspiration must be ascribed to every other prophet. See ver. 10. C.

Ver. 9. Adamant. What particular stone is intended cannot be determined, nor is the determination important, as the import of the passage is sufficiently plain. God had endowed the prophet with knowledge by means of the roll, or revealed word; he, in face of all opposition, with honesty and courage, determined to deliver his message. C.

Ver. 12. The glory of the Lord from his place, was the Shekinah in the wilderness—in the tabernacle, God manifest in light and cloud. 'The glory of the Lord from his place' in the temple, Mal. 3. 1, was 'the Word made flesh' and dwelling among men, who thus beheld 'his glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.' 'The glory of the Lord from his place' in the heavens, is Christ sitting at the right hand of God, and ever living to make intercession for us. C.

Ver. 14. In bitterness of spirit because of the calamities he was commissioned to reveal.—In the heat. In the godly indignation of his spirit against ingratitude and hardness of heart to be rebuked. C.

Ver. 20. There is a faith that is living, and there is a faith that is dead, Ja. 2. 17: there is, with Christ, an outward union of profession—there is an inward union of the heart, Jn. 15. 2, 6; Ro. 10. 9. The man that professes faith in Christ is righteous in profession, but no farther. And such a one may fall away from that profession in which, for a time, he 'did run well:' and that either through ignorance of the real nature of the gospel, Mat. 13. 19, or want of 'root in himself,' or the dread of persecution, Mat. 13. 21, or through 'care of the world and deceitfulness of riches,' and the seed may thus be choked, and the plant become 'unfruitful.'—A stumbling-block. This may be either a fuller exposition of divine truth for the edification of the church, whereby ignorance is alarmed and alienated—the letting loose of the storm of persecution, by which indolence is disturbed, and the lovers of pleasure disgusted—or the full demand of God upon the liberality of Christian stewardship, at which covetousness takes the alarm and shuts out Christ, by admitting and cherishing 'the love of money.' These and other such 'stumbling-blocks' God is said to 'lay before' men—not to induce them to stumble and fall—not to tempt them to evil—but to punish them for their sins—to bring out from beneath the garb of profession the reality within; and to be a warning to him that 'thinketh he standeth (by faith) to take heed lest he fall' (by sense). C.

Ver. 26. This dumbness may have been physical, so that he could not speak; God thereby manifesting to the prophet and people that speech was his gift, their lips not their own, Ps. 12. 4: or it may have been mental, arising from such an overwhelming astonishment at the view of the divine glory, as deprived him for a time of the power of utterance—a result often arising from deep impressions of natural objects and occurrences: or it may have been merely the effect of that commanded retirement or compulsory imprisonment, by which he was for a time reduced to silence as a public 'preacher of righteousness.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's Word ought to be received as the delightful food of our soul, without disputing: and the more readily we obey God's difficult commandments, we shall receive the more comfort in the issue. Saints may receive with delight what speaks terror to the wicked. And they who minister in holy things, ought to meditate on and experience their subject before they deliver it to others. But unless God give them a spirit of wisdom and understanding, their own labours can avail but little. The more impudent sinners are in opposition to religion, the more bold and resolute should ministers and others appear in defence of it, that if any obstinately reject the counsel of God, they may be rendered inexcusable. And if we be called to hard services, he will fit and furnish us for them. Nor must the want of desired success discourage us, or in the least abate our faithfulness and diligence. What struggles of fear and unbelief may there be where grace reigns! It is very discouraging for ministers to be sent to preach to such as are uncontrollably wicked, and hate to be reformed. And their great griefs are often too big to be uttered. But God can bow their hearts as well as furnish their heads, and so prevent their refusal or desertion of their work. And he often for a time straitens them whom he intends to exalt.—Perseverance in sin, and apostasy from God, must certainly issue in temporal and eternal destruction. But readily will God pardon the most wicked if penitent. O the infinite importance of the ministerial office! What influence the execution thereof hath upon the everlasting happiness or misery of mankind! and ministers are acquitted or condemned as guilty of the destruction of souls as they faithfully deliver God's messages or not. Men's apostasy from, or perseverance in, good works, clearly manifests the counterfeit or real nature of their religion and grace. But they who follow God's direction shall have his necessary comforts always attending them. They who sinfully evade God's public work are ordinarily punished with temporary restraints from it: and they who hate reproof are deprived of faithful reprovers. Such as intend public preaching ought to be prepared for it by much reading, meditation, and prayer, as their messages are deeply connected with the eternal salvation or damnation of men.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1-7. It is most probable that these things were really done, and not in mere vision. If that year was their leap-year of thirteen months, there was time enough between the dates [ch. i. 1, 2; 8. 1]. God could easily make the prophet lie still all the time specified, and live comfortably on his provision. The brittle tile represented Jerusalem's weakness and readiness to be irrecoverably ruined. The pan or slice of iron represented the walls of Jerusalem, or the resolution and fortifications of the Chaldean besiegers; the three hundred and ninety days on his left side, answering to the years of wickedness by the less regarded ten tribes after Jeroboam had become king, 1 Ki. xii., might also figure out three hundred and ninety days of siege by the Chaldeans, before they went off to fight the Egyptians [Je. 37. 5]. The forty days on his right side, answering to the Jews' years of wickedness under Manasseh, Jehoiakim, and Zedekiah, or beginning from the thirteenth or eighteenth year of Josiah, might represent the forty days of siege after the Chaldeans returned before the city was taken.—His setting his face against the portrait of Jerusalem, and having his arm bare, marked how furiously the Chaldeans should besiege it, and how ready they would be to use their swords in murdering the inhabitants.

Ver. 1. Tile. The tiles and bricks used for building in several eastern countries are very large, and have often been used as tablets. Pliny relates how Epigenes inscribed a long series of astronomical observations upon brick tiles (Nat. Hist. lib. viii. 57). The order was particularly appropriate in Chaldea, where it was customary to inscribe indented figures upon broad and thin bricks, many of which are still found in the ruins of Babylon, and may be frequently seen in European collections of eastern antiquities. C.

Ver. 7. Arm shall be uncovered. The uncovering of the arm denoted, in eastern phraseology, preparation for battle; and was intended as a farther emblem of Chaldean preparation, courage and activity in carrying on the siege. C.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Under the type of a siege is showed the time from the defection of Jeroboam to the captivity. 9 By the provision of the siege, is showed the hardness of the famine.

THOU also, son of man, [a]take thee [b]a tile, and lay it before thee, and pourtray upon it the city, even [c]Jerusalem:[1]

2 And[d] lay siege[2] against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount[3] against it; set the camp also against it, and set battering rams[4] against it round about.

3 Moreover, take thou unto thee an iron pan,[5] and set it for [e]a wall of iron between thee and the city; and set thy face against it, and it shall be besieged, and thou shalt lay siege against it. This[f] shall be a sign to the house of Israel.

4 ¶ Lie[h] thou also upon thy left side, and lay [i]the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it: according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it thou shalt bear their iniquity.[6]

5 For I have laid upon thee [j]the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days:[7] so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel.

6 And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy [k]right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days:[8] I have appointed thee each day for a year.[9]

7 Therefore thou shalt [l]set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem, and [m]thine arm shall be uncovered, and thou shalt prophesy against it.

8 And behold, [n]I will lay bands[1] upon thee, and thou shalt not turn thee from one side to another,[2] till thou hast ended the days of thy siege.

9 ¶ Take[p] thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches,[3] and put them in one vessel, and make thee bread[4] thereof, according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon thy side; three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof.[5]

10 And thy meat which thou shalt eat [q]shall be by weight twenty shekels[6] a day: from time to time shalt thou eat it.

11 Thou shalt drink also water by measure, the sixth part of an hin:[7] from time to time shalt thou drink.

12 And thou shalt eat it as barley-cakes,[8] and thou shalt bake it with dung[9] that cometh out of man, in their sight.

13 And the LORD said, Even thus shall the children of Israel eat [r]their defiled bread among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them.

14 Then said I, Ah Lord GOD! [s]behold, my soul hath not been polluted; for from my youth up even till now have I not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces; neither came there abominable flesh into my mouth.

15 Then he said unto me, Lo, I have given thee [t]cow's dung for man's dung, and thou shalt prepare thy bread therewith.[1]

16 ¶ Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, behold, [u]I will break the staff of bread[2] in Jerusalem; and [v]they shall eat bread by weight, and with care; and they shall drink water by measure, and with astonishment:

17 That they may want bread and water, [w]and be astonied one with another, and consume away for their iniquity.

CHAPTER V.

1 Under the type of the prophet's hair, 5 is showed the judgment of Jerusalem for their rebellion, 12 by famine, sword, and dispersion.

AND thou, son of man, [a]take thee a [b]sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thine head, and upon thy beard; then take thee [c]balances to weigh, and divide the hair.

2 Thou[d] shalt burn with fire a third part in the midst of the [e]city, when the days of the siege are fulfilled: and thou shalt take a third part, and [f]smite about it with a knife; and a third part thou shalt [h]scatter in the wind; and I will draw out a sword after them.

3 Thou shalt also take thereof [i]a few in number, and bind them in thy [j]skirts.[2]

4 Then [j]take of them again, and cast them into the midst of the fire,[3] and burn them in the fire; for thereof shall a fire come forth into all the house of Israel.

5 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, [k]This is Jerusalem: [l]I have set it in the midst[4] of the nations and countries that are round about her.[5]

6 And[n] she hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries that are round about her; for they have [o]refused my judgments and my statutes, they have not walked in them.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [p]Because ye multiplied[6] more than the nations that are round about you, [q]and have not walked in

Ver. 12. The Egyptians, Arabs, and other Orientals, frequently use the dried dung of cows and camels for fuel; and the lower classes in Egypt are so wretchedly poor, that they are often compelled literally to comply with the disgusting, but emblematic, order directed to the prophet.—Sandys' Orient. Lit. 1007, 1008. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God accurately marks and avenges the iniquities of preceding ages upon obstinate apostates who have continued in them. And with earnestness and resolution the instruments of justice proceed in their work against hardened transgressors. If God require it of us, we must be ready to endure any hardship or disgrace for his sake. And it is prudent to accustom ourselves to hardships, as we know not to what we may be put before we die. The fear of sinning chiefly affects a gracious soul. And amidst pinching wants, it is very comfortable to have a conscience untainted with wilful guilt. But how ready God is, and how ready then should we be, to regard the conscientious scruples of his people!

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1–4. This imports that Jerusalem, which had been the head of the nation, full of inhabitants, and numerous, but now weak, as hairs, should undergo the foulest disgrace and bitterest grief; and being weighed in the balances of God's justice, should have punishment answerable to their guilt: the city should be taken and burned; one-third of the inhabitants consumed in the flames, or by the pestilence and famine; another slain during the siege, or in attempting to escape; the other be led captive to Chaldea, or flee for refuge to Egypt, Moab, and Ammon, whither the sword of the Chaldeans would pursue them. A few of them seemed about to escape, but the slaughter of Gedaliah their governor, and others, and their flight into Egypt, not only issued in their own ruin, but provoked the Chaldeans to further cruelties against the remains of their nation.

Ver. 2. Thou shalt burn, &c. Either actually in the midst of the city, when the days of his recumbency were completed, or emblematically, in the midst of the plan of the city and siege which the prophet had portrayed on the tile, ch. 4. 1.—Burning may represent the pestilence or burning fever, the usual attendant upon famine, La. 5. 10, or the actual burning of the city, Je. 52.

my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, neither have done according to the judgments[7] of the nations that are round about you:

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold [t]I, even I, am against thee, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee, in the sight of the nations.

9 And I will do in thee [u]that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like, because of all thine abominations.

10 Therefore the fathers [v]shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee [w]will I scatter into all the winds.

11 Wherefore, [x]as I live, saith the Lord GOD, Surely, because thou hast [y]defiled my sanctuary with all thy [z]detestable things, and with all thine abominations, therefore will I also diminish[8] thee; [a]neither shall mine eye spare, neither will I have any pity.

12 ¶ A[b] third part of thee shall die with the pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee; and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee; and I will [c]scatter a third part into all the winds, and [d]I will draw out a sword after them.

13 Thus[e] shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them, and I[f] will be comforted: and they shall know that I the LORD have spoken it in my [g]zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them.

14 Moreover, [h]I will make thee waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee, in the sight of all that pass by.

15 So it shall be[9] a reproach and a taunt, an instruction[i] and an astonishment unto the nations that are round about thee, when I shall execute[j] judgments in thee, in anger and in fury, and in furious rebukes. I the LORD have spoken it.[1]

16 When I shall send upon them[2] the evil [k]arrows of famine,[3] which shall be for their destruction, and which I will send to destroy you: and I will increase the famine upon you, and [l]will break your staff of bread:

17 So will I send upon you famine and [m]evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee; and [n]pestilence and blood shall pass through thee; and I [o]will bring the sword upon thee. I the LORD have spoken it.

1 The judgment of Israel for their idolatry. 8 A remnant shall be saved. 11 The prophet is directed to lament their calamities.

AND the[a] word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [b]set thy face toward the [c]mountains of [1]Israel,[2] and prophesy against them,

3 And say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord GOD; Thus saith the Lord GOD [d]to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys,[3] Behold I, even I, will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your [e]high places;

4 And your altars shall be desolate, and your images[4] shall be broken; and [f]I will cast down your slain men before your idols.[5]

5 And I will lay[6] the dead carcases of the children of Israel before their idols;[7] and I will scatter your [h]bones round about your altars.

6 In[i] all your dwelling-places the cities shall be laid waste,[8] and the high places shall be desolate; that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down, and your works[9] may be abolished.

7 And the slain shall fall in the midst of you, and [j]ye shall know that I am the LORD.

8 ¶ Yet will I leave [k]a remnant, that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations, when ye shall be scattered through the countries.

l The general scope of this prophecy shows that it embraced a period extending into the distant future. The fulfilment commenced a few years after the words were uttered; it has been ever since progressing, and it is not yet completed. The portion of Israel, 'scattered in the wind,' has still the sword of God's wrath 'drawn out' after them. The Jewish prophets were able to look away down the long vista of Jewish history, and to depict it on the prophetic canvas, as a painter represents the windings of a long valley on the flat surface of his picture.—C.

3 This prophecy is most comprehensive. It embraces, 1st. The physical divisions of the country—mountains, hills, rivers and valleys. 2d. The works and monuments of men—high places, altars, cities, and houses. 3d. The people of the land. Upon the first utter desolation is the doom pronounced; upon the second complete destruction; upon the third the sword, famine, and exile. All are now fulfilled.—P.

13.—The knife represents destruction by the sword.—The scattering represents the captivity and dispersion. C.

Ver. 6. They (the nations) have refused—but merely refused—but Israel speciously accepted and falsely covenanted to obey, then lightly changed and wickedly rejected my judgments and my statutes, and so were worse than the heathen. C.

Ver. 7. Neither have done, &c. Neither have ye done so well as the nations—they have tenaciously adhered to the gods of their idolatrous fathers—ye have lightly forsaken the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They have been comparatively moral with a false religion; you have followed lies though in possession of the oracles of truth. C.

Ver. 12. Evil beasts. Either actually wild beasts, driven from the rivers by inundations, from the mountains by storms, or from the deserts by hunger; or figuratively, the Chaldeans, whose untamed ferocity justly entitled them to be called 'evil beasts.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—If men will not be reformed, they must certainly be ruined: and with great ease, and by a vast variety of judgments, God can accomplish the destruction of obstinate sinners. It is very awful when those who should have remained as monuments of mercy fall because of their sins: and highly criminal when such as had been singularly privileged with God's favours, oracles, and ordinances, for promoting the welfare of all around them, become a plague, and the vilest monsters in wickedness: and yet often apostate professors become more abandoned than heathens! How awful it is when idols and their services are admitted into God's land, his temple, his church, and the heart formed for himself! The immediate agents in the ruin of sinners are all the instruments of an angry God: and when his wrath is kindled, who can abide it! It is dreadful to contemplate that by our sins we may come to destruction. And, alas! in what awful condition must the impenitent perish for ever! If public reproofs cannot restrain public wickedness, public judgments must follow at last. Some will be destroyed and should become a warning to others. And if God bear long with us in our sins, his judgments must be the severer when they are inflicted. And the most incredulous will at length be forced to believe his Word, though it should be by their own everlasting destruction.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 3. Rivers and valleys are also specially addressed: because it is probable that, like the heathen whom they imitated and surpassed, ch. 5. 7, they had learned to deify the rivers, and people them with the Naiades: and it is certain that in the valley of Hinnom their most cruel rites of idolatry were practised. C.

Ver. 11. Smite with thine hand, &c. Eastern people employ much more action while speaking than Europeans: and some European nations much more than the British; which circumstance requires to be taken into account in the order 'to smite and to stamp,' actions which, to an eastern people, might be eminently expressive of the deepest indignation and sorrow. C.

Ver. 12. The threefold division of judgment, ch. 5. 12, seems, most probably, to have been adapted to three political factions into which the people were divided. (1) Those that were for fleeing 'far off,' and leaving Jerusalem to her fate, and taking refuge in Egypt or among the Ammonites, &c. (2) Those who encouraged, or perhaps compelled, Zedekiah to rebel. And (3) those who, when the rebellion was suppressed in the open country, refused to hear Jeremiah, and madly held out in Jerusalem. A terrible example of the existence and wickedness of such Jewish factions may be seen in Josephus' History of the Jewish War. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Terrible are the desolations which guilt and war make in nations. And no place, no idol, no station, can protect from God's wrath. If men will not destroy idols, he will find a way, even by idolaters, to destroy both together. His persevering patience, as well as both mercies and judgments, encourage and excite to a cordial and thorough repentance. And loathsome and abominable is the most beloved sin to a person truly penitent. Yea, hopeful is the case when sinners begin to remember God, and the base affronts which they have given him. And nothing more deeply wounds awakened consciences than a sense of their base ingratitude, and of grieving the Holy Spirit of God. God will make all men, either by their ruin, or especially by their hearty repentance, effectually to acknowledge his perfections, to feel the equity and veracity of his Word, and justify him in the accomplishment of it. The sins and judgments of others should affect us as well as our own. And

SUMMER HOUSE, CÆSAREA PHILIPPI—NEAR MOUNT HERMON WHERE CHRIST WAS TRANSFIGURED. [Ezekiel, vi:3-4.]—"And say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; thus saith the Lord God to the mountains, and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, Behold I, even I, will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your high places; and your altars shall be desolate, and your images shall be broken; and I will cast down your slain men before your idols." We have a picture here of a summer house in Cæsarea Philippi. The weather is so hot here in the summer, and there are so many creeping and crawling things among the old ruins of this ancient city that people build above their stone quarters, in the warm season, summer houses such as you see in the picture. Cæsarea Philippi is at the foot of Mount Hermon, and truly has the prophesy of Ezekiel been fulfilled in this city. Here the altars are desolate, and the images broken, and the temple of Pan is in ruins.

ber me among the nations whither they shall be carried captives, because [n]I am broken[1] with their [o]whorish heart, which hath departed from me, and with their [p]eyes, which go a whoring after their idols: and they shall [q]loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations.

10 And[r] they shall know that I am the LORD, and that I have not said in vain that I would do this evil unto them.[2]

11 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, [s]Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel! for [t]they shall fall by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence.

12 He that is far off shall die of the pestilence; and he that is near shall fall by the sword; and he that remaineth and is besieged, shall die by the famine: thus will I [u]accomplish my fury upon them.

13 Then[v] shall ye know that I am the LORD, when their slain men shall be among their idols round about their altars, upon [w]every high hill, in all the tops of the mountains, and under every green tree, and under every thick oak, the place where they did offer sweet savour to all their idols.

14 So will I [x]stretch out my hand upon them, and make the land desolate, yea, more desolate than the wilderness[3] toward [y]Diblath, in all their habitations; and they shall know that I am the LORD.[4]

CHAPTER VII.

1 The final desolation of Israel. 16 The mournful repentance of them that escape. 20 The enemies defile the sanctuary because of the Israelites' abominations. 23 Under the type of a chain is showed the miserable captivity of all orders of men.

MOREOVER, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Also, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord GOD unto the land of [1]Israel, [a]An end, the end is come upon the four corners of the land.

3 Now is the end come upon thee, and [b]I will send mine anger upon thee, and will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense[2] upon thee all thine abominations.

4 And[c] mine eye shall not spare thee, neither will I have pity: [d]but I will recompense thy ways upon thee, and thine abominations shall be in[3] the midst of thee; and [e]ye shall know that I am the LORD.

5 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [f]An evil, an only evil,[4] behold, is come.

6 An[5] end is come, the end is come: it watcheth[5] for[6] thee; behold, it is come.

7 The[i] morning[7] is come unto thee, O thou that dwellest in the land: [j]the time is come, the day of trouble is near, and not the [8]sounding[9] again of the mountains.

8 Now[k] will I shortly pour out my fury upon thee, and accomplish mine anger upon thee; and I will judge thee [l]according to thy ways, and will recompense thee for all thine abominations.

9 And mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: I will recompense [1]thee [m]according to thy ways, and thine abominations that are in the midst of thee; and ye shall know that [n]I am the LORD that smiteth.

10 Behold[p] the day, behold, it is come; the morning is gone forth; [q]the rod hath blossomed; pride hath budded.

11 Violence[r] is risen up into a rod of wickedness: [s]none of them shall remain, nor of their multitude,[2] nor of any of theirs;[3] neither[t] shall there be wailing for them.

12 The[u] time is come, the day draweth near: let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn; [v]for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

13 For the seller shall not return[4] to that which is sold, although they were yet alive:[5] for [w]the vision is touching the whole multitude thereof, which shall not return; [x]neither shall any strengthen himself [6]in the iniquity of his life.[7]

14 They[y] have blown the trumpet, even to make all ready; but [z]none goeth to the [8]battle: for [9]my wrath is upon all the multitude thereof.

2 The final object of all these judgments is here indicated—it was to bring Israel to a knowledge of, not theoretical merely, but experimental, of God. Promises, warnings, threatenings, and favours had all been vain. Judgments alone, terrible & long-continued, would serve to bring the people to a sense of their duty. These are not yet exhausted; but the time will yet come when Israel shall know and worship God.—P.

ministers must often weep over them who never shed a tear for themselves.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 7. The beginning of desolation is come upon you who remain in Judea; and ye shall quickly meet with real and terrible trouble, and not mere fears and ill-grounded fancies of it. 10–15. Since pride and violence have come to such intolerable heights among all ranks, the haughty and cruel Chaldeans are in readiness to punish you; and all orders shall be equally involved in your misery: such as sell fields shall not return to them in the year of jubilee, being captives in Babylon; yea, after their seventy years' captivity, it will be impossible for many to find their own inheritances. This prediction of the desolation of the country, and of its inhabitants, shall not fail of exact accomplishment: nor shall any be able to secure themselves from those judgments threatened, so long as they continue in their evil courses. They may blow the trumpets to call them together for war; but, deprived of all courage and resolution by my wrath upon them, none shall dare to assemble. 16–22. The few appointed for escape shall indeed be preserved, and scattered here and there for their safety; and they shall bitterly bewail their calamities and sins. All shall be quite dispirited and incapable of helping themselves; and shall be quite overwhelmed with grief, terror, and shame. Their wealth shall be altogether unprofitable to them; nay, they shall be glad to be rid of it, or shall have it seized by the enemy: or, in the famine, it shall be unable to procure them sufficient food,—since they have made it the occasion of manifold wickedness, and have employed it in the service of idols. And as for my magnificent and beautiful temple, which has long been the glory of their nation, and which they have defiled with their idols and the service of them, I will quickly drive them far from it into Chaldea, and will give it into the hands of the most infamous heathens to be defiled, plundered, and destroyed. 23–27. Prepare for imprisonment, captivity, and bondage; for your land is full of capital crimes, oppression, rapine, and injustice. Therefore shall the barbarous Chaldeans seize upon your whole property, of which ye so proudly boasted; nor shall your humblest entreaties be able to procure any respite, but one mischief shall follow another. Neither prophet nor priest shall be able or allowed to teach you; nor shall the most prudent and experienced know how to advise you. Both magistrates and people shall be utterly infatuated and dispirited.

Ver. 2. Land of Israel. The tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and the fragments of the other tribes that had been left in secluded spots, or had returned from the nations into which they had fled, or been carried captive. C.

Ver. 4. Thine abominations, &c. Being 'given over' to your own will and ways, your abominations that you have chosen and loved, shall remain in the midst of every family and assembly, evidences of your apostasy and causes of divine judgment. C.

Ver. 10. The rod. Some think Nebuchadnezzar, who is called 'the rod of God's anger,' and who was a proud man; but it seems rather to describe the oppression and pride that had grown up in Israel; and on account of which God commissioned as proud an oppressor to execute his righteous judgment. C.

Ver. 12. Let not the buyer rejoice that he has obtained, nor the seller mourn that he has been forced to part with, property at an undervalue; it shall now be wrested from the buyer by a foreign power, as it was from the seller by domestic oppression. C.

Ver. 19. The possession of silver and gold led to the abuse of them in luxury, pride, covetousness, and idolatry. While the Israelites were comparatively poor, they were industrious, and remembered God: when, by their industry, they became rich, they stumbled over their abundance, and forgot the giver.—A melancholy progress which Christianity, alas! too often witnesses in her own children; and against which all successful men have special need to 'watch and pray.' C.

Ver. 20. 'As to their beautiful ornaments, which were for pride, they turned them into images of their abominations, and their detestable things they made therewith; hence I will make them to them as an unclean thing.' Boothroyd.

REFLECTIONS.—God gives to sinners fair warning of their approaching ruin; and with tenderness he seeks by his warnings to save them from ruin. But fearful and various are the plagues which men's diversified iniquities entail upon them. And nothing can avail for GATE OF ATHENE ARCHEGETIS—RUINS ONCE CONSECRATED TO THE CAUSE OF IDOLATRY. [Ezekiel, viii:17.]—"Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit the abominations which they commit here? for they have filled the land with violence and have returned to provoke me to anger." At the time Ezekiel wrote this, B. C. 594, Solon repaired the constitution and laws for Athenian cities, but the abominations Ezekiel represents as being committed by the house of Judah and filling the land with violence, were being committed also by the Athenians in their worship of idols. So when Solon was an old man, Pisistratus, the tyrant, made himself the master of the Acropolis. These ruins and others in Athens only serve to show that the same laws which were at work among the Israelites, bringing them to confusion, were also at work among the Greeks, bringing them to a depth of national poverty, from which they have never recovered.

15 The sword is without, and the pestilence and the famine within: he that is in the field shall die with the sword; and he that is in the city, famine and pestilence shall devour him.

16 ¶ But they that escape of them [c]shall escape, and shall be on the mountains [d]like doves of the valleys, all of them mourning, every one for his iniquity.

17 All [e]hands shall be feeble, and all knees shall be weak as water.[3]

18 They shall also [g]gird themselves with sackcloth, and horror shall cover them; and shame shall be upon all faces, and baldness upon all their heads.

19 They[h] shall cast their silver[1] in the streets, and their gold shall be removed:[2] their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the LORD: they shall not satisfy their souls, neither fill their bowels; because it is the [i]stumbling-block of their iniquity.[3]

20 ¶ As for the [j]beauty of his ornament, he set it in majesty; [k]but they made the images of their abominations, and of their detestable things therein: therefore have I set it far from them.[4]

21 And[6] I will give it into the hands of the strangers for a prey, and to the wicked of the earth for a spoil: and they shall pollute it.

22 My[n] face will I turn also from them, and they shall pollute my secret place:[5] for the robbers[6] shall enter into it, and defile it.

23 ¶ Make[o] a chain;[7] for[p] the land is full of bloody crimes, and the city is full of violence.

24 Wherefore I will bring [q]the worst[8] of the heathen, and they shall possess their houses: [r]I will also make the pomp of the strong to cease, and their holy[s] places shall be defiled.[9]

25 Destruction[1] cometh; [t]and they shall seek peace, and there shall be none.

26 Mischief[u] shall come upon mischief, and rumour shall be upon rumour; then [v]shall they seek a vision[2] of the prophet; [x]but the law shall perish from the priest, and counsel from the ancients.[3]

CHAPTER VIII.

1 Ezekiel, in a vision of God at Jerusalem, 5 is showed the image of jealousy, 7 the chambers of imagery, 13 the mourners for Tammuz, 16 the worshippers of the sun. 17 God's wrath for their idolatry.

AND it came to pass in the [a]sixth year,[1] in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I sat in mine house, and the [b]elders of Judah sat before me, that [c]the hand of the Lord GOD fell there upon me.

2 Then[d] I beheld, and, lo, a likeness as the appearance of fire: from the appearance of his loins even downward, fire; and from his loins even upward, as the appearance of brightness, as the colour of amber.

3 And he [e]put forth the form of an hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and [g]brought me[2] in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the [h]inner gate that looketh toward the north, [i]where was the seat of [j]the image of jealousy, which provoketh to jealousy.

4 And, behold, [k]the glory of the God of Israel was there, according to the vision that I saw in the plain.

5 ¶ Then said he unto me, Son of man, [l]lift up thine eyes now the way toward the north. [m]So I lifted up mine eyes the way toward the north, and behold, northward at the [o]gate of the altar, [p]this image of jealousy in the entry.

6 He said, furthermore, unto me, Son of man, seest thou what they do? even [q]the great abominations that the house of Israel [r]committeth here, that I should go far off[3] from[s] my sanctuary? but turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see [t]greater abominations.

7 ¶ And he brought me to [u]the door of the court; and when I looked, behold, a hole[4] in the wall.

their defence when God rises up to judgment. Sins and sorrows are inseparable. But happy then are they who mourn after a godly sort! Blessed are they that weep now, for they shall be comforted! Money is a dangerous snare to such as inordinately love it, and altogether unprofitable in the day of God's wrath or in the eternal state. Justly are God's ordinances taken from those who despised and profaned them. If men will not be governed by the laws and experience the power of godliness, it is not meet that they should long be honoured by the form of it. And if all ranks will add sin to sin, it is but just that God should make all of them to share in miseries, one after another.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 2. Fire—the emblem of power to consume in judgment, 2 Pe. 3:7.—Brightness—the excellence and glory of Christ.—Amber—neither as fire to consume, nor bright as light, but a chastened radiance which the eye might look upon with pleasure, Is. 45:22; Jn. 1:14; He. 12:2; 1 Jn. 1:1-3. C.

Ver. 3. The seat. The niche or pedestal on which the image was placed. It is called 'image of jealousy,' because it provoked the LORD, who is 'a jealous God'—jealous of his own honour; jealous of any perversion of his truth or degradation of his worship; and jealous lest any base idol or abominable lust should steal away from him the love of his children—the allegiance of his subjects—the fidelity of the church he had espoused in the bonds of the everlasting covenant. C.

Ver. 10. The Egyptians worshipped 'creeping things,' such as the beetle, and 'abominable beasts,' such as the crocodile, &c. And the strong propensity of Israel about this time to return into Egypt, renders it highly probable that they had adopted their idolatry. The subterraneous tombs of Egypt present upon their walls exactly such paintings as the prophet here describes. C.

Ver. 12. Forsaken the earth—the land of Judea. This seems to have been, not a figurative expression, but an actual opinion. Jaazaniah and his associates in idolatry did not attempt to undefy JEHOVAH; they merely asserted he had 'forsaken the land,' and left them at liberty to choose another tutelary god. C.

Ver. 14. Tammuz. Adonis, whom the heathen fabled to have been beloved of Venus, the goddess of licentiousness—for heathenism deified and worshipped every form of wickedness—who, when he was killed by a wild boar, wept for him. And this her lamentation was annually observed with affected weeping both by men and women. C.

Ver. 17. They put the branch to their nose. Each heathen deity had his dedicated tree, of which a 'branch' was presented in the hand during worship; to which custom this is supposed to be an allusion. The passage, however, has been translated:—'And, lo, they send forth a scornful noise through their nostrils' (Newcome):—They mock the worship of Jehovah, upon whose temple they have turned their backs. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God keeps a particular account of every message that he sends us, and will shortly call us to account for them. And when we are faithful and active in improving the discoveries which God hath bestowed upon us, we may expect more. The more we retire from the world into our own heart, and fix our attention on things above, we may more reasonably hope for still further communications from God. And to see his glory is an excellent mean of discovering to us the infinitely odious nature of idolatry and other wickedness, which turns his truth into a lie, and his glory into shame. What multitudes of abominations crowd together! If one be found, we may reckon of thousands which still lie hid. But it will require a diligent search to find them out, either in ourselves or others. And nowhere may we expect greater or more heinous abominations than in connection with the worship of God. Many make a fair show in God's house in public, who, if followed to their secret chambers, would be found sunk in filthiness and impiety. And seldom can any be found worse than evil ministers and magistrates. Nothing more encourages men to indulgence, or even impudence, in sin, than a practical disbelief of God's all-seeing knowledge and all-present majesty. If once women transgress the natural modesty

8 Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall: and when I had digged in the wall, behold, a door.

9 And he said unto me, Go in, and behold the [v]wicked abominations that they do here.

10 So I [z]went in and saw; and behold, every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts,[5] and all the idols[6] of the house of Israel, pourtrayed upon the wall round about.

11 And there stood before them seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel,[7] and in the midst of them stood Jaazaniah the son of Shaphan,[y] with[z] every man his censer in his hand; and a thick cloud of incense went up.

12 Then said he unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients[8] of the house of Israel do [a]in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, [b]The LORD seeth us not; the LORD hath forsaken the earth.[9]

13 ¶ He said also unto me, Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see [c]greater abominations that they do.

14 Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the LORD's house which was toward the north;[1] and behold, there sat women weeping[2] for Tammuz.[3]

15 Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see [d]greater abominations than these.

16 ¶ And he brought me into the inner court of the LORD's house; and, behold, [e]at the door of the temple of the LORD, between the porch and the altar,[4] were about five and twenty men, [f]with their backs[5] toward the temple of the LORD, and their faces toward the east; and they worshipped the sun toward the east.

17 ¶ Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit[6] the abominations which they commit here? for they have filled the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger; and, lo, they put the branch to their nose.[7]

18 Therefore[h] will I also deal in fury: mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity; [i]and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them.

Venus, who was enamoured of him, caused him to be defied: a temple was erected in honour of him, and the stream Belitis which he testes was called by his name. Yearly, on the day of his death, a lewd feast at was held, and Syrian maidens assembled from far and near to weep for him, and to indulge in lascivious rites. 8 The senseless and abominable idolatry of the Israelites is here depicted with great graphic power. God's purpose in exposing it is to show the cause of those terrible judgments pronounced upon both an infatuated people and a polluted land. The representation is here symbolic; but the evils which it symbolizes are real. The people looked for help to Egypt, and in order to secure it they seem to have conformed to the grossest forms of Egyptian idolatry. Instead of trusting in Jehovah, whose mighty mercy and omnipotent power had been so wonderfully displayed during the whole course of their national history, they turned from him to the vile idols of Egypt.—B.

3 "From the six," says Hengstenberg, "the prospect turns to the punishment. The announcement of this begins in this section with the discharge of the sinful inhabitants of the city, and then in the following chapter we have the destruction of the city itself. The scene is the following:—At the command of the Lord, who will punish the people, appear the ministers of his righteousness, six in number, and in their midst a man clothed in linen, the former with weapons of destruction, the latter with an ink-horn. The destructive agents is the temple, near the brazen altar: thence the glory of the Lord went towards them from the most holy place to the threshold of the temple. It gives to the man clothed in linen the order to destroy the ungodly without mercy. The orders are executed."—C.

CHAPTER IX.

1 A vision, whereby is shewed the preservation of some, 5 and the destruction of all the rest. 8 God cannot be entreated for them.

HE cried[1] also in mine ears with [a]a loud voice, saying, Cause them[2] that have charge over the city to draw near, even every man with his destroying weapon in his hand.[3]

2 And, behold, [b]six men came from the way of the [c]higher gate, which lieth[4] toward the north, and every man a slaughter weapon[5] in his hand; and one man[6] among them was [d]clothed with linen, with a writer's inkhorn by his side:[7] and they went in, and stood [e]beside the brasen altar.

3 And [g]the glory of the God of Israel was gone up from the cherub, whereupon he was, to the threshold of the house: and he called to the man clothed with linen, which had the writer's inkhorn by his side;

4 And the LORD said unto him, Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark[8] upon the foreheads of the men [h]that sigh, and that cry, for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof.

5 ¶ And to the others he said in mine hearing,[9] Go[i] ye after him through the city, and [j]smite; let not your eye spare, neither have ye pity:

6 Slay utterly[1] old and young, both maids, and little children, and women; [k]but come not near any man upon whom is the mark; and [l]begin at my sanctuary. Then they began at [m]the ancient men which were before the house.

7 And he said unto them, [o]Defile the house, and fill the courts with the slain; go ye forth. And they went forth, and slew in the city.

8 ¶ And it came to pass, while they were slaying them, and I was left, that [p]I fell upon my face, and cried, and said, [q]Ah, Lord GOD! wilt thou destroy all the [r]residue of Israel in thy pouring out of thy fury upon Jerusalem?

of their sex, they bid fair to stick at nothing horrid or obscene. And if men once turn their back upon God's institutions, they bid fair endlessly to wander after their own inventions. But shortly shall the most secret abominations be discovered, and the most shocking and daring be sufficiently punished.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 2-11. The six armed destroyers denote the Chaldeans and other instruments of God's vengeance. The man with the ink-horn denotes Jesus Christ, who manages all the slaughter of apostate nations, nay, all in the world, so as may consist with the preservation of his people, especially those who faithfully mourn over, and testify against, abounding iniquities.

Ver. 1. Cause them that have charge, &c. The princes of the Chaldeans, who had a charge from God to execute righteous judgment against the wicked inhabitants of the city. C.

Ver. 2. Six men. Equivalent to the six labour days of the week—a number exactly completed in the six successive mentions of the Chaldeans. See Je. 52. 28.—'And one man among (not of' them clothed with linen'—represents the righteous discrimination of God in the execution of his judgments upon mixed communities, whether he employ human or angelic agency, Re. 15. 6; 19. 8. C.

Ver. 3. The glory . . . was gone up. The 'glory,' or Shekinah, had gone up from the 'door of the inner gate,' ch. 8. 3, and now appeared on the threshold, ready to enter, judge, or depart. C.

Ver. 4. Set a mark. The Jews thought the mark was the letter called thau, the first in the Hebrew word law. Some early Christian writers admitting this to be the mark, yet held it was in the Samaritan character, which was in form of a cross—thus showing how early the superstitious use of that symbol of salvation had crept into the church. From Re. 14. 1 the mark will be found to be the name of the Father, acknowledging his children, and sealing them with the Spirit of promise until the day of redemption; and the name of the Lamb, Re. 22. 4, acknowledging those whom he had redeemed, washed in his blood, and clothed in his righteousness. See also the holy priesthood of believers implied in this forehead mark, comp. Ex. 28. 38, with Re. 1. 6. C.

Ver. 6. Ancient men. The Sanhedrin, ch. 8. 10, 11, in God's house governors by office, idolaters by practice. A solemn warning to all who bear rule in the Christian church to beware both of 'the fear of man which bringeth a snare,' and that love of the world, which sooner or later is sure to terminate in that 'covetousness which is idolatry.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's ministers of wrath, no less than of mercy, are always ready at his call. But how exceeding loath he is to leave a church, till their obstinacy and impudence, as it were, force him away! And gradual even then are the removals of his comfortable presence. But even in the midst of ruin and destruction, he takes peculiar care of the protection of his followers, however weak and concealed their holiness and zeal may be. He knows them that are his; and not one of them shall be lost. And he will keep them safe amidst common calamities who keep themselves pure amidst abounding provocations. But when he has gathered his wheat into his garner, nothing remains for the chaff but unquenchable fire. Those who persist in impenitence must die without mercy. And none meet with more terrible destruction than unfaithful magistrates and ministers. God's temple protects penitent, not obstinate offenders. And if judgment begin at the house of God, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear? If servants in it defile it with their idolatries, no wonder that God should suffer the enemies of it to defile it with their violences.—But if God spare us in mercy, we ought to intercede for our sinful brethren.—And even though for their sinfulness God

9 Then said he unto me, [f]The iniquity of the house of Israel and Judah is exceeding great, and the land is full of[2] blood,[3] and the city full of perverseness;[4] for they say, [g]The LORD hath forsaken the earth, and the LORD seeth not.

10 And as for me also, mine [h]eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity; but [i]I will recompense their way upon their head.

11 And, behold, the man clothed with linen, which had the inkhorn by his side, reported the matter,[5] saying, [k]I have done as thou hast commanded me.

CHAPTER X.

1 The vision of the coals of fire, to be scattered over the city. 8 The vision of the cherubims.

THEN I[a] looked, and behold, in the [b]firmament that was above the head of the cherubims there appeared over them as it were a sapphire stone, as the appearance of the likeness of a throne.[1]

2 And [2]he spake[3] unto the man[4] clothed with linen, and said, [c]Go in between the wheels,[5] even under the cherub, and fill thine[6] hand with coals of fire from between the cherubims, and [d]scatter them over the city.[7] And he went in in my sight.

3 Now the cherubims stood on the right[8] side of the house, when the man went in; and the[e] cloud[9] filled the inner court.

4 Then the [9]glory of the LORD went up[1] from the cherub, [h]and stood over the threshold of the house; and [i]the house was filled with the cloud, and the court was full of the brightness of the LORD's glory.

5 And the [j]sound of the cherubims' wings was heard even to the [k]outer court, as the [l]voice of the Almighty God when he speaketh.[2]

6 And it came to pass, that [m]when he had commanded the man clothed with linen, saying, Take fire from between the wheels, [c]from between the cherubims; then he went in, and [p]stood beside the wheels.

7 And one cherub stretched forth[3] his hand from between the cherubims unto the fire that was between the cherubims, and took thereof, and put it into the hands of him that was clothed with linen; who took it, and [q]went out.

8 ¶ And [r]there appeared in the cherubims the[4] form of a man's hand under their wings.

9 And[4] when I looked, behold, the four wheels by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub: and the appearance of the wheels was as the colour of a beryl stone.

10 And as for their appearances, they four had one likeness, as if a wheel[4] had been in the midst[5] of a wheel.

11 When[n] they went,[6] they went upon their four sides; they turned not as they went, but to the place whither the head[7] looked they followed it; they turned not as they went.

12 And their whole body,[8] and their backs, and their hands, and their wings, and the wheels, were [s]full of eyes[9] round about, even the wheels that they four had.

13 As for the wheels, [t]it was [u]cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel![2]

14 And[9] every one had four faces. [v]the first face was the face of a cherub, and [w]the second face was the face of a man, and the [b]third the face of a lion, and the [c]fourth the face of an eagle.

15 And the cherubims were [d]lifted up. [x]This is the living creature[3] that I saw by the river of Chebar.

16 And[9] when the cherubims went, the wheels went by them; and when the cherubims lifted up their wings to mount up from the earth, the same wheels also turned not from beside them.

17 When they stood, these stood; and when they were lifted up, these lifted up themselves also: for [b]the spirit of the living creature[4] was in them.

18 Then the glory of the LORD [y]departed from off the threshold of the house, and [j]stood over the [5]cherubims.[6]

19 And [k]the cherubims lifted up their wings, and mounted up from the earth in my sight: when they went out, the wheels also were beside them; and every one stood [l]at the door of [z]the east gate of the LORD's house; [o]and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

20 This[9] is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river of Chebar; and [q]I knew that they were the cherubims.

21 Every[r] one had four faces apiece, and every one four wings; and the likeness of the hands of a man was under their wings.

22 And the likeness of their faces was the same faces which I saw by the river of Chebar, their appearances and themselves: they [s]went every one straight forward.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1–7. The throne, ver. 1, denotes God's coming in a way of judgment against the Jews. The man clothed in linen, taking the fire from between the cherubims to scatter over the city, ver. 2, 6, 7. denotes Christ as executing the destructive justice of God on Jerusalem, according to the predictions of his prophets, and by the ministration of angels. The bright cloud that filled the inner court, ver. 3, 4, might denote the terrible judgment of God on the priests; or his presence, as leaving the Jews and coming to the Gentiles. The terrible sound of the cherubim's wings, heard even to the outer court, ver. 5, may denote the terrible judgments of God on the Jews, heard of among the heathen; or the gospel published by the apostles to the Gentiles. 13. I plainly discerned that every providential dispensation, and every particular church, was under the direction and government of some superior being, even God himself. [See further explication of cherubims, wheels, &c., on ch. i.]

LORD'S house, which looketh eastward: and, behold, at the door of the gate [c]five and twenty men; among whom I saw Jaazaniah the son of Azur, and Pelatiah the son of Benaiah, [d]princes of the people.

2 Then said he unto me, Son of man, these are the men that [e]devise mischief,[1] and give wicked counsel in this city;

3 Which say, [g]It is not near; let us build houses:[2] this[h] city is the caldron, and we be the flesh.[3]

4 ¶ Therefore [i]prophesy against them, prophesy, O son of man.

5 And the Spirit of the LORD [j]fell upon me, and said unto me, Speak; Thus saith the LORD, Thus[k] have ye said, O house of Israel: for [l]I know the things that come into your mind, every one of them.

6 Ye[m] have multiplied your slain in this city, and ye have filled the streets thereof with the slain.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [o]Your slain whom ye have laid in the midst of it, they are the flesh, and this city is the caldron; but I[p] will bring you forth out of the midst of it.

8 Ye[q] have feared the sword; and I will bring a sword upon you, saith the Lord GOD.

9 And[r] I will bring you out of the midst thereof, and deliver you into the [s]hands of strangers, and will execute judgments [t]among you.

10 Ye shall [u]fall by the sword: I will judge you in the [v]border[4] of Israel; and [w]ye shall know that I am the LORD.

11 This[x] city shall not be your caldron, neither shall ye be the flesh in the midst thereof; but I will judge you in the border of Israel:[5]

12 And ye shall know that I am the LORD: for ye [y]have not walked[6] in my statutes, neither executed my judgments, but [z]have done after the manners of the heathen that are round about you.

13 ¶ And it came to pass, [a]when I prophesied, that [b]Pelatiah, the son of Benaiah, [c]died:[7] then [d]fell I down upon my face, and cried with a loud voice, and said, Ah, Lord GOD! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?

14 ¶ Again[e] the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

15 Son of man, thy brethren,[8] even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, [f]Get you far from the LORD; unto us is this land given in possession.

16 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Although [g]I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as [h]a little sanctuary[9] in the countries where they shall come.

17 Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, I will even [i]gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel.[1]

18 And they shall come thither, and they shall [j]take away all the detestable things thereof, and all the abominations thereof, from thence.

19 And [k]I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the [l]stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them an [m]heart of flesh;

20 That[n] they may walk in my statutes, and keep mine ordinances, and do them: [o]and they shall be my people, and I will be their God.

21 But as for them whose [p]heart walketh after the heart of their [q]detestable things and their representing the washing of regeneration, stood on the right side, 1 Ki. 7:39.—There also were the candlesticks, representing gospel light, 1 Ki. 7:49. On the right side of the altar stood the angel that heralded the Messiah, Lu. 1:11: and on the right side of the sepulchre, the angel that announced and testified his resurrection, Mar. 16:5. From these facts it will be easy to gather why the cherubim, either the representatives of the 'ministering spirits, that minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation,' or the emblems of the church of the redeemed, represented by her apostolic messengers, should take their place on the 'right side of the house,' which was also the side of the ship upon which our Lord directed his disciples to cast their net, Jn. 21:6,—the directory for their conduct when they act as 'fishers of men.' See also Mat. 7:6. C.

[7] This prophecy in its full sense is essentially Messianic. The return from the Babylonish exile was a partial fulfilment; but that fulfilment was in itself a type of a greater—the final ingathering of the Jewish nation to their God and Saviour. The new heart and new Spirit mentioned in vers. 19, 20 signify a total and radical change of national character, which has never yet taken place, but which we may with confidence look for.—C.

Ver. 11. They went upon their four sides. That is, they went east, west, north, or south, as the Spirit guided: and that in the universal and heavenly sense, and not in the mere local and earthly sense of horizontal motion on one fixed plane. They expatiated equally through 'the height and the depth, the length and the breadth' of the providence and grace of the Lord. C.

Ver. 14. Cherub. The word 'cherub' being here substituted for 'ox' in the former vision, ch. 1:10, has led to the opinion that the cherubims in the temple were delineated with the faces of oxen and wings of birds—emblems of peace, patience, strength, and labour, combined with alacrity. This opinion, however, is rendered somewhat doubtful by the mention of cherubims and oxen as separate species, 1 Ki. 7:29, but these may have been mere oxen, and not winged oxen, the one setting forth the alacrity that gives perfection to the labour of the other. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How glorious and majestic are the appearances of God in his providence or church! Awful is the ministration of angels or messages of faithful ministers! And terrible are the denunciations of JEHOVAH'S wrath, especially against apostate professors! And deep the concern of Jesus Christ and his angels and ministers in the execution of it! He hath all judgment committed to him; and at his last coming he will scatter his coals of fire over our earth, and for ever over the world of the ungodly. Harmonious and uniform, steady and regular, are the motions of Providence, and the divine management of churches amidst all their variations. All things are seen by God's all seeing eye, and act constantly by his irresistible energy.—But by slow degrees, and in seeming aversion, doth he remove his gracious presence and ordinances from a people, as one glad to return upon their gospel repentance and humble requests.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 2, 3. They contrive schemes for the defence of the city, and encourage the people to rebel in defiance of God's threatenings, pretending that the Chaldeans will not in their times be able to take the city, or pluck them out of it. 6–11. Since you have seduced the people to stand out against the Chaldeans, contrary to the direction of God, therefore the most of them are slain, and become like flesh in a pot; and the Chaldeans shall carry you ringleaders in wickedness out of Jerusalem to Riblah in Syria, or to Babylon, and there barbarously kill you. 15–19. It is for those your brethren in Chaldea you should pray, who are ridiculed by the Jews at Jerusalem as voluntary forsakers of the Lord, his land and worship, and forfeitors of their property to such as maintained their station and interest in Canaan.—To these, in their scattered condition, will I be a protector, and will accept their worship as well as if at Jerusalem. These will I gather together and restore to their country in due time; purge from their idolatries; renew in all the faculties of their souls, and change their stubborn, rebellious, and incorrigible dispositions into those which are tender, tractable, and pliable.

Ver. 1. Five and twenty men. The Jewish senate, or Sanhedrim, consisted of six representatives or heads of each tribe, in all seventy-two, but usually called the Seventy; these were all discovered to have secretly turned idolaters, ch. 8. 12, 12. Next, the LORD discovered to the prophet twenty-five (more than one-third of the whole) who had turned their backs upon the temple, and openly and avowedly become sun-worshippers and abettors of violence and bloodshed, ch. 8. 16, 17. See ver. 6. These seem to be the twenty-five evil counsellors, now discovered and denounced. C.

Ver. 7. Your slain, &c. The prophets and other innocent persons slain in the times of Manasseh—they have found Jerusalem indeed a caldron—but 'I will bring you forth out of the midst of it,' ver. 11, and adjudge you to many deaths—the living death of cowards, ver. 8, the drudgery of slaves, ver. 9, the vain regrets of exiles, and the pitiless execution of a foreign sword, ver. 10. C.

Ver. 15. The idolatrous citizens of Jerusalem, so far from desiring the return of their exiled brethren, 'their kinsmen according to the flesh,' were averse to their return, and determined to retain the entire possession of the land. Such is covetousness—defacing every record even of divine right, and tearing asunder every tie of relationship and affection. C.

Ver. 17. This prediction began to be fulfilled in the days of Nehemiah and Ezra; which partial gathering was a type or specimen of that great and final restoration to their land, and conversion to Jesus, with which the prophecies so constantly abound. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The higher men are in office, the more criminal is their unfaithfulness. Wicked counsellors hurry a deluded people to the precipice of ruin. But they who put far from them the evil day, will find it terribly surprise them before they are aware. Mockery at God's words will quickly end in misery. It is comabominations, [u]I will recompense their way upon their own heads, saith the Lord GOD.

22 ¶ Then[v] did the cherubims lift up their wings, and the wheels beside them; and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

23 And[x] the glory of the LORD went up from the midst of the city, and stood upon the mountain which is on the east side of the city.[2]

24 ¶ Afterwards the spirit [y]took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into [z]Chaldea, to them of the captivity: so the vision that I had seen [a]went up from me.

25 Then[b] I spake unto them of the captivity all the things that the LORD had showed me.

CHAPTER XII.

1 The type of Ezekiel's removing. 8 It showed the captivity of Zedekiah. 17 Ezekiel's trembling showeth the Jews' desolation. 21 The Jews' presumptuous proverb is reproved. 26 The speediness of the vision.

THE word of the LORD also came unto me, saying,

3 Therefore, thou son of man, [d]prepare thee [2]stuff[3] for removing, and remove [e]by day in their sight; and thou shalt remove from thy place to another place in their sight: [f]it may be they will consider, though they be a rebellious house.

4 Then shalt thou bring forth thy stuff by day in their sight, as stuff for removing: and thou shalt go forth [h]at even[4] in their sight, as they that go forth into[5] captivity.

5 Dig thou[6] through the wall in their sight, and carry out thereby.

6 In their sight shalt thou bear it upon thy shoulders, and carry it forth in the twilight: thou shalt [i]cover thy face,[7] that thou see not the ground; for I have set thee [j]for a sign unto the house of Israel.

7 And[k] I did so as I was commanded: I brought forth my stuff by day, as stuff for captivity, and in the even I [8]digged[9] through the wall with mine hand; I brought it forth in the twilight, and I bare it upon my shoulder in their sight.

Reasons, Nu. 11:11, and the editor of the Targumic Bible, imagine the prophet to speak of a kind of straw and mud wall, called tab in Targumic and common in the East. But the prophet also digged in a wooden, through the wall of the temple (ch. 8:8), and the attendants of Zedekiah are symbolized as digging through the wall, which must mean the wall of the city, through which they escaped in the night; and there can be no question that both these walls were of stone. See ver. 12. C.

20 And[g] the cities that are inhabited shall be laid waste, and the land shall be desolate, and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

21 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

22 Son of man, what is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, [h]The days are prolonged,[7] and every vision faileth?

23 Tell them therefore, Thus saith the Lord GOD, I [i]will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel; but say unto them, [j]The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision.[8]

24 For[k] there shall be no more any vain vision nor flattering divination within the house of Israel.

25 For I am the LORD: [l]I will speak, and the word that I shall [m]speak shall come to pass; it shall be no more prolonged: for in your days, O rebellious house, will I say the word, and will perform it, saith the Lord GOD.

26 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

27 Son of man, behold, they of the house of Israel say, The vision that he seeth is [o]for many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off.

28 Therefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [p]There shall none of my words be prolonged any more; but the word which I have spoken shall be [q]done, saith the Lord GOD.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 The reproof of lying prophets. 10 and their untempered mortar. 17 Of prophetesses and their pillows.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy [a]against the prophets[1] of Israel that prophesy, and say thou unto them that prophesy[2] out of their own hearts,[3] Hear ye the word of the LORD;

3 Thus saith the Lord GOD, Woe unto the foolish prophets, that follow[4] their own spirit, and[5] have seen nothing![6]

4 O Israel, thy prophets are [b]like the foxes[7] in the deserts.[8]

5 Ye[c] have not gone up into the gaps,[9] neither made up[1] the hedge for the house of Israel, to [d]stand in the battle in [e]the day of the LORD.

6 They[9] have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, The LORD saith: and the LORD hath not sent them: and they have made others [f]to hope that they would confirm the word.

7 Have ye not seen a vain vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination, whereas ye say, The LORD saith it; [g]albeit I have not spoken?

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Because ye have spoken vanity, and [h]seen lies, therefore, behold, I am against you, saith the Lord GOD.

9 And[h] mine hand shall be upon the prophets that see vanity, and that divine lies: they [i]shall not be in the assembly[2] of my people, neither shall they [k]be written in the writing of the house of Israel, neither shall they enter into the [l]land of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord GOD.

10 Because, even because they have [m]seduced my people, saying, [n]Peace, and there was no peace; [o]and one built up a wall,[3] and, lo, others [p]daubed it with untempered mortar:[4]

11 Say unto them which daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall: [q]there shall be an overflowing shower; and ye, O great hailstones, shall fall; and a stormy wind shall rend it.

12 Lo, when the wall is fallen, [r]shall it not be said unto you, Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it?

13 Therefore[u] thus saith the Lord GOD, I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury; and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and [s]great hailstones, in my fury, to consume it.

14 So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar, and bring it down to the ground, so that [t]the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall [u]fall, and [v]ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof: and [w]ye shall know that I am the LORD.

15 Thus[b] will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it with untempered mortar; and will say unto you, The wall is no more, neither they that daubed it;

l The days of fulfilment are at hand—they have already come, and the substance of every vision is realized. Ver. 24–25 are explanatory of this statement. The length of time between partial and entire destruction under Jehoiachin and the prophet's declaration of the city and temple was so great that the people doubted the truth of the predictions, and even turned them into a mocking proverb. Ezekiel meets this by another proverbial saying full of meaning.—P.

‡ The statement is figurative. The wall represents the political combination with Egypt, by which the Israelites proposed to resist the power of the Chaldeans. The 'untempered mortar' or rather, as the word signifies, 'false-hood,' with which the false prophets tried to cover it, and thus conceal its defects, represents the appearance of divine sanction which they attempted to give it by pretended revelations from heaven.—P.

‡ 'This,' says Hengstenberg, 'is explained by the fact that the false prophets had at that time absolutely the upper hand, and denounced themselves simply as the prophets, Jeremiah in Jerusalem, and Ezekiel among the exiles, stood as individuals, over a great multitude, and not only so, but the false prophets alone had public recognition as prophets of Israel, at least in the capital, while the true prophets were regarded as peculiar, and had the government and the spirit of the age, and the people absolutely against them.' Such a state of things is unfortunately not peculiar to one age or nation. True religion is generally opposed by worldly politicians. The spirit of the age, being spirit generated by sinful human nature, cannot accord with the spirit of divine truth.—P.

nations brings along with it the decay of everything valuable, or a curse on what remains. And if once neighbours, by fraud, oppression, and murder, devour one another, let them expect that God will plague them with common devourers; and that he will make himself known, either in the terrors of his wrath to the impenitent, or in the riches of his grace to such as humble themselves under his mighty hand. How dreadful is it when corrupt speeches become common proverbs, by which Satan hardens sinners against the words or ways of God! But they who will not believe God's warnings, will too late be terribly convinced by the infliction of his judgments. And let sinners put the evil day as far from them as they please, his threatenings will in due time prevail, and vindicate themselves.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 2–6. According to their own inclinations and affections, they publish their own imaginations without any warrant from me, and are extremely crafty, covetous, hardened, and mischievous. But they never do anything to reform the people, or to prevent judgments, or for the security and defence of church or state, which can enable them to hold out in the day of the Lord's judgments. Yea, their visions are but false and counterfeit, though, by their high pretences to inspiration, they have made the credulous people to believe their predictions will be accomplished. 9–16. I will manifest my power in punishing these false prophets, and will expel them from among my people, and I will deny them a return from captivity, because some of them affirmed their seductions for truths, and others supported them by specious but weak pretences. Yea, the Chaldeans, by their desolating ravage and fury, shall disprove their counterfeit oracles, and every argument used to support them. 18–21. They, by their signs of pillows and kerchiefs, and especially by their flattering predictions of peace and prosperity, lull all ranks into vain confidence and carnal security. By fitting their predictions to every one's humour, they promote their destruction instead of saving them. For the most pitiful rewards, they pretend my name and authority to countenance their abominable flatteries, denouncing destruction to those in Babylon whom I will preserve; and promising life and liberty to those in Jerusalem whom I will destroy. Therefore will I so refute and expose their delusions that no one shall be in danger of being ensnared thereby; and I will make them more and more abhorred than ever they were loved or feared.

Ver. 5. Gaps. Have not defended the breaches effected by heretical and ungodly men in the doctrinal and moral defences which the Lord has raised for the protection of truth and godliness, Phi. i. 7, 17: have not interceded, like Moses, standing in the breaches which an offended God has threatened, or made, in 16 To wit, the prophets of Israel, which [c]prophesy concerning Jerusalem, and which [d]see visions of peace for her, and there is no peace, saith the Lord GOD.

17 ¶ Likewise, thou son of man, [e]set thy face against the [2]daughters[3] of thy people, which prophesy out of their own heart; and prophesy thou against them,

18 And say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Woe to the women that [h]sew pillows to all arm-holes,[6] and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature, [i]to hunt souls! Will ye hunt the souls of my people, and [j]will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?

19 And will ye [k]pollute me among my people for handfuls of barley, and for pieces of bread, [l]to slay the souls that should not die, and to save the souls alive that should not live, by your lying to my people that hear your lies?

20 Wherefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [m]Behold, I am against your pillows, wherewith ye there hunt the souls [7]to make them fly,[8] and [o]I will tear them from your arms, and will let the souls go, even the souls that ye hunt to make them fly.

21 Your kerchiefs[9] also will I tear, and deliver my people out of your hand, and they shall be no more in your hand to be hunted: and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

22 Because [p]with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad, and [q]strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by[1] promising him life:[2]

23 Therefore ye [r]shall see no more vanity, nor divine divinations: for I will deliver my people[s] out of your hand; and [t]ye shall know that I am the LORD.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 God answereth idolaters according to their own heart. 6 They are exhorted to repent, for fear of judgments, by means of seduced prophets. 12 God's irrevocable sentence of famine, 15 of noisome beasts, 17 of the sword, 19 and of pestilence. 22 A remnant shall be left for the instruction and consolation of others.

THEN came [a]certain of the elders of Israel unto me, and sat before me.

2 And[b] the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, [c]these men have set up their idols in their heart,[1] and [d]put the stumbling-block of their [e]iniquity before their face: [g]should I be inquired of at all by them?

4 Therefore [h]speak unto them, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Every man of the house of Israel that setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to the prophet, I the LORD [i]will answer him that cometh according to the multitude of his [2]idols;

5 That[j] I may take the house of Israel in their own heart,[3] because [k]they are all estranged from me through their idols.

6 ¶ Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Repent, and turn yourselves[4] from your idols; and [l]turn away your faces from all your abominations.

7 For every one of the house of Israel, or of the [n]stranger[5] that sojourneth in Israel, which [o]separateth himself from me, and setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and [p]cometh to a prophet to inquire of him concerning me; [q]I the LORD will answer him by myself.

8 And[r] I will set my face against that man, and will make him a [s]sign and a proverb, and [t]I will cut him off from the midst of my people; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

9 And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the LORD [u]have deceived that prophet; and [v]I will stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from the midst of my people Israel.

10 And [z]they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity: the punishment of the prophet shall be even as the punishment of him that seeketh unto him;

11 That[y] the house of Israel may go no more astray from me, neither be polluted any more with all their transgressions; but that they may be my people, and I may be their God, saith the Lord GOD.

12 ¶ The word of the LORD came again to me, saying,

13 Son of man, when the land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously, then will I stretch out mine hand upon it, and [x]will break the staff of the bread thereof, and will send famine upon it, and will cut off man and beast from it:

14 Though[a] these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness,[6] saith the Lord GOD.[7]

7 The nature and force of the argument in this passage will best be understood by comparing it with Ge. xviii., where Abraham pleads for the cities of the plain, and where the Lord says, in answer to his last appeal, 'I will not destroy it for ten's sake.' The sin of Israel was so great, that had Noah, Daniel, and Job dwelt in it—three of the holiest men of sacred history—even their presence could not have saved the land. They themselves might have escaped, but divine vengeance must descend upon the country. Daniel was a contemporary of Ezekiel. He was one of his fellow-captives, and had doubtless already distinguished himself by devotion to God.—P.

REFLECTIONS.—God never places any in offices for which he does not qualify them. Nor have covetous and men-pleasing preachers any proper evidence of a divine mission. How daring and blasphemous is it to counterfeit commissions from God, or to father the devil's falsehoods, flatteries, and impieties upon him! Very dreadful shortly shall be the condition of such. And they who will not be awed by God's threatenings, forfeit his promised blessings. Alas! how terrible are the winds and storms of judgment that God has in readiness to plague his opposers! and none shall share more dreadfully in them than deceitful preachers who have flattered their hearers in wickedness. Shamefully shall they be stripped of their usurped honour, and exposed to indignation and wrath. And all their arts of seduction—their tormenting of the godly and encouraging of the wicked—will at last redound to their

TEMPLE AT OLD CORINTH—TEMPLE OF NEPTUNE, THE ONLY RUIN STANDING OF THE ONCE BEAUTIFUL CITY OF CORINTH. [Ezekiel, xiv:3.]—"Son of man, these men have set up their idols in their hearts, and put the stumbling block of their iniquity before their face; shall I be inquired of at all by them?" The idolatries which corrupted the Israelites in the time of the prophets they learned from other nations. The artist and the writer left Athens by train early in the morning, passed by Eleusis, and over the Corinthian canal, and reached Old Corinth in time for dinner. This picture was taken about 12 o'clock. In no city in the world did men set up idols of greater splendor and put stumbling blocks of their iniquities more completely before their face than in Corinth, the city which at the time Ezekiel wrote his prophecy was the most corrupt and wealthy in Greece. All that remains of it is the temple of Neptune, seven venerable columns of which we see in the picture

21 ¶ For thus saith the Lord GOD, How much more when[l] I send [m]my four sore judgments upon Jerusalem, the sword, and the famine, and the noisome beast, and the pestilence, to cut off from it man and beast?

22 ¶ Yet,[n] behold, therein shall be left a remnant that shall be brought forth, both sons and daughters; behold, they shall come forth unto you, and ye shall see [o]their way and their doings: and [p]ye shall be comforted concerning the [q]evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, even concerning all that I have brought upon it.

23 And they shall comfort you, when ye see their ways and their doings: and ye shall know that [r]I have not done [s]without cause[2] all that I have done in it, saith the Lord GOD.

CHAPTER XV.

3 By the unfitness of the vine branch for any work, 6 is showed the rejection of Jerusalem.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, What is the [a]vine-tree more than any tree, or than a branch [b]which is among the trees of the forest?

3 Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon?

4 Behold,[b] it is cast into the fire for fuel; [c]the fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midst of it is burned. Is it meet[1] for any work?

5 Behold, when it was whole it was meet[2] for no work: how much less shall it be meet yet for any work, when the fire hath devoured it, and it is burned?

6 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [d]As the vine-tree among the trees of the forest, which I have given to the fire for fuel, so will I give the inhabitants of Jerusalem.[3]

7 And[e] I will set my face against them; [f]they shall go out from one fire, and another fire shall devour them; and [h]ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I set my face against them.

8 And[i] I will make the land desolate, because they have committed a trespass,[4] saith the Lord GOD.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Under the similitude of a wretched infant is showed the original state of Jerusalem. 6 God's extraordinary love towards her. 15 Her monstrous whoredoms. 35 Her grievous judgment. 44 Her sin, equal to her mother's, and exceeding her sisters, Sodom and Samaria, calleth for judgments. 60 Mercy is promised her in the end.

AGAIN the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [a]cause Jerusalem to know[1] her [b]abominations,

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord GOD unto Jerusalem, [c]Thy birth[2] and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite.

4 And[d] as for thy nativity, in the day thou wast born, thy navel was not cut, neither wast thou washed in water to supple thee:[3] thou wast not salted at all, nor swaddled at all.[4]

5 None[e] eye pitied thee, to do any of these unto thee, to have compassion upon thee; but

[2] Ye shall know, when they confess the idolatry of their fathers, what abominable cause I had to punish them as a judge: and ye shall know, when they forsake their sins, and turn to their God, what abundant cause I had to shew them mercy as a father for their profit and salvation. He.12.6-10.—C.

[4] The force of the metaphor lies in the fact, that the only value of the vine is its fruit. If it be fruitless it is absolutely worthless. Israel was a vine. The Lord had planted it. It had proved unfruitful, fallacious, and it was consequently without value. The wood of other trees may be employed for some good purpose, but nothing can be made of the vine, branch or stock. It is only fit for the fire. The application is this: A people to whom God makes himself known, and who turn his grace into lasciviousness, sink far beneath those who have not known God. A heathen nation may have still much good and a future; degenerate Israel, that dwelt at present at Jerusalem (this limitation is given by ver. 5, and by the nature of the thing), is utterly unsavable, and must perish without remedy.' [4] This is one of the boldest and most amazing figures in the whole book. It exhibits in a very touching manner the depth of Israel's sin and ingratitude. Jerusalem is represented as a new-born female infant abandoned by its parents but taken, tended, nurtured, & trained with even more than a parent's tenderness and care by Jehovah. On reaching maturity she becomes the bride of her preserver; and is liberally supplied with everything her heart could desire. But instead of returning love and devotion, she basely gives her affections to others, and becomes an adulteress. The terrible judgments inflicted on Israel were thus most richly deserved.—F.

own infamy and ruin. And it is a great mercy to be delivered from such as would impose on or tyrannize over our conscience.

CHAPTER XIV. Ver. 3 10. They have given their idols the highest place in their esteem and affections, and have set them up before them as objects of worship.—If any such consult me by a prophet, let them expect nothing but fearful denunciations of judgments, answerable to their abominable idolatries, and the horrid wickedness of their heart; answerable likewise to my glorious perfections, which I will magnify in making them the lasting monuments of just indignation.—Their false prophets will I give up to the delusions of their own heart, that I may fearfully destroy them and those who consult them. 21-23. Either the deep repentance and penitent acknowledgments of those who should be brought to Babylon, or their sinful obduracy and horrid vices, would convince these who had been formerly carried captive, that God had justly desolated their country, and make them glad that themselves had been so early carried captive.

Ver. 7. Which separateth himself from me. The Israelites did not purpose to 'separate themselves from God—nay, they came with apparent teachableness to receive instruction from his prophet—yet God pronounced them 'separate,' because he had said, 'Thou shalt have no other gods before me.' An awful lesson to those churches both in the East and the West that have combined pictures, images, relics, and tutelary saints with the worship of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; and not less awful to those of the Reformed churches, who, rejecting all outward idolatry, have yet set up in their hearts the love of the world in any of its idolatrous forms, Col. 3. 5; 1 Jn. 2. 15, 16; 5. 21. C.—Answer him by myself. Not by a reply from the prophet, but by a judgment inflicted by my own hand. Note, This is the case with all who are seekers after religious knowledge, but careless of religious practice, or living in the indulgence of some secret sin. Let them know assuredly 'their sin will find them out,' and their Judge who seeth in secret will punish them openly. C.

Ver. 9. I the Lord have deceived that prophet. God does not influentially deceive the prophet into an error; but if, like Balaam, the prophet 'love the wages of unrighteousness,' then God adjudges him to be given over to the counsel of his own heart. Re. 22. 18, and if, like Judas, he be a traitor to his country or his God, God adjudges him to be given up to Satanic possession, Lu. 22. 3-6, and so he becomes at once the dupe and the propagator of lies. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The very worst of men too often hypocritically put on specious appearances of religion. But it is at their peril to mock God, or attempt imposing upon him. His judgments will fall upon them answerably to what they really are in his sight. Their sin, shame, and misery are all owing to themselves. And of all sinners, the doom of hypocrites and deceitful preachers will be the most terrible. If we serve idols, our heart cannot fail to be estranged from God, and we must be for ever separated from him. If we love to be flattered in our sins, God will justly give us up to such flattery. And dreadful at last shall be the punishment both of deceivers and deceived. The punishments of sin on earth are intended to prevent others from the commission of it. Nor does God ever take men into covenant with himself without purging them from their odious iniquities. National sins, carried on to an enormous height, cannot long fail to bring on national judgments. And if men who receive distinguished favours notoriously rebel, they may expect complicated judgments. God often averts general calamities for the sake of a few, who, in the general corruption, are singularly upright, pious, humble, and mighty in prayer. But if nations be singularly ripened for ruin, such can only obtain their own deliverance, or a blessing on their own share in the common calamity. Yet how pleasant it is in evil days to see sinners become monuments of mercy, and to see such benefited by his judgments and repenting of their sin! And it is well when God is not only justified, but glorified, in the manifested wisdom and goodness of his afflictive dispensations.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 2. Vine-tree. Israel is beautifully compared to a vine, spreading from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates, and covering the hills with its shadow, Ps. 80. 8; and our Lord takes it as an emblem of his body and his members, and thou wast cast out in the open field, to the loathing of thy person, in the day that thou wast born.

6 ¶ And when I passed by thee, and [g]saw thee polluted[5] in thine own blood, I said unto thee when thou wast in thy blood, [h]Live; yea, I said unto thee, when thou wast in thy blood, Live.

7 I have [6]caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field, and thou hast increased and waxen great, and thou art come to excellent ornaments:[7] thy[i] breasts are fashioned, and thine hair is grown, whereas thou wast naked and bare.

8 Now[j] when I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold, thy time was [k]the time of love; and I [l]spread my skirt[8] over thee, and covered thy nakedness: yea, [m]I sware unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord GOD, and thou [n]becamest mine.

9 Then [o]washed I thee with water: yea, I throughly washed away thy blood[9] from thee, and I anointed thee with oil.

10 I[p] clothed thee also with broidered work, and shod thee with badgers' skin, and I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk.

11 I decked thee also with ornaments, and I put bracelets upon thy hands, and a chain on thy neck.

REFLECTIONS.—In great condescension, God often explains his providences for the satisfaction of his servants and people. But none are more unprofitable than degenerate professors of the true religion. They who will not be useful for the glory of God and his grace, must be made fuel for the fire of his wrath; and must pass from one trouble into another till they be consumed. And the complete ruin of his implacable adversaries will manifest his excellencies, as well as the perfect happiness of his obedient friends.

CHAPTER XVI. The whole of this chapter emblematically represents the original sinfulness and misery, the gracious conversion, the fearful apostasy, severe corrections, and wise recovery of the gospel church, and of good men. Ver. 3-5. Abraham and Sarah were originally idolaters; and their posterity lived in Egypt most wickedly and wretchedly. 6-14. These figurative expressions represent all the favours which God heaped upon them in the days of Moses, Joshua, David, and Solomon; their deliverance from Egypt; preservation in the wilderness; the adoption of them by covenant into his family; giving them his oracles, ordinances, tabernacle, and temple; multiplication of their numbers; rendering them his only church, and a most wealthy, powerful, prosperous, and famous nation. 15-34. Proud of their privileges, they abandoned themselves to idolatry, and employed the wealth which God had given them in making and serving idols everywhere throughout their country. Their first-born children, who were sacred to God, they sacrificed to Molech. By costly presents they courted the alliance of their heathen neighbours, Egyptians, Assyrians, Chaldeans, &c., and insatiably and impudently vied with them in their idolatries. 35-43. For their filthy idolatries, murder of their innocent infants, shameless lewdness, base ingratitude, and long-repeated provocations of God, the Chaldeans, and afterwards the Syro-Grecians and Romans, shall terribly destroy them, and lay desolate their country, and thus force them to cease from their wickedness. 44-59. In loathing God their covenanted Husband, and murdering their children, they were as wicked as the ancient Canaanites. And however they had once condemned the ten tribes which dwelt on the north, and the Sodomites who dwelt on the south-east of Judea, they now exceeded them in the number of their idols, the enormities of their wickedness, and in sinning against more warnings, mercies, and judgments. 60-63. In pursuance of my covenant made with Abraham, and in the wilderness, I will forgive their iniquities, render them deeply penitent for their sins, and receive them back to their land; and not by the ceremonial dispensation, but by the preaching of the gospel, will I convert not only the ten tribes, but the very worst of the heathens, to Christ, when they repent and believe.

Ver. 3. An Amorite. Not by descent, but by disposition: 'Amorite' signifying a rebel, which Abraham as an idolater (Jos. 24. 2) originally was, and as every man by nature is, till graciously 'quickened together with Christ,' Ep. 2. 1-5.—An Hittite—one that fears. A description which well applies to Sarah, and indicates her constitutional fear lest the promises of God would not be fulfilled—a fear arising from weakness of her faith, and which nothing but the grace of God could sustain against the misgivings of sense. C.

Ver. 10-14. These several things—broidered work, badgers' skins, linen, silk, &c.—are first to be considered as literal national attainments, the products of art and industry. And viewed as such, no doubt they are so often either idolized or dedicated to pride and vanity, that they appear unfit emblems of the humble graces of the Spirit. But to argue from the abuse, against the use of anything, is most unjust. Even the merely ornamental arts are not sinful in themselves, else God had not so employed them in the garniture of the temple, nor adduced them as evidences of his paternal kindness. It is by considering them as such, that all the evils that so many seem inseparable from manufactures, and all the pride so often exhibited in ornamental dress, are to be counteracted and remedied. He that 'gives God thanks' may make what he will: he that 'gives God thanks' may wear what he will. But without thankfulness, the rags of the beggar and the purple of the king are alike liable to conduct into sin. C.

Ver. 27. Daughters of the Philistines. This phrase is employed to indicate the degraded condition of Israel, whose once manly character had become so debased by idolatry and licentiousness, that the daughters of their enemies not only ruled over them, but despised them: and though heathens, were ashamed of their faithless apostasy. C.

Ver. 34. 'Adultery (ver. 32) and whoredom' are used for apostasy and idolatry, both because they imply a breach of the covenant whereby God said to Israel, 'Thy Maker is thine husband,' and because apostasy and idolatry were, in reality, but other names for the crimes charged, impurity constituting an essential part of all idolatrous worship. C.

Ver. 39. In ancient times the exposure of captives in a state of nakedness is frequently recorded as one among the glaring horrors of slavery. That such cruelty should have prevailed among idolatrous heathens needs not be wondered at; but, alas! that it ever should have prevailed among Christians! Alas! that nations calling themselves Christian, and states boasting of their freedom, should still legalize and practise the same abomination! Lord, open their eyes that they may see, and their hearts that they may feel and repent! C.

Ver. 41. By the Babylonish captivity, Judah was completely cured of her idolatry; and all that has yet been discovered of the remnants of the ten tribes of Israel, seems to represent them as returned to their attachment to the law of Moses; so that one stumbling-block to their reception of pure Christianity is taken out of the way, and their perversion to the Romish and Greek communions—which both, alas! still multiply their images and worship at their shrines—seems to be rendered impossible. C.

Ver. 55. The name of 'Sodom' is applied to Jerusalem, Is. 1. 10, because of her resemblance to that wicked city in luxury, impurity, pride, oppression, and other abominations. But here Sodom is not identified but contrasted with Jerusalem, see also ver. 46. Scott and other eminent expositors understand 'Sodom' as representing the Gentiles: but this cannot well be, as they have already been largely converted, while Jerusalem remains in unbelief. Piscator and others render the passage, 'If I shall return,' &c.; and understand it as saying, 'To restore thy captivity is not in my thoughts or purposes:' this, however, will not accord with the promise, ver. 60-63. Is not 'Sodom' rather to be taken literally as undoubtedly 'Samaria' is taken for 'Israel'), which is to be restored, and understood to mean Moab and Ammon, the descendants of Lot, who escaped out of Sodom when the LORD miraculously destroyed it, and 'set it forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire!' Jude 7. See Je. 48. 47; 49. 6, where the restoration of these two nations is expressly promised. And though human history be unable to distinguish them among men, this ignorance cannot interfere with the knowledge and purposes of God. C.

TEMPLE OF JUPITER OLYMPUS, ATHENS—SEVEN HUNDRED YEARS IN PROCESS OF CONSTRUCTION. [Ezekiel, xvi:24, 25.]—"That thou hast also built unto thee an eminent place, and hast made thee an high place in every street. Thou hast built thy high place at every head of the way, and hast made thy beauty to be abhorred." Ezekiel in this sixteenth chapter speaks of the extraordinary love of God toward Jerusalem, and of her deep degradation in departing from Him in search of the gods of wood and stone worshiped by surrounding nations. We give a picture of a ruined temple in Athens erected in honor of Jupiter, the most powerful of all the gods of the ancients. The greatest temple of Athens was that of Jupiter Olympus. It is at the southeast of the Acropolis, and near the right bank of the Ilissus. This temple was begun by Pisistratus, tyrant of Athens, who lived between B. C. 560 and 527, which was probably before the death of Ezekiel. This great edifice was seven hundred years in process of construction.

22 And in all thine abominations and thy whoredoms thou hast not remembered [u] the days of thy youth, when thou wast naked and bare, and wast polluted in thy blood.

23 And it came to pass, [k] after all thy wickedness, (woe, woe unto thee! saith the Lord GOD,)

24 That thou hast also built unto thee an eminent[1] place,[2] and hast made thee an high place in every street.

25 Thou hast built thy high place at every head[l] of the way, and hast made thy beauty[3] to be abhorred, and hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by, and multiplied thy whoredoms.

26 Thou[m] hast also committed fornication with the Egyptians thy neighbours, great of flesh;[4] and hast increased thy whoredoms, to provoke me to anger.

27 Behold, therefore, [n] I have stretched out my hand over thee, and have diminished [p] thine ordinary food,[5] and delivered thee unto the will of them [q] that hate thee, the daughters[6] of the Philistines,[r] which are [s] ashamed of thy lewd way.

28 Thou hast played the whore also [t] with the Assyrians, because thou wast unsatiable; yea, thou hast played the harlot with them, and yet couldest not be satisfied.

29 Thou[u] hast, moreover, multiplied thy fornication in the land of Canaan unto Chaldea, and yet thou wast not satisfied herewith.

30 How[v] weak is thine heart,[7] saith the Lord GOD, seeing thou doest all these things, the work of [w] an imperious whorish woman;

31 In that thou [y] buildest thine[8] eminent place[9] in the head of every way, and makest thine high place in every street; and hast not been as an harlot, in that thou scornest hire;

32 But as [z] a wife that committeth adultery, which taketh strangers instead of her husband!

33 They give gifts to all whores; but [a] thou givest thy gifts to all thy lovers, and hirest[1] them, that they may come unto thee on every side for thy whoredom.

34 And the contrary is in thee from other women in thy whoredoms, whereas none followeth thee to commit whoredoms: and in that thou givest a reward, and no reward is given unto thee; therefore thou art contrary.

35 ¶ Wherefore, O [b] harlot, [c] hear the word of the LORD:

36 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [d] Because thy filthiness was poured out, and thy nakedness discovered[e] through thy whoredoms with thy lovers,[2] and with all the idols of thy abominations, and by the blood of thy children, which thou didst give unto them;

37 Behold, therefore, [g] I will gather all thy lovers, with whom thou hast taken pleasure, and all them that thou hast loved, with all them that thou hast hated; I will even gather them round about against thee, and will [h] discover thy nakedness unto them, that they may see all thy nakedness.

38 And I will judge thee, as[3] women that break wedlock,[4] and [i] shed blood, are judged: and [j] I will give thee blood in fury and jealousy.

39 And I will also give thee into their hand, and [k] they shall throw down thine eminent place, and shall break down thy high places: they shall [l] strip thee also of thy clothes, and shall take thy fair jewels,[5] and leave thee naked and bare.

40 They[m] shall also bring up a company against thee, and they shall stone thee with stones, and [o] thrust thee through with their swords.

41 And they shall [p] burn thine houses with fire, and [r] execute judgments upon thee in the sight of many women: [s] and I will cause thee to cease from playing the harlot, and thou also shalt give no hire any more.

42 So[t] will I make my fury toward thee to rest, and my jealousy shall depart from thee, and I will be quiet, and will be no more angry.

43 Because thou hast [u] not remembered the days of thy youth, but hast [v] fretted[6] me in all these things; behold, therefore, [z] I also will recompense thy way upon thine head, saith the Lord GOD; and thou shalt not commit [y] this lewdness above all thine abominations.

44 ¶ Behold, every one that useth proverbs shall use this proverb against thee, saying, [a] As is the mother,[7] so is her daughter.

45 Thou art thy mother's daughter, that [b] loatheth her husband and her children; and thou art the sister of thy sisters, which loathed their husbands and their children: [b] your mother was an Hittite, and your father an Amorite.

46 And[c] thine elder sister[8] is Samaria, she and her daughters that dwell at thy left hand: and thy younger sister,[9] that dwelleth at thy right hand,[1] is [d] Sodom and her [e] daughters.

47 Yet hast thou not walked after their ways, nor done after their abominations; but, as if that were a very little thing,[2] thou[g] wast corrupted more than they in all thy ways.

48 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, Sodom thy sister [h] hath not done, she nor her daughters, as thou hast done, thou and thy daughters.

49 Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom,[3] Pride,[4] fulness of bread, and abundance

Ver. 61. There is a spiritual affiliation by which those who are, in one sense, called 'sisters,' are, in another, called 'daughters.' Jerusalem having been the primitive church, was thereby constituted 'the mother of us all,' Ga. 4. 19, 26. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Ministers have great need to be faithful in representing to men the sinfulness of their heart and life, and the misery which attends it. But what an astonishing change is made upon them by union to Christ, justification, adoption, sanctification, and spiritual comfort! All our life, honour, safety, of idleness, was in her and in her daughters, neither[i] did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy.

50 And they were [k]haughty, and committed abomination before me: therefore [l]I took them away as I saw good.

51 Neither[m] hath Samaria committed half of thy sins; but thou hast multiplied thine abominations more than they, and hast justified thy sisters[4] in all thine abominations which thou hast done.

52 Thou[o] also, which hast judged[5] thy sisters, bear[p] thine own shame, for thy sins that thou hast committed more abominable than they: they are more righteous than thou; yea, be thou confounded also, and bear thy shame, in that thou hast justified thy sisters.

53 When I shall bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then[6] will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them:

54 That[q] thou mayest bear thine own shame, and mayest be confounded in all that thou hast done, in that thou art a comfort unto them.

55 When[r] thy sisters, Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate.

56 For thy sister Sodom was [7]not [8]mentioned[8] by thy mouth in the day of thy pride,[9]

57 Before thy wickedness was discovered, as at[t] the time of thy reproach of the daughters of [1]Syria,[2] and all that are round about her, the daughters of the Philistines, which [u]despise[3] thee round about.

58 Thou[v] hast borne[4] thy lewdness and thine abominations, saith the LORD.

59 For thus saith the Lord GOD, [w]I will even deal with thee as [x]thou hast done, which hast despised[z] the oath in breaking the [a]covenant.[5]

60 ¶ Nevertheless, I will [b]remember [c]my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and [d]I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant.[6]

61 Then[e] thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when [f]thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for daughters, [g]but not by thy [h]covenant.[7]

62 And[j] I will establish my covenant with thee, and thou shalt know that I am the LORD:

63 That[k] thou mayest remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord GOD.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Under the parable of two eagles and a vine, 11 is showed God's judgment upon Zedekiah for revolting from Babylon to Egypt. 22 God promiseth to plant the cedar of the gospel.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,[1]

2 Son of man, put forth a [a]riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel;

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, A great eagle[2] with great wings,[3] long-winged, full of feathers, which had divers [4]colours, [b]came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar:

4 He cropped off the top of his young [5]twigs, and carried it into a land of traffic;[6] he set it in a city of merchants.[7]

5 He took also of the seed of the land,[8] and planted it in a fruitful field;[9] he placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow-tree:

6 And [c]it grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature, whose branches turned toward him, and the roots thereof were under him: so it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and shot forth sprigs.

7 There was also another great eagle with great wings and many feathers:[1] and, behold, this vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him, that he might water it by the furrows of her [2]plantation.

8 It[d] was planted in a good soil[3] by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit, that it might be a goodly vine.

9 Say thou, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [e]Shall it prosper? [f]shall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it shall wither in all the leaves of her perfection, and comeliness are the free gifts and almighty productions of our Redeemer: and these benefits are all infinitely enhanced from the deplorable condition in which he finds us. But the most shocking wickedness, perjury, idolatry, murder, yea, everything horrid, is produced by pride, ingratitude, and forgetfulness of God and of ourselves. Nor will apostate hypocrites grudge to sacrifice wealth, life, health, and honour to the service of devils and insatiable lusts. Not even the most abandoned monsters can vie with such in aggravated wickedness: and justly therefore the Lord brings upon them complicated judgments answerable to their complicated crimes; and makes their partners in sin their tormentors in punishment. If sinners will not be warned, they must be destroyed and lost. If they will make themselves vile by their sins, God lets them become more vile by their sufferings. But it is not all the terrors and punishments of time or eternity, but the pardoning and renewing grace of God, that can make men truly penitent for sin. O how infinite is his mercy to pardon and save those who have plunged themselves into the infinite depths of guilt and pollution! and soon shall that mercy be fully displayed in converting both Jews and Gentiles by his grace, and cordially uniting them in the one mystical body of Christ!

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 2–7. Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and Pharaoh-hophra king of Egypt, are represented as great eagles, because of their great power, high dignity, tyrannical murder, and oppression of their neighbours. Their great wings represent their extensive dominions. King Jeconiah, and his family and princes, carried to Babylon, were the highest branch carried into a land of traffic. Zedekiah made king by Nebuchadnezzar, as his sworn tributary, over the Jewish multitudes in Judea in a state of subjection to the Chaldeans, is the seed of the land planted with circumspection in a fruitful field, that it might be a vine of low stature. Its bending its roots and branches towards the other eagle, refers to his sending ambassadors to Pharaoh-hophra, for procuring troops to assist him against the Chaldeans. 22–24. Out of the royal family of David I will raise up the Messiah, exalt him to my right hand, and make him Head of his church and of all things to her; and to him shall multitudes of all nations be converted, for salvation and comfort, and become members of his church. And all the nations of the world shall remark my power in exalting and prospering my once despised church, and in bringing down her most powerful enemies, Chaldeans, Jews, Romans, Antichristians, or Turks.

Ver. 5. Seed of the land—Zedekiah, ver. 13. Fruitful field—Judea. Great waters—as a dependant upon Babylon, em-spring, even without great power, or many people to pluck it up by the roots thereof.

10 Yea, behold, being planted, shall it prosper? shall[h] it not utterly wither,[i] when the east wind toucheth it? it shall wither in the furrows where it grew.

11 ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

12 Say now to the [k]rebellious house, [l]Know ye not what these things mean? tell them, [m]Behold, the king of Babylon is come to Jerusalem, and hath taken the king thereof, and the princes thereof, and led them with him to Babylon;

13 And hath taken of the king's seed, and made a covenant with him, and hath taken an oath of him:[5] he hath also taken the mighty of the land:[6]

14 That[7] the kingdom might be base, that it might not lift itself up, but that by keeping of his covenant it might stand.[7]

15 But[n] he rebelled against him, in sending his ambassadors into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people. [o]Shall he prosper? shall he escape that doeth such things? or shall he break the covenant, and be delivered?

16 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, surely in the place where the king dwelleth that made him king, [p]whose oath he despised, and whose covenant he brake, even with him, [q]in the midst of Babylon, he shall die.

17 Neither[r] shall Pharaoh, with his mighty army and great company, make for him in the war, by casting up mounts, and building forts, to cut off many persons:

18 Seeing he despised the oath by breaking the covenant, when, lo, he had [s]given his hand, and hath done all these things, he shall not escape.

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, As I live, [t]surely mine oath that he hath despised, and my covenant that he hath broken, even it will I recompense upon his own head.[8]

20 And I will [u]spread my net[9] upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare; and [v]I will bring him to Babylon, and [w]will plead with him there for his trespass that he hath trespassed against me.

21 And[x] all his fugitives with all his bands shall fall by the sword, and they that remain shall be [y]scattered toward all winds; and [z]ye shall know that I the LORD have spoken it.

22 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, [a]I will also take of the highest branch[1] of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it [b]upon an high mountain and eminent:

23 In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it; [c]and it shall bring forth [2]boughs, and bear fruit, and be [d]a goodly cedar: and [e]under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell.

24 And all the trees of the field shall know that [f]I the LORD have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree,[3] have dried up the [g]green tree, and have made the dry tree to flourish: I the LORD have spoken, and have done it.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1 God reproveth the unjust parable of sour grapes. 5 He showeth how he dealeth with a just father: 10 with the wicked son of a just father: 14 with the just son of a wicked father: 19 with a wicked man repenting: 24 with a just man revolting. 25 He defendeth the equity of his dealings, 31 and exhorteth to repentance.

THE word of the LORD came unto me again, saying,[1]

2 What[a] mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel,[2] saying, The [b]fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge?

3 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel.

4 Behold,[c] all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: [d]the soul that sinneth, it shall die.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 This chapter contains an exposition of a leading principle in the divine law; namely, that personal guilt alone entails punishment. It is quite true that sinful example appears to be hereditary, and children appear to be punished for the guilt of their ancestors. Tabularises from the fact that parental training and evil example contribute largely and necessarily to the formation of character. Children are punished, not because their fathers sinned, but because they follow out in their fathers' wicked ways. Thus the divine government is vindicated by the prophet against an impious imputation on the part of infidel Jews.—P.

blematized by 'great waters,' because it derived its magnificence from the Euphrates and Tigris. As a willow—of little strength, easily bended, and deriving safety, not from its resistance, but its elasticity. *C.

REFLECTIONS.—Ministers must turn themselves every way to promote the conviction or conversion of sinners; and plain similitudes are of great use for the illustration of divine truths, and impression of them upon men's minds. What a despicable appearance, even as ravenous beasts, do the mightiest conquerors and kings make before a great and righteous God! And if his providence reduce us to a low condition, it is our wisdom, and will be our comfort, to submit to our lot, and improve it in the best way we can. But it is dreadfully criminal and dangerous to violate oaths and covenants with God, or even with wicked men, as God is made witness and guarantee of the solemn transaction. Men's sinful evasions to extricate themselves do but involve them in more certain and tremendous ruin. And fatal experience will at last force sinners to believe God's threatenings. It is in vain to attempt restoring the credit of decayed families till God himself rise for their help. And it is infinitely to the glory of his sovereign grace that scenes of wickedness and ruin introduce exhibitions of Jesus Christ, and his eternal redemption and glory.

CHAPTER XVIII. As the observance of God's law was the covenanted condition upon which the Jews held the land of Canaan, and prospered in it, the rewards and punishments here mentioned may immediately respect temporal safety and prosperity annexed to sincere observance, and miseries annexed to gross violations, of God's law. It is certain the righteousness, from which a person can fully and finally fall away, ver. 24, 26, cannot consist in truly gracious dispositions of heart, or conduct in life, the saints being infallibly preserved in these, 1 Pe. 1. 5; Job 17. 9; Pr. 4. 18. And though men may reform their external behaviour, without supernatural influences from Christ, yet it is not supposed that they can truly repent of their sin, and renew their hearts, ver. 23, 30–32; but that it is their duty to have gracious and penitent hearts, and therefore to attend the ordinances of the gospel, and receive newness of heart and repentance, as the free gifts of Jesus Christ offered therein, and implanted by his Holy Spirit.

Ver. 2. This proverb of Israel threw the blame upon Adam in paradise; or those who murmured in the wilderness: or upon Jeroboam or Manasseh—and by misinterpreting the second commandment, concluded that though they suffered, they had not sinned. The second commandment, no doubt, threatens to 'visit the iniquities of the fathers upon the children;' but this threatening is not against the children that love him, but unto the third and fourth generation of them that (actually continue to) hate God, inheriting not merely the blood and property, but, through education and example, the wicked principles and practices of their fathers. C.

Ver. 9. He is just. How may this description be reconciled with Ec. 7. 20, which declares 'there is not a just man upon the earth that liveth and sinneth not?' There is no contradiction. Solomon asserts a fact to which Scripture, conscience, and history bear united testimony. Ezekiel—the Spirit speaking by him—describes a perfect character, negatively and positively; which, if any can claim, he is just. The consciousness that none can claim it by law brings 'the knowledge of sin,' and turns the eye of the sinner to 'look unto Jesus' for atonement and salvation. C.

Ver. 13. He shall surely die. But do not all die alike? No doubt 'one event happens to all,' Ec. 2. 14, 16, but that event is varied by the relative conditions of them that die. To the believer, death is a deliverance; to the sinner, condemnation. To the sinner, death is an end of joy and commencement of eternal misery; to the believer, an end of misery and commencement of eternal joy, Mat. 25. 46. C.

Ver. 22. In his righteousness that he hath done. How is this to be reconciled with Ps. 14. 1–3; 53. 1–3; Ec. 7. 20; Ro. 3. 10, which all concur in denying that there is any righteous—any that doeth good? There is no contradiction. The sinner who has sought a Saviour, Ac. 16. 30, has been 'justified freely by grace,' Ro. 3. 24, and is accounted righteous in the sight of God. But how can the sinner be said to have 'done' this righteousness? Observe, in answer, what, through grace, the sinner has done—actually done. Through faith in Jesus, and led by the Spirit, Ro. 8. 14, he hath penitently forsaken his sin, ver. 21; Ac. 10. 43. And because, through grace, he has done this, the prophet speaks of 'the righteousness that he hath done.' But all his doing—see Phi. 2. 13—lies in rejecting his own righteousness, Phi. 3. 9, and receiving CASTLE OF BABYLON. [Ezekiel, xvii:17.]—"Neither shall Pharaoh with his mighty army and great company make for him in the war, by casting up mounts, and building forts, to cut off many persons." This castle has nothing to do with Babylon the Great, for it is in Egypt, and is used to illustrate this verse simply because Pharaoh, king of Egypt, is represented as building forts and casting up mounts. This is a relic of the town which was built by Cambyses, B. C. 525. It is upon the site occupied by Old Cairo, where the epistle of Saint Peter was written. The fort itself belongs to the Roman period. Here was stationed one of the three legions of the Roman army. The masonry resembles very much that which we find in the palace of the Cæsars in Rome, and also in the temple of Minerva and the Roman Pantheon.

5 ¶ But[a] if a man be just, and do [3]that which is lawful and right,[4]

6 And hath not [g]eaten upon the mountains,[5] neither hath [h]lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, neither hath [i]defiled his neighbour's wife, neither [j]hath come near to a menstruous woman,

7 And[k] hath not oppressed any, but [l]hath restored to the debtor his pledge,[6] hath spoiled none by violence, [m]hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment;

8 He[n] that hath not given forth upon usury,[7] neither hath taken any increase, that hath [p]withdrawn his hand from iniquity, [q]hath executed true judgment between man and man,

9 Hath[r] walked in my statutes, and hath kept my judgments, to deal truly; [s]he is just, he shall surely live,[8] saith the Lord GOD.

10 ¶ If he beget a son that is a robber,[9] a shedder[t] of blood, and that doeth the like to any one of these[1] things,

11 And that doeth not any of those duties, but even hath [u]eaten upon the mountains, and defiled[v] his neighbour's wife,

12 Hath[x] oppressed the poor and needy, hath spoiled by violence, hath not restored the pledge, and hath [y]lifted up his eyes to the idols, hath committed abomination,

13 Hath[z] given forth upon usury, and hath taken increase: shall he then live? he shall not live: he hath done all these abominations; [a]he shall surely die; his blood[2] shall be upon him.

14 ¶ Now, lo, if he beget a son [b]that seeth all his father's sins which he hath done, and considereth,[c] and doeth not such like,

15 That hath not [d]eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, [e]hath not defiled his neighbour's wife,

16 Neither[g] hath oppressed any, hath not withholden the pledge,[3] neither hath [h]spoiled by violence, but [i]hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment,

17 That[j] hath taken off his hand from the poor, that [k]hath not received usury nor increase, hath[l] executed my judgments, [n]hath walked in my statutes; [o]he shall not die for the iniquity of his father, he shall surely live.

18 As for his father, [p]because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, lo, even he shall [q]die in his iniquity.

19 ¶ Yet say ye, Why? [r]doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father? When the son hath done that which is lawful and right, and hath kept all my statutes, and hath done them, he shall surely live.

20 The[s] soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son; the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him.

21 But[t] if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and [u]keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

22 All[v] his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not [z]be mentioned unto him: [y]in his righteousness that he hath done he shall live.

23 Have[z] I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord GOD; and not that he should return from his ways, and live?

24 ¶ But[a] when the righteous turneth [4]away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to [b]all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall he live? [c]All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die.

25 ¶ Yet ye say, [d]The way of the Lord is not equal. Hear now, O house of Israel; [e]is not my way equal? [g]are not your ways unequal?[5]

26 When[h] a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die.

27 Again,[i] when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive.

28 Because [j]he considereth, and turneth away from all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

29 Yet[k] saith the house of Israel, The way of the Lord is not equal. O house of Israel, are not my ways equal? are not your ways unequal?

30 Therefore [l]I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways, saith the Lord GOD. [m]Repent, and turn [6]yourselves from all your transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin.[7]

31 [n]Cast[o] away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a [p]new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel?

[4] This verse by no means impugns the doctrine of perseverance in grace. See 1 Pe. 1. 23. It merely states the possibility that a believer may fall into sin—a fact implied in the Lord's prayer, when it inseparably unites the petition for daily bread with the petition for forgiveness of sin. And when it declares, 'he shall die in his trespass and sin,' it does not necessarily mean that he shall die under their guilt, and so perish eternally; but that he shall die under their punishment, as an example and a warning. See Ps. 39. 8.—C.

[5] The people with whom the prophet here argues appear to have had their consciences seared. They were not aware of their own guilt before God. Evil training, evil example, a corrupt state of society, had blinded them. When punishment came, therefore, they were unable to see the cause of it, and they charged the Lord with injustice and caprice in his government. The prophet attempts to instruct them, and proves that the guilt is theirs.—P.

as a gift (Ro. 5. 15–17) 'the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that do believe,' Ro. 3. 22. C.

Ver. 31. Make you a new heart. This statement detracts nothing from the necessity of being 'born again' 'of water, even of the Spirit,' Jn. 3. 3, 5 (so the kai is translated, Ro. 8. 23; 1 Co. 15. 34; 2 Co. 1. 3; 10. 13; Ja. 3. 9), nor does it attribute to the deceitful heart of man, Je. 17. 9, the power of self-renewal, which is as much a new creation in the heart, as was the first creation of the world, 2 Co. 5. 17. It merely describes that grace whereby 'God works in the believer both to will and to do,' as his instrument; and whereby the believer, not of his own inclination or power, but 'through the Spirit,' mortifies the deeds of the body that he may live, Ro. 8. 13. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Hardened sinners readily dare to strive with their Maker, and charge him with injustice, when he but justly punishes them. Nor can anything less than the ruin they deserve silence their presumptuous murmurings. Let God reward or punish men's behaviour as exactly as he can, prejudiced criminals will hold his conduct unjust, and their own equal 32 For [q]I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord GOD: wherefore turn[r] yourselves,[8] and live ye.

CHAPTER XIX.

1 A lamentation for the princes of Israel, under the parable of lions' whelps taken in a pit; 10 and for Jerusalem, under the parable of a wasted vine.

MOREOVER, take thou up [a]a lamentation for the [b]princes of Israel,

2 And say, What is thy mother? [c]a lioness: she lay down among lions, she nourished her whelps among young lions.

3 And [d]she brought up one of her whelps: it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey; it devoured men.

4 The[e] nations also heard of him; he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains into the land of Egypt.

5 Now, when she saw that she had waited, and [g]her hope was lost, [h]then she took another of her whelps, and made him a young lion.

6 And[i] he went up and down among the lions, he became a young lion, and learned to catch the prey, and devoured men.

7 And he knew their [l]desolate palaces,[2] and he laid waste their cities; and the land was desolate, and the fulness thereof, by the noise of his roaring.

8 Then[j] the nations set against him on every side from the provinces, and [k]spread their net over him: he was taken in their pit.[3]

9 And they put him in ward in chains,[4] and brought him to the king of Babylon; [l]they brought him into holds, that his voice should no more be heard upon the mountains of [5]Israel.

10 ¶ Thy mother is like [n]a vine in thy [6]blood,[7] planted by the waters: [o]she was fruitful, and full of branches, by reason of many waters.

11 And she had [p]strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule, and her stature was exalted among [q]the thick branches, and she appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches.

12 But[r] she was plucked up in fury, she was cast down to the ground, and [s]the east wind dried up her fruit; her strong rods[8] were broken and withered, [t]the fire consumed them.

13 And[u] now she is planted in the wilderness,[9] in a [v]dry and thirsty ground.

14 And[z] fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, which hath [y]devoured her fruit, so that she hath [x]no strong rod to be a sceptre to rule. [a]This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation.

CHAPTER XX.

1 God refuseth to be consulted by the elders of Israel. 5 He showeth the story of their rebellions in Egypt, 13 in the wilderness, 27 and in the promised land. 33 He promiseth to gather them by the gospel. 45 Under the name of a forest he showeth the destruction of Jerusalem.

AND it came to pass in the [a]seventh year,[1] in the fifth month, the tenth day of the month, that certain of [b]the elders of Israel came [c]to inquire of the LORD, and [d]sat before me.

How extensive is the amiable character of a truly good man! Cordial worship of the true God alone, chastity, honesty, equity, mercy, and withdrawing from fellowship in wickedness, jointly taken, are the necessary lines of it. And none can expect a glorious reward, unless by grace he persevere in his righteousness. But it is vain to seek righteousness as it were by the works of the law, which requires of us what only infinite power can effect. And it is infatuated to attempt holiness of life while our hearts are unrenewed by grace. But infinitely dangerous is it to rush upon death and damnation, notwithstanding the most earnest warnings, entreaties, and offers of a gracious God; or to indulge ourselves in neglect of the most difficult duties, when God hath graciously promised to work them in us.

CHAPTER XIX. Ver. 1–9. The kingdom of Judah, and family of David, abandoned to violence and oppression, associated themselves with their heathen neighbours, their princes and nobles, and learned their ways. Jehoahaz, son of king Josiah, was scarcely enthroned by the nation when he became a tyrannical oppressor. But the Egyptians quickly dethroned him, and carried him off a prisoner. The Jews, finding that there was no hope of his restoration, or of freeing themselves from their dependence on the Egyptians, did, with their consent, make Jehoiakim their king. Conversing with his heathen neighbours, he soon became a most cruel oppressor, and rendered his kingdom everywhere miserable by his tyrannical rage. The Chaldeans and their allies quickly invaded their country, and by making him their prisoner, restrained his oppressive cruelties. Not long after, they transported to Babylon king Jehoiachin his son, and almost all the princes of Judah; and after eleven years more, Zedekiah; and laid the land desolate. 10–14. Once the Jewish state and family of David wonderfully flourished, had many valiant princes fit to sway the sceptre, and in glory and power could have vied with any of the neighbouring nations. But by the Egyptians, and especially by the Assyrians and Chaldeans from the east, the nation is wholly ruined, and the princes either murdered or carried captive; and now the poor remains of the nation are miserable captives in Babylon. And king Zedekiah, by his rebellion against Nebuchadnezzar, hath occasioned the ruin of his family and nation; and never shall any of his family be honoured with an earthly sceptre.

Ver. 2. What is thy mother? The address seems to be to Jehoahaz, comp. ver. 4 with 2 Ki. 23. 34, whose mother was Hamutal, 2 Ki. 23. 31. But by 'mother' Jerusalem is evidently to be understood, the nurse and nursery, as it were, of the degenerate prince. The allusion to a mother, however, records a fact often observed, and of deep import—that the good or evil of human character is generally to be traced to the early influence of maternal rather than paternal precept and example. C.

Ver. 5. She took another. Most probably Jehoiakim, 2 Ki. 24. 1, 2. This verse renders it certain that by 'mother,' ver. 2, Jerusalem is to be understood; for the 'mother' continues the same, and takes 'another of her whelps:' whereas Zebudah, and not Hamutal, was mother to Jehoiakim, 2 Ki. 23. 36. And if by 'another' is to be understood Jehoiachin, comp. ver. 9 with 2 Ki. 24. 8–16, neither was his mother Hamutal, but Nehushta, 2 Ki. 24. 8. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Faithful ministers have often mournful work put into their hands to declare the awful consequences of sin. It is just and common for those who terrified and enslaved others, to be affrighted and enslaved in their turn. And they who fill up the measure of their fathers' sins, lay up sorrows and lasting matter of lamentation for their children.

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 4. Do not intercede for, but reprove, convince, and condemn them for their own and their fathers' abominable iniquities, which they imitate. 5, 6. I entered into promise with them by solemn oath, and manifested my power for their deliverance. 7. Renounce with abhorrence these abominable idols, to which ye with pleasure lift up your eyes in worshipping them. 9, 14, 22. Out of respect to my honour and glory I spared them, and proceeded to bestow further deliverances on them. 12. I gave them my Sabbaths and ordinances as a token of the covenant relation between me and them, and in order to promote their sanctification in heart and life. 11, 13, 21. No doubt a perfect fulfilment of the broken promise of works, if possible, would entitle a man to eternal life; but the immediate meaning of these verses is, that in a careful observance of God's laws, the Jews should enjoy prosperity in Canaan. 25, 26, 28. I permitted them to make for themselves wicked and destructive rules of superstitious and idolatrous worship, and even to provoke me to desolate their country, by the sacrificing of their own children to Molech.—For by their inventions in my worship, or in that of their idols, they have exceedingly disparaged my wisdom, sovereign authority, and sole deity. 29, 30. And do not ye to this day impudently keep up the superstitious and idolatrous worship of the high-places, notwithstanding all my remonstrances against it? And do not ye, elders, continue in the idolatries of your fathers, notwithstanding the judgments inflicted upon you for the same? 32–38. In vain ye hope to prosper by imitating the heathen idolatries; for I will manifest my power over you in inflicting upon you the most terrible judgments. And I will, in the most wrathful manner, gather you out of all the countries around your own land, and carry you to Chaldea, or some worse place, to be slaves to the most barbarous nations; and there will I execute my judgments upon you, to manifest my own perfections, and convince you of your wickedness. —And by severe corrections, and by distinguishing the real saints and obstinate transgressors in my punishments, I will re-acknowledge you as my peculiar people, and reduce you to blessed fellowship with and obedience to myself. 39–44. For a time I will indeed abandon you to your idolatries, and reject you from being my people; but after the captivity, and especially after the dispersion, I will bring you back to your own land, restore my worship among you, work wonders of mercy for your establishment and happiness, and render you deeply sensible of and penitent for your own and your fathers' iniquities. 46–48. Since Jerusalem is now filled with inhabitants, unfruitful in holiness or virtue, and is become a harbour for cruel oppressors, thieves, and murderers, I, by the Chaldeans, will burn it to a heap, and destroy all ranks of people in it without remedy.

Ver. 11. Which if a man do perfectly, without any failure, defect, or shortcoming—a condition never fulfilled by a sinner: wherefore righteousness is not of the law, and salvation can only be of grace. C.

2 Then came the word of the LORD unto me, saying,

3 Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Are ye come to inquire of me? [a]as I live, saith the Lord GOD, I will not be inquired of by you.[2]

4 ¶ Wilt thou [b]judge[3] them, son of man, wilt thou judge them? [c]cause them to know the abominations of their fathers;

5 And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, In the day when [d]I chose Israel, and [e]lifted up mine hand[5] unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and [f]made myself known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, [g]I am the LORD your God;

6 In the day that [h]I lifted up mine hand unto them, to [i]bring them forth of the land of Egypt into a land that I had [k]espied for them, flowing[p] with milk and honey, which is the glory[q] of all lands;

7 Then said I unto them, [r]Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and [s]defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

8 But they [t]rebelled against me, and would not hearken unto me: they did not every man cast away the abominations of their eyes, neither did they forsake the idols of Egypt:[6] then I said, I[u] will pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt.

9 But [v]I wrought for my name's sake,[7] that it should not be polluted before the heathen, among whom they were, in whose sight I made myself known unto them, in bringing them forth out of the land of Egypt.

10 Wherefore [w]I caused them to go forth out of the land of Egypt, and brought them into the wilderness:

11 And [x]I gave them my statutes, and showed them[8] my judgments, [y]which if a man do, he shall even live in them.

12 Moreover also, I gave them my [z]sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that [a]I am the LORD that sanctify them.[9]

13 ¶ But the house of Israel [b]rebelled against me in the wilderness: they walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; and [c]my sabbaths they greatly polluted: then I said, [d]I would pour out my fury upon them in the [e]wilderness, to consume them.

14 But[h] I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, in whose sight I brought them out.

The plain meaning is that the Sabbath had not been observed during the Egyptian bondage, and that on their deliverance God restored it as a sign that the covenant relation between him and his people was re-established. It was also designed in this way to keep up the remembrance of their deliverance from Egypt. The observance of the Sabbath will always be a test of the state of religion in nations, families, and in the hearts of individual believers.—P. [e] Ex. 16.10. Nu. 14.22. Ps. 78.40; 95.8-10. [4] Sun or Baal worship was the most common form of idolatry among the ancient Canaanites. Their sanctuaries & altars were usually on the tops of mountains and hills, from which they were able to catch the first glimpse of the rising sun. The generic name, therefore, for the idolatrous sanctuaries of Canaan was bamah, 'a height,' or 'high place.' Moses was instructed to warn the Israelites with special care and solemnity against the idolatrous practices of the Canaanites, and he commanded them to destroy all the bamoth, 'high places,' in the land.—P.

15 Yet[i] also I lifted up my hand unto them in the wilderness, that I would not bring them into the land [j]which I had given them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands;

16 Because[k] they despised my judgments, and walked not in my statutes, but polluted my sabbaths: for their heart went after [l]their idols.

17 Nevertheless[m] mine eye spared them from destroying them, neither did I make an end of them in the wilderness.

18 But [n]I said unto their children in the wilderness, Walk ye not in the statutes of your [o]fathers, neither observe their judgments, [p]nor defile yourselves with their idols:

19 I[r] am the LORD your God; [s]walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them;

20 And[t] [1] [u]llow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the LORD your God.

21 Notwithstanding[x] the children rebelled against me: they walked not in my statutes, neither kept my judgments to do them, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; they [y]polluted my sabbaths: [z]then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the wilderness.

22 Nevertheless[y] I withdrew mine hand, and [z]wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted in the sight of the heathen, in whose [a]sight I brought them forth.

23 I[b] lifted up mine hand unto them also in the wilderness, that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries;

24 Because[c] they had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes, and had polluted my sabbaths, and [d]their eyes were after their fathers' idols.

25 Wherefore[e] I gave them also statutes that were not good,[1] and judgments whereby they should not live:

26 And[g] I polluted them[2] in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire all that openeth the womb, that I might make them desolate, to the end that they [h]might know that I am the LORD.

27 ¶ Therefore, son of man, speak unto [i]the house of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Yet in this your fathers have [j]blasphemed me, in that they have [3]committed a trespass against me.

28 For when [k]I had brought them into the land, for the which I [l]lifted up mine hand to give it to them, then they saw [m]every high [4]hill,

Ver. 20. One great principle of Sabbath observance is the sign which it furnishes of the perpetual rights of God and obligations of man: a sign the more needful, because of the natural tendency of the heart to forget God, adverting to which the commandment says, 'Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy.' C.

Ver. 34. Of the providential methods whereby God will effect the gathering of his people it is not possible to speak with precision, seeing God reveals the face rather than the means. This passage, however, seems to intimate a series of terrible judgments, both upon the unbelieving Jews, ver. 38, and idolatrous Gentiles, ver. 34, by which the separation will be finally effected. Such separations have again and again been exemplified, as in the expulsion of the Moors from Spain and the Huguenots from France. See The Suppression of the Reformation, by D. D. Scott. But the Lord knoweth the means; and, when his time arrives, not one jot or tittle, either of threatening or promises, will his providence leave unfulfilled. See ver. 40–42. C.

WAITING PROCESSION IN THE FESTIVAL OF THE MAH 'MAL—BEGINNING OF THE PILGRIMAGE TO MECCA. [Ezekiel, xx:7.]—"Then said I unto them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt: I am the Lord your God." The festival of the Mah 'Mal is a modern form of idolatry which seems always to have been characteristic of Egypt. This festival takes place at Cairo annually in April. It is one of the most gala days ever seen in this city. The particular incident which gave rise to this festival is connected with a beautiful woman who lived at the beginning of the reign of the Mamelukes. After the death of her husband she reigned eighty days as Sultana, and then married again. She gave her hand and her throne to her husband, and retired herself within the harem. She made a pilgrimage to Mecca in a magnificent litter borne between camels, and every year since a litter has been sent from Egypt to Mecca along with the pilgrims who make the journey to the holy Mohammedan city.

and all the thick trees, and they offered there [t]their sacrifices, and there they presented the provocation[e] of their offering: there also they made their sweet savour, and poured out there their drink-offerings.

29 Then [5]I said unto them, What is the high place[6] whereunto ye go? [p]And the name thereof is called Bamah[7] unto this day.

30 ¶ Wherefore say unto [q]the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [r]Are ye polluted after the manner of your [s]fathers? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations?

31 For when ye [t]offer your gifts, when ye make your sons to pass through the fire, ye pollute yourselves with all your idols, even unto this day; [u]and shall I be inquired of by you, O house of Israel? As I live, saith the Lord GOD, I will not be inquired of by you.

32 And that which cometh into your mind shall [v]not be at all,[8] that ye say, [x]We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone.

33 ¶ As I live, saith the Lord GOD, surely [y]with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you;

34 And[z] I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out.

35 And I will bring you into the [a]wilderness of the people, and there will [b]I plead with you face[c] to face.

36 Like[d] as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord GOD.

37 And I will cause you to [e]pass under the rod,[9] and [g]I will bring you into the bond[1] of the covenant:

38 And [h]I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and [i]they shall not enter into the land of Israel; and [j]ye shall know that I am the LORD.

39 As for you, O house of Israel, thus saith

[b] In this verse three distinct Hebrew words are rendered by one English word, 'south.' I think they are proper names, each specifying a distinct district. The first word is Teman, which embraced that section of southern Palestine which lay along the borders of Moab and Edom. The second is Darom, which was the name of the region in the extreme south-western part of the country, including part of Philistia towards Gaza. The third is Negeb, a name exclusively applied to the southern part of Judea. This prophecy, therefore, was directed not against all Palestine, but against that extreme southern portion of it which had as yet in a great measure escaped the ravages of the Assyrian and Babylonian armies.—C.

the Lord GOD, [k]Go ye, serve ye every one his idols, and hereafter also, if ye will not hearken unto me: but [l]pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols:

40 For in mine [m]holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord GOD, there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me: there will I [n]accept them, and there will I require [o]your offerings, and the first-fruits[3] of your oblations, with all your holy things.

41 I will accept you with your sweet [3]savour, when [q]I bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye have been scattered; and [r]I will be sanctified in you before the heathen.

42 And[s] ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall bring you into the land of Israel, into the country for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers.

43 And there [t]shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight, for all your evils that ye have committed.

44 And [u]ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I [x]have wrought with you for my name's sake, [y]not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the Lord GOD.

45 ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

46 Son of man, [z]set thy face toward the south, and drop [a]thy word toward the south, and prophesy against the forest[4] of the south [5]field;

47 And say to the forest of the south, Hear the word of the LORD, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [c]I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green tree in thee, and every dry tree: the flaming flame shall not be quenched, and all faces [b]from the south to the north shall be burned therein.

48 And[d] all flesh shall see that I the LORD have kindled it: it shall not be [d]quenched.

49 Then said I, Ah Lord GOD! they say of me, Doth he not speak parables?[6] buildings, or from the many shady and fruitful trees that gave the surrounding country the aspect of a forest. The prophet describes it as situated in the south, either because it lay, according to Hebrew geography, south of that part of Chaldea where he then resided: or, more probably, ver. 47, because it lay in the south of Canaan. See ch. 21. 4. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Wretched is their stupidity, and presumptuous their heart, who, even under sufferings, ask God's leave to go on in sin! God's choice of us, and his manifestation of himself to us, are altogether of blessed grace; and to these, and to our own faith we owe our happiness. And it is from regard to God's own honour that corrupt churches, nations, families, and persons are so long borne with and preserved. Our disobedience to his laws originates in an inward bias towards the world and the flesh; and if once bad principles or customs be rooted, it is almost impossible to extirpate them. Though by disobedience to God's laws men plainly rush upon their own death and damnation; yet where parents are negligent in the education of children, children rarely make the laws of God the object of their earnest study. But when men profane God's ordinances and Sabbaths, he ordinarily gives them up to strong delusions in their principles and worship. And dreadful is the case of those to whom the slavery of their own lusts is allotted for their punishment; and when they will not take warning by all the admonitions against or mischievous consequences of sin, which have taken place before them.—But they who will not acknowledge God as their gracious saviour and righteous ruler, shall feel him their judge and destroyer. His purpose must stand: and he will easily find both place and time to punish obstinate apostates, and to pluck them out from among his people, whom they have corrupted; nor will either sinful compliances or carnal projects avail to their safety. They who think to serve themselves by sin, do but make themselves slaves to it. And pretences to religion, in such a case, do but add profaneness and hypocrisy to iniquity, and lose men the favour of the world, while they render them the detestation of God.—Even the believers must often be saved as by fire, their transgressions are so many, and their corruptions so strong. But afflictions must purge them; and, through all the changes on earth, they must be prepared for their comforts here, and heavenly inheritance hereafter. Their persons being once accepted in Christ, the acceptance of their services done in faith must follow. And O what baseness, malignity, and ingratitude do they discern in sin through the glass of his redeeming love, while they loathe themselves on account of it, and are more engaged to his service. But, alas! that sinners should need to be so repeatedly warned of their ruin; that God's fruitful vine should become an unfruitful forest, and his house a den of thieves! But if all ranks combine in wickedness, they must be jointly involved in punishment. They who are unwilling to profit by God's Word, ordinarily pick quarrels with it, or the manner of delivering it. But if people deride ministers, it is enough that they have a God to complain to.

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Ezekiel prophesieth against Jerusalem with a sign of sighing. 8 The sharp and bright sword, 18 against Jerusalem, 25 against the kingdom, 28 and against the Ammonites.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [a]set thy face toward Jerusalem, and [b]drop thy word toward [c]the holy places, and prophesy against the land of [1]Israel,[2]

3 And say to the land of Israel, Thus saith the LORD, Behold [d]I am against thee, and will draw forth [e]my sword out of his sheath, and will[g] cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked.

4 Seeing then that I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked, therefore shall my [h]sword go forth out of his sheath [i]against all flesh from the south to the north;

5 That[j] all flesh may know that I the LORD have drawn forth my sword out of his sheath: it[k] shall not return any more.

6 Sigh,[l] therefore, thou son of man, [m]with the breaking of thy loins; and with bitterness sigh before [n]their eyes.

7 And it shall be, when they say unto thee, Wherefore sighest thou? that thou shalt answer, For[p] the tidings, because it cometh: and [q]every heart shall melt, and all hands shall be feeble, and every spirit shall faint, and all knees shall be weak as water:[3] behold, it cometh, and shall be brought to pass, saith the Lord GOD.

8 ¶ Again, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 Son of man, prophesy, and say, Thus saith the LORD; Say, [r]A sword, a sword is sharpened, and also furbished:

10 It is sharpened to make a sore slaughter: it is furbished that it may glitter: [s]should we then make mirth? [t]it [u]contemneth the rod of my son, as every tree.[5]

11 And [v]he hath given it to be furbished, that it may be handled: the sword is sharpened, and it is furbished, to give it into the hand of the slayer.

12 Cry[x] and howl, son of man; for it shall be upon my people, it shall be upon all the princes of Israel: [y]terrors by reason of the sword shall be upon my people:[6] smite[z] therefore upon thy thigh.

13 Because[7] it is [a]a trial, and what if the sword contemn [b]even the rod? it shall be no more, saith the Lord GOD.[8]

14 Thou, therefore, son of man, prophesy, and smite thine hands together,[9] and [c]let the sword be doubled the third time, the sword of the slain: it is the sword of the great men that are slain, which entereth [d]into their privy chambers.[1]

15 I have set the point[2] of the sword [e]against all their gates, that their heart may faint, and their ruins be multiplied. Ah, it is made bright, it is wrapped[3] up for the slaughter.

16 [f]Go[4] thee one way or other, either on the right hand, or on the left,[5] whithersoever thy face is set.

17 I[h] will also smite mine hands together, and [i]I will cause my fury to rest: I the LORD have said it.

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 10–13. The king and princes shall be no more able to resist or avoid the Chaldean sword than the meanest of the common people. That terrible calamity will so disgrace the royal power of David's family, that none of them shall ever afterwards sway an earthly sceptre; and when the Chaldeans have executed my judgments on others, they themselves shall be destroyed. 19. Mark on a tile, or on the ground, two ways, one leading from Babylon to Jerusalem, and the other leading to Rabbath, the capital of the Ammonites; and pitch on a proper place for Nebuchadnezzar to consult which way he should go first. 23. The Jews, who have perfidiously violated their oath of subjection to Nebuchadnezzar, will contemn and deride his divinations: but he will quickly punish them for their treacheries, by murdering or taking them captives. 25–27. Thou wicked Zedekiah, who hast profanely broken thine oath to Nebuchadnezzar, shalt now be punished, and an end put to thy idolatry, perfidy, and other abominations, in thy destruction. Thou shalt be disgracefully dethroned, and the whole nation and royal family turned upside down; Jehoiakim, now in prison, shall be exalted, and thou shalt be debased. Dreadfully shall the nation be overturned by the Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, and Romans, &c. Nor shall it ever attain its wonted lustre and dignity, or any of the family of David wear a sceptre, till Christ take his spiritual kingdom in the gospel church, nay, in the millennium. 29. Your diviners falsely promise you safety and happiness, and that you shall tread down the Jews, whose wickedness hath made them fully ripe for punishment: but they will really bring you into the same miserable condition with these wicked Jews.

Ver. 3. The righteous and the wicked may die together. To the righteous, calamity being a purification, 2 Co. 4. 16–18. and death a deliverance; while to the wicked, calamity is a punishment, and death a curse, Ru. 1. 21. 23. C.

Ver. 6. With the breaking of thy loins. So as to make the prophet bow his head and bend his loins, as one overwhelmed with sorrow of heart. Gil interprets it of sighing till the girdle of his loins should burst; but such an effect seems scarcely possible by any muscular exertion, unless the girdle were so frail as to render its discipline but little emblematic of the intensity of the prophet's distress. C.

Ver. 10. My son the king, of whom Jerusalem was called mother, ch. 19. 2. The rod—the sceptre, ch. 19. 11. As every tree—holdeth the kingly sceptre in no more respect than the branch of a tree by the way side. C.

Ver. 13. "For if the sword is tried, and what if it despise the sceptre? This (the rod—sceptre) shall not remain, saith Jehovah" (Boothroyd). And though "the sceptre" the power of self-government "shall not depart from Judah"—from the tribe "till Shiloh come,' yet no king of David's line shall reign in Jerusalem "till he shall come whose right it is," ver. 27. C.

Ver. 14. Smite thine hands together. By some it has been interpreted as a sign of encouragement to the Chaldeans; and certainly clapping the hands is a mode of call common in the East. Others have regarded it as a form of oath, intimating the certainty of the judgment. But Scripture is rather to be interpreted by comparison with Scripture, than by any reference to oriental manners or customs; and, viewed in this light, the action prescribed is either a form of confirmation or oath, see ver. 17; ch. 22. 13, or else a token of the prophet's grief at the judgment he was commanded to foretell. See ch. 6. 11. C.

Ver. 19. Appoint thee two ways. Describe or draw a plan or map, as in ch. 4. 1, of two roads, one for the invasion of Judah, the other for the invasion of Ammon, ver. 20. C.

Ver. 21. He made his arrows. "Mingled his arrows" (Boothroyd). A heathenish mode of divination in war, which consisted in writing the name of each city to be assailed upon an arrow, shaking the whole in a quiver, and deciding upon priority of attack by the order of drawing. He looked in the liver. The heathen priests pretended to foretell future events by examining the entrails of beasts slain in sacrifice—and particularly by the liver—and by disease, wounds, the form of the lobes, &c., they augured good or evil to the person inquiring. Such are specimens of the manner in which Satan has continued to deceive, and succeeded in persuading men to follow a dark and baseless superstition, while rejecting the sunlight evidence of divine revelation. C.

Ver. 23. As a false divination. The Jews will despise this mode of divination; and because they know the mode to be a mere pretence, will conclude the prediction to be false. Note, The success of such divinations is no more evidence of their divine origin than would be the success of a prophecy that the sun would rise. That rising is foretold by experience anticipating the uniform course of nature. Even so—they can never err that prophesy evil against evil men; it is the uniform course of Providence. C.

Ver. 26. This shall not be the same. This man shall no longer wear the crown; or this crown shall no longer be a badge of royalty, ver. 27. C.

Ver. 27. Until he come, &c. Until Messiah come, whose right the government is, by creation, as God, by descent, as man, Ja. 2. 3; Ac. 2. 30. C.

Ver. 29. To bring thee—Rabbath, the capital of the Ammonites, ver. 20; ch. 25. 2. The slain—the Jews, whom, being slain, the Ammonites would be incited to plunder. C.

REFLECTIONS.—There is great need that ministers should use great plainness of speech in dealing with souls; should observe God's hand in his public judgments, in which even the godly share with the wicked; and should deny themselves, and be affected with their messages, in order to edify others. Alas! infinite is their danger who have God against them. Nothing can defend them from his righteous and terrible judgments. And while wicked men abound everywhere, his wrath shall follow without restraint. Nor is it proper to be jovial, but penitent, when his judgments are abroad in the earth, in order to vindicate his perfections. But it is matter of comfort to saints that all judgments are managed by Christ, the Son of God, and their friend and Saviour: and that to them they are but corrective trials, not blows aimed for their destruction.—God can easily force the most proud and crafty plotters on earth to court his direction in their concerns, and lead them, even by events apparently fortuitous, to his proper work. None are more ready to despise God's warnings than perfidious and profane swearers. And in none do these sins look worse than in magistrates and ministers who profess the true religion. But if men despise the warnings and offers of God's grace, they shall be seized by his judgment and none are so high but God can debase them, nor any so low but he can exalt them. Pride goes before destruction; and before honour is humility. At what pains and cost do men destroy one another! But if all overturnings in the world make way for Christ, the rightful Sovereign of nations and churches, and his

CUSTOMS PIER, SMYRNA.. [Ezekiel, xxii:15, 16.]—"And I will scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries, and will consume thy filthiness out of thee. And thou shalt take thine inheritance in thyself in the sight of the heathen, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord." This prophecy has been literally fulfilled. The Jews have been scattered throughout the Gentile nations of the world, and they have learned as no other nation has the great truth that there is one God. It is said to be very difficult to find a Jew who is not a believer in God. We give a picture here of the Customs Pier in Smyrna because this is one of the great Jewish cities in Asia Minor. Many of the leading commerical establishments in this city belong to Jews. Here they live and hold their inheritance in sight of the heathen Turks by whom they are surrounded. In Smyrna the Jews have lived from remote times to the present. There are many great commercial houses managed by them in this city to-day.

18 ¶ The word of the LORD came unto me again, saying,

19 Also, thou son of man, [a]appoint thee two ways, that the sword of the king of Babylon may come: both twain shall come forth out of one land; and choose thou a place, choose it at the head of the way to the city.

20 Appoint a way, that the sword may come to [b]Rabbath of the Ammonites, and to Judah [c]in Jerusalem [d]the defenced.

21 For[e] the king of Babylon stood at the parting[6] of the way, at the head of the two ways,[7] to use divination: he made his arrows bright,[8] he consulted with images,[9] he looked in the liver.

22 At his right hand[1] was the divination for Jerusalem, to appoint captains,[2] to open the mouth in the slaughter, [e]to lift up the voice with shouting, to appoint battering rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort.

23 And it shall be unto them [f]as a false divination in their sight, to them that have sworn oaths:[3] but he[4] will call to remembrance the iniquity,[5] that they may be taken.

24 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Because ye have [g]made your iniquity to be remembered, in that your transgressions are discovered, so that in [h]all your doings your sins do appear; because, I say, that ye are come to remembrance, [i]ye shall be taken with the hand.[6]

25 ¶ And thou, [k]profane wicked prince of Israel,[7] whose [l]day is come, when iniquity shall have an end,

26 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [m]Remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high.

27 I will overturn, overturn, overturn it;[8] and it shall be no more, until he[9] come whose right it is; and I will give it him.

28 ¶ And thou, son of man, prophesy, and say, [n]Thus saith the Lord GOD concerning the Ammonites, and concerning their reproach;[1] even say thou, The sword, the sword is drawn; for the slaughter it is furbished, to consume because of the glittering;

29 Whiles[o] they see vanity unto thee, whiles they divine a lie unto thee, to [p]bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain, of the wicked, whose day is come, when their iniquity shall have an end.

30 Shall I cause it to return[2] into his sheath? I will [q]judge thee in the place where thou wast created, in the land of thy nativity.

31 And [r]I will pour out mine indignation upon thee; [s]I will blow against thee in the fire of my wrath, and deliver thee into the hand of brutish[3] men, and skilful to destroy.

32 Thou[d] shalt be for fuel to the fire; [t]thy blood shall be in the midst of the land; [u]thou shalt be no more remembered; for I the LORD have spoken it.[4]

CHAPTER XXII.

1 A catalogue of sins committed in Jerusalem. 17 God will burn them as dross in the furnace. 23 The general corruption of prophets, priests, princes, and people.

MOREOVER, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Now, thou son of man, [a]wilt thou [1]judge,[1] wilt thou judge the bloody city?[2] yea, thou shalt [b]show her[4] all[c] her abominations.

3 Then say thou, Thus saith the Lord GOD, The city sheddeth blood [d]in the midst of it, that [e]her time may come,[5] and [f]maketh idols against herself to defile herself.

4 Thou[h] art become guilty in thy blood that thou hast shed; and hast defiled thyself in thine idols which thou hast made; and [i]thou hast caused thy days to draw near, and art come even unto thy years: therefore have I made thee [j]a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries.

5 Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee, which art infamous and much vexed.[6]

6 Behold, the princes of Israel, every one were in thee to their power[7] to[k] shed blood.[8]

7 In thee have they set [l]light[9] by father and mother; in the midst of thee have they dealt by [m]oppression[1] with the stranger; in thee have they vexed the fatherless and the widow.

8 Thou[o] hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my sabbaths.

There can be little doubt that the point in dispute was Riblah. There we know he established his headquarters. The road for an army from Babylon to Palestine could only cross the desert by Palmyra, or at a point further north. Riblah is on the line of march, and being situated in the midst of a fertile plain on the bank of the Orontes, no other position could be selected for the encampment of a large army. From Riblah three roads branch to the southwards—one runs along the eastern base of Anti-Lebanon, by Damascus and Bashan, direct to Rabbath-Ammon; another runs down the valley of Cœle-Syria to Central Palestine and Jerusalem; the third passes the northern end of Lebanon, enters Phœnicia, and follows the coast to Philistia and Egypt. gracious designs, let us be therewith content.—Nevertheless, let the proud reproachers and oppressors of God's people, who wish to extirpate his and their name from the world, remember their iniquities will but draw similar judgment on themselves, and neither rights nor possessions on earth will avail them anything.

CHAPTER XXII. Ver. 16. I, who was once your inheritance, have cast you off, and now you may support yourselves in your notorious wretchedness in the best way you can. 18–22. They are even growing worse and worse in the midst of my judgments upon them, and therefore shall be terribly punished and destroyed. 24–30. They are not refined nor washed by the judgments which I have inflicted. Their prophets combine against upright persons, and persecute, rob, and murder such as oppose them. Their priests wrest my laws to countenance their oppression and impiety: they irreverently officiate in my service; and neither in preaching nor in practice make any difference between right or wrong, clean or unclean: they take no care to have my sabbaths observed; and thus dishonour me by their infamous conduct. Their princes have abandoned themselves to cruelty, murder, oppression, and extortion. Their prophets, by false reasonings and unstudied discourses, pretended visions, and presages of peace and prosperity, flatter them in their sinful courses. And there is none among them who either apply themselves to reform the nation, or to supplicate the prevention of my judgments.

Ver. 30. The national defection and corruption was extreme—as in Sodom and Gomorrah, where no citizen was spared—because none was uninfected; and Lot alone, a stranger, was mercifully delivered—an extreme example of the blessed fact that, in the worst of times, all are never lost; a remnant, however small, still testifies to the power of grace and the salvation of God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Lord, what are men, that they, that professors of the true religion, should be such monsters! And what an awful connection there is between the different forms of wickedness! There is nothing so abominable, but forgetfulness of God, and of his relations and favours, may produce it. But very base and contemptible before God are degenerate and hypocritical professors. Dreadful is the case of a nation, when prophets, priests, and princes are accomplices and ringleaders in guilt. And when there is scarcely a faithful opposer or importunate intercessor. God's judgment must break in upon them, and renders them impotent and miserable. Then shall they tremble

9 In [p]thee are men that carry tales[2] to shed blood; and in thee they [q]eat upon the mountains;[3] in the midst of thee they [r]commit lewdness;

10 In thee have they [s]discovered their fathers' nakedness; in thee have they [t]humbled her that was set apart for pollution.

11 And one[4] hath [u] committed abomination with his neighbour's wife; and another[5] hath lewdly[6] defiled [v] his daughter-in-law; and another in thee [w]hath humbled his sister, his father's daughter.

12 In thee [x]have they taken gifts to shed blood;[7] thou hast [y]taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortion, and hast [z]forgotten me, saith the Lord GOD.

13 Behold, therefore, I have [a]smitten mine hand[8] at thy [b]dishonest gain which thou hast made, and at thy blood which hath been in the midst of thee.

14 Can[c] thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee? [d]I the LORD have spoken it, and will do it.

15 And I will [e]scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries, and [f]will consume[9] thy filthiness out of thee.

16 And thou shalt [1]take thine [h]inheritance[2] in thyself in the sight of the heathen, [i]and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

17 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become [j]dross: all they are [k]brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the [l]furnace; they are even the dross[3] of silver.

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Because ye are all become dross, behold, therefore, I[m] will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem.

20 As they gather[4] silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it, to melt it; so will I gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you.

21 Yea, [o]I will gather you, and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof.

22 As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof; and ye shall know that I the LORD have[p] poured out my fury upon you.

CHAP. XXIII.

[1] In this chapter, which may be regarded as the conclusion of one section of the book, we have a symbolical summary of Israel's national sin. The two kingdoms, Israel and Judah, are set forth under the emblems of two harlots, who, forgetful alike of shame and horror, run a long career of vice and adultery, the result of which is heavy judgment.—C.

23 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, say unto her, [q]Thou art the land that is not cleansed, nor rained upon[5] in the day of indignation.

25 There is [r]a conspiracy[6] of her prophets in the midst thereof, like a roaring lion ravening the prey: they [s]have devoured souls; they have taken the treasure and precious things; they have made her many widows in the midst thereof.

26 Her priests have violated[7] my law, and [t]have profaned mine holy things: [u]they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they showed difference between the unclean and the clean, and [v]have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned among them.

27 Her [x]princes in the midst thereof are like wolves ravening the prey, to shed blood, and to destroy souls, to get dishonest gain.

28 And her prophets have [y]daubed [8]them with untempered mortar, [z]seeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, saying, Thus saith the Lord GOD, when the LORD hath not spoken.

29 The people of the land have used oppression,[9] and exercised robbery, and have vexed the poor and needy; yea, they have oppressed the stranger wrongfully.[1]

30 And I [a]sought for a man among them, that should [b]make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it; but I found none.

31 Therefore [c]have I poured out mine indignation upon them; I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath: [d]their own way have I recompensed upon their heads, saith the Lord GOD.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 The whoredoms of Aholah and Aholibah. 22 Aholibah shall be plagued by her own lovers. 36 The prophet reproveth the adulteries of them both, 45 and declareth their judgments.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,[1]

2 Son of man, there were [a]two women, the daughters of one mother;

3 And they committed [b]whoredoms in Egypt; they committed whoredoms in their [c]youth: there were their breasts pressed, and there they bruised the teats of their virginity.[2]

4 And the names of them were [3]Aholah[4] the under his hand, and feel what a wretched exchange they have made by their apostasy from him. And as their stations aggravated their offences, they shall enhance their misery and ruin.

CHAPTER XXIII.—Whoredom here, and in many other places, denotes an idolatrous apostasy from God, their covenanted husband, to idols, and a dependence on heathen alliances. Ver. 4. The Israelites are called AHOLAH, her own tabernacle, because their worship, appointed by Jeroboam, was of their own invention; and the Jews AHOLIBAH, my tabernacle is in her, as they enjoyed the temple and ordinances of God. Both belonged to God by solemn marriage covenant; and they once brought forth many converts unto him. 32–34. The dreadful and lasting miseries with which ye also shall be punished shall render you contemptible, infamous, infatuated, and even mad with rage and despair. 38–43. When they had newly polluted themselves with idolatry and murder, they immediately rushed into my temple; and after offering their children to Molech, they sacrificed to their idols in my courts. And to please the Assyrians, Egyptians, or Chaldeans, they have built temples, and prepared altars and sacrifices, and have perfumed them with the incense and oil devoted to my service; and have received their ambassadors with distinguished veneration, and along with them have wallowed in ease and luxury, and have even courted the friendship of the base and thievish Arabians, that they might bring them ornamenting presents. Where and when are these base alliances and idolatries to stop?

REFLECTIONS.—Disgraceful to men, and dishonourable to God, are sinful confederacies and confidence in an arm of flesh. And the greater our privileges, and nearer our connections with God, the more criminal is [j]elder,[5] and [c]Aholibah[7] her sister; and they were mine,[e] and they bare sons and daughters. Thus were their names, Samaria is Aholah, and Jerusalem Aholibah.

5 And Aholah [g]played the harlot, when she was mine;[8] and she [h]doted on her lovers, on the Assyrians her neighbours,

6 Which were clothed with blue, captains and rulers, all of them desirable young men, [i]horsemen riding upon horses.

7 Thus she committed her whoredoms with[k] them, with all them that were the chosen men of Assyria,[1] and with all on whom she doted: with all their idols she defiled herself.

8 Neither left she her [l]whoredoms brought from Egypt: for in her youth they lay with her, and they bruised the breasts of her virginity, and poured their whoredom upon her.

9 Wherefore [k]I have delivered her into the hand of her lovers, into the hand of the Assyrians, upon whom she doted.

10 These discovered her nakedness;[2] they took her sons and her daughters, and slew her with the sword; and she became [3]famous[4] among women; for they had executed judgment upon her.

11 And when her sister Aholibah saw this, she was [l]more corrupt in her inordinate love than[5] she, and in her whoredoms more than her sister in her whoredoms.[6]

12 She doted upon the [n]Assyrians her neighbours, captains and rulers clothed most gorgeously, horsemen riding upon horses, all of them desirable young men.

13 Then I saw that she was defiled, that they[o] took both one way;

14 And that [p]she increased her whoredoms: for when she saw men pourtrayed upon the wall,[7] the[q] images of the Chaldeans pourtrayed with vermilion,

15 Girded[r] with girdles upon their loins, exceeding in dyed attire[8] upon their heads, all of them princes to look to, after the manner of the Babylonians of Chaldea, the land of their nativity,

16 And, as soon as she [s]saw them with her eyes,[9] she doted upon them, and [t]sent messengers unto them into Chaldea.[1]

17 And the Babylonians[2] came to her into the bed of love,[3] and they defiled her with their whoredom; and she was polluted with them, and her mind was alienated[4] from them.

18 So she discovered her whoredoms, and discovered her nakedness: then my mind [u]was alienated from her, like as my mind was alienated from her sister.

19 Yet she [v]multiplied her whoredoms, [w]in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the land of Egypt.

20 For she [5]doted upon their [6]paramours, whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.

21 Thus [y]thou calledst to remembrance the lewdness of thy youth, in bruising thy teats by the Egyptians for the paps of thy youth.

22 ¶ Therefore, O Aholibah, thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [z]I will raise up thy lovers against thee, from whom [a]thy mind is alienated, and I will bring them against thee on [b]every side;

23 The[c] Babylonians and all the Chaldeans, Pekod, and Shoa, and Koa,[7] and all the Assyrians with them: all of them [d]desirable young men, captains and rulers, great lords and renowned, all of them riding upon horses.

24 And they shall come against thee [e]with chariots,[8] waggons, and wheels, and with an assembly of people, which shall set against thee buckler, and shield, and helmet, round about: and I will set judgment before them, and they shall judge thee according to their [9]judgments.

25 And[g] I will set my jealousy against thee, and they shall [h]deal furiously with thee: [i]they shall take away thy nose and thine ears;[2] and thy remnant shall fall by the sword: they shall take thy sons and thy daughters; and [t]thy residue shall be devoured by the fire.

26 They shall also [j]strip thee out of thy clothes, and take away thy fair jewels.[3]

27 Thus [k]will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee, and thy whoredom brought from the land of Egypt: so that thou shalt not lift up thine eyes unto them, nor remember Egypt any more.

28 For thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [l]I will deliver thee into the hand of them whom thou hatest, into the hand of them from whom thy mind is alienated:

29 And[m] they shall deal with thee hatefully, and shall take away all thy labour, and shall leave thee naked and bare: and the [n]nakedness of thy whoredoms shall be [o]discovered, both thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

30 I will do these things unto thee, [p]because thou hast gone a whoring after the heathen, and because thou art polluted with their idols.

31 Thou[q] hast walked in the way of thy sister; therefore will I give [r]her cup into thine hand.

32 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [s]Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large: [t]thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in derision; it containeth much.

[z] Recent excavations among the ruined palaces and temples of Assyria and Babylonia illustrate these words. The walls and courts of the great cities of those kingdoms were covered with figures of their gods and heroes, mostly colossal. It is probable that some of these sculptures had been imported into Judea; or, perhaps, some Jews who visited Babylon saw them there, and brought back such glowing descriptions, that the idolatrous people of Jerusalem were induced to imitate them, even in the chambers connected with the temple.—C.

our apostasy from him. If men will strengthen their corruptions, and bid defiance to repentance, by long-continued customs of sinning, or by reflecting on their former wickedness with pleasure and pride, and will alienate their affections from God, let them not wonder if he mark his detestation of them in the most fearful calamities. If we follow the pattern of punished transgressors, we must expect to share with them in their tremendous plagues. And if we indulge ourselves in 33 Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow, with the cup of astonishment and desolation, with the cup of thy sister Samaria.

34 Thou[n] shalt even drink it, and suck it out, and thou shalt break the sherds thereof, and [o]pluck off thine own breasts: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord GOD.

35 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [p]Because thou hast forgotten me, and cast me behind thy back, therefore [q]bear thou also thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

36 ¶ The LORD said moreover unto me, Son of man, wilt thou [r]judge[4] Aholah and Aholibah? yea, [s]declare unto them their abominations;

37 That[t] they have committed adultery, and blood[c] is in their hands, and with their idols have they committed adultery; and have [u]also caused their sons, whom they bare unto me, to pass for them through the fire, to devour them.

38 Moreover, this they have done unto me: they [v]have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my sabbaths.

39 For when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; and, lo, [w]thus have they done in the midst of mine house.

40 And, furthermore, [x]that ye have sent for men to come[5] from far, unto whom a messenger was sent; and, lo, they came: for whom thou didst[i] wash thyself, paintedst thy eyes,[6] and deckedst thyself with ornaments,

41 And sattest upon a stately[7] bed, and [j]a table prepared before it, whereupon thou hast set mine incense and mine oil.

42 And a voice of [k]a multitude being at ease was with her: and with the men of the common sort[8] were brought [y]Sabeans[1] from the wilderness, which [z]put bracelets upon their hands, and beautiful crowns upon their heads.

43 Then said I unto her that was [l]old in adulteries, Will they now commit whoredoms with her,[3] and she with them?

44 Yet[n] they went in unto her, as they go in unto a woman that [a]playeth the harlot: so went they in unto Aholah and unto Aholibah, the lewd women.

45 ¶ And the [b]righteous men,[5] they shall judge them [c]after the manner of adulteresses, and after the manner of women that shed blood; because they are adulteresses, and blood is in their hands.

46 For thus saith the Lord GOD, [d]I will bring up a company upon them, and will give them to be [e]removed and [f]spoiled.[6]

47 And [g]the company shall stone them with stones, and dispatch them[7] with their swords; they shall [h]slay their sons and their daughters, and burn up their houses with fire.

48 Thus[v] will I cause lewdness to cease out of the land, [i]that all women may be taught not to do after your lewdness.

49 And [j]they shall recompense your lewdness upon you, and ye shall [k]bear the sins of your idols: and ye[a] shall know that I am the Lord GOD.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 By the parable of a boiling pot, 6 is showed the irrevocable destruction of Jerusalem. 15 By the sign of Ezekiel not mourning for the death of his wife, 19 is showed the calamity of the Jews to be beyond all expressions of sorrow.

AGAIN, in the [a]ninth year, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,[1]

2 Son of man, [b]write thee the name of the day, even of [c]this same day; the king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem this same day.

3 And[d] utter a parable unto the [e]rebellious house, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Set on a [g]pot,[2] set it on, and also pour water into it:

4 Gather[h] the pieces thereof into it, even every good piece, the thigh, and the shoulder; fill it with the choice bones.

5 Take the choice of the flock, [i]and [j]burn also the bones under it, and make it boil well, and let them seethe the bones of it therein.

6 Wherefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Woe to the [k]bloody city, to the pot whose [l]scum is therein, and whose scum is not gone out of it! [m]bring it out piece by piece;[4] let [n]no lot fall upon it.

7 For [o]her blood is in the midst of her; she set it upon the top of a rock; she poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust;

8 That[p] it might cause fury to come up to take vengeance; [q]I have set her blood upon the top of a rock, that it should not be covered.

9 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [r]Woe forgetfulness of God, the most shocking treachery, gross idolatry, barbarous murder, heaven-daring profaneness, and confederacy with the worst and basest of mankind, will most probably follow. And what can then await us but disappointments, and miseries unnumbered and tremendous? But most shameful is it when the heathen executioners of God's judgments are less wicked than the hypocritical professors on whom they execute them.

CHAPTER XXIV. Ver. 4–13. Gather the Jews, especially their great men, kings, princes, and rulers in church and state, into Jerusalem, that there thy kindled wrath may render them and their people inexpressibly miserable, by sword, famine, or pestilence. Since they continue obstinate in wickedness let them be destroyed, one after another, by diversified judgments. By their open and avowed wickedness they have provoked me to punish them with public, correspondent, and destructive judgments. Let resentment and hope of plunder animate the Chaldeans utterly to destroy the inhabitants, and even burn up their city, to see if that will cure them of their vain hopes, heathen confederacies, and obstinacy and impudence in wickedness, notwithstanding all my reproofs, threatenings, and lesser judgments. 21 23. I will give up the temple, that magnificent structure on which ye rely for security and eminency, to be defiled and destroyed by the Chaldean heathens; and your friends left at Jerusalem to be murdered; and yet ye shall not dare to make any open discoveries of your mourning for them; but shall secretly, in your own breasts, or with one another, bewail your misery, and pine away in sorrow.

Ver. 1. Ninth year of Jehoiachin's captivity and Zedekiah's reign. The date is so precisely noted that the captive Jews might have an opportunity of observing the accurate fulfilment of the prophecy. C.

Ver. 2. Ezekiel was now in Chaldea many hundreds of miles distant from Jerusalem and so could have no human means of ascertaining the precise commencement of the siege; or, indeed, whether there should be any siege at all. His confidence of assertion marks his unhesitating belief in his divine inspiration; and the accurate correspondence of the fact should have amply convinced his fellow-captives that he was indeed the messenger of God. C.

Ver. 17. Bread of men —such as used to be sent from one friend to another upon occasions of mourning; a custom founded upon the presumption that the mourner would neglect to prepare necessary food, which therefore friendship provided for him. C.

Ver. 23. Ye shall not mourn nor weep. The public calamities shall absorb all private sorrows; and the continuance of evils shall at last render you careless and callous. But ye shall pine away, &c. Ye shall complain one to another, and waste your thoughts and time in vain and provoking recriminations: each man charging his neighbour as the author of the public calami-to the bloody city! I will even [a]make the pile for fire great.

10 Heap[b] on wood, kindle the fire, consume the flesh, and [c]spice it well, and let the bones be burned.

11 Then [d]set it empty upon the coals thereof, that the brass of it may be hot, and may burn, and [e]that the filthiness of it may be molten in it, that the scum of it may be consumed.

12 She[g] hath wearied herself[5] with[z] lies, and her[a] great scum went not forth out of her: [b]her scum shall be in the fire.

13 In[c] thy filthiness is lewdness: [d]because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged, thou[e] shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more, [f]till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee.

14 I[h] the LORD have spoken it; it shall come to pass, and I will do it; I will not go back, neither[i] will I spare, neither will I repent: [j]according to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee, saith the Lord GOD.

15 ¶ Also the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

16 Son of man, behold, [k]I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes[8] with a stroke: yet[l] neither shalt thou mourn nor weep, neither shall thy tears run[8] down.

17 Forbear to cry,[9] make no mourning for the dead, [m]bind the tire of thine head upon thee,[1] and put [n]on thy shoes[2] upon thy feet, and cover[p] not thy [3]lips,[4] and eat not the bread of men.[5]

18 So I spake unto the people in the morning; and at [q]even my wife [r]died: and I did in the[s] morning [t]as I was commanded.

19 ¶ And the people said unto me, [u]Wilt thou not tell us what these things are to us, that thou doest so?

20 Then I answered them, The word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

21 Speak unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I [v]will profane my sanctuary, the [x]excellency of your strength, the [y]desire of your eyes, and that which your soul pitieth;[6] and [z]your sons and your daughters whom ye have left[7] shall [a]fall by the sword.

22 And[b] ye shall do as I have done: ye shall not cover your lips, nor [c]eat the bread of men.

2 Son of man, because that [b]Tyrus hath said against Jerusalem,[2] Aha,[c] she is broken that was the [3]gates of the people;[3] she[d] is turned unto me:[4] I shall be replenished, now she is laid waste:

3 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [e]Behold, I am against thee, O Tyrus, and will cause [f]many nations to come up against thee, as the [g]sea causeth his waves to come up.

credit to themselves for a purer form of religion; but, no matter what its form may have been, being void of 'brotherly kindness and charity,' it was nothing. 1 Co. 13. 2. C.

Ver. 15. National antipathies have disfigured the whole history of man, and are the natural productions of 'the carnal mind,' which, being 'enmity against God,' cannot become 'good-will to men' until it is renewed by the Holy Spirit. That Christian nations, that Christian churches, that Christian families, should tolerate or cherish such feelings, is deeply to be deplored. O! let believers forbear one another, and pray that they may be preserved from groundless divisions, and enabled to 'keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—In all ages the seed of the serpent have hated the people of God, or those who had their appearance. And especially in their distress, what unnatural and barbarous instances have they given thereof, as if they imagined the saints had lost their ALL when they lost their outward prosperity! It is indeed mournful when professed saints, by their apostasy, give occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme. But if God severely correct his own people, he will severely punish their enemies. And they who boasted of any other defence but his promise, power, and providence, shall quickly be ashamed of their glorying. He who detests revenge, despite, and hatred of neighbours, shall terribly punish the guilty; and perhaps by the hand of those whom they had injured.

CHAPTER XXVI. Ver. 5. A place for the spreading of nets. 'The whole village of Tyre consists of fifty to sixty poor families, who live on the produce of their little ground and a trifling fishery' see Volney's Travels. What an instructive lesson to the believer, to behold an avowed infidel thus compelled by stubborn facts to bow to the spirit of prophecy. (See also Bruce's and Shaw's Travels.) C.

Ver. 14. Thou shalt be built no more. There has arisen here a difficulty in the minds of some expositors; for it is historically notorious that insular Tyre was rebuilt after its destruction by Nebuchadnezzar, and recovered much, if not the whole, of its former magnificence. The solution of the difficulty lies in the fact, that two cities are addressed under one name, see ver. 11, and that the continental city never was rebuilt, but sunk into a mere village—a state of obscurity, dependence, and poverty, from which it has never emerged. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God highly resents our taking pleasure in the death or decay of others for the sake of our own carnal advantage. And there is little reason to to cease; and the sound of thy harps shall be no more heard.

14 And[y] I will make thee like the top of a rock; thou shalt be a place to spread nets upon; thou shalt be built no more:[6] for [z]I the LORD have spoken it, saith the Lord GOD.

15 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD to Tyrus, Shall not the isles [a]shake at the sound of thy fall, when the wounded cry, when the slaughter is made in the midst of thee?

16 Then all the [b]princes of the sea shall come down from their thrones, and [c]lay away their robes, and put off their broidered garments: they shall clothe themselves with trembling;[7] they shall sit upon the ground, and shall [d]tremble at every moment, and be [e]astonished at thee.

17 And they shall take up a [g]lamentation for thee, and say to thee, How art thou destroyed that wast inhabited of seafaring men,[8] the[h] renowned city, which wast strong in the sea, she and her inhabitants, which cause their terror to be on all that haunt it!

18 Now[i] shall the isles tremble in the day of thy fall; yea, the isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure.[9]

19 For thus saith the Lord GOD, When I shall make thee a desolate city, like the cities that are not inhabited; when I shall bring up the deep[1] upon thee, and great waters shall cover thee;[2]

20 When [j]I shall bring thee down with them that descend into the pit, with the people of old time, and shall set thee in the low parts of the earth, in places desolate of old, with them that go down to the pit, that thou be not inhabited; and I shall [3]set glory in the land of the living;[4]

21 I will make thee a terror,[5] and thou shalt be no more: though thou be sought for, yet shalt[k] thou never be found again, saith the Lord GOD.[6]

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 The rich and large commerce of Tyrus. 26 Her great and irrecoverable fall.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Now, thou son of man, [a]take up a lamentation for Tyrus;

3 And say unto Tyrus, O thou [b]that art situate at the entry of the sea,[1] which art [c]a merchant of the people for many isles, Thus saith the Lord GOD, O Tyrus, thou hast said, I am of perfect[2] beauty.

4 Thy borders are in the midst[3] of the seas, [d]thy builders[4] have perfected thy beauty.

5 They have made[5] all thy ship boards of fir trees of [e]Senir:[6] they have taken [g]cedars from Lebanon to make masts for thee.

6 Of the [h]oaks of Bashan have they made thine oars; [7]the company[8] of the Ashurites have made thy benches of ivory, brought out of the isles of [i]Chittim.

7 Fine[j] linen,[9] with broidered work from Egypt, was that which thou spreadest forth to be thy sail; blue and purple[1] from the isles of [k]Elishah was that which covered thee.

8 The inhabitants of [l]Zidon and [m]Arvad[2] were thy mariners: thy [n]wise men, O Tyrus, that were in thee, were thy pilots.

9 The ancients of [o]Gebal,[3] and the wise men thereof, were in thee thy calkers:[4] all the ships of the sea with their mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandise.

10 They of Persia,[5] and of [q]Lud, and of Phut, were in thine army, thy men of war: they hanged the shield and helmet in thee; they set forth thy comeliness.

11 The[r] men of Arvad, with thine army, were upon thy walls round about, and the Gammadims were in thy towers: they hanged their shields upon thy walls round about; they have made thy beauty perfect.

12 Tarshish[s] was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of all kind of riches: with silver, iron, tin, and lead, they traded in thy fairs.

13 Javan,[6] Tubal,[t] and Meshech, they were thy merchants: they traded the [u]persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market.[7]

14 They of the house of [v]Togarmah traded in thy fairs with horses, and horsemen, and mules.

15 The men of [z]Dedan were thy merchants; many isles were the merchandise of thine hand: they brought thee for a present horns of [v]ivory and ebony.

16 Syria[8] was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of the wares of thy making:[9] they occupied in thy fairs with emeralds, purple, and broidered work, and fine linen, and coral, and agate.[1]

17 Judah,[x] and the land of Israel, they were thy merchants: they traded in thy market [a]wheat of Minnith, and Pannag,[2] and honey, and oil, and [b]balm.[3] boast of or trust in created enjoyments, when the most wealthy and powerful cities may quickly be so ruined, as that the place where they stood shall not be known. So weak is human strength, so fading human greatness, and so tottering the rocky foundations of cities! Alas, the dreadful effects of sin, especially in hell! And how just is it that they who, priding themselves in their own strength, took pleasure to affright their inferiors, by the display of it, should likewise affright and astonish them, by the suddenness or strangeness of their punishments! It is common for worldly men to lament the death of great rather than of good men. And marvellously will God connect his own glory, and the restoration of his people, with the ruinous destruction of his and their enemies.

6 The principal parts of this prophecy concern Old Tyre, which was situated on the mainland close to the shore, opposite the island on which the more modern city was built. Of this old city but a vestige now remains. The stones and the very rubbish have all been removed. They were swept off by the soldiers of Alexander, thrown into the narrow channel which formerly divided the island from the mainland, and an artificial isthmus was thus formed giving access to the new city. Thus was the prophecy fulfilled, 'They shall lay thy stones, and thy timber, and thy dust in the midst of the water;' and thus too has the prediction been realized, 'Thou shalt be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again.'—P.

OIL MILL, DAMASCUS—IN THE TIME OF EZEKIEL DAMASCUS WAS THE MERCHANT OF TYRE, AND TYRE WAS THE SEAPORT TOWN OF DAMASCUS. [Ezekiel, xxvii:18.]—"Damascus was thy merchant in the multitude of the wares of thy making, for the multitude of all riches; in the wine of Helbon, and white wool." Damascus has always been a very important commercial city. On the great highway between the Mediterranean and the nations of the east it has always been an influential trade point. At the time Ezekiel wrote this twenty-seventh chapter Tyre was the seaport town of Damascus as Beyrout is to-day. In the above picture we have an oil mill photographed by our artist. The oil produced in this mill is olive oil. The olive furnishes oil for nearly all the cooking which is done in the east as well as furnishes lights. There is an old saying that, "When the oil fails the lamp in the dwelling of the poor expires." The olive berries begin to ripen early in the autumn. They are allowed to remain on the trees sometimes, though guarded.

7 The whole beauty and force of this magnificent description of Tyre consists in this, that the city commanded the best art and labour of every country, and the staple products of every country found ready sale in her ports. Damascus is famed for rich brocades, ornaments of gold and silver, and arms; it was the merchant of the sculptery of Tyre in "the multitude of wares," and of "all riches." Its trade with the shepherd Bedawin made it, and still makes it, a wool depot, and "white wool" was supplied in the wares of Tyre. The "wine of Helbon" was another of its exports. The remains of Helbon still exist in a rich valley of the same name, where a few miles of the city. The valley is to this day celebrated for the luxuriance of its vineyards and the choice quality of its grapes; and a good wine is manufactured in a neighbouring convent.—C.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, say unto the prince of [1]Tyrus, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [a]Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, [b]I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst[2] of the seas; [c]yet thou art a man, and not God, though thou set thine heart[3] as the heart of God:

3 Behold, thou art [d]wiser than Daniel; there is no secret that they can hide from thee:

4 With[e] thy wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten thee riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures:

well as insular Tyre to be included in the general description: a fact which it is important to notice, as it is necessary to remove an apparent contradiction between the prophecy and history. C.

Ver. 15. Dedan. Dedan was the son of Raamah, Ge. 10. 7: and the city after his name, situated on the Persian Gulf, is still called Dadan.—Many isles, &c. 'Many isles were the markets of thy manufactures: they returned thee for thy price, horns, ivory, and ebony.' Rosenmüller. This enumeration evidently points to the trade of the coasts of Africa and the East Indies. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great power and wealth rarely fail to have great pride for their companion. How strangely God by trade connects the different nations of the world! And yet, the more extensive trade is, the necessities and dependence of the traders are but the more manifested. Many articles in trade might be easily dispensed with: and yet God's wisdom remarkably appears in rendering that which is but trifling in itself the means of subsistence to multitudes. But the most pompous and powerful nations and cities are certainly and awfully brought down at last. And convenient situations, advantageous harbours, magnificent and elegant structures, numerous and well-manned fleets, choice troops and armour, universal traffic, and wide-spread fame, do but concur to aggravate their misery. But when even their own governors are guiding them to ruin, most sure and wretched is the downfall. And it is very hard for those who have been wallowing in pleasure, and sleeping in carnal security, to endure remarkable losses, disappointments, and trouble.

CHAPTER XXVIII. Ver. 1–19. You think yourself every way accomplished in body and mind, in dignity and wealth—as happy as ever Adam was in Paradise; having your crown studded, and your garments glittering with precious stones; and regaled, chiefly on your coronation day, with the finest music of instruments, contrived with exquisite art.—You think yourself a very angel, endowed with power to protect your people. You walk up and down as a god, or as the Jewish high-priest, all surrounded with precious stones glittering like fire. And till you discovered your violence, pride, fraud, and joy at the miseries of the Jews, you appeared endowed with all excellencies and prerogatives.—But now, for these thine iniquities, I will overturn thy dignity, eject thee from thy throne and grandeur, render thee a public example of my wrath, and an object of derision to the princes around: and a fire, kindled by thine own imprudence and injustice, shall occasion thy terrible ruin. 22-25. God is sanctified in Zidon, by manifesting his justice, holiness, and power in his judgments; but sanctified in the Jews, by manifestations of his mercy, and making them to own him for a holy and just God in their holy conversation.

Ver. 2. I am a god. Many of the ancient heathen kings affected to be the descendants of the gods. Alexander of Macedon would be held as the son of Jupiter, and murdered his friend because he would not worship him. The grand Lama of Tibet is worshipped as God. And, alas! the church of the meek and lowly Jesus still furnishes one 'who sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God,' 2 Th. 2. 4, and who has not shut his ears to the voice of blasphemy calling him Numen in terris 'God upon the earth.' C.

Ver. 3. Wiser than Daniel—in thine own conceit. Daniel was now famed throughout Asia for his divine knowledge, political skill, and management of the empire. C.

Ver. 13. Thou hast been in Eden. Trafficking in the land of Eden, in which, according to Moses, Ge. 2. 12, was 'gold and the onyx-stone,' where natural objects still retained their original loveliness, and 'man alone was vile.' C.

Ver. 14. Anointed cherub. This is not, as some have imagined, an irony—a figure ill suited to a solemn rebuke, administered by the Spirit of God. The meaning is to be ascertained from ver. 2, and the words to be supplied are, 'Thou hast said,' I am the anointed cherub, appointed to guard the mercantile entrance of the land, as the cherub guarded the tree of life, that is, in modern language, to monopolize its trade; a scheme after which foolish nations are still more or less labouring, though good-will and justice declare it should never be attempted, and all experience proves it can never succeed.—Stones of fire. 'Glittering stars' (Tertullian). Perhaps the sparkling fire-like gems on the breast-plate of the high-priest; intimating early education in the holy principles of the true religion, to which the Tyrians must have been introduced in the days of David and Solomon. C.

5 By thy great wisdom,[4] and by thy traffic, hast thou increased thy riches, and [g]thine heart is lifted up [h]because of thy riches:[5]

6 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Because thou hast [i]set thine heart as the heart of God;

7 Behold, therefore, I will bring [j]strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations: and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy [k]brightness.

8 They[l] shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas.

9 Wilt thou [m]yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God?[6] but thou shalt be a man, and no god, in the hand of him that slayeth[7] thee.

10 Thou shalt die [o]the deaths of the uncircumcised by the [p]hand of strangers: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord GOD.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

12 Son of man, [q]take up a lamentation upon the king of Tyrus, and say unto him, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Thou [r]sealest up[8] the sum, full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty.[9]

13 Thou hast been in [s]Eden the garden of God;[1] every [t]precious stone was thy covering, the sardius,[2] topaz, and the diamond, the beryl,[3] the onyx, and the jasper, the sapphire, the emerald,[4] and the carbuncle, and gold: the workmanship[u] of thy tabrets and of thy pipes was prepared in thee in the day that thou wast created.

14 Thou art the [v]anointed cherub that covereth; and [x]I have set thee so: thou wast [y]upon the holy mountain of God; thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the [z]stones of fire.

15 Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day that thou wast created, till [a]iniquity was found in thee.

16 By the [b]multitude of thy merchandise they have filled the midst of thee with violence, and thou hast sinned: therefore I will cast thee as profane out of the [c]mountain of God: and I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire.

17 Thine heart was [d]lifted up because of thy beauty; thou hast [e]corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness:[5] I[f] will cast thee to the ground, I will [g]lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee.

18 Thou[h] hast defiled thy sanctuaries[6] by the multitude of thine iniquities, by the iniquity of thy [i]traffic; therefore will I bring forth [j]a fire from the midst of thee, it shall devour thee; and I will bring thee [k]to ashes upon the earth in the sight of all them that behold thee.

19 All[l] they that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee: thou shalt be a terror,[7] and never shalt thou be any more.

20 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

21 Son of man, set thy face against [n]Zidon, and prophesy against it,

22 And say, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, [o]I am against thee, O Zidon; and I will be [p]glorified in the midst of thee: and they shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall have executed judgments in her, and shall be sanctified in her.

23 For[q] I will send into her pestilence, and blood into her streets; and the wounded shall be judged in the midst of her by the sword upon her on every side; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

24 ¶ And there shall be no more [r]a pricking brier unto the house of Israel, nor any grieving thorn of all that are round about them, that despised them; [s]and they shall know that I am the Lord GOD.[8]

25 Thus saith the Lord GOD, When [t]I shall have gathered the house of Israel from the people among whom they are scattered, and shall be [u]sanctified in them in the sight of the heathen, then shall they dwell in their land that I have given to my servant [v]Jacob.

26 And [x]they shall dwell safely[9] therein, [y]and shall build houses, and plant vineyards; yea, they shall dwell with confidence, when [z]I have

Ver. 15. Wast perfect. No irony, as some imagine, but a fact: intimating that the Tyrians had commenced their career of commercial prosperity in the fear of God, and had fallen from religion through the influence of pride, covetousness, and injustice. See ver. 16, 17. A charge that, alas! still continues to be exemplified in the history of individuals, families, cities, and nations, whose worldly prosperity is too often found to correspond with their moral deterioration and forgetfulness of God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is necessary, and yet very hard, to make proud men know themselves to be but men—but poor, dependent, dying worms. And very rarely they who are intelligent, wealthy, and dignified are remarkably humble. Yea, seldom do men carry on very extensive trades without oppressing and injuring their neighbours. But they who pretend to be God's rivals, are at last forced to quit their claims, and find themselves but men, weak and sinful. God can easily cast the most sinful out of their dignified stations, and devour them with a fire kindled by their own iniquity. Let Britain think and tremble!—How the cup of his justice goes round from one nation to another! But the ruin of his people's enemies remarkably makes way for their restoration and happiness. Even when he corrects them, he takes the greatest care that they may not seem vile to those around; and is highly provoked with those that despise them, and help forward their affliction.

CHAPTER XXIX. Ver. 4 7. By my providence thou shalt march out of thy country against the Cyrenians, on the west of Egypt, and lead along with thee multitudes of thy subjects. But the terrible ruin of this thine army shall provoke the remainder to rebel, and never cease their war against thee till thou and thy party be utterly ruined. And the Egyptians shall see themselves punished for encouraging the Jews to rebel against the Chaldeans to their own hurt. 16. They shall no more appear proper assistants to the Jews, nor tempt them to recommit their former wickedness, in distrusting God's promises and assistance, or in trusting to heathen helpers, and copying after their idolatries.

Ver. 3. Great dragon—the crocodile, an amphibious animal of the Nile, employed as an expressive emblem of Egyptian power, craftiness, and cruelty.—Rivers—the several branches of the Nile embracing the Delta, the most fruitful part of Egypt bordering on the Mediterranean. C.

Ver. 9. To this impious boast Pharaoh may have been tempted by some of those vast works (artificial lakes, canals, &c.) which the kings of Egypt constructed for retaining and distributing the waters for irrigation. A boast too often paralleled among Christians when they attribute the improvement of their country in agriculture, architecture, and manufactures to their own skill and industry, and forget that blessing of God from which both their skill and industry have been derived. C.

Ver. 13. The 'forty years' of desolation determined upon Egypt bore a probable reference to their contempt for the forty years' sojourn of Israel in the wilderness. The return of the captivity took place in the reign of Cyrus, who, though a heathen, exemplified a desire to loose the bonds of the slave, from which powers called Christian, and boasting of civilization and freedom, have still much to learn. C.

Ver. 15. Let the infidel examine the position of Egypt on the map, so admirably suited for the centre of a vast dominion; next let him consider its inexhaustible resources: then its historic grandeur; and let him return to this prophecy and compare it with the history of centuries; and then let him, if he can, shut his eyes against the sunlight evidence which the prophecy and fulfilment afford to the inspiration of the prophet, and the divine origin of the Holy Scriptures. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a mercy to foresee the failure of created confidences when we are most tempted to executed judgments upon all those that [a]despise[1] them round about them; and [b]they shall know that I am the LORD their God.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1 The judgment upon Pharaoh for his treachery to Israel. 8 The desolation of Egypt. 13 The restoration of it after forty years. 17 Egypt the reward of Nebuchadrezzar's service against Tyrus. 21 Israel shall be restored.

IN the [a]tenth year,[1] in the tenth month, in the twelfth day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,[2]

2 Son of man, [b]set thy face against [c]Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophesy against him, and against[d] all Egypt:

3 Speak, and say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [e]I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon[3] that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own,[4] and I have made it for myself.

4 But [f]I will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will cause the fish[5] of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales; and [h]I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales.[6]

5 And [i]I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers: thou shalt fall upon the open fields;[7] thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered: I have given thee for meat to the [j]beasts of the field and to the fowls of the heaven.

6 And all the inhabitants of Egypt [k]shall know that I am the LORD, because they have been [l]a staff of reed to the house of Israel.

7 When they [m]took hold of thee by thy hand, thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder: and when they leaned upon thee, thou brakest, and madest all their loins to be [o]at a stand.

8 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I [p]will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee.

9 And[q] the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste; and they shall know that I am the LORD: [r]because he hath said, The river is mine, and I have made it.

10 Behold, therefore, I am against thee, and against thy [s]rivers, and I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste[8] and desolate, from [t]the tower of Syene[1] even unto the border of Ethiopia.[2]

11 No[u] foot[3] of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beast shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years.

12 And [w]I will make the land of Egypt desolate in the midst of [x]the countries that are desolate, and her cities among the cities that are laid waste shall be desolate [y]forty years: and [z]I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

13 Yet thus saith the Lord GOD, At the end of forty years[4] will I gather the Egyptians from the people whither they were scattered:

14 And I will bring again the captivity of Egypt, and will cause them to return into the land of [a]Pathros, into the land of their habitation;[5] and[a] they shall be there a base[6] kingdom.

15 It shall be the basest of the kingdoms; neither shall it exalt itself any more above the nations: for I will diminish them, that they shall no more rule over the nations.

16 And[b] it shall be no more the confidence of the house of Israel, which [c]bringeth their iniquity to remembrance, when they shall look after them; [d]but they shall know that I am the Lord GOD.

17 ¶ And it came to pass in the [7]seven and twentieth year,[8] in the first month, in the first day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon caused his army to serve [e]a great service against Tyrus: [g]every head was made [h]bald, and every shoulder was peeled:[8] yet had he no [3]wages,[4] nor his army, for Tyrus, for the service that he had served against it:

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [i]I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall take her multitude, and take her spoil, and take her prey;[5] and it shall be the wages for his army.

20 I have given him the land of Egypt for his labour[6] wherewith he served against it, because they [k]wrought for me, saith the Lord GOD.

21 ¶ In that day will I cause the [l]horn of the house of Israel to bud forth,[7] and will give thee [m]the opening of the mouth in the midst of them; and [k]they shall know that I am the LORD.

CHAPTER XXX.

1 The desolation of Egypt and her helpers. 20 The arm of Babylon shall be strengthened to break the arm of Egypt.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [a]Howl ye, woe worth the day![1]

4 It is well to understand the cause of revelation of these prophetic judgments against Egypt. Why should it be singled out for special notice? The prophecy was delivered during the siege of Jerusalem. The Jews, instead of looking to Jehovah their God for deliverance, applied to Pharaoh. They hoped he would save them. To show them the folly of such confidence, and that Pharaoh himself was doomed, this prophecy was uttered. The same policy therefore was designed to counteract the foolish hopes that were placed in Egypt, and thus to prevent the Israelites from confiding to Egyptian idolatry with a view to perpetuate that nation.—C.

depend on them. But highly criminal is it for men, even the greatest, to pride themselves in their prosperity, as if they had not received all from God, and that only in loan. Quickly may they expect to lose that which they refuse to hold under Him. Alas, how fluctuating are the affections of our most ardent lovers and greatest admirers! They may one day risk their life to assist our ambition, and the next pull us from our station and being on earth. And too often do subjects ruin themselves by foolish adherence to sovereigns, or by undutiful rebellions against them. Nothing is more provoking to God, and injurious to mankind, than to deceive those who put confidence in us. And it is a mercy for the world when he strips those of their power who exercised it in tyrannizing over or deceiving their neighbours. Yea, happy is it to have those created comforts and confidences removed from us which estranged us from God. But how alarming is it to behold Egypt, the most ancient enslaver of God's people for about a hundred years, already more than two thousand years in the basest servitude to Chaldeans, Persians, Greeks, Romans, Saracens, and at last to Mameluke and Turkish slaves! At the most terrible expense and pains are men bent to destroy one another. And yet, while they are pursuing their coveted and ambitious views, they are at length brought under the rule of the British nation. And often God rewards the men with wealth or honour in this world, and yet they are lost in the next. It is well if he, in wrath, remember mercy; and it is a happy presage when his faithful ministers are divinely countenanced and encouraged in their work.

CHAPTER XXX. REFLECTIONS.—The day of God's just judgment, however slow, comes certainly at last. And they who will help his enemies must

3 For the [b]day is near, even the day of the LORD is near, a [c]cloudy day;[2] it shall be [d]the time of the heathen.

4 And the sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain[3] shall be in Ethiopia, when the slain shall fall in Egypt, and they [e]shall take away her multitude, and her [g]foundations[4] shall be broken down.

5 Ethiopia,[h] and Libya,[5] and Lydia, and all the mingled people, and Chub, and the men[6] of the land that is in league, shall fall with them by the sword.

6 Thus saith the LORD, They also [i]that uphold Egypt shall fall, and the pride of her power shall come down: from the tower of Syene[7] shall they fall in it by the sword, saith the Lord GOD.

7 And [j]they shall be desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities shall be in the midst of the cities that are wasted.

8 And [k]they shall know that I am the LORD, when I have [l]set a fire in Egypt, and when all her helpers shall be destroyed.[8]

9 In that day shall messengers[9] go forth from me in ships,[1] to make the [m]careless Ethiopians afraid, and [o]great pain shall come upon them, as in the day of Egypt: for, lo, it cometh.

10 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [p]I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon.

11 He and his people with him, the [q]terrible of the nations, shall be brought to destroy the land: and they shall draw their swords against Egypt, and fill the land with the slain.

12 And I will make the rivers [2]dry,[3] and sell[r] the land into the hand of the wicked; and I will make the land waste, and all that is therein,[4] by the hand of strangers: I the LORD have spoken it.

13 Thus saith the Lord GOD, I will also [s]destroy the idols, and I will cause their images[5] to cease out of [6]Noph;[7] and [t]there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt: and I [u]will put a fear in the land of Egypt.

14 And I will make [v]Pathros desolate, and will set fire in Zoan,[8] and will execute judgments in No.[9]

15 And I will [x]pour my fury upon Sin,[1] the strength of Egypt; and I will cut off the multitude of No.[2]

16 And I will [y]set fire in Egypt: Sin shall have [z]great pain, and No shall be rent asunder, and Noph shall have distresses daily.

17 The young men of Aven[3] and of [4]Pi-beseth shall fall by the sword: and these cities [a]shall go into captivity.

18 At Tehaphnehes[5] also the day shall be darkened,[6] when I shall break there the [b]yokes[7] of Egypt; and the [c]pomp of her strength shall cease in her: as for her, [d]a cloud shall cover her, and her daughters shall [e]go into captivity.

19 Thus[g] will I execute judgments in Egypt; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

20 ¶ And it came to pass in the [h]eleventh year,[8] in the first month, in the seventh day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

21 Son of man, [i]I have broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and, lo, [j]it shall not be bound up to be healed, to put a roller to bind it, to make it strong to hold the sword.

22 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I am against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and will [k]break his arms, the [l]strong, and [m]that which was broken; and [o]I will cause the sword to fall out of his hand.

23 And[p] I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries:

24 And[q] I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and [r]put my sword in his hand: but I will break Pharaoh's arms, and he [s]shall groan before him with the groanings of a deadly wounded man.

25 But I will strengthen the arms of the [t]king of Babylon, and the arms of Pharaoh shall fall down; and [u]they shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall put my [v]sword into the hand of the king of Babylon, and [x]he shall stretch it out upon the land of Egypt.

26 And [y]I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and disperse them among the countries: and they [z]shall know that I am the LORD.

* Noph, now Grand Cairo, possessed by the Mahommedans, the most decided enemies of images and image worship. How striking the coincidence of the fact and the prophecy! A few years since a splendid table service of plate was ordered in London by Mehemet Ali the ruler of Egypt; and when inquired the viziant to whom they were shown—why are the ornaments so few and so uniform? They must contain nothing that represents life—was the reply—as that would be reckoned an image.—C.

take their destruction along with them. God ordinarily makes one wicked person or nation his scourge to another; easily he can alarm the most distant or secure. And the fall of sinners ought to alarm their survivors. If we refuse to glorify him by obedience, he will take care to glorify himself in our destruction. And if lesser judgments will not humble and reform us, he will bring on more severe ones. He keeps nations in perpetual variation. Nothing is unchangeable but himself. But they who are most elevated in their prosperity are often most dispirited in their adversity. And no conquerors, no armies, have any power at all but what is given them from above.

CHAPTER XXXI. Ver. 3–6. The kingdom of Assyria arrived at an astonishing extent of dignity and power, ruling over and protecting many nations; and their king was exceedingly exalted. Their fruitful soil, enriching commodities, prudent administrations, and traffic with or conquest of nations, rendered it more powerful and extensive than any kingdom on earth. All the nations about were either under its dominion or courted its friendship. 13–17. Upon the fall of the Assyrian monarchy the conquering nations made a prey of it, and glutted themselves with the spoils thereof. Let therefore no princes nor kingdoms be puffed up with a conceit of themselves because of present prosperity, as they must all, in their turn, be reduced and ruined. When the Assyrian monarchy was destroyed, it struck a general terror into all its friends, dependants, and neighbours, and put a stop to all trade;—and while the Assyrians and their neighbours bewailed the disaster, the great kings and king

MOSQUE OF THE CITADEL IN CAIRO. [EZEKIEL, XXX : 4.]—"And the sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain shall be in Ethiopia, when the slain shall fall in Egypt." Egypt has in all ages been a place of war and bloodshed. This picture of the citadel in Cairo, begun by Muhammed-Ali and finished in 1857 by Sa-id Pasha, serves as a very good illustration of the text quoted from Ezekiel, because the sword has always been coming upon Egypt. It has attempted to perpetuate its existence not by constitutional forms of government, but by external force represented by the sword. This mosque at the citadel is built of alabaster. It is constructed after the model of Hagia Sophia at Constantinople. The mosque is a square, covered by a large dome, and four small walls. In the southeast corner is the tomb of Muhammed-Ali, and close by is the pulpit.

3 Behold, the [d]Assyrian[2] was [e]a cedar in Lebanon, with fair branches,[3] and with a [f]shadowing shroud, and of an high stature; and his top was among the thick boughs.[4]

4 The [h]waters[5] made[6] him great, the deep set[7] him up on high with her rivers running round about his plants, and sent out her little rivers[8] unto[i] all the trees of the field.

5 Therefore [j]his height was exalted above all the trees of the field, and his [k]boughs were multiplied, and his branches became long, because of the multitude of waters, when he shot forth.[9]

6 All the [l]fowls of heaven made their nests in his boughs, and under his branches did all the beasts of the field bring forth their young, and under his shadow dwelt all great nations.

7 Thus[n] was he fair in his greatness, in the length of his branches: for his root was by great waters.

8 The [o]cedars in the garden of God could not hide him: [p]the fir-trees were not like his boughs, and the chesnut-trees were not like his branches; nor any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty.

9 I[q] have made him fair by the multitude of his branches: so that all the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, [r]envied him.

10 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [s]Because thou hast lifted up thyself in height, and he hath shot up his top among the thick boughs, and his heart is lifted up in his height;

11 I have, therefore, delivered him into the hand of the [t]mighty one of the heathen, he shall surely deal with him:[1] I have driven him out for his [u]wickedness.

12 And [v]strangers, the terrible of the nations, have cut him off, and have left him: upon[x] the mountains and in all the valleys his branches are fallen, and his boughs are broken by all the rivers of the land; and all the people of the earth [y]are gone down from his shadow, and have left him.

13 Upon[z] his ruin shall all the fowls of the heaven remain, and all the beasts of the field shall be upon his branches:

14 To[a] the end that none of all the trees by the waters exalt themselves for their height, neither shoot up their top among the thick boughs, neither their trees stand up in their height,[2] all that drink water: for they are all [b]delivered unto death, to the nether parts of the earth, in the midst of the children of men, with them that go down to the pit.

15 Thus saith the Lord GOD, In the day when he [c]went down to the grave [d]I caused a mourning. I covered the deep for him, and I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed; and I caused Lebanon[3] to mourn[4] for him, and all the trees of the field fainted for him.

16 I made the nations to [e]shake at the sound of his fall, when [g]I cast him down to hell with them that descend into the pit: and [h]all the trees of Eden, the choice and best of Lebanon, all that drink water, shall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth.[5]

17 They[i] also went down into hell with him, unto them that be slain with the sword; and they that were his [j]arm, that [k]dwelt under his shadow in the midst of the heathen.

18 ¶ To[l] whom art thou thus like in glory and in greatness among the trees of Eden? yet shalt thou be brought down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth: thou shalt lie [m]in the midst of the uncircumcised with them that be slain by the sword. This is Pharaoh, and all his multitude,[6] saith the Lord GOD.

CHAPTER XXXII.

1 A lamentation for the fearful fall of Egypt. 11 The sword of Babylon shall destroy it. 17 It shall be brought down to hell among all the uncircumcised nations.

AND it came to pass in [a]the twelfth year,[1] in the twelfth month, in the first day of the month, that [b]the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [c]take up a lamentation for Pharaoh king of Egypt, and say unto him, Thou [d]art like a young lion of the nations, and thou art as a whale[2] in the seas;[3] and thou camest forth with thy rivers, [e]and troubledst the waters with thy feet, and fouledst their rivers.

3 Thus saith the Lord GOD, I will, therefore, [g]spread out my net over thee with a company of many people; and they shall bring thee up in my net.

4 Then [h]will I leave thee upon the land, I will cast thee forth upon the open field, and doms which had been before reduced rejoiced to see Assyria in like manner ruined, and to see its armies and dependants brought to destruction.

REFLECTIONS.—Kings and kingdoms may flourish and shine for a time in great pomp and grandeur, and yet must certainly fall at last. And the greater men's height, the more ruinous is their fall. But how unhappy it is that men cannot excel in earthly things without creating envy to themselves! It is highly necessary that they, who have power and wealth, should use it for the protection and comfort of others around; and that God's hand should be carefully observed in the advancement of the great men of the earth. He, as Judge, pulls down one king and kingdom, and sets up another. And often their ruin comes upon them just after they seemed most fixed and flourishing. The more proud and imperious they are, the greater is like to be their disgrace and contempt. They who were courted in their prosperity will be deserted and spoiled in the day of adversity; and their fall will probably involve multitudes in terror or ruin. And let us always remember, that God intends every providential stroke as a warning to others; that when proud presumptuous sinners are cast down, all around may mortify their lusts, and be clothed with humility.

CHAPTER XXXII. Ver. 2–10. Pharaoh is full of cruelty and violence to the nations around: and with his great armies disturbs their peace and spoils their country. But I will quickly conduct thee to Cyrene, where the bulk of thine army shall be destroyed and lie unburied. After which, Egypt itself, by intestine wars, and by the invasion of the Chaldeans, shall be a scene of bloodshed and confusion: all ranks—king, queen, nobles, magistrates, and commons; nay, the most understanding persons of the nation—shall be disgraced, confounded, and ruined, to the terror of the countries around.

REFLECTIONS.—Ministers must weep and tremble at the words of God, that they may affect others therewith. Alas, how the restless ambition and implacable resentment of proud princes disturb the world! But the brandished sword of God's judgments shall at last overwhelm them with consternation, terror, and ruin. Hardened sinners often fret and murmur under God's will cause all the fowls of the heaven to remain upon thee, and I will fill the beasts of the whole earth with thee.

ENTRANCE TO THE TEMPLE OF THE SPHINX—STANDING WHEN ABRAHAM FIRST APPEARED IN EGYPT. [Ezekiel, xxxii:15.]—"I shall make the land of Egypt desolate, and the country shall be destitute of that whereof it was full; when I shall smite all them that dwell therein, then shall they know that I am the Lord." The prophecy of Ezekiel has been literally fulfilled as far as Egypt is concerned, against which it was uttered. The Egypt of Ezekiel's day is desolate. To the southeast of the Sphinx there is the large granite and limestone temple excavated by M. Mariette in 1853. Statues of Chephren, which are now in the Gizeh Museum, were found in it, and hence it is generally supposed that the Temple of the Sphinx was built by Chephren. It is said to be a good specimen of the simple style of architecture in vogue among the Egyptians in the time of the ancient Empire. There is a chamber in this temple in which are hewn in the wall niches which are thought to have been intended as places of deposit for the mummies.

5 And I will lay thy flesh upon the mountains, and fill the valleys with thy height.

6 I [1]will also water with thy blood the land wherein thou swimmest,[4] even to the mountains; and the rivers shall be full of thee.

7 And when I shall put thee out,[5] I[2] will cover the heaven,[6] and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light.

8 All the bright lights of heaven[7] will I make dark[8] over thee, and [k]set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord GOD.

9 I will also vex[9] the hearts of many people, when I shall [l]bring thy destruction among the nations, into the countries which thou hast not known.

10 Yea, [m]I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall [n]brandish my sword before them; and they shall tremble at every moment, every man for his own life, in the day of thy fall.

11 ¶ For thus saith the Lord GOD, The [p]sword of the king of Babylon shall come upon thee.

12 By the [q]swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall, the terrible of the nations, all of them; and [r]they shall spoil the pomp of Egypt, and all the multitude[t] thereof shall be destroyed.

13 I will destroy also all the beasts thereof[2] from beside the great waters; neither shall the foot of man [u]trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts trouble them.

14 Then will I make their waters deep,[3] and cause the rivers to run like oil,[4] saith the Lord GOD.

15 When I shall make the land of Egypt desolate, and the country shall be destitute of that wherof it was full,[5] when I shall smite all them that dwell therein, [x]then shall they know that I am the LORD.

16 This[u] is the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her: the daughters of the nations shall lament her; they shall lament for her, even for Egypt, and for all her multitude, saith the Lord GOD.

17 ¶ It came to pass also in [z]the twelfth year,[6] in the fifteenth day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, [a]wail for the multitude of Egypt, and [b]cast them down, even her, and the daughters of the famous nations, unto [c]the nether parts of the earth, with them that go down into the pit.[7]

19 Whom[a] dost thou pass in beauty? [b]go down, and be thou laid with the [8]uncircumcised.

20 They[c] shall fall in the midst of them that are slain by the sword; she is delivered to the sword:[9] draw her and all her multitudes.

21 The[d] strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell[1] with them that help him: [e]they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword.

22 Ashur[g] is there, and all her company: his graves are about him; all of them slain, fallen by the sword:

23 Whose[h] graves are set in the sides of the pit, and [i]her company is round about her grave; all of them slain, fallen by the sword, [j]which caused terror[2] in the [k]land of the living.[3]

24 There is Elam[4] and all her multitude round about her grave; all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which are gone down uncircumcised into [l]the nether parts of the earth, which caused their terror in the land of the living; yet have they [m]borne their shame with them that go down to the pit.

25 They have set her a bed[5] in the [o]midst of the slain with all her multitude; her graves are round about him; all of them [p]uncircumcised, slain by the sword: though their [q]terror was caused [r]in the land of the living, yet have they borne their shame with them that go down to the pit: he is put in the midst of them that be slain.

26 There is [6]Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude: her graves are round about him; all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword, though they caused their terror in the land of the living.

27 And they shall not lie with [s]the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell with their weapons of [7]war; and they have laid their swords under their heads;[8] but their iniquities[9] shall be upon their bones, though they were the terror of the mighty in the land of the living.

28 Yea, [t]thou shalt be broken in the midst of the uncircumcised, and shalt lie with them that are slain with the sword.

29 There is [u]Edom, her kings, and all her princes, which with their might are laid[1] by them that were slain by the sword: they shall lie with the uncircumcised, and with them that go down to the pit.

30 There be the princes of the [v]north,[2] all of them, and all the [x]Zidonians, which are gone down with the slain; with their terror they are ashamed of their might; and they lie uncircumz This is a strange and terrible prophetic vision. The prophet flies in a moment into the world of spirits. He shows to all those nations with which the Jews were brought into contact, as it is its glory amidst its slain, its princes, warriors, and statesmen all alike fallen, and in the case Pharaoh is introduced consoling himself in his own ruin, that he is not alone, he has company and the ordinate fate of the mightiest inhabitants of the earth. What a view does this give us of God's power, and of the vanity of human glory!—C.

5 Egypt has surpassed all other nations in the extent and decorations of her sepulchralities, tion. 25—a single tomb sometimes presenting a palace, her catacombs a city. This organically 'glory of the grave.' is therefore the chief point to which the prophet directs the judgment. The proud tomb of Egypt is there, but her military pomp is no more; the company is indeed around the grave, but 'all' of them slain, fallen by the sword,' and not one remains to write his fellow's epitaph. Nor let men doubt the possibility of such an overpowering disaster; for even so, at this very hour, has a British army been totally extirpated in India—a sad specimen of what a desperated enemy and an unpropitious climate may effect—a host of divine displeasure are to be divergently—a call to every lover of his country to repent of his own share of the national sins, and to pray for the averting of further calamities.—C. tremendous threatenings, instead of humbling themselves. And they who with complacency admired the pomp of this world, with terrible astonishment behold its ruin. The mighty nations who delighted in war shall find enough of it at last. And no multitudes, wealth, or power can avail either to withstand the wrath or to move the pity of God. ## CHAPTER XXXIII.

AGAIN the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [a]speak to the children of thy people, and say unto them, When [b]I bring the sword upon a land,[1] if the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman:[c]

3 If, when [d]he seeth the sword come upon the land, he [e]blow the trumpet, and warn the people;

4 Then whosoever [f]heareth[2] the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come, and take him away, [h]his blood shall be upon his own head.

5 He [i]heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning, his [j]blood shall be upon him: but [k]he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul.

6 But if the watchman see the sword come, and[l] blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, [m]he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand.

7 So[o] thou, O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; [p]therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me.

8 When I say unto the wicked, [q]O wicked man, [r]thou shalt surely die; [s]if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his [t]iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.[3]

9 Nevertheless, [u]if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; [v]if he do not turn from his way, he shall [w]die in his iniquity; but [x]thou hast delivered thy soul.

10 ¶ Therefore, O thou son of man, [y]speak unto the house of Israel, Thus ye speak, saying, [z]If our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, [a]how should we then live?[4]

11 Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord GOD, [b]I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: [c]turn ye, turn ye, from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?[5]

12 Therefore, thou son of man, say unto the children of thy people, [d]The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression: as for the wickedness of the wicked, [e]he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his [f]righteousness in the day that he sinneth.

13 When[g] I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; [h]if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousnesses shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, [k]he shall die for it.[6]

14 Again, when I say unto the wicked, [l]Thou shalt surely die; [m]if he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right;[7]

15 If[o] the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in [p]the statutes of life without committing iniquity; [q]he shall surely live, he shall not die.

16 None[r] of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him: he hath done that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live.

17 ¶ Yet the children of thy people say, [s]The way of the Lord is not equal: but as for them, their way is not equal.

18 When[t] the righteous turneth from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, he shall even die thereby.

19 But[u] if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby.

20 Yet[v] ye say, [w]The way of the Lord is not equal. O ye house of Israel, [y]I will judge you every one after his ways.

21 ¶ And it came to pass in the [z]twelfth year of our captivity, in the tenth month, in the t He shall die for it. This does not mean that a truly righteous man, one endowed with the only righteousness which is of God by faith (Phi. 3. 9) may perish eternally for this cannot be, Jn. 10. 27, 28; but that sickness and death will become at once the corrigent and the punishment of his faults. (See 2 Co. 12. 30—32. He. 12. 5—11.) Some understand the passage as a supposed case, not a real or possible, put to the Jews as a statement of divine procedure, which, if acted upon, they could not deny to be equitable; an argument on them to consciences, of their utter unfitness to be judged by such a rule, and consequently of the necessity of fleeing to 'the LORD their righteousness.' (See 2 Co. 5. 19.) There is no inconsistency in supposing that z The fundamental error in the Jewish theology at this period lay in there being [illegible] that as they say, God deals neither with individuals nor with nations according to their works: therefore, there is no use of self-examination or of repentance. The judgment is heavy on us, for the fact of the divine judgment upon the nation, the jew that respects the Scriptures can deny. We have given up in despair, as one in a lingering disease, and since it is thus the fates, and not any equitable and judicial will of God, we have no remedy.—'How should we then live?' This language presents a sad mixture of unintelligent fatalism, infidelity, recklessness, and despair.—C.

The words here addressed to Israel may be considered applicable to every impenitent sinner in a Christian land. devourers are sin and death! Yea, the terrors of God shall prevail when those of men are for ever subdued. Awful indeed will he that assembly when the dead, small and great, shall stand before him!

CHAPTER XXXIII. Ver. 10, 11. They cavil, and say, If we are thus miserable, and long punished for our iniquities, how can we be ever delivered and restored to prosperity? But know assuredly that I take no pleasure in punishing you, wicked as you are; but had rather you should repent of your wickedness, that I might accomplish my promises of mercy to you. Why then do ye not, without a moment's delay, heartily repent and return! Why do ye continue to ruin yourselves, and to provoke me to destroy you?—N.B. The death and life here, as well as in ch. iii. and xviii., primarily denote the temporal misery or happiness of the Jews; the first of which might have been prevented, and the latter might have been obtained, by repentance and righteousness, though not properly evangelical or infallibly persevering. 24. They whom the Chaldeans have left in the desolated country of Judea, far from lamenting their sins and desolations, and the captivity or death of their brethren, boast that, being Abraham's seed, and especially considering their number, they shall be able to keep possession of the country.

REFLECTIONS.—One faithful minister or magistrate may be of great service to a country or nation. Yet much care and faithfulness is necessary in the work of fifth day of the month, that [a]one that had escaped out of Jerusalem came unto me, saying, The[b] city is smitten.[8]

22 Now [c]the hand of the LORD was upon me in the evening, afore he that was escaped came, and had opened my mouth, until he came to me in the morning, and [d]my mouth was opened, and I was no more dumb.

23 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, [e]they that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel speak, saying, [g]Abraham was one, and he inherited the land: but we are many;[h] the[i] land is given us for inheritance.

25 Wherefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; [j]Ye eat with the blood,[9] and [k]lift up your eyes toward your idols, and [l]shed blood: and shall ye [m]possess the land?

26 Ye[l] stand upon your sword,[2] ye[o] work abomination, and [p]ye defile every one his neighbour's wife: and [q]shall ye possess the land?

27 Say thou thus unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; As I live, [r]surely they that are in the wastes shall fall by the sword, and him that is in the open field will I give to the beasts to be devoured,[3] and they that be in the forts and in the [s]caves shall die of the pestilence.

28 For [t]I will lay the land most desolate,[4] and the [u]pomp of her strength shall cease; and the[v] mountains of Israel shall be desolate, that none shall pass through.

29 Then[w] shall they know that I am the LORD, when I have laid the land most desolate [x]because of all their abominations which they have committed.

30 ¶ Also, thou son of man, the children of thy people still are talking against[5] thee[6] by the walls and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, Come,[y] I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the LORD.

31 And they come unto thee as the people cometh,[7] and they[8] sit before thee as my people, and they [z]hear thy words, but they will not do them: [a]for with their mouth they show much love,[9] but their heart [b]goeth after their covetousness.

32 And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song[1] of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for [c]they hear thy words, but they do them not.[2]

33 And when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come[3]), then [d]shall they know that a prophet hath been among them.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

1 A reproof of the shepherds. 7 God's judgments against them. 11 His providence over his flock. 20 The blessings of Christ's kingdom.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son[a] of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD unto the shepherds, Woe be to the shepherds[1] of Israel that [b]do feed themselves! should not the shepherds [c]feed the flocks?

3 Ye[d] eat the fat,[2] and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed:[3] but ye feed not the flock.

4 The[e] diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with [g]force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.

5 And they were scattered, [h]because there is no shepherd:[5] and they became meat to all the beasts of the field when they were scattered.

6 My[h] sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was [i]scattered upon all the face of the earth, and [j]none did search or seek after them.

7 ¶ Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD;

8 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, [k]surely because [l]my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd, neither did my shepherds[6] search for my flock, but the shepherds [m]fed themselves, and fed not my flock;

9 Therefore, O ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD;

10 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [o]Behold, I am against the shepherds; and I will [p]require my flock at their hand, and [q]cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more: for [r]I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them.[7]

11 ¶ For thus saith the Lord GOD, [s]Behold I, even I, will both search my sheep, and seek them out.

[w] The sins of the people of Israel are here charged against the rulers who neglected their duty, seeking their own temporal advancement, and failing to instruct, warn, and control those placed under their care. For this judgment had already been executed upon them, and still more was in store. But while the prophet thus denounces the guilty rulers of Israel, he holds forth cheering promises and glorious hopes to the people. God himself would be their leader and teacher; as a faithful shepherd he would collect the scattered sheep, and feed them again on the mountains of Israel.—P.

either. And it is a great mercy that, when they cannot be so useful to others as they wished, they may save themselves. They who have hardened themselves in presumption generally at last sink into and harden themselves in despair. Yet certain and delightful is it that God hath no pleasure in the ruin of sinners; and that he is infinitely sincere and earnest in his calls to repentance. But sinners must repent or be damned. Holiness and happiness, obstinate sinning and misery, are inseparably connected in God's purposes, oracles, and providences; nor does the escaping one stroke secure the hardened transgressor from imminent ruin.—To what a fearful pitch of profaneness are they arrived who can make common calamities the matter of their joy, or important discourses the object of their derision! And yet faithful ministers are a common object of contempt and hatred, and a common subject of discourse in the places where they live. And, alas, many pretend great fondness for God's ministers and ordinances who have no real love to them! Often hearers have their fancies pleased who never get their consciences touched, their hearts renewed, or lives sanctified, by what they hear. And nothing more effectually prevents the efficacy of the gospel than a covetous heart. But neither scoffers nor hypocrites shall be able to defeat the threatenings of God; and they who would not improve his mercies shall know their value by wanting them.

CHAPTER XXXIV. Ver. 2–5. These rulers regard only their own interest, and not the welfare of the people. By oppression and murder they seize upon the estates of the rich; they have not supported, relieved, or comforted such as were fallen into decay or distress; they have not relieved or redressed the wrongs of the oppressed; they have not restored to

ACADEMY OF SCIENCE, ATHENS—THE DIRECT OUTCOME OF THE CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION UNDER THE BENIGN INFLUENCE OF WHICH THIS CITY NOW FLOURISHES. [EZEKIEL xxxiv: 23-25]—"And I will set up one Shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd. And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them; I the Lord have spoken it. And I will make with them a covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods." We give a picture of the Academy of Science in Athens, which is a fitting illustration of this prophecy of Ezekiel. The kingdom of Jesus Christ the son of David wherever established has promoted law and order and science and all the things which go to make up enlightened civilization. All nations where Christ has been accepted have enjoyed the showers of blessing of which Ezekiel speaks.

12 As a shepherd seeketh out[g] his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver[f] them out of all places where they have been scattered in [w]the cloudy and dark day.

13 And [v]I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the [x]mountains of Israel, by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country.

14 I will feed them in a [y]good pasture, and upon[z] the high mountains of Israel shall their fold be: there shall they lie in a good fold, and in a fat pasture shall they feed upon the mountains of Israel.

15 I will [a]feed my flock, and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord GOD.

16 I[b] will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick: but [c]I will destroy the fat and the strong; I will feed them with [d]judgment.

17 And as for you, O my flock, thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, 'I judge between cattle[9] and cattle,[1] between the rams and the he-goats.[2]

18 Seemeth it a small thing unto you [e]to have eaten up the good pasture, but ye must [h]tread down with your feet the residue of your pastures? and to have drunk of the deep waters, but ye must foul the residue with your feet?

19 And as for my flock; they eat that which ye have trodden with your feet; and they drink that which ye have fouled with your feet.[3]

20 ¶ Therefore, thus saith the Lord GOD unto them, 'Behold I, even I, will judge between the fat cattle and between the lean cattle.

21 Because [j]ye have thrust with side and with shoulder, and pushed all the diseased with your horns, till ye have scattered them abroad;

22 Therefore[k] will I save my flock, and they shall no more be a prey; and I will judge between cattle and cattle.

23 And I will set up one [l]shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even [m]my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd.

24 And[n] I the LORD will be their God, and my servant David [o]a prince among them; I the LORD have spoken it.

25 And[p] I will make with them a [q]covenant of peace, and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land; and [r]they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods.

26 And[s] I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; [t]and I will cause the shower to come down in his season: there shall be showers of blessing.

27 And[u] the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and shall know that I am the LORD, when [v]I have broken the bands of their yoke, and delivered them out of the hand of those that served themselves of them.

28 And[x] they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beast of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid.

29 And I will raise up for them a [y]plant [5]of renown,[6] and they shall be no more [7]consumed with hunger in the land, [8]neither bear the shame of the heathen any more.

30 Thus shall they [z]know that I the LORD their God am with them, and that they, even the house of Israel, are my people, saith the Lord GOD.

31 And ye [b]my flock, the flock of my pasture, are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord GOD.[8]

CHAPTER XXXV.

The judgment of Mount Seir for their hatred of Israel, and insulting over their distress.

MOREOVER, the[a] word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [b]set thy face against [c]mount Seir,[1] and [d]prophesy against it,

3 And say unto it, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, O mount Seir, I am against thee, and I will stretch out mine hand against thee, and I will make thee most desolate.[2]

[n] It is of great importance for the Christian to observe that God, by the prophets, constantly promised a new covenant to the Jews; thereby intimating the departure of the Mosaic to make room for the gospel dispensation. See He. 8:6-10. This prophecy began to be typically fulfilled in Zerubbabel and his coadjutors, but really in the 'covenant of peace,' established in the blood of the cross. Eph. 2. 14-20. Col. 1:20. Since which time, though the Lord appear 'slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness,' and the prospect of the conversion and restoration of Israel appear, to the eye of their right such as, by the violence of others, had been forced to quit their lands; nor have they attempted to reform the wanderers in wickedness; but have tyrannized over them in the most unmerciful manner:—so that, by the ill conduct of their rulers, and the violence of enemies, they are either destroyed, or forced as captives or fugitives into other countries, and their wealth is made a spoil. 16, 17, 20, 22. While I redress the manifold grievances of the poor and oppressed, I will, by fearful judgments, destroy their wealthy and powerful oppressors; I will, in righteousness, make an effectual difference between the weaker and stronger part of my people—cherishing the former, and restraining the violence and fury of the latter. 18, 19, 21. Think ye it a small crime to enjoy my enlarged blessings yourselves alone, but ye must disturb the poor in the possession of their small estates, and consume them by your illegal oppression. Yea, ye oblige them to live upon the remains of what ye have destroyed, and molest and vex them by your injustice and violence. 23. Jesus Christ is called David, because he was his promised seed and glorious antitype; and called God's servant, because, as mediator, he performs the debased and honorary work of our salvation, appointed him of the Father. He is called a Shepherd, to denote his careful gathering, protecting, guarding, providing for, feeding, and healing his people. And he is called a Plant of Renown, ver. 29, because, being low in his humiliation, he is infinitely excellent in himself; and is, and will for ever be, infinitely famous among angels and men. 25. I will establish with them my covenant, by virtue of which they shall enjoy all kinds of blessings; and wicked men, who oppress and devour others, shall either be converted or destroyed to such a degree, that, in the most barbarous and dangerous places, there shall be nothing but safety and comfort.

Ver. 16. I will seek that which was lost. This is the true character of Jesus—'The shepherd of the sheep,' 'the good shepherd,' who came 'to seek and to save that which was lost,' 'to bind up the broken-hearted, and comfort all them that mourn.' C.

Ver. 23. My servant David. David, the son of Jesse, had now been dead 400 years, and no one of the name ever afterwards sat upon the throne of Israel, till Messiah, the true David, so called of God from heaven, Mat. 3. 17; for David, in Hebrew, corresponds to Beloved in Greek, which name God the Father then bestowed upon his only begotten Son. C.

REFLECTIONS.—If the dignity and power of men do not restrain them from sin, it will not exempt them from reproof, excuse their impenitence, or avert God's judgments. Alas! miserable is the case of nations and churches when magistrates and ministers mind only their own temporal interests, neglect their duty, plague, oppress, and mislead their people. And most dreadful will be their account and condemnation at last. Soon will God deprive them of that power which they have abused. And if they will neglect their part, God will, at their expense, and for the welfare of his people, perform his, and neither slumber nor sleep. If they harden the wicked, and discourage the righteous, he

4 I will lay thy cities waste, and thou shalt be desolate; [t]and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

5 Because[u] thou hast had a perpetual hatred,[3] and hast shed the blood of the children[4] of Israel by the force[5] of the sword in the time of their calamity, in [h]the time that their iniquity had an end:

6 Therefore,[i] as I live, saith the Lord GOD, I will prepare thee unto blood, and blood shall pursue thee: sith thou hast not hated blood, even blood shall pursue thee.

7 Thus will I make mount Seir most desolate,[6] and cut off from it [j]him that passeth out, and him that returneth.

8 And [k]I will fill his mountains with his slain men: in thy hills, and in thy valleys, and in all thy rivers, shall they fall that are slain with the sword.

9 I[l] will make thee perpetual desolations,[7] and thy cities shall not return; and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

10 Because thou hast said, [m]These two nations,[8] and these two countries, shall be mine, and we will possess it; whereas[9] the LORD was there:

11 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord GOD, I[o] will even do according to thine anger, and according to thine envy, which thou hast used out of thy hatred against them; and [p]I will make myself known among them, when I have judged thee.

12 And [q]thou shalt know that I am the LORD, and that [r]I have heard all thy blasphemies which thou hast spoken against the mountains of Israel, saying, They are laid desolate, they are given [s]us to consume.[1]

13 Thus with your mouth ye have boasted[2] against me, and have multiplied your words against me: I have heard them.

14 Thus saith the Lord GOD, When [t]the whole earth rejoiceth, [u]I will make thee desolate.

15 As thou [v]didst rejoice at the inheritance of the house of Israel, because it was desolate, so will I do unto thee: thou shalt be desolate, O mount Seir, and all Idumea, even all of it; and [z]they shall know that I am the LORD.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

1 The land of Israel is comforted, both by the destruction of the heathen, who spitefully used it, 8 and by the blessings of God promised unto it. 16 Israel was rejected for their sin, 21 and shall be restored without their desert. 25 The blessings of Christ's kingdom.

ALSO, thou son of man, prophesy unto the [a]mountains of Israel, and say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the [b]word of the LORD.

2 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [c]Because the enemy hath said against you, Aha, even [d]the ancient high places are [e]ours in possession;

3 Therefore prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Because[1] they have made you desolate, and swallowed you up on every side, that ye might be a possession unto the residue of the heathen,[2] and ye are taken up in the lips of talkers,[3] and are an infamy of the people:

4 Therefore, ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord GOD: Thus saith the Lord GOD to the [f]mountains and to the hills, to the rivers[5] and to the valleys, to [g]the desolate wastes and to the cities that are forsaken, which became a prey and derision to [h]the residue of the heathen that are round about;[6]

5 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Surely [i]in the fire of my jealousy have I spoken [j]against the residue of the heathen, and against all [k]Idumea, which have appointed [l]my land into their possession[7] with[n] the joy of all their heart, with despiteful minds, to cast it out for a prey.

6 Prophesy, therefore, concerning the land of Israel, and say unto the mountains and to the hills, to the rivers and to the valleys, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I have spoken in my jealousy and in my fury, because [o]ye have borne the shame of the heathen.

7 Therefore, thus saith the Lord GOD, [p]I have lifted up mine hand, [q]Surely the heathen that are about you, they shall bear their shame.

8 But ye, O mountains of Israel, [r]ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit will comfort the distressed, and ruin the presumptuous. And they who would engross everything to themselves, and who grudge that any can live beside them, shall be awfully reckoned with at last. But every loss, every trouble, is completely balanced to them who have Jesus Christ, and God in him, for their ALL and IN ALL. Glorious and renowned is his person, office, and work; rich and stable the relations made with him, and with us in him; and complete the safety, and unbounded and innumerable the blessings, of his kingdom.

CHAPTER XXXV. REFLECTIONS.—God's ministers must declare nothing but evil against the implacable enemies of Christ and his people. The quarrels of parents often descend to their children; and national antipathies are deeply rooted. Therefore parents should carefully avoid giving a bad example to their children, as it may insnare and ruin them, though themselves should repent. Nothing is more cruel than to insult and oppress the distressed. Even they who suffer for their sin here, ought not to be trampled on, but pitied. And it shows great baseness if our own advantage thereby render us glad at the losses and troubles of others. When God's church is in trouble, the constancy and fidelity of her friends, and the malice and pride of her enemies, are singularly manifested. God is highly provoked when his enemies lay claim to the peculiar property of his offending favourites. And they who jest at or help forward their misery may expect similar calamities. Neither men's words nor their deeds are forgotten by God in measuring out his judgments. And implacable malice must be punished with irreparable ruin.

CHAPTER XXXVI. Ver. 2, 3, 6. When the Chaldeans, and afterwards the Romans, desolated Judea, the Edomites, and other neighbouring heathens that survived the common calamities, made a scorn and by-word of the Jews, and assisted to ruin them, in hopes of getting their country. 25, 26, 29. By my Word and Spirit I will apply to your souls the blood of Christ for removing the guilt and filth of your iniquities, and will reform you from your idolatry and other wickedness; I will renew your hearts, subdue your indwelling lusts, implant in you new principles of holiness, and by my Spirit dwelling and acting in you will daily persuade and enable you to render a cordial and universal obedience to all my commandments.

Ver. 2. The ancient high-places—where the idolatrous rites of the heathen were celebrated: the recovery of which the idolatrous Idumeans, ver. 5, looked upon as a peculiar favour from their gods, and cause of glorying over the Jews. C.

Ver. 25. Then will I sprinkle, &c. Does the word 'then' apply to the time of gathering, or comes it after they are brought into their own land? Some think the Jews will be restored to their own land while still rejecting Jesus as Messiah, and will there be nationally converted to faith in him. Others think they will first be converted and then restored. But may it not be inferred from Ezek. 20. 34–43, that they will be gathered from the heathen while still in unbelief; dealt with in a transition state, as were their fathers in the wilderness, by mercies and judgments, till 'the rebels be purged' from among them; and that 'they (the unbelievers) shall not enter into the land of Israel;' but they being purged out, 'all the remaining house of Israel shall serve' the LORD, and he 'will accept them.' That is, being converted to the gospel, they are made accepted in Jesus the Beloved, Ep. 1. 6. C.

Ver. 37. It is carefully to be noted that the promise here made is to 'the house (the whole house) of Israel.' But the restoration under Zerubbabel was merely of Judah and Benjamin, and of a very few of the ten tribes. The promise, therefore, though it began to be fulfilled before our Lord appeared in the flesh, still to my people of Israel; for they are [s]at hand to come.[8]

9 For, behold, I am for you, [t]and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown.

10 And [u]I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded:[9]

11 And [v]I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit; and [w]I will settle you after your old estates, and will[y] do better unto you than at your beginnings; and [z]ye shall know that I am the LORD.

12 Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and [a]they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou [b]shalt no more henceforth bereave them of men.

13 Thus saith the Lord GOD, Because they say unto you, Thou land [c]devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations;[2]

14 Therefore thou shalt devour men [d]no more, neither bereave[3] thy nations any more, saith the Lord GOD.

15 Neither will I cause men [e]to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the [f]reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall[4] any more, saith the Lord GOD.

16 ¶ Moreover, [h]the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

17 Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, [i]they defiled it by their own way, and by their doings: their way was before me as the [j]uncleanness of a removed woman.

18 Wherefore [k]I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed upon the land, and for their idols[5] wherewith they had polluted it:

19 And I [l]scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries: according[m] to their way, and according to their doings, I judged them.

20 And when they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, they [o]profaned my holy name,[6] when they said to them, [p]These are the people of the LORD, and are gone forth out of his land.

21 But [q]I had pity for mine holy name,[7] which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went.

22 Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [r]I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went.

23 And I will sanctify[8] my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and [s]the heathen shall know that I am the LORD, saith the Lord GOD, when I shall be [t]sanctified in you before their[9] eyes.

24 For[a] I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land.

25 Then will [v]I sprinkle [w]clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: [x]from all your filthiness, and from [z]all your idols, will I cleanse you.

26 A [a]new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh.

27 And [b]I will put my spirit within you, [c]and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

28 And[d] ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; [e]and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

29 I [g]will also save you from all your uncleannesses; [h]and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you.

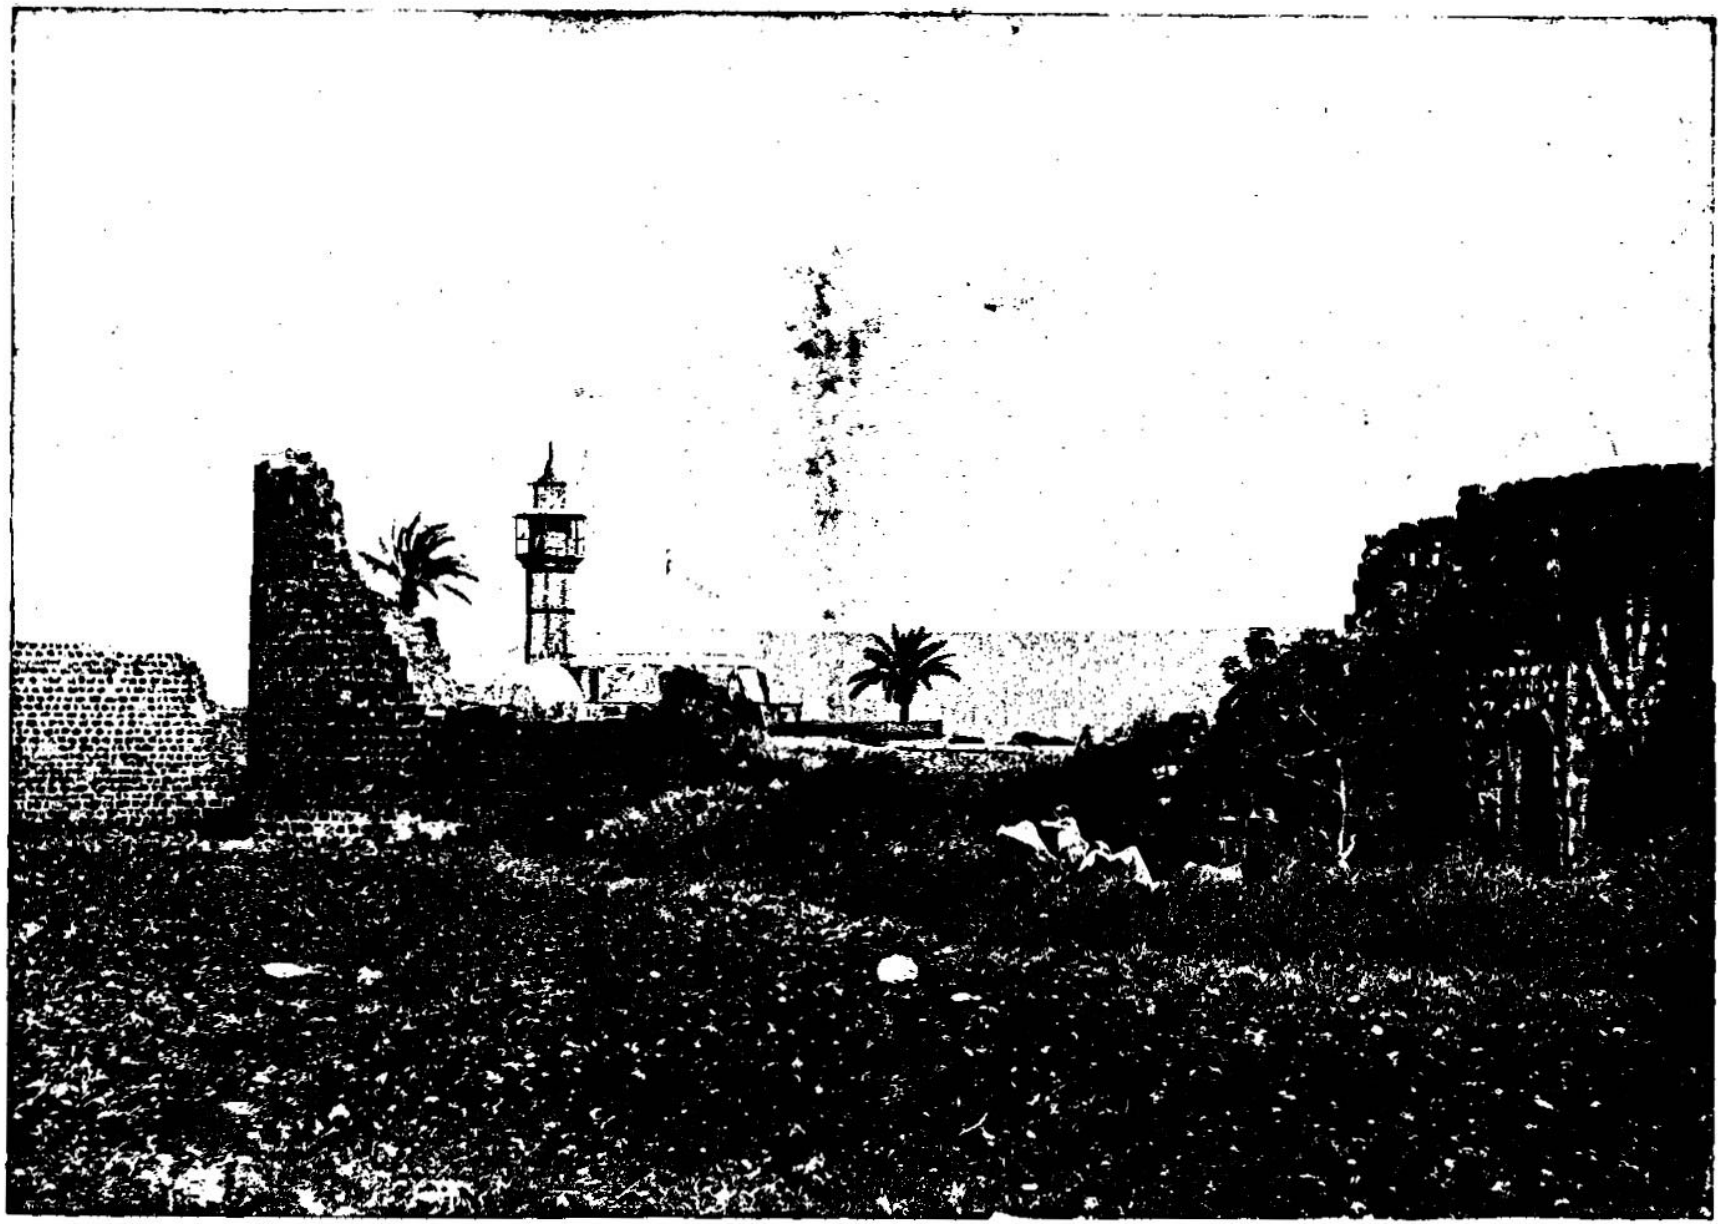
30 And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen.

31 Then[i] shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall [j]loathe yourselves in your own sight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations.

32 Not[k] for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord GOD, be it known unto you: [l]be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel.[1]

33 Thus saith the Lord GOD, In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities, [n]I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded.

34 And[o] the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by.



35 And[p] they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like [q]the garden of Eden; and the waste, and desolate, and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited.

continues its progress, and will not have its completion until 'all Israel shall be saved,' Ro. xi. 26. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God takes the most compassionate notice of the deplorable condition of his people; and severe are his resentments of the insults and injuries done to them. But numerous, and infallible in accomplishment, are his promises of grace towards them. What an honour for our earth to be made serviceable to the people of God, and to be improved by them to the ends of his glory! The kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ is a growing kingdom. Though for a time it be diminished, it quickly recovers, and is replenished. When God returns in mercy to his people, and makes them return in duty to him, their grievances are effectually redressed, and their honour retrieved. Marvellously does grace much more abound where sin had abounded; and, even from the wickedness and misery of men, his perfections are more abundantly glorified. What multitudes of rich blessings are, in excellent order, connected together in the new kingdom! And the infinite freedom and riches of God's favours powerfully lead men to repentance, holiness, earnest prayer, and abundant devotion.

CHAPTER XXXVII. Ver. 10. The breath came into them, and they lived. Though it is not necessary, nor perhaps right, to assert with Hutchinson that the Scriptures contain a system of philosophy; yet, most certain it is, that they are found not merely MOSQUE IN TIBERIAS—ON LAKE GALILEE, AROUND WHICH OUR SAVIOR PERFORMED MOST OF HIS MIRACLES. [EZEKIEL, xxxvi: 26, 27.]—"A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them." This prophecy of Ezekiel was fulfilled in the coming of Christ. In Him provision was made for giving new hearts to the people. Ezekiel anticipates in this reference to the new heart the whole ministry of our Lord Jesus Christ. So when Christ appeared He said to Nicodemus: "Ye must be born again." To be in Christ is to be a new creature. We give a picture of the Mosque in Tiberias in the neighborhood where our Savior performed many of His miracles, and uttered many of His wisest teachings.

36 Then[r] the heathen, that are left round about you, shall know that I the LORD build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate: I the LORD have spoken it, and I will do[s] it.

37 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [t]I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of [u]Israel, to do it for them;[2] I will increase them with men like a flock.

38 As the holy flock,[3] as the [v]flock of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts, so [w]shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

1 By the resurrection of dry bones, 11 the dead hope of Israel is revived. 15 By the uniting of two sticks, 18 is showed the incorporation of Israel with Judah. 21 The promises of Christ's kingdom.

THE hand[a] of the LORD was upon me, and carried[b] me out[1] in the Spirit of the LORD, and set me down in the midst of the valley which was full of bones,

2 And caused me to pass by them round about: and, behold, there were very many in the open valley; and, lo, they were very [c]dry.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, can these[d] bones live? And I answered, O [e]Lord GOD, thou knowest.[3]

4 Again he said unto me, [f]Prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, O [g]ye dry bones, hear the word of the LORD.[4]

5 Thus saith the Lord GOD unto these bones, Behold, [h]I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live:

6 And I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and [i]ye shall know that I am the LORD.

7 So[k] I prophesied as I was commanded:[5] and as I prophesied [l]there was a noise, and, behold, a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone.

8 And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above; but there was no [m]breath in them.

9 Then said he unto me, Prophesy unto the wind,[6] prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Come from the four[e] winds, O breath,[7] and [p]breathe upon these slain, that they may live.

10 So I prophesied as he commanded me, and[q] the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

11 Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the [r]whole house of Israel: behold they say, [s]Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; we are cut off for our parts.

12 Therefore [t]prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, O my people, [u]I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves,[8] and [v]bring you into the land of Israel.

13 And [z]ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, 14 And shall put [y]my Spirit in you, and ye shall live; and I shall place you in your own land: [z]then shall ye know that I the LORD have spoken it, and performed it, saith the LORD.

15 ¶ The word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

16 Moreover, thou son of man, [a]take thee one stick, and write[9] upon it, [b]For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, For [c]Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions:

17 And [d]join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand.

18 And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt [e]thou not show us what thou meanest by these?

19 Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [g]I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them [h]one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

20 And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be [i]in thine hand before their eyes.

21 ¶ And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [j]I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land:

22 And[k] I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and [l]one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all:

23 Neither[m] shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but [n]I will save them out of all their dwelling-places wherein they have sinned, and will [p]cleanse them: [q]so shall they be my people, and I will be their God.

24 And [r]David my servant[1] shall be king over them; and they all shall have one shepherd: [s]they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them.

25 And[t] they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell free from anything contrary to philosophical discovery, but the germ of natural truth is often found in them completely developed, though unobserved for ages by the eyes of theorizing philosophers. Examples of this fact may be found in the vitality and circulation of the blood, which, when adduced as modern discoveries, were clearly seen to have already existed in the writings of Moses and Solomon. And when the intimate connection between breath and life, Ge. 2. 7, is considered, it may not be presumptuous to conclude, without vainly speculating on the nature of life itself, that its sustaining energy is derived from the air, and carried on by the action of breathing, and that philosophy will yet discover what Scripture has already revealed.

[9] This emblematic order alludes to Nu. 17. 2, where Moses wrote upon twelve rods. The laws of Solon were preserved in Athens upon pieces of wood called axones. Poetry was written upon wood planed square or triangularly, each piece movable round in a frame for convenience of reading. Whence, it appears, is derived the word stave, applied to poetry and music. There are still two specimens of this mode of writing remaining in England—the Rieve Pole in the island of Portland, by which the rents still continue to be collected; and the tallies, or billets of wood, by which the accounts of the exchequer are noted, and by burning which, the two houses of parliament were lately destroyed in London.—C.

therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children, for ever; and my servant David shall be their prince [u]for ever.

26 Moreover, [v]I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply[x] them, and [y]will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore.

27 My tabernacle also shall be with them; yea, [z]I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

28 And[a] the heathen shall know that I the LORD do [b]sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

1 The army, 8 and malice of Gog. 14 God's judgment against him.

AND the word[1] of the LORD came unto me, saying,[2]

2 Son of man, [c]set thy face against Gog, the land of [d]Magog, the chief prince[3] of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him,

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [e]I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal:

4 And [f]I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws, and I will bring[4] thee forth, and all thine army, [g]horses and horsemen, all of them clothed with all sorts of armour, even a great company, with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords.

5 Persia,[g] Ethiopia, and Libya,[5] with them; all of them with shield and helmet:

6 Gomer,[h] and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands; and many people with thee.

7 Be[i] thou prepared, and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee,[6] and be thou a guard unto them.

8 ¶ After[j] many days thou shalt be [k]visited: in the latter years thou [l]shalt come into [m]the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste:[7] but it is [n]brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely [o]all of them.

9 Thou[q] shalt ascend and come like a storm; thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou and all thy [r]bands, and many people with thee.

10 Thus saith the Lord GOD, It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall [s]things come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought:[8]

11 And thou shalt say, [t]I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that [u]are at rest, that dwell safely,[9] all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates,

12 To take a spoil, and to take a [1]prey; [v]to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst[2] of the land.

13 Sheba,[s] and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions[3] thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?

14 ¶ Therefore, son of man, prophesy and say unto Gog, Thus saith the Lord GOD, In that day when my people of Israel [w]dwelleth safely, [x]shalt thou not know it?

15 And[a] thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts,[4] thou, and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army:

16 And thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, [b]as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring [5]thee against my land, [c]that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes.

17 Thus saith the Lord GOD, Art thou he of whom [d]I have spoken in old time by my ser-p Ps. 2. 1–3. Re. 20. 8. Gog and Magog.—The dogmatic idea of the prophecy is very simple. The community of God, renewed by his grace, will victoriously resist all the assaults of the world. This idea the prophet has here clothed with flesh and blood: he brings it before us in a grand finished picture, in which he unites what is really in the course of time in a long series of successive events. The application to a single historical event are all of the latest type and false, but, so far as the latest governing principle is concerned, have in these several events been in three successive manifestations the most glorious. Of the first, that here is given to God in a single event, belongs to the form.—Hengstenberg.—E.

The Christian, however, is mainly concerned with considering the breath as an emblem of the Holy Spirit, and his indwelling as necessary to the life of the soul as the breathing of the air is to the life of the body. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In what a forlorn and apparently hopeless state are the vessels of mercy by nature, and sometimes the visible church of Christ! Dead, withered, and buried in graves of misery and wickedness! But God himself knows how to revive and quicken them by his word, Spirit, and providence, though none beside can effect it. Now can any obstructions except man withstand his infinite power and grace. Happy is the church when cordially united under Christ, effectually reformed from heathen and popish idolatry, and every temptation thereto, when fixed in the new kingdom, and enjoying therein the most blessed peace, safety, familiarity, and fellowship with God and his saints. In the worst of cases let me supplicate his Spirit, and depend on his promises, in hopes of that everlasting blessedness in which there shall be no death, no discord, no wars, no want, no distance from God.

CHAPTER XXXVIII. Ver. 2. 'Gog, the land of Magog, the prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal.' Sept.—Magog was the son of Japheth, Ge. 10. 2. But who is Gog? Cambyses[1] of Persia, according to Calmet.—The original Americans. Mede.—The Scythians, including the Russians. Houbigant.—Antiochus Epiphanes. Martin and Clarke.—The Roman Antichrist. Cocceius.—The Turk, the Eastern Antichrist. Cill.—The Turks and northern nations. Vitringa. The Turks and Tartars. Sutcliffe.—Now, of these some will be totally set aside by the internal evidence of the prophecy. Gog cannot be any one that has been, for his time is not yet. See ver. 10, 16, and ch. 39. 25, 26. Then borrowing for one prophecy the light derived from another, it appears from Re. 20. 8 that 'Gog and Magog' represent the devil-deceived 'nations which are in the four quarters of the earth,' and who, according to ver. 16, and ch. 39. 7, 21, 23, 28, are 'the heathen,' 'the enemies,' ch. 39. 27, of the Jews restored to their high estate, and enjoying all the blessings of religious institutions, with agricultural and commercial prosperity and peace, ch. 38. 11–13. 'Gog and Magog' both signify 'covered, concealed,' which, read in the light of 2 Th. 2. 3, 6, 8, where 'that man of sin,' 'that wicked,' is described as yet to be 'revealed'—to be uncovered, as it were, and deprived for ever of that mask of hypocrisy, that assumption of Christianity, behind which he concealed his idolatry—his heathenism—warrants the conclusion, that Gog will be some great personal leader yet to arise, that will head the antichristian system that has been working under cover of Christianity since the days of the apostles, 2 Th. 2. 7; 1 Jn. 2. 18, 22, 26, and who will contrive politically to unite under him the professed heathenism of the nations, against the great centre of missionary apostolical Christianity which the Jews will then constitute, Is. 66. 19. Nor is it at all improbable that, as our Lord's denunciations of the hypocrisy and covetousness of the scribes and Pharisees were the immediate incentives to his crucifixion, a similar zeal, in the converted Jews, against the hypocrisy and covetousness of professing Christians, will be equally the cause of the wrath of the antichristian Gog—that their zeal against open idolatry will prepare the heathen to combine with spurious Christianity as against a common enemy; while their riches, and apparently defenceless situation, ver. 11, will present an irresistible bait to the ravenous cupidity of both. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The most distant events, and the most secret designs of all who live are all naked and open before God; yet, while there are so many covetous hearts, so many evil thoughts in the world, there will never be wanting multitudes to assemble against Christ's church. Yea, however heartily Turks, Persians, Arabs, and Africans have long hated one another, they will be ready enough to combine against the newly-restored Israel of God. The blessed accomplishment of God's promise sets the devil and his votaries in a rage. But he who touches God's people touches the apple of his eye. His power and promises are sufficient security for their protection and deliverance. He who has, in a harmonious form, foretold the distress, will glorify the whole system of his perfections in the deliverance. They who have been a terror to others shall be made a terror to themselves; and his enemies shall at last become their own executioners.

TOMB OF CAIUS CESTIUS—THE ROMAN PRÆTOR, WHO DIED THIRTY YEARS BEFORE THE BIRTH OF CHRIST. [Ezekiel, xxxvii:28.]—"And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctury shall be in the midst of them for evermore." Caius Cestius was a Roman prætor and tribune of the people, who died about 30 B. C., and Agrippa, his executor, erected this tomb to his memory, with two colossal statues, which are not now in existence. It is a striking fulfillment of prophecy to remember that in this land, which was heathen at the time Ezekiel wrote, is now established the most expensive and sublime sanctuary that has ever been erected by the faith of man. Saint Peter's might well stand for the sanctuary which God promised by his prophet to establish in the midst of his people for evermore.

vants[6] the prophets of Israel, which prophesied in those days many years that I would bring thee against them?

18 And it shall come to pass at the same time, when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord GOD, that [t]my fury shall come up in my face.

19 For in my [u]jealousy and in the fire of my wrath, have I spoken, Surely in that day there shall be a great [v]shaking in the land of Israel;

20 So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places[7] shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground.

21 And[l] I will call for a sword against him throughout all [w]my mountains, saith the Lord GOD: [x]every man's sword shall be against his brother.[8]

22 And[l] I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire and brimstone.

23 Thus will I [y]magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

1 God's judgment upon Gog. 8 Israel's victory. 11 Gog's burial in Hamon-gog. 17 The feast of the fowls. 23 Israel, having been plagued for their sins, shall be gathered again with eternal favour.

THEREFORE, thou son of man, prophesy against [a]Gog, and say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [b]I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal:

2 And [c]I will turn thee back, and leave but the sixth part[1] of thee,[2] and[3] will cause thee to come up[4] from [5]the north parts,[6] and will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel:

3 And I will smite thy bow out of thy left hand,[7] and will cause thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand.

4 Thou[d] shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy bands, and the people that is with thee: I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort,[8] and to the beasts of the field, to be devoured.[9]

5 Thou shalt fall upon the open field;[1] for I have spoken it, saith the Lord GOD.

6 And I will send [e]a fire on Magog, and among them that dwell carelessly[2] in the [f]isles;[3] and they shall know that I am the LORD.

7 So[h] will I make my holy name known in the midst of my people Israel; [i]and I will not let them pollute my holy name any more; and the heathen shall know that I am the LORD, the Holy One in Israel.

8 ¶ Behold, [j]it is come, and it is done, saith the Lord GOD; this is [k]the day [l]whereof I have spoken.

9 And they that dwell in the cities of Israel shall [m]go forth, and shall [n]set on fire and burn the weapons, both the shields and the bucklers, the bows and the arrows, and the [4]hand-staves and the spears, and they shall burn them with fire[5] seven years:[6]

10 So that they shall take no wood out of the field, neither cut down any out of the forests; for they shall burn the weapons with fire:[7] and [p]they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord GOD.

11 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Israel,[8] the valley of the passengers on the east[9] of [q]the sea; and it shall stop the noses[1] of the passengers:[2] and there shall they bury Gog, and all his multitude; and they shall call it the valley of Hamon-gog.[3]

12 And seven months shall the house of Israel be burying of them, that they may [r]cleanse the land.

13 Yea, all the people of the land shall bury them; and it shall be to them a renown,[4] the day that I shall be glorified, saith the Lord GOD.

14 And they shall [s]sever out men of continual employment,[5] passing through the land to bury with the passengers those that remain upon the face of the earth, to cleanse it: after the end of seven months shall they search.

15 And the passengers that pass through the land, when any seeth a man's bone, then shall he set[6] up a sign by it, till the buriers have buried it in the valley of Hamon-gog.[7]

16 And also the name of the city[8] shall be Hamonah.[9] Thus shall they cleanse the land.

17 ¶ And, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord GOD, [t]Speak unto every feathered [1]fowl, and to every beast of the field, [u]Assemble yourselves, and come, gather yourselves on every

- The language is figurative. It is intended to show the greatness of the overthrow of the enemies of God's people, the enormous amount of arms and armour they would leave on the battle-field, and the great length of time it would require to consume the 3½ — seven years. A symbolical figure for a long period.—P.

CHAPTER XXXIX. Ver. 9. The destruction of Gog and his army will take place 1: by international quarrels; 2: by pestilence; 3: by storms, both natural and miraculous, ch. 38. 21, 22. Modern times have furnished an example of the almost complete annihilation of the noblest army the world ever saw, within even a briefer space than that assigned for the destruction of Gog and his host. The retreat of Napoleon from Moscow should furnish a lesson to all ambitious invaders, and teach the nations to tremble at that great but often forgotten truth—'The Lord God omnipotent reigneth.' C.

Ver. 17. This most terrible, because most extensive, of all the judgments of God inflicted since the great flood, is called 'a sacrifice,' which the Most High offers to his justice, and in assertion of his mercy—an offering to justice, because Gog was an unprovoked invader, a covetous robber—an assertion of mercy wrought for the deliverance of suffering and oppressed humanity. See ch. 38. 10–13. C.

REFLECTIONS.—No weapon formed against Zion can prosper. The most mighty armies are easily crushed by an angry God, and must be ruined, rather than his word should fail. They who expect wealth with the wicked must take their punishment with them; and they who invade other men's rights justly lose their own. They who know God's name will never dare to profane it. And his enemies must know at last what a great God and Saviour he is to all people, and what destruction comes to the wicked. No injury done to us should hinder our humanity, even to the dead. And vile corpses ought to render sin, the cause of death, abominable. General mercies should animate to general reformation: and every one ought to be hearty and persevering in them. After all our conquests on earth, there is always great need of purification: and to advance God's glory is Israel's great reside to my sacrifice[z] that I do sacrifice for you, even a great sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel, that ye may eat flesh, and drink blood.

18 Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth, of rams,[v] of lambs, and of goats,[3] of bullocks, all of them fatlings of Bashan.

19 And ye shall eat fat till ye be full, and drink blood till ye be drunken,[4] of my sacrifice which I have sacrificed for you.

20 Thus ye shall be [z]filled at my table with horses and chariots,[5] with mighty men, and with all men of war,[6] saith the Lord GOD.

21 ¶ And[y] I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment, that I have executed, and my hand that I have [a]laid upon them.

22 So the house of Israel shall [c]know that I am the LORD their God from that day and forward.

23 And[b] the heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquity: because they trespassed against me, therefore [c]hid I my face from them, and gave them into the [d]hand of their enemies; so fell they all by the sword.[7]

24 According[e] to their uncleanness, and according to their transgressions, have I done unto them, and hid my face from them.

25 ¶ Therefore, thus saith the Lord GOD, Now[g] will I bring again[8] the captivity of Jacob, and have [h]mercy upon the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous for my holy name;[9]

26 After[i] that they have borne their shame, and all their trespasses, whereby they have trespassed against me, [j]when they dwelt safely in their land, and none made them afraid.

27 When I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies' lands, and [k]am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations;

28 Then[l] shall they know that I am the LORD their God, which caused them[1] to be led into captivity among the heathen: but I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left[m] none of them any more there.

29 Neither[o] will I hide my face any more from them: for I have [p]poured out my Spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord GOD.

* The words of Hävernick, quoted by Principal Fairbairn in his commentary on Ezekiel, are deserving of the attention of every thoughtful reader. They give, as I believe, a key to this most mysterious and remarkable portion of God's Word. We may not be able by it to reveal every latent truth, or solve every mystery; but we shall at least open the sanctuary for closer and more minute inspection. The prophet seems to have had the kingdom and work of the Messiah chiefly before his mind in the whole vision. He saw and described them through the symbols of the temple and its rites. He does not describe things as they actually existed in the temple, or in the Jewish state. It is altogether an ideal pic-

CHAPTER XL.

1 The time, manner, and end of the vision. 6 The description of the east gate, 20 of the north gate, 24 of the south gate, 32 of the east gate, 35 and of the north gate. 39 The eight tables. 44 The chambers. 48 The porch of the house.

IN the [a]five and twentieth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year after that [b]the city was smitten, in the [c]self-same day [d]the hand of the LORD was upon me, and brought me thither.[1]

2 In the visions of God brought he me into the land of Israel, and set me upon [e]a very high mountain,[2] by which[3] was as the [f]frame of a city on the south.

3 And he brought me thither, and, behold, there was [h]a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, with [i]a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed; and he stood [k]in the gate.

4 And the man said unto me, Son of man, [l]behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall show thee; for to the intent that I might show them unto thee art thou brought hither: declare all that thou seest to the house of Israel.

5 And, behold, [m]a wall on the outside of the house round about, and in the man's hand a measuring reed of six cubits long, by the cubit and an [n]hand-breadth; [o]so he measured the breadth of the building one reed, and the height one reed.

6 ¶ Then came he unto [p]the gate which looketh toward the east,[5] and went up the [q]stairs thereof, and measured the [r]threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad, and the other threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad.

7 And every [s]little chamber was one reed long, and one reed broad; and between the little chambers were five cubits, and the threshold of the gate, by the porch of the gate within, was one reed.

8 He measured also the porch of the gate within, one reed.

9 Then measured he the porch of the gate, eight cubits; and the posts[6] thereof, two cubits; and the porch of the gate was inward.

10 And the [t]little chambers of the gate eastward were three on this side, and three on that nown. How humbling it is to nature when because of judgments on sin men become degraded like beasts! But wise are all his dispensations: his judgments on the wicked are according to justice, and an encouragement to the faith and hope of the people. True penitents are willing to bear their shame, and wonder at the mercy mingled with their sufferings. And when we return to God, he will return to us, and lift upon us the light of his countenance. But it is truly delightful when his kindness towards his people silences all the reflections of their enemies against him; and when he eminently bestows upon them his presence and Spirit, and assures them of their everlasting relation to and enjoyment of himself.

CHAPTER XL. Ver. 2, 3. The high mountain may denote the conspicuous firmness and heavenly nature of the gospel church. The man appearing as brass denotes Jesus Christ in his strength, stability, duration, debasement, and glory. His line and reed represent the Scriptures, by which everything in the doctrine, worship, or discipline of his church ought to be measured. His standing in the gate may represent him as the only door and way of our access to God, and to his church above or below. 4. This, and ch. 44. 5, compared with ch. 43. 10–14, containing most solemn charges for both ministers and people to remark and regard everything in the form of the gospel church, directs an awful rebuke to those who, affecting to put asunder what God hath joined, contemn and decry the forms of worship and the government and discipline of the gospel church, as not appointed in the Scriptures, and not much worthy of a Christian's regard.

Ver. 5–49—ch. xli. xlii. xliii. The temple and its furniture, described in this and the three following chapters, represent the church, particularly in the apostolic and millennial state. The measuring of everything by Christ with a line and reed, denotes that everything in it is appointed by Christ in his Word; and nothing ought to be admitted but what is answerable to and founded on that Word. The wall denotes her divine protection and surrounding discipline and government. The courts, at least the outward, may denote her visible state; and the inner court, and especially the sanctuary, may allude to her invisible state of eminent fellowship with God in Christ. The separate building at the west end may represent the state of glory. The large gates, doors, and porches may signify Jesus Christ as the means of our abundant access to God; but the porch of the sanctuary may denote him as a supporter, hiding-place, and house of prayer for his people. The stairs side; they three were of one measure: and the posts had one measure on this side and on that side.

11 And he measured 'the breadth of the entry of the gate, ten cubits; and the length[7] of the gate, thirteen cubits.

12 The space[8] also before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and the space was one cubit on that side; and the little chambers were six cubits on this side, and six cubits on that side.

13 He measured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits,[9] door against door.

14 He made also posts[1] of threescore cubits, even unto the post of the [u]court round about the gate.

15 And from the face of the gate of the entrance, unto the face of the porch of the inner gate, were fifty cubits.[2]

16 And there were narrow[3] windows to the little chambers, and to their posts within the gate round about, and likewise to the arches:[4] and windows were round about inward:[5] and upon[v] each post were [x]palm-trees.

17 Then brought he me into [y]the outward court, and, lo, there were chambers,[6] and a pavement made for the court round about: [z]thirty chambers were upon [a]the pavement.

18 And the pavement by the side of the gates, over against[7] the length of the gates, was the lower pavement.

19 Then he measured the breadth, from the forefront of the lower gate [b]unto the forefront of the inner court without,[8] an hundred cubits eastward and northward.

20 ¶ And[c] the gate of the outward court, that looked[9] toward the north, he measured the length thereof, and the breadth thereof.

21 And the [d]little chambers thereof were three on this side, and three on that side; and the posts thereof, and the arches[1] thereof, were after the measure of the first gate: the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

22 And [e]their windows, and their arches, and their palm-trees, were after the measure of the gate that looketh toward the east; and [g]they went up unto it by seven steps; and the arches thereof were before them.[2]

23 And the gate of the inner court was over against the gate toward the north, and toward the east; and he [h]measured from gate to gate an hundred cubits.

24 ¶ After[i] that he brought me toward the south, and, behold, a gate toward the south: and he measured the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, according to these measures.

25 And there were [k]windows in it, and in the arches thereof round about, like those windows: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

26 And there were [l]seven steps to go up to it, and the arches thereof were before them: and it had [t]palm-trees, one on this side, and another on that side, upon the posts thereof.

27 ¶ And there was a gate in the inner court toward the south: and [n]he measured from gate to gate toward the south an hundred cubits.

28 And[o] he brought me to the inner court by the south gate: and he measured the south gate according to these measures;

29 And the [p]little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, according to these measures: and there were [q]windows in it, and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

30 And the [r]arches round about were five and twenty cubits long,[3] and five [4]cubits [5]broad.

31 And the arches thereof were toward[6] the outer court; and [s]palm-trees were upon the posts thereof: and the going up to it had [t]eight steps.

32 ¶ And[u] he brought me into the inner court toward the east; and he measured the gate according to these measures.

33 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, were according to these measures, and there were windows therein and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

34 And the arches thereof were toward the outward court; and palm-trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side and on that side: and the going up to it had [v]eight steps.

35 ¶ And[x] he brought me to the north gate, and measured it according to these measures;

36 The little chambers thereof, the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, and the windows to it round about: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

Instead of 'their arches,' Gesenius reads, 'suitable to them' corresponded with them. And if these stairs were constructed not with the narrow steps adopted in a Jewish building, but with the broad and sloping steps of an Italian palace, there are then, instead of having the steps within their spans, may have formed a kind of splendid substitute for the 7 grand flights of the ascent. at the different thresholds may mark out our deliberate and gradual entrance into the visible and invisible church, and to fellowship with God; and our gradual increase in gifts and grace. The foundations and pavements represent Jesus Christ and his inspired oracles as the foundation of the church, of every true member, of all saving grace, and of every good work in it. The posts and pillars denote fundamental truths, gospel promises, faithful ministers, and zealous saints. Palm-trees alternately mingled with cherubims in the engravings, denote saints attended and assisted by angels and ministers. Windows represent ministers and ordinances, by which we obtain the light and air of life. The altar of burnt-offering and sacrifices are to be referred to Christ in his person and righteousness. The altar of incense represents him in his all-procuring intercession. The chamber for washing the sacrifices may denote baptism; in which saints, those spiritual oblations, are washed in the blood and Spirit of the Lamb. The eight tables of hewn stone, with the knives on them, may signify the divinely-appointed, permanent, and frequently dispensed ordinance of the Lord's supper; in which Christ crucified, and our sins as the cause of his death, are affectingly presented to our view. The chambers, built on the inside of the wall of the court and outside of the wall of the temple, may denote particular churches, worshipping assemblies,

1 Hitherto the prophet has been describing the courts which surrounded the temple or shrine, with their gates, guard-rooms, store-chambers, and chambers for the attendant priests and Levites. Here he directs attention to the shrine itself. Sometimes the word temple is employed to denote the whole structure, including the courts: at other times it is restricted to the shrine or temple-proper. —P.

46 And the chamber whose prospect is toward the north is for the priests, the [i]keepers of the charge of the altar: these are the sons of Zadok,[5] among the sons of Levi, [j]which come near to the LORD to minister unto him.

47 So [k]he measured the court, an hundred cubits long, and an hundred cubits broad, four square, and the altar that was before the house.

48 ¶ And he brought me to the [l]porch[6] of the house, and measured each post of the porch, five cubits on this side, and five cubits on that side: and the breadth of the gate was three cubits on this side, and three cubits on that side.

and instituted ordinances, or evangelical offices, in which Christ's people are lodged, protected, taught, and comforted by him. The enlarging of some of these chambers, according to the height of their stories, by their jutting into the principal wall, imports that the more holy, heavenly, and dependent on God churches and Christians are, the more extensive is their gospel liberty. But the narrowing the priests' chambers in the outward court towards the north as they ascended, may denote, that the more eminent ministers are, they are the more exposed to persecution. The void places between and before the chambers may represent the abundant access there is to Christian churches and ordinances; and the light, liberty, and wholesome air of spiritual influence there enjoyed; and that our whole life ought to be an improvement of ordinances past, and preparation for what are in view. The equal size of the chambers, and the equality of the things and measures on different sides, gates, &c., may represent the equal privileges, power, and authority of churches and ministers, the identity of Christ, his Word, and ordinances, and the similarity of his people in every part of the world. The five hundred reeds of measure, for a vacant space on every side of the court, may denote the extent of the gospel church, and the remarkable distinction which ought to be kept up between her and the world. The whole limit thereof round about being most holy, imports that all her ordinances are holy and spiritual, not ceremonial and carnal; and that holiness ought to be the shining quality of every officer and member. The people's never returning by the gate at which they entered the court, but going out by that directly opposite, and with the prince in the midst of them, ch. 46. 9, 10, denotes that in fellowship with Christ we must go forward, from strength to strength, in all our attendance on ordinances, and never turn our back on God or his institutions. The appropriation of the east gate to the prince, ch. 44. 1–3; 46. 1–3, 8, may denote that Jesus alone approached to God directly and in the way of merit; and that it is only through him that we have access with boldness unto God. The singers and Levites may represent Christians as praising God and labouring in his service; and priests may denote ministers, who present Christ, the atoning sacrifice, to men, and attend on God's service; and saints, who by faith present him, themselves, and their services in him, to God.

Ver. 2, &c. This is confessedly one of the most obscure and difficult portions of the prophetical writings. The Jews forbade it to be read by any one under thirty years of age: and believe that many parts of it cannot be understood till Elias 'whom they expect, comes to explain them, and the Messiah 'for whom, after Elias, they look' shall come to carry the various regulations of the prophet into effect. Many Christian expositors have altogether refrained from comment. But as 'all Scripture is profitable,' it is right, in the spirit of humility and prayer, to attempt its elucidation. The chief sources of elucidation are two: (1) Particular internal statements affording a key to the rest. (2) Comparison with New Testament prophecies. Of the first kind is the appearance of 'the man,' ch. 43. 6, 7, who is evidently the same as in ch. 40. 3, 4, and who declares the house to be 'the place of his throne,' 'where he would dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever,' and to refer to a period when 'his holy name the house of Israel should no more defile.' This enthroned man (comp. ch. 1. 26; 2. 4), this immortal king, can be no other than Messiah himself, and this house an architectural emblem of his church, which is 'God's building,' who, as 'lively stones,' are reared into 'a spiritual house,' 'built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth up an holy temple to the Lord,' Eze. 48. 35; 1 Co. 3. 9; Ep. 2. 21; 1 Pe. 2. 5. The second source of elucidation leads to the comparison of ch. 43. 7; 47. 1, 7, 12 with Re. 22. 1–3; also ch. 43. 2, 4 with Re. 21. 23, and ch. 48. 30–35 with Re. 21. 12: which, though but a part of the evident points of comparison, seem to identify the two visions beyond question. See Is. 2. 2; Zec. 6. 12, 13; He. 12. 22; Re. 3. 12. C.

Ver. 10. The entrance to the outward court, ver. 17, seems to have been through a porch extending inward, ver. 9, with doors at each end: and on the right and left hand of this porch or passage were three lodges of a reed square each, for the use of the porters or guards, with a space of five cubits between them. C.

Ver. 11. The breadth of the entry—not the width of the entrance, but the thickness of the wall, see ver. 5. The length of the gate—the width of the entrance—thirteen cubits; probably in allusion to the thirteen tribes—the real number, Levi being included. C.

Ver. 12. The space before the little chambers—not before the three chambers inward, but before the two in front. The Hebrew word translated space, signifies also a border, and is, not improbably, a projecting cornice. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Ministers have constant need to be taught by Christ, and carefully to attend to, believe, and practise themselves what they declare to others. Everything which they speak or act should be carefully compared with the measuring line and reed of God's Word: and scripture should be compared with scripture in order to understand it. Yea, and much earnest prayer and humility is requisite in searching and explaining the oracles of God. But how similar in substance is all the true worship of God in the world; in the most mysterious ceremonies of his institution, if properly considered, we behold the glory of the Redeemer, the method of his salvation, the graces of his Spirit, and the eternal blessings of his kingdom.

CHAPTER XLI. REFLECTIONS.—If I diligently improve the instructions given me in the Lord's courts on earth, I shall quickly be admitted into the temple eternal in the heavens. If I diligently attend to and profit by the plain parts of religion, I shall quickly be brought into further acquaintance with the mysteries of the kingdom. And the higher I build for glory, the more shall my heart be enlarged in faith, love, and heaven-mindedness. Let my stature, then, under all cubits, and the breadth [d]twenty cubits, before the temple; and he said unto me, This is the most holy place.

5 After he measured the [e]wall of the house six cubits; and the breadth of every [g]side-chamber four cubits, round about the house on every side.

6 And the side-chambers[8] were three, one over another,[9] and thirty in order;[1] and they entered[h] into the wall which was of the house for the side-chambers round about, that they might have hold,[2] but they had not hold in the wall[3] of the house.

7 And [4]there was an enlarging and a winding[5] about still upward to the side-chambers; for the winding about of the house went still upward round about the house: therefore the breadth of the house was still upward, and so [i]increased[6] from the lowest chamber to the highest by the midst.

8 I saw also the height of the house round about: the [j]foundations of the side-chambers were a [k]full reed of six great cubits.[7]

9 The thickness of the wall, which was for the side-chamber[8] without, was five cubits;[9] and that which was left was the place of the side-chambers that were within.

10 And between the [l]chambers[2] was the wideness of twenty cubits round about the house on every side.

11 And the doors of the side-chambers were toward[l] the place that was left, [m]one door toward the north, and another door toward the south: and the breadth of the place that was left was five cubits round about.

12 Now the building that was before the separate[e] place, at the end toward the west, was seventy cubits broad; and the wall of the building was five cubits thick round about, and the length thereof ninety cubits.

13 So he measured the house, an hundred cubits long;[3] and the separate place, and the building, with the walls thereof, an hundred cubits long;

14 Also the breadth of the face of the house, and of the separate place[4] toward the east, an hundred cubits.

15 And he measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it, and the galleries[5] thereof on the one side, and on the other side, an hundred cubits,[6]

my pressures, be as the palm-tree, ever fat and flourishing. And since I serve with and am ministered to by angels and ministers, let my conversation be as becometh the gospel of Christ.

CHAPTER XLII. REFLECTIONS.—Let me bless the Lord for his numerous but simple gospel ordinances, and the extensive enlargement of them; but especially for the many and large mansions in the Father's house above. Great is the privilege of converse with fellow-Christians, and of opportunity to attend on the Lord without distraction. A great difference ought to be put between common and sacred things. And alas! an impassable wall of separation excludes impenitent sinners from the blessings and benefits of Christ's church and kingdom, and will exclude them for ever from his presence in glory.

CHAPTER XLIII. Ver. 7–9. Their whoredom denotes their idolatry. The carcasses of their kings, or Molech, denote their idols infinitely loathsome and detestable to God. Their thresholds and posts, erected in opposition to God's, are their temples, altars, and inventions in worship, which they set up in opposition to him.

REFLECTIONS.—The different visits which God makes to his people are much alike, and serve to confirm one another; and it is but for a small moment he withdraws, when he returns in kindness. His glory manifested in his church is her principal ornament, furniture, and source of felicity. But it is through Jesus Christ, as with us, that we can have communion with him, or hear his voice with comfort. And if his goodness lead us not to repentance, nothing will. Yea, his pardon of sins renders them peculiarly loathsome and detestable. But, alas! how often the greatest abominations are found placed by men in God's own temple, his church, his worship, and their heart! No wonder that he is highly provoked herewith. But such as improve his goodness, received to his glory, and to their own self-loathing and debasement, shall experience it more and more.—The whole of our salvation is against the [c]separate place, and which was before the building toward the north.

2 Before the length of an hundred cubits was the north door, and the breadth was [d]fifty cubits.

3 Over against the twenty cubits which were for the inner court, and over against the pavement which was for the outer court, was [e]gallery against gallery in three stories.

4 And before the chambers[3] was [f]a walk of ten cubits breadth inward, [h]a way of one cubit: and their doors toward the north.

5 Now, the upper chambers were shorter:[4] for the galleries were [i]higher than these,[5] than the lower, and than the middlemost of the building.[6]

6 For they were in three stories, but had not pillars as the pillars of the courts: therefore the building was straitened [j]more than the lowest and the middlemost from the ground.

7 And the [k]wall that was without over against the chambers, toward the outer court, on the forepart of the chambers, the length thereof was fifty cubits.

8 For the length of the chambers that were in the outer court was fifty cubits: and, lo, before the temple were an hundred cubits.

9 And from under[7] these chambers was the entry[8] on the east side, as one goeth[9] into them from the outer court.

10 The chambers were in the thickness[1] of the wall of the court toward the east, over against the separate place, and over against the building.

11 And the [l]way before them was like the appearance of the chambers which were toward the north, as long as they, and as broad as they; and all their goings out were both according to their fashions, and according to their doors.

12 And according to the doors of the chambers that were toward the south was a door in the head of the way, even the way directly before the wall toward the east, as one entereth into them.

13 ¶ Then said he unto me, The north chambers and the south chambers, which are before the separate place, they be holy chambers, where the priests that [m]approach unto the LORD shall [o]eat the most holy things: there shall they lay[p] the most holy things, and the [q]meat-offering, and the [r]sin-offering, and the [s]trespass-offering; for the place is holy.

14 When the priests enter therein, then [t]shall they not go out of the holy place into the outer court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister; for they are holy; and shall put on [u]other garments, and shall approach to those things which are for the people.

15 ¶ Now, when he had made an end of [v]measuring the inner house, he brought me forth toward the gate whose prospect is toward the east, and measured it round about.

16 He measured the east side[2] with the [w]measuring reed, [y]five hundred reeds,[8] with the measuring reed round about.

17 He measured the north side five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

18 He measured the south side five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

19 He turned about to the west side, and measured five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

20 He measured it by the [z]four sides: it had a [a]wall round about, five hundred reeds long, and five hundred broad, to make a [b]separation between the sanctuary and the profane place.

CHAPTER XLIII.

1 The returning of the glory of God into the temple. 7 The sin of Israel hindered God's presence. 10 The prophet exhorteth them to repentance, and observation of the law of the house. 13 The measures, 18 and the ordinances of the altar.

AFTERWARD he[a] brought me to the gate, even the [b]gate that looketh toward the east:

2 And, behold, [c]the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east, and [d]his voice was like a noise of many waters: and [e]the earth shined with his [f]glory.[2]

3 And it was [g]according to the appearance of the vision which I saw, even according to the vision that I saw when I came to destroy the city;[3] and the visions were like the vision that I [h]saw by the river Chebar: and I fell upon my face.

4 And the glory of the LORD came into the house, [i]by the way of the gate whose prospect is toward the east.

5 So[j] the spirit took me up, and brought me [k]into the inner court; and, behold, [l]the glory of the LORD filled the house.

6 And I heard him [m]speaking unto me out of the house; and the man [o]stood by me.

7 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, [p]the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will [q]dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever, and my holy name, shall the house of Israel [r]no more defile,

[3] Does this mean, as Greenfield supposes, that there were two ranges of chambers, with a passage of 20 cubits between them? or does it mean that there was a walk of 10 cubits railed off from the court, with a rising step of a cubit breadth running along the whole front? It is certain there could not be two opposite ranges of chambers, opening into a common passage, as all their doors were toward the north.—C.

[4] According to Greenfield the upper chambers had balconies or galleries in front, which were not supported by pillars, but rested on the wall, which was contracted at the second story, and again at the third, and so narrowed the lower chambers. But if this be the meaning, the chambers must have been reached in covered with such great stones as are often seen in ancient eastern buildings; for upon no other principle of safety could the wall have been contracted inward, so as to leave a rest for the gallery on the outside, unless the wall was contracted equally from both sides, and each separate chamber formed a section of a cone.—C.

* Estimating the reed at 10½ feet, will give a square of nearly an English mile on each side; not only surpassing Solomon's (see chap. 41. 15), but nearly equal to the whole city of Jerusalem, which, at the greatest, never exceeded 4½ miles in circumference (Josephus Wars, b. vi. c. 6). A magnitude which shows that the prophet does not describe Solomon's temple, nor any of its restorations, nor any temple ever to be literally built; but under architectural emblems, a spiritual temple which will embrace, not merely Mount Zion, the visible church, but Jerusalem, the potential kingdom.—C.

[f] The Jews admit that five things that were in Solomon's temple were wanting in the second temple. These were, the visible glory—the ark and mercy-seat—the holy fire—the Urim and Thummim, and the spirit of prophecy. Therefore, as it is certain from measurement, the prophet does not describe Solomon's temple, so as appears from this admission, neither does he describe that of Zerubbabel and Joshua.—C.
[4] In ch. x and xi. the Shechinah glory is described as having passed out of the old temple by the east gate, and gone away from the city over the Mount of Olives. Here, in vision, the prophet sees it return to a new and glorious temple by the same way, through the same gate. This, its symbolic meaning, may be compared with Christ's promise in Mat. 28. 20, and with the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost.—P.

of God. And no society is a church of his but so far as true holiness prevails in it. None of our performances can be accepted, unless our persons be accepted and sins pardoned through Jesus' blood. Nor can any performance be religious unless it spring from and be seasoned with real grace. There is great need for ministers to be signally prepared for their important work. And dreadful is the profaneness of those who rush at random into the sacred function. Blessed be God that Jesus Christ, by offering his own blood, has consecrated himself as our great High-priest, and as our Altar, upon which we are ordained to offer spiritual sacrifices well-pleasing to God.

CHAPTER XLIV. Ver. 10–31; with ch. 43. 19, 26, 27; 46. 20; 40. 46; 42. 1–14; 45. 4, 5, 19; 48. 10–12. By these priests are represented gospel ministers. Their being the sons of Zadok, the RIGHTEOUS ONE, not Levites that went astray, implies their being true and blameless children of Jesus Christ, and faithful preachers of his atonement as the substance of the gospel. Their eight days' consecration along with the altar imports their entrance on their work with great deliberation, much solemn prayer, noted application of Jesus' blood, and vigorous study of gospel holiness. Their being clothed with linen, not with wool, or anything that causeth sweat, imports their being arrayed neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredom, nor by the carcasses[4] of their kings in their high places.

8 In their [a]setting of their threshold[5] by my thresholds, and their post by my posts, and the wall between me and them;[6] they have even defiled my holy name by their abominations that they have committed: wherefore [b]I have consumed them in mine anger.

9 Now[c] let them put away their whoredom, and the carcasses of their kings, far from me, and [d]I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.

10 ¶ Thou son of man, [e]show the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities; and let them measure the [f]pattern.[8]

11 And [g]if they be ashamed of all that they have done, [h]show them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof: and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them.

12 This is the law of the house; [i]Upon the top of the mountain, the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house.[1]

13 ¶ And these are the measures of the altar[a] after the cubits: the [b]cubit is a cubit and an hand-breadth; even the bottom[2] shall be a cubit, and the breadth a cubit, and the border thereof by the edge[3] thereof round about shall be a span: and this shall be the higher place of the altar.

14 And [c]from the bottom upon the ground even to the lower settle[4] shall be two cubits, and the breadth one cubit; and from the lesser settle even to the greater settle shall be four cubits, and the breadth one cubit.

15 So the [h]altar[6] shall be four cubits; and from the altar[7] and upward shall be [d]four horns.

16 And the altar shall be twelve cubits long, twelve broad, [e]square in the four squares thereof.

17 And the settle shall be fourteen cubits long, and fourteen broad in the four squares thereof; and the border about it shall be half a cubit; and the bottom thereof shall be a cubit about; and his [g]stairs[8] shall look toward the east.

18 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, thus saith the Lord GOD, These are the ordinances of the altar in the day when they shall make it, to [h]offer burnt-offerings thereon, and to sprinkle blood thereon.

4 Some think that the royal sepulchres may have been included within the precincts of the temple, which was a profanation. See 2 Ki. 23. 16, 20. others understand by "carcasses of their kings," idols as lifeless as carcasses: others, sacrifices offered to Shiloom or Moloch, and the residence of the Jews to the worship of that horrid idol: others, this view the most probable.—C.

The second signifies, according to one view, "lion of God," according to another, "hearth of God;" which seems certainly the most natural description. —C.

this verse is deserving of special note. In the tents of Moses and in the second temple, there were degrees of sacredness. Gentiles might enter the outer court. Jews came in a state of ceremonial purity were to enter the inner court. The court around the great altar was reserved exclusively for the priests, and only the high-priest was permitted to enter the "most holy." All who entered and worshipped in it were to be equal. All were to enjoy the privilege of approach to the very presence of God. Every individual was a minister of righteousness to himself.—F.

19 And thou shalt give to the priests the Levites that be of the [a]seed of Zadok, which approach unto me, to minister unto me, saith the Lord GOD, [j]a young bullock for a sin-offering.

20 And thou shalt take of the blood thereof, and put it [k]on the four horns of it, and on the four corners of the settle, and upon the border round about: thus shalt thou [l]cleanse and purge it.

21 Thou shalt take the bullock also of the sin-offering, and he shall burn it [m]in the appointed place of the house, without the sanctuary.

22 And on the second day thou shalt offer [n]a kid of the goats without blemish for a sin-offering; and they [o]shall cleanse the altar, as they did cleanse it with the bullock.

23 When thou hast made an end of cleansing it, thou shalt offer a young bullock without blemish, and [q]a ram out of the flock without blemish.

24 And thou shalt offer them before the LORD, and the priests shall [r]cast salt upon them, and they shall offer them up for a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

25 Seven[s] days shalt thou prepare every day a goat for a sin-offering: they shall also prepare a young bullock, and a ram out of the flock, without blemish.

26 Seven days shall they purge the altar, and purify it; and they shall consecrate [s]themselves.

27 And when these days are expired, it shall be, that upon the [t]eighth day, and so forward, the priests shall make your [u]burnt-offerings upon the altar, and your peace-offerings;[1] and I will [v]accept you, saith the Lord GOD.

THEN he brought me back the way of the gate of the [a]outward sanctuary, which looketh toward the east, and it was [b]shut.

2 Then said the LORD unto me, This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man[1] shall enter in by it; because the LORD, the God of Israel, [c]hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut.

3 It[a] is for the prince; the prince, he shall sit in it to eat bread [d]before the LORD; he shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate, and shall go out by the way of the same.

Their laying aside their fine robes, and wearing other garments when among the people, may denote that, though they must only appear before God in the righteousness of his Son, yet, by a gospel conversation, they must recommend holiness to their hearers. Their not sanctifying the people with their garments may denote that they must indulge no vain glory of superiority to others in goodness, nor pretend to convey any holiness, merit, or safety to them. Their neither shaving their hair, nor suffering it to grow long, imports their abstinence from Popish superstition, pride,

5 And the LORD said unto me, Son of man, [1] mark well,[2] and behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, all that [t]I say unto thee concerning all the ordinances of the house of the LORD, and all the laws thereof; and mark well the entering in of the house, with every going forth of the sanctuary.

6 And thou shalt say to the [j]rebellious, even to the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD, O ye house of Israel, [k]let it suffice you of all your abominations,

7 In[l] that ye have brought into my sanctuary strangers,[3] uncircumcised[m] in[n] heart, and uncircumcised in flesh, to be in my sanctuary, to pollute it, even my house, when ye [o]offer my bread, the fat and the blood, and they have [p]broken my covenant, because of all your abominations.

8 And [q]ye have not kept the charge of mine holy things: but ye have set keepers of my charge[4] in my sanctuary for yourselves.[5]

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, [r]No stranger, uncircumcised in heart,[6] nor uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into my sanctuary, of any stranger that is among the children of Israel.

10 And [s]the Levites that are gone away far from me, when [u]Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols; they shall even [v]bear their iniquity.

11 Yet[x] they shall be ministers in my sanctuary, having charge at the gates of the house, and ministering to the house: they shall slay the burnt-offering and the sacrifice for the people, and they shall stand before them to minister unto them.

12 Because[y] they ministered unto them before their idols, and [z]caused the house of Israel to fall into iniquity;[7] therefore have I lifted [a]up mine hand against them, saith the Lord GOD, and they shall [b]bear their iniquity.

13 And[c] they shall not come near unto me, to do the office of a priest unto me, nor to come near to any of my holy things, in the most holy place,[8] but they shall [d]bear their shame, and their abominations which they have committed.

14 But[e] I will make them keepers of the charge of the house, for all the service thereof, and for all that shall be done therein.

15 ¶ But[g] the priests the Levites, the [h]sons of Zadok, that kept the charge of my sanctuary when the children of Israel went astray from me, they shall come near to me to minister unto me, and [i]they shall stand before me to offer unto me [j]the fat and the blood, saith the Lord GOD:

Thus David is found in possession of Hebron (2 Sa. 2.11), which was one of the Levitical cities, Jos. 21.11, 13. How this community of rights and properties was regulated does not appear, but it must have been well defined, as there is no record either of complaints or disputes arising from the existence.—C.

20 Neither[x] shall they shave their heads, nor suffer their locks to grow long: they shall only poll their heads.

21 Neither [y]shall any priest drink wine, when they enter into the inner court.

22 Neither shall they take for their wives a [z]widow, nor her that is put away:[4] but they shall take maidens of the seed of the house of Israel, or a widow that had a priest before.[5]

23 And [v]they shall teach my people the difference between the holy and profane, and cause them to discern between the unclean and the clean.

24 And[z] in controversy[6] they shall stand in judgment; and they shall judge it according to my judgments: and they shall [a]keep my laws and my statutes in all mine assemblies; and they shall hallow my [b]sabbaths.

25 And they shall come at no [c]dead person to defile themselves: but for father, or for mother, or for son, or for daughter, for brother, or for sister that hath had no husband, they may defile themselves.

26 And after he is [d]cleansed they shall reckon unto him seven days.

and wantonness. Their not drinking wine, &c., imports that they must never indulge drunkenness, luxury, or carnal care; that they must marry only such women as are of good report, and never connect themselves with apostate and disorderly churches; that they must, by doctrine and example, faithfully teach their hearers, and compose differences among them; and must avoid immoderate sorrow for the loss of created enjoyments. The food, fields, &c., allotted them for a maintenance, import their continual living on Christ crucified and his new-covenant provision, and their being decently and commodiously supported by their hearers. Their having distinct chambers for themselves may denote their office circumscribed by the divine law, and that none ought to interfere with either their work or benefice without commission from Christ. Their offering the sacrifices of the people may denote their preaching Christ crucified among them, and leading their exercises in their public dedications of themselves to God.

REFLECTIONS.—It is highly reasonable and infinitely delightful that Jesus, our only Mediator, Prince, and High-priest, should in all things have the pre-eminence. And it is necessary that God's mercies should be always attended with the most cordial repentance and thorough reformation. How provoking to God, ruinous to the church, and damning to souls, 29 They[h] shall eat the meat-offering, and the sin-offering, and the trespass-offering; and [i]every dedicated[8] thing in Israel shall be theirs.

30 And the [j]first[9] of all the first-fruits of all things, and every oblation of all, of every sort of your oblations, shall be the priest's: ye shall also give unto the priest the first of your dough, that he may cause the blessing to rest in thine house.

31 The[k] priest shall not eat of any thing that is dead of itself, or torn, whether it be fowl or beast.

CHAPTER XLV.

1 The portion of land for the sanctuary, 6 for the city, 7 and for the prince. 9 Ordinances for the prince.

MOREOVER, when ye shall divide [a]by lot the land[1] for inheritance, ye shall offer[b] an oblation unto the LORD, an holy portion[2] of the land: the length shall be the length of five and twenty thousand reeds,[3] and the breadth shall be ten thousand. This shall be holy in all the borders thereof round about.

2 Of this there shall be [c]for the sanctuary five hundred in length, with five hundred in breadth, square round about; and fifty cubits round about for the suburbs[4] thereof.

3 And of this measure shalt thou measure the length of five and twenty thousand, and the breadth of ten thousand: and [d]in it shall be the sanctuary and the most holy place.

4 The[e] holy portion of the land shall be for the priests the ministers of the sanctuary, which shall come near to minister unto the LORD; and it shall be a place for their houses, and an holy place for the sanctuary.

5 And the [5]five and twenty thousand of length, and the ten thousand of breadth, shall also the Levites, the [g]ministers of the house, have for themselves, [h]for a possession for twenty chambers.

6 ¶ And[i] ye shall appoint the possession of the city five thousand broad, and five and twenty thousand long, over against the oblation of the holy portion: it shall be for the whole house of Israel.

7 ¶ And[j] a portion shall be for the prince on the one side and on the other side of the oblation of the holy portion, and of the possession of the city, [k]before the oblation of the holy portion, and before the possession of the city, from the west side westward, and from the east side eastward;[6] and the length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border.

8 In the land[7] shall be his possession in Israel: and [l]my princes shall no more oppress my people; and the rest of the land shall they give to the house of Israel [m]according to their tribes.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, [o]Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel: [p]remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice, take away your exactions[8] from my people, saith the Lord GOD.

10 Ye[q] shall have just balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath.

11 The[r] ephah and the bath shall be of one measure, that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the ephah the tenth part of an homer: the measure thereof shall be after the homer.

12 And the shekel shall be twenty [9]gerahs; twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels shall be your [t]maneh.[2]

13 This is the [u]oblation that ye shall offer, the sixth part[3] of an ephah of an homer of wheat, and ye shall give the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of barley.

14 Concerning the ordinance of oil, the bath of oil, ye shall offer the tenth part[4] of a bath out of the cor, which is an homer of ten baths; for ten baths are an homer:

15 And one lamb[5] out of the flock, out of two hundred, out of the [v]fat pastures of Israel, for a meat-offering, and for a burnt-offering, and for peace-offerings,[6] to [w]make reconciliation for them, saith the Lord GOD.

16 All the people of the land shall give [7]this [x]oblation for[8] the prince[9] in Israel.

17 And[z] it shall be the prince's part to give burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and drink-offerings, in the feasts, and in the new moons, and in the sabbaths, in all solemnities of the house of Israel: he shall [y]prepare the sin-offering, and the meat-offering, and the burnt-offering, and the peace-offerings,[1] to make reconciliation for the house of Israel.

18 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [2]In the first month, in the first day of the month, thou shalt take [a]a young bullock, without blemish, and [b]cleanse the sanctuary:

19 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering, and put it upon [c]the posts of the house, and upon the four corners of the

From the north side was taken a lot of nearly 50 miles by 25 for the priests, in the midst of which was the site of the temple, about a mile square, ver. 1, 2. On the south lay the lot of the Levites, of the same extent as that of the priests, ver. 5. And south of this lay the lot of the city, of the same length as those of the priests and Levites, but only half the width, ver. 6. Now when it is remembered that Canaan was little more than 190 miles in length, by 60 in breadth, there can remain little doubt that the whole is an emblem of that glorious state when Zion shall enlarge the place of her tents, lengthen her cords, strengthen her stakes, and break forth on the right hand and the left, and her seed shall inherit the Gentiles, Is. 54. 2, 3.—Note, The word "reeds" is not in the original, and several eminent expositors think "cubits" should have been supplied instead. But that "reeds," and not "cubits," is the proper word to be supplied is evident from ch. 42. 16, which exactly corresponds with ch. 45. 2 —C.

This may be well illustrated by a reference to avoirdupois, troy, apothecaries', and other weights, several of which vary in different countries, not according to any specific name, but according to the article sold, and which often becomes the source of inconvenience, derogation, or fraud. Note, Commercial plainness and integrity form essential characteristics of the Christian in his intercourse with the world, as humility and piety are in his communion with God.—C.

is it when persons apparently graceless are admitted to the seals of God's promise, and to the office of rulers in the church of Christ! Nor must ministers who have fallen into scandal be hastily or easily restored to their office. It is in vain to expect a flourishing church where government and discipline are neglected, and where ministers are not extremely regular in all their conduct. But while ministers give up worldly cares for the sake of their hearers' salvation, it becomes their hearers, as they regard the blessing of God, and their own temporal or spiritual welfare, to provide for them a decent subsistence.

CHAPTER XLV. Ver. 1–8; with ch. 47. 13–23; and xlviii. Canaan, on the west of Jordan, about 180 miles from north to south, and 50 from east to west, is represented as thus divided. Beginning from the north, Dan, Asher, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, and Judah, had their portions, all of them extending from Jordan on the east to the Mediterranean Sea on the west. All along the south side of Judah's portion is represented a sacred portion of 25,000 reeds broad. Of this, in the middle of the country, a portion of 25,000 reeds from east to west, and 10,000 from north to south, is allotted for the priests, in the middle of which a square of 500 reeds is allotted for the temple and its appurtenances. On the south side of the priests' portion another of the same dimensions is allotted for the Levites. On the south of the Levites' portion, a portion equally long, but only half as broad as that of 20 And so thou shalt do the seventh day of the month for every one that [d]erreth, and for him that is simple: so shall ye [e]reconcile the house.

21 In the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month, [f]ye shall have the passover, a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be eaten.

22 And [h]upon that day shall the prince prepare for himself, and for all the people of the land, a [i]bullock for a sin-offering.[2]

23 And seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt-offering to the LORD, seven bullocks and seven rams [j]without blemish, daily the seven days; and a [k]kid of the goats daily for a sin-offering.

24 And he shall prepare [l]a meat-offering of an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and an hin of oil for an ephah.

25 In the seventh month, [n]in the fifteenth day of the month, shall he do the like in the feast of the seven days, according to the sin-offering, according to the burnt-offering, and according to the meat-offering, and according to the oil.

1 Ordinances for the prince in his worship, 9 and for the people. 16 An order for the prince's inheritance. 19 The courts for boiling and baking.

THUS saith the Lord GOD, The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east shall[a] be shut the [b]six working days;[1] but [c]on the sabbath it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon it shall be opened.

2 And the [d]prince[2] shall enter by the [e]way of the porch of that gate without, and shall stand[g] by the post of the gate, and the [h]priest shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings, and he shall [i]worship at the threshold of the gate; then he shall go forth; but the gate shall [j]not be shut until the evening.

3 Likewise[k] the people of the land shall worship at [l]the door of this gate before the LORD, in the sabbaths, and in the new moons.

4 And the [s]burnt-offering that the prince shall offer unto the LORD in the sabbath-day shall be six lambs without blemish, and a ram without blemish.

The distinction (ver. 8, 9) between the entering and departure of prince and people, seems, most probably, a prophetic emblem of a specific difference between Christ and his people. He entered the temple for sacrifice by the gate of righteousness, by the same gate he returned. 7 None but the prince might enter the sanctuary from the east, and there was no entrance from the west: so that all the people must enter from the north or from the south. But those who entered from the north were to go out by the south; and they who entered by the south to go out by the north. This may signify that every thing should be regulated, in respect of divine worship, in that way which may most effectually prevent disorder and interruption; but it is generally supposed to insinuate that men should go forward, and make progress in religion, and go through with it; and not be superficial, hypocritical, or apostate.—C.

6 And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish, and six lambs, and a ram: they shall be without blemish.

7 And he shall prepare a meat-offering, an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram; and for the lambs according as his hand shall attain unto, and an hin of oil to an ephah.[6]

8 And when the prince shall enter, [u]he shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof.

9 ¶ But when the people of the land [x]shall come before the LORD in the solemn feasts, [y]he that entereth in by the way of the north gate to worship shall go out by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate; he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth over against it.[7]

10 And[r] the prince in the midst of them, when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth,[8] shall go forth.

11 And[s] in the feasts, and in the solemnities, the [t]meat-offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram; and to the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

12 Now when the prince shall prepare [u]a voluntary burnt-offering or peace-offerings voluntarily unto the LORD, one [x]shall then open him the gate that looketh toward the east, and [y]he shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings as he did on the sabbath-day; then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate.

13 Thou shalt daily [z]prepare a burnt-offering unto the LORD of a lamb of the first year[9] without blemish; thou shalt prepare it every [1]morning.

14 And thou shalt prepare a meat-offering for it every morning, the [2]sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat-offering continually, by a perpetual ordinance, unto the LORD.

the priests or Levites, is assigned for the holy city; i.e. a square of 5000 reeds for the city to stand on, and a portion of 10,000 reeds in length and 5000 in breadth on the east side, and another on the west side of the same extent assigned to the office-bearers in the city. All of the country that remained on the east side and on the west side of this sacred square of 25,000 reeds, divided between the priests, Levites, and city, is allotted to the prince. And southward of that portion, in the middle of which the city stood, and of the land appointed for the prince at the east and west sides, the tribes of Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, and Gad, had their portions, each extending from Jordan to the Mediterranean Sea. This division is entirely different from that made by Joshua, Jos. xiii.–xxi.

Ver. 13–25. The oblations here mean Christ, as offered in sacrifice to God, and represented as a Saviour to sinners; and his people giving up themselves, and all that they have, to God through him. The sacred festivals may point out the seasons of Christ's incarnation, suffering, and pouring out of the Holy Ghost, and the solemn ordinances of gospel worship, in which Christ and his people hold solemn fellowship, to the honour of God.

REFLECTIONS.—God ought to be honoured with the first and best of our substance; and his ministers and magistrates should be so provided for as that they may constantly attend to their work. Wherever religion thrives true liberty and strict honesty will abound. Magistrates and people, as well as ministers, ought, in their places, to lay out all their influence in promoting true and practical religion; and none shall receive mercies from God without grateful returns, according to what they have received. Though our great sacrifice of atonement was offered but once for all, our spiritual sacrifices of thanksgiving to God through Christ ought to be daily continued, especially when he allows us the more solemn ordinances of his worship.

CHAPTER XLVI. REFLECTIONS.—All ranks of men should carefully concur in promoting the regular sanctification of the Sabbath, and the whole worship of God. And it is the greatest glory of princes to be patterns of true piety to their people. But all our attendance on ordinances ought to be in close fellowship with Jesus our Prince, who is ALL to, does all for, and works all in us. And in our whole course of religion we must never go back; but, forgetting the things that are behind, reach forward unto the things that are before. It is very graceful to behold great men reverently attending the ordinances of the gospel with their servants,

FISHERMAN'S HOUSE, BEYROUT—WHERE TITUS CELEBRATED HIS VICTORY OVER JERUSALEM. [Ezekiel, xlvii:16.]—"Hamath, Berothath, Sibraim." Some connect the Berothath mentioned in Ezekiel xlvii:16, with Beyrout. The best authorities, however, think this connection very remote. This city became a Roman colony in the reign of Augustus. It was adorned and beautified with theatres, colonnades, porticoes and baths by Agrippa, the remains of which are still scattered over the city. There are said to be a great number of large columns of both gray and red granite which have been built into the quay here. Here it was that Titus celebrated his victory over Jerusalem, and also the birthday of his father by gladiatorial combats, in which the captives of Zion were forced to fight with wild beasts and with one another, according to Josephus.

ABANA RIVER AT TOLL-GATE, DAMASCUS. [Ezekiel, xlvii:16.]—We are standing here at the foot of the Anti-Libanus mountain. The rocks rise up directly from the bank of the river. This is about a mile above the city of Damascus. The two merchants in flowing robes we see standing upon the bridge are fit representatives of the old and wealthy city of Damascus. In no other city on earth is there seemingly so much of physical repose and rest as here. Damascus seems to meet that universal element in human life that longs for relaxation in some quiet retreat. Here in Damascus man seems to find an escape from the responsibilities and momentous issues of the world's hard work, and here, away from the storm and noise of life, he finds a deeply shaded landscape hidden from the glare of the sun and away from the thunder of the world's trouble.

15 Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat-offering, and the oil, [e]every morning, for a continual burnt-offering.

16 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, If the prince give[b] a gift unto any of his sons, the inheritance thereof shall be his [g]sons'; [c]it shall be their possession by inheritance.

17 But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his servants, then it shall be his [d]to the year of liberty; after it shall return to the prince: but his inheritance shall be his sons' for them.

18 Moreover, [e]the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression,[4] to thrust them out of their possession: [g]but he shall give his sons' inheritance out of his own possession; that my people be not [h]scattered every man from his possession.

19 ¶ After he brought me through the entry, which[i] was at the side of the gate, into the holy chambers of the priests, which looked toward the north: and, behold, there was a place on the two sides westward.

20 Then said he unto me, [j]This is the place where the priests shall boil the trespass-offering and the sin-offering; where they shall [k]bake the meat-offering; that they bear them not out into the outer court, [l]to sanctify the people.

21 Then he brought me forth into the outer court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the court, and, behold, in every corner of the court there was a court.[5]

22 In the four corners of the court there were courts joined[6] of forty cubits long, and thirty broad: these four corners[7] were of one measure.

23 And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling places[8] under the rows round about.

24 Then said he unto me, These are the places of them that [n]boil, where the ministers of the house shall boil the [o]sacrifice of the people.

AFTERWARD he brought me again unto the door[a] of the house; and, behold, [b]waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward: for the forefront of the house stood toward the east, and the waters came down from under, from the right side of the house, [c]at the south side of the altar.

2 Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the outer gate by the way that looketh eastward; and, behold, there ran out waters on the right side.

6 The whole country from the parallel of Jerusalem eastward is desert. The chief cause of its barrenness is the want of water. Wherever there is a little streamlet or fountain there is vegetation; and scanty though the soil be, abundant irrigation would make it productive. The waters of the Dead Sea contain such a large proportion of salt that they are deleterious. They render a barren soil still more barren. The symbolic imagery in this passage is therefore very instructive. The waters issuing from the temple of God convert the wilderness into a garden, and heal the noxious waters of the Dead Sea. Such is the influence of true religion upon the moral desolateness of this world.—F.

8 The northern border of the land as here described is identical with that delineated by Moses in Nu. xxxiv.; but the eastern border is different. Moses represents the latter as running from Hazar-enan to Shepham, then to Riblah, then to the Sea of Chinnereth or Galilee. The landmarks of Ezekiel are Damascus, Hauran, Gilead, and the East (or Dead) Sea. Ezekiel thus includes the kingdoms of Damascus and Bashan, with Gilead and Moab; while Moses excludes them.—C.

1 This division differs essentially from that of Joshua; and, as it did not take place on the return from Babylon, must point to a time still future. And though the whole prophecy seems emblematic of heavenly, rather than descriptive of earthly things, yet it is not impossible that it proceeds upon a principle of division, the simplicity of which may hereafter recommend it to the adoption of Israel restored. Taking the length of the whole land at 25 miles, and deducting the allotment for the priests, Levites, temple, and prince, see ch.45.1, there will remain for each tribe a parallelogram of less than 20 miles in breadth by 100 in length from east to west. But, lest this appear an inadequate allotment, let it be remembered that each tribe has an equal share in the city, ver 19, and must be common occupiers on the lands of the prince. And let this mathematical arrangement be viewed as the emblem of the covenant 'well ordered in all things,' and of 'all things done decently and in order' in the church, while the perfect equality that prevails among the tribes, and extends to all resident strangers, will appear equally descriptive of that state in which there is 'neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, but Christ is all and in all.'—C.

power of the truths which they are to preach, that their work is most useful and acceptable.

CHAPTER XLVII. Ver. 1-12. These waters, issuing forth from the temple at the south side of the altar, denote the purifying, refreshing, and fructifying oracles and ordinances of the gospel, and the Holy Ghost in his gifts and graces attending the same, issuing forth from Christ's person and through his righteousness. Their gradual increase denotes the gradual progress of gospel truths and influences till the whole earth be filled with the knowledge of the Lord; and that the further we search into divine truths the more mysterious we shall find them; and also that, by continued accessions of light and love from Jesus Christ, the work of grace in every believer's heart, and the church in general, increases with the increase of God. Their running into the Dead Sea of Sodom, and quickening or producing multitudes of fish, represents gospel truths and influences as running into the Gentile world, even the worst places of it, which had long lain in wickedness and under the curse of God, and spiritually quickening multitudes who had been dead in trespasses and sins. The fishers all over the Dead Sea denote multitudes of gospel preachers all over the world labouring to gain sinners to Christ. The many fishes, like the fishes of the Mediterranean Sea, are multitudes of sinners, in a thousand diversified forms of misery and guilt, attending gospel ordinances, and by means thereof drawn unto Christ. The miry places and marshes are obstinate sinners, Jews, Antichristians, &c., abandoned of God to their own lusts and to everlasting damnation. The ever-flourishing, fruitful, and medicinal trees on the bank of this river are Jesus the Tree of life, eternally glorious, and infinitely useful to his people; and his people themselves, as trees of righteousness, by the influence of his Word and Spirit, holding to their profession and grace, honouring God, and being useful to their neighbours around. 13-23. The Jews after their captivity never had the whole territory here mentioned. Few of the ten tribes then returned. Nor was the country ever parcelled out in the manner directed in this and the next chapter. While, therefore, these things may partly respect the state of the Jews when returned from their present dispersion, they chiefly respect the church of Christ, the boundaries of which are appointed by God, and in which all true Israelites, Jews and Gentiles, have their whole portion of blessedness assigned them by God.

Ver. 13-21. The partition of the land commenced with the endowment of the sanctuary, ch. 45. 1: then proceeded to the provision for the city, ch.45.6: then for the prince, ch. 45.7: then followed several necessary religious ordinances; and now the partition of the land among the tribes is resumed. The land of Canaan as here described extends from about 31° to 35° N. lat., and from 34° to 37° E. lon., bounded on the north by a line from the Mediterranean to Hamath; on the east by Damascus, Hauran, Gilead, and the land of Israel east of Jordan to the south point of the East or Dead Sea: thence on the south by Tamar, Kadesh, and a line extending either to the river of Rhinacolura or the Nile, and on the west by the Mediterranean. C.

Ver. 22. The only condition upon which 'strangers' are to claim their freedom, adoption, and inheritance, is, sojourning and begetting children in the land—a condition of naturalization and endowment which no country has ever yet exhibited, but which, spiritually understood, is literally true of the church of Christ, which freely preaches the gospel to every creature, announces salvation to the chief of sinners, and admits to her choicest privileges the baptized believer of every nation under heaven. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a blessed source of oracles, ordinances, and influences is Jesus Christ, God-man, the Lord our righteousness. While divine truths are gradually manifested, and spiritual influences bestowed, it is proper to be carefully searching and applying them. And the more we contemplate or experience them, the more shall we be lost in wonder at their height, depth, length, and breadth. But let us always begin with what is more plain and practical, and admire what we cannot comprehend. Great is the wisdom of God in transmitting his blessings to the very worst of persons and places, and almighty the influence of his Word and Spirit! not even death—a death in trespasses and sins—can withstand it! But, alas! unhappy are they to whom it is a savour of death unto death and damnation! The gospel and its influences find the sinners of mankind in the most diversified and abominable forms of iniquity. But infinite power and grace can apprehend the most outrageous, and render the most ugly and deformed like unto Christ. And it is delightful for ministers, in multitudes, to administer the ordinances of the gospel when Jesus goeth forth with them conquering and to conquer. Glorious in character, persevering and fruitful in good works towards God and men, are his saints!—And there is tified[4] of [y]the sons of Zadok, which have kept my charge,[5] which went not astray when the children of Israel went astray, [k]as the Levites went astray.

12 And this oblation of the land that is offered shall be unto them a thing most holy,[6] by the border of the Levites.

13 And over against the border of the priests the Levites shall have five and twenty thousand[7] in length, and ten thousand in breadth: all the length shall be five and twenty thousand, and the breadth ten thousand.

14 And[l] they shall not sell of it, neither exchange, nor alienate the first-fruits[8] of the land: for[m] it is holy unto the LORD.

15 ¶ And the five thousand that are left in the breadth, over against the five and twenty thousand, shall be a [o]profane place for the city, for dwelling, and for suburbs; and the city shall be in the midst thereof.[9]

16 And these shall be the measures thereof; the north side four thousand and five hundred, and the south side four thousand and five hundred, and on the east side four thousand and five hundred, and the west side four thousand and five hundred.

17 And the suburbs of the city shall be toward the north two hundred and fifty, and toward the south two hundred and fifty, and toward the east two hundred and fifty, and toward the west two hundred and fifty.

18 And the residue in length, over against the oblation of the holy portion, shall be ten thousand eastward, and ten thousand westward: and it shall be over against the oblation of the holy portion; and the increase thereof shall be for [l]food [p]unto them that serve the city.

19 And they that serve the city shall serve it [q]out of all the tribes of Israel.

20 All[r] the oblation shall be five and twenty thousand by five and twenty thousand: ye shall offer the holy oblation [s]four-square, with the possession of the city.

21 ¶ And[t] the residue shall be for the prince, on the one side and on the other of the holy oblation, and of the possession of the city, over against the five and twenty thousand of the oblation toward the east border, and westward over against the five and twenty thousand toward the west border, [2]over against the portions for the prince: and it shall be the holy oblation; and the [u]sanctuary of the house shall be in the midst thereof.

22 Moreover from[3] the possession of the Levites, and from the possession of the city, being in the midst of that which is the prince's, between the border of Judah and the border of Benjamin, [4]shall be for the prince.[5]

23 ¶ As for the rest of the tribes, from the east side unto the west side, Benjamin shall have a portion.[6]

24 And by the border of Benjamin, from the east side unto the west side, Simeon shall have a portion.

25 And by the border of Simeon, from the east side unto the west side, Issachar a portion.

26 And by the border of Issachar, from the east side unto the west side, Zebulun a portion.

27 And by the border of Zebulun, from the east side unto the west side, Gad a portion.

28 And by the border of Gad, at the south side southward, the border shall be even from [v]Tamar unto the waters of strife in Kadesh,[7] and to the [z]river toward the great sea.[8]

29 This[y] is the land which ye shall divide by lot unto the tribes of Israel for inheritance, and these are their portions, saith the Lord GOD.

30 ¶ And these are the goings out of the city on the north side, [5]four thousand and five hundred measures.

31 And the [a]gates of the city shall be after the names of the tribes of Israel: three gates northward; one gate of Reuben, one gate of Judah, one gate of Levi.

32 And at the east side four thousand and five hundred: and three gates; and one gate of Joseph, one gate of Benjamin, one gate of Dan.

33 And at the south side four thousand and five hundred measures: and three gates; one gate of Simeon, one gate of Issachar, one gate of Zebulun.

34 At the west side four thousand and five hundred, with their three gates; one gate of Gad, one gate of Asher, one gate of Naphtali.

35 It was round about [b]eighteen thousand measures: and the name of the city from that day shall be, [c]The LORD is there.[9] abundant room in the gospel church for Gentiles equally with Jews. In comely order they coalesce into one mystical body of Christ. All are entitled to the same privileges, share alike the same grace and glory, in virtue of God's new-covenant promise and oath.

[u] The holy oblation (ver.12), of 25,000 square reeds, was divided into three parts from north to south, ch.45.1. The north division of 25,000 reeds by 10,000 (for the priests, in the midst of which was the temple, surrounded by a wall 500 reeds square, ver.9, 10; ch.42.15. Next to this lay the portion of the Levites, of the same dimensions (ver.13, 14), and on the south another portion of the same length, but only one reeds in breadth, for the city, ver.5. In the midst of this portion was the city, being 4500 reeds, or about 9 miles square, with a suburb of about 250 reeds, or about half a mile on each side (ver.17), leaving 10,000 reeds or nearly 20 miles on the east and west, as a common for the servants of the city out of all the tribes, ver.18,19. On the east and west sides of this square are the royal demesnes, each of which, taking the breadth of the land at 250 miles, would form a square of 50 miles. The calculations by cubits instead of reeds, proportionably reduces this calculation; which, it may be right to add, others have held to be vastly greater; some making the dimensions of the city greater than all Europe; others, perhaps, greater than the habitable portions of the earth. But the reed and the cubit being the only measures mentioned, it is obvious the calculation must be taken from the one or the other. But it matters not for any purpose of interpretation which is adopted. But in addition to what has been addured Ch.45. 1, the use of the reed in measuring the city (Re 11.1;21.15), seems to favour the conclusion, that where the cubit is not mentioned, the reed was the measure intended by Ezekiel.—C.

CHAPTER XLVIII. Canaan, here divided, represents the gospel church as containing all the tribes of the redeemed, with the presence and ordinances of God in the midst of them; and in admission to which no natural descent, no civil character or privilege, is in the least to be regarded. Jerusalem, the holy city, represents the gospel church as exceedingly enlarged, as wholly answerable to the measuring line of God's Word, as abundantly accessible to all ends of the earth, and as dignified with the special care, presence, and ordinances of JEHOVAH.

REFLECTIONS.—In the gospel church old things are all passed away, and all things are become new. In the most comely order, the last is made first; the chief of sinners become the chief of saints. What abundant access have they to Christ and to God in his ordinances! And the most faithful tribes are admitted into the nearest fellowship. Yea, God hath made abundant provision for the support of his ordinances, ministers, or magistrates; and it is at their peril if any receive his revenues without serving as his deputies. What is dedicated to his service cannot be alienated to other purposes. And every one in his station ought to lay out himself in the service of this city, knowing that his labour shall not be in vain in the Lord. Great is the regularity, the stability, the strength, the extent, the freedom, the life, and honour of our gospel Jerusalem in the apostolic and millennial periods! What then shall be the heavenly city, in which God is ALL and IN ALL!

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF EZEKIEL.

It is vain to speak of the distinctive mental qualities or peculiar styles of the prophets; seeing these 'holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,' and as God severally gave them both thoughts and utterance. The only real distinctive characteristics of the prophets lie in the subjects and objects of their several commissions. Taking this view of Ezekiel, he stands conspicuous among his fellows by the splendour of the visions of God with which he was favoured; and has in this respect none that approach to equality, with the exception of Daniel and John the Divine. Cast over these visions, we, no doubt, find a veil of deep, perhaps of impenetrable, obscurity; which those who cannot lift must contemplate with humility, prayer, and patience, till 'the day dawn and the shadows flee away.' But if Ezekiel present to us some things that are thus obscure, he also sets before us much that is plain. His descriptions and denunciations of national idolatry are calculated for every understanding, and are truly so plain 'that he may run that readeth,' Hab. 2. 2. And they apply not to Judah and Israel alone, but to all generations; for though one form of idolatry has been totally banished from the reformed Christian churches, alas! other forms have disguisedly sprung up in its room; and the idolatry of the imagination or of the intellect, the idolatry of self-love or of self-will, with that 'covetousness that is (literally) idolatry,' have extensively occupied their room. On this ground Ezekiel was not merely a prophet for the Jews, but also for many contemporary nations. Upon these he poured out the judgments of God with remarkable clearness and minuteness of description; so that the records of travellers through these prophetic countries form the best commentary upon this part of the Scriptures.

A few miles to the south-east of the ruins of Babylon, a monument is still pointed out as the tomb of Ezekiel. That this is really the tomb of the prophet is the tradition of the Jews who have inhabited the country ever since the captivity; and who say that he died while on a visit to Babylon. This tomb was first described to Europeans by Benjamin of Tudela; and who adds that it was said to have been erected by the captive king Jeconiah. Benjamin adds that the prince of the captivity with multitudes of the Jews were accustomed to pay an annual visit to the tomb, for the purposes of devotion and trade, and that it was surrounded by several synagogues, and a public library that had subsisted since the time of the first as well as the second temple. It is also visited by Arabian pilgrims and the Jews of Media and Persia.

Those who know the difficulty, the frequent impossibility, of ascertaining the burying-places of eminent men, after the lapse of a few hundred years—and especially those who know how ready superstition is to admit of the slightest evidence that may minister to its morbid sensibilities—will be slow to attach much value to such traditions when found unsupported by contemporary history. It may or it may not be the tomb of the prophet; but would to God that the men who superstitiously visit his tomb, and venerate his dust, would rather study his writings and drink of his spirit. C.

THE BOOK OF DANIEL.

Ezekiel, a priest, had not begun prophesying to the poor captives in Babylon, when Daniel, a prince, begins to officiate as a prophet at court, and continued about seventy years. He was early famed for wisdom and piety, ch. i. ii.; Eze. 28. 3; 14. 14, 20; was one of the first who were carried captives to Babylon, and lived to see the deliverance. The first six chapters of this book are generally historical and plain, narrating his and his three companions' captivity and education at Babylon; his companions' advancement and deliverance from the fiery furnace; his own interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dreams and Belshazzar's handwriting, and his deliverance from the lions, ch. i.–vi. The last six are generally prophetical, containing his four visions of the future state of the world and church of God, ch. vii.–xii. [His prophecies contain some remarkable proof that Jesus is the Christ; for the Saviour came exactly at the time he had predicted. For New Testament references to Daniel, see Mat. 24. 2, 15, 30; 25. 46; 26. 23; Mar. 13. 14; Lu. 10. 20; Jn. 5. 28, 29; 16. 24; 1 Co. 15. 24, 41, 42; 2 Co. 5. 21; He. 9. 12; 11. 33; 1 Pe. 2. 21; Re. 6. 11; 15. 3; 20. 12. C.

The book of Daniel has long been a battle-field for critics. Some of its prophecies detail events with a clearness and fulness which history can scarcely surpass. The date of the book has therefore become a subject of keen controversy. If the date ordinarily assigned to it be admitted, its inspiration cannot be questioned, for its prophetic visions embody an outline of the great events of the eastern world from the time of Nebuchadnezzar to the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes. Nor do they stop there. Other visions exhibit, though in a vista dimmer and more distant, the final establishment of the gospel kingdom, Christ's second coming, and the resurrection. It is thus true, as has recently been shown by Dr. Pusey, that let men assign to the book what date they will, it contains unmistakable prophecy. It is worthy of note that this book is written partly in Hebrew and partly in Chaldee. The reason of this will be obvious to the careful student of Bible history. Hebrew was still in Daniel's day the language of the Jews, and those portions of the book which concerned them and their nation were written in the language familiar to them. Chaldee was the language of the court of Babylon, and hence the officers of the court speak in that language. The first portion of the book, containing the story of Daniel and his companions, is in Hebrew; the answer of the magi to the king (ch. 2. 4) is in Chaldee, which continues to the end of Daniel's first vision, ch. 7. 28. Though the language is thus different, the book is manifestly one in authorship and design. It is arranged on a definite plan; and the languages are selected on an intelligible principle. There are also clear references from some portions of the book to others; thus from the Chaldee in ch. 2. 49; 3. 12, 16, 23, 30, to the Hebrew in ch. i.; and also from the Hebrew in ch. viii. xii., to the Chaldee in ch. vii. P.]

CHAPTER I.

1 Jehoiakim's captivity. 3 Ashpenaz taketh Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah. 8 They refusing the king's portion, do prosper with pulse and water. 17 Their excellency in wisdom.

IN the third year[1] of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah [a]came Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon unto Jerusalem, and besieged it.

2 And the Lord [b]gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into his hand, [c]with part of the vessels of the house of God, which he carried[2] into [d]the land of Shinar, to the [e]house of his god; and he brought the vessels into the treasure-house of his god.

CHAP. I.

1 Jehoiakim was raised to the throne of Judah by the king of Egypt, and remained his tributary during three years: but at the close of that period Nebuchadnezzar defeated the Egyptians, and Jehoiakim became tributary to Babylon. At the end of three years he rebelled, but Nebuchadnezzar being otherwise engaged did not depose him till three years after his rebellion, which was the eleventh and last of Jehoiakim's reign. 2 Ki. 23. 34–36. 24. 1. Je. 25. 1; 46. 2. The chronological difficulty may be solved thus. Nebuchadnezzar came against Jerusalem in the third of Jehoiakim, and took it on the fourth. Three while years after the fourth, Jehoiakim remained tributary to Babylon, and on the eighth revolted: after which, during three years, he remained in rebellion, and in the end of the eleventh was carried captive.—C.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 19. The king communed with them—conversed with them, and examined them concerning their progress and attainments in learning—a curious and instructive, though incidental, illustration of the philosophical character of Nebuchadnezzar, in which he nearly resembled Napoleon of France—as deeply interested in the examination of a school as in the organization of an army. But such men God 'raises up to show his power in them;' such men he pulls down to 'teach the nations they are but men.' C.

vision of the king's meat,[4] and of the wine which he drank;[5] so nourishing them [f]three years, that at the end thereof they might stand before the king.

6 Now among these were of the children of Judah,[g]Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah;[6]

7 Unto whom the [h]prince of the eunuchs gave names: [7]for he gave unto Daniel the name of Belteshazzar; and to Hananiah of Shadrach; and to Mishael of Meshach; and to Azariah of Abed-nego.[8]

8 ¶ But Daniel [n]purposed in his heart [o]that he would not defile[9] himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank: therefore he requested of the prince of the eunuchs that he might not defile himself.

9 Now [p]God had brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince of the eunuchs.

10 And the prince of the eunuchs said unto Daniel, [q]I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink: for why should he see your faces worse liking[1] than the children which are of your sort?[2] then shall ye make me endanger my head to the king.

11 Then said Daniel to Melzar,[3] whom the prince of the eunuchs had set over Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, 12 Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days; and let them give us [t]pulse[5] to eat,[6] and water to drink.

13 Then let our countenances be looked upon before thee, and the countenance of the children that eat of the portion of the king's meat: and as thou seest, deal with thy servants.

14 So he consented to them in this matter, and [r]proved them ten days.

15 And at the end of ten days their countenances appeared [s]fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat.

16 Thus Melzar took away the portion of their meat, and the wine that they should drink, and gave them pulse.[7]

17 ¶ As for these four [g]children, [t]God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom: and Daniel had understanding[9] in all visions and dreams.

18 Now at [u]the end of the days that the king had said he should bring them in, then the prince of the eunuchs brought them in before Nebuchadnezzar.

19 And the king communed with them: and among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah: therefore [v]stood they before the king.

20 And in all matters of wisdom and understanding,[1] that the king inquired of them, he found them ten times[2] better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm.

21 And[3] Daniel continued even unto the first year of king Cyrus.[4]

CHAPTER II.

1 Nebuchadnezzar, forgetting his dream, requireth it of the Chaldeans, by promises and threatenings. 10 They acknowledging their inability are judged to die. 14 Daniel, obtaining some respite, findeth the dream. 19 He blesseth God. 24 He staying the decree, is brought to the king. 31 The dream. 36 The interpretation. 46 Daniel's advancement.

AND, in the [1]second year[2] of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuchadnezzar [a]dreamed dreams, wherewith his spirit was troubled, and his sleep brake from him.

2 Then the king commanded to call [b]the magicians,[3] and the astrologers, and the sorcerers, and the Chaldeans, for to show the king his dreams. So they came and stood before the king.

3 And the king said unto them, I have dreamed a dream, and my spirit was troubled to know the dream.[4]

4 Then spake the Chaldeans to the king in [c]Syriac, [d]O king, live for ever: tell thy servants the dream, [e]and we will show the interpretation.

5 The king answered and said to the Chaldeans, The thing is gone from me:[5] if ye will not make known unto me the dream, with the interpretation thereof, ye shall be [g]cut in [6]pieces, and your houses shall be made a dunghill:

6 But if ye show the dream, and the interpretation thereof, [h]ye shall receive of me gifts, and [i]rewards, and great honour: therefore show me the dream, and the interpretation thereof.

7 They[j] answered again, and said, Let the king tell his servants the dream, and we will show the interpretation of it.

8 The king answered and said, I know of certainty that ye would gain[7] the time, because ye see the thing is gone from me.[8]

9 But if ye will not make known unto me the dream, there is but [k]one decree for you; [l]for ye have prepared lying and corrupt words to speak before me till the [m]time be [g]changed: therefore tell me the dream, and I [o]shall know that ye can show me the interpretation thereof.

10 ¶ The Chaldeans answered before the king, and said, There is not a man upon the earth that can show the king's matter: therefore there is no king, lord, nor ruler, that asked such things at any magician, or astrologer, or Chaldean.

11 And it is a rare thing that the king requireth: and [p]there is none other that can show it before the king, except the gods, whose [q]dwelling is not with flesh.

* The character of Daniel,' says Faraday, 'runs one and the same through the book, majestic in its noble simplicity. As a prophet of God in a heathen court, and as raised to high dignity in God's providence for the sake of his brethren, he anticipates, in this temporary dissolution of the political existence of his people, a place somewhat corresponding in that of Moses at the beginning. Like Moses he was educated in the highest wisdom of a popular famed for its wisdom. Even this likeness has its unlikeness. In Moses God manifested not his wisdom but his power. Yet, as the wise of the Egyptians were put to shame by the power of God wherewith he clothed Moses, so he joined the reputation of the wisdom of the Babylonian magi, by his Spirit which he placed in the captive boy Daniel. But the resemblance can only be the common principles of God's providence, whereby he at extraordinary times, raises up weapons for the most part, from ordinary instruments of his own to effect his will.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—When men profane God's temple by their sins, it is but just that he should profane it by his judgments. How exactly Hezekiah's pride is punished in the captivity of his seed! They who wish to serve their generation, must not spend their youth in idleness, but in study. And it is shameful for Christians to take less care of educating their children than heathens do of their slaves; and to show less regard to their God than heathens do to their idols. If we receive very furious, and commanded to [f]destroy all the wise men of Babylon.

13 And [g]the decree went forth that the wise men should be slain; and they [h]sought Daniel and his fellows to be slain.

14 ¶ Then[i] Daniel [k]answered[2] with counsel and wisdom to Arioch the captain of the king's guard,[3] which was gone forth to slay the wise men of Babylon:

15 He answered[4] and said to Arioch the king's captain, Why is the decree so hasty from the king? Then Arioch made the thing known to Daniel.

16 Then Daniel went in, and desired [l]of the king that he would give him time, and that he would show the king the interpretation.

17 Then Daniel went to his house, and made the thing known to Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, his companions;

18 That[j] they would desire mercies of the God of heaven[5] concerning this secret, that Daniel and his fellows [m]should not perish[6] with the rest of the wise men of Babylon.

19 Then[n] was the secret revealed unto Daniel in a night vision. Then Daniel blessed the God of heaven.

20 Daniel answered[7] and said, [o]Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever; for [p]wisdom and might are his:

21 And [q]he changeth the times and the seasons: he removeth kings, and setteth up kings: he[r] giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding.

22 He[s] revealeth the deep and secret things: he[t] knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him.

23 I[u] thank thee, and praise thee, O thou God of my fathers,[8] who hast given me wisdom and might, and [v]hast made known unto me now what we desired of thee: for thou hast now made known unto us the king's matter.

24 ¶ Therefore Daniel [w]went in unto Arioch, whom the king had ordained to destroy the wise men of Babylon: he went and said thus unto him, [x]Destroy not the wise men of Babylon: bring me in before the king, and I will show unto the king the interpretation.

25 Then Arioch brought in Daniel before the king in haste, and said thus unto him, I have found[9] a man of the captives of Judah[1] that will make known unto the king the interpretation.

26 The king answered, and said to Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, [y]Art thou able to make known unto me the dream which I have seen, and the interpretation thereof?

27 Daniel answered in the presence of the king, and said, The secret which the king hath demanded, [z]cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, show unto the king;

28 But [a]there is a God in heaven[2] that revealeth secrets, and maketh[3] known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be [b]in the latter days. Thy dream, and the visions of thy head upon thy bed, are these;

29 As for thee, O king, thy thoughts came into thy mind[4] upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter; and [c]he that revealeth secrets maketh known to thee what shall come to pass.

30 But as for me, [d]this secret is not revealed to me for any wisdom that I have more than any living, but [e]for their sakes[5] that shall make known the interpretation[6] to the king, and that thou mightest know the thoughts of thy heart.

31 ¶ Thou, O king, sawest,[7] and, behold, [f]a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee, and the form thereof was terrible.

32 This image's head[8] was [g]of fine gold, [h]his breast and his arms of silver,[9] his[i] belly and his [k]thighs[2] of brass,

33 His[l] legs of iron,[3] his feet part of iron and part of clay.

34 Thou sawest till [m]that a stone[4] was cut out [n]without hands,[6] which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces.

35 Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became [o]like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image [p]became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

36 This is the dream; and [q]we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king.

37 Thou, O king, art [r]a king of kings: [s]for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory.

38 And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the heaven, hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this [t]head of gold.[7] favours from men, let us always view them as the gift of God, and be the more careful to avoid every appearance of evil; and let us always be humble under humbling providences. Let us never be backward to that self-denial which tends to prevent sin: and for that end, let us improve whatever interest we have with the great. Whatever in diet, or anything else, we willingly lose for God's honour, will prove clear gain in the issue. Proper abstemiousness and temperance contribute to the improvement of our mind as well as the health of our body. God honours them that honour him, while they who despise him are lightly esteemed. And they who mourn much with Zion in her distress are, if for their good, spared to share with her in the joys of her deliverance.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 31-45. This great image, beheld in a quickly forgotten dream, represented the successive empires in the world as but an empty show, a terrible but quickly forgotten vision. The golden head was the Chaldean monarchy, extremely rich, and, in appearance lasting, including the Assyrian; it continued about 240 years. The breast and arms of silver signified the Medo-Persian, established by Cyrus, which lasted about 204 years. The belly and thighs of brass represented the strong, though less rich, empire of the Greeks, which was chiefly continued in the two king-

39 And[s] after thee shall arise [t]another kingdom inferior to thee, and [u]another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth.

40 And the [v]fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise.

41 And whereas thou sawest [w]the feet and toes part of potter's clay and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay.

42 And as the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken.[8]

43 And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men;[9] but they shall not cleave one to another,[1] even as iron is not mixed with clay.

44 And in the days[2] of these kings[3] shall the God of heaven [x]set up a kingdom[4] which[y] shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom[5] shall not be left to other people, but it shall [z]break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever.

45 Forasmuch as thou sawest that [a]the stone was cut out of the mountain [b]without hands,[6] and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter:[7] and the dream is [c]certain, and the interpretation thereof sure.

46 ¶ Then the king Nebuchadnezzar [d]fell upon his face, and worshipped Daniel,[8] and commanded that they should offer an oblation and sweet odours unto him.

47 The king answered unto Daniel, and said, Of[e] a truth it is, that your God is a God of gods, and a Lord of kings, and a [f]revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldest reveal this secret.

48 Then the king made Daniel [g]a great man, and gave him many great gifts, and made him ruler over the whole province of Babylon, and chief[z] of the governors over all the wise men of Babylon.

49 Then Daniel requested of the king, and [a]he set Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, over the affairs of the province of Babylon: but Daniel [b]sat in the gate of the king.

CHAPTER III.

1 Nebuchadnezzar dedicateth a golden image in Dura. 8 Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego are accused for not worshipping the image. 13 They, being threatened, make a good confession. 19 God delivereth them out of the furnace. 26 Nebuchadnezzar seeing the miracle blesseth God.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR the king [c]made an image[1] of gold, whose height was threescore cubits,[2] and the breadth thereof six cubits: he set it up in the plain of Dura, in the province of Babylon.

2 Then Nebuchadnezzar the king sent [b]to gather together the princes, the governors, and the captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellors, the sheriffs,[3] and all the rulers of the provinces, to come to the dedication of the image which Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up.[4]

3 Then [c]the princes, the governors, and captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellors, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, were gathered together unto the dedication of the image that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up; and they stood before the image that Nebuchadnezzar had set up.

4 Then an herald cried aloud,[5] To you it is commanded,[6] O[d] people, nations, and languages,

5 That at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, [7]dulcimer, and all kinds of music,[8] ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up:

6 And whoso falleth not down and worshippeth, [e]shall the same hour[9] be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace.

7 Therefore at that time, when all the people heard the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and all kinds of music, [g]all the people, the nations, and the languages, fell down and worshipped the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up.

8 ¶ Wherefore at that time certain Chaldeans came near, and [h]accused the Jews.

9 They spake and said to the king Nebuchadnezzar, [i]O king, live for ever.

[s] It is remarkable that this is the first time that an 'hour' is mentioned in the Holy Scriptures. And it is worthy of notice, that Herodotus says the Greeks received the duodecimal division of the day from the Babylonians, whose astrologers, studied amongst, as afterwards in Europe, into the genuine and more dignified science of astronomy, would naturally lead them to a division, the variety of whose parts would facilitate their necessary calculations—for the natural division of the year into months, and of the heavens into twelve corresponding signs, may have combined to suggest a corresponding division of the day by twelve hours.—C.

[1] An image. Josephus relates that Nebuchadnezzar built a statue of gold 60 feet in height out of the temple of Belus when he destroyed it, which may have been the image here mentioned. The height of 60 cubits (say 90 feet) is not to be assigned to the body of the image, but to the image and the pedestal on which it stood.—C.

If it was about 90 feet high and 9 broad it must be Chaldean, and about 10 feet high and 10 feet broad if the measure be French.

[2] It is impossible to find offices in any modern European state exactly answering to the original words; but the variety serves to show that 'division of labour' which marks a well-organized government.—C.

[3] The object of the king in setting up this image was most probably political. It was to test in a rude and idolatrous manner the sincerity of the honours ascribed to him by his subjects. It was not unusual for monarchs in ancient times to claim divine honours, and perhaps the image set up was a representative of the king. At any rate, it would be a command which was the sole authority for worshipping it. Refusal might, therefore, be interpreted as opposing the royal command. doms of Egypt on the south and Syria on the north, lasting in all about 320 years. The legs of iron, and the feet ending in ten TOES of iron and clay, never rightly joined, denote the Roman empire, very strong, and very destructive and conquering, which, after having two joint-consuls, and two conjunct emperors of east and west, was at last formed into ten different kingdoms, consisting partly of the old Roman subjects, and partly of the barbarous nations which invaded and ravaged the empire: it is not yet quite destroyed. The little stone, cut out of the mountain without hands, and breaking in pieces the remains of these empires, and becoming a great mountain, filling the whole earth, is the gospel church, supernaturally formed in the countries and on the ruins of these ancient empires, and which did, in the apostolic age, and will, especially in the millennium, extend over the whole habitable world. See Introduction, ch. iv. sect. xii.–xv. xix.

Ver. 35. A mountain filling the whole earth, has appeared to some an unintelligible figure. The difficulty, however, lies not in the image, but in the manner of picturing it. For example, Mount Sinai, Mount Hor, Mount Seir, are not single mountains, but vast mountain ranges, which it were easy to picture extended over the whole earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—To what perplexing cares and anxieties are great men subjected by God! To what pangs, what sleepless hours, because of fear in the night! It is dreadful to be under the power of wicked and unreasonable men. Yet by the most unexpected means God can punish impostors and exalt the faithful. How inexpressibly valuable are friends mighty in prayer!—Fervent prayer is powerful to unlock the mysteries of Providence. And there is great need of earnestness in it when the faithful are in danger of suffering as evil-doers. God must be thankfully acknowledged as the bestower of wisdom and every good gift. But humble souls will rather attribute the obtaining of his favours to the prayers of their friends than their own: and distinguished abilities never appear so grand as when accompanied with uncommon humility. Whatever influence we have with great men should be improved in attempts to bring them to the true God; as no princes, no, not the greatest, have any power but from him. Earthly kingdoms do but overturn one another to make way for the fixed and everlasting kingdom of Christ. And as kings ought to advance to power the qualified children of God, so they whom Providence exalts ought never to forget their old friends.

CHAPTER III. REFLECTIONS.—At what expense will proud men dare to affront JEHOVAH, and mark their gratitude to an idol which never showed them a favour! Sinners readily comply with the most wicked commands of terrible tyrants: and few can at 10 Thou,[j] O king, hast made a decree, that every man that shall hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of music, shall fall down and worship the golden image:

11 And [k]whoso falleth not down and worshippeth, that he should be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace.

12 There are certain Jews,[1] whom thou hast set over the affairs of the province of Babylon, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego; these men, O king, have not regarded thee;[2] they serve not thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

13 ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar, [l]in his rage and fury, commanded to bring Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. [m]Then they brought these men before the king.

14 Nebuchadnezzar spake and said unto them, Is it true,[3] O Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, do not ye serve [n]my gods, nor worship the golden image which I have set up?

15 Now, if ye be ready, that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye [p]fall down and worship the image which I have made, [q]well: but if ye worship not, ye shall be cast the same hour into the midst of a burning fiery furnace: and [r]who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?

16 Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego answered and said to the king, O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not [4]careful[5] to answer thee in this matter.

17 If it be so, our God, [s]whom we serve, is able[t] to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace; and [u]he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king.[6]

18 But if not, [v]be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not [w]serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

19 ¶ Then was Nebuchadnezzar full[7] of [y]fury, and the form of his visage was changed against Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego: [z]therefore he spake, and commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated.

20 And he commanded the [8]most mighty men[9] that were in his army to [a]bind Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego; and to cast them into the burning fiery furnace.

* The Son of God. How could the idolatrous king have this knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ? Some, in reply, translate the phrase, 'a son of God,' or 'of the God.' But may not Nebuchadnezzar have heard of the Son of God from the Hebrew Psalms, or from Daniel their interpreter? and, as a monarch who constitutes a very centre to prophetical vision, may he not have been supernaturally compelled to bear this official testimony now to the personal glory of the Son, as Caiaphas was afterwards to his humiliation and atonement? 22 Therefore because the king's commandment[4] was urgent, and the furnace exceeding hot, the [5]flame[6] of the fire [b]slew those men that took up Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego.

23 And these three men, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, [c]fell down bound into the midst of the burning fiery furnace.

24 ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar the king [d]was astonied, and rose up in haste, and spake, and said unto his counsellors,[7] Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire? They answered and said unto the king, True, O king.

25 He answered and said, Lo, I see[8] four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt;[9] and the form of the fourth is like [e]the Son[1] of God.[2]

26 Then Nebuchadnezzar came near to the mouth[3] of the burning fiery furnace, and spake, and said, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, ye [f]servants of the [g]most high God, [h]come forth, and come hither. Then Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, came forth of the midst of the fire.

once withstand the charms of music and the terrors of a fiery furnace. Everywhere there are villains ready to accuse the faithful servants of God. But it is honourable to the cause of God when, in the way of duty, we avoid all parleying with temptation, and drop all care about the consequences; when faith in God casts out slavish fears; and when self-denial prepares for the severest conflicts. How terrible and violent the passions of proud men become when they are indulged! they bid defiance to everything human! and it is dangerous to be the instruments of persecution and cruelty to tyrannical princes; but always safe and honourable to suffer for Jesus Christ. He will walk with his people in that fiery furnace, and they shall reign with him on his throne. God can easily convince the proudest, that wherein they deal proudly he is above them; and can extort confessions of his Godhead from such as had been just ready to curse him to his face. But he greatly honours those who obey, and seek praise of him rather than of men: and it is a mercy to his church to have the mouths of her enemies stopped, even when their hearts are not turned to God. And princes should prudently prefer those to places of power and trust whom they have found faithful to God.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 13. A watcher and an holy one. By consulting Ge. 31. 49; Job 14. 16; Je. 31. 28; 44. 27, the providence of God will be found explained by God's 'watching' over human affairs either in relation to good or evil; and as it is evident from ver. 17 that 'the decree of the watchers' is the purpose of providence; and as from ver. 8, 18 it appears that Nebuchadnezzar directly ascribes 'holiness' to God; therefore the conclusion seems manifest, that by 'watcher and holy one,' he meant some such visible manifestation of God, ever watchful in providence, ever holy in nature, as that to which he had previously referred in the miraculous preservation of the three confessors, ch. 3. 25. C.

Ver. 30. He had not founded, but he had extended the city, and greatly beautified it. It might truly be called 'great,' being fifty miles in circumference, surrounded by walls 200 royal cubits high by 50 in breadth, and entered by 100 gates of solid brass,

CHAPTER IV.

1 Nebuchadnezzar acknowledgeth God's eternal dominion, 4 maketh relation of his dream, which the magicians could not interpret. 8 Daniel heareth the dream. 19 He interpreteth it. 28 The story of the event.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR the king, [a]unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; Peace[1] be multiplied unto you.

2 I thought it good[2] to show the signs and wonders that the high God hath wrought toward me.

3 How[b] great are his signs! and how mighty are his [c]wonders! his kingdom is an [d]everlasting kingdom, and his [e]dominion is from generation to generation.

4 ¶ I Nebuchadnezzar was [g]at rest[3] in mine house, and flourishing in my palace:

5 I saw a dream [h]which made me afraid, and the thoughts upon my bed and the visions of my head troubled me.

6 Therefore made I a decree [i]to bring in all the wise men of Babylon before me, that they might make known unto me the interpretation of the dream.

7 Then[j] came in the magicians, the astrologers, the Chaldeans, and the soothsayers: and I told the dream before them; but they did not make known unto me the interpretation thereof.

8 ¶ But at the last [k]Daniel came in before me, whose name was Belteshazzar, according to the name of [l]my god, and [m]in whom is the spirit of the holy gods:[4] and before him I told the dream, saying,

9 O Belteshazzar, [o]master of the magicians, because I know that the spirit of the holy gods is in thee, and no secret [p]troubleth thee, [5]tell me[6] the visions of my dream that I have seen, and the interpretation thereof.

10 Thus were the visions of mine head in my bed: I saw,[7] and, behold, [q]a tree in the midst of the earth,[8] and the height thereof was great.

11 The tree grew, and was strong, and the height thereof [r]reached unto heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth.

12 The leaves thereof were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all: [s]the beasts of the field had shadow under it, and the fowls of the heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof, and all flesh was fed of it.

13 I saw in the visions of my head upon my bed, and, behold, a watcher[9] and an [t]holy one came down from heaven.

14 He cried aloud,[1] and said thus, [u]Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches, shake off his leaves, and scatter his fruit: let the beasts get away from under it, and the fowls from his branches.[2]

15 Nevertheless,[a] leave the stump of his roots in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass,[3] in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts in the grass of the earth:

16 Let his heart [z]be changed from man's, and let a beast's heart be given unto him; and let seven times[4] pass over him.

17 This matter is [3]by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones:[5] to the intent [5]that the living may know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it [a]the basest[6] of men.

18 This dream I king Nebuchadnezzar have seen. Now thou, O Belteshazzar, declare the interpretation thereof, forasmuch as all the wise men of my kingdom [b]are not able to make known unto me the interpretation: but [c]thou art able; for the spirit of the holy gods is in thee.

19 ¶ Then Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, [d]was astonied for one hour, and his thoughts troubled him. The king spake and said, Belteshazzar, [e]let not the dream, or the interpretation thereof, trouble thee. Belteshazzar answered and said, [6]My lord, the dream be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies.[7]

20 The[h] tree that thou sawest, which grew, and was strong, whose height reached unto the heaven, and the sight thereof to all the earth;

21 Whose leaves were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all; under which the beasts of the field dwelt, and upon whose branches the fowls of the heaven had their habitation:

22 It[i] is thou, O king, that art grown and become strong: for thy greatness is grown, and reacheth unto heaven,[8] and thy dominion to the end of the earth.

23 And whereas the king saw a watcher and an holy one [j]coming down from heaven, and saying, Hew the tree down, and destroy it; yet leave the stump of the roots thereof in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts of the field, till seven [8]times pass over him;

24 This is the interpretation, O king, and this is [k]the decree of the Most High, which is come [l]upon my lord the king:

25 That they shall [m]drive thee[1] from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field, and they shall make thee to eat grass[2] as oxen, and they shall wet thee with the dew of

1 This is perhaps the most ancient state paper upon record, and, in all probability, is the composition of Nebuchadnezzar himself. See ver. 2, 4, 5, 6, 18, 19, 34, 36, 37. Whether it be his, or that of a secretary, it abounds in numerical lie current with the states papers, and even with the religious proclamations of modern Christian kingdoms. m The original is plural; but may, according to the custom of the language, be translated "holy God."—See Winder's Translation. Is it not, however, more than probable that the king, having professed in the preceding verses of Daniel, makes reference to the plural form of the name of God in Ge.1.1, &c., and to the Trinity of persons in the divine Unity, with which the Jews were at all times well acquainted, and many traces of which, though battled, obscured, and perverted, are also to be found amongst the heathen poets and philosophers? This view is the more confirmed by the fact, that Nebuchadnezzar employs the word 'Spirit' in the neuter form, as in the Old and New Testaments. —C.

7 Nebuchadnezzar was a tyrant, yet he had shown kindness to Daniel and his companions. Daniel felt grateful; he became attached to the king. He had a tender heart, and from this shows that he was overwhelmed with grief when, through the medium of this vision, he saw the terrible calamity that was about to fall upon his royal master. It was not fear kept him from speaking: it was sorrow.—"His thoughts troubled him." When he speaks it is with equal tenderness and truth. And after giving the interpretation of the fearful dream, with what gentle words does he urge the king to repentance: —"Wherefore, O king, break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor, if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquility." P.

and of prodigious size and strength; around the walls were 250 towers. The whole city was divided into 676 squares, the houses three or four stories in height, and ornamented by all the resources of oriental magnificence. MARRIAGE CEREMONY IN CAIRO. [Daniel, iv.]—The picturesqueness of Oriental civilization strikes with great force every one upon his first visit to the East. There is much of color everywhere. The people seem to be slow and dull and to possess a large share of physical inertia and repose, but if we look outside to the material elements of Eastern civilization, everything is so highly colored as would naturally lead one to suppose that they were the expressions of excited imagination. The scene which we give above of a marriage ceremony in Cairo is of a piece with the whole of Egyptian civilization. The scene is festive and picturesque to the last degree. One would suppose from seeing such a procession go by that the parties were playing at marriage. The procession is headed by a body of musicians, and amid it all there is laughter and shouting and the jingle of tambourines.

heaven, and seven times shall pass over thee, till[o] thou know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

26 And whereas they commanded to leave the stump of the tree-roots; [p]thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens[3] do rule.

27 Wherefore,[q] O king, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, [r]and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor; [s]if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity.[4]

28 ¶ All[t] this came upon the king Nebuchadnezzar.

29 At the end of twelve months[5] he walked in[6] the palace of the kingdom of Babylon.

30 The[u] king spake and said, Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?

31 While[v] the word was in the king's mouth, there fell a voice from heaven, saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, [w]to thee it is spoken; The kingdom is departed from thee;

32 And[x] they shall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field: they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and seven times shall pass over thee, [y]until thou know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

33 The same hour was the thing fulfilled upon Nebuchadnezzar:[7] and he was driven from men, and did eat grass as oxen,[8] and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hairs were grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like birds' claws.

34 And [z]at the end of the days I Nebuchadnezzar [a]lifted up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine understanding returned[9] unto me; and I blessed[b] the Most High; and I praised and honoured him that [c]liveth for ever, whose dominion is [d]an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom is from generation to generation:

35 And[e] all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and [f]he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; [g]and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?

36 At the same time my reason returned unto me; and for the [h]glory of my kingdom, mine honour and brightness returned unto me; and [i]my counsellors and my lords sought unto me; and [k]I was established in my kingdom, and excellent majesty [l]was added unto me.

37 Now I Nebuchadnezzar praise and extol and honour the King of heaven, [m]all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment: and [n]those that walk in pride he is able to abase.

CHAPTER V.

1 Belshazzar's impious feast. 5 A hand-writing, unknown to the magicians, troubleth the king. 10 At the recommendation of the queen, Daniel is brought. 17 He, reproving the king of pride and idolatry, 25 readeth and interpreteth the writing. 30 Belshazzar slain; the kingdom translated to the Medes.

BELSHAZZAR[1] the king made [a]a great feast to a thousand of his lords, and drank wine before the thousand.

2 Belshazzar, whiles he tasted the wine, commanded to bring [b]the golden and silver vessels which his father[2] Nebuchadnezzar had taken out[3] of the temple which was in Jerusalem; that the king, and his princes, his wives, and his concubines, [c]might drink therein.

3 Then they brought the golden vessels that were taken out of the temple of the house of God which was at Jerusalem; and the king, and his princes, his wives, and his concubines, drank in them.

4 They drank wine, and [d]praised the gods [e]of gold, and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone.

5 ¶ In[g] the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaster of the wall of the king's palace; and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote.

6 Then[h] the king's countenance[4] was [5]changed, and his thoughts troubled him, so that the [6]joints[7] of his loins were loosed, and his knees smote one against another.

7 The king cried [8]aloud [i]to bring in the astrologers, the Chaldeans, and the soothsayers. And the king spake, and said to the wise men of Babylon, Whosoever shall read this writing, and show me the interpretation thereof, [j]shall be clothed with scarlet,[9] and have a chain of gold about his neck, and shall be the [k]third ruler in the kingdom.

8 Then came in all the king's wise men: [l]but

[9] This returning of the understanding [see also ver. 36] clearly proves that Nebuchadnezzar had been smitten with some such mental malady as physicians call hypochondriasis. In this disease the patient sometimes fancies himself a piece of furniture, a beast, &c. It is most probable that Nebuchadnezzar fancied himself an ox (ver. 32), and that some of his deceitful flatterers, taking advantage of his mental aberration, succeeded in driving him from the throne and usurping his authority.—C.

B.C. cir. 538.

1 This is a very difficult problem of chronology. The common account is, that Nebuchadnezzar's reign ended B.C. 561, succeeded by Evil-merodach in B.C. 560; succeeded by Neriglissar, B.C. 559, and who perished in battle against Cyrus, and was succeeded by his son Labarosoarchod, B.C. 555, and being assassinated by Gobryas, was succeeded by Belshazzar the son of Evil-merodach, B.C. 554, in whose reign the city was taken by Cyrus, B.C. 538. But, according to Hales, the succession was thus: — Nebuchadnezzar, who died and ended the throne B.C. 604, was succeeded by his son Evil-merodach, B.C. 561. He was succeeded by Belshazzar, B.C. 558, who was killed by conspirators on the night of the feast, leaving a son, Labo-rosoarchod, who, after a reign of nine months, died, and was peaceably succeeded by Darius the Mede, whose viceroy, Nabonnidus, revolting, Cyrus marched against Babylon and took it, as foretold by Jeremiah, ch. li.—C.

markably rebuke or deliver us, we ought to manifest his dealings to those around us. And the more wisdom and power we discern in his works of creation or providence, the more wonderful will they be in our eyes. God can easily reach the greatest, and make the terrors of mankind tormentors to themselves amidst their nightly repose. It is common for wicked men to apply to the devil, or to anything, rather than to God, for instruction and comfort. But what is the chaff to the wheat? What amazing pomp and grandeur sinners sometimes arrive at on earth! yet saints, angels, and divine persons shall concur to debase them. With deep concern faithful ministers observe ruin impending on the heads of many quite unaffected with it themselves. And with great freedom and prudence ought they to give warning of it; for sinners must be often courted to secure their own mercies. And they who wish to know God's mind, ought to encourage ministers in an unrestrained freedom with them. Perhaps they may have time for repentance allotted them before they are ruined. And in repentance, it is not enough to cease from doing evil, we must also learn to do well.—How strangely pride prevails after the most humbling warnings! and few sins more certainly or fearfully provoke God's judgments than extravagant pride. Easily he can render the self-fancied deity a mad and senseless brute! But if we return to him by penitential acknowledgments, he is ready to restore us to our dignity and honour. Our afflictions last no longer than to accomplish God's end of their mission. And therefore all the accounts which we give or receive of God's marvellous works ought to begin and end with his praise.

CHAPTER V. REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how mad is it to riot in luxury and carnal security—in drunkenness and uncleanness; when death and hell stand ready to receive us! But awfully criminal is that mirth in which men profane or jest with sacred things. Immorality and impiety, drunkenness and idolatry, greatly promote one another. And indeed drunken worshippers are good enough for dunghill gods. How easily they could not read the writing,[1] nor make known to the king the interpretation thereof.

9 Then was king Belshazzar [n]greatly troubled, and his countenance[2] was changed in him, and his lords [o]were astonied.

10 ¶ Now the [3]queen,[4] by reason of the words of the king and his lords, came into the banquet-house; and the queen spake and said, [p]O king, live for ever; [q]let not thy thoughts trouble thee, nor let thy countenance be changed:

11 There[r] is a man in thy kingdom, in whom is the spirit of the holy gods: and, in the days of thy father,[5] light, and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him; whom the king Nebuchadnezzar thy father,[6] the king, I say, thy father, made [s]master of the magicians, astrologers, Chaldeans, and soothsayers;

12 Forasmuch as [t]an excellent spirit, and knowledge, and understanding, interpreting[7] of dreams, and showing of hard sentences, and dissolving[8] of doubts,[9] were found in the same Daniel, whom the king named [u]Belteshazzar: now let Daniel be called, and he will show the interpretation.

13 Then was Daniel brought in before the king. And the king spake and said unto Daniel, Art thou [v]that Daniel,[1] which art of the children of the captivity of Judah, whom the king my father[2] brought out of Jewry?[3]

14 I[x] have even heard of thee, that the spirit of the gods is in thee, and that light, and understanding, and excellent wisdom, is found in thee.

15 And[y] now the wise men, the astrologers, have been brought in before me, that they should read this writing, and make known unto me the interpretation thereof: but they could not show the interpretation of the thing:

16 And I have heard of thee, that thou canst make[4] interpretations, and dissolve doubts: now, if thou canst read the writing, and make known to me the interpretation thereof, [z]thou shalt be clothed with scarlet, and have a chain of gold about thy neck, and shalt be the third ruler[5] in the kingdom.

17 ¶ Then Daniel answered and said before the king, [a]Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy rewards[6] to another; yet I will read the writing[b] unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation.[7]

18 O thou king, the most high [c]God gave Nebuchadnezzar thy father[8] a kingdom, and majesty, and glory, and honour:

19 And,[d] for the majesty that he gave him, all people, nations, and languages, trembled and feared before him: whom he would he slew, and whom he would he kept alive, and whom he would he set up, and whom he would he put down.

20 But [e]when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened in pride,[9] he was deposed[1] from his kingly throne, and they took his glory from him:

21 And he was driven from the sons of men; and his heart was made like[2] the beasts, and his dwelling was with the wild asses: they fed him with grass like oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven; [f]till he knew that the most high God ruled in the kingdom of men, and that he appointeth over it whomsoever he will.

22 And [g]thou his son, O Belshazzar, [h]hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knewest all this;

23 But [i]hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven; [k]and they have brought the vessels of his house before thee, and thou, and thy lords, thy wives, and thy concubines, have drunk wine in them; and thou hast [l]praised the gods of silver, and gold, of brass, iron, wood, and stone, [m]which see not, nor hear, nor know: and the God [n]in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not [p]glorified:

24 Then[q] was the part of the hand sent from him; and this writing was written.

25 ¶ And this is the writing that was written, MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.[3]

26 This is the interpretation of the thing: MENE; God hath [r]numbered thy kingdom, and finished it.

27 TEKEL; thou art [s]weighed in the balances, and art found [t]wanting.

28 PERES; thy kingdom is divided,[4] and given to the Medes and Persians.

29 Then commanded Belshazzar, and they [u]clothed Daniel with scarlet, and put a chain of gold about his neck, and made a proclamation concerning him, that he should be the third ruler in the kingdom.

30 ¶ In[v] that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain.[5]

31 And [w]Darius the Median[6] took the kingdom, [7]being about[8] threescore and two years old.

1 How comes it to pass that Belshazzar does not know so notable a person as Daniel? The recluse education of an eastern prince would quite sufficiently account for his ignorance. His attachment to idolatry will further account for Daniel being kept out of the way by the idolatrous court party. Added to these things, Daniel, as a pious student of the divine Word, would naturally live retired in the Chaldean college of which he was president, and had, most probably, after the death of Nebuchadnezzar, been removed from his place in the cabinet.—C.

7 The difference in tone and language between this address and that of Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar is very marked. This is bold, severe, and determined. The indignation of the prophet has been roused by the desecration of the sacred vessels of the temple. The sin of Belshazzar was aggravated; it was presumptuous defiance of the God of Israel. Daniel, therefore, as God's prophet, shows no compassion. He feels that he must vindicate the divine honour, and he refuses—haughtily refuses, to accept any reward. It is strange, however, that after the interpretation was given, rewards and honours were forced upon him. The reason probably was, the desire of the terrified monarch to propitiate the Lord's prophet.—C.

can God awaken the most secure, and cause the stoutest heart to tremble! and the incapacity of creatures to comfort adds to the terror. But if a handwriting on a wall can so affect sinners, how is it that they do not tremble to see every day, in the Bible, God's handwriting, denouncing their everlasting ruin! Wise counsellors are strangely overlooked at luxurious courts. But necessity nevertheless often forces their despisers to receive them back to honour and regard; and such are worthy of praise who again introduce them to esteem. Ministers ought to deal faithfully with the greatest, in showing them their guilt, their presumptu

2 And over these, three presidents, of whom Daniel was [c]first; that the princes might [d]give accounts unto them, and the king should have no damage.

3 Then this Daniel was [e]preferred above the presidents and princes, because [f]an excellent spirit[2] was in him; and the king thought to set him over the whole realm.

4 ¶ Then the presidents and princes [h]sought to find occasion against Daniel concerning the kingdom; but they could [i]find none occasion nor fault; forasmuch as he was faithful, neither was there any error or fault found in him.

5 Then said these men, We shall not find any occasion against this Daniel, [j]except we find it against him concerning the law of his God.

6 Then these presidents and princes assembled together[3] to the king, and said thus unto him, King Darius, [k]live for ever.

7 All the presidents of the kingdom, the governors, and the princes, the counsellors, and the captains, have [l]consulted together to establish a royal statute, and to make a firm decree,[4] that whosoever shall ask a petition of any God or man for thirty days, save of thee, O king, he shall be cast into the den of lions.

8 Now, O king, [n]establish the decree, and sign the writing, that it be not changed, according to the [o]law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not.[5]

9 Wherefore [p]king Darius signed the writing and the decree.

10 ¶ Now when Daniel [q]knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his [r] windows being open in his chamber towards Jerusalem, [s]he kneeled upon his knees three[t] times a day, and prayed, and [u]gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime.[6]

11 Then these men assembled,[7] and found Daniel praying and making supplication before his God.

12 Then they [v]came near, and spake before the king concerning the king's decree; Hast thou not signed a decree, that every man that shall ask a petition of any God or man within thirty days, save of thee, O king, shall be cast into the den of lions? The king answered and said, The thing is true,[8] according[x] to the law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not.

13 Then answered they, and said before the king, [y]That Daniel, which is of the children of the captivity of Judah, regardeth not thee, O king, nor the decree that thou hast signed, [z]but maketh his petition three times a day.

14 Then the king, when he heard these words, [a]was sore displeased with himself, and set his heart on Daniel to deliver him; and he [g]laboured till the going down of the sun to deliver him.

15 Then these men assembled unto the king, and said unto the king, [b]Know, O king, that the law of the Medes and Persians is, that no decree nor statute which the king establisheth may be changed.

16 Then[c] the king commanded, and they [d]brought Daniel, and cast him into the den of lions. Now the king spake and said unto Daniel, [e]Thy God, whom thou servest continually, he will [g]deliver thee.

17 And[h] a stone was brought, and laid upon the mouth of the den;[1] and the king sealed it with his own signet, and with the signet of his lords, that the purpose might not be changed concerning Daniel.

18 ¶ Then the king went to his palace, [i]and passed the night fasting: neither were instruments[2] of music brought before him; and his sleep went from him.

19 Then the king arose very [j]early in the morning, and went in haste unto the den of lions.

20 And when he came to the den, he cried with a lamentable voice unto Daniel; and the king spake and said to Daniel, [k]O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest [l]continually, [n]able to deliver thee from the lions?

21 Then said Daniel unto the king, [o]O king, live for ever.

22 My God hath sent [p]his angel, and hath [q]shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me: [r]forasmuch as before him innocency was found in me; and also before thee, O king, have I done no hurt.

23 Then was the king [s]exceeding glad for him, and commanded that they should take Daniel up[3] out of the den. So Daniel was taken up out of the den, [t]and no manner of hurt was found upon him, [u]because he believed in his God.

24 ¶ And the king commanded, [v]and they brought those men which had accused Daniel, and they cast them into the den of lions,[4] them, their children, and their wives; and the lions had the [x]mastery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came at the bottom of the den.

25 ¶ Then king Darius [y]wrote unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; [z]Peace be multiplied unto you.

26 I[a] make a decree, that in every dominion

6 The Jews turned in prayer towards the most holy place in the temple, where the Shekinah glory so long indicated the presence of Jehovah. In case Daniel followed the same custom. He might have prayed in secret, but this would have been a compromise of principle, and he was determined at whatever risk to maintain the honour of his God, and in faith to show to all his entire devotion to and trust in him. His position now was analogous to that of his three brethren in the time of Nebuchadnezzar, and his conduct was equally noble.—P.

* The den is generally represented as a natural cavern with a single opening covered by a stone. But nothing can be more unsuited to the habits of the lion and the means of a comfortable and healthy preservation. Besides, if the den was at Babylon, the existence of a natural cavern or an artificial plain is very improbable—scarcely conceivable. But whether at Babylon or elsewhere, it seems most natural to imagine 'the den' rather a building after the manner of a Roman amphitheatre, where it is well known that criminals, and martyrs of Jesus as foolish as Daniel were wont to be cast to the lions, or even a natural valley, and not a cave, surrounded by a wall, or fenced by a single fence.—C.

9 Though an abolitionist in some departments, he was evidently limited in others, and thus unable to prevail with his perverse counsellors to stay his inconsistent decree.—C.

Note. This example strongly exemplifies the danger of one bad principle—a danger that extends to any legislation, moral, or the clergy. The law of the Medes and Persians altereth not. The statute which the king establisheth may not be changed. Flattery must endow human wisdom and power with the perfections of Deity. To plead against uncertainty, instead of fidelity is adeptest; and Daniel must die—not that guilt may be furnished, but that a bad principle may be observed.—C.

ous pride and profaneness, and what they may expect for their punishment: and God will procure honour to such, even from them who contemn his own word.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 9. How contrary to reason; how mad this decree! The thing would seem impossible, were not the effects of pride and flattery so sadly exhibited every day. These wicked conspirators may have chosen their time when 'the wine and the veil' had dethroned the understanding; for man reduced below the level of the beast is the ready dupe and instrument of every Satanic device. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Steadfast uprightness is the best method of retaining favour and honour in courts, however wicked: by that men may preserve their places amidst strange revolutions. And the more our neighbours wait for our halting, let us be the more circumspect. It is extremely honourable if they can find nothing to accuse us of but the regular worshipping of God. If we thus suffer, we need neither be afraid nor of my kingdom men tremble and fear before the God of Daniel; for he is [b]the living God, and steadfast for ever, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed, and his dominion shall be even unto the end.

CIRCUS OF ROMULUS—BY WHICH ST. PAUL PASSED AS HE WALKED IN CHAINS ALONG THE APPIAN WAY TO ROME. [Daniel, vii.]—As illustrating the great worldly Roman empire which Daniel saw in a vision under the figure of a beast, we give a picture of the Circus of Romulus. This stands on the left of the Appian Way, passing out from Rome about three miles from the city. This circus was built by Maxentius in honor of his son Romulus. The name of the founder was discovered from an inscription beneath the entrance arch at the east end of the circus dedicating it to Divus Romulus. The walls which enclosed the circus have been preserved almost entirely. In length they were 1574 feet, in breadth 269 feet. The circus was large enough to accommodate 18,000 spectators. The two towers we see were supposed to have been the seats of the judges. There is a gate in the right side of the wall through which the dead were carried out.

27 He[c] delivereth and rescueth, and he [d]worketh signs and wonders in heaven and in earth, who hath delivered Daniel from the power[5] of the lions.

28 So this Daniel prospered in the reign of Darius, and in the reign of [e]Cyrus the Persian.[6]

CHAPTER VII.

1 Daniel's vision of the four beasts, 9 and of God's kingdom. 15 The interpretation thereof.

IN the first year of [a]Belshazzar[1] king of Babylon, [b]Daniel had[2] a dream, and visions of his head upon his bed: then he [c]wrote the dream, and told the sum of the matters.[3]

2 Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and, behold, [d]the four winds[4] of the heaven strove upon the [e]great sea.

3 And [g]four great [h]beasts[5] came [i]up from the sea, diverse one from another.

4 The first was [j]like a lion,[6] and had eagles' wings: I beheld till the wings thereof [k]were plucked, and[7] it [l]was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it.

5 And, behold, [m]another beast, a second, like to a bear, and it raised up itself on one side,[8] and it had [n]three ribs[9] in the mouth of it between the teeth of it: and they said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh.

6 After this I beheld, and, lo, [p]another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it [q]four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it.

7 After this I saw in the night visions, and, behold, [r]a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it [s]was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns.[1]

8 I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them [t]another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were [u]eyes like the eyes of man, and [v]a mouth speaking great things.

9 ¶ I beheld till the thrones were [x]cast down, and the [y]Ancient of days did sit, whose [z]garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: [a]his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire.

10 A[b] fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: [c]thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: [d]the judgment was set, and the books were opened.

11 I beheld then, because of [e]the voice of the great words which the horn spake; I beheld, even till [f]the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame.

12 As concerning [h]the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away: yet their lives were prolonged[2] for a season and time.

13 I saw in the night visions, and, behold, ashamed. And it is highly honourable to have our habitations temples for God, and houses of daily, of frequent prayer; and never to omit duty for fear of suffering. But, alas! how unhappy are most princes in the information and advices which they receive! What is done from a conscientious regard to God is represented as done in contempt of their authority: and they are often decoyed into that which is farthest from their intentions. Their flatterers, and their vainglorious humour, plunge them into fearful depths of vexation and torment. But God wonderfully preserves his faithful worshippers: he is a present help in their trouble, and will stand by them in the hour of temptation. And it is kind in such as share his bounty readily to overlook the fault of their unwilling injurers. But dreadful is the danger of their malicious accusers and persecutors. They shall fall into the pit which they had digged for others. The Lord is known by the judgments which he executes; and can make even heathens publish his honours.

†The historical portions of the book follow here. As that was of peculiar interest in the personal history of Daniel and his friends, it has been told, and the prophet now gives a record of his prophetic visions. They are not arranged in chronological order. Some of them were revealed before and some after the close of Darius' reign. Their arrangement, however, is systematic, bringing out in order the great events in the world's history down to the end of time.—C.

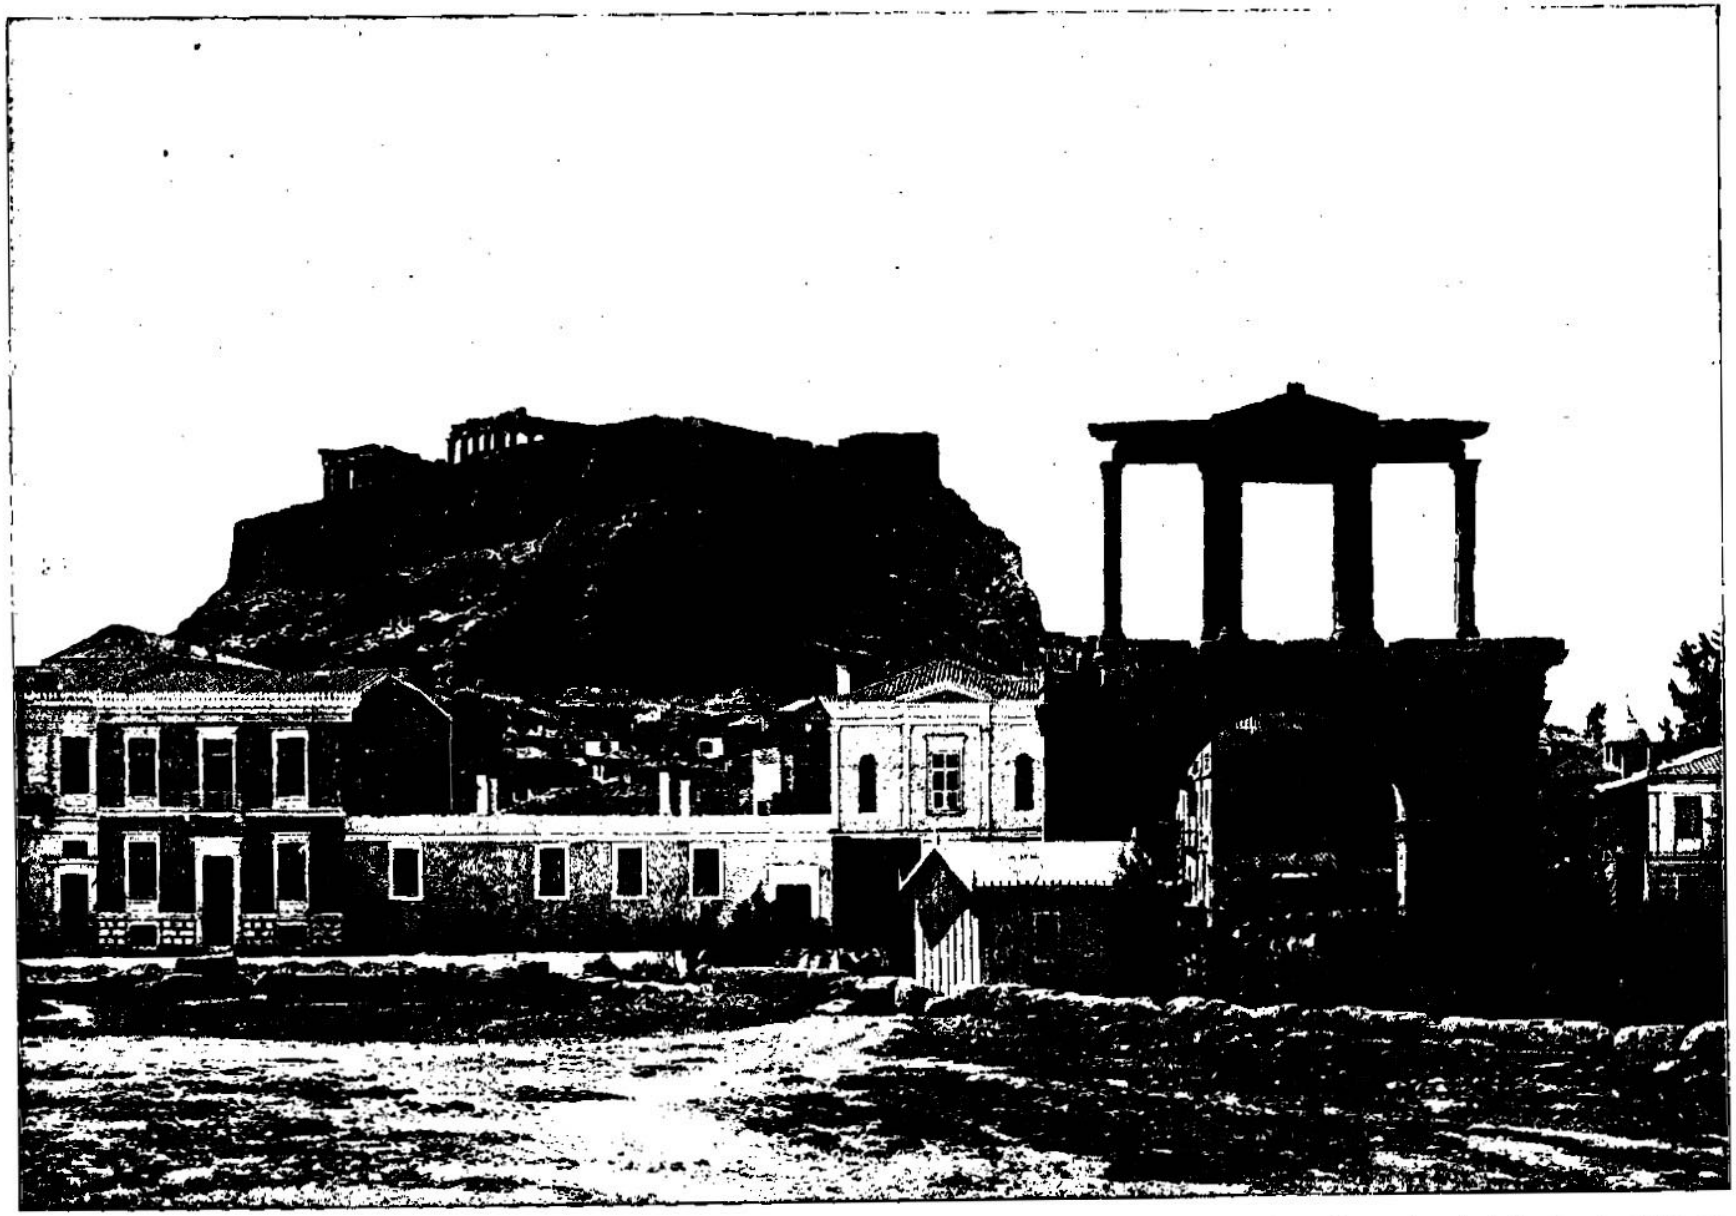
CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1, 8, 11, 12, 17–25. The tempestuous SEA denotes this world filled with contention, violence, and confusion. To represent their emptiness and gradual decay, the four successive monarchies had been represented by a terrible image seen in a forgotten dream. Here, to represent their mischievous nature, they are represented as ravenous beasts. The LION, with eagle's wings soon plucked, and his heart turned into the heart of a man, represents the Chaldean monarchy, strong and despotic, rapid in its conquests; but quickly after Nebuchadnezzar's death all dismembered, weakened, and dispirited. The BEAR, raising itself on one side, having three ribs in its mouth, and devouring much flesh, represents the Medo-Persian monarchy, fierce and savage, but at last lazy and luxurious, raising up itself on the side of Persia, carrying its conquests almost only to the westward, conquering the three kingdoms of Lydia Chaldea, and Egypt, and making fearful slaughter and spoil, especially among the Chaldeans. The LEOPARD, with four wings and four heads, marked the Grecian monarchy, agile, crafty, and spotted by a mixture of vices and virtues; which under Alexander, astonishingly rapid in its conquests; and, after his death, parted into the four kingdoms of Macedonia, Lesser Asia, Syria, and Egypt. The fourth beast, different in form, and dreadfully terrible and strong, with iron teeth, and ten horns, represented the Roman empire, which, in a most fearful manner, by powerful armies, conquered and tyrannized over the known world for many ages, and at last was divided into ten different kingdoms or states. The LITTLE HORN, which sprung up after the rest, and plucked up three of the former, and which had eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things, is the Papal authority, which arose from small beginnings, and, dispossessing three of the Italian powers, became a civil as well as an ecclesiastical principality; and which is noted for craft, circumspection, and vigilance; for blasphemous boasting of their own excellencies and prerogatives, even against God, his laws, and ordinances; for making proud decrees to bind men's consciences; and for the persecution of his people.—It continues 1260 years, or three times, or years, and a half, in prophetic language;—and on account of it, Rome, the seat thereof, will be at last destroyed: whereas, though the Chaldeans, Persians, and Greeks had their imperial power taken from them, they long remained a people.



Ver. 9, 10, 13, 14, 18, 22, 26, 27 represent JEHOVAH as judging and condemning to ruin these monarchies, especially the Roman, that the gospel kingdom of his Son might be established in the world. His white robes denote his unspotted righteousness and holiness in all his proceedings. His white hairs represent his eternity, venerable majesty, and the ripeness of his counsels. His fiery throne his awful scrutiny and fearful condemnations. Its burning wheels and fiery stream denote the swift execution of his sentences and fearful severity of his judgments. His numerous ministers are his angels, and the agents in his providence. The opening of the books denotes the exact discovery he makes of men's works, and the infinite equity and regularity of his decisions. The power here given to the Son of man implies not only his ascension into heaven, but his authority to destroy the Roman and Antichristian powers, in order that his gospel church may fill the whole world, especially in the millennium.

Ver. 6. A leopard a beast of great swiftness, that springs upon its prey a striking emblem of the rapid conquests of Alexander of Macedon. Wings four heads the four kingdoms of Macedon and Greece, Thrace and Bithynia, Egypt, Syria, into which the Grecian empire was divided on the death of Alexander. C.

Ver. 7. A fourth beast—the Roman empire—'diverse from all the beasts that were before it': not in language for in that it was akin to the Greek; nor in religion, for it was idolatrous; nor in form of government, for in that it was in common with all the others; but it was 'diverse' chiefly in this characteristic—its predecessors all openly professed conquest, that they might enslave; Rome always professed reluctant interference, that she might extend popular liberty; and under this mask became, in the language of her flatterers, 'the mistress of the world;' while, in the end, she left not one shred of liberty beyond the privilege of 'Roman citizenship,' most sparingly bestowed upon favoured individuals or cities. Ten horns ten kingdoms, ver. 24. As 'seven' is the emblem of completeness in relation to progressive time, so 'ten' is the emblem of completeness in relation to co-existent property. C.

Ver. 9. Cast down. Rather, till they were placed or set up for judgment.—Ancient of days. God the Father, on the throne of power, in the processes of putting all things under the feet of Jesus, 1 Co. 15. 27. C.

Ver. 11. Great words such as the assumption of 'infallibility,' power to absolve from oaths; to impose new laws; to sell deliverance from purgatory, and grant titles even in heaven.—Till the beast was slain. Till the western Roman monarchy, in all its forms, was destroyed—an awful warning to Europe! [illegible]

GATE OF HADRIAN—IN THE GREAT GRECIAN EMPIRE WHICH APPEARED IN THE VISION OF DANIEL. [Daniel, vii.]—In this seventh chapter of Daniel he has visions of four great worldly empires, viewed in their religious aspects, under the figure of four beasts. These empires are the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian and the Roman. We give as an illustration of the great Grecian empire that for a time ruled the world, a picture of the Gate of Hadrian from the Acropolis in Athens. This arch stands to the northwest of the temple of Jupiter Olympus, and in the above view we are looking toward the northwest. The building is supposed to have served no other purpose than that of a sort of triumphal landmark. On the west side toward the Acropolis this inscription is written over the arch: "This is Athens, the old city of Theseus." On the east side is the inscription: "This is the city of Hadrian, and not of Thescus."

one[i] like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the [j]Ancient of days, and [k]they brought him near before him.

14 And there [l]was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is [m]an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.[3]

15 ¶ I Daniel [n]was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body,[4] and the visions of my head troubled me.

16 I came near unto [o]one of them that stood by, and [p]asked him the truth of all this. So he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things.

17 These great beasts, which are four, are four[r] kings, which shall arise [s]out of the earth.

18 But the saints of the Most High[5] shall[t] take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever.[6]

19 Then I would know the truth[7] of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the others,[8] exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron, and his nails of brass; which devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet;

20 And of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell; even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose[u] look was more stout than his fellows.

21 I beheld, and the same horn [v]made war with the saints, and prevailed against them;

22 Until[x] the Ancient of days came, and judgment[y] was given to the saints of the Most

[6] To understand the full force of this promise, we must connect it with the vision of the Son of Man. All power is conferred upon him. He assumes it not for himself merely, but as the model, the representative, the head of his church. The saints of the Most High rule in the person of their Redeemer. Through him they are made kings and priests; they shall reign with him for ever and ever.—C.

[u] ch.8.10.11.37; ver. 21.

* This is a grand and most instructive vision in ver.13,14. It is especially important as throwing light upon that name—Son of Man—which our Lord so constantly takes to himself. It illustrates also many of those passages in the Gospels in which the name is used in a peculiar and emphatic manner. The first thing that strikes us in comparing this with the other parts of the vision is that we have here the symbol of intellect and reason as opposed to, and triumphing over, mere brute force. We have next imputed the origin and source of this dignity. It is not of earth like the others. Its source is in heaven: its emblems of power and power are heavenly. We have next the introduction of the Son of Man, the symbol and model of regenerated humanity, into the presence of the pure and holy God. We have next—and this is the main, the culminating point of the vision—we have Him conferring upon this Son of Man of unique and everlasting power:—a power absolutely without limit and without end. In this respect the vision may be compared with our Lord's own glorious words in Mat. 28. 18; and with Paul's statement in Eph.1.20-23.—P.

1 Daniel's vision of the ram and he-goat. 13 The days of suspension of the daily sacrifice, and desolation of the sanctuary. 15 Gabriel comforteth Daniel, and interpreteth the vision.

wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth; kiss the Son, lest he be angry and ye perish; blessed are all they that put their trust in him.' Ps. 2. 10. C.

Ver. 12. Had their dominion taken away. The Babylonian, the Medo-Persian, and Grecian monarchies were successively destroyed, as influential powers; but they are still in being under different names, and continue to drag out a dependent and merely tolerated existence, of which the only security is, not their own internal strength, but the mutual jealousy of the great European powers. C.

Ver. 18. Saints of the Most High may literally be rendered, 'But the righteous ones of the holy ones or holy places, see Ep. 2. 6! shall receive the kingdom.' The idea of 'places' is not merely sustained by the marginal authority and Ep. 2. 6, but by the words translated 'most high God,' ch. 3. 26, and 'high God,' ch. 3. 32, which are the same in both, and literally signify 'God of the high, or highest, place.' C.

Ver. 24. The Heruli, Ostrogoths, and Lombards were successively overcome, and their territory annexed to the Papacy, under pretence, nay, perhaps at first, with the sincere intention of being used as means for extending the gospel: and thus the popedom became a temporal kingdom among the ten kingdoms of the West. C.

Ver. 25. Shall wear out the saints. By persecutions; thus the early crusades nearly extirpated the Waldenses and Albigenses: thus the Inquisition suppressed, and for many years seemed to have annihilated, every seed of the Reformation in Italy and Spain: while in Germany, France, Great Britain, and Ireland, massacres, martyrdoms, and dragonades were successively employed to 'wear out' the patience of the saints, extinguish their light, and leave the earth in darkness.—Until a time and times and the dividing of time. 'Time,' a year; 'times,' two years; 'dividing,' half a year: 1260 prophetic days, a day for a year, Eze. 4. 6. At what time these years commence is matter of most serious question. They have generally been dated from 533, when Justinian issued his first edict in favour of the popedom: but others commence as high as 756. Time will reveal it, for the word is sure. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Thrice happy is that retirement from business and courts which is filled up with intimate fellowship with God, and with discoveries of the secrets of his covenant and providence! What a troubled, unsettled, ever-changing, and noisy world is ours, made by the ambitious and contentious men who dwell in it! But all their empires, established by iniquity, are but contemptible things before the eternal God, and mischievous and destructive to one another! Infinite is the glory and majesty, the power and equity, of the Most High; and certain, but tremendous, his appearance for the ruin of his opposers and the establishment of his church! Yea, the reproach of Jesus' cross is effectually wiped away in his solemn exaltation to glory; and shall be in the glory of his church, especially in the millennial and heavenly state. O how affecting are noted revelations from God! There is great need to search into their meaning by prayer and meditation; and, conscious of our weakness, to consult such as can instruct us. And if we ask we shall find. If we run to and fro in diligent search, we shall understand knowledge.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 3–8, 20-22. The RAM with two horns, of which the last sprung was the highest, pushing westward, northward, and southward, and without any effectual resistance, denotes the empire of the Medes and more powerful Persians, which pushed its conquests all along from the Euxine Sea and the Hellespont on the north, to the river Indus on the south, and as far as African Ethiopia and Lydia on the west, containing in all about 1,600,000 square miles. The he-goat, which came flying from the west, and had a notable horn between his eyes, denotes the Grecian monarchy under Alexander marching forces with prodigious rapidity into Persia, conquering it, and erecting a still greater empire on the ruins of it. The four horns which sprung up after the notable horn of the he-goat was broken, refer to the four generals which, after Alexander's death, parted his empire into four kingdoms, of Macedonia, Lesser Asia, Syria, and Egypt. 9–14, 23–25. The little horn which sprung from one of the four horns, and waxed exceeding great, cast down the host of heaven, and magnified himself against their prince, abolished the daily sacrifice, and trode the sanctuary under foot, 2300 days, mornings and evenings, till at last it was broken without hand, denotes Antiochus Epiphanes, a Syro-Grecian king, who, by craft, and by the assistance of some neighbours, obtained the kingdom instead of his nephew; and, becoming strong, persecuted the Jews, profaned their sanctuary, set their high-priesthood to sale, abolished their daily sacrifices about three years, murdered multitudes of them, and, after vowing to extirpate them, was cut off by the fearful vengeance of God. He may also be considered as typical of the popish Antichrist, that chief corrupter and destroyer of the Christian church.

Ver. 3. A ram. The emblem of the Medo-Persian empire was, in the former vision, a 'bear,' ch. 7. 5, emerged from its forest—from a state of savage and uncivilized life; now the emblem is a 'ram'—the empire more civilized, but not the less bent upon universal conquest.—Two horns. The Medes and Persians, ver. 20, of which Persia, that rose into notice last, soon became the greatest, and gave name to the whole empire, which never persecuted the Jews, and abides, though in weakness, till this day. See ch. 7. 12. C.

Ver. 9. A little horn—applied by some to Antiochus Epiphanes; by others to the Romans; by others to Mahomet. That it cannot prefigure Antiochus seems evident from the fact that the power of 'the little horn' was to continue unto 2300 days, ver. 14, which, if literal days, were not fulfilled in the case of Antiochus, for he first took Jerusalem and profaned the temple in 170 B.C., and commenced his persecution of their religion in 168 B.C. But his army was conquered by Judas in 165 B.C., when the sanctuary was cleansed, and the worship restored by Judas;

THE PLACE DE LA CONSTITUTION, ATHENS—ATHENS WAS A FLOURISHING CITY AT THE TIME DANIEL THE PROPHET WROTE HIS BOOK, AND HE REFERS TO GREECE AS THE GREAT POWER WHICH IS TO STRUGGLE WITH PERSIA. [Daniel, viii.]—In the eighth chapter of Daniel the struggle is predicted between the Persian and the Grecian powers. The animals under which these powers were represented were the ram and the he-goat. At the time this prophecy was written the Corinthian order of architecture was invented in Greece by Callimachus. Anacreon, the poet, was alive, as well as Pythagoras, the philosopher, and the third tyranny of Pisistratus was being endured at Athens. We give as illustrating the Grecian side of this history a picture of the Place de la Constitution. In the center of these grounds is the residence of King George the first. This king was placed on the throne of Greece in 1863. He is the son of the king of Denmark, and brother-in-law to the Prince of Wales. He is popular with his people, and in times of distress and calamity he leads in relieving the suffering, and in giving comfort and encouragement to the people.

pass, when I saw, that I was at [c]Shushan,[1] in the palace, which is in the province of [z]Elam;[3] and I saw in a vision, and I was by the river of Ulai.[4]

3 Then I lifted up mine eyes and saw, and, behold, there stood before the river [d]a ram, which had two [e]horns, and the two horns were high; but [e]one was higher than the other,[5] and the higher came up last.

4 I saw the ram [h]pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great.

5 And as I was considering, behold, an [i]he-goat[6] came from the west, on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground:[7] and the goat had a notable horn[8] between his eyes.

6 And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power.

7 And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with [j]choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns;[9] and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, [k]but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him: and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand.

8 Therefore the he-goat [l]waxed very great: and [m]when he was strong, the great horn was broken;[1] and for it came up [o]four notable ones, toward the four winds of heaven.

9 And out of one of them came forth [p]a little horn which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant[q] land.

10 And it waxed great, even to[2] the host of heaven;[3] and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them.

11 Yea, he magnified himself even [t]to [r]the prince of the host, and by[5] him [s]the daily sacrifice was taken away, and [t]the place of his sanctuary was cast down.

12 And [u]an host was given him against the daily sacrifice by reason of transgression,[6] and it cast down the truth to the ground; and it practised, and [v]prospered.

13 ¶ Then I heard one saint[7] speaking, and [x]another saint said unto that certain [8]saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the [y]transgression of desolation,[9] to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?

14 And he said unto me, [z]Unto two thousand and three hundred days;[1] then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.[2]

15 ¶ And it came to pass, when I, even I Daniel, had seen the vision, and [a]sought for the meaning, then, behold, there stood before me as the appearance of [b]a man.

16 And I heard a man's voice [c]between the banks of [3]Ulai,[4] which called, and said, [d]Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision.

17 So he came near where I stood; and when he came, [e]I was afraid, and fell upon my face: but he said unto me, Understand, [g]O son of man; for [h]at the time of the end shall be the vision.

18 Now, as he was speaking with me, I [i]was in a deep sleep on my face toward the ground: but he [j]touched me, and set me upright.[5]

19 And he said, Behold, [k]I will make thee know what shall be in the [l]last end of the indignation: for at the time [m]appointed the end shall be.

20 The[e] ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kings of Media and Persia.

21 And [p]the rough goat is the king of Grecia: and the [q]great horn that is between his eyes is the first king.

22 Now[r] that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation, but not in his power.

23 And [6]in the latter time of their [7]kingdom, [s]when the transgressors are [8]come to the full, [t]a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences,[9] shall stand up.

24 And[u] his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power:[1] and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper and practise, and [v]shall destroy the mighty and the holy [2]people.

25 And [x]through his policy also he shall cause

1 Shushan, the Greek Susa, and now Sakieh, was an ancient royal city, with a province attached to it called Susiana. It lay on the plain near the southern border of Persia, east of the Tigris. It was the scene of the principal events recorded in the book of Esther. Nehemiah also resided there for a time. The ruins occupy a space more than three miles in circuit, and consist of great mounds similar to those on the sites of Babylon and Nineveh. Recent excavations have brought to light the royal palace, in which is a magnificent hall, measuring 343 ft. by 244 ft., probably the scene of Ahasuerus's great feast. The site is now utterly desolate.—P.

thus giving, at the utmost, a period but of five years, or less than 1825 literal days; or rather, dating from 168 B.C., a period less than 1095 literal days. On the other hand, if the 2300 days be taken as prophetical years (as Newton thinks), then the Roman power did not continue so long over Jerusalem; for it commenced in 65 B.C., and the temple was destroyed, and with it every Jewish ordinance abrogated, A.D. 70; and all the Roman power in the East finally terminated with the fall of Constantinople, A.D. 1453; and the sanctuary, moreover, still remains uncleansed. The conclusion seems inevitable, that 'the little horn,' ver. 9, like 'the little horn,' ch. 7. 8, is an ecclesiastico-political power, in which characteristic Mohammedanism in the East exactly coincides with Popery in the West. C.

Ver. 23. Last end. This intimates a progressive series of acts; and the vision of the 'little horn' of the eastern empire commences the last act of this vast drama of 'indignation' against Jewish and Christian apostasy, self-righteousness, and worldliness; and closes with the cleansing of the Jewish sanctuary and the establishment of the kingdom of the saints of the Most High, including the whole renovated church. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The people of God have often enjoyed the most glorious liberty in their souls when their bodies have been held in captivity. But those who abuse others may quickly expect the like treatment. God quickly stops the career of ambitious men. And little do they who risk both soul and body in amassing power or wealth know who shall enjoy them. If ever God's people suffer their sins are the cause. They who slight or abuse the privileges of God's sanctuary deserve to be deprived of them. But no wicked persecutor has any more power than the Lord permits. His hand must be observed even in all the enterprises of his enemies. And it is comfortable to reflect that he looks on the persecution of his church as against himself; and that, though her adversities may be severe, they cannot be lasting. In his time her privileges shall be restored, the sanctuary cleansed, and her most crafty and powerful enemies fearfully destroyed. It is proper, however, that perplexed souls should consult Jesus, the wonderful Counsellor; and that gracious souls should be deeply affected with the church's distress, but never so as to disqualify them for the duties of their station.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 24–26. That these verses relate to the manifestation of Jesus Christ to fulfil all righteousness, and make full atonement for the sins of his people, to fulfil all the ancient types and prophecies, and to receive the Holy Ghost above measure himself, and miraculously pour him out upon his followers, for the restraining of iniquity, and the introduction of remarkable holiness into the world, among both Jews and Gentiles, is generally agreed. That each of the weeks mentioned denotes seven years, a day for a year, Eze. 4. 6; and that the whole of the numbers is intended to point out the time of our Saviour's appearance, is also agreed. In applying the weeks there has been great difference among calculators; but it is enough craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by [3]peace[4] shall destroy many: he shall also [y]stand up against the prince of princes;[5] but he shall [z]be broken without hand.

26 And [a]the vision of the evening and the morning[6] which was told is true: wherefore [b]shut thou up the vision; for [c]it shall be for many days.

27 And I Daniel [d]fainted, and was sick certain days: afterward I rose up, and [e]did the king's business; and I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Daniel considering the time of the captivity, 3 maketh confession of his people's sins. 16 And prayeth for the restoration of Jerusalem. 20 Gabriel informeth him of the seventy weeks.

IN the first year of [a]Darius, the son of Ahasuerus, of the seed of the Medes,[1] which[2] was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans;

2 In the first year of his reign, I Daniel understood [b]by books[3] the number of the years, whereof the word of the LORD came to [c]Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the [d]desolations of Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And [e]I set my face[4] unto the Lord God, to[5] seek by prayer and supplications, [h]with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes:

4 And I prayed unto the LORD my God, and [i]made my confession, and said, O [j]Lord, the great and dreadful God, keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments:

5 We[k] have sinned, and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled, even by departing from thy precepts, and from thy judgments:

6 Neither [l]have we hearkened unto thy servants the prophets, which spake in thy name to our kings, our princes, and our fathers, and to all the people of the land.

7 O Lord, [r]righteousness [s]belongeth unto thee, but unto us [t]confusion of faces, as at this day; to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and unto all Israel, [u]that are near, and that are far off, through all the countries whither[v] thou hast driven them, because of their trespass that they have trespassed against thee.

8 O Lord, [w]to us belongeth confusion of face, to our kings, to our princes, and to our fathers, because we have sinned against thee.

9 To the Lord our God [x]belong mercies and forgivenesses, [y]though we have rebelled against him;

10 Neither have we obeyed the voice of the LORD our God, to walk in [z]his laws which he set before us by his servants the prophets.

11 Yea, [a]all Israel have transgressed thy law, even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice; therefore [b]the curse is poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moses the servant of God, because we have sinned against him.[6]

12 And [c]he hath confirmed his words, which he spake against us and against our judges that judged us, by bringing upon us a great evil: for under the whole heaven [d]hath not been done as hath been done upon Jerusalem.

13 As [e]it is written in the law of Moses, all this evil is come upon us: yet made we not our prayer before the[7] LORD our God, that we might turn from our iniquities, and understand thy truth.

14 Therefore hath the LORD [f]watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us: for [g]the LORD our God is righteous in all his works which he doeth: for we obeyed not his voice.

15 And now, O Lord our God, [h]that hast brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and hast gotten thee [i]renown,[8] as at this day; we have sinned, we have done wickedly.

16 ¶ O Lord, according to all [j]thy righteousness,[9] I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away [k]from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain; because for [l]our sins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and thy people are become [m]a reproach to all that are about us.

17 Now, therefore, O our God, [n]hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake.[1]

18 O my God, [o]incline thine ear, and hear; open thine eyes, and behold our desolations, and the city which is called by thy [p]name: [q]for we do not present[2] our supplications before thee for our righteousnesses, but for thy great mercies.

19 O Lord, [r]hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken, and do; [s]defer not, for thine own sake, O my God; for thy city and thy people are called by thy name.

20 ¶ And [t]whiles I was speaking, and praying, [u]and confessing my sin and the sin of my people Israel, and presenting my supplication before the LORD my God [v]for the holy mountain of my God;[4]

4 Ver. 20—23 I have long considered among the most cheering in Scripture. It proves that prayer is powerful, however sceptics may cavil and philosophers speculate. The earnest prayer—the prayer of faith, penetrates to the very throne of God, and receives an immediate response. The answer may not be what we have looked for: it may not be given in the mode which we expected; but it is given, and given in such a way as divine wisdom sees to be best for us. What comfort is there to the suffering Christian in ver. 21! "Whiles I was speaking in prayer—before the petition was finished; "At the beginning of thy supplications—ere the desires of the heart had yet found utterance in words; God heard, and his messenger was sent forth with a message of mercy.—P.

that they must all fix the conclusion of the weeks near the time of our Saviour's death. From Ezra's commission, by Artaxerxes Longimanus, in the seventh year of his reign, to restore the affairs of the Jewish church and state, to the death of Christ, is precisely 70 weeks, or 490 years. From Nehemiah's commission to rebuild the wall of Jerusalem, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, to the death of Christ, is 490 lunar years, and a little more; or perhaps precisely 490 to the rejection of the Jews and calling of the Gentiles. From Ezra's commission to Nehemiah's finishing his reformation might be precisely 7 weeks, or 49 years; thence to John Baptist's manifestation (by his ministry) of Christ as come, 62 weeks, or 434 years; thence to Christ's death another week, or 7 years;—490 in all. Perhaps, too, from Julius Cæsar's edict for the Jews to repair and fortify their cities, to Christ's birth, might be precisely 49 years; and as much from Herod's building of the inner temple to Christ's baptism; and as much from his finishing the outer temple to Christ's death.

In the last week, ver. 27, the promise was confirmed with many, and the daily sacrifice abolished, either by Christ's ministrations, and the conversion of multitudes to him by the promise of grace, and by his rendering useless all the typical sacrifices by his death; or near forty years afterward, when Titus made leagues of peace with sundry of the Asian nations, that ANCIENT STONE DOORS, TIBERIAS—A CITY ON LAKE GALILEE, IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD OF WHICH OUR SAVIOR PERFORMED MOST OF HIS WONDERFUL WORKS. [DANIEL, IX: 24.]—"Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." The prophecy contained in the 24th, 25th, 26th and 27th verses of the ninth chapter of Daniel is one of the most remarkable found in the Scriptures. There isn't space enough here to explain this prophecy, but it is generally conceded to refer to Christ, and many authorities claim that the exact time of his coming was foreseen and calculated by Daniel. This furnishes an interesting study. We give here as an illustration a picture of ancient stone doors found in Tiberias, a city upon Lake Galilee, around which our Savior performed so many of His miracles and uttered so many of His remarkable discourses. The women we see in the door belong to the Jewish race.

21 Yea, whiles I was speaking in prayer, even the man [t]Gabriel,[5] whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to [u]fly swiftly,[6] touched[v] me [w]about the time of the evening oblation.

22 And he [x]informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and[7] understanding.

23 At[z] the beginning of thy supplications the commandment[8] came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved:[9] therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision.

24 Seventy[a] weeks[1] are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish[2] the transgression, and to make an end of[3] sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and [b]to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to [c]seal up the vision and prophecy,[4] and to [d]anoint [e]the Most Holy.

25 Know,[9] therefore, and understand, that from [h]the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build[5] Jerusalem, unto [i]the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again,[6] and the wall,[7] even in troublous times.[8]

26 And after threescore and two weeks [j]shall Messiah be cut off, but not[9] for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come [k]shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a [l]flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined.[1]

27 And he shall [m]confirm the[2] covenant with many for one week: and in the midst[3] of the week [n]he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of [o]abominations[4] he shall make it desolate, even until [p]the consummation, and [q]that determined shall be poured upon the [5]desolate.[6]

he might have the more leisure to make war against the Jews; by which their temple was destroyed, their civil and ecclesiastical constitution overthrown, and themselves generally murdered or driven from the country; under the dreadful effects of which they have remained for above 1700 years past. [See Introduction, ch. iv. sec. xviii.]

Ver. 25. This was not the 'commandment' of Cyrus, which related merely to the temple, Ezr. 1. 1–3; nor of Darius, which only confirmed the former, Ezr. vi.; nor of the 7th of Artaxerxes, which merely confirmed the decrees of his predecessors, Ezr. 7. 7, 13, 21; but is the decree of the 20th Artaxerxes, Ne. 2. 1, 6–8, and from this date the 70 weeks are to be computed. Now the 20th Artaxerxes was 445 B.C. Then take 70 Chaldee years, equal to 69 Julian; and so 478 Julian years, making 483 Chaldee years, will terminate A.D. 33, the date of Messiah's death. If the time be reckoned from the 7th Artaxerxes, the result is the same. Thus, Artaxerxes' 7th is 457 B.C., which, taken from 490, the whole 70 weeks, arrives at the same date, A.D. 33. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The near fulfilment of God's promises animates the believing mind to earnest prayer for it. But, alas! how shameful and criminal is the conduct that exposes God's people to his righteous judgments, which so exactly correspond with his threatenings! The desolations of God's sanctuary are a great grief to gracious souls. But it is an animating encouragement to prayer to consider his readiness to forgive sins, his ability to supply our wants, and that he has done so much for his people in former times, and can glorify his name, his Christ, his justice and mercy, and his relation to us, in our deliverance: Yea, God sometimes makes immediate and sensible returns to the prayers of his people, and gives them more than they ask. And with great humility and serious consideration ought such favours to be received! Necessary, great, and glorious, and fixed in every circumstance, is Jesus' incarnation, his unction with the Holy Ghost, his labours and death for sinners; and terrible the judgment incurred by his obstinate despisers. But great is the mercy that, when some circumstances in Scripture are left in great obscurity, the principal things are expressed so plainly that he that runs may read and understand them.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 5, 6. Christ's clothing of fine linen denotes his righteousness as our Saviour, and his holy and righteous government. His golden girdle denotes his excellency, faithfulness, and readiness to fulfil his work. His body as the beryl denotes him as beautiful, the Lord from heaven. His countenance as lightning denotes his awful majesty. His eyes as lamps of fire denote his infinite knowledge, terrible to the wicked. His arms and feet as polished brass denote his almighty power to uphold his church, and tread down her enemies. His loud voice, his terrible judgments, and powerful spread of his gospel. 13, 20. The angel Gabriel had to baffle the attempts of Cambyses, Cyrus' son, or of some evil angel at the Persian court, who laboured to stir up mischief against the Jews, and had none to assist him herein but Jesus Christ, or some principal angel.

Ver. 1. True. No conjecture of his own, but a revelation from God: and, the time appointed long, the prophecy extending over a long period of future history. C.

Ver. 2. Mourning—because of the interruption to the building of the temple; the contentment of the rich Jews to remain among the Gentiles; and their niggardly aid to their returning brethren, and their sad insensibility and blindness. C.

Ver. 13. The prince of the kingdom of Persia. 'The accuser of the brethren,' Job 1. 9. The withstander of good men and good purposes, Zec. 3. 1, 2; Jude 9. 'The prince, yea, the god of this world,' Jn. 12. 31; 14. 30; 2 Co. 4. 4. 'The spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience,' Ep. 2. 2.—One and twenty days. The period of Daniel's mourning.—Michael. 'One like God'—even Christ, who alone was 'in the form of God;' he, in that form, joined with him who now appeared in 'fashion as a man,' ver. 5. The 'man' and 'Michael' being one and the same, in different characters.—I remained there. Christ is 'wherever two or three are met together in his name;' and with them, as men like-minded with Daniel, he remained with the king of Persia, to counteract, mediately by them, the evil influences of their enemies; but immediately, by his own presence, whereby he 'filleth all things,' and 'worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will.' C.

Ver. 21. None that holdeth with me. 'None that strengtheneth himself with me 'appearing as man' but Michael' 'the visible image of the invisible God;. My personal strength, and your deliverance, is Godhead sustaining manhood. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The slow advances of God's work of deliverance in his church deeply affect the minds of his faithful saints. And let God turn back our captivity on earth as he will, this world will be still a valley of tears. But Jesus kindly manifests his glory to humble, importunate, and solemn supplicants. Oh, how unnumbered are his excellencies! And the faith and sense of his love ought to banish all slavish dread, which would indispose us for hearing his words. What insignificant and polluted nothings are the best of men before God, and in their own view, when they behold him! But graciously his power and promises support his people under their terrors and grievances. As the entrance of their prayers is pleasant to him, so the entrance of his word is quickening to them. And we ought to be patient under present trials, lest God should send heavier ones. Though kings on earth and devils from hell be against us, it is enough if JEHOVAH, if Jesus, and his angels, care for and protect us.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1 should have stood in the preceding chapter; and means that Gabriel had encouraged and excited Darius the Mede and Cyrus to release the Jews, notwithstanding the great opposition that design met with from devils and wicked courtiers. 2–4. After Cyrus, Cambyses, and Darius Hystaspes, Xerxes, being extremely wealthy, shall attempt to great[a] vision, and there remained no strength in me: for my [b]comeliness[6] was turned in me into corruption, and I retained no strength.

9 Yet heard I the voice of his words: and when I heard the voice of his words, then was I [c]in a deep sleep on my face, and [d]my face toward the ground.

10 ¶ And, behold, [e]an hand touched me, which set[9] me upon my knees and upon the palms of my hands.

11 And he[1] said unto me, O Daniel, a man greatly beloved,[2] understand[g] the words that I speak unto thee, and stand upright:[8] for unto thee am I now sent. And when he had spoken this word unto me, I stood trembling.

12 Then said he unto me, [f]Fear not, Daniel; for [g]from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand, and to chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were [h]heard, and I am come for thy words.[4]

13 But the prince[5] of the kingdom of Persia[6] withstood me one and twenty days: but, lo, Michael,[c] one[7] of the chief princes, came to help me; and I remained there with the kings of Persia.

14 Now I am come [i]to make thee understand what shall befall thy people [k]in the latter days: for yet the vision is for many days.

15 And when he had spoken such words unto me, [l]I set my face toward the ground, and I became dumb.

16 And, behold, one [h]like the similitude of the sons of men [i]touched my lips: then I opened my mouth and spake, and said unto him that stood before me, O my lord, [j]by the vision my sorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no strength.

17 For[k] how can the servant of this my lord[8] talk with this my lord? [l]for as for me, straightway there remained no strength in me, neither is there breath left in me.

18 Then there came [m]again and touched me one like the appearance of a man, and he strengthened me,

19 And said, [n]O man greatly beloved, [o]fear not; peace be unto thee; [p]be strong, yea, be strong. And when he had spoken unto me, I was strengthened, and said, Let my lord speak; for [q]thou hast strengthened me.[9]

20 Then said he, Knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee? and now will I return [r]to [1]fight with the prince of Persia: and when I am gone forth, lo, [s]the prince of Grecia shall come.

21 But I will show thee [t]that which is noted in the scripture of truth: and there is none that holdeth[2] with me in these things, but [u]Michael your prince.

CHAPTER XI.

1 The overthrow of Persia by the king of Grecia. 5 Leagues and conflicts between the kings of the south and of the north. 30 The invasion and tyranny of the Romans.

ALSO I, in the first year of [a]Darius the Mede, even [b]I, stood to confirm and to strengthen him.[1]

2 And now will I [c]show thee the truth.[2] Behold, there shall stand up yet [d]three kings in Persia; and the fourth shall be far richer than they all: and by his strength [e]through his riches he [f]shall stir up all[3] against the realm of Grecia.

3 And [g]a mighty king shall stand up, that shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will.

4 And [h]when he shall stand up, his kingdom [i]shall be broken, and shall be divided toward the four winds of heaven;[4] and not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion which he ruled: for his kingdom shall be plucked up, even for others beside those.

5 ¶ And the [5]king[6] of the south[7] shall be strong, and [8]one of his princes;[9] and he shall be strong above him, and have dominion; his dominion shall be a great dominion.

6 And in the end of years they shall [1]join themselves together; for the king's daughter[2] of the south shall come to the [3]king of the [4]north to make an agreement:[5] but she shall [k]not retain the power of the arm; neither shall he stand, nor his arm: but she shall be given up, and they that brought her, and he that begat her,[6] and he[7] that strengthened her in these times.

7 But out of a branch[8] of her root shall one stand up in his estate,[9] which shall come with an army, and shall enter into the fortress of the king of the north, and shall deal against them, and [l]shall prevail:

8 And shall also carry captives into Egypt [m]their gods, with their princes, and with their precious vessels[1] of silver and of gold;[2] and [n]he shall continue more years than the king of the north.[3]

v A comparison of this passage with ver. 20, 21, and 12. 1, will show that an angel is here referred to, before the age of Daniel, whose name and history are therein recorded, but always either in connection with God, whom they serve, or with God's chosen people, whom they defend, and to whose wants they minister. Ge. 24. 7, 40. Ex. 23. 20. Nu. 20. 16. In this vision another department of angelic work is indicated. Some of them are appointed to rule or preside over heathen nations. We read of the "prince of the kingdom of Persia," and "the prince of Grecia." The nature and character of these angels are not distinctly stated. Dr. Pusey believes they were "good angels, since they discern the welfare of their people, and they contended with Gabriel and Michael before God, each, in subordination to the divine will, desiring what seemed for the good of his people, which, since their apparent interests were opposed, seemed to be contrary." This view is open to grave question. I cannot well see how any pure and holy spirit should oppose a true servant of God when engaged in God's own work. But be this as it may, there can be no doubt that one of these angels was in some mysterious way appointed to watch over, succour, and defend each nation. We also know from the New Testament that each Christian is assigned to the care of a guardian angel.—P.

engage all his subjects and many others to destroy the Greeks, and shall invade them with a powerful army, but shall be shamefully defeated.—Long after this, Alexander the Macedonian, having become king of all Greece, shall invade and conquer Persia; and, after a short reign, be cut off by death, and his kingdom parted into four; but no part shared by his own relations. 5 9. Ptolemy Lagus, king of Egypt and the countries adjacent, shall be very powerful; but Seleucus Nicator, of Syria and the places adjacent, still more powerful, and his dominion more extensive.—Wearied of the war between the two kingdoms, Antiochus Theos, the third Syro-Grecian king, shall, for establishing a peace, marry Berenice, the daughter of Ptolemy Philadelphus of Egypt. But he and she, and all her relations and friends, shall be quickly destroyed by Laodice his former wife. Then Ptolemy Euergetes of Egypt, Berenice's brother, in revenge, shall terribly ravage Syria, and even conquer it, till a sedition at home shall oblige him to return, yet laden with prisoners and spoil. 10 20. To recover what their father, Callinicus of Syria, had lost, his sons Ceraunus and Antiochus the Great shall levy a formidable army; and, after his brother's death, Antiochus shall ravage even to the north-east border of Egypt, where Ptolemy Philopater's troops shall give him a terrible defeat; which, issuing in Ptolemy's rage against the Jews, and his abandoning himself to luxury, shall conduce to the hurt of his kingdom. Ptolemy dying, and leaving his son Epiphanes an infant, Antiochus, assisted by part of the Jews, shall march a great army into Egypt, and ravage the country; and after bribing his daughter Cleopatra to murder him, he shall marry her to young Ptolemy Epiphanes of Egypt: but she proving faithful to her husband, her father, disappointed of his designs on the kingdom of Egypt, shall, in his rage, attack and take 9 So the king of the south shall come into his kingdom, and shall return into his own land.

10 But his [4]sons[5] shall be stirred up,[6] and shall assemble a multitude of great forces: and one[7] shall certainly come, and [p]overflow, and pass through; then shall he return, and be stirred up, even to his fortress.[8]

11 And the king of the south[9] shall be moved with choler, and shall come forth and fight with him, even with the king of the north: and he[1] shall set forth a great multitude; [q]but the multitude shall [r]be given into his[2] hand.

12 And when he hath taken away the multitude, his heart [s]shall be lifted up; and he shall cast down many ten thousands: but he shall not be strengthened by it.

13 For the king of the north[3] shall return, and shall set forth a multitude greater than the former, and shall certainly come after certain years[4] with a great army and with much riches.

14 And in those times there shall many stand up against the king of the south: also the [5]robbers of thy people[6] shall exalt themselves to establish the vision; but they shall [t]fall.

15 So the king of the north shall come, and cast[u] up a mount, and take the most fenced cities;[7] and the arms of the south [v]shall not withstand, neither his chosen people,[8] neither shall there be any strength to withstand.

16 But he that cometh against him [w]shall do according to his own will, and none shall stand before him; and he shall stand in the glorious land,[9] which by his hand shall be consumed.[1]

17 He shall also set his [y]face to enter with the strength of his whole kingdom, and upright ones[2] with him; thus shall he do: and he shall give him the [3]daughter of women,[4] corrupting[5] her: but she shall not stand on his side, neither be for him.[6]

18 After this shall he turn his face unto the isles,[z] and shall take many; but a [7]prince[8] for his own behalf[9] shall cause the reproach[1] offered by him to cease; without his own reproach [a]he shall cause it to turn upon him.

19 Then he[2] shall turn his face toward the fort[3] of his own land: but he shall stumble and fall, and [b]not be found.

20 Then shall stand up in his estate[4] a raiser of taxes in[5] the glory of the kingdom:[6] but within few days he shall be destroyed, neither in anger,[7] nor in battle.[8]

21 ¶ And in his estate[9] shall stand up a [c]vile [1]person,[2] to whom they shall not give the honour of the kingdom: but he shall come in peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by [d]flatteries.

22 And [e]with the arms of a flood shall they be overflown from before him, and shall be broken; yea, also the [3]prince of the covenant.[4]

23 And after the league made with him [f]he shall work deceitfully; for [h]he shall come up, and shall become strong, with a small people.

24 He shall enter peaceably even upon the fattest[5] places of the province;[6] and he shall do that which his fathers have not done, nor his fathers' fathers; he shall [i]scatter among them the prey, and spoil, and riches; yea, and he shall forecast his devices[7] against the strong holds, even for a time.

25 And he shall stir up his power and his courage against the king of the south[8] with a great army; and the king of the south shall be stirred up to battle with a very great and mighty army; but he shall not stand: for they shall forecast devices against him.

26 Yea, [g]they that feed of the portion of his meat shall destroy him, and his[1] army shall overflow; and many shall fall down slain.

27 And both these kings' hearts[2] shall be to do mischief, and they shall [j]speak lies at one table; but [k]it shall not prosper: for yet the end shall be at the [l]time appointed.[3]

28 Then shall he return into his land[4] with great riches; and his heart shall be against the [5]holy covenant;[6] and he shall do exploits, and return to his own land.

29 At the time appointed he shall [7]return, and come toward the south: but it shall not be as the former, or as the latter.[8]

30 For the [9]ships of Chittim[1] shall come against him; therefore he shall be grieved, and return, and [m]have indignation against the holy covenant: so shall he do; he shall even return, and [n]have intelligence with [2]them that [3]forsake the holy covenant.

31 And [p]arms shall stand on his part, and many of the isles and coasts of the Ægean Sea, now the east part of the Mediterranean. But the Romans, whom he now insults in invading their allies and treating their ambassadors with contempt, shall stop his career; and after many shameful defeats, oblige him to quit Lesser Asia, pay all the expenses of the war, and give his own son for a pledge of the payment. Retiring into his kingdom, he shall be murdered at Elymais, in his attempt to rob a temple of Jupiter. His elder son Seleucus Philopater shall be famous for nothing but for oppressing his people with taxes to pay the Roman debts; and shall, after a short reign, be poisoned by Heliodorus his treasurer. 21–29. He shall be succeeded by his despicable, debauched, and frantic brother, Antiochus Epiphanes, who shall have long lived at Rome as a hostage for the payment of his father's debt. Not by right, but by flattering the Syrians, Romans, Pergamenians, and others, he shall procure the Syrian crown, and get the better of all his opposers. And by scattering among his subjects the spoils taken from his opposers, he shall firmly attach them to his interests. After fixing himself on his throne, he shall march his mighty army against Ptolemy of Egypt, his cousin; and, by the help of traitors, shall rout his forces. And after making a league with him, which neither party intend to keep, he shall return home to Syria, terribly murdering the Jews and ravaging their country in his way. Not long after he shall again invade Egypt with a formidable army, but without success. 30–35. For the Roman ambassadors, arriving in Macedonian ships, shall prohibit him from proceeding against Ptolemy, whom they shall have taken into their protection. Enraged herewith, he shall return home; and, by fearful murder and persecutions, shall attempt to abolish the Jewish religion, or extirpate their nation. And, assisted by apostate Jews, he shall abolish the daily sacrifice, and make their temple a sink of idolatry, whoredom, and other wickedness.—While many of the Jews suffer for their religion, Matthias and his sons, called Maccabees, shall take arms; and, by a multitude of violent encounters, shall defeat the Syro-Grecians, retake and purify the temple, and restore the true worship of God.—But some understand these six verses of the Romish heathens, and their persecution of the Christians, they shall pollute the [4]sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the [5]abomination that maketh desolate.[6]

32 And such as do wickedly against the covenant[7] shall he corrupt[8] by flatteries:[9] but the [1]people that do [g]know their God[2] shall be strong, and do exploits.

33 And they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet [7]they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days.

34 Now when they shall fall, they shall be holpen with a little help:[3] but many shall cleave to them with flatteries.

35 And some of them of understanding shall fall, [a]to try them,[4] and to purge, and to make them white, even to [t]the time of the end: because it is yet for a [u]time appointed.

36 ¶ And the [5]king [v]shall do according to his will; and he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods, and shall prosper [z]till the indignation be accomplished: for that that is determined shall be done.

37 Neither shall he regard the [6]God of his fathers,[7] nor [y]the desire of women, nor regard any god: [x]for he shall magnify himself above all.

38 But[8] in his estate[9] shall he honour the God of [1]forces;[2] and [a]a god whom his fathers knew not shall he honour with gold, and silver, and with precious stones,[3] and pleasant things.[4]

39 Thus shall he do in the most strong holds[5] with a strange god, whom he shall acknowledge and increase with glory: and he shall cause them to rule over many, and shall divide the land[6] for gain.[7]

40 ¶ And at the time of the end shall the king of the south[8] push at him: and the king of the north[9] shall come against him [b]like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries, and shall overflow and pass over.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Michael shall deliver Israel from their trouble. 5 Daniel is informed of the times.

AND at[a] that time shall [b]Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be [c]a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people [d]shall be delivered, every one that shall be found [e]written in the book.[1]

2 And [g]many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.[2]

3 And they that be wise[3] shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever.

4 But thou, O Daniel, [h]shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; [i]many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.

5 ¶ Then I Daniel looked, and, behold, there stood [j]other two, the one on this side of the bank[4] of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river.

[7] Heb. a price, Re.18.9. [8] The Saracens, Ge.16.12. Re.9.2-11.
[9] Turks, Re.9.14-19. Eze.xxxviii. [b] Zec.9.14.

36–45. Some understand these verses also of Antiochus' pride, insolence, blasphemy, introduction of new deities, and his brutal murder of women and children; and of his ravaging Canaan, Egypt, and the countries about; till at length he was embarrassed by a Parthian war from the east, and at last miserably destroyed by God. But they, at least, chiefly represent the Romish Antichrist as exalting himself above magistrates, angels, and even the Divine Persons; prohibiting marriage, and, regardless alike of the God of primitive Christians and of heathen idols, setting up angels and departed saints, or consecrated waters, as protectors of countries, cities, and societies; and as harassed by the Saracens, and afterwards more terribly by the Turks, who have conquered the west of Asia, north of Africa, and south-east of Europe; and who will be ruined in their attempt to dispossess the returned Jews of their country in the beginning of the millennium, about the very time that the Lord shall destroy Antichrist.

Ver. 31. And arms, &c. 'And armies shall stand up after him'—the armies of the Roman power, newly introduced, ver. 30, in whose actings the prophecy now turns. With them alone does the description agree; for though Antiochus polluted the temple, he did not make it 'desolate,' the last state of the 'indignation,' ver. 36, to which our Lord referred when lamenting over the incorrigible Jerusalem, or warning his disciples of the time to escape, Mat. 23. 37, 38; 24. 15–18. C.

Ver. 40. Time of the end. At the time when the dissolution of the Roman empire shall commence, the prelude to the division into ten kingdoms, and the final overthrow of the Papacy and Mohammedanism—which have the same prophetic name, 'little horns'—which rose together, and together are doomed to fall.—King of the south, &c. According to scriptural geography, all southerly points from east and west of Jerusalem are called 'the south.' Thus explained, this verse represents the northern hordes of Huns, Goths, Vandals, &c.; and the southern tribes of Saracens, Tartars, Turks, &c., by whom the Roman empire was overrun, and foretells the rise of some great northern power that is finally to invade the kingdoms, and settle his proud throne 'upon the glorious holy mountains,' and there perish where 'none shall help him.' What this power shall be God only knows: for one man, at any time (as witness the case of Mohammed), is capable of raising up a power sufficient to revolutionize and (like Napoleon) to terrify monarchies in his fall. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Infinitely perfect is God's insight into futurities. Often riches are kept for the hurt of the owners. Yea, all things here are but vanity and vexation of spirit. While God in his providences sets up one and pulls down another, exactly answerable to his purpose, men's lusts render this world a tremendous scene of ravage and murder. And God often exalts the worst of men to render them scourges to sinners, and especially his own people. And none are more bitter persecutors than apostates from the truth. While God singularly honours those that cleave to him in an evil day, he permits their opponents to rush forward in wickedness, till, becoming impudent in impiety, he can no longer delay their tremendous destruction. And how marvellous a confirmation of our faith is it to find some scripture predictions of contingent events more particularly circumstantiated than in any particular history of them.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1–3. Jesus Christ shall preserve his people under, and at last deliver them from, the terrible harassments of Antiochus, Romish heathens, Antichrist, Turks, &c., and at the last day he will reward them according to their faithfulness and usefulness. 4, 9, 10. These predictions shall never be

ANCIENT MARKET PLACE, ATHENS—SHOWING THE SITE OF FAMOUS TEMPLES AND OTHER STRUCTURES. [Daniel, xii:3.]—Pericles, the Athenian statesman, was born 499 B. C. Daniel, the Hebrew prophet, ceased to prophesy about 534 B. C. There is a difference of thirty-five years between the birth of the one and the death of the other. Greece flowered in the art of Athens during the seventy years of Pericles' life. In the third verse of the twelfth chapter of Daniel it is said, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever." So we find the market place, adorned and beautified in the time of Pericles, most famous now because of its connection with Paul, the apostle, who went to Greece with the hope of turning many to righteousness. In the picture above we are looking upon the site of the famous temples, senate house, kings' hall and other ancient structures of Athens. They have all perished, but the life of the apostle who stood and preached in this neighborhood, is more influential to-day than ever before.

8 This throws some light upon the doctrine of the inspiration of Scripture. Daniel heard the words. The divine messenger spake them in his hearing. He was gifted with power to record them with infallible accuracy. Yet he did not understand what he heard and what he wrote. This is no inspiration of mere ideas. It is no elevation of mind, no increase of intellectual power—it is a direct and special revelation of truth from God, accompanied by a power of recording so as to preserve it.—P.

fully understood before the fulfilment. And as there will be then a mixture of persons good and bad, it will be only the former who will be bettered by these troubles, or who, by diligent observation, will understand the fulfilled predictions. 7, 11, 12. The time, times, and a half, or 1260 days, denote the 1260 years reign of wickedness. Thirty years of terrible wars at the destruction of Antichrist bring it to 1290; and by the end of 1335 we expect the millennium will be introduced in its full glory. 9, 13. Daniel must rest contented with the discoveries which he had obtained, and prepare for the eternal state, in the assurance of happiness and honour in it.

Ver. 1. Shall Michael stand up. Christ now 'sitteth on the right hand of power, 'waiting till his enemies be made his footstool,' at the period here predicted he will 'stand up' for the deliverance of his covenant people. C.

Ver. 4. Shut up the words, &c. Inquire no farther; enough has been revealed for faith and hope; let 'the time of the end' supply the fearful details, of which the dark outline has now been drawn.—Many shall run to and fro, &c. The intercourse of nations shall be greatly facilitated, the taste for travelling shall be almost universal, and 'knowledge' shall be proportionally 'increased.' But is divine knowledge intended? Is it not rather that superficial knowledge of the world that may be acquired by 'running to and fro?'—a knowledge which, in proportion as it improves the understanding, so often 'destroys the heart.' C.

Ver. 7. And when he shall have accomplished, &c. 'And when the dispersion of the holy people is finished, all these things shall be accomplished' (Bootheroyd.. The holy people are the Jews; 'holy' being taken in the sense of separated and dedicated, in which sense they are still, and ever have been, 'the holy people,' though they have rebelled against their King, and 'denied the Lord that bought them,' De. 32. 6. C.

Ver. 11. The daily sacrifice was taken away by Antiochus. 'The abomination that maketh desolate' was brought in by the Romans, Mat. 24. 15, but was never completely 'set up' till the mosque of Omar was erected on the site of the temple of Solomon, A.D. 637. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Seasonable and effectual are Jesus' assistance, protection, deliverances, and comforts. He is a present help in times of trouble to his people. And to all his chosen sheep he gives eternal life, and none shall pluck them out of his hand. O how great is the happiness of saints, and especially of faithful ministers, in the resurrection and in the eternal state! But, on the contrary, inexpressible the infamy and ruin of the wicked! Neither angels nor saints know anything more of future events but as God is pleased to reveal them. Yet, by humble searching of the Scriptures, and careful observation of providences, every prediction will at length appear plain. And it is Christ to whom we must apply for all necessary illumination. Never must we, except by death and the last judgment, expect complete deliverances all at once. And it is not the curious scrutinizer into God's secrets, but the firm believer of his promises and observer of his laws, who may then expect safety and happiness.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF DANIEL.

1. In Daniel we may observe a glorious example of the power of early religious impressions in resisting subsequent temptations. He was one of the Jewish captives selected, according to eastern custom, for the courtly education in Babylon. His religious distinction between 'clean and unclean' food, and his fixed objections against wine offered to idols, conducted him to a course of temperance as favourable to the health of his body as to the development of his mind.

2. We observe the blessed influence of his principles and example upon his three friends—from which every pious youth should take courage to be decided in his profession of religion, as he shall thereby not only save his own soul, but may be the happy and blessed instrument of saving the souls of his youthful companions, 1 Ti. 4. 16.

3. Daniel presents us with a striking example of the worldly advancement that often accompanies or flows from the sincere profession of religion. No doubt his success exposed him to envy, and his religious principles were readily turned into instruments for his overthrow; but the God whom he served delivered him out of the snare, not merely to display his miraculous power over the ravenous lions, but to exhibit, in the most striking manner, the watchful care of his providence, and the all-sufficiency of his grace; and practically to exemplify the consolatory fact, that 'godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and also of that which is to come.'

4. In Daniel there is also exhibited the importance of an early education in secular knowledge, when combined with piety; and the duty, advantage, and necessity of the continued studying of the Holy Scriptures, which is not superseded even by prophetic inspiration. Daniel, though a man so pre-eminent that the Spirit ranks him with Noah and Job—a man 'greatly beloved' of Heaven, and favoured with the visions of futurity—has yet left upon record that 'he knew by books'—the books he had read and prayerfully studied—and not by any immediate revelation, the things that God designed, and the times of their accomplishment. But while this fact affords a gracious encouragement to the study of the Sacred Scriptures in general, it guides to the study of the prophecies in particular. Of the profitableness of the study of fulfilled prophecy there can be no question. Were it true, which it is not, that the evidence of testimony diminishes in proportion to the lapse and distance of time, the evidence from fulfilled and fulfilling prophecy would constantly supply the deficiency; for if the one did decrease, the other is constantly on the increase. And every traveller who returns from the great field of prophetic vision, furnishes—even where he intends it not—some new illustration of the historic accuracy with which the Spirit that was in the prophets foretold the events to come. But does not the record of Daniel's successful study of the prophetic books furnish a light and encouragement to the study of unfulfilled prophecy also? The record of his success is not a mere fact, but a fact intended to teach its own peculiar lesson; and that lesson is, the hopefulness of studying unfulfilled prophecy. This, like every other department of sacred study, must be undertaken, not in the spirit of an eager and anxious curiosity, but in the spirit of deep humility, childlike teachableness, earnest prayer, and patient waiting. And were it so, that every attempt to penetrate the future ended but in the conviction of the weakness of our vision, and the depth of the darkness that shrouds it, still the deep thoughtfulness and prayer into which the attempt has conducted, would alone repay the time and pains bestowed. But a total want of success in such studies we hold to be unexampled, if not impossible. Taking the language of prophecy fulfilled as the key to what is still future; and taking the attitude, not of a dogmatizing teacher, but of a humble learner, the student of unfulfilled prophecy, though he may be utterly unable to fill up the minor details, will yet discover the great outlines so broad and distinct, that he can have as little hesitation about anticipating the future as about verifying the past. Indeed one of the chief errors to be avoided in the study of unfulfilled prophecy, is the attempt at filling up those minor details which the Spirit of God has been pleased to withhold. Let the student of prophecy never attempt to pass the barriers of the written Word, nor endeavour to supply by imagination one image which the Spirit has not drawn. That Spirit best knew how much should be revealed for the establishment of faith, the encouragement of hope, and the support of patience; and wise are they who follow where the Spirit leads, but pause and stand still where he commands to 'shut up the words, and seal the book.'

The prophecies of Daniel, being chiefly visional, should be studied in conjunction with the visional portions of Isaiah, Ezekiel, Amos, and Zechariah, but particularly in the light of the 'Revelation' of John, which may justly be regarded as an expansion of Daniel, and a supply of as much detail as the Spirit wills or the church requires. C.

HOSEA.

This book and the eleven following were, by the Jews, comprehended in one volume, called the Lesser Prophets. Hosea began his public work about A. M. 3196; and lived to see most of what he had foretold fulfilled in the misery and ruin of the ten tribes of Israel. His style is concise and sententious; in some places very obscure, and in others clear and pathetic. His general scope is to convince the Hebrews of their sins, excite them to repent, and prevent their own destruction, and to denounce the judgments of God against such as should remain obstinate. But with these he intermixes some very evangelical promises, ch. 1. 7, 10, 11; 2. 1, 7, 14–23; 3. 5; 5. 15; 6. 1–3, 11; 11. 8, 9; 13. 4, 9, 10, 14; 14. 1–8: which indeed almost all respect the happy restoration of the Jews in the glorious millennium. In the first three chapters he instructs by signs; in the rest by discourses only.—N. B. In this and other prophecies, Ephraim and Israel denote the ten tribes, as distinguished from the kingdom of Judah and Benjamin.

[Hosea is placed at the head of the twelve 'Lesser Prophets,' who are so called, not from any inferiority in their character, authority, or matter, but merely on account of their brevity when compared with Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel. Hosea was contemporary with Isaiah, Joel, Amos, and Jonah; and prophesied, instructed, reproved, or comforted the people, during the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah—in all above sixty years. His prophecies, however, are chiefly directed to the ten tribes, before their captivity. His book is quoted or referred to in the New Testament in, at least, the following passages:—Mat. 2. 15; 9. 13; 12. 7; Lu. 15. 18; 23. 30; Jn. 7. 34; Ro. 9. 25, 26; 1 Co. 15. 54–56; Ga. 6. 7, 8; He. 4. 12; 1 Pe. 2. 9, 10; Re. 6. 16. C.

It would seem that the twelve minor prophets are grouped in chronological order. The first group of them prophesied in Israel during the reign of Jeroboam II., and in Judah during the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, and Ahaz; following very closely upon the ministry of Elisha. The last group, consisting of Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, closed the prophetic cycle. Hosea's prophetic ministry was the longest on record. It could scarcely have been less than seventy years. It embraced the darkest period of the kingdom of Israel. Towards its close there was in reality no government. 'Kings made their way to the throne through the murder of their predecessors. Shallum slew Zechariah; Menahem slew Shallum; Pekah slew the son of Menahem; Hoshea slew Pekah.' The religious state of the kingdom was even worse than the political. The worship of God was entirely ignored. Idolatry in its worst forms was universally practised. The grossest immorality prevailed. People, priests, and rulers vied in debauchery. It was in such times and under such circumstances Hosea prophesied to Israel. It was because of such sins he was commissioned to warn and threaten:—'I will cause the kingdom of the house of Israel to cease;' 'I will no more have mercy upon the house of Israel;' 'They shall be wanderers among the nations;' 'Israel is swallowed up,' &c. The greater part of the book is one continuous dirge of woe, in which the guilt and the punishment of Israel are depicted with terrible minuteness. Almost every prophetic utterance is the voice of a judge pronouncing sentence upon a guilty people. At the close, however, the dark cloud of wrath clears away; a bright future is revealed; the people repent in response to God's gracious invitation; and promises of mercy and grace are given.

Nothing is known of the family or personal history of Hosea beyond what is recorded in this book. His language and the general scope of his prophecies show that he belonged to the northern kingdom; though as a loyal servant of God he only acknowledges in the beginning of his book the legitimate, because divinely appointed, rulers of Judah. P.]

CHAPTER I.

1 Hosea, to show God's judgment for spiritual whoredom, taketh Gomer, 4 and hath by her Jezreel, 6 Lo-ruhamah, 8 and Lo-ammi. 10 The restoration of Judah and Israel under one head.

A.M. cir. 3219. B.C. cir. 785.

THE word of the LORD that [a]came unto Hosea, the son of Beeri, [b]in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash, king of Israel.[1]

2 ¶ The[c] beginning of the word of the LORD by Hosea. And the LORD said to Hosea, Go, take[d] unto thee a wife of whoredoms, and children of whoredoms: for the land [e]hath committed great whoredom, departing from the LORD.

3 So he went and took [2]Gomer,[3] the daughter of Diblaim; which conceived, and bare him a son.

4 And the LORD said unto him, Call his name [4]Jezreel;[5] for yet a little while, and I will avenge[6] the [g]blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu, and [h]will cause to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel.

5 And it shall come to pass at that day, that [i]I will break the bow of Israel in the valley of Jezreel.

6 ¶ And she conceived again, and bare a daughter. And God said unto him, Call her name Lo-ruhamah:[7] for I will no more [8]have mercy upon the house of Israel; but I will [j]utterly take them away.[9]

7 But [k]I will have mercy upon the house of Judah, and will save them [l]by the LORD their God, and will not save them by bow, nor by sword, nor by battle, by horses, nor by horsemen.

8 ¶ Now when she had weaned [1]Lo-ruhamah, she conceived, and bare a son.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 4. In executing God's judgments on the family of Ahab, 2 Ki. 9. 10, Jehu only aimed at gratifying his own ambition and cruelty; and therefore his conduct is justly punished, as murder, upon his own family, and the throne of Israel taken from them.

Ver. 2. The 'whoredom' here described consisted in the people of Israel having 'departed from the LORD,' and gone after the idolatry of the nations. This command, when interpreted by the second chapter—which evidently describes the kingdom of Israel under the emblem of a faithless but reclaimed, reformed, and penitent wife—will clearly appear to be itself, not an actual command for God's prophet to marry an adulteress, but an emblem of what grace and mercy must do in bringing back faithless rebels to the covenant and kingdom of God. C.

Ver. 5. Break the bow. Nations, like an elastic bow, often make sudden and wonderful recoveries after defeats apparently ruinous: but as the 'broken bow' recovers no more, so Israel now falls, never again to rise till the judgment is completed. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God can easily preserve his ministers in the very worst of times, and make them steadily to serve him either in honour or dishonour. And it becomes them to use very diversified methods in order to convince hardened sinners, and warn them to flee from the wrath which is to come. God will reward men according to their deeds when his work with them is finished. And there is no warding off the strokes of his judgment. They who depart from him weaken and bring certain ruin on themselves. If God's mercy be once taken from men, they are irrecoverably miserable. And they who in works deny God may expect to be disowned by him at last. But JENIN BY EARLY MORNING LIGHT, WHERE THE BOW OF ISRAEL WAS TO BE BROKEN. [HOSEA, i : 5.]—"And it shall come to pass at that day, that I will break the bow of Israel in the valley of Jezreel." The city of Jenin lies on the frontier of Samaria, at the southern edge of the plain of Jezreel. This is supposed to be the ancient En-gannim which was a Levitical city of Issachar, referred to in Joshua xix : 21, and xxi : 29. Here was the borderland between the provinces of Galilee and Samaria in the time of Christ. It is a beautiful situation, well watered, and its name signifies "a fountain of gardens." The springs rise in the hills behind the garden, and the water is conducted by an aqueduct to a reservoir in the center of the town, said to have been built in the first half of the present century. This place is the seat of Kaima Kam, a governor appointed by the Sultan at Constantinople to rule over it.

9 Then said God, Call his name [2]Lo-ammi:[3] for ye are not my people, and I will not be your God.

10 ¶ Yet[a] the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered: [c]and it shall come to pass, that in the[4] place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God.

11 Then[p] shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, and they shall come up out of the land: [q]for great shall be the day of Jezreel.[5]

CHAPTER II.

1 The idolatry of the people. 6 God's judgments against them. 14 His promises of reconciliation with them.

SAY ye unto your brethren, [a]Ammi;[1] and to your sisters, Ruhamah.[2]

2 Plead[b] with your mother, plead; for [c]she is not my wife, neither am I her husband: let her therefore put away her [d]whoredoms out of her sight, and her adulteries from between her breasts;

3 Lest I [e]strip her naked, and set her as in the day that she was born, and make her [f]as a wilderness, and set her like a dry land, and slay her with thirst.

4 And [h]I will not have mercy upon her children; for they be the children of whoredoms.

5 For [i]their mother hath played the harlot; she that conceived them hath done shamefully: for she said, I will go after my [j]lovers, that give me my bread and my water, my wool and my flax, mine oil and my drink.[3]

6 Therefore, behold, I will [k]hedge up thy way with thorns, and make a wall,[4] that she shall not find her paths.

7 And [l]she shall follow after her lovers, but she shall not overtake them; and she shall seek them, but shall not find them: then shall she say, [n]I will go and return to my first husband, for then was it better with me than now.

8 For [o]she did not know that I gave her corn, and wine,[5] and oil, and multiplied her silver and gold, which they prepared for Baal.[6]

9 Therefore will I return, and [r]take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the season thereof, and will recover[7] my wool and my flax given to cover her nakedness.

10 And now [s]will I discover her [8]lewdness in the sight of her lovers, and [t]none shall deliver her out of mine hand.

11 I [u]will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast-days, her new moons, and her sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts.

12 And I will destroy[9] her vines and her fig-trees, whereof she hath said, [v]These are my rewards that my lovers have given me: and [w]I will make them a forest, and the beasts of the field shall eat them.

13 And I will visit upon her [x]the days of Baalim, wherein she burned incense to them, and she decked herself with her earrings and her jewels, and she went after her lovers, and forgat me, saith the LORD.

14 ¶ Therefore,[1] behold, I will [y]allure her, and bring her into [z]the wilderness,[2] and speak comfortably unto her.[3]

15 And [a]I will give her her vineyards [b]from thence,[5] and the [6]valley of Achor for a door of hope; and she shall sing there, [c]as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt.

16 And it shall be at that day, saith the LORD, that thou shalt call me Ishi,[7] and shalt call me no more Baali.[8]

17 For [b]I will take away the names of [c]Baalim out of her mouth, and they shall no more be remembered by their name.

18 And in that day [d]will I make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground: and [e]I will break the bow, and the sword, and the battle out of the earth, and [g]will make them to lie down safely.

19 And [h]I will betroth thee unto me [i]for ever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me [j]in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving kindness, and in mercies:

20 I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness; and [k]thou shalt know the LORD.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day,

* This is a historical figure. God led Israel out of the bondage of Egypt into the wilderness. They were free there. They could serve him without fear and without restraint. He taught them there, revealing a holy law and an instructive ritual. He manifested there alike his love, his wisdom, and his power. In all these ways he constituted Israel to honour and serve him. So we are to understand the words of this passage. Reading into the wilderness is not a curse; it is a blessing. It is not a punishment; it is a redemption from slavery. The wilderness is to be the scene of divine instruction, guidance, and mercy. It is to be the way to the heavenly Canaan.—P.

[3] The meaning seems to be, that as soon as the border of the wilderness, into which it is necessary to lead her, is reached, I shall give her from that spot new and everlasting possessions in the spring-tide Canaan. The words which follow convey a very charming promise. Israel had sinned in the person of Achan, and was severely punished. But the Lord shows, I reckon now the guilt was to be removed, and the lost favour of God regained. Through the same Achor the valley became a memorial how the Lord restores his favour to the church after the expiation of the guilt by the punishment of the transgressor. Thus the valley of Achor becomes the symbol of hope and renewed favour.—P.

our salvation is solely owing to his loving grace. And if we cleave to God in a day of defection, he will save us in a day of trouble. Thrice happy are they who, adopted into his family, have Jesus for their spiritual head, and go up from this world to their heavenly rest. Happy are the apostolic and coming periods, and especially that of the last judgment, in which multitudes of Jews and Gentiles shall follow after him as the head of his redeemed church.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1 might have been connected with the preceding chapter, intimating that, at that general restoration, the Hebrews will again be adopted as God's people, and share his peculiar favour. 2–4. And let the pious Israelites, or Jewish converts to Christianity, earnestly plead with their nation, which have practically abandoned my worship and service, and which I am just ejecting from their peculiar relation to me, to repent of and reform from their idolatries and other beloved abominations, lest I quickly deprive them of all their privileges, render their country desolate, themselves miserable captives, and without mercy continue my judgment upon their posterity for many generations. 5–13. For since they, with impudent obstinacy, depend on heathen alliances and idols, as if these had procured them their enjoyments, they shall be brought into inextricable perplexities and miseries, that they shall not be able to accomplish their idolatrous or wicked designs. And neither idols nor idolatrous allies being able to help them, they shall return to their God, who anciently heaped so many favours on their ancestors. And because they refuse to own me as the bestower of those outward things, wherewith they make and worship idols, I will deprive them of these things; and, by my fearful judgments, effectually and incontrollably manifest their fearful wickedness to all the nations around, turn all their joy into mourning, all their plenty into miserable poverty, and give their substance to furious enemies, render their country desolate, and thus severely punish their idolatries. 14–18. Nevertheless I, who brought their fathers out of Egypt into the wilderness, and entered into covenant with them, will at last deliver them from their captivity and dispersion, and to their great comfort bring them through all difficulties into their own land, and make them to rejoice in my salvation, as their fathers did on their having passed through the Red Sea; and I will strive to lead them to renounce their idolatry and apostasy, and solemnly and cordially to acknowledge me alone as the Lord their gracious God. I will graciously protect them from every temporal or spirit-

I[l] will hear, saith the LORD, I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth;

22 And the earth shall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil; and they shall hear Jezreel.

23 And[n] I will sow her unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I [o]will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God.[p]

CHAPTER III.

1 By the prophet taking unto him an adulteress, is showed the desolation of Israel, and their restoration.

THEN said the LORD unto me, Go yet, love a[a] woman beloved of her friend, yet an adulteress, [b]according to the love of the LORD toward the children of Israel, [c]who look to other gods, and love [1]flagons of wine.[2]

2 So I [d]bought her[3] to me for fifteen pieces[4] of silver, and for an homer[5] of barley, and an half homer[6] of barley:

3 And I said unto her, [e]Thou shalt abide for me many days; thou shalt not play the harlot, and thou shalt not be for another man:[7] so will I also be for thee.

4 For the children of Israel shall abide many days[8] without a king,[9] and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image,[1] and without an ephod, and without teraphim.

5 Afterward[g] shall the children of Israel return, and [h]seek the LORD their God, and [i]David[2] their king; and shall fear the LORD and [j]his goodness in the [k]latter days.

CHAPTER IV.

1 God's judgments against the sins of the people, 6 and of the priests, 12 and against their idolatry. 15 Judah is exhorted to take warning by Israel's calamity.

HEAR the[a] word of the LORD, ye children of Israel: for [b]the LORD hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the land, because [c]there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God, in the land.

2 By[d] swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery, they break out, and blood[1] toucheth[e] blood.[2]

3 Therefore [f]shall the land mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein shall languish, with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven; yea, the fishes of the sea also shall be taken away.

4 Yet[h] let no man strive, nor reprove another: for thy people are [i]as they that strive with the priest.

5 Therefore [j]shall thou fall in the day, and the prophet also shall fall with thee in the night, and I will destroy[3] thy [k]mother.[4]

He uses the means and these means are only the instruments of mercy, made real and made effectual by his all-active power. H.

ual enemy and danger; 19-23, and through sacrificial love and compassion, I will, in infinite equity, wisdom, love, mercy, and faithfulness, render them my people by an everlasting promise, and help them to know and acknowledge me as their God, fulfilling all my gracious promises. I will make all things in heaven and earth to concur in promoting their temporal, spiritual, and eternal welfare. Yea, I will graciously multiply their children; and, notwithstanding their long and fearful rejection, both Jews and Gentiles shall be rendered my peculiar people, sincere, bold, and open professors of the gospel of Christ.

Ver. 2. She is not my wife, &c. Having ceased to be loving and faithful, she ceased to be a wife—for these two principles are implied in that holy character and relation; and he ceased to be her husband, not by any fault of his, but because her infidelity had dissolved the marriage tie. C.

Ver. 3. I will go, &c. This is the exact parable of the younger son, Lu. 15. 18, who, having wasted his substance, and having been reduced to the degrading employment of feeding swine, at last, through grace, 'came to himself,' and said, 'I will arise and go unto my father.' C.

Ver. 6. She did not know. Either to be ignorant of God, or altogether to overlook or deny him, is the constant characteristic of irreligion. The prophet here draws his evidence of this fact from agriculture and commerce—corn, oil, wine, wool, flax, silver, and gold—the produce, possessions, and emblems of a prosperous people; all naturally calculated to lead the heart to the Giver, but all, through sin, leading to neglect or ignorance both of his providence and grace. C.

Ver. 9. Therefore will I . . . take away my corn, &c. By drought, rain, wind, mildew, or those inexplicable causes of unfruitfulness which God sends, from time to time, to teach the ignorant, stir up the thoughtless, and convince the gainsayer, of a truth the most simple, yet so little understood and less felt—'the Lord reigneth.' C.

Ver. 12. The march of improvement in agriculture, manufactures, and the various useful or ornamental arts, ought to be accompanied with similar advancement in the public feeling of gratitude to God. But, alas! experience discovers that improvements in temporal are too often arraigned at the expense of spiritual things. Israel had greatly advanced in the cultivation of the vine and the fig—two inexhaustible sources of national employment and prosperity—but having derived her improvements chiefly from the example and instruction of her idolatrous neighbours, she not merely adopts their improvements, but conforms to their idolatry, and records her success as 'rewards' from them, and forgets or denies that they are mercies from God. O that Britain may take warning, and never be seduced after this sad example of national unbelief! C.

Ver. 14. I dare. Not by mere arbitrary requirement without any reason assigned beyond the divine will; nor yet by any penalty imposed upon neglect or infraction, but by such tenderness as a father employs, because he feels and such alluring hopes as he sets before his child when he would lead him to sacrifice the present to the future, and pursue the course of self-denial, and study that he may attain a character and a position of emolument and honour. C.

Ver. 15. Achor was the place [Jos. 7. 25] where Achan was put to death for his covetousness of gold and silver and a Babylonish garment. Now 'covetousness is idolatry,' and until that principle is destroyed by the mortifying spirit, Ro. 8. 13, some form of idolatry will still reign in the heart. But when 'covetousness' is destroyed, then the believer is 'saved by hope,' because the love of God is shed abroad in his heart, just in proportion as the love of the world is expelled. Ro. 5. 5; 8. 24; 1 Jn. 2. 15, 16. C.

Ver. 16. Ishi—that is, my husband, bound by the oath of the covenant to faithfulness and love, He 6. 16–18.—Baali, that is, my lord; claiming superiority as a right, and exacting obedience as a debt. C.

Ver. 21. I will hear the heavens—while angels rejoice over sinners that repent, Lu. 15. 7, 10; and they shall hear the earth as believers cry, 'Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.' C.

Ver. 22. The corn, the seed of the word as it falls or ripens, Mar. 4. 3, 23. Wine, the reviving power of gospel promises, Is. 55. 1. Oil, the unity of brethren in the bond of peace, produced by his effectual teaching, Ps. 133. 1–3; Eph. 4. 3; 1 Jn. 2. 20.—Jezreel, the dispersed seed of God returning with joy to Messiah, ch. 1. 10, 11. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Our relation to God, and dependence on him, exceedingly aggravate our rebellion against him; and yet God will renew his grant of that relation. O how loath he is to give up his professing people! They who love him ought therefore with great earnestness to expostulate with backsliding brethren, in order to convince them of their sin, warn them of their danger, and persuade them to repent of, and reform from, their sins; and not only to put away the grosser acts, but even the most inward and beloved abominations. If men abuse God's temporal favours in the service of idols, or accept them as received from such, it is but just that he should deprive them of them; and that he should mar the fields and flocks of those who have profaned his ordinances. But how tender are his mercies! Where sin and its punishments had abounded, grace much more abounds. God allures those by his gospel grace who justly deserve his everlasting destruction. And distress and fear, as well as foretastes of his kindness, promote spiritual gladness and detestation of idols. And, O, thrice-blessed is it to have JEHOVAH our reviver and comforter, our cleanser from all idols, our protector from every enemy, our gracious, faithful, and everlasting husband, our enricher, our God, and our ALL! In view of this, let my soul, hedged in by his providence, and all allured by his kindness, cast out her idols, and claim JEHOVAH as my own; that, in Christ, I may have his grace, mercy, and peace multiplied unto me! Adoring the grace which first chose, espoused, and drew my heart, let me, in communion with his people, cordially and solemnly take him to be my God for ever, and my guide even unto death.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 2. Hosea's purchasing back his whorish wife at the price of a slave, denotes that base and disgraceful bondage in which the Israelites should long continue. 3, 4. This shows that the Israelites and Jews should, in the most deplorable manner, continue many ages without either civil or ecclesiastical establishment, neither worshipping the true God aright, nor professing regard to the idols of the nations. 5. But after the captivity, and especially in the beginning of the spiritual kingdom, shall all the Hebrew tribes, through the marvellous kindness of God, be converted to the Christian faith and true worship and fear of God.

Ver. 1. Go yet—go again. The former parable of the unfaithful wife, ch. 1. 2–9, related to 'the house of Israel,' ch. 1. 4; that is, to the ten tribes as a kingdom. This parable relates to 'the children of Israel,' ch. 2. 10, 11; 3. 2, which name includes the whole 'twelve tribes scattered abroad.' Beloved of her friend—her husband, Je. 3. 20. Ca. 5. 16. —Yet an adulteress. Though an adulteress, the emblem of Israel, 'beloved for the fathers' sakes,' notwithstanding all their unfaithfulness. C.

Ver. 3. The dispersion of Israel was to cure them of idolatry—justly characterized as adultery, because idolatry and licentiousness have, in all ages, been intimately, if not inseparably, united. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is very difficult to instruct or reclaim hardened professors. Precept must be upon precept, and sign upon sign. And the kindness of God seems long lost upon obstinate sinners. Sharply he must afflict them, even while he waits to be gracious: and long and disgraceful distress must teach them to value his kind returns. But happy are those afflictions which restrain us from using sinful means of relief, or which restrain us from following after idols. And thrice happy is it when both favours and frowns effectually draw us to Jesus Christ and his service. It is only in him that we can find JEHOVAH as ours, or taste of his heart-constraining goodness.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1–5. Let the ten tribes of Israel know assuredly that God, highly provoked with their hypocrisy, fraud, and falsehood, their uncharitableness and cruelty, their wilful or slothful ignorance of

KHAN JUBB-YUSUF—IN THE COUNTRY WHICH, ACCORDING TO HOSEA, WAS TO LANGUISH AND MOURN. [Hosea, iv.1, 2, 3.]—"Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye children of Israel: for the Lord hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the land, because there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land. By swearing, and lying, and killing, and stealing, and committing adultery, they break out, and blood toucheth blood. Therefore shall the land mourn, and everyone that dwelleth therein shall languish, with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven." Khan Jubb-Yusuf is a few miles north of Capernaum. The Khan derives its name from a tradition current among old Arab geographers that the pit into which Joseph was thrown was situated here. It is a desolate region, and one riding from Capernaum to this place will be impressed with the truth of this third verse: "The land shall mourn and everyone that dwelleth therein shall languish."

7 As[e] they were increased, so they sinned against me: therefore [f]will I change their glory into shame.

8 They [g]eat up the sin of my people, and they set their [h]heart on their iniquity.[6]

9 And there shall be, [i]like people, like priest: and I will punish[7] them for their ways, and reward them[8] their doings.

10 For [k]they shall eat, and not have enough: they shall commit [l]whoredom, and shall not increase: because they [m]have left off to take heed to the LORD.

11 Whoredom,[x] and wine, and new wine, take away the heart.

12 ¶ My[n] people ask counsel at their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them:[9] for [o]the spirit of whoredoms hath caused them to err, and they have gone [p]a whoring from under their God.

13 They[q] sacrifice upon the tops of the mountains, and burn incense upon the hills, under oaks and poplars and elms, because the shadow thereof is good: therefore [r]your daughters shall commit whoredom, and your spouses shall commit adultery.

14 I[s] will not[t] punish your daughters when they commit whoredom, nor your spouses when they commit adultery: for [u]themselves are separated with whores, and they sacrifice with harlots: [v]therefore the people that doth not understand shall [w]fall.[3]

15 ¶ Though thou, Israel, [x]play the harlot, yet [y]let not Judah offend; and come not ye unto Gilgal, neither go ye up to [z]Beth-aven, [a]nor swear, The LORD liveth.

16 For Israel [b]slideth back as a backsliding heifer: now the LORD [c]will feed them as a lamb in a large place.[5]

17 Ephraim is joined to idols: [d]let him alone.

18 Their[r] drink is sour:[6] they have committed whoredom [e]continually: her rulers[7] with shame [f]do love, Give ye.

divine things, and by their presumptuous profane swearing, perjury, murder, theft, and adultery, the repeated, and everywhere frequent, murders of their kings and others, will, by sword, famine, and pestilence, render their country most miserable and desolate. But it is to no purpose to warn or reprove them, they are so hardened and obstinate, and are ready to flee in the face of the best authorized reprovers. Therefore they and their false prophets shall be destroyed together, and their civil constitution shall be utterly broken, and the people murdered or dragged into captivity. 6–11. Since the priests neglect to instruct the people, and reject or forget the law of God, I will exclude them and their children from the office and benefit of the priesthood; and since, as their numbers, wealth, and power increase, they become more daring in their impieties, I will strip them of all their possessions and honours, and render them miserable and contemptible captives. And since they, with eagerness and pleasure, pamper themselves with the flesh of the people's sin-offerings, and even encourage them to sin, that their gain may abound; therefore shall priests and people, already alike in ignorance, intemperance, and profaneness, be quickly alike involved in fearful punishments. Their food being withdrawn or cursed, they shall be pinched with hunger. Their whoredoms shall not increase their families, nor their idolatries nor sinful alliances their strength.—For they have openly cast off all regard to me and my law; their whoredoms, idolatries, drunkenness, and luxury rendering them quite stupid and besotted. 12–14. Though they profess to be my people, they consult their wooden idols, and divine things by the falling of their staves. Instigated by the devil and their own idolatrous inclinations, they have renounced their dependence on me; and so abandoned themselves to idolatry, that there is scarcely the top of a hill, or a cluster of trees, where they do not worship some idol; and therefore will I give them up to the basest uncleanness and whoredoms, even in the worship of their idols, their daughters and wives being encouraged thereto by the example of their fathers and husbands:—in consequence of which, this besotted nation shall plunge themselves into ruin. 15–19. But though the Israelites have abandoned themselves to idolatry, let not the Jews copy their example, nor come near any of their idolatrous temples at Gilgal or Bethel, nor profane the name of the Lord by using it lightly, or attributing it to idols, or any way mixing his worship with idolatry or superstition;—for these Israelites are become quite headstrong and untractable in their apostasy from God to idols; and therefore shall their short-lived prosperity, under Jeroboam II. and Pekah, quickly issue in a miserable dispersion through the Assyrian empire. They are so violently addicted to idolatry, that it is needless for ministers to rebuke, conscience to check, Providence to restrain or afflict, or my Spirit to strive any more with them. Their drink-offerings and other services are quite abominable to me: and the wine which they have intemperately drunk turns sour on their stomach. They are perpetually occupied in whoredom and idolatry; and nothing can be obtained from their judges but by the force of shameful bribery: therefore shall the Assyrians hurry them into a miserable captivity and lasting dispersion, in which they shall with shame see their folly in trusting to idols and departing from God.

Ver. 1. 'The spiritual adultery of Israel, with its consequences, which the prophet has exposed in the first part, and chiefly in a symbolical mode, is more elaborately detailed here, not only with regard to its true nature, viz. the religious apostasy and moral depravity which prevailed throughout the ten tribes, but also in its inevitable consequences, the destruction of the kingdom and rejection of the people: and this is done with a repeated side-glance at Judah. To this there is appended a solemn appeal to return to the Lord, and a promise that the Lord will have compassion upon the penitent and renew his covenant of grace with them.' In these words Keil has well summarized the contents of the second part or division of this book, and its connection with the first. F.—A controversy. A phrase taken from a suit at law for injury inflicted on the person or damage done to property. C.

Ver. 2. Break out—as water bursts through banks and overflows the land. C.

Ver. 3. The fishes of the sea shall be taken away. Sea, in Hebrew, is put for any considerable extent of water—and by drought in their tributary streams the supply of fish might be destroyed. Or, if the Great Sea be understood, the depredations of foreign fishermen might soon take away the supply from the feeble and unprotected Israelites. C.

Ver. 5. Therefore shalt thou fall. The address is to the idolatrous priest, comp. ver. 4, 6, but includes the whole people as a church, whose office and dignity was 'a kingdom of priests,' Ex. 19. 6. C.

Ver. 6. Thy children. The address is to the church as a mother, ver. 4, that is, to the church as intrusted with the education of her children. C.

Ver. 8. Eat up the sin. Not the sin-offering, but the sin itself, which they countenanced by their erroneous teaching, ver. 6, and which they were not desirous of correcting: because, as lawyers, judges, and magistrates, they derived their support from the fees, bribes, and fines arising from the public criminality. See ver. 18. C.

Ver. 11. Take away the heart of the rational and immortal man, and reduce him to the level of the beasts that perish, Ps. 49. 20. C.

Ver. 14. I will not punish, &c. This is contrary to both the tenor of God's law and providence. It should be translated, 'Shall not I punish,' &c.—Harlots. Such as prostituted themselves in idol temples in honour of the idol, as the word signifies. C.

Ver. 15. Gilgal. Famous for the renewal of the covenant of circumcision, Jos. 5. 2–9; infamous for the idolatry set up by Jeroboam.—Beth-aven—the same as Beth-el. 'The house of God,' in the days of faithful Abraham—'the house of iniquity,' in the days of his faithless descendants. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas, what unhappy discord sin sows between God and men! But they who have lost the true knowledge of God, generally proceed from evil to worse. And profane ministers and magistrates are ordinarily ringleaders in guilt, and will rejoice in the wickedness of those under their charge, if it but add to their gain.—But it is just that God should withdraw his mercies from such as abuse them, and heap upon obstinate transgressors one plague after another;—that rebels against the light of his word should perish in their ignorance;—that ignorant and scandalous ministers should be exposed to peculiar misery and shame;—that what is unlawfully gained should be blasted with a curse, and that with which we have dishonoured God should be turned to our shame;—and that sharers in sin should be sharers in punishment! Men will go the most dreadful lengths in sin when abandoned to their own hearts' lusts: every one will then keep another in countenance, and their dreadful crimes will at last be made a distinguished branch of their punishment. And when apostasy is general, there is great need to guard against the most distant compliance with it. It is hard to forbear the devil's service if we walk on his ground, or lose a proper reverence for God. And dreadful is the danger of complying with that which so quickly hurries men into sudden, unavoidable, and everlasting ruin.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1, 2. Seriously take warning, ye priests, Israelites, and princes, of the fearful but just judgments of God impending over you, because, like hunters and fowlers upon the mountains, ye have endeavoured by all means to ensnare men to idolatry and ruin; and notwithstanding manifold rebukes by my prophets and providences, have, by subtle contrivances and specious pretences, oppressed and murdered your opposers. 3–7. But I am fully acquainted with all your wickedness, your idolatries and whoredoms, and how, through ignorance of me, ye are obstinately addicted to your apostasy and wickedness. Your pride is openly avowed, and your insolence in sin is manifested in your very looks; therefore shall ye be quickly destroyed by civil wars, and at last ruined by the Assyrians, in which the Jews shall partly share along with you. Nor shall either multitudes of sacrifices or of prayers avail to appease or turn away my wrath from you: but since you have treacherously transgressed my command in marrying heathens, and bringing up your children as heathens, the Assyrians shall, in a short time, devour both you and your estates. 8–10. Be warned, O ye Jews, that the Assyrians, having desolated the country of the ten tribes, will render you miserable. They shall be utterly ruined, as I have often warned them by my prophets. And since the princes of Judah have disregarded the bounds fixed by my law, and seized on their neighbours' property, therefore shall the Assyrians and others, as instruments of TEMPLE OF ÆSCULAPIUS—A TEMPLE BUILT BY THE GREEKS TO THE GOD OF MEDICINE. [Hosea, iv:13.]—"They sacrifice upon the tops of the mountains, and burn incense upon the hills, under oaks and poplars and elms, because the shadow thereof is good. This prophecy of Hosea is supposed to have been uttered about 785 B. C. We are taught from this and other prophecies that God's chosen people had learned from their neighbors the practices of idolatry so completely that they did not differ very much religiously from the heathen around them. At the very time that Hosea was charging his people with asking counsel at their stocks, and with sacrificing upon the tops of the mountains, and burning incense upon the hills, the Greeks were giving themselves up to different forms of idolatrous worship. The temple of Æsculapius stands at the foot of the Acropolis in Athens, and was built in honor of the god of Medicine.

CHURCH OF THE HOLY TABLE, NAZARETH—IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD WHERE CHRIST LIVED THIRTY YEARS. [Zechariah, xiii:6.]—"And one shall say unto Him, What are these wounds in thine hands? Then He shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends." Tradition makes the rock which we see in the picture the place where Christ and His disciples often ate together. This rock is in the interior of the Church of the Holy Table in Nazareth. It is about three feet high, ten feet long, and three feet wide. We are standing in the front of the church and are looking toward the altar. This is a small church, but very beautifully kept. This chapel was built in 1861, and belongs to the Latin Christians.

CHAPTER V.

1 God's judgments against the priests, the people, and the princes of Israel, for their manifold sins, 15 until they repent.

HEAR ye[a] this, [b]O priests; and hearken, ye house of Israel; and give ye ear, [c]O house of the king; for [d]judgment is toward you because ye have been [e]a snare on Mizpah, and a net spread upon Tabor.

2 And the revolters are [f]profound to make slaughter,[1] though[2] I have been a rebuker[3] of them all.

3 I[g] know Ephraim,[4] and Israel is not hid from me: for now, O Ephraim, [h]thou committest whoredom, and Israel is defiled.

4 They will not [i]frame[5] their doings[6] to turn unto their God: for the [k]spirit of whoredoms is in the midst of them, and they have not known the LORD.

5 And [l]the pride of Israel doth testify to his face: therefore shall Israel and Ephraim [m]fall in their iniquity; Judah also shall fall with them.

6 They shall go with [n]their flocks and with their herds to seek the LORD; but [p]they shall not find him; he hath withdrawn himself from them.[7]

7 They [q]have dealt treacherously against the LORD: for they have begotten [r]strange children: now[s] shall a month devour them with their portions.

8 Blow[t] ye the cornet in [u]Gibeah, and the trumpet in Ramah: cry aloud at [v]Beth-aven, after thee,[8] O Benjamin.

9 Ephraim[w] shall be desolate in the day of rebuke: among the tribes of Israel [x]have I made known that which shall surely be.

10 The[y] princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound: therefore I will pour out my wrath upon them [z]like water.

11 Ephraim[b] is oppressed, and broken in judgment, because he willingly walked after the[c] commandment.[9]

12 Therefore will I be unto Ephraim [d]as a moth, and to the house of Judah as [1]rottenness.[3]

13 When Ephraim saw his sickness, and Judah saw his wound, [e]then went Ephraim to the Assyrian, and sent [3]to king Jareb:[4] yet[g] could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wound.

14 For I will be unto Ephraim [h]as a lion, and as a young lion to the house of Judah: I, even I, will tear and go away; I will take away, and none shall rescue him.

15 ¶ I[i] will go and return to my place, till they [j]acknowledge their offence,[5] and seek my face: [k]in their affliction they will seek me early.

CHAPTER VI.

1 An exhortation to repentance. 4 A complaint against Israel and Judah for persisting still in their wickedness.

COME, and [a]let us return unto the LORD: for he [b]hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up.

2 After[c] two days will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight.

3 Then [d]shall we know, if we follow on to know the LORD: [e]his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us [2]as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth.

4 ¶ O Ephraim, [h]what shall I do unto thee? O Judah, what shall I do unto thee? for your goodness[1] is [i]as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away.

5 Therefore [j]have I hewed them by the prophets; I have slain them by the words of my mouth: [2]and thy judgments are [k]as the light that goeth forth.

6 For[l] I desired mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings.

7 But they, like men,[3] have[n] transgressed the covenant:[4] there[s] have they dealt treacherously against me.

my wrath, overflow and sweep them away. 11–15. As a just punishment of the Israelites' ready compliance with the idolatrous laws of Jeroboam and his successors, they are terribly oppressed by their unrighteous and tyrannical magistrates; and my judgments shall gradually and insensibly waste the kingdoms of Israel and Judah; and, perceiving their weakness, they shall apply to the Assyrians for help; who will distress and ruin, instead of helping them. And I, by their means, will, in the most fearless and furious manner, destroy them, and bereave them of their wealth. And, forbearing to help them, I will, for a time, leave them under the power of their troubles, till at last they be made candidly to acknowledge their offences, and earnestly supplicate my favour.

REFLECTIONS.—No station can protect men from God's judgment, and no secrecy can conceal sin from his notice. But as they who allure men to sin are plagues to all around them, they may expect redoubled judgments. And none are more subtle and barbarous oppressors and persecutors than apostates, who sin against much light and love. They who treacherously revolt from God, and educate their children in idolatry, may expect to have themselves, and all they have, quickly destroyed. And nothing more certainly presages destruction than pride and impudence in sinning. If men will not be humbled for their sins, they must perish in them. If men will make this world their portion, they may expect to have it rendered a means of their ruin. The destruction of one sinful nation should, but seldom does, make all their neighbours repent of their wickedness. God's threatenings become serious and awful in their fulfilment: and it forebodes ill when wicked laws are readily obeyed: when judgments are discerned, but not their cause; and when, under lesser judgments, men are not reformed, but flee to human aids. All means of relief prove fruitless except God bless them: and to trust to them but draws on heavier judgments. It is only in fellowship with God that men can be truly happy; and it is only in the way of acknowledging our offences, and of earnest prayer, that we can expect the returns of his favour.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1–3. Come, let us, by faith and repentance, return to the Lord who hath afflicted us, in the firm assurance of his graciously, seasonably, and speedily delivering us, and restoring us to happiness and comfort through the resurrection of Christ. And in the persevering exercise of these graces we shall experience his instruction, the clear and gradual manifestation of his favour, and his refreshing and fructifying comforts. 4–6. But ye hypocritical Israelites and Jews, what favour can be granted you? for those pretences of reformation under Hoshea, Jehu, and Hezekiah were but hypocritical: all is quickly blown over; therefore have I sharply rebuked them by the prophets, and by my threatenings devoted them to ruin; and in a little time my judgments, manifestly just, shall unavoidably overtake them. For it is inward and practical holiness and virtue, not ceremonial forms of service, that I chiefly regard. 7–11. But they, notwithstanding favours unnumbered, have, like Adam, broken my covenant, and lived as corruptly as the very heathens; even in the land which I gave them to encourage them to obedience; yea, in their very acts of devotion they have treacherously played the hypocrite.

8 Gilead[o] is a city of them that work iniquity, and is polluted with[6] blood.

9 And[p] as troops of robbers wait for a man, so the company of priests murder in the way by consent:[7] for they commit lewdness.[8]

10 I have seen [q]an horrible thing in the house of Israel: there is [r]the whoredom of Ephraim, Israel is defiled.

11 Also,[9] O Judah, he hath set [s]an harvest[1] for thee, when I returned the captivity of my people.[2]

CHAPTER VII.

1 Israel reproved for manifold sins. 11 God's wrath against them for their hypocrisy.

WHEN I [a]would have healed Israel, then the[b] iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, and the wickedness[1] of Samaria: for they commit falsehood; and the thief cometh in, and the troop of robbers spoileth[2] without:

2 And they consider not in[3] their hearts that I[c] remember all their wickedness: [d]now their own doings have [e]beset them about; they are before[g] my face.

3 They[h] make the king glad[4] with their wickedness, and the princes[5] with their lies.

4 They[i] are all adulterers, as an oven heated by the baker, [6]who ceaseth from raising[7] after he hath kneaded the dough, until it be leavened.

5 In [j]the day of our king the princes have made him [k]sick with bottles of wine:[8] he stretched[l] out his hand with scorners.

6 For [m]they have made ready[9] their heart like an oven, whiles they lie in wait: their baker sleepeth all the night; in the morning it burneth as a flaming fire.

7 They are all hot as an oven, [n]and have devoured their judges: all their kings are fallen: there[p] is none among them that calleth unto me.

8 Ephraim, [q]he hath mixed[1] himself among the people; Ephraim is [r]a cake not turned.[2]

9 Strangers[s] have devoured his strength, and he knoweth it not; yea, gray hairs are here and there[3] upon him, yet he knoweth not.

10 And the [t]pride of Israel testifieth to his face; and [u]they do not return to the LORD their God, nor seek him for all this.

11 ¶ Ephraim also is [v]like a silly dove without heart: they call to Egypt, they go to Assyria.

12 When they shall go, [x]I will spread my net upon them; I will bring them down as the fowls of the heaven; I will [y]chastise them, [z]as their congregation hath heard.[4]

13 Woe[a] unto them! for they have fled from me: destruction[5] unto them! [b]because they have transgressed against me: though [c]I have redeemed them, yet they have spoken [d]lies against me.

14 And [e]they have not cried unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their beds: [f]they assemble themselves for corn and wine, and they rebel against me.

15 Though[h] I have bound[6] and strengthened their arms, yet do they [i]imagine mischief against me.

16 They[j] return, but not [k]to the Most High: they are like a deceitful bow: their princes shall fall by the sword for the [l]rage of their tongue: this shall be their derision [m]in the land of Egypt.

CHAPTER VIII.

Destruction is threatened both to Israel and Judah for their impiety and idolatry.

[a]SET the trumpet to [1]thy mouth.[2] He[b] shall come as an eagle against the house of the LORD, [c]because they have transgressed my covenant, and trespassed against my law.

Ramoth-gilead, though inhabited by Levites, is notorious for idolatry, murder, and every other crime. The Israelitish priests who dwell there support one another in robbery, murder, and other enormities. Nay, idolatry, whoredom, and other heaven-daring wickedness, so fearfully prevail among the ten tribes of Israel, as cannot be thought of or mentioned without horror.—And even the Jews have, by their impiety, ripened themselves for destruction.—But their harassment by the Assyrians, and captivity by the Chaldeans, shall nevertheless quickly issue in joyful deliverances.

Ver. 1. Come, let us return. In this and the two following verses the prophet, in his own person, exhorts the people to return with him to the service of JEHOVAH. C.

Ver. 2. There are here three distinct periods. The first is the day of the captivity of the ten tribes, which closed with the captivity of Judah. The second was the day of the complete dispersion and utter desolation by the Romans. The third is the period yet to come, commencing with the restoration so often promised, so long delayed, but still a sure word of prophecy which JEHOVAH, who cannot lie, will assuredly accomplish in his own time. There seems also an implied allusion to the resurrection of our Lord, first carried captive by the soldiers; secondly, by death: on the third 'his going forth prepared as the morning,' when he literally arose 'early on the first day of the week, as it began to dawn.' C.

Ver. 3. Latter rain. The translation does not convey the meaning. It signifies, literally, 'the crop rain;' which, as rains in warm countries do, fell periodically early in March, a little before the Judean harvest, and served to fill the grain.—Former rain. Literally, 'the rain that makes to spring'—the spring rain, which falls on the newly sown seed in October. C.

REFLECTIONS.—All troubles ought to be viewed as coming from God, and should awaken us to faith and repentance. There is no plague in this world which the infinite mercy of God in Christ cannot cure. His providence, which distresses, can relieve; and his Spirit, who convinces, can comfort us. Let us therefore always maintain faith in a risen Redeemer, and in the infinite power and kindness of God. Our deliverance and comforts are most likely to surprise us when our case is at the darkest. But God little regards that religion which comes by fits and starts. And often much hardened are the hearts of gospel hearers when they do not practice what they hear. God indeed repeatedly warns before he destroys: but his words will certainly issue either in the death of men's sins, or in their own. Want of true morality can never be balanced by forms of religion: it but provokes JEHOVAH to attempt it. To what treachery, perjury, idolatry, murder, and everything horrid, professors, and especially careless clergymen, will abandon themselves! And how unanimous are mankind in their rebellion against God! No wonder then that he makes their plagues dreadful! and sovereign is the mercy when he connects deserved judgments with gracious deliverances.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1, 2. Notwithstanding the reformation which was begun under Jehu, and the restoration of their glory under Jehoash and Jeroboam, and notwithstanding all the pains which I have taken with them by my prophets, the wickedness of the ten tribes, in hypocrisy, perjury, dishonesty, and violence, and other forms unnumbered, is so increased before me, and is so notorious and daring, that I must punish them with unavoidable calamities. 3. By ready compliance with their wicked laws, by acting wickedly, by uttering flattery, or by slander of the godly, they please their kings. 4. They all are adulterers and idolaters; their bodies and minds being inflamed, and their hearts entertaining corrupt desires, they contrive how to gratify them. 5. In their royal feasts they and their king besot themselves with drunkenness, and deride the oracles, ordinances, or judgments of God. 6. Heated by wine, inflamed by lust, eagerly attached to idolatry, and infuriated with hatred of one another, they greedily wait for, and seize on, the first opportunity to execute their sinful purposes. 7. Thus inflamed, they murder their magistrates one after another. But in all their calamities they never request my pity or help. 8. By marriages and alliances with heathens they have learned their manners. They are zealous for their idols, but indifferent about the true worship of God, and at best halt between him and their idols. 9. Therefore heathen enemies have wasted their country, and everywhere symptoms of their approaching destruction appear; but they never regard it, nor take any proper means to prevent it. 10. So notorious is the pride and obstinacy of their hearts, that notwithstanding all the calamities which they have felt, or may see impending, they do not in the least repent or reform, or even request my assistance. 11. Nay, without any attention to the true method of relief, they, by turns, apply for help to their implacable enemies of Egypt and Assyria. 12. But I will entangle and disappoint them in all their designs; and will, as I have publicly warned them by my

SHIPS AT SMYRNA—A CITY OF THE GENTILES, IN WHICH THE JEWS WERE SWALLOWED UP. [Hosea, viii.8.] —"Israel is swallowed up: now shall they be among the Gentiles as a vessel wherein is no pleasure." Smyrna is a great city on the coast of Asia Minor, whose leading merchants are Jews. Perhaps there is no city upon earth where the Jews have more influence in a commercial way than in this city. Not only in the time of Hosea was it true that Israel was swallowed up in Assyria and Babylon, but it continues to this day true that they are scattered among the Gentiles. The harbor of Smyrna is one of the most beautiful in the world. It is about two miles wide, and about six or eight miles long, lying due west from the city. Large numbers of vessels are always to be seen here, and because of the great trade of this city with the world it has come to have cosmopolitan modes of thought and manners.

2 Israel [d]shall cry unto me, My God, we know thee.

3 Israel hath [e]cast off the thing that is good: the enemy [f]shall pursue him.

4 They[h] have set up kings, but not by me; they have made princes, and I knew it not: [i]of their silver and their gold have they made them idols, that they may be cut off.

5 Thy[j] calf, O Samaria, hath cast thee off; mine[k] anger is kindled against them: [l]how long will it be ere they attain to innocency?

6 For[n] from Israel was it also: the workman made it; therefore it is not God: [o]but the calf of [p]Samaria shall be broken in pieces.

7 For [q]they have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind: it hath no stalk:[3] the bud shall yield no meal: if so be it yield, [r]the strangers shall swallow it up.

8 Israel is [s]swallowed up: now shall they be among[t] the Gentiles [u]as a vessel wherein is no pleasure.

9 For they are [v]gone up to Assyria, a wild ass alone by himself:[4] Ephraim [z]hath hired lovers.[5]

10 Yea, though they have hired among the nations, now [y]will I gather them,[6] and they shall sorrow a little[7] for [a]the burden of [b]the king of princes.

[4] Keil seems to bring out the true sense of this difficult clause:—The thought is this. Whilst even a wild ass, that stupid animal, keeps by itself to maintain its independence, Ephraim tries to form unnatural alliances with the rulers of the world, that is to say, alliances that are quite incompatible with its vocation. The going up to Assyria does not refer to the captivity, but to the seeking alliance with Assyria in order to maintain independence.—P.

prophets, debase and distress them. 13. Their apostasy from me, and rebellion against my laws, shall issue in their fearful and lasting ruin. For though I have often delivered them in straits, they have set up idols in my room, contradicted my oracles, or entertained me with hypocritical pretences and promises of reformation. 14. Yea, even when, in their beds or idol temples, they pitifully mourned under their calamities, they never heartily supplicated me: and while they eagerly desired corn and wine to satisfy their lust, they continue in their rebellion against me. 15. Whether I weakened them by adversity, or strengthened them by prosperity, they contrived how to displease me more and more by their idolatrous and wicked courses. 16. And even when they pretend to repent and turn to me, all is mere dissimulation;—therefore shall their princes, who have blasphemed me and reviled my prophets, be miserably destroyed by the Assyrians or conspirators; and all their applications to the Egyptians for help shall but issue in a derision of their calamities.

Ver. 16. A deceitful bow. The reference is to a peculiar species of bow, constructed of several pieces, which, when strung, is bent backward, and may be unstrung intentionally, by the slightest movement of the string to the right or left of the bow. If the one side of the bow be stronger than the other it unstrings itself, and, even when drawn to its full tension, deceives the archer, by dropping the arrow at his feet. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas, how men oppose JEHOVAH's kindness to themselves, and obstinately dare to discredit the threatenings of God. But his ruinous judgments will at last convince them that he remembers their works. Palaces and courts are in general nests of abominations. And infernal influence and lustful fire furiously hurry sinners into whoredom and wickedness, while, with surprising care and contrivance, they wait for opportunities of gratifying their desires. And awful is their case who in trouble restrain prayer before God. Unnecessary connection with the wicked is very ensnaring and ruinous to religion and liberty; and God often makes such companions the instruments of punishing us. While stupidity under lesser judgments presages greater ones, application to heathens for help hastens them forward. Either pride, or they who indulge it, must be infallibly ruined. And nothing can be more provoking to God than to see those whom he has kindly warned, returning him hatred for his love. No wonder he detests the prayers of such as seek nothing but carnal enjoyments to gratify their lusts. And if even the greatest deal deceitfully with God, or outrageously with men, they themselves shall be rendered miserable and contemptible.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1. Loudly and earnestly warn these Israelites, who profess to be my people, that the Assyrians shall quickly and unavoidably tear, murder, and destroy them, because they have violated their covenant-obligations to me, and rebelled against my commandments. 2. In their distress they will indeed profess to acknowledge me for their God: 3. But, since they have practically rejected me and my worship, and cast off any due regard to my laws, the Assyrians shall pursue, murder, and carry them captive. 4. Without any regard to my commandment, they have set up what kings and governors they pleased; and, to their own ruin, have made themselves idols of silver and gold. 5. But the idol calf which they have placed at Samaria, Dan, Beth-el, or anywhere else, instead of protecting those obstinate sinners, provokes me to abandon them to their enemies. 6. According to their own invention, not any command of mine, the craftsman formed that merely pretended deity; and quickly shall it, unable to protect itself, be broken to pieces. 7. In their idolatrous courses and heathen alliances they but hasten upon themselves fearful miseries; and any appearance of success which they have for a while shall but tempt the Assyrians to invade and ruin their country. 8. They shall certainly be spoiled and devoured; and the poor remains of them, in the most despicable condition, be dispersed among the heathens of Assyria and the places adjacent. 9, 10. Their headstrong application to the Assyrians for help shall but issue in their unhappy captivity. The allies, whom they have procured at great expense, shall turn their enemies, and besiege them in their cities. And the vexatious tribute imposed upon them by Pul, the powerful monarch of Assyria, is but a prelude to far greater calamities. 11. The multitudes of idolatrous altars which they have erected, instead of atoning for their sin, or preventing their punishment, shall increase both. 12. I have, in the most clear and instructive manner, revealed to them my oracles, directing them in everything important in time or eternity; but they have quite disregarded my institutions, and abused my prophets, as setters forth of strange doctrines or insignificant fables. 13. Their sacrifices, which, without inward piety, they pretend to offer to me, but feast on themselves, I regard as no better than dead carrion; yea, they but hasten the punishment of their sins, and their flight into Egypt, for fear of the Assyrians. 14. Forgetful of their Maker and God, and regardless of his laws, the Israelites build temples for their idols, and the Jews fortify their cities, to secure themselves from the enemy. But the Assyrians or Chaldeans shall, ere long, burn and destroy them all.

Ver. 4. I knew it not. It was not communicated to me in prayer. The nation sought no counsel of me. C.

Ver. 5. Thy calf, &c. 'Cast far from thee thy calf, O Samaria!'—Against them. The kings and princes that for their base political purposes set up this idolatry, 1 Ki. 12. 25–33. C.

Ver. 6. For from Israel. But from Israel (the people) was it also, as well as from Jeroboam and the princes. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Ministers had need to be extremely bold and earnest in warning sinners. Men's own sins are their destroyers. God never casts off any till they cast off him. They who break his covenant of friendship expose themselves to the devouring rage of all around. Nor will any profession of relation to or knowledge of God avail those who in works deny him. The idolizing of creatures makes way for the destruction of both them and ourselves; and however gradually God's judgments may come, they will fall irresistibly at last. None are more despicable than professed Christians who have degenerated into profaneness. And the helps that men court instead of God will but prove the means of their ruin. If the great doctrines and laws of his Word be disregarded, no sacrifices, however costly, no forms of religion, can avail, but to aggravate our guilt or hasten our ruin. And neither temples nor fortifications can protect in the day of his wrath.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1. Do not vainly imagine, ye Israelites, that your prosperity will be as secure and lasting as that of other nations, for your iniquities are greater: you have treacherously revolted from JEHOVAH, your God, to idols; and reckoning your enjoyments their gifts, ye have honoured them with the tithes and first-fruits belonging to JEHOVAH. 2. Therefore blasting or mildew, or the ravages of the enemy, shall rob you of your abused blessings, and leave you WALLS, ACRO-CORINTH—OVERLOOKING THE RUINS OF THE ONCE SPLENDID CITY OF CORINTH NOW OBLITERATED. [HOSEA, ix : 17.]—"My God will cast them away, because they did not hearken unto him: and they shall be wanderers among the nations." This prophecy of Hosea was uttered about 760 B. C. Its fulfillment began when Israel was carried away to Assyria and Media by Sargon, 722. B. C. From that time forward it remained true that God's chosen people were wanderers among the nations. When St. Paul came to Corinth from Athens, in A. D. 51, he found here a synagogue and a great many Jews. The walls of Acro-Corinth are built around the sides of a mountain overlooking the ancient city of Corinth. Upon the brow of this mountain there was a temple of Venus, and at the time St. Paul was here it was, perhaps, the most wicked and licentious city on the earth. To-day it is in ruins, showing that heathen cities no less than those of the chosen people could not sin without suffering the consequences.

7 The[o] days of visitation are come, the days of recompense are come; Israel shall know it: the[8] prophet is a fool, the spiritual man[8] is mad, for the multitude of thine iniquity, and the great hatred.

8 The [p]watchman of Ephraim was with my God: but [q]the prophet is a snare of a fowler in all his ways, and hatred in[9] the house of his God.

9 They have [t]deeply corrupted themselves, as in the days of [u]Gibeah: therefore [v]he will remember their iniquity, he will visit their sins.

10 I[x] found Israel like grapes in the wilderness; I saw your fathers as the first ripe in the fig-tree at her first time:[1] but they [y]went to Baal-peor, and separated themselves unto that shame; and [z]their abominations were according as they [a]loved.

11 As for Ephraim, [b]their glory shall fly away like a bird, from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception.

12 Though they bring up their children, yet [c]will I bereave them, that there shall not be a man left: yea, woe also to them [d]when I depart from them!

13 Ephraim, as I saw [e]Tyrus, is planted in a pleasant place:[2] but Ephraim [g]shall bring forth his children to the murderer.

14 Give[h] them, O LORD: what wilt thou give? give them a miscarrying womb[3] and dry [4]breasts.

15 All their wickedness [i]is in Gilgal: for there I hated them: [j]for the wickedness of their doings I will drive them out of mine [k]house, I will love them no more: [l]all their princes are revolters.

16 Ephraim[m] is smitten, their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit: yea, though they bring forth, yet will I slay even the beloved fruit[5] of their womb.

17 My God [n]will cast them away, because they did not hearken unto him: and they shall be wanderers among the nations.

Israel is reproved and threatened for their impiety and idolatry, and exhorted to repentance.

ISRAEL is[a] an empty vine,[1] he bringeth forth fruit [b]unto himself, [c]according to the multitude of his fruit he hath increased the altars;

pining for want. 3. No longer shall ye continue in Canaan; but part of you, as fugitives and vagabonds, shall retire into Egypt, and the rest be carried captive into Assyria, to live in slavery and idolatry. 4. Nor shall ye be qualified nor have any opportunity to present any offerings to God that will be accepted; for ye shall have no access to bring your meat offerings or sacrifices for your sins into my temple. 5. Under your cruel oppression, ye shall have neither time nor liberty to keep any of your solemn feasts. 6. And while such of you as flee into Egypt, or the countries adjacent, are cut off by sword, famine, and pestilence, your stately and expensive houses shall be turned into heaps of rubbish. 7. Quickly ye shall see and feel those dreadful but richly-deserved judgments. Ye who mocked the prophets of God as fools and madmen, shall find that your false prophets were such, when ye are abandoned of God for your inexpressible wickedness and great hatred of him and his worship, and even of one another. 8. Once ye had prophets who were zealous for me, and faithfully declared my messages; but now, whatever they pretend, your false prophets do, by their doctrine and example, insnare you into sin and punishment, being haters of and hated by God, as they seduce and deter men from his worship and service; nay, are detested in the very temple of their idols. 9. Like the miscreants of Gibeah, ye are generally arrived at the highest pitch of lewdness, cruelty, and contempt of me, therefore will I speedily punish you in an exemplary manner. 10. Once I delighted in your fathers in the wilderness, blessed and watched over them as my chosen people; but they ungratefully apostatized to the shameful worship of Baal-peor, drawn into the snare by whorish women; and ever since ye and your fathers have multiplied and worshipped idols, as your lusts and fancies directed you. 11, 12. Your present blossoms of prosperity shall quickly leave you; and partly by miscarriages, early deaths, ravage, and murders of the enemy, your multitudes, of which ye boast, shall be almost utterly destroyed; and dreadful and lasting shall be your miseries when I withdraw my protection. 13. Your country seems as well replenished and fortified as Tyre itself; but your children shall be destroyed by the Assyrians. 14. Ye had therefore better have no children than bring them up for the slaughter. 15. Gilgal where I so remarkably blessed your fathers, and where my tabernacle once stood, is become notorious for idolatry and other wickedness. Therefore I hate them, and will expel them from my land and church, and will for many ages pursue them with the tokens of my vengeance. Their princes are revolters from my worship, and break through all the rules of justice and honesty. 16, 17. I will therefore utterly destroy them, root and branch; and for their obstinate rebellion cast them away into a miserable captivity and dispersion among the heathens.

Ver. 4. For their bread, &c. Their bread-offerings, either on the table of shew-bread, or meat-offering, Le. 2. 4; 6. 16, presented in typical confirmation of the sins of their souls, God will not accept. C.

Ver. 7. There seems no reason for interpreting either this or ver. 8 of false prophets. Is it not rather to be understood thus:—Such is your iniquity, you pronounce God's prophet a fool; such your hatred of God (Ro. 8. 7), you pronounce the spiritual man mad? C.

Ver. 8. The prophet is a snare, &c. 'The prophet is 'esteemed' a snare in all his ways, and an object of hatred in the house of his God;' that is, the true prophet of the true God: for had he been a false prophet of a false god, he would have flattered the people, and they would have praised him. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is absurd to rejoice when sin reigns in us, guilt burdens our consciences, and God's wrath hangs over our heads. If we idolize our created enjoyments, or bestow them upon the service of the devil, it is but just that God should deprive us of them. It is but just that apostates from God's service should be expelled from his land; that they who despise his ordinances should be deprived of them. And if sin turn populous countries into desolations, the sinful inhabitants may expect destruction, flee where they will. The appointed season of God's judgments will bring to light and punish their abominations. Nor have any a more awful influence in ripening nations for ruin than villanous clergymen. If sinners will imitate their fathers in wickedness, they may expect to draw on themselves the most fearful destruction. If they separate themselves to wickedness, God will separate them to punishment. If they follow their lusts, God will withdraw his protection, and usher in a flood of calamities. If they educate their children in sin, God will destroy them in wrath. The crosses which children often occasion more than counterbalance the comfort of them. And no misery is greater than to be deserted, hated, and rejected by God. But thrice happy are they, in the worst of times, who have God for their God and their ALL.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1. The Israelites, destitute of true goodness, have done nothing for my glory, but have been intent only upon gratifying their own lusts; and the more their wealth increased the more they multiplied their idolatries. 2. Their heart is divided between me and their idols, and mutual contentions rage among them; but their guilt shall quickly issue in their desolation, and the Assyrians shall destroy their altars and images. 3. Their contempt of my authority shall issue in their having no government of their own that can do them any good in their distressed circumstances. 4. They quite disregard their vows to God and oaths to the Assyrians or to one another; and instead of just judgments, injustice, oppression, and violence overspread the whole land. 5, 6. Dreadfully shall the worshippers mourn, and especially the priests, who lived merrily on their incomes, when their golden calves at Beth-el shall be disgracefully seized by the Assyrians, and sent as a present to their king, and themselves exposed to shame, for their obstinate worshipping of an insignificant idol which cannot protect itself. 7. Their king, in whom they also trusted, shall be quickly and easily murdered. 8. Their high places of Beth-el, where they have committed so much wickedness, and their altars, shall be turned into heaps of rubbish; and their worshippers shall earnestly wish the mountains and hills, on which they had worshipped their idols, to fall on and crush them to death. 9. From the war against the Benjamites, who protected the miscreants of Gibeah, to the present time, ye have sinned in a like or in a more notorious manner. There your fathers were preserved, and became conquerors over the wicked Benjamites. Nay, there the wicked Benjamites stood in their own defence, and gained two battles over your slothful and inactive ancestors. 10. But now I intend effectually to punish you by the Assyrian armies for your attachment to your calves of Dan and Beth-el, and for your revolting from my worship and allegiance to the family of David. 11. And since, notwithstanding all my pains to instruct and engage you to keep my laws, ye love only your own ease, pleasure, and profit, and since lesser judgments do not avail to reform you,

GENERAL VIEW OF POMPEII—NEAR THE SO-CALLED RIVER OF STYX, MADE FAMOUS IN CLASSIC POETRY. [Hosea, x:8.]—"The high places also of Aven, the sin of Israel, shall be destroyed: the thorn and the thistle shall come up on their altars; and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us." Some take the word Aven in the above verse to stand for Bamoth-Aven, which signifies the high places of iniquity. It is a significant fact that the high places the Israelites used for idolatrous worship are totally waste and desolate. But we notice the same laws that brought ruin and desolation to the Israelites for unholy sacrifices were at work among the heathen nations by which they were surrounded. Pompeii was founded, perhaps, in the same century in which this prophecy was written, and no city at the time of its destruction was more given up to a refined idolatry than this. The thorn and the thistle now grow upon their altars.

according to the goodness of his land they have made goodly images.[2]

2 Their[3] heart [a]is divided:[4] now shall they be found faulty: [b]he shall break down[5] their altars, he shall spoil their images.

3 For now they shall say, [c]We have no king, because we feared not the LORD; what then should a king do to us?[6]

4 They have spoken words, swearing falsely in[h] making a covenant: thus [i]judgment springeth up as hemlock[7] in the furrows of the field.

5 The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear [j]because of the calves of Beth-aven: for the people thereof shall mourn over it, and the priests[8] thereof [k]that rejoiced on it, for the glory thereof, because it is departed from it.

6 It[k] shall be also carried unto Assyria for a present to king Jareb:[1] Ephraim [l]shall receive shame, and Israel shall be ashamed of his own counsel.

7 As for Samaria, [m]her king is cut off as the foam upon the water.[2]

8 The high places also of Aven,[3] the sin of Israel, shall be destroyed: the thorn and the thistle shall come up on their altars; [n]and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us.

9 O Israel, [p]thou hast sinned from the days of Gibeah; there they stood: [q]the battle in Gibeah against the children of iniquity did not overtake them.

10 It[r] is in my desire that I should chastise them; [s]and the people shall be gathered against them, [t]when they shall bind themselves in their two furrows.[5]

11 And Ephraim is as [u]an heifer that is taught, and loveth to [v]tread out the corn; [w]but I passed over upon [x]her fair neck:[7] I will make Ephraim to ride; [y]Judah shall plow, and Jacob shall break his clods.

12 Sow[y] to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow ground: for [z]it is time to seek the LORD, till he come and [a]rain righteousness upon you.

13 Ye[b] have plowed wickedness, ye have reaped iniquity; ye have eaten the fruit of lies: because thou [c]didst trust in thy way, in the multitude of thy mighty men.

14 Therefore shall [d]a tumult arise among thy people, and [e]all thy fortresses shall be spoiled, as Shalman spoiled [f]Beth-arbel in the day of battle:[8] the mother [h]was dashed in pieces upon her children.

15 So[i] shall Beth-el do unto you[9] because of your great wickedness:[1] in[j] a morning shall the king of Israel utterly be cut off.

WHEN Israel [a]was a child, then I loved him, and [b]called my son out of Egypt.

3 I[d] taught Ephraim also to go, taking them by their arms; but [e]they knew not that I healed them.

4 I[g] drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love: and I was to them as they that take off[2] the yoke on their jaws, and [h]I laid meat unto them.

3 The prophet's object here is to reproach Israel's early fatal with its subsequent apostasy. The latter was altogether known. God taught and called them by the prophets; yet the more he called the more perverse and disobedient did they become. Instead of obeying God, they worshipped idols.—C.

I will make you the miserable slaves of the Assyrians; and even the Jews shall be terribly harassed by them, and afterwards more so by the Chaldeans—though both shall issue in a harvest of joyful deliverances. 12. Applying the imparted righteousness of the Messiah, in his strength, live soberly, righteously, and godly, that in due time ye may enjoy the gracious reward of eternal life. Study to have your hearts convinced and renewed. It is high time now, when troubles are so near, to cry mightily to God for the gracious bestowal of his righteousness and grace. 13. Ye have, with great pains, laboured in wickedness, and thereby ripened yourselves for destructions and disappointments, because ye trusted in your idols and heathen alliances, and in your carnal projects and numerous armies. 14. Therefore shall your intestine divisions, and the invasion of the Assyrian army, throw you into the most terrible perplexity; and all your forts shall be taken and cruelly destroyed, as at the taking of Beth-arbel, where even the women and children were inhumanly butchered. 15. Your idolatry committed at Beth-el shall draw down the like vengeance upon you. Suddenly, and while ye expect quite other things, shall Hoshea your king be deprived of his authority, and imprisoned or murdered, and your whole civil constitution broken in pieces.

Ver. 9. Gibeah. The scene of the war with Benjamin on account of the infamous outrage on the Levite's concubine; in which case Benjamin doubly sinned. First, in committing the sin, then in protecting the guilty: and then all Israel sinned.—First, in exterminating revenge, and, secondly, in a passionate and unbrotherly oath. C.

REFLECTIONS.—A selfish spirit defrauds God of his due honours. Nothing can be more criminal than to multiply our sins as God increases his favours; and nothing more just than for God to deprive us of that which we employ in the service of Satan. No inward treachery or dissimulation escapes his notice; highly he detests all deceit in oaths, covenants, and vows, and all injustice in civil dealings or judgments.—If we make creatures our idols it but hastens their destruction. And if God's grace destroy not the love of sin in us, his providence will destroy the fuel of sinful lusts around us. It is kind in God to chastise men that he may not destroy them. He often punishes with hardships those who have indulged themselves in luxurious pleasures. And men's rewards or punishments are framed answerably to their virtue or vice. But, alas, what barbarous work, what dreadful and unexpected calamities, hath sin introduced!

CHAPTER XI. When your nation was extremely debased, and unable to help themselves, I fixed upon it for my peculiar people, and by my special providence brought them out of Egypt by the hand of Moses and Aaron; and I will hereafter bring forth my Son Jesus Christ from thence. Ver. 2. But such was their ingratitude, that the more my prophets exhorted and invited them to repentance and holy obedience, the more contrarily they walked, and obstinately abandoned themselves to heathenish idolatries. 3. I tenderly conducted them through the Arabian wilderness, and supported and carried them through every difficulty: but they seemed insensible of, and never cordially acknowledged, my kind removal of judgments which they had deserved, and my preservation from dangers. 4. By every endearing motive and constraining influence, suited to their rational nature, I allured them to a steadfast obedience; I delivered them from their repeated oppressions by the Egyptians and under the judges; and, both in the wilderness and in Canaan, provided them with every necessary enjoyment. 5, 6. But since, notwithstanding my favours, they obstinately persist in their wickedness, and trust to their own devices, I will put an end to their alliances with, or their fleeing for shelter to, the Egyptians, by giving them into the hand of the Assyrians, who shall desolate their cities and villages, and carry the survivors into a miserable captivity. 7. For they are so obstinate in their idolatries that, let my prophets invite and entreat them as they will to forsake their idols and return to me, scarcely any regard either me or them. 8. But though their enormous wickedness richly deserves the most tremendous ruin, my own bowels of mercy towards them call for my pity. 9. I will not therefore inflict on them all that they deserve; nor will I redouble my strokes to their utter destruction; nor shall their cities, like Sodom, be perpetual monuments of my wrath; for I am infinitely tender in my mercy, and unchangeably faithful to my promise made with Abraham. 10. After the captivity, and especially in the apostolic and coming periods, the Lord shall, by the powerful voice of his gospel, cause them to own Jesus Christ, and walk in his ways. 11. Trembling under a sense of their sinfulness and misery, they shall come to him from every quarter; and with fear and trembling shall they return to their own land, and be placed in the church. 12. The Israelites compass me about with a deceitful profession and hypocritical services; but the tribes of Judah and Benjamin are yet governed by my laws, and faithfully walk in the steps of their progenitors.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the kindness of God in preserving, supporting, and directing us in childhood. But how much greater his kindness in bringing his Son into and through our Egyptian world, and in delivering our souls from our worse than Egyptian bondage to Satan and our lusts, drawing us to himself, and making

7 And my people are [m]bent to backsliding from me: [n]though they called them to the Most High, none at all would exalt him.[3]

8 ¶ How[p] shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as [q]Admah? how shall I set thee as Zeboim? [r]mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together.

CHAPTER XII.

1 A reproof of Ephraim, Judah, and Jacob. 3 By former favours he exhorteth to repentance. 7 Ephraim's sins and ingratitude provoke God.

EPHRAIM feedeth on [a]wind, and followeth after the east wind: [b]he daily increaseth lies and desolation; and [c]they do make a covenant with the Assyrians, and [d]oil[1] is carried into Egypt.

2 The[e] LORD hath also a controversy with Judah, and will punish[2] Jacob according to his ways; according to his [g]doings will he recompense him.

4 The meaning of this beautiful passage has been thus set forth:—I am God and not man, I am not swayed by human passions. Tired so to speak, of his wrath, as in the midst of it to remember mercy: he so punishes the iniquity of his guilty children, as at the same time to fulfil to them all his gracious promises. God corrects, as a father, not to destroy, but to save; not to kill, but to heal.—C.

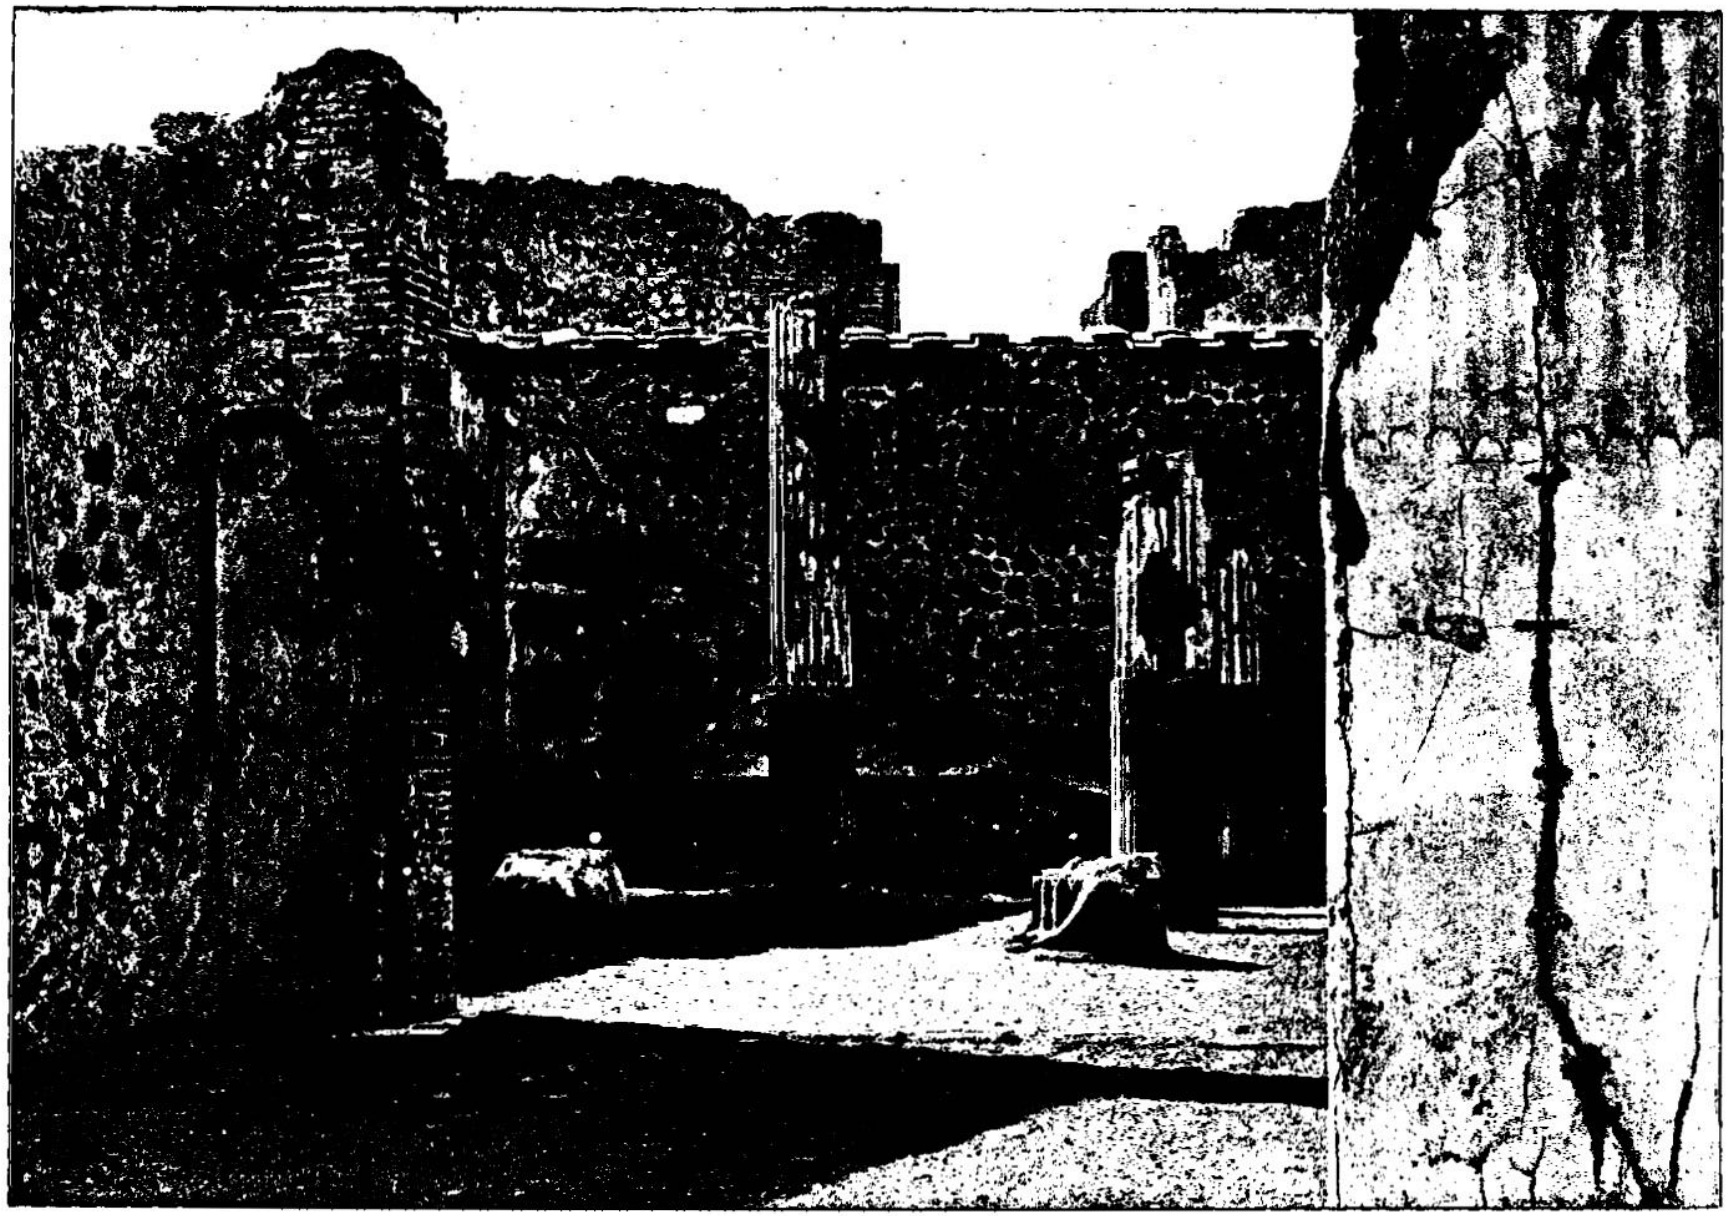
us heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ! Awfully criminal and ruinous is it to contemn his counsels or offers, and to persist obstinately in idolatry or ingratitude. But O how unbounded is his tender compassion! how slow is he to wrath! how averse to abandon or destroy his professed people! It is impossible then that he will ever abandon a saint! And when he speaks powerfully in his word and providence, with the most solemn awe ought we to turn from our evil ways, and follow him as our God and Guide. Thrice happy millennium, when both Jews and Gentiles shall, from all the ends of the earth, be converted to Christ! And happy are they who, amidst general apostasy, remain faithful to God and his people!

CHAPTER XII. The Israelites flatter themselves that their idols, or their Assyrian or Egyptian allies, will help and protect them; whereas, notwithstanding the labour and expense they cost them, they will at last be the instruments of ruin to their kingdom. Ver. 2. Yea, even the kingdom of Judah shall, by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Romans, share a punishment similar to that of the Israelites, on account of their wickedness. 3–6. And since ye have so degenerated from the piety of Jacob your father, who at Peniel wrestled with God himself, the Angel of the promise, the infinite Father, who gives being to all his promises, and by strong faith and earnest supplications obtained a remarkable blessing, and at Beth-el had the covenant of God confirmed to himself, and to you in him, see that, by faith and repentance, ye turn to this God as your God: and while ye believe his mercy, wisdom, and equity, study to imitate him therein, and wait upon him in all the ordinances of his grace, for whatever is necessary to enable you to fulfil your duty. 7, 8. But ye Israelites, like the heathen Canaanites, make a trade of cheating, and take delight in oppressing your neighbours; and yet ye impudently pretend that your success and wealth are an evidence of your being chargeable with no gross iniquity. 9, 10. Nevertheless, I, the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, will, after the captivity in Babylon, and especially in the apostolic and coming periods, bring you into my church, give you the ordinances thereof; and, as I have, so will I instruct you by my prophets and gospel ministers in divers forms. 11. And yet now, after all my instructions, not only Ramoth-gilead, a city of priests and refuge; and Gilgal, once so famous for the mercies and tabernacle of God, and tents of his people; but all the country, on both sides of Jordan, are polluted with the worship of useless idols and their altars, as numerous and as much contemned by God as heaps of stones in the furrows. 12–14. Yea, notwithstanding God has raised you up from so low an origin as a mere keeper of sheep, who was obliged to serve like a slave for his wife; and miraculously, by Moses, conducted you from Egypt and through the wilderness; ye have bitterly provoked him to anger with your wickedness; and therefore shall he avenge all your reproaches against him and his prophets upon you, in rendering you base and contemptible.



Ver. 1. The meaning is that the Israelites, feeling their own weakness, instead of looking to God for help, look to other nations. First they apply to Assyria, and enter into alliance with it; then for some reason they turn to Egypt, and in order to propitiate its king they send presents of the choice products of their land. Oil is abundant in Palestine, and is greatly prized throughout the East. It is probably taken here as the representative of all presents. P.

Ver. 4. The reference to Beth-el conveys a tacit but most intelligible rebuke to those descendants of Jacob who had converted the place into a scene of idolatry. There Jacob had met and prevailed with the Angel of the presence—'the LORD of hosts.' There his degenerate children bowed down to a calf! C.

Ver. 7. A merchant. Rather, a Canaanite. Having degenerated from the heir of the blessing, and passed, by his own selection, into the family of the curse. C.

Ver. 8. There are certain practices claiming to be tolerated in almost every class and profession which others condemn, but the perpetrators excuse, palliate, or justify. Among these rank certain commercial practices both of the buyer and seller, which Ephraim, by aid of his own peculiar code, complacently and confidently denies to be sins, but which God threatens with exile from his commercial cities into a state as poor, unsettled, and profitless as that of his fathers in the wilderness. See ch. 13. 5; and Chalmers' Commercial Discourses. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! what a cheat many put upon their own souls, and what vexation and misery they prepare for themselves, who make creatures their confidence! God often sharply corrects those who are right in the main, that he may draw and keep them still nearer to himself: and great and lasting is that honour which is obtained by intimacy with him; and glorious the victories which saints obtain by their prayers and tears. Thrice happy are they who have august memorials of God inscribed on their heart, and who can improve his declared relation to them as an effectual spur to a genuine repentance. But alarming is the situation,

HOUSE OF ROMULUS, POMPEII—NEAR THE CLASSIC ELYSIAN FIELDS, WHERE, ACCORDING TO HEATHEN POETS, THE BLESSED RESIDED. [Hosea, xii:2.]—"The Lord hath also a controversy with Judah, and will punish Jacob according to his ways; according to his doings will he recompense him." It is not only true that the Lord punishes Israel according to his ways, and recompenses him according to his doings, but he treats all other nations and races and peoples the same way. In Pompeii we have a city arrested and preserved by the eruption of Vesuvius from the year A. D. 79. And there is no better place to study the history of sin and requital than in this city. Here are all the evidences of the people's guilt and abominable idolatry and licentiousness exposed to view. This city was surrounded by walls nearly two miles in circumference. Its area is about 160 acres. Nearly one-half of this has been excavated. In the above scene we are permitted to view a private house where we may see the pictures still bright and clear upon the walls.

AMPHITHEATER OF HEROD, THE CITY HOSEA DECLARED WOULD BECOME DESOLATE. [HOSEA xiii:16.]—"Samaria shall become desolate; for she hath rebelled against her God: they shall fall by the sword." The prophecy quoted above is literally fulfilled in this city. The remains of what is called the Amphitheater may be seen in the level place in the picture where there are pillars, that appear to be black pegs about the eighth of an inch in height. There are 12 of these. The reason why they seem to be so small is because our artist was at a considerable distance from them when this view was taken. The site of this ancient city of Ahab is still marked by the ruins of buildings which climb the side of the hill on which it stood. There is a narrow terrace which runs around this hill like a girdle. Below this terrace the declivity inclines gradually toward the valley. Higher up there are traces of other terraces along which it has been supposed the sides of the ancient city ran.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Ephraim's glory, by reason of idolatry, vanisheth. 5 God's anger for their unkindness. 9 A promise of God's mercy. 15 A judgment for rebellion.

WHEN Ephraim[a] spake trembling, he exalted himself in Israel; but when he [b]offended in Baal, he died.

2 And[c] now they sin more and more,[1] and have made them molten images of their silver, and idols according to their own understanding, all of it the work of the craftsmen: [d]they say of them, Let the men that sacrifice[2] kiss[e] the calves.[3]

3 Therefore [f]they shall be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that passeth away; as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, and as the smoke out of the chimney.

4 ¶ Yet [h]I am the LORD thy God from the land of Egypt, and thou shalt know no God but me: for there is no saviour beside me.

5 I did [i]know thee in [j]the wilderness, in the land of great [k]drought.[4]

6 According[l] to their pasture, so were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted; therefore have they forgotten me.

7 Therefore[m] I will be unto them as a lion; as a leopard by the way will I observe them:

8 I will meet them as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and will rend the caul of their heart, and there will I devour them like a lion: the wild beast[5] shall tear them.

9 ¶ O Israel, thou [o]hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thine help.[6]

10 I will be [p]thy king:[7] where[q] is any other that may save thee in all thy cities? and thy judges of whom thou saidst, [r]Give me a king and princes?

11 I[s] gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away in my wrath.

12 The[t] iniquity of Ephraim is bound [u]up; his sin is hid.

13 The[v] sorrows of a travailing woman shall come upon him: he is an unwise son; for [w]he should not stay long[8] in the place of the breaking forth of children.

14 I[x] will ransom them from the power[1] of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction: [y]repentance shall be hid from mine eyes.[2]

15 ¶ Though[z] he be fruitful among his brethren, an east wind[3] shall come, the wind of the LORD shall come up from the wilderness, and his springs shall become dry, and his fountain shall be dried up: he shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels.[4]

16 Samaria [a]shall become desolate; for she hath rebelled against her God: they shall fall by the sword; [b]their infants shall be dashed in pieces, and their women with child shall be ripped up.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 An exhortation to repentance. 4 A promise of God's blessing.

O ISRAEL, return[a] unto the LORD thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity.

2 Take[b] with you words, and turn to the LORD: say unto him, [c]Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously:[1] so will we render the [d]calves of our lips.

3 Ashur[e] shall not save us; we will not ride

when neither the kindness of God, nor the example of pious progenitors, animate us to a holy conversation: and awful is it to consider that, in mercantile dealings, men should be so rarely honest in God's sight. Most men think all is well if they grow rich and retain a fair character before the world. But infinite is the mercy of God: for his grace abounds where sin had abounded! Strict is the account which God keeps of all the mercies that he bestows on us, and of our improvement of them. And all our education and advancements are his free gifts. But if we employ our grandeur and wealth to his dishonour, it is but just that he should strip us of them, and punish our shameful transgressions with shameful punishments.

CHAPTER XIII. While you Israelites retained any fear of the true God, and awful regard to his messages, ye prospered, and were revered. But since ye abandoned yourselves to the grossest idolatries, ye have been in a declining condition. Ver. 2. And yet ye are still racking your minds, and exhausting your wealth, to make and serve new idols; and your rulers are making new laws as to their worship. 3. Therefore shall ye, as utterly despicable and worthless, be quickly, easily, and universally ruined, murdered, and carried captive by the Assyrians. 4. And however ungratefully ye have disowned me, the gracious God and Saviour of your fathers, ye shall find at last that none else can avail you as a God to protect and deliver you. 5. In the wilderness, where was nothing but dangers and wants, I carefully supplied your fathers with everything necessary and comfortable, and adopted them for my peculiar people. 6. But they had scarcely entered Canaan, and enjoyed its plentiful product, when they attended to nothing but the gratification of their proud and sensual lusts. 7, 8. Therefore will come to you the furious, irresistible, unavoidable, sudden, barbarous, and ruinous ravages of the Assyrian troops. 9. By your sins ye have brought all this misery on yourselves: but in and by me, your almighty God and Saviour, and no other, can ye have protection, support, or deliverance. 10, 11. What avail now your kings and other magistrates, of whom ye were once so fond, as if better governors than me? Both the giving and the removing of your kings have been generally the fruits of my displeasure with you, and contributed to ruin you. 12. And your iniquities have all been kept in reserve by me, to be brought forth and punished in due season. 13. Dreadful distress and anguish shall therefore suddenly come upon you. And yet, alas! stupid and thoughtless, ye take no more pains than a still-born child, by an earnest repentance, to extricate yourselves from the troubles which you feel, or have reason to fear. 14. In tender sympathy I will therefore prevent your utter destruction, and will seek to fully restore you from the lowest depths of misery. Nay, by my own death, I will save multitudes of mankind from all their misery of every form, if they will only accept Christ by faith. 15, 16. But, before this take place, the Assyrians shall invade your populous and wealthy country, shall lay it desolate, seize on your wealth, destroy your wicked capital, and, in the most barbarous and inhuman manner, murder the inhabitants.

REFLECTIONS.—Humility, especially towards God, is the infallible road to honour and happiness; but forsaking God, and following idols, the certain path to death and destruction. When men have once set off in a course of sin, they generally wax worse and worse. And as holiness is the honour and stability of persons and societies, sin is the shame, and will be the ruin, of any people. No solid or lasting comfort is anywhere to be found but in God himself: and his help, in the time of need, is doubly kind and useful, and never to be forgotten. But, alas! his mercies are often fearfully abused, to the terrible and irresistible ruin of the impenitent! Obstinacy in sin is the grossest self-murder: but in JEHOVAH our God, our Saviour, our King, the very worst may find abundant relief. And sad would be our case if he were not better to us than we are to ourselves. Unprofitable is everything that we get without his blessing. And exact is the account he keeps of our sins against the time of his judgments. With great care he chastens his people that they may not be destroyed. And sinners do but foolishly rush forward into dreadful and everlasting ruin by delaying their repentance. But O how astonishing is the freedom and fulness of salvation! May our hearts for ever glow with gratitude, and our lips for ever utter praise, to that kind Redeemer who so loved us, and gave himself to death and the grave for us!

CHAPTER XIV. Ver. 1. But, notwithstanding all the misery ye have brought upon yourselves by your sins, return, by faith and repentance, to me, who have granted myself to you in the gospel, as your reconciled God. 2. Earnestly beg that I may pardon your guilt, mortify your corruptions, accept you into favour, adopt you into my family, and bestow upon you all necessary blessings, that may fill your hearts and mouths with grateful praise. 3. Solemnly renounce all carnal confidence in foreign forces, military preparations, or lying idols, and trust only in me as the helper of the helpless outcasts. 4. And I, as one graciously reconciled in Christ, will, in free mercy, pardon your iniquities, reform you from your evil courses, remove the judgments which ye have deserved, and confer upon you unmerited favours. 5 7. And not only will I, by my favourable dispensations of providence, after the captivity in Babylon, and especially in compassion, render you glorious, well established, numerous, and everyway prosperous, useful, and respected as a nation; but by the gracious influences of my Word and Spirit, will render you fruitful, flourishing, and well established in the beauties of holiness. Your converts shall greatly increase in number, and grow in knowledge and grace; and their gracious enjoyments, and holy conversation, shall be steady, persevering, delightful, and engaging to all around. They who enjoy the ordinances of my grace shall be thereby converted; and after their afflictions, become more fruitful in holiness, to the edification and comfort of all around them. 8. While ye with abhorrence shall renounce all your idolatries, I will graciously hear your prayers, bless, protect, and save you; and from me shall all your happiness and holiness be derived. 9. But it is only they who, being taught of God, seriously inquire into these things that shall understand them: for his oracles and ordinances, and dispensations of providence, are all right, holy, just, and good; and the righteous will walk in them, obedient to his will, and submissive to his providence, but proud, obstinate, and inconsiderate sinners will take occasion from them to fall into wickedness and ruin.

BEIT JENN WATERFALL—A BEAUTIFUL SCENE UNDER THE LEBANON MOUNTAINS. [Hosea, xiv:5.]—"I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon." We give a picture of a waterfall in the neighborhood and in sight of the Lebanon range of mountains. The picture was taken by our artist at noon. The meaning of the word Beit Jenn is the Garden House, or the House of Paradise. There was once a dense population here, for there are many rock tombs in this neighborhood. The picture above presents a charming waterfall caused by the stream Jennani plunging over precipitous rocks. It comes in delicate streamlets, and now in rushing torrents among moss covered rocks, among which shrubs and grasses grow. This Jennani is one of the main tributaries of the ancient River Pharpar, referred to in II Kings, v:12.

Ver. 2. Calves were offered as thank-offerings for signal mercies, Ex. 24. 5. They were therefore symbols of thanksgiving. 'The calves of the lips' is thus a figurative expression for the 'thanks or praises of the lips,' which the people would render unto God for his pardoning mercy. P.

Ver. 3. Ride upon horses. Allusion is here made to Egypt. The strength of the Egyptian army consisted in cavalry and chariots. P.——Ye are our gods. This resolution against idolatry includes not merely the renunciation of idols, properly so called; but also of that covetousness which is idolatry; and by which, since their dispersion, the Jews have mainly sinned and suffered. C.

Ver. 4. This is the Lord's response to the prayer which the prophet puts in the mouths of the Israelites. The whole structure of this closing section is dramatic, and the impression which it was calculated to leave on the minds of those to whom it was addressed was deep and solemn. P.——Backsliding is the translation of a Hebrew word descriptive of the restiveness of an ox or other animal unwilling to bear the yoke, and which generally draws back when it should go forward: and is truly emblematic of man when murmuring or repining at the ways of Providence, refusing to take upon him the yoke of Jesus, adopt his precepts, or bear his cross. C.

Ver. 7. The various images here employed are intended to illustrate the manifold grace of God. Rosenmüller has explained with force and correctness the meaning of the figures:—'The rooting indicates stability; the spreading of the branches, propagation and the multitude of inhabitants; the splendour of the olive, beauty and glory, and that constant and lasting; the fragrance, suavity and loveliness.' To the same effect, but with still greater richness of expression, Dr. Pusey says: 'So the prophet adds one image after another, each supplying a distinct likeness of a distinct grace or excellence. The lily is the emblem of the beauty and purity of the soul in grace: the cedar of Lebanon, of its strength and deep-rootedness, its immovableness and uprightness; the evergreen olive-tree, which remaineth in its beauty both winter and summer, of the unvarying presence of divine grace, continually supplying an ever-sustained freshness, and issuing in fruit; and the fragrance of the aromatic plants with which the lower parts of Mount Lebanon are decked, of its loveliness and sweetness.' P.

REFLECTIONS.—Awfully ruinous is sin; and very necessary a gospel repentance for it; and nothing more effectually leads to this than a firm faith in God's gospel grant of himself to us as our God. Great is the condescension that God should instruct us what to pray for, and how to pray, as well as readily grant our requests. And happy and delightful is it to deal with a God of infinite mercy and goodness: for all his promises are answerable to the necessities and prayers of those whom he instructs. Marvellous is the change made on persons and societies by his all-powerful grace, and kind the notice which he takes of his people's penitential resolutions! He is the gracious fountain and root of all blessings and spiritual influences to them. And there is great need therefore seriously to consider his oracles and providences, and what different use is made thereof. To the humble inquirer they are the savour of life unto life—but of death unto death to every impenitent transgressor.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF HOSEA.

While the books of Scripture form a uniform whole, uniformly contributing to one great object—the development of the character, vindication of the judgments, and commendation of the love and mercy of God in Christ—the several books may yet be generally distinguished by some special part and object assigned by the Spirit to each historian, prophet, evangelist, or apostle. Like the workmen in Solomon's temple all are engaged in the erection of one dwelling-place for the glory of God; but some hew timber in the mountains, others square the stones in the quarry, some convey them to Jerusalem, while others rear the walls, or shape and ornament the sacred furniture. To each there is a several and appropriate part; but all are actuated by one spirit, concur in one design, and perfect one result. Accordingly, to Hosea the Spirit seems, in a peculiar manner, to have assigned the subject of national sin and national repentance; with those sharp rebukes that smite the one, and those gracious promises that encourage the other. The prophet lived in a day when all public principle was sunk in idolatry, and its sure companion, licentiousness, ch. 1. 2; 3. 1; yet, during their downward course, the nation had been steadily advancing in agriculture, manufactures, commerce, and riches, as is evident from ch. 2. 5, 8, 9, 12. Yet this prosperity, so far from leading the nation to God as its author, became the incentive to that idolatry (ch. 13. 2), and that dissolution of morals, which the prophet was commissioned to denounce under the name of adultery (ch. 2. 2), the complicated crime of lewdness and of perjury; while, in addition to this general indictment, the destructive sins of profane swearing, lying, stealing, and murder are successively alleged against them, ch. 4. 2; 7. 1. Nor is any rank exempt from the national guilt. The princes, the prophets, the priests, are all included under one common charge, and threatened with one common judgment, ch. 5. 1, 10. Yet, in the midst of all these delinquents, is the prophet commissioned to preach repentance, and to promise pardon. And in this announcement and promise he exhibits the true character of God, who is ever 'long-suffering, slow to wrath, and plenteous in mercy,' while he exemplifies the only way in which a sinful man or sinful nation can ever be brought to repentance—the simple and faithful deliverance of the gospel of the grace of God, the word of reconciliation. The reformation of national manners has been attempted by mere moral instruction; but the philosophers of Greece and Rome utterly failed. It has been attempted by the satire of poets—their strains have been equally unsuccessful. It has been attempted by coercive laws, and by every form of severe and mitigated punishment; and if, by such means, public crime has for a little been restrained, it has only been effectual in producing a temporary calm, and preparing for the more terrible outburst of popular and ruinous commotion. It has been attempted in Christian lands by preaching all the precepts of a holy law, and all the terrors of approaching judgment, and the remedy has no doubt often affrighted the patient, but uniformly aggravated the disease; because it merely discovered the taint of the constitution and the depth of the guilt, Ro. 3. 20; 8. 3, 6-8. The preaching of the gospel in repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, has alone been ever effective in producing real and effective reformation of public principles and morals.

Of this fact the Bible affords the most striking of all examples—the apostolic reforms of heathenism, merely through the preaching of the cross of Christ, and the freeness and fulness of his grace. Nor is modern missionary history wanting in similar examples. The experience of the Moravians in Greenland has borne ample testimony to the fact, that the instruction that reaches the heart is 'the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ' in dying for us, and that pardon and remission of guilt which sinners find in his blood. And wherever else (as in Africa, the East Indies, or the South Seas) the grace of the gospel has been simply and zealously preached, there either local or national reformation has followed. It may not and it should not be denied, that by means of law, whether of human or divine origin, civilization may be extensively effected and long sustained. But civilization is so far from melioration, that it is often concurrent with the deepest moral depravity. Such was the case of the Jews when Hosea preached; and the remedy he brought to their deadly disease was a faithful exposure of all its horrors, and a faithful proclamation of the gospel of promise and grace. Such is now the case in not a few of the classes of European Christianity. The fact may be witnessed on the broad scale of cities or kingdoms, where civilization and depravity seem to go hand in hand; and where, unless God totally change the current of his providence—a thing impossible with him who changes not—judgments, either from internal commotion or external foes, with the ruin of that national prosperity which God bestows and man abuses, must speedily and heavily fall. And for all this disease, what is the remedy? Simply the faithful preaching of that gospel of grace which Hosea addressed to the Jews, in which they are invited to 'return unto the Lord,' while the Lord promises to 'heal their backslidings, and love them freely,' ch. 14. 1, 4. C.

JOEL.

Whether Joel prophesied in Judea before Hosea and Amos prophesied in Israel, and foretells the plagues of locusts and drought which Amos laments, ch. vii., or after the Israelites were carried captive into Assyria, we cannot determine. His prophecy contains (1) A representation of Judea, as terribly plagued by swarms of locusts and other insects, and great drought, intermixed with calls to solemn repentance and promises of deliverance, ch. i. ii. 1–17. (2) Predictions of the glorious blessings to the gospel church in the apostolic and millennial periods, and of ruin to her and the Jews' enemies, ch. ii. 28–32; iii.

[The date of JOEL'S prophecy is uncertain; but its continued recognition in the Hebrew canon is unquestioned, while the references to it and the quotations from it in the New Testament afford all that can be necessary to commend it as the Word of the Lord (see Mat. 24. 29; Ac. 2. 16–21; Ro. 10. 13–16; Re. 21. 27; 22. 1). The occasion of the prophecy appears to have been a dreadful famine caused by the ravages of locusts and other destructive insects (for whose powers of destruction, see Kirby and Spence's Entomology), upon which calamity the prophet founds an exhortation to priests and people to repent with prayer and fasting, and earnestly intercedes with God on their behalf. But, in the foresight of their impenitence, he foretells still greater judgments by an army of locusts, and exhorts them again to fasting, prayer, and repentance; on which, not as meritorious purchases of deliverance, but as witnesses of their renewal by grace, and acknowledgments and vindications of the being and providence of God, he promises, not only deliverance from their calamities, but increase of temporal and spiritual blessings. But foreseeing still the hardened impenitence of his people, he predicts the ruin of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation, while he intersperses promises of safety to the believing remnant of 'the election of grace.' He then predicts the divine judgments upon the enemies of God's people, with the peace, prosperity, and purity of Israel, when again grafted into the tree from which, as a barren branch, it had in judgment been broken.

His remarkable prediction of the effusion of the Holy Spirit in tongues, and prophecies, and visions, formed one of the original evidences of Christianity; and still affords the only means of accounting for the rapid propagation of the gospel through so many nations during the first century of the Christian era. C.

The date of this prophecy, though not directly stated, may be approximately inferred from one or two facts. Amos commences his book with a passage from Joel 3. 16. He embodies too the same promises in ch. 9. 13 which we find in Joel 3. 18. Isaiah likewise appears to have been acquainted with the writings of Joel (comp. Is. 13. 6; Joel 1. 15). We therefore infer that Joel prophesied before Amos and Isaiah; and it seems highly probable that when Hosea in his early years prophesied in Israel, Joel was God's commissioned messenger in Jerusalem. P.]

CHAPTER I.

1 Joel, declaring sundry judgments of God, exhorteth to observe them, 8 and to mourn. 14 He recommendeth a solemn fasting with prayer.

THE word[a] of the LORD that came to Joel, the son of Pethuel.

2 Hear[b] this, ye old men, and give ear, all ye inhabitants of the land. Hath [c]this been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers?

3 Tell[d] ye your children of it, and let your children tell their children, and their children another generation.

4 [e]That[1] which the palmer-worm[2] hath left, hath the locust eaten; and that which the locust hath left, hath the canker-worm[3] eaten; and that which the canker-worm hath left, hath the caterpillar eaten.

5 Awake,[g] ye drunkards, and weep; and howl, all ye drinkers of wine, because of the new wine; for it is cut off [h]from your mouth.

6 For[i] a nation[4] is come up upon [j]my land, strong, and without number, whose teeth are [k]the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek-teeth of a great lion.

7 He[l] hath laid my vine waste, and [5]barked my fig-tree:[6] he hath made it clean bare, and cast it away; the branches thereof are made white.

8 ¶ Lament[m] like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the [n]husband of her youth.

9 The[o] meat-offering and the drink-offering is cut off from the house of the LORD: [p]the priests, the LORD'S ministers, mourn.

10 The[r] field is wasted, the land mourneth; for the corn is wasted: the new wine is dried up,[7] the oil languisheth.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 5. Drunkards. Every period and every nation has its own peculiar, favourite, and prevailing sin, that seems to swallow up all others. And it is not improbable that as the 'drunkards' are first called to awake to repentance, the sin of drunkenness had become the prevalent sin of the day. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's judgments and mercies ought to be carefully observed and remembered. Nor need we wonder if he deprive us of the mercies which we have sinfully abused, or make even the weakest insects victorious instruments of his wrath. It is hard to part with created comforts, once idolized. But certain is their shame who labour only for perishing provision; and sad their sorrow at last who place all their happiness in the delights of sense! Alas! how wide-spread is the havoc made by men's sins! and it is a lamentable case when poverty disqualifies for the public service of God. National judgments call for national humiliation and importunate prayers. And in the way of our duty we may hope that God will meet us in mercy. But hardened must that heart be which trembles not when God's judgments are everywhere before our eyes; and the very animals around us bewail the disaster. Yet God's ministers must be deeply affected themselves, even though they cannot affect their hearers.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1, 2, 10, 11, 30, 31. The devastations of the locusts, and the dreadful destruction of the Jews by the Romans, are described in this awful manner, because the former presaged the invasions of the Assyrians, and the latter were prelades of Christ's awful appearance to the last judgment.

Ver. 4. Horses. Many writers mention the resemblance which the head of the locust bears to the head of the horse; whence the Italians call them 'cavalette.' See Re. 9. 7. C.

Ver. 5. Noise. Bochart addduces many authorities to show that the locusts fly with a great noise, that may be heard six miles off; and that when eating the sound is like that of a flame driven by the wind.—Battle array. The locusts follow a leader; and in this respect resemble the array of an army. C.

Ver. 10. The sun and the moon shall be dark. The swarms of locusts are so great that they often darken the sun for the space of several square miles (Bochart specifies twelve); and when they alight will, in a short time, consume the entire verdure of some hundreds of acres. C.

Ver. 13. Repenteth him. God is 'not the son of man, that he should repent.' Man repents either because he has resolved or acted ignorantly or foolishly, and changes his purpose, and expresses his sorrow when better informed; or man has resolved or acted wickedly, and changes his purpose, and expresses his sorrow, when he has learned the evil of sin, and felt the love of God. But when God is said to 'repent,' it means, not that he changes his purpose absolutely, but relatively. His purpose was, and ever will be, to punish the unbelieving and the impenitent: but it equally is, and ever will be, to have mercy on those who, through grace, have learned to tremble at his word, and turn from their sins to God 'with full purpose of, and endeavour after, new obedience.' See ver. 28, where repentance in God is expressed by pity. Ps. 106. 45; Ex. 32. 14; Je. 18. 8. C.

Ver. 25. My great army. All these creatures—the locust, the canker-worm, the palmer-worm, and caterpillar—being ranked 11 Be[e] ye ashamed, O ye husbandmen; howl, O ye vine-dressers, for the wheat and for the barley; because the harvest of the field is perished.

12 The vine is dried up, and the [f]fig-tree languisheth; the pomegranate-tree, the palm-tree also, and the apple-tree, even all the trees of the field, are withered; because [g]joy is withered away from the sons of men.

13 Gird[h] yourselves, and lament, ye priests; howl, ye [i]ministers of the altar; come, lie [k]all night in sackcloth, ye ministers of my God: for[l] the meat-offering and the drink-offering is withholden from the house of your God.

14 ¶ Sanctify[a] ye a fast, call a solemn assembly,[8] gather the elders, and all the inhabitants of the land, into the house of the LORD your God, and cry unto the LORD,

15 Alas[b] for the day! for the day of the LORD[9] is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come.

16 Is[c] not the meat cut off before our eyes, yea, joy and gladness from the house of our God?

17 The seed[1] is rotten[2] under their clods, the[d] garners are laid desolate, the barns are broken down; for the corn is withered.

18 How do [e]the beasts groan! the herds of cattle are perplexed, because they have no pasture; yea, the flocks of sheep are made desolate.

19 O LORD, to thee [p]will I cry: for [h]the fire hath devoured the pastures[3] of the [i]wilderness, and the flame hath burned all the trees of the field.

20 The beasts of the field [j]cry also[4] unto thee: for [k]the rivers of waters are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness.

CHAPTER II.

1 The prophet showeth unto Zion the terribleness of God's judgments. 12 He exhorteth to repentance, 15 prescribeth a fast, 18 promiseth a blessing thereon. 21 He comforteth Zion with present, 28 and future blessings.

BLOW [a]ye[1] the trumpet[2] in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; for [b]the day of the LORD cometh, for it is nigh at hand:

2 A[c] day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains:[3] a [d]great people and a strong; [e]there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations.[4]

3 A[g] fire devoureth[5] before them; and behind them[6] a flame burneth: the land is [h]as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them [i]a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them.

4 The appearance of them is [j]as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen, so shall they run.

5 Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle-array.

6 Before[k] their face the people shall be much pained; all faces shall gather blackness.[7]

7 They shall run like mighty men; they [l]shall climb the wall like men of war; and they shall [m]march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks:

8 Neither[o] shall one thrust another, they shall walk every one in his path: and when they fall upon the sword,[8] they shall not be wounded.

9 They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the wall; they shall climb up upon the houses; they shall enter [p]in at the windows like a thief.

10 The[q] earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble: [r]the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining:

11 And the LORD [s]shall utter his voice[9] before his army; for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word: for the [t]day of the LORD is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?

12 ¶ Therefore also now, saith the LORD, [u]Turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning;

13 And [v]rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the LORD your God: for he is [z]gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and [y]repenteth him of the evil.

14 Who[a] knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him; [b]even a meat-offering, and a drink-offering, unto the LORD your God?

15 [c] Blow[b] the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly:

* This is a very graphic description of a flight of locusts. I saw it once in Palestine. A thick haze seemed spread over the whole heavens: the sun was almost obscured; near objects became dim, and more remote were hidden as by a mist. A deep, penetrating, [illegible] filled the air. They seem covered everything. It was impossible to keep them out of the houses or off the person. They all flew in one direction, as if driven by some irresistible though unseen power, and nothing could deter them from, or turn them aside. Those that alighted or settled never rose again. Their ravages were terrible. No green thing escaped.—C.

under the one common name of 'army,' renders it highly probable that they were all but different species of the same genus, or different varieties of the same species all locusts, or at least winged insects—each contemptible in itself, but terrible and irresistible in their combination.—C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is very needful that ministers should warn sinners of the fatal consequences of their conduct. But the rareness of tremendous judgments wonderfully discovers the infinite patience and mercy of God. How dangerous is it to rebel against JEHOVAH, who by a nod can muster even an army of insects able to ruin the mightiest nations on earth! No one can either withstand, support under, or flee from his incensed wrath. And but little comfort can the luminaries of heaven afford us when their Maker frowns.—Extraordinary judgments call to extraordinary fasting and prayer; and all private joys ought to give place to public sorrows for sin or its fruits. In all solemn worship ministers ought to lead the way, and every penitent should be careful to perform whatever may prevent the reproach of Christ and his church, and promote the plentiful and purer enjoyment of his ordinances as a principal benefit. But no fasting can avail us unless the heart be broken and melted by God's kindness, and turned to him. Mercy is all we need ask; and his glory, as interested in our salvation, is a sufficient plea. He will certainly hear when his people cry; and he can easily remove our plagues, renew our comforts, and give us a heart to give him the glory of his work. An abundance of outward comforts are a great mercy when by them our hearts are enlarged in love and thankfulness to God the bestower. And especially when, together with them, our spiritual knowledge and faith are increased. By the most gracious, almighty, and awful exertions of power, is Jesus' kingdom erected in the world or in the hearts of men. And thrice happy are they, in the worst of times, who are inter-

SMYRNA, THE CITY OF THE MARTYR POLYCARP—THE DISCIPLE OF ST. JOHN. [Joel, ii:17.]—"Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?" Smyrna is in Asia Minor, and not a great way from the scenes of some of the fearful massacres of the present time. This picture is appropriate here because it illustrates the truth referred to in the seventeenth verse of this second chapter of Joel, because this verse expresses the spirit of God's people all over the world; for it has been the prayer, perhaps, of every Christian heart, "Spare thy people, O, Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them." Smyrna is a beautiful city of about 300,000 inhabitants. Polycarp, a disciple of Saint John, lived here and here suffered martyrdom. His grave is upon a hill overlooking the city.

and those that suck the breasts: [d]let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet.

17 Let[e] the priests, the ministers of the LORD, weep [f]between the porch and the altar, and [g]let them say, Spare thy people, O LORD, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule[1] over them:[2] wherefore[3] should they say among the people, Where is their God?

18 ¶ Then will the LORD [h]be jealous for his land, and pity his people.

19 Yea, the LORD [i]will answer and say unto his people, [k]Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith; and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen:

20 But I will remove far off from you [l]the northern army,[3] and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east sea;[4] and his hinder part toward the utmost sea: and his stink shall come up, and his ill savour[5] shall come up, because he hath done[6] great things.

21 ¶ Fear[p] not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the LORD [q]will do great things.

22 Be[r] not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the[s] tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength.

23 Be[t] glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice[u] in the LORD your God: for he hath given you [7]the former rain[8] moderately,[9] and he will[v] cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain [x]in the first month.

24 And [y]the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil.

25 And [z]I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the canker-worm, and the caterpillar, and the palmer-worm, my great army which I sent among you.

26 And [a]ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the LORD your God, that hath dealt [b]wondrously with you: and my people shall never [c]be ashamed.

27 And ye shall know that [d]I am in the midst of Israel, and that [e]I am the LORD your God, and none else: and my people shall never be ashamed.

28 ¶ And[f] it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your [h]daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions.[1]

29 And [i]also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit.

30 And[j] I [2]will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke.

31 The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood,[3] before the great and the terrible day of the LORD come.

32 And it shall come to pass, that [k]whosoever shall call on the name[4] of the LORD shall be delivered: [l]for in mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the LORD hath said, and in the [m]remnant[5] whom the LORD shall call.

CHAPTER III.

1 God's judgments against the enemies of his people. 9 God will be known in his judgment. 18 His blessing upon the church.

FOR, behold, in those days, and in that time, when [a]I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem,[1]

2 I[b] will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the [c]valley of Jehoshaphat, and will [d]plead with them there [e]for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land.[2]

3 And they have [g]cast lots for my people; and have given a boy for an harlot, and sold a girl for wine, that they might drink.

4 Yea, and [h]what have ye to do with me, O Tyre, and Zidon, and all the coasts of Palestine? will ye render me a recompense? and if ye recompense me, [i]swiftly and speedily will I return your recompense upon your own head;

5 Because ye [j]have taken my silver and my gold, and have carried into your temples my goodly pleasant[3] things:

6 The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem have ye [k]sold unto the Grecians,[4] that ye might remove them far from their border.

7 Behold, [l]I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, and [m]will return your recompense upon your own head:

8 And I will sell your sons and your daughters into the hand of the children of Judah, and they shall sell them to the [o]Sabeans, to a people far off: for the LORD hath spoken it.

9 Proclaim[p] ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare[5] war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up:

10 Beat[r] your plowshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks[6] into spears: let the weak say, I am strong.

11 Assemble[t] yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about: thither [7]cause thy [8]mighty ones to come down, O LORD.[8]

2 In interpreting the remarkable prophecy quoted in verses 30 and 31, the critic will observe that it is by the grammar inseparably connected with what immediately goes before. The outpouring of the Spirit and the infliction of those judgments must be viewed as of the same period. The latter follows the former, without a long interval. The period of the fulfilment of the former is fixed by an inspired interpreter—the apostle Peter.

A.M. cir. 3284 or 3214 B.C. cir. 730 or 790

The latter, therefore, must be regarded as a fulfilment of the siege and destruction of Jerusalem. Some events mentioned by a company of the same siege of that prophecy with the wonders of our Lord's Matt. 24:29, &c. The images of poetry are to be interpreted with a double literality. Figures and symbols are used, such as were familiar to the people of the East, and such as we meet with in heathen writers. It would seem, however, that great events were thus foretold in regard to the Jewish state and polity, these were also intended to be symbolical of still greater events in the distant future; namely, the last judgment.—C.

1 This chapter is an amplification of ver. 32 and 30 of the preceding. The time referred to is a very wide one. It extended from the close of the Babylonish captivity, when the Jews were restored to Palestine, to that period when the fuller restoration of the covenant people to the favour of God, so neglected by Paul (Ro. 11:26), shall be effected. During that period the nations mentioned in detail would be judged.—P.

2 I regard Jehoshaphat as a symbolic and not a geographic name. Tradition has connected it with the valley of Kedron, but without any evidence. In fact no such a scene as is here described would be impossible in the Kedron, which is a narrow, ragged gully, altogether unsuitable for public assemblies. The word Jehoshaphat signifies Jehovah judgeth, and the locality pointed out in this passage seems to be that the Lord would assuredly judge all nations that had in any way opposed or oppressed his church. —P.

FOR, behold, in those days, and in that time, when [a]I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem,[1]

2 I[b] will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the [c]valley of Jehoshaphat, and will [d]plead with them there [e]for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land.[2]

3 And they have [g]cast lots for my people; and have given a boy for an harlot, and sold a girl for wine, that they might drink.

4 Yea, and [h]what have ye to do with me, O Tyre, and Zidon, and all the coasts of Palestine? will ye render me a recompense? and if ye recompense me, [i]swiftly and speedily will I return your recompense upon your own head;

5 Because ye [j]have taken my silver and my gold, and have carried into your temples my goodly pleasant[3] things:

6 The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem have ye [k]sold unto the Grecians,[4] that ye might remove them far from their border.

7 Behold, [l]I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, and [m]will return your recompense upon your own head:

8 And I will sell your sons and your daughters into the hand of the children of Judah, and they shall sell them to the [o]Sabeans, to a people far off: for the LORD hath spoken it.

9 Proclaim[p] ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare[5] war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up:

10 Beat[r] your plowshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks[6] into spears: let the weak say, I am strong.

11 Assemble[t] yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about: thither [7]cause thy [8]mighty ones to come down, O LORD.[8]

ested in his everlasting salvation. Rejoice then, ye Gentiles, that by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven ye are admitted members of his gospel church; and that, though clouds and darkness be round about him in the destruction of Jews, heathens, and anti-christians, yet mercy and truth go before his face.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 2, 8–16 chiefly relate to the destruction of the antichristians and Turks in the great age to come, in which the just judg-

THE TEMPLE OF THE WINDS, ATHENS—THE CAPITAL OF THE GRECIANS, TO WHOM, ACCORDING TO JOEL, THE CHILDREN OF JUDAH WERE SOLD. [Joel, iii.6.]—"The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem have ye sold unto the Grecians, that ye might remove them far from their border." The mention of Grecians in the above verse brings the Hellenic and Hebrew races into contact for the first time. [illegible] their enemies had in selling the Hebrew captives to the Greeks was by that remote exile to prevent the possibility of their return to their own land. We give to illustrate this reference a picture of the Temple of the Winds in Athens. This old temple is a small octagonal building in good preservation. Upon its eight faces are many emblematic figures representing the various winds which are most frequent in Greece. According to tradition, Socrates used to take his stand on the site of this temple to instruct the rising youth of Athens. It is about 26 feet in diameter, and 42 feet in height.

12 Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the [t]valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to [u]judge all the heathen round about.

13 Put[v] ye in the sickle; for the harvest is ripe: come, get you down;[9] for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great.

14 Multitudes,[w] multitudes in the valley of decision:[1] for the [x]day of the LORD is near in the valley of decision.

15 The[y] sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining.

16 The LORD also shall [z]roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and [b]the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the LORD will be the hope[2] of his people, and the strength[c] of the children of Israel.

17 So[d] shall ye know that I am the LORD your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: [e]then shall Jerusalem be holy,[3] and there shall no strangers pass through her any more.

18 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the [g]mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, and [h]all the rivers of Judah shall flow[4] with waters, and [i]a fountain shall come forth of the house of the LORD, and shall water the [j]valley of Shittim.

19 Egypt[k] shall be a desolation, and [l]Edom shall be a desolate wilderness, for [n]the violence against the children of Judah, because they have shed innocent blood in their land.

20 But [o]Judah shall dwell[5] for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation.

21 For [p]I will cleanse their blood[6] that I have not cleansed: for the LORD[7] dwelleth in Zion.

ment of God will be fearfully manifested. The valley of Jehoshaphat denotes the place where the Lord will destroy them, as he did the enemies of Jehoshaphat in the valley of Berachah, 2 Ch. 20. 1–26; and may be the same as Armageddon, Re. 14. 14, 16; or Hamongog, Eze. 39. 4–11; or the valley before Jerusalem, Zec. 14. 4. The words import that there will be a general combination against God's people, abundantly furnished with weapons of war; but God, by the instruments of his wrath, will suddenly cut them off, trample them under his feet, ruin all ranks, and deprive them of all their comforts. 16–18. Amidst the terrible commotions attending the fall of Antichrist and Mahometanism, the Lord will remarkably comfort, protect, and strengthen his people, particularly the newly converted Jews; and their church and nation shall be singularly holy; neither polluted by unclean persons nor doctrines, nor molested by enemies. And great shall be the abundance of ordinances, spiritual blessings, and gracious influences, suited to both strong and weak believers. Yea, by means of the preached gospel, the most barren places shall become fruitful in saints and good works. 19–21. And while the Egyptians, Edomites, and other inveterate enemies of the church, shall be destroyed, the Jews and people of God shall enjoy undisturbed repose; for he who dwells among them and in them will pardon their guilt, and deliver them from the power and filth of their sins.

Ver. 4. Tyre and Zidon, upon many occasions, proved very unfriendly to the Jews, and, after the days of Hiram, omitted few opportunities of doing them injury, 2 Ch. 21. 16; 28. 18; Am. 1. 6, 9.—Will ye render me a recompense? Will you retaliate upon me, in the persons of my people, either because you covet the territory I have given them (see ver. 6), or because they compete with you in some branch of commerce, or despise your idolatry. C.

Ver. 7. I will raise them, &c. Alexander of Macedon and his successors restored great multitudes of enslaved Jews to liberty. Ptolemy Philadelphus, the Grecian monarch of Egypt, restored above 100,000, and at an expense of 400 talents—Josephus' Antiquities, b. xii. c. ii. § 2, 3—which act and liberality of a heathen monarch might well minister a severe rebuke, while it furnishes a bright example, to Christian kings and governments. C.

Ver. 8. I will sell your sons, &c. When Alexander of Macedon took Tyre, after a protracted siege, he sold, according to Arrian, 30,000 of the people for slaves. C.

Ver. 17. Strangers. Enemies from strange countries, and of strange speech, shall no longer be permitted to enter and ravage the beloved city. Or it may well signify that the Gentiles, who shall now be co-inhabitants of the spiritual Jerusalem, shall be no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God, Ep. 2. 19. C.

Ver. 18. Shittim may be translated thorns; and the prophecy considered emblematic of the progress of the gospel in superseding the cares of time by introducing the hopes of eternity, Mat. 13. 22. C.

Ver. 19. Egypt and Edom. Not literally these countries; at least not these countries alone, but all countries that have enslaved and evil-entreated the Jewish and Christian church. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The most kind and obliging often find others unkind and unneighbourly. And no sweetness of temper or conduct can soften the enmity of the wicked. But dreadful is their danger who injure the people of God; for without fail, and in great fury, especially at the last day, will God reckon with them! But when wicked men are cast down, believers shall be lifted up in comfort, holiness, and safety.—How delightful shall this world be when all the corners of it shall be filled with the knowledge, glory, and grace of the Lord! And still more happy in the eternal state, in which God and the Lamb shall be ALL and IN ALL.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF JOEL.

The study of natural history is, in all its branches, exceedingly curious, interesting, and instructive; but in none more than in entomology, or the description of insects. The interest excited by this branch of study arises from many topics, such as, the astonishing variety of their genera and species; their wonderful forms either of beauty or hideousness; the innumerable multitudes in which many of them are produced; the relative loudness of voice and muscular power with which many of them are endowed; their powerlessness as individuals, with their irresistibility in masses; the insatiable appetite and voracity of some in their imperfect state, as the caterpillar of the butterfly, and of others in their perfect condition, as the locust or the white ant.

But the chief excellence of natural history appears when it is viewed in its relation to God and his providence;—when the inhabitants of every leaf are examined as evidence of his liberality and goodness (Ps. 145. 16), or discovered to be instruments of his judgment which he can call forth at his pleasure, to chastise the rebellious, and humble the pride of man. A single worm can sink whole navies in the ocean; the young of a tiny fly can blight the early hopes of the entire harvest; a creature almost invisible to the naked eye can empty the teeming granaries; while the locust, which the finger crushes as the moth, can invade an empire with the irresistibility of an Alexander, and spread famine and death over continents.

To this view of natural history the book of Joel is particularly directed; and it affords a noble example of the fact, that the Scriptures excel all other books, as much in sublimity as in piety and truth. C.

A M O S.

Amos was a native of Judea, ch. i.; vii. 14: and began to prophesy along with Hosea, about 800 years before Christ. After denouncing ruin to the neighbouring heathens, who had been bitter enemies to the Hebrews, he calls the Israelites, and sometimes the Jews, to account for their idolatry, ingratitude, violence, treachery, oppression, incorrigibleness, uncleanness, contempt of the Sabbath, worldliness, &c., ch. i.–viii.; and concludes, predicting the establishment of the gospel church in the apostolic and millennial periods.

[Amos was one among the herdmen of Tekoa, a town of Judah, four leagues south of Jerusalem; but Beth-el seems to have been his native city, and his removal to Tekoa the consequence of the anger of Jeroboam, the son of Joash, and of Amaziah the priest (ch. 7. 10–13), because of his faithful denunciation of their idolatry. He began to prophesy along with Hosea, about 800 years before Christ; and after proclaiming the judgments of God against the neighbouring heathens, who had cruelly persecuted the Jews, he proceeds to upbraid them with their ingratitude, idolatry, violence, oppression, treachery, Sabbath-breaking, licentiousness, and worldliness; and concludes with predicting the blessed restoration of Israel, and establishment of the universal kingdom of Christ. C.

Amos was of humble parentage, born in a remote and obscure village, and employed from youth apparently in an humble though honourable calling. He was a shepherd, and his circumstances were such that his chief food consisted of the coarse fruit of the sycamore. He had received no special training; he was not educated at any of those schools of the prophets then common in Palestine. His language and idiom are such as might be expected from one in his position, writing under divine inspiration. Noble thoughts and sublime imagery are couched in simple words, and intermixed with figures and similes drawn from the features of nature and from the ordinary events of village life. Tekoa was a mountain village, situated about half-way between Jerusalem and Hebron, on the borders, and commanding a wide view of, the wilderness of Judah. Its ruins now cover a bleak and dreary mountain side, and when wandering among and around them one can understand the simple words of Amos, 'I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son; but I was an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit: and the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and the Lord said unto me, Go, prophesy unto my people Israel.' He did not seek, he did not expect, such a noble mission. It was wholly the Lord's doing; and in meek submission he did the Lord's work. P.]

2 And he said, The LORD will [f]roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the[h] habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither.[1]

3 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For three[2] transgressions of Damascus, and[3] for four,[4] I[i] will not turn away the punishment thereof;[5] because they have [j]thrashed Gilead with thrashing instruments of iron:

4 But [k]I will send [l]a fire into the house of Hazael, which shall devour the palaces of Benhadad.

5 I[m] will break also the bar of Damascus, and cut off the inhabitant from the [6]plain of Aven,[7] and him that holdeth the sceptre from the house of Eden:[8] and [o]the people of Syria shall go into captivity unto Kir, saith the LORD.

6 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For three transgressions of [p]Gaza,[9] and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they carried away captive the whole captivity,[1] to deliver them up to Edom:

7 But [q]I will send a fire on the wall of Gaza, which shall devour the palaces thereof:

8 And [r]I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod, and him that holdeth the sceptre from Ashkelon; and I will [s]turn mine hand against Ekron: and the [t]remnant of the Philistines shall perish, saith the Lord GOD.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For three transgressions of Tyrus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; [u]because they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembered not the brotherly covenant:[2]

10 But [v]I will send a fire on the wall of Tyrus, which shall devour the palaces thereof.

11 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For three transgressions of [z]Edom, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; [y]because he did pursue his brother with the sword, and did cast off all pity,[3] and his anger did tear perpetually, and he kept his wrath for ever:

12 But[a] I will send a fire upon Teman, which shall devour the palaces of Bozrah.[4]

13 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For three transgressions of the children of Ammon, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment

CHAPTER I. Ver. 2. The just judgments of that God who dwells in his temple on Mount Zion shall in a terrible manner lay waste all the countries around, however fertile and populous. 3, 6, 9, 11, 13. Three, four, or seven transgressions, denote that they have filled up the measure of their iniquities. 4, 7, 10, 12, 14. Fire denotes furious enemies and destructive judgments. 3–5. Because the Syrians, whose capital is Damascus, have, to all their other wickedness, added the terrible oppression and murder of the Hebrews on the east of Jordan, I will cause the Assyrians to destroy their cities and forts, murder their people and princes, and carry the poor remains captives to Media. 6–8. Because the Philistines have completed their wickedness by apprehending the Hebrews in their distress,

The bar of Damascus here is a reference to the bolt which secured the gate. To break it was to throw open the city to the enemy. This figure refers to the breaking of the national strength and means of resistance. The flour mill, a picture of which we give above, is in the northern part of the city. The stream of water flowing under the bridge and which furnishes power to turn the mill is the river Abana. These mills in Palestine and throughout Syria are very crude in comparison with such as we know in Europe and America at the present time.

1 God's judgments upon Moab, 4 upon Judah, 6 and upon Israel. 9 God complaineth of their unthankfulness, and threateneth them.

4 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, [e]For three transgressions of Judah, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have despised[2] the law of the LORD, and have not kept his commandments, and their [h]lies[2] caused them to err, [i]after the which their fathers have walked:

5 But I [j]will send a fire upon Judah, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem.

6 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because [k]they sold[3] the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes;[4]

7 That[l] pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor, and turn aside the way of the meek; [m]and a man and his father will go in unto the same maid,[5] to[o] profane my holy name:

8 And they lay themselves down upon [p]clothes laid to pledge [q]by every altar, and they drink the wine of the condemned[6] in the house of their god.[7]

9 ¶ Yet destroyed I the [r]Amorite before them, whose [s]height was like the height of the cedars,[8] and he was strong as the oaks; yet I destroyed [t]his fruit from above, and his roots from beneath.

10 Also [u]I brought you up from the land of Egypt, and [v]led you forty years through the wilderness, to possess the land of the Amorite.

11 And [x]I raised up of your sons for prophets, and of your young men for [y]Nazarites. Is it not even thus, O ye children of Israel? saith the LORD.

12 But ye gave the Nazarites [z]wine[9] to drink; and commanded the prophets, saying, [a]Prophesy not.

13 Behold, [b]I am pressed[1] under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves.[2]

14 Therefore [c]the flight shall perish from the swift, and the strong shall not strengthen his force, neither shall the mighty deliver himself:[3]

15 Neither shall he stand that handleth the bow; and he that is swift of foot shall not deliver himself: neither shall he that rideth the horse deliver himself.

16 And [d]he that is courageous[4] among the mighty shall flee away [e]naked in that day, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER III.

1 The necessity of God's judgment against Israel. 9 The publication of it, with the causes thereof.

HEAR [a]this word that the LORD hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole [b]family which [c]I brought up from the land of Egypt, saying,

2 You[d] only have I known[1] of all the families of the earth: [e]therefore I will punish[2] you for all your iniquities.[3] and giving them up to the cruel Edomites, I will, by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Maccabees, and others, utterly destroy their cities, rulers, and people. 9–15. For their treachery and cruelty the Edomites and Ammonites shall be served in like manner.

Ver. 2. Roar. Either literally with the thunder as his voice, or with his terrible prophetic denunciations ready to be executed, and as appalling to the conscience of sinners as the lion's voice to the shepherd and his timid flocks. C.

Ver. 5. Bar—the gate; as one of the gates of London is still called 'Temple bar.'—Aven, vanity. Most probably a play remarkable for idolatrous rites, as Bethel is called 'Beth-aven' for this reason, Ho. 5. 8. —Kir, a city in Media, Is. 22. 6. See, for the fulfilment, 2 Ki. 16. 9. C.

Ver. 8. Philistines shall perish. While the Jews are still a distinct, numerous, and even great people, the Philistines their oppressors are utterly unknown, and would seem, according to this prophecy, to have been totally extirpated. C.

Ver. 9. The covenant. Begun by David, and continued by Solomon, 2 Sa. 5. 11. 7 Ki. 5. 1. 9. 11. C.

Ver. 10. Houses were often built on the lofty walls of ancient cities, Jos. 2. 15. And it is not improbable that, for sake of the elevated situation and prospect of the open country, there the most splendid buildings would be erected. Hence the threatening of fire to the wall and the palaces. C.

Ver. 13. Because they have, &c. This revolting cruelty proceeded upon the calculation that by destroying the mother and the child there might be no heir to claim the possession coveted. C.

REFLECTIONS.—No person need be ashamed of a mean, if honest, original. God can qualify the meanest for the most honourable work. But dreadful is the case of the mightiest nations when the measure of their iniquities is filled up, and the hour of God's judgment is come. Nothing more hastens their destruction than their oppression or murder of the saints, or implacable enmity against near relations. Walls, palaces, cities, or armies are altogether ineffectual to withstand the power of God's wrath. And they who spitefully, covetously, and cruelly thought to drive out others, are often themselves driven out from their dwellings.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 6–8. The most insignificant bribes can carry a cause against the most righteous of the poor. They greedily pant after the small substance which the poor or the meek possess, and insolently trample upon and plunder them. Fathers and sons incestuously commit whoredom with the same woman, to the great dishonour of my name which they profess. Contrary to law, they detain the pledges of the poor, and use them as carpets whereon to prostrate themselves, or to feast or sleep in, before their idolatrous altars; and their drink-offerings are purchased by the fines of those whom they had unjustly condemned.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how horrid are the barbarities of war! But if sinners perish who sinned without law, apostates from God and rebels against his revealed laws may expect double sorrow! Nothing is too horrid for hardened professors. If once men violate their consciences for any advantage, they will soon do it for a very trifling one. And no injury in God's reckoning is more abominable than what is done to the meek; who will not, or, to the poor, who cannot, resent it. Great is the kindness of God in what he hath done for us, and in raising up ministers and patterns of holiness in our families. But, alas! how apt are men to forget mercies received, and to seduce ministers and saints into scandal! The consciences of sinners testify that it is not for want, but through the abuse, of the means of grace they are so wicked! And the obstinacy of professors, in many and highly aggravated crimes, is infinitely provoking to God, and infallibly ruinous to themselves.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 2, 3. You only have I chosen to be, and used as, my peculiar people; and therefore your punishment shall be exemplary, because ye have sinned against clearer light and higher obligations than others; nor need you expect that I will behave towards you as a friend and benefactor while you continue acting in direct contradiction to my nature and laws. 4–8. God would not issue forth such terrible denunciations of judgment unless he had you in view, as being by your sins the proper objects thereof, and intended

[4] The general scope of ver. 1-8 must be known ere we can rightly understand the bearing of each separate metaphor. The object of the prophet is to show that all his statements come from God. They are not human, but divine utterances. The third verse, therefore, sets forth the truth that Jehovah and his prophet have met and agreed to announce a message to Israel. The prophet does not speak of himself; he is not opposed to Jehovah; the words he utters are words which Jehovah reveals to him.—P.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He reproveth Israel for oppression, for idolatry, 6 and for their incorrigibleness.

HEAR this word, ye [a]kine of Bashan, that are in the [b]mountain of Samaria, which [c]oppress the poor, which crush the needy, which [d]say to their masters, Bring, and let us drink.

2 The Lord GOD [e]hath sworn by his holiness, that, lo, the days shall come upon you, that he [g]will take you away with hooks, and your posterity with fish-hooks.

3 And ye shall go out [h]at the breaches, every cow at that which is before her; and ye shall cast them into[1] the palace, saith the [2]LORD.[3]

4 ¶ Come[i] to Beth-el, and transgress; at Gilgal multiply transgression; and [j]bring your sacrifices every morning, and your tithes after three years;[4]

5 And offer a sacrifice[5] of thanksgiving [k]with leaven, and [l]proclaim and publish the free-offerings; for [m]this liketh you, O ye children of Israel, saith the Lord GOD.

6 ¶ And I also have given you [o]cleanness of teeth in all your cities, and want of bread in all your places; [p]yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

7 And also [q]I have withholden the rain from you, when there were yet three months to the harvest:[6] and [r]I caused it to rain upon one city, and caused it not to rain upon another city: one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not withered.

8 So[s] two or three cities wandered unto one city, to drink water; [t]but they were not satisfied: [u]yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

9 I[v] have smitten you with blasting and mildew: [7]when your gardens and your vineyards, and your fig-trees, and your olive-trees increased, [x]the palmer-worm devoured them: [y]yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

10 I[z] have sent among you the pestilence after the manner[8] of Egypt: [a]your young men have I slain with the sword, and have taken away your horses;[9] and [b]I have made the stink of your camps to come up unto your nostrils:

to punish you. Not by chance, but by his special providence, these judgments are inflicted; nor shall they be either prevented or removed but upon your repentance. These warnings ought to awaken you out of your stupidity, since no punishments can be inflicted but by the will and power of God; and since he manifests his purposes to his prophets, they must faithfully declare his messages, that sinners may fear and repent. 11, 12. The Assyrians shall invade you on every side, murder your valiant men, take your strong cities, and plunder your wealth; ye shall be butchered, or driven into captivity, like sheep; and very few, even of those who hide themselves under beds or in secret holes, shall escape.

Ver. 4. The lion roars when rushing on his prey, and also over it when taken. So the prophetic denunciation of judgment is both the immediate forerunner and accompaniment of its execution. C.

Ver. 12. As the shepherd when he affrights the lion from his prey—for the gorged lion is really a timid animal—brings home to his master any fragments that may be left, as evidence that his sheep was devoured; even so little and so torn shall be the miserable remnant of Israel that shall escape, though they now recline in luxurious indolence in the corners of their couches, that each arm may find a resting-place. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How dignified is the church of God! But just and severe are her corrections when her privileges are abused. Obstinacy in sin effectually separates us from a favourable God. And terrible, but certain, preludes of wrath to impenitent sinners are the threatenings of his word and providence. His terrors are not phantoms raised to frighten the weak, ignorant, or superstitious, but awful realities, which will come to pass. And transgressions most surely insnare men in nets of guilt and misery, from which only God's almighty grace, bringing them to repentance, can deliver them. In all our troubles the hand of God must be acknowledged. He never strikes into ruin till, having warned in vain, sinners prove incorrigible; and then his warnings but aggravate their condemnation. Manifest is his justice in their destruction who have outrageously sinned in opposition to multiplied means of grace, and who have accustomed themselves to wickedness till they consent to or approve it. If we provoke him with our offences he will oppress us with his judgment, and nothing will be able to prevent our ruin unless we repent. Yea, the things which we had idolized, or had abused to iniquity, shall be ruined along with us.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1–3. Hear, ye wealthy and potent rulers of Israel dwelling in Samaria, the capital, who oppress the poor, and sell them for slaves, or determine the cause against them, that ye may feast on the price; therefore God hath irrevocably determined that the Assyrians shall murder and carry you into captivity, like so many small fish; and the walls of yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

11 I have overthrown some of you, as God overthrew [c]Sodom and Gomorrah, and ye were as[d] a fire-brand plucked out of the burning: yet[e] have ye not returned unto me, saith the LORD.

12 Therefore [f]thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare[h] to meet thy God, O Israel.[1]

13 For, lo, [i]he that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind,[2] and [j]declareth unto man what is his thought, that maketh the morning [k]darkness,[3] and [l]treadeth upon the high places of the earth, the LORD, the [n]God of hosts, is his name.

CHAPTER V.

1 A lamentation for Israel. 4 An exhortation to repentance. 21 God rejecteth their hypocritical service.

HEAR ye[a] this word which I take up against you,[1] even a [b]lamentation, O house of Israel.

2 The [c]virgin of Israel [d]is fallen; [e]she shall no more rise: she [g]is forsaken upon her land; there is none to raise her up.

3 For thus saith the Lord GOD, [h]The city that went out by a thousand shall leave an hundred,[2] and that which went forth by an hundred shall leave ten, to the house of Israel.

4 ¶ For thus[3] saith the LORD unto the house of Israel, [i]Seek ye me, and ye shall live:

5 But[j] seek not Beth-el, nor enter into Gilgal, and pass not to Beer-sheba: for [k]Gilgal shall surely go into captivity, and Beth-el shall come to nought.[4]

6 Seek[l] the LORD, and ye shall live; lest he break out like [m]fire in the house of Joseph,[5] and devour it, and there be [o]none to quench it in Beth-el.

7 Ye who [p]turn judgment to wormwood,[6] and leave off righteousness in the earth,

8 Seek him that maketh the [q]seven stars[7] and Orion, and [r]turneth the shadow of death into the morning,[8] and maketh the day dark with night: that [s]calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth: The LORD is his name:

9 That [t]strengtheneth the spoiled[9] against the strong, so that the spoiled shall come against the fortress.

Thus were set up and worship paid where the grace of God had established covenants, very sacramental, were violated, and a curse denounced for execration upon them. Gilgal signifies a captivity. Here is a play upon the Hebrew words here which cannot be expressed in English. The meaning is, Gilgal would be removed into captivity. Bethel would come to nought; it would dwindle away until nothing should remain. The curse has been fulfilled to the letter. your city being broken down, part of you shall flee to the mountains, or shut up yourselves in the palace, but all to no purpose. The fugitives shall be pursued, and the high fortress laid low. 4, 5. And since you are so addicted to your idolatrous worship at Beth-el and Gilgal, pursue it in all its branches, devoting that to idols which is due to me, till ye have ripened yourselves for the most fearful and inevitable destruction. 12, 13. Some have been destroyed by fire from heaven or some terrible judgment; and you who remain were saved with great difficulty, and are still in danger.—Therefore, whether I bring on you some more terrible judgment, or introduce the promised Messiah, prepare for the event by faith and repentance.—In vain ye will dare to contemn or oppose me, who am the Almighty Creator, the omniscient beholder of hearts and every subtle contrivance; and able to turn the most flourishing prosperity into misery, and to tread down the proudest opposers.

7 The entering in of Hamath' is the passage from the Mediterranean past the northern end of the chain of Lebanon, into the plain of Hamath. It is several times mentioned as the northern border of Palestine. 'The river of the wilderness' is the mark of the southern border, but it cannot be satisfactorily identified. It may be the same as that elsewhere called 'the river of Egypt;' i.e. Wady el Arish, which runs through the desert of Tih.—P.

7 ¶ Therefore now [o]shall they go captive with the first that go captive, and the banquet of them that stretched themselves shall be removed.

8 The[p] Lord GOD hath sworn by himself, saith the LORD, the God of hosts, [q]I abhor the excellency of Jacob, and hate his palaces: [r]therefore will I deliver up the city, with all that is therein.[9]

9 And it shall come to pass, if there remain [s]ten men in one house, that they shall [t]die.

10 And a man's uncle shall take him up, and he that [u]burneth him, to bring out the bones out of the house, and shall say unto him that is by the sides of the house,[1] Is there yet any with thee? and he shall say, No. Then shall he say, [v]Hold thy tongue; for we may not make[2] mention of the name of the LORD.[3]

11 For, behold, the LORD [x]commandeth, and he will smite the great house with [y]breaches, and the little house with clefts.

12 ¶ Shall[y] horses run upon the rock?[5] will one plow there with oxen? for [z]ye have turned judgment into gall, and the fruit of righteousness into hemlock:

13 Ye which rejoice [a]in a thing of nought, which say, Have we not [b]taken to us horns by our own strength?

14 But, behold, [c]I will raise up against you a nation, O house of Israel, saith the LORD, the God of hosts; and they shall afflict you [d]from the entering in of Hemath unto the river[8] of the wilderness.[7]

REFLECTIONS.—God always in the end appears the patron of the injured. Great men often take infernal pleasure to render their inferiors miserable. And what they get by extortion is ordinarily expended on intemperance and luxury. But what is obtained by wickedness strangely perishes, and God turns men out of those rich enjoyments which they abuse to his dishonour, or renders them their plague; and nothing is more awful than his giving them up to their own hearts' lusts. In diversified forms, increasingly dreadful, God can punish and destroy his obstinate adversaries; and he can wonderfully distinguish men in his mercies or judgments. Whether therefore he add to his justice, or power, meet us in mercy, let me prepare for his coming, all awed by his greatness and his glory!

CHAPTER V. Ver. 2, 3. The kingdom of Israel, once so flourishing, and never heretofore subdued by enemies, shall irrevocably fall into extreme misery, without any help to her. And scarcely a tenth part of the people shall remain to be carried captive. 4–6. Turn to me by faith, repentance, and reformation, and ye shall be preserved from ruin, and continue prosperous—or, at least, in the end be saved with an everlasting salvation—lest the vengeance of God break forth among the descendants of Joseph, and other fellow-tribes, as devouring fire, which none of your idols can quench. 7–9. Ye who pervert justice, to the great grief of the injured, and who neglect all regard to equity in your administrations and practice, turn to him who, as Governor of the heavenly influences, can give you rain; as the Disposer of day and night, can change your condition at his pleasure; as Ruler of the rain, can either comfort or ruin you; and who can enable the weak to encounter their mighty enemies, and besiege and take their strongholds. 12, 13. Biassed by bribes, your judges give sentence against the poor, be their cause ever so good and clear. And since ye so incorrigibly abound in wickedness, that God's judgments must be executed upon you, wise and godly persons must forbear reproving you, and silently adore, not murmur at, these judgments. 15–24. Let justice be always administered with a steady and a free course, and without any interruption. 16, 17. Dreadful wailing and anguish shall abound everywhere, even in the vineyards, where they were wont to be merry, on account of the general havoc that my judgments shall make. 18, 19. Ye who scornfully wish to see the day of the Lord shall quickly feel it, full of misery and perplexity, without any comfort; and so numerous shall be the calamities thereof, that if ye escape one, ye shall fall into another. 25–27. Copying after the idolatry of your fathers in the wilderness, ye have neglected my service, and, with no small toil and expense, have carried about your idols, which could not move themselves; therefore I will make the Assyrians to carry you captives into Media, far beyond both Damascus and Babylon.

Ver. 18. Desire the day, &c. Who profess to desire it, deriding the prophetic predictions, Je. 17. 15; Ezek. 12. 22; or who, from various motives, really desire a time of trouble. This desire arises in some from 'envying and grieving at the good of their neighbours;' an unjust comparison of their own state with that of others; or from direct covetousness of that for which they never toiled, and which, if they possessed, they would soon squander. But in most it arises from a restless and discontented spirit, that longs for any change, and that leads them to calculate that, in the drama of life, which they ignorantly imagine a mere 'chapter of accidents,' something may turn up of which they may take advantage, and enrich themselves, without the care of frugality or the toils of industry. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Sin has the most awful influence to reduce churches and nations. And often death or apostasy much diminishes church members. Yet nations and churches are ordinarily guilty of great and multiplied iniquities before God proceed to execute public judgments upon them. With great earnestness and expectation should we therefore seek after and wrestle with him while he may be found. And if we live up to our prayers, we may expect our requests answered, and happiness in his presence. Great prudence, as well as grief, is necessary in times of singular wickedness and trouble. But it is presumptuous and dangerous to deride God's threatenings and judgments, for they will infallibly overtake the impenitent. How odious to him are hypocritical devotions! If we regard iniquity in our heart, and practise it in our life, no religious services will avail us. And they who obstinately refuse God's calls shall at last be driven far enough from him in their wickedness.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1. Woe to those wealthy Jews and Israelites who live in carnal security, as if Jerusalem and Samaria, their capital cities, could protect them from my judgments. 2. Behold how those once famed cities, Calneh in Chaldea, Hamath in Syria, and Gath in the country of the Philistines, lie in ruins, though they never sinned against such abundant favours as ye have done! 3–6. Ye keep the thoughts of approaching judgments out of your minds, or flatter yourselves that they will never come; and take all opportunities to commit injustice and oppression; and abandon yourselves to sloth, luxury, sensuality, carnal mirth, drunkenness, and pride; in nowise affected with the miseries inflicted on or impending over the ten tribes: 7–11. Therefore shall ye be quickly carried captive into Assyria, and miserably in want of necessary provision. With unrelenting detestation God will give up your palaces and cities to the ravaging enemies to be destroyed. And meanwhile, the pestilence or famine shall cut off whole families, which their few surviving relations shall bury in astonishment, despairing of pity from God: and all ranks, great and small, shall be equally involved in the desolating calamity 12–14. To no purpose do the prophets plead with you, hardened sinners, for your conversion and reformation.

CHAPTER VII.

1 The judgments of the grasshoppers, 4 and of the fire, are diverted by the prayer of Amos. 7 By a wall and plumb-line is signified the desolation of Israel. 10 Amaziah complaineth of Amos. 14 Amos showeth his calling, 16 and Amaziah's judgment.

THUS hath the Lord GOD [a]showed unto me; and, behold, [b]he formed [1]grasshoppers[2] in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth; and, lo, it was the latter growth after the king's mowings.[3]

2 And it came to pass, that when they had made an end of eating the grass of the land, then I said, [c]O Lord GOD, forgive, I beseech thee; by whom shall Jacob arise?[4] for[d] he is small.

3 The LORD [e]repented[5] for this: It shall not be, saith the LORD.

4 ¶ Thus hath the Lord GOD showed unto me; and, behold, the Lord GOD called to contend by [g]fire,[6] and it devoured the great deep, and did eat up a part.

5 Then[h] said I, O Lord GOD, cease, I beseech thee; by whom shall Jacob arise? for he is small.

6 The[i] LORD repented for this: This also shall not be, saith the Lord GOD.

7 ¶ Thus he showed me; and, behold, the Lord stood upon a [j]wall made by a plumb-line, with [k]a plumb-line in his hand.

8 And the LORD said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, A plumb-line. Then said the Lord, Behold, I will set a plumb-line[7] in the midst of my people Israel: [l]I will not again pass by them any more:

9 And [m]the high places of Isaac[8] shall be desolate, and the sanctuaries of Israel shall be laid waste; and I [o]will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword.

10 ¶ Then Amaziah, [p]the priest of Beth-el, sent to Jeroboam king of Israel, saying, Amos [q]hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel; the land is not able to bear all his words.

11 For [r]thus Amos saith, Jeroboam shall die by the sword, and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of their own land.

12 Also Amaziah said unto Amos, O thou [s]seer, [t]go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and prophesy there:

13 But prophesy not again any more at Beth-el: for [u]it is the king's chapel,[9] and it is the king's court.[1]

14 ¶ Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I was no prophet,[2] neither was I a prophet's son: but I was [v]an herdman, and a gatherer[3] of sycamore fruit:[4]

15 And the LORD took me as I followed[5] the flock, and the LORD said unto me, [z]Go, prophesy unto my people Israel.[6]

16 ¶ Now therefore hear thou the word of the LORD: thou sayest, [y]Prophesy not against Israel, and [z]drop not thy word against the house of Isaac.

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD; [a]Thy wife shall be an harlot in the city, and thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword, and [b]thy land shall be divided by line; and thou shalt die in a [c]polluted land: and Israel [d]shall surely go into captivity forth of his land.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 By a basket of summer fruit is showed the near approach of Israel's end. 4 Oppression is reproved. 11 A famine of God's word threatened.

THUS hath the Lord GOD [e]showed unto me: and, behold, a basket of summer fruit.[1]

2 And he said, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, [b]A basket of summer fruit. Then said

He had received unofficial training, supernatural instruction. It was not as a mere matter of course, arising from the nature of his office, that he prophesied. His ministry is not human it is divine. He was commissioned not by man, but by God. He could not, therefore, cease from the work to which God had called him. Ye have even rendered the civil administrations altogether unjust and oppressive. Ye rejoice in your idols, wealth, and power; and boast of your self-advancement, and your ability to defend yourselves: but, lo, as executioners of my just judgment, the Assyrians, and afterwards the Chaldeans, shall ravage your whole country, and murder or take you captive, from one end of your land to the other.

Ver. 1. Chief of the nations. Not so named of the Gentiles, for they despised the Jews; but either so named of God, when he called them 'my people,' and constituted them the depositaries of his holy oracles, and gathered them to his garner as 'the first-fruits' (so the word translated 'chief' signifies) of his harvest; or so named of themselves when, looking to their religious privileges, and overlooking their neglect of them, they proudly arrogated to themselves a title of indefeasible pre-eminence among the kingdoms of the world. C.

Ver. 5. Who imitate David's instruments of music, and affect to follow his example, but who dedicate to revelry what he dedicated to piety. The whole description presents us with a refined, indolent, and luxurious people—an evidence how easily, and how far, fine taste and true religion may be separated among any people—of which Italy, the land of painting and music, affords a sad example, while it proves a deceitful snare to all the nations of Europe. C.

Ver. 10. Uncle. The whole ten brethren, ver. 9, having died, the burial devolves upon the uncle as next of kin.—For we may not, &c. Either on account of the idolaters, who had forbidden all reference to Jehovah; or on account of a superstitious fear of mentioning the name; or, perhaps, a pious acknowledgment that silence best becomes sinners suffering under his righteous displeasure. C.

Ver. 11. Clefts. Either a prophecy of, or allusion to, the earthquake; or an allusion to the clefts that are frequent in the mud walls of cottages in warm climates. C.

REFLECTIONS.—External privileges are very apt to puff up pride. And if we be once abandoned to carnal security, the examples of God's judgments all around us will scarcely affect us. A round of dissipation and luxury effectually alienates the mind from God, and shuts out every serious consideration, and every degree of sympathy with afflicted churches and nations! Pitiful are the darling pleasures of those who are abandoned of God. But fearful is their case when his wrath begins to burn against them. No external relations, church privileges, or temples can prevent his judgments. He abhors the form of godliness which is separated from its power. Dreadful is the situation, when luxurious dissipation is exchanged for sword, pestilence, famine, captivity, and hell!—when terrible calamities but plunge men into diabolical astonishment and eternal despair!—when all are generally miserable, and none left to comfort another! and when obstinate perverters of justice and proud boasters, are sadly abandoned to their own fate.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1–9. These things were represented to Amos in a vision. The vermin not only consumed the fruits of the ground, but were an emblem of the Assyrian ravagers. The terrible lightning, or drought, dried up their rivers, and destroyed part of the people, or figured out the devastations begun by Tiglath-pileser in Gilead and Galilee. The straight wall signified the Hebrew nation, formed and regulated by the most just laws; and the plumb-line denoted that their conduct was discovered as not answerable to their laws, and therefore God would no longer forbear to punish them.

Ver. 16. Isaac. They call themselves by 'Isaac,' rather than by Abraham or Jacob; taking advantage of the antiquity of Isaac's altar to sanction their modern idolatry. Even as Rome takes advantage of the antiquity of her name and power to sanction her innovations in doctrine and worship, and countenance her usurpations over Christian rights and liberties. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God executes diversified judgments upon obstinate sinners; and commonly directs his strokes in a gradual manner. Yet often the earnest supplications of God's ministers divert his judgment for a time. And even the low and distressed case of nations and churches are a plea with his mercy. But at last utter, though just, destruction shall overtake the incorrigible revolters from his law; and neither temples nor palaces can protect from ruin, but concur to render them more miserable. Furious persecution is the common reward of ministers' faithful warnings and fervent prayers from their wicked neighbours. And none are more ready to wrest their words, and accuse and persecute them as traitors, than profane clergymen, as their fidelity and diligence are a standing reproach to themselves. They who are prompted by all their religion by carnal hopes of provision or preferment are apt to imagine everybody as mean and selfish as themselves. But it is a great comfort, especially in evil times, for ministers to have had a clear call to their work. And if men, even the greatest, oppose them, God will attest their mission and messages in the fearful ruin of their enemies. And it is at our infinite hazard to attempt silencing even the weakest whom God hath commanded to speak.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 4–6. By your oppression ye devour the substance of the poor, that they can scarcely preserve themselves in life: ye are weary of God's holy seasons, and desirous of their being over, that ye may return to your injustice, in making the measure wherewith you sell your corn too scanty, and causing the poor purchasers to give you more than just weight for the price, that, by your extortions, ye may the LORD unto me, [c]The end is come upon my people of Israel; I will not again pass by them any more.

3 And [d]the songs of the temple[2] shall be howlings[3] in that day, saith the Lord GOD: there[e] shall be many dead bodies in every place; they shall cast them forth with silence.[4]

4 ¶ Hear this, O ye that [g]swallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail,

5 Saying, [h]When will the new moon[5] be gone, that we may sell corn? and the [i]sabbath, that we may set forth[6] wheat, [j]making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and [7]falsifying the balances by deceit?[8]

6 That [k]we may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat?

7 The LORD hath sworn by [9]the excellency of Jacob.[1] Surely [l]I will never forget any of their works.

8 Shall not the land [m]tremble[2] for this, and every one mourn that dwelleth therein? and [n]it shall rise up wholly as a flood,[3] and it shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt.

9 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord GOD, that [p]I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day:

10 And I will turn your [q]feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation; and I[r] will bring up sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head; and I will make it as[s] the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day.

11 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the Lord GOD, that I will send a famine in the land; not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of[t] hearing the words of the LORD:

12 And they shall wander [u]from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east; they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the LORD, and [v]shall not find it.

1 The certainty of Israel's desolation. 11 The restoring of the tabernacle of David.

I SAW[a] the Lord standing upon the [1]altar: and he said, [b]Smite the lintel[2] of the door, that the posts may shake: and cut them[3] in the head, all of them; and I will slay the last of them with the sword: [c]he that fleeth of them shall not flee away, and he that escapeth of them shall not be delivered.

2 Though[d] they dig into hell,[4] thence shall mine hand take them; though they climb up to heaven,[5] thence will I bring them down:

3 And though they hide themselves in the top of Carmel, I will search and take them out thence; and though they be [e]hid from my sight in the bottom of the sea, thence will I command the serpent,[6] and he shall bite them:

4 And [g]though they go into captivity before their enemies, thence will I command the sword, and it shall slay them: and [h]I will set mine eyes upon them for evil, and not for good.

5 And the Lord GOD of hosts is he that [i]toucheth the land, and it shall melt, [j]and all that dwell therein shall mourn: and it shall rise up wholly like a flood; and shall be drowned, as by the flood of Egypt.

6 It is he that buildeth his [k]stories[7] in the heaven, and hath founded his [8]troop[9] in the earth; [l]he that calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth; the LORD is his name.

7 Are[n] ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel? saith the LORD. [o]Have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt? and the [p]Philistines from Caphtor, and [q]the Syrians from Kir?[1]

8 Behold, [r]the eyes of the Lord GOD are upon the sinful kingdom, and [s]I will destroy it from off the face of the earth; [t]saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the LORD.

REFLECTIONS.—Whatever God shows us ought to be carefully observed. His patience wears out at length; and obstinate sinning must end in deplorable misery; and sinful mirth in howling and ignominious death. Yea, hopeless is the case when fearful calamities only render men sullen and peevish.—Carnal men heartily hate God and his ordinances. Sabbaths and holy duties are intolerable burdens; and merchandise, even the basest, is to them a cordial pleasure. Nor when nations are ripening for ruin do they ever fail to oppress God's poor people. But riches got by rapine will bring on ruin. And let the oppressor be ever so high, the flood of God's wrath shall overwhelm him. They who would not tremble for the sins of the land, shall tremble under its judgments. And if men hate God's Word and ordinances, they, and every impudent idolater, must expect to be deprived of them, and hastened into eternal misery.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1. God's standing on the altar at Beth-el, and smiting the lintel, and cutting the posts, denote his treading down and destroying that and other idolatrous temples, together with the king, princes, priests, and people that worshipped there. 5, 6. I, the almighty Former of heaven and earth and all that is therein, and the Governor of seas and rains, will, with the greatest ease, ruin the whole country by the ravaging army of the Assyrians. 7. In my view, ye Israelites are no better than the black, barbarous, and idolatrous Ethiopians; and though I brought you from Egypt, that is no more than what I did for the Philistines, or will do for the Syrians, who are mere heathens. 9. I will despise and afflict you, O ye Israelites and Jews, among all nations; but with such exact care, that not one elect person shall be ruined, or his existence prevented. 11, 12. After the return from Babylon, the Jewish church and nation were re-established, and the Maccabees conquered the Edomites and neighbouring heathens. But by the coming of

HARBOR, CORFU—A CITY IN THE MEDITERRANEAN SEA, ONCE HEATHEN, BUT NOW CHRISTIAN. [AMOS, IX:11.]—"In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof: and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old." This verse doubtless has reference to the rebuilding of the temple, but it may also be regarded as a prophecy of the spiritual temple that was to be raised up through the coming of Christ. The Christian church which is gradually spreading over the whole world represents in modern times what the temple of Solomon did in ancient times. In the above view we have a picture of Corfu, a Christian city, and under the control now of the king of Greece. King George has a palace here about two miles from the citadel, situated in the midst of wide and spacious grounds, embracing, perhaps, fifty or sixty acres.

Christ the church was restored, religion revived, and shone more gloriously than ever before; and Gentiles, as well as Jews, became the happy subjects of his government. 13. The harvest and vintage continuing till the next seed-time, &c., denotes the amazing abundance of spiritual blessings in the apostolic and millennial periods. 14, 15. Their rebuilding the waste cities, &c., denotes the great deliverance from the heathenish idolatry and corrupt lusts; and the abundant peace and prosperity and fixed settlement of the gospel church. These last five verses had a partial fulfilment among the Jews after their captivity in Babylon; and will have a more noted fulfilment among all the Hebrews in the glorious future.

REFLECTIONS.—Obstinate wickedness issues at last in dreadful and unavoidable ruin. It avails not who may be for us, if God be against us: wherever we go his eyes are upon us for evil; whatever we do, his hand can destroy us; and all creatures are at his command to execute his judgment. Alas! how sins indulged turn professors of the true religion into worse than heathens! And if they abandon their peculiar holiness, God must strip them of their peculiar privileges. Nothing can be a more lying refuge than hopes of impunity in impenitency: and never is ruin nearer than when men put it far from their thoughts. But marvellously God preserves his elect amidst the most fearful shakings, confusions, and miseries. When all seems desperate, he wonderfully revives his church, and blesses her with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus. And great shall be the glory of the coming, and especially of the eternal period, in which not one good thing promised shall remain unfulfilled.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF AMOS.

Of the book of Amos two distinct views may be taken. (1) It may be viewed as a mere composition, without any reference to inspiration. And if so, what an elevated idea does it convey of the literary state of Israel, when a common herdman and fruiterer could produce such a work. Viewed in this light, the sublimity and beauty of its imagery, combined with the purity of its morals, the honesty of its rebukes, and the tenderness and incorruptibility of its patriotism, place it far above every book hitherto produced upon these subjects, in any country, by any of the same rank, opportunities, and education. (2) But while, to humble the pride of man, it may be lawful to draw such a comparison, yet the true view of the book is that of its inspiration—the work of a 'holy man of old speaking as he was moved by the Holy Ghost.' And here we must note the wisdom of God in 'condescending to men of low estate.' He delivers his oracles not by 'the wise,' not by 'the scribe,' not by 'the disputers of this world,' but 'chooses the weak to confound the strong, and things which are not to bring to nought things that are; that no man should glory in his sight.' No doubt God has chosen a Moses, 'learned in all the learning of the Egyptians;' and a Paul, 'bred at the feet of Gamaliel;' but if he did so to demonstrate the power of sanctified learning, he also chose an Amos, who was 'neither a prophet, nor the son (scholar) of a prophet,' but a simple 'herdman and gatherer of sycamore fruit,' and a few Galilean fishermen, 'without (human) learning,' to demonstrate that God's work is to be done, 'not by wisdom, nor by might, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord.'

Amos prophesied of the same events as Hosea, and seems to have been his contemporary. He is quoted in the New Testament, Ac. 7. 42, 43; 15. 15–18, corresponding to Am. 5. 25, 26; 9. 11, 12. C.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET OBADIAH.

Obadiah seems to have prophesied along with Jeremiah, about A.M. 3417. His short prophecy contains, (1) Threatenings against the Edomites, who may be considered as typical of Antichrist and other implacable adversaries of the true church; viz. that their pride should be humbled, ver. 1–4: their wealth plundered, ver. 5–7: their wisdom infatuated, ver. 7–9: their spiteful carriage towards God's distressed people avenged, ver. 10–16. (2) Gracious promises to Israel, that they should subdue the Edomites and others, ver. 17 20: and that Christ's kingdom should be erected by a great salvation, ver. 21.

[The prophecy of Obadiah is remarkable as the shortest book in the Old Testament. Yet, within that brief limit, it foretells and describes the final extirpation of an entire people, ver. 10—a mighty and prosperous kingdom—an event which history has fully realized. For either the Edomites were cut off in the Maccabean and subsequent wars, or completely scattered from their own country and embodied among the Jews, or absorbed by the Nabathean Arabs. C.

Nothing is known of the personal history or family of Obadiah. The place of his birth is not stated, and the period at which he wrote can only be conjectured from incidental evidence. That he wrote previous to the time of Jeremiah is evident from his language, which is purer and of an older type; it is also evident from the fact that Jeremiah must have read and made use of Obadiah's prophecy (comp. Je. 49. 7–22). From this we infer that Obadiah wrote before the captivity. It appears also from a careful comparison of ver. 10–18 with Joel 2. 32; 3. 1, seq., that the latter was acquainted with and partially quotes the former. Obadiah, therefore, must have been at least as old as Joel, and must have written before him. This places Obadiah among the earliest group of prophets.

There are statements in the book which might at first sight seem to run counter to the above conclusion. In ver. 10–16 the judgments pronounced on Edom are said to have been caused by the Edomites rejoicing that strangers had taken possession of Jerusalem, and led the Jews captives. But it is highly probable that the prophet alludes to the time when Jerusalem was plundered by the Philistines and Arabs in the reign of Jehoram, 2 Ki. 8. 20; 2 Ch. 21. 8. Then the Edomites joined the enemy and practised great cruelty upon the Jews.

Obadiah's prophecy is one continuous proclamation of the destruction of Edom. But Edom is not spoken of or denounced as an isolated nation. Its attitude towards Israel, the people of God, is the groundwork of the prophecy. This has been well brought out by Keil:—'He regards the judgment upon Edom as one feature in the universal judgment upon all nations, proclaims in the destruction of the power of Edom the overthrow of the power of all nations hostile to God, and in the final elevation and re-establishment of Israel in the Holy Land foretells the completion of the sovereignty of Jehovah, i.e. of the kingdom of God, as dominion over all nations: so that we may say with Hengstenberg, that Obadiah makes the judgment upon the Gentiles and the restoration of Israel the leading object of his prophetic painting.' P.]

HOUSE OF TRIPTOLEMUS, POMPEII—A HEATHEN CITY IN WHICH CICERO HAD A VILLA DESTROYED BY A VOLCANO IN A. D. 79. [Obadiah, i:15-16.]—"For the day of the Lord is near upon all the heathen; as thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee: thy reward shall return upon thine own head. For as ye have drunk up in my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen drink continually; yea, they shall drink, and they shall swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been." No heathen city furnishes a better illustration of these verses than Pompeii. This was a city given up to pleasure and idolatry, and when it was buried out of sight by the eruption of Vesuvius it was as though it had not been. Among all of its rich and luxurious inhabitants not a man was found to give literary or philosophic setting to its life or its history. We learn a little of Pompeii from Strabo and from Pliny, but nothing from any man who lived in Pompeii.

THE vision of Obadiah. Thus saith the Lord GOD [a]concerning Edom, [b]We have heard a rumour from the LORD, and an ambassador[1] is sent among the heathen, Arise ye, and let us rise up against her in battle.

2 Behold, [c]I have made thee small among the heathen: thou art greatly despised.

3 ¶ The[d] pride of thine heart hath deceived thee, thou that [e]dwellest in the clefts of the rock,[2] whose habitation is high; that saith in his heart, [g]Who shall bring me down to the ground?

4 Though[h] thou exalt thyself as the eagle, and though thou set thy nest among the stars,[3] thence will I bring thee down, saith the LORD.

5 If [i]thieves came to thee, if robbers by night, (how art thou cut off!) would they not have stolen till they had enough? if the grapegatherers came to thee, would they not leave some grapes?[4]

6 How[j] are the things of Esau searched out! how are his hidden things sought up!

7 All[k] the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border; the men that were at peace with thee[5] have deceived thee, and prevailed against thee; they that eat thy bread[6] have laid a wound[7] under thee: [l]there is none understanding in him.[8]

8 Shall[m] I not in that day, saith the LORD, even destroy the wise men out of Edom, and understanding out of the mount of Esau?

9 And [n]thy mighty men, O Teman, shall be dismayed, to the end that every one of the mount of Esau may be cut off by slaughter.

10 ¶ For thy [o]violence against thy brother Jacob, shame shall cover thee, and [p]thou shalt be cut off for ever.

11 In[r] the day that thou stoodest on the other side, in the day that the strangers carried away captive his forces,[9] and foreigners entered into his gates, and [s]cast lots upon Jerusalem, even[t] thou wast as one of them.

12 But [u]thou shouldest not [w]have looked[2] on the [v]day of thy brother in the day that he became a stranger; neither shouldest thou have [z]rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction; neither shouldest thou have spoken proudly[3] in the day of distress.

13 Thou [y]shouldest not have entered into the gate of my people in the day of their calamity; yea, thou shouldest not have looked on their affliction in the day of their calamity, nor have laid hands on their substance[4] in the day of their calamity;

14 Neither shouldest thou have stood in the cross-way, to cut off those of his that did escape; neither shouldest thou have delivered up[5] those of his that did remain in the day of distress.

15 For[a] the day of the LORD is near upon all the heathen; [c]as thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee: thy reward shall return upon thine own head.

16 For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen [b]drink continually, yea, they shall drink, and they shall swallow down,[6] and they shall be as though they had not been.

17 ¶ But[c] upon mount Zion shall be deliverance,[7] and there shall be holiness;[8] and the house of Jacob shall [d]possess their possessions.

18 And[e] the house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in them, and devour them; and [g]there shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau; for the LORD hath spoken it.

19 And they of the south shall possess the [h]mount of Esau: and they of [i]the plain the Philistines; and they shall possess the fields of Ephraim, and the fields of Samaria; and Benjamin shall possess Gilead.[9]

20 And[j] the captivity of this host of the children of Israel shall possess that of the Canaanites, even unto [k]Zarephath; and the captivity of Jerusalem, which is in Sepharad, shall [l]possess the [i]cities of the south.

21 And [m]saviours[2] shall come upon mount Zion to judge the mount of Esau; and [o]the kingdom shall be the LORD's.

9 This verse as rendered in our English translation is very obscure. It is intended to show how in the day of Israel's prosperity the Jews would take possession of the countries of their bitterest foes: 'They (the Jews) who dwell in the Negeb (the southern district of Judæa) shall possess all Edom; and they who inhabit the Shephelah (the specific name of a plain at the western base of the mountains of Judæa) shall possess the country of the Philistines; and they will take possession of the fields of Ephraim, and the fields of Samaria; and Benjamin will take possession of Gilead.' Ver. 3–7. However proud ye Edomites be, and however rocky and inaccessible your country, I will cause the Chaldeans and others to lay it desolate and destroy your nation. And, worse than robbers or gatherers of grapes, they shall utterly spoil you of all that you have, even of what you think best secreted. Yea, your allies, who have marched to your borders as assistants, and received your subsidies and provision, shall betray you, and turn their arms against you: 10–16. Because, contrary to natural relation and duty, ye took pleasure in the ruin of the Jews, and even helped the Chaldeans to destroy Jerusalem, murder its inhabitants, apprehend captives, and seize on the spoil; or insulted the unhappy sufferers, and even barbarously endeavoured to apprehend, murder, or deliver to the Chaldeans, such as had fled; your conduct shall draw upon you similar sufferings in the day of the Lord's destruction of the heathens around you; and your joyous revellings in Judea, on account of the destruction of my people, shall issue in your drinking up, to the very bottom, the cup of unbelief, to your utter ruin, and the perpetual desolation of your country. 17–21. These verses had a partial fulfilment when Cyrus restored the Jews to their country, and when the Maccabees subdued the Edomites and the nations around, and in the apostolic spread of the gospel among the heathen; but will have a more signal accomplishment when the Hebrews return to their own land in the future, and when the Antichristians and Turks are cut off, to make way for the universal kingdom of Jesus Christ.

Ver. 17. The fulfilment of this prophecy is still future—for though Judah obtained temporary restoration, and gained, by the Maccabees, distinguished victories over Edom, yet they did not abide in 'their possessions'—neither, alas! were they 'holiness' to the Lord:—neither has 'the captivity of Israel' yet been reclaimed or restored. The time is still future, but the event certain. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God can easily find both hearts and hands for the most bloody work he can intend against sinners. And pride and carnal security dangerously deceive and ripen men for destruction. Their self-exaltation but tends to debase them; their carnal confidences but betray them; their wealth but allures their enemies to hunt out and destroy them; their hired allies assist them to their ruin; their understanding, not employed to keep them from sin, being infatuated, decoys them into danger; the bravery of their warriors but serves to make the slaughter more universal; their joys but issue in embittering their anguish; their undutiful and barbarous conduct towards God's distressed people but fills up an uncommon cup of misery to themselves.—But marvellously connected are the confusion of Christ's impenitent foes, the deliverance of his church, and the conversion and purification of multitudes of sinners; and great is the honour that Jesus obtains therein. Yea, if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him, and be glorified together.

PANORAMA OF JAFFA—WHERE JONAH TOOK SHIP. [Jonah, i:3.]—"But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord, and went down to Joppa; and he found a ship going to Tarshish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them to Tarshish from the presence of the Lord." Jaffa was the ancient harbor of the Jewish capital. It was here that King Hiram of Tyre landed his cargoes of cedar wood from Lebanon, which were to be used in the erection of Solomon's temple. Jaffa has no harbor, and it is almost with peril to life that a landing is made here. There are ledges of low, jagged rocks just underneath the surface of the water, and it is only with great difficulty that places can be found between these rocks to ride in the small boats from the great ship to the shore. Many people have been drowned here. Pliny said the city existed before the flood.

JONAH.

This prophet was born in Gath-hepher, a city of Galilee, and prophesied about A.M. 3140. In some unwritten predictions he foretold the restoration of the kingdom of Israel by Jehoash and Jeroboam II., 2 Ki. 14. 25. But here we have the history of the warning which he gave to the heathen Ninevites. It contains remarkable manifestations of human infirmity and divine mercy connected. But the principal scope of it is to figure out Jesus Christ's interposition for guilty sinners, and the amazing and effectual spread of his gospel through the Gentile world.

[This prophet was of the tribe of Zebulun, and born at Gath-hepher, a city of that tribe. (See 2 Ki. 14. 25; Jos. 19. 13.) Many things are conjectured concerning him, which, because merely conjectural, we hold it useless to repeat, believing it better, and perhaps the only thing strictly allowable, to speak of those things that are clearly recorded. These things are merely the time of his preaching, which was in or a little before the days of Jeroboam the son of Jehoash (2 Ki. 14. 25), and the facts narrated in the book itself; namely, the prophet's divine commission; his unwillingness to comply; his attempted escape; his wonderful prevention; his miraculous preservation; his faithful announcement of judgment; the remarkable repentance of Nineveh; its merciful reprieve; the prophet's dissatisfaction; and God's condescending defence of his merciful government. These facts, when combined, present us with a truly wonderful narrative—one which, if need were, against mere philosophers, we could well defend; but one of which, to Christians, it is enough to say, its truth is endorsed by our Lord himself; while the miraculous preservation of the prophet is declared to have been a type of his death and resurrection. (See Mat. 12. 39–41; Lu. 11. 30–32; He. 13. 15.) Jonah, though his book rank fifth in order of the minor prophets, must evidently have been one of the most ancient of all, except David, who have left behind them any written predictions. For the fall of Nineveh, and the death of Sardanapalus, the last of the Assyrian monarchs, is, by common consent of chronologers, referred to a period about 820 B.C.; while the same authorities generally refer the preaching of Jonah, and the repentance and reprieve of Nineveh, to a period about 862 B.C., which was during the life of Jehu, king of Israel. *C.

The site of Gath-hepher is well known, and the tomb of Jonah venerated. It is situated, as Jerome says, two miles from Sepphoris, on the way to Tiberias. The road from Nazareth to Tiberias also passes near it. It stands on the top of a rocky hill, and is now called Mashhad, which is the name commonly given in Syria to tomb or shrine of saint or prophet. On the very summit of the hill, visible from afar, is a little square building, surmounted by a white dome; and a very ancient tradition, received alike by Christians and Mohammedans, affirms that this building is the tomb of the prophet Jonah. P.]

CHAPTER I.

1 Jonah, sent by God to Nineveh, fleeth to Tarshish. 4 He is overtaken by a tempest, 11 thrown into the sea, 17 and swallowed by a fish.

NOW the[a] word of the LORD came unto Jonah[b] the son of Amittai, saying,

2 Arise, go to Nineveh, that [c]great city,[1] and cry against it; for [d]their wickedness is come up before me.

3 But Jonah [e]rose up to [g]flee unto [h]Tarshish,[2] from the [i]presence of the LORD, and went down to [j]Joppa; and he found a ship going to Tarshish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD.

4 ¶ But the LORD [k]sent out[3] a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like[4] to be broken.

5 Then the mariners were afraid, and [l]cried every man unto his god, and [m]cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. But Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship;[5] and he lay, and [o]was fast asleep.

6 So the shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, [p]What meanest thou, O sleeper? arise, call[q] upon thy God, [r]if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not.

12 And he said unto them, [d]Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea: so shall the sea be calm unto you: for I know that [e]for my sake this great tempest is upon you.

13 Nevertheless, the men rowed[2] hard to bring it to the land; [f]but they could not: for the sea wrought, and was tempestuous against them.

14 Wherefore they [g]cried unto the LORD, and

17. A great fish—commonly supposed to be a whale (as most in accordance with Mat. 12. 40), though the species is not here mentioned by the prophet, nor does it necessarily signify a whale even in Matthew. For the purpose of preservation, however, the whale seems most appropriate; as, without supposing the prophet to have descended into the stomach (which the text does not necessarily require), the mouth of a common whale presents a cavity from 6 to 8 feet wide, from 10 to 12 feet high, and from 15 to 16 feet long; which would contain an abundant supply of air, continually renewed by the creature's ascent to the surface. The fact that whales are not found in the Mediterranean is of no weight, inasmuch as they may have been there abundantly, and said, We beseech thee, O LORD, we beseech thee, [j]let us not perish for this man's life, and lay not upon us innocent blood: for thou, [k]O LORD, hast done as it pleased thee.

NAPLES, FROM THE HEIGHTS NEAR PUTEOLI—WHERE ST. PAUL LANDED IN ITALY. [Jonah, iii:2.]—"Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee." That Jonah was commanded by the Lord to go and preach in Nineveh is an evidence of the fact that the great cities of the nations which surrounded Palestine were no less under the direction and care of Providence than the cities of Palestine itself. Wrongdoing brought its penalties in heathen cities as completely as in Jerusalem. Above we give a picture of Naples from the heights. This city was in the immediate neighborhood of Pompeii, and was close to Baiæ and Puteoli, where the wealthy Romans were accustomed to resort for pleasure. Nero was often here, and Tiberias, who lived before Nero, died here. In no city of history have the awful consequences of sin been more apparent than in the cities around the Bay of Naples.

15 So [l]they took up Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea; and the sea [m]ceased[3] from her raging.

16 Then the men [n]feared the LORD exceedingly, and offered [o]a sacrifice unto the LORD, and made [p]vows.[4]

17 ¶ Now the LORD had [q]prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah. And [r]Jonah was in the belly[5] of the fish three days and three nights.

CHAPTER II.

1 The prayer of Jonah. 10 He is delivered out of the belly of the fish.

THEN Jonah [a]prayed unto the LORD [b]his God [c]out of the fish's belly,

2 And said, I [d]cried by reason of[1] mine affliction unto the LORD, and he [e]heard me; [f]out of the belly[2] of hell[3] cried I, and thou heardest my voice.

3 For thou [h]hadst cast me into the deep, in the midst[4] of the seas; and [i]the floods compassed me about: all thy billows and thy waves passed over me.

4 Then I said, [j]I am cast out of thy sight; yet I will [k]look again toward thy holy temple.

5 The [l]waters compassed me about, even to the soul: the depth closed me round about, the weeds were wrapped about my head.

6 I went down to the bottoms[5] of the mountains; the earth with her bars was about me for ever:[6] yet[n] hast thou brought up my life from corruption,[7] O LORD my God.

7 When my soul [o]fainted within me [p]I remembered the LORD: and [q]my prayer[8] came in unto thee, into thine [r]holy temple.

8 They that [s]observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy.

9 But [t]I will sacrifice unto thee with the voice of thanksgiving; I will pay that that I have vowed. [u]Salvation is of the LORD.

Each of the longer sides was 150 furlongs, each of the shorter 90. The whole circuit being 480 furlongs,' or about 60 miles. The site is now marked by great mounds of rubbish, four of the largest, Nimroud, Kouyunjik, Khorsabad, and Karamles, being disposed in the form of a parallelogram. 'From the northern extremity of Kouyunjik to Nimrud,' says Layard, 'is about 18 miles, the distance from Nimrud to Karamles about 12, the opposite sides the same.... The recent trigonometrical survey of the country by Captain Jones proves that the great ruins of Kouyunjik, Nimrud, Karamles, and Khorsabad form very nearly a perfect parallelogram.'—C.

CHAPTER III.

1 Jonah, being sent again, preached the overthrow of Nineveh. 5 Upon their repentance, 10 God repenteth him of the evil.

AND the word[1] of the LORD came unto Jonah the [a]second time, saying,

2 Arise, go unto [b]Nineveh, that great city, and [c]preach[2] unto it the preaching that I bid thee.

3 So [d]Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of the LORD. Now Nineveh was an exceeding [3]great city[3] of three days' journey.[4]

4 And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey; and he cried, and said, [e]Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.[5]

5 ¶ So the people of Nineveh [h]believed God, and [i]proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them.

6 For word came unto [j]the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and he laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and [k]sat in ashes.

7 And [l]he caused it to be proclaimed and published[6] through Nineveh, by the decree of the king and his nobles,[7] saying, Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste any thing; let them not feed, nor drink water.

8 But let man and beast be covered with [m]sackcloth, and [n]cry mightily unto God: yea, [o]let them turn every one from his evil way, and from the violence that is in their hands.

9 Who[q] can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not?

10 ¶ And[r] God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God [s]repented of the evil that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not.

extirpated by the fishers, as they have been in other seas and the lower latitudes of the Atlantic. But as the whole transaction was a miracle, it is not necessary to have recourse to these facts in defence of the narrative; it is enough to know there is nothing beyond the power and mercy of God, when wisdom requires their exhibition. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's ministers must either send or bear his message as he directs them. But even good men will often take the most foolish methods to evade difficult and dangerous duties. And Providence may seem at first to favour their projects; but rebellion against God will at last awaken terrible storms in consciences and societies; and saints may become a plague to heathens themselves, and need their rebukes for their wickedness and deep unconcern. In troubles it highly becomes us to inquire into the sinful cause. In sinning, we seldom think how mischievous the consequences may be: and in vain we indulge the most secret wickedness, when God can so easily discover it. Yea, shameful is it when ministers and saints are forced to confess their secret rebellions to his open enemies. But when men are truly humbled for sin, they will readily submit to either shame or suffering for it. And if sin has raised a storm, we never must hope for peace till it be removed by remission and repentance. Those who acknowledge their guilt with openness and grief are entitled to our deepest compassion. But even natural conscience, if awakened, will startle at the very appearance of murder. There is no striving against the counsels of God: his will must be done: and if, with prayer, we follow his direction, we may trust him with the issue. While alarming providences produce short appearances of religion in sinners, God often strangely marks his dominion over and direction of his creatures, and affords marvellous protection to his offending saints.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 5. The weeds. The bottom of the sea is repiete with various plants, which being disengaged, and floating on the surface, might readily make way into the mouth, but not into the stomach, of the whale; for it does not live upon vegetable but upon animal food. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Many are forced to pray when and where they never expected. But no place can shut out a saint from communion with his God: nor need he doubt his nearness and willingness to help in a time of need. But how fearful is it to fall into the hands of the living God, even as a provoked Father! Into what hells, what depths, what pits of corruption, desertion, temptation, and affliction may a saint be plunged! and be reduced, how near the brink of despair! But troubles should lead us directly to our God, and make us by faith call to mind his new-covenant characters and promises. To expect happiness in sinful courses, or idolized creatures, is to forsake our own mercy. And if we run from our proper work, we run from our substantial comforts. It is unreasonable, on this side hell, to indulge despair. For great is the power of God over all creatures; and infinite and unbounded his mercy towards penitent and praying offenders. But noted deliverances ought always to issue in high praises and thanksgivings, and in redoubled applications to our duty.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 3. Three days' journey in circumference—being upwards of sixty miles: twenty miles being an average day's march for an army or journey for a traveller. C.

Ver. 4. He cried—that is, occasionally as he advanced through the whole length of the city—probably the principal street. C.

Ver. 5. The people of Nineveh believed God. Therefore they believed him to be such as he had proclaimed himself to Moses; and as Jonah knew him to be, ch. 4. 2, and should have declared him; that is, 'The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, and transgression, and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty,' Ex. 34. 6-9. And from this it unquestionably follows, that the predicted overthrow was subject to all the limitations of this 'great name,' of which God can never come short in any of his dealings with men. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God often tries the sincerity of men's repentance by assigning to them that very work which they had formerly evaded: and marks his favours to

CANDY SELLER, BEYROUT—THE SEAPORT TOWN OF DAMASCUS, AS TYRE WAS IN THE DAYS OF SOLOMON. [Jonah. iv:11.]—"And should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than six score thousand persons that can not discern between their right hand and their left hand; and also much cattle." Here we have the truth plainly taught that God was interested in, and planned for the welfare of cities outside of the domain of the promised land. From the fact that He specially raised up the Jewish race to teach the great truths of His nature and kingdom, many have thought He left cities among the heathen nations to themselves. But we learn from the Scriptures that God's oversight encompassed all peoples and cities. The above picture, "A Candy Seller" in Beyrout, was taken in a city built up outside the limits of Palestine. This city, however, is destined to be a Christian city, for already, through the influence of missionary work, many of its inhabitants are Christians.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Jonah, repining at God's mercy, 4 is reproved by the type of a gourd.

BUT it[1] displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry.

2 And [a]he prayed unto the LORD, and said, I pray thee, O LORD, was not this my saying, when I was yet in my country? Therefore I fled[b] before unto Tarshish: for I knew that thou art a [c]gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil;

3 Therefore, now, O LORD, [d]take, I beseech thee, my life from me; for [e]it is better for me to die than to live.[2]

4 ¶ Then said the LORD, Doest thou well to be angry?[3]

5 So Jonah [f]went out[4] of the city, and sat on the east side of the city, and there made him a booth,[5] and sat under it in the shadow, till he might see what would become of the city.

6 And the LORD God [h]prepared[6] a gourd,[7] and made it to come up over Jonah, that it might be a shadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief.[8] So Jonah was exceeding [9]glad of the gourd.

7 But[i] God prepared a worm when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered.

8 And it came to pass, when the sun did arise, that God prepared a vehement[1] east wind; and [j]the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and [k]wished in himself to die, and said, It is better for me to die than to live.

9 And God said to Jonah, Doest thou well to be angry[2] for the gourd? And he said, [3]I do well to be angry,[4] even unto death.

10 Then said the LORD, Thou hast had pity on[5] the gourd, for the which thou hast not laboured, neither madest it grow; which came up in a night[6] and perished in a night:[7] true penitents in honouring them with important trusts. And it is a mercy even to be scourged into cheerful obedience. What alarming messages of unexpected wrath must God's ministers sometimes bear! And his Word must not be bent either to the humours of preachers or hearers.—It bears a promising appearance when kings obtain proper notice of God's warnings, and seriously attend to them; when they and their subjects concur in repentance and reformation; and when believing fears of judgment, and hopes of mercy, jointly excite to it. While sinners are stirred up to prayer, there is hope in their end. God favourably regards even external reformation, that he may encourage to that which is truly evangelical.

11 And [l]should not I spare [m]Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons that [o]cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand; and also [p]much cattle?

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. It displeased Jonah. How strange that mercy should displease any one, especially a prophet of the Lord! But Jonah, compelled to his duty, takes up the letter, without duly regarding the spirit, of his message; and, being more deeply concerned for his own character as a true prophet, than for the character of Him that sent him as a merciful God, he is sore displeased when his character seems sacrificed, though, in proportion as he apparently suffers, God is really glorified. C.

Ver. 7. A worm . . . it smote the gourd. Not a single worm smiting the root, as is generally supposed; but 'a worm' taken collectively for some species of caterpillar, a creature more voracious than the locust, which would strip the tree of all its leaves in the course of a single night. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is very dangerous to be under the power of a proud peevish spirit. Men often pretend regard for God's honour when they mind only their own; and fear disparagement without any ground. Alas! awful is the consideration that pride and passion should so affect even saints, that they should wish for death, either to themselves or others, when they are very unripe for it; and rage at that very mercy of God which prevents their damnation. Yea, even create inconveniences to themselves, that they may get somewhat to complain of! How apt are men to be lifted up or cast down by a mere trifle. But if they will vex themselves with imaginary miseries, it is but just that they be made to feel real ones. Ungoverned passions too often bear down reason and conscience, and make men vindicate the most glaring absurdity and guilt, and outrageously fly out against both their God and their life. But infinite is the tenderness of God in taking such pains to convince and reclaim the froward children and servants. If we have pity on an earthly comfort, how absurd to quarrel with his pity to babes, to creaturers endowed with immortal souls, and to all the works of his hands. But let me not bid adieu to this prophet without beholding in him my once suffering and now glorified Redeemer. He, for our rebellion imputed to him, was pursued by the storm, was cast into the raging ocean of his Father's wrath, to procure for us an eternal calm of forgiveness and favour. After lying a part of three days in the grave, he was miraculously raised from the dead, and ascended to glory. And marvellously effectual was the publication of the gospel to multitudes of sinners, chiefly of the Gentiles, for their conviction, conversion, and eternal salvation.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF JONAH.

In whatever point of view he is contemplated, Jonah stands alone among the prophets of God. His first characteristic is resistance to the divine commission. In this, no doubt, he appears assimilated both to Moses and Jeremiah, Ex. 3. 11; Jer. 1. 6; 20. 9; but still there is this remarkable difference,—they only remonstrated against their commission on the ground of their unfitness. Jonah never pleads unfitness, yet timidly, sensitively, alas! it may be, selfishly, shrinks from the unwelcome duty. His second characteristic is irritability; and that, not a momentary ebullition succeeded by as speedy repentance, but a spirit that sits and broods over its malady, and vindicates, even before God, the indulgence of its bitter reflections. The third characteristic stands in the historic events by which his life has been distinguished from other men. His miraculous preservation; his prayer composed at the bottom of the sea; his return from the regions of death; and, probably, his wonderful reappearance to the very mariners that threw him overboard; the faithful boldness of his preaching; its unparalleled success with a rich, luxurious, and abandoned people;—these form peculiarities in the personal history of the prophet perfectly unparalleled among any of his brethren. But with these historical peculiarities we have little concern, farther than to admire them as examples of the wonderful power of God. Our business is rather with the two moral traits by which the prophet is distinguished, which, however strange, nay almost incredible, as they may at first sight appear, will on examination be found much more common than Christians generally imagine.

(1) As to the first—disobedience to the divine commission—is it not every day realized when conscience tells us not to suffer sin upon our neighbour; and yet fear of giving offence, the desire of pleasing, the love of ease, or some selfish interest, prevents us from delivering the unwelcome message. No doubt we may satisfy ourselves with pleading that we have no direct commission as Jonah had; but he that knows his Master's will, and sees a sinner perishing without an attempt for his salvation, is just as culpable as Jonah was, commits exactly the same fault, and with this remarkable aggravation, that he has more light than Jonah had, and is proportionably liable to greater condemnation.

(2) As to the second characteristic—irritability—it may be partly dependent upon bodily structure; partly upon education, example, and previous habits; and partly upon the state of the health; and it may not be denied, that where these concur, though they cannot justify, they may yet go far to palliate many personal faults of temper. But for Jonah what can be pleaded either in excuse or extenuation? Nothing; at least nothing that is recorded. Nor is it needful that he should be defended; nay, it is just that he be condemned. But while we cast the stone at the prophet, let us carefully examine whether we may not stand under like condemnation. Have we never murmured at our lot? Have we never wished to have it changed? Have we never been unreasonably angry with an adversary? Have we never justified that anger to our own conscience or to others? If we have ever been guilty of these, or any of these things, have we not acted in the very spirit of Jonah; and when we condemn him, are we not literally condemning ourselves? C.

MICAH.

This prophet began his predictions a little after Isaiah, and continued prophesying along with him about fifty years. His scope is to convince the Israelites, and especially the Jews, of their wickedness and danger, and so to bring them to repentance, ch. i.–iii. vi. vii. 1–6: and to comfort the people of God with promises of mercy and deliverance, of the incarnation of the Messiah, and the grace of the gospel through him, ch. ii. 12, 13; iv. v. vii. 7–20.

[Micah is an abbreviated form of Micaiah, the name given to him in Je. 26. 18 (Hebrew), and also of Micaiyahu, the full form, which signifies 'who is like Jehovah.' He is called 'the Morasthite,' because he was born at Moresheth-Gath, a village situated in the plain of Philistia, at the foot of the mountains of Judah, and, according to Jerome, a short distance east of Eleutheropolis. In his prophecy he mentions no less than ten towns or villages in the neighbourhood of his home, warning them of the approaching calamities. But while he thus lingers for a time near home, Samaria and Jerusalem form the chief subjects of his prophetic denunciations. P.]

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. Samaria and Jerusalem, the chief cities, denote the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah. 2–4. Hear, ye Israelites and Jews, nay, the nations around, and even the senseless earth, and let God manifest his indignation against you from heaven, if ye despise this warning. Behold, JEHOVAH cometh to execute his just judgment upon you, and to destroy your proud rulers and strong cities, and irresistibly to spread destruction and misery among all ranks in every place. 5–17. Your idolatry and other wickedness, which prevail in the two capitals, and thence spread through the whole kingdoms, are the cause: and therefore shall the Assyrians render Samaria a ruinous heap, and shall seize upon the idols thereof, and their furniture, as a booty bestowed by their gods to reward the toils of the siege. 12–15. The inhabitants of the distressed cities earnestly longed for some news of deliverance; but the Assyrians marched up to Jerusalem itself. —Lachish, which first admitted the idolatries of the ten tribes, shall be peculiarly miserable.—The hired troops of the Philistines shall betray their trust.—The Assyrians shall plunder Mareshah, and pass on to Adullam, or even to Jerusalem. 8, 9, 16. Make therefore every possible demonstration of grief for the murder and captivity of thy people and the desolation of thy cities.

Ver. 6. This prophecy has been fulfilled to the letter, and the present state of this royal city and its site forms one of the most remarkable testimonies to the divine authority of Scripture which we possess. Samaria was built on the summit and sides of an oval-shaped hill, surrounded by fertile valleys, which were again encircled by loftier ridges. The village which represents the capital of Israel contains about sixty houses, all built of old materials. The only structure of importance is the church of St. John, now in ruins. The rest of the site has been long under cultivation, the stones of temples and palaces have been thrown into heaps, or built up in the rude walls which support the sides of the terraces. On the very summit of the hill in the midst of corn-fields stand fifteen columns, but the building with which they were connected is gone. On the south-western slope are the massive ruins of a gate, and from it runs a double colonnade along the side of the hill eastward for about half a mile. The shafts now rise up lonely and bare amid standing corn and luxuriant vineyards. The houses are all gone: the very foundations have disappeared: and away in the bottom of the valley below are great heaps of building-stones which have been rolled down the hill-side. How striking, therefore, and how graphic are the words of Micah in this verse, when viewed in the light of modern research! P.

Ver. 10. Weep ye not at all. The calamity may not be averted by any tears—the sin is finished—the cup of doom is full. C.

Ver. 15. An heir. An enemy that shall inherit all thy accumulated wealth and splendid ornaments. C.

Ver. 16. Make thee bald. Shave off the hair, as was customary in deep mourning, Job 1. 20; Is. 3. 24; Je. 7. 29.—As the eagle. A variety of which has the head totally bald. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is very hard to awaken obstinate sinners. But if they will not hear God's voice, they must feel his hand; and nothing can protect them from his almighty wrath. No judgments are inflicted but what our sins have deserved. And the more wicked persons or places be, the larger share in them must they expect. If great cities will be ringleaders in impieties, they must be made distinguished monuments of ruin. Nor need they expect that ever that which hires or tempts men to sin will long prosper. But even the messengers of God ought never to desire the evil day, but to bewail the punishment of sinners, as well as the sufferings of saints. Nor should we ever gratify with tidings such as make merry with the sins or the sorrows of God's people. Alas! what shame, what contempt, what perplexity, what confusion, what

MODERN CORINTHIAN—IN OLD CORINTH, WHERE ST. PAUL PREACHED, AND FOUNDED A CHRISTIAN CHURCH. [Micah, 1:5-6.] "For the transgression of Jacob is all this, and for the sins of the house of Israel. What is the transgression of Jacob? is it not Samaria? and what are the high places of Judah? are they not Jerusalem? Therefore I will make Samaria as an heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard: and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, and I will discover the foundations thereof." This prophecy concerning Samaria contained in the 6th verse has literally come to pass. The stones thereof are poured into the valley, and the foundations thereof are brought to light. Corinth was another city in a heathen land as wicked and as idolatrous as was Samaria, and this city is also in complete ruin. The stones of its temples lie scattered over its site. Above we give a view of a Corinthian soldier taken upon the site of old Corinth.

chariot to the swift beast: she is the [h]beginning of the sin to the daughter of Zion; for the transgressions of Israel were found in thee.

14 Therefore[i] shalt thou give presents to[3] Moresheth-gath: [j]the houses of Achzib[4] shall be a lie to the kings of Israel.

15 Yet [k]will I bring an heir unto thee, O inhabitant of [l]Mareshah: [5]he shall come unto Adullam the glory of Israel.[6]

16 Make[m] thee bald, and poll thee for thy delicate children; enlarge thy baldness as the eagle; [n]for they are gone into captivity from thee.

1 God's judgment against oppression. 4 A lamentation. 7 A reproof of injustice and idolatry. 12 A promise of restoring Jacob.

WOE to them that [a]devise iniquity, and work evil upon their beds! when the morning is light, they practise it, because it is in[b] the power of their hand.

2 And [c]they covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away: so they oppress[1] a man and his house, even a man and his heritage.

3 Therefore thus saith the LORD, [d]Behold, against this [e]family do I devise an evil, [f]from which ye shall not remove your necks; neither shall[h] ye go haughtily: for [i]this time is evil.[2]

4 [¶] In that day shall one take up [j]a parable against you, and lament with a doleful lamentation,[3] and say, We be utterly spoiled: [k]he hath changed the portion of my people: how hath he removed it from me! turning away[4] he hath divided our fields.

5 Therefore [l]thou shalt have none that shall cast[n] a cord by lot in the congregation of the LORD.

anguish and misery, the most delicate sinners are exposed to at last! And by the very sins which themselves introduced, men are effectually driven out of their countries, cities, houses, and property.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 3–5, 10. The Assyrians, and after them the Chaldeans and Romans, shall invade, plunder, and desolate your country, murder, and carry you into captivity, and give your inheritances to others, because of your wickedness. 6. Ye attempt to silence my faithful prophets, who declare to you your transgressions, and warn you of my judgments, that ye may repent; and therefore quickly no more pains shall be taken with you, to render you sensible of your sins. But ye encourage those lying impostors, who, to obtain a good living to themselves, prophesy to you of nothing but peace and plenty, answerably to your luxurious inclinations. 7. Ye who glory in your descent from the patriarch Jacob, but are very unlike to him, can ye stop the revelations of my Spirit? or is the work of threatening a pleasure to me? Do not all my messages work for the real good of penitent and upright persons? 8–10. Lately, you Israelites, under Pekah, fearfully ravaged Judea, without any provocation, plundering the very poor, abusing the very women and children, and, by enslaving and selling them to the heathens around, ye have for ever deprived them of my worship, privileges, and country; therefore shall ye, in a little time, be murdered in, or carried from, your own country, which ye have so much defiled by your wickedness. 12, 13. These verses, as connected with the preceding, seem to import that God would gather the Israelites and Jews[s] into their cities for the slaughter; and that the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Romans would break into them, and carry them and their kings into a dismal captivity. But taking them as a promise, they mean that God would not only bring back the Jews and Israelites to Canaan, but would render his scattered people one flock under Jesus Christ, who, in consequence of his resurrection and ascension, would, in the apostolic and millennial periods, conquer both Jews and Gentiles, and bring them at last to eternal glory.

Ver. 5. Cast a cord by lot. When a man died in Israel, leaving landed property, and four sons, it was divided by 'the cord,' or measuring line, into five lots; of which two, or a double portion, went to the eldest, equal shares to the other three. The prophet declares that dying fathers shall now have no successors. C.

Ver 13. The breaker. By some translated 'the increaser,' and referred to John the Baptist, or even to Christ himself. But the word translated 'breaker' is scarcely ever taken in a good sense, see Ex. 19. 22–24; Jul. 21. 15; Ps. 17. 4; Je. 7. 11; and, taken in conjunction with what follows, can scarcely be understood of any but an enemy, such as the king of Assyria, whom 'the LORD on the head' sent against an hypocritical nation, Is. 10, 5, 6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In vain do men think that they may do whatever they can, since no power is given for destruction, but for edification. And if covetousness reign in men's hearts, compassion will be banished from it. The more design and deliberation men discover in their sinning, the more will God manifest his wisdom and power in the certainty, severity, notoriety, and answerableness of their punishment. And no injuries does God more fearfully resent than those which are done to the harmless, the fatherless, and widows, who have least help in man. They who have used others fraudulently and violently shall be so used themselves. And nothing can be more dreadful than to be cut off from the church of God and its exalted privileges. They who were most haughty and secure in their prosperity, are generally the most dejected and desperate in their adversity. They who hate holiness hate reproof, and reckon faithful ministers a nuisance and a burden; and being vicious and debauched, they wish to have ministers, and even a god, like themselves. But upright men delight in God's messages, whether promises or threatenings. Blessed be God that Jesus is our chief Shepherd; and, notwithstanding all the rage of hell and earth, he will gather the outcasts of Israel, render his gospel church extensive as the earth, and her members numerous as the sand by the seashore; and without losing one, bring them from sin, from death, and the grave, to the mansions above!

CHAPTER III. Ver. 2, 3. They cruelly oppressed their subjects, and, by exactions and rapine, took all from them that they could, barbarously making their very lives a burden to them. 5–7. Because they, by their flatteries, seduce my people into wickedness, for the sake of their own bellies, and hate and do all the mischief they can to my prophets, and all such as give them nothing, therefore such calamities shall come as will effectually refute their flatteries, and shamefully hinder them from foreseeing anything good, either for themselves or others. 8. Called and inspired by the Spirit of God, I, regardless of all your opposition, faithfully and boldly charge you with your sins, and pluck[d] off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones:

3 Who also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them; and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces as for the pot, and as flesh within the caldron.

4 Then[e] shall they [g]cry unto the LORD, but he will not hear them; [h]he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings.

5 ¶ Thus saith the LORD concerning [i]the prophets that make my people err, that [j]bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace; and he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him:

6 Therefore [k]night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision;[1] and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine;[2] and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them.

7 Then [l]shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they shall all cover their lips;[3] for there is [m]no answer of God.

8 ¶ But truly [o]I am full of power by the Spirit of the LORD, and of judgment, and of might, [p]to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin.

9 Hear[q] this, I pray you, ye heads of the house of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel, that abhor judgment, and pervert all equity.

10 They build up Zion with [r]blood,[4] and Jerusalem with iniquity.[5]

11 The[s] heads thereof judge for reward, and the[t] priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof [u]divine for money; yet [v]will they lean upon the LORD, and say,[6] Is not the LORD among us? none evil can come upon us.

12 Therefore [x]shall [7]Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest.

[7] Having enumerated the sins of the people, the prophet here in graphic language predicts the doom that would ensue. There is a striking analogy between one part of the sin and the punishment. The rulers took delight in adulterating the capital with the fruits of their crimes (ver. 10); and upon that capital is judgment specially pronounced. It is divided into three parts, and against each division a distinct curse is uttered. Zion, the site of the royal palace and citadel, 'shall be ploughed as a field.' The judgment, as I believe, runs away far onward into the distant future. It is fulfilled now. I have seen the plough turning over the furrows upon the site of Zion, Jerusalem, where the temple stood, as distinguished from the palace, 'shall be some heaps' of ruin. The greater part is so now. Heaps of rubbish cover the ancient foundations in some places to the depth of 100 feet. 'The mountain of the house,'—Moriah, on which the house of the Lord stood, shall be 'as the high places of the forest.' For a long period after the destruction of the city by the Romans, the site of the temple was worse: even now a portion of Moriah is desolate.—P.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The establishment of Christ's kingdom: 3 the peace of it. 6 The restoration, 11 and victory of the church.

BUT in[a] the last days it shall come to pass, that the [b]mountain of the house of the LORD shall be established in the [c]top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall [d]flow unto it.

2 And [e]many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and [f]he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for [g]the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.[1]

3 ¶ And[i] he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks:[2] nation[j] shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

4 But [k]they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the LORD of hosts hath spoken it.

5 For [l]all[3] people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we [m]will walk in the name of the LORD our God for ever and ever.

6 ¶ In that day, saith the LORD, [o]will I assemble her that halteth, and I will [p]gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted;

7 And I will make her that [q]halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation; and the LORD [r]shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth, even for ever.

warn you of approaching judgments. 10–12. Since ye repair the temple and palace, and the houses or walls of Jerusalem, with the money which ye have procured by taking away the lives of the innocent, and then seizing on their estates, and that obtained by bribery; and since, notwithstanding the basest dishonesty in your respective stations, ye expect prosperity, because of the Lord's temple among you, and other external privileges; therefore shall your temple and holy city, for your wickedness, be, by the Chaldeans, and especially the Romans, turned into heaps of rubbish and an absolute desert.

Ver. 1. Is it not for you to know judgment? Has not God given you the means of a superior education that you might learn and know his judgments, and raised you to high rank that you might rule in justice and mercy? C.

Ver. 2. Pluck off their skin. This may be a strong figure for cruelty and oppression, but is much more probably a literal statement—being a species of torture not confined to savages, but found, alas! in the history of nations in which civilization and Christianity had both found a name. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dreadful is the case of nations and churches when they who ought to be chief promoters of religion and virtue become ringleaders in impiety. And they who oppress or seduce others infallibly prepare for themselves misery, contempt, and perplexity. Ministers have great need of a clear call and remarkable qualifications to render them duly faithful and bold, in opposition to universally rampant corruptions. Nor must they respect even the greatest, but in God's name rebuke with all authority. No pretences of piety can consecrate wicked conduct; but often that which is good is rendered profane by the carnality of its principle, manner, and end. And, alas! often the sins of rulers hasten ruin upon both churches and nations!

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1–5. In the apostolic and future periods the gospel church, represented by Zion and the temple, shall, in all the kingdoms of the world, be most firmly and visibly established. Then shall multitudes of Gentiles everywhere earnestly excite one another to attend the ordinances and embrace the doctrines of the gospel, issuing forth from Jerusalem in the ministration of the apostles and other Jewish preachers; and, by his gracious influences and government, Jesus Christ shall introduce spiritual peace and holy conversation, and even civil concord, virtuous industry, and safety among the nations, where murderous wars, idleness, and danger had long prevailed.—And though others should follow their idolatrous courses, in which they have been educated, we will constantly persevere in the faith, profession, worship, and obedience of the true God, in his strength, and according to the rule of his word. 6, 7. And not only shall the weak, dispirited, and scattered Jews be preserved, brought back to, and happily re-established in their own land, as the people of God, but the most weak and wretched sinners shall be everywhere gathered to Christ, and the very weakest of saints encouraged by him. 8. And both in the apostolic and future periods multitudes of Jews shall be among the first noted converts to the gospel church. 9, 10. There is therefore no ground of desperate sorrow amidst your distresses by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, or Romans; for after ye have been reduced to the most miserable captivity, bondage, and dispersion, ye shall be marvellously delivered; and the deliverances of the gospel church from her heathen and antichristian persecutors shall take place when her distress is at the greatest, and her case seemingly desperate. 11–13. And however the Gentiles may insult you, O Jewish church and nation, in your distress by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, and Romans, and rejoice in hopes of your utter destruction, God shall, in prosecution of his good will, permit them in sin to be destroyed, even by your means, and their spoils shall be consecrated to pious uses, and many of themselves be turned to the Lord. And however the heathens, antichristians, and Mahometans, insult the gospel church, she shall at last be exalted on their ruins, and true Christians be enabled to destroy and tread under foot all opposition.

Ver. 1. In the last days. This prophecy has been considered by some as a quotation from Is. 2. 2, with which it fully corresponds in meaning, though not exactly in words. There is no doubt that one prophet studied the predictions of others, Da. 9. 2; still the difference between Isaiah and Micah is so considerable that the one cannot well be viewed as taken from the other. It is safer therefore to trace the similarity to the one Spirit in both, and the variation to some difference in the objects which the wisdom of God had in view by each prediction. C.

INTERIOR PUBLIC GARDENS, NAPLES—WHERE NERO MURDERED HIS OWN MOTHER, AGRIPPINA. [Micah, iv:1-2.]—"But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Twenty-six hundred and six years after the utterance of this prophecy we find its words fulfilled with reference to the most enlightened portions of the earth. Naples, so long a heathen and wicked city, is now a city of churches, and under the influence of Christian civilization.

come, even the [t]first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem.[5]

9 Now [u]why dost thou cry out aloud? is there no[v] king in thee? is thy counsellor perished? for pangs have taken thee as a woman in travail.

10 Be[x] in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail: for now[y] shalt thou go forth out of the city, and thou shalt dwell in the field, and thou shalt go even to Babylon; [z]there shalt thou be delivered; there the LORD shall redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies.

11 ¶ [a]Now[6] also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion.

12 But [b]they know not the thoughts of the LORD, neither understand they his counsel: for he shall [c]gather them as the sheaves into the floor.

13 Arise,[d] and thrash, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy [e]hoofs brass; and thou shalt beat in [f]pieces many people; and [h]I will consecrate their gain unto the LORD, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth.

CHAPTER V.

1 The birth of Christ foretold. 4 His kingdom. 8 His complete conquest over his enemies.

NOW gather[a] thyself in troops, O [b]daughter of troops; [c]he hath laid siege against us; they [d]shall smite the judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek.[1]

2 But thou, [e]Beth-lehem Ephratah,[2] though thou be little among the [f]thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be [h]ruler in Israel; whose [i]goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting.[3]

3 Therefore[4] will he [j]give them up, until the time that she which travaileth [k]hath brought forth; then the [l]remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel.

A.M. cir. 3284. B.C. cir. 720.

4 ¶ And [m]he shall stand and feed[5] in the strength of the LORD, [n]in the majesty of the name of the LORD his God; and they shall [o]abide: for now [q]shall he be great unto the ends of the earth.

5 And this man shall be [r]the peace, [s]when the Assyrian shall come into our land; and when he shall tread in our palaces, then shall we raise against him [t]seven shepherds, and eight principal men.[6]

6 And [u]they shall waste[7] the land of Assyria with the sword, and the land of Nimrod in the entrances thereof:[8] thus shall he deliver us from the Assyrian, when he [v]cometh into our land, and when he treadeth within our borders.

7 And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people, [w]as a dew from the LORD, as the showers upon the grass, that [x]tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men.

8 ¶ And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people, [y]as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep:[9] who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

9 Thine[a] hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off.

10 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD, that [b]I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and I will destroy thy chariots:

11 And I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy strong holds:

12 And I will cut off [c]witchcrafts out of thine hand; and thou shalt have no more soothsayers;

13 Thy[d] graven images also will I cut off, and thy standing images[1] out of the midst of thee; and thou shalt no more worship the work of thine hands:

14 And I will pluck up thy groves out of the midst of thee; so will I destroy thy [2]cities.

† The real and the spiritual Zion are singularly blended in this prophecy. The re-establishment of the former is to be in some way connected with the prosperity of the latter. The prophet seems to foretell, in the distant future the restoration of the Jews in their position as an independent nation, and the setting up of their government again in their ancient city. In no other way can this passage be fully or fairly explained.—P.

REFLECTIONS.—Graciously has God set his promises and threatenings the one over against the other. And glorious is our New Testament church, and regularly and firmly founded. What profitable instruction, light and conviction, peace and love, faithfulness, vigour, harmony, holiness, and comfort abound in her! God graciously issues forth comforting promises before distress takes place, that his consolations may be ready for his afflicted people. And the extremity of trouble always issues in marvellous deliverances to the church and her members. Yea, in all her harassments and oppressions her enemies and her God have very different ends. They aim at ruining her and exalting themselves, and God aims at purifying, enlarging, and enriching her, and ruining them.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1. a. Notwithstanding the Chaldeans or others who assemble themselves to destroy the cities and afflict the rulers of Judah, the Messiah, who was from eternity begotten by the Father, and constituted the living head of all believers, shall, in due time, be born in the small city of Bethlehem-Judah, to be the great Ruler and Governor of the church. 3, 4. Nevertheless, the calamities of the Jewish nation shall be often repeated till he be born of the virgin, and multitudes of Gentile converts flow together unto him. Then, to his own and his Father's honour, he shall, in the most powerful manner, gather and govern, establish and perfect, his gospel church. His kingdom shall be extended, and his honour advanced over the world. And not only shall he protect Jerusalem from the Assyrian invaders, but, in every age, shall defend his church from heathen, antichristian, or Mahometan enemies; and, by proper instruments in church or state, shall punish them with a fearful destruction. 7–9. And as at the return from Babylon and their present dispersion the Jews shall be exceedingly blessed and emboldened by God, and made a blessing to multitudes around them, and a terror to their opposers, so shall their preachers, in the apostolic and future periods, be remarkably useful in converting the Gentiles to Christ, but a terrible curse and mean of destruction to are opposition. 10, 11. I will purge them from all their former corruptions, particularly their trusting in carnal confidences, horses, chariots, and fortifications, and from all divinations and idolatries; and terrible shall be the judgment which will be executed upon the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, Romans, Antichristians, and Mahometans, who shall have persecuted and murdered them.

Ver. 1. Now gather, &c. 'Now assemble thyself, O daughter, in troops.' Newcome.—He hath laid siege. The LORD has, for our sins, directed this judgment. See ver. 3. C.

Ver. 2. Among the thousands. 'Thousands' constituted one of the great civil and military divisions of Israel, 1 Ch. 12. 20, as England was divided into hundreds with correspondent leaders.—Goings forth have been of old. Manifestations in time: himself, in his divine nature, being from everlasting, from 'the days of eternity.' C.

Ver. 4. They shall abide. That is, the children of Israel, ver. 3. C.

Ver. 5. The Assyrian. A general name for any northern invader, of whom the invasion of Sennacherib was but a mere type. Concerning this formidable enemy, the Jews are constantly warned by the prophets. See Ps. 110. 5, 6; Is. 26. 20, 21; 34. 1; 66. 16; Je. 30. 7–10; Eze. xxxviii xxxix.; Joel 3. 9–14; Ob. 14; Zep. 3. 8; Hag. 2. 22; Zec. 12. 1; 13. 8; Re. 19. 19; 20. 9.—Seven shepherds. 'Seven' represents perfect number in succession, the idea being derived from the seven days in the week.—Eight principal men. 'Eight' has many scriptural references, among which see Ge. 17. 12; 1 Sa. 17. 12; 1 Ki. 7. 10; 2 Ch. 29. 17; Eze. 40. 31; Jn. 20. 26. It seems, however, to be derived from the 'eight persons' preserved in the ark, 1 Pe. 3. 20, and saved by water, the emblem of the salvation of the Spirit. C.

Ver. 7. This prophecy has never yet been realized; but God is

ENTRANCE TO THE CHURCH OF THE NATIVITY—BUILT UPON THE SITE OF THE INN WHERE CHRIST WAS BORN. [Micah, v:2.]—"But thou, Bethlehem, Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." The central point of attraction to the thousands of pilgrims who go to Bethlehem is the Church of the Nativity, which contains the birthplace of our Savior. A silver star, surrounded by lamps which burn day and night, shows the entrance to the grotto where the Savior was born. The manger is exhibited, and stations, all of which are hallowed by some legend, as well as many of the events from David down to Christ, and of the shepherds, the wise men, of Elizabeth, John, Joseph and Mary, and of the good men of the first centuries of the Christian era to the time of Jerome, are all localized here.

15 And [a]I will execute vengeance in anger and fury upon the heathen, such as they have not heard.

CHAPTER VI.

1 God's controversy with his people for ingratitude. 6 What service is acceptable to him. 10 He reproveth them for their injustice, 16 and idolatry.

HEAR ye [a]now what the LORD saith; Arise, contend[b] thou before[1] the mountains, and let the hills hear thy voice.

2 Hear ye, O mountains,[2] the LORD's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth: for[c] the LORD hath a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel.

3 O[d] my people, what have I done unto thee? and wherein have I wearied thee? testify against me.

4 For [e]I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of servants; and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam.

5 O my people, remember now [f]what Balak king of Moab consulted, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him from Shittim unto Gilgal;[3] that ye may know the [h]righteousness of the LORD.

6 ¶ Wherewith[i] shall I come[4] before the LORD, and bow myself before the high God? shall I come before him [k]with burnt-offerings, with calves of a year old?[5]

7 Will[l] the LORD be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? shall[l] I give my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my body[6] for the sin of my soul?

8 He hath [n]showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly[7] with thy God?

9 The LORD's [o]voice crieth unto the city, and the man of wisdom [p]shall see thy name:[8] hear ye [q]the rod, and who hath appointed it.

10 ¶ Are[9] there yet [r]the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked, and the scant measure[1] that is abominable?

11 Shall[2] I count them pure with [s]the wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights?

12 For[t] the rich men thereof are full of violence, and the inhabitants thereof have spoken lies, and their tongue is deceitful in their mouth.

13 Therefore also [u]will I make thee sick in smiting thee, in making thee [v]desolate because of thy sins.

14 Thou[w] shalt eat, but not be satisfied; and thy casting down[3] shall be in the midst of thee; and [x]thou shalt take hold, but shalt not deliver; and that which thou deliverest will I give up to the sword.

15 Thou shalt [y]sow, but thou shalt not reap: thou shalt tread the olives, but thou shalt not anoint thee with oil; and sweet wine, but shalt not drink wine.

16 ¶ For [z]the [a]statutes of Omri[5] are kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab, and ye walk in their counsels; that I [b]should make thee a desolation,[6] and the inhabitants thereof an hissing: therefore [c]ye shall bear the reproach of my people.[7]

CHAPTER VII.

1 The church, complaining of her small number, 3 and the general corruption, 5 putteth her confidence not in man, but in God. 8 She triumpheth over her enemies. 14 God comforteth her by promises, 16 by confusion of the enemies, 18 and by his mercies.

WOE is me! for [a]I am as when they have gathered the summer fruits,[1] as the grape-gleanings of the vintage: there is no cluster to eat: my soul desired [b]the first-ripe fruit.

2 The [c]good[2] man is perished out of the earth; and [d]there is none upright[3] among men: they all lie in wait for blood; they hunt every man his brother with a net.[4]

REFLECTIONS.—Behold the miseries of Israel and the disgrace of the family of David gloriously counterbalanced in the person, incarnation, mediation, and glory of Christ! And grievous distresses and troubles making way for the most glorious benefits of redemption! Behold how extensive, glorious, peaceful, safe, and lasting is his spiritual kingdom! They who attempt to ruin it but hasten their own destruction. Greatly useful were the Jews, and still shall be, in converting others to Christ, whom they have long so heartily hated. And with great readiness and boldness men act for God when animated by his Spirit. Yea, thrice happy are the churches when their enemies are overcome and their internal corruptions removed!

CHAPTER VI. REFLECTIONS.—With solemn earnestness ought ministers to speak on God's behalf, and to inculcate the warnings, threatenings, charges, and promises of God. In fearful controversies God pleads with his own people for their sins. And if he graciously bestow good magistrates and teachers, and disappoint the plots of our enemies, vile and provoking is our ingratitude. Deep convictions of guilt, or fondness of an enterprise, may occasion the most anxious inquiries after peace and pardon. And by the most costly expedients would men willingly procure these blessings. But not all the inventions of men can recommend us to God; and faith in Christ, and in God as our God in him, and a true repentance and real holiness, are preferable to every ceremonial service. Infinite then is the kindness of God in teaching us both by his Word and by his rod of afflictions. And great is the necessity of improving both, to promote our turning to God. Sinners, by their wickedness, infallibly bring multiplied calamities upon their own heads. And wicked rulers are awful plagues to nations and churches; for great multitudes will soon cleave to the very worst laws and customs.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1—6. Alas! few upright men are now left in the country with whom I can conscientiously associate; and early religion, and noted progress in holiness, are scarcely to be found. Good and upright men are almost entirely gone out of this world; and almost every one is ready, for self-interest, to murder or oppress the most innocent, or most nearly related. Bent upon doing as much mischief as they can, their very princes and judges even impudently demand bribes, and, without sense of shame, they agree to perpetrate the most shocking mischiefs. The very best of them are mischievous and hurtful; therefore shall God quickly plunge them into just and most inextricable miseries. So terribly treacherous are they become, that no one is safe in trusting even his nearest relations; nay, none are more to be suspected. 7—10. Therefore will I, by faith and patience, wait on the Lord, and pray and look for deliverance and safety from him alone, as my God in Christ; nor shall mine enemies have any reason to rejoice over and insult me, for the all-sufficient JEHOVAH shall support, comfort, and deliver me in all my troubles. I will therefore justify God, and submit to his corrections, as procured by my own iniquity, until he revenge the injuries done to me, and publicly own me as his, and honour me to behold the exertions of his equity, mercy, and faithfulness; and till the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, Romans, Antichristians, and Mahometans, who have oppressed us, be altogether disgraced and ruined. 11—13. Though the country shall be desolated, on account of the sins of the inhabitants, yet, whenever the time fixed in God's mind for relieving the nation, rebuilding Jerusalem, or other cities, and for the re-establishment of the churches, comes, all restraints and hindrances shall be entirely taken out of the way, and the gospel preached over all the world; and not only shall the Jews return from all lands in which they have been dispersed, but Gentiles, from all parts of the ODEON OF HEROD ATTICUS, FROM ACROPOLIS—NEAR THE PLACE WHERE ST. PAUL PREACHED THE NOTABLE SERMON CONCERNING IDOLATRY ON MARS HILL, ATHENS.—[MICAH, vi: 16.]—"For the statues of Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab, and ye walk in their counsels; that I should make thee a desolation, and the inhabitants thereof an hissing: therefore ye shall bear the reproach of my people." Illustrating this Scripture we give a view above of the Odeon of Herod Atticus from the Acropolis in Athens. The prophet in the sixteenth verse attributes the desolation and ruin of Israel to the influence of the house of Ahab. But the prophecy is of universal application, and we find that ruin and desolation has come to all cities that have had nothing purer to conserve them than the religions of idolatry. The Odeon of Herod Atticus is among the ruins at the base of the Acropolis. It was built by a member of an eminent Roman family who inherited immense wealth which he spent in beautifying the city of Athens.

4 The best of them is [a]as a brier; the most upright is sharper than a thorn hedge: [b]the day of thy watchmen and thy visitation cometh; now shall be their perplexity.

5 ¶ Trust[c] ye not in a friend; put ye not confidence in a guide; keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom.

6 For [d]the son dishonoureth the father, the daughter riseth up against her mother, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; a man's enemies are the men of his own house.

7 Therefore[e] I will look[6] unto the LORD; I will wait for the God of my salvation; my God will[f] hear me.

8 ¶ Rejoice[g] not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; [h]when I sit in darkness, the LORD shall be a light unto me.

9 I[i] will bear the indignation of the LORD, because I have sinned against him, [k]until he plead my cause and execute judgment for me: he[l] will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness.

10 Then[7] she[8] that is mine enemy shall see it, and [m]shame shall cover her which said unto me, [n]Where is the LORD thy God? [o]mine eyes shall behold her: now shall she be trodden down[9] as the mire of the streets.

11 In[p] the day that thy walls are to be built, in that day shall the decree[1] be far removed.

12 In that day also [q]he shall come[2] even to thee from Assyria, and from[3] the fortified cities, and from the fortress[4] even to the river, and from sea to sea, and from mountain to mountain.

13 Notwithstanding,[5] the land shall be desolate[6] because of them that dwell therein, [r]for the fruit of their doings.

14 ¶ Feed[7] thy people with thy rod, the flock of thine heritage, which [s]dwell solitarily in the wood, [t]in the midst of Carmel: let them feed in Bashan and Gilead, as in the days of old.

15 ¶ According[u] to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I show unto [v]him marvellous things.

16 The[w] nations shall see and be confounded at all their might: [x]they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf.

17 They shall lick the [y]dust like a serpent, they shall move out of their holes like [z]worms of the earth: [a]they shall be afraid of the LORD our God, and shall fear because of thee.

18 ¶ Who[b] is a God like unto thee, that [c]pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of [d]the remnant of his heritage? he [e]retaineth not his anger for ever, because he [f]delighteth in mercy.

19 He[g] will turn again, he will have compassion upon us; [h]he will subdue our iniquities; and thou wilt [i]cast all their sins into the depths of the sea.

20 Thou [k]wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old.

world, shall be persuaded to Christ. 14. Lord, since thy peculiar people must be thus destroyed and scattered, do thou, as their Shepherd, care for, protect, direct, and provide for them, as a nation separated from the world, and bring them back to their wonted habitations and happiness. 15–17. I the Lord will do as great things for them as I did when I brought their fathers out of the land of Egypt. And the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, Romans, Papists, or Mahometans, shall, in their turns, be astonished at the wonderful deliverance of my people, and be trampled under their feet, and with terror submit themselves to their power. 18–20. Who is a God like unto thee, in perfections, persons, purposes, relations, or works! Who so ready and abundant as thou art in pardoning the most aggravated iniquities of thy people! Thou wilt, in infinitely tender mercy, return to us, and when we repent of our sins and accept Jesus Christ fully and irrevocably pardon all our iniquities; yea, thou will perform all thy ancient promises which were graciously made to Abraham, and confirmed to Jacob and other patriarchs, when we accept as our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Ver. 11. Thy walls. The doctrines of salvation and discipline of holiness are spiritually intended, though the idea of rebuilding the material walls is not to be rejected, Is. 26. 1. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Few are the eminently pious amidst the many notoriously wicked in times of general corruption. And where sin prevails what unnatural monsters of violence, fraud, injustice, and everything horrid, are formed by it. But universal contempt and violation of relative duties is a fearful presage of God's awful judgments, and a sad proof of prevalent corruptions. And under divine rebukes nothing is more proper than to consider our ways, repent of our sins, justify God, and look to him alone. His deliverance of his people will quickly issue in the complete overthrow of opposition. And every impediment of his salvation is easily removed in the day of his power and time of his love. Even after the most desolating judgments, he will have mercy upon the penitent. Quickly and graciously he answers those prayers which are presented to him for their re-establishment and prosperity; and marvellous things he performs for their relief. Thrice happy then and pleasant is it when he gets the glory, and men by faith take the comfort, of his perfections, promises, and works.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF MICAH.

The distinguishing peculiarity of the book of Micah is its discovery of the place where the Saviour should be born; which prediction may be said to lay the foundation of the New Testament. From this book Herod learned the place of Messiah's birth; and, by seeking his life, gave occasion to the flight into Egypt, and the fulfilment of another prophecy. But this prophecy is not less remarkable for the manner in which it delineates our Lord's character and office as Shepherd of his flocks on earth; while it equally reveals his eternal glory with the Father before the world was. That the ancient Jews understood this prophecy to apply to Messiah is certain from the decision of the chief priests and elders, Mat. 2. 6; while the Targum of Jonathan concurs with the Talmud in giving the same view. And if the modern Jews have been led, from their opposition to Christianity, to adopt any other interpretation, it only proves how far prejudice may blind the eyes against the clearest evidence, and induce us the more earnestly to pray, that when Moses and the prophets are read, the Lord would be mercifully pleased to remove the veil from their eyes.

HARBOR AND SHIPPING, CORFU—ILLUSTRATING THE CIVILIZATION WHICH MICAH SAW WAS TO BE BUILT UP THROUGH THE COMING OF CHRIST, WHO WAS TO PERFORM AND FULFILL THE PROMISE MADE TO JACOB AND ABRAHAM. [Micah, vii:19-20.]—"He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us; he will subdue our iniquities: and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea. Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old." Twenty-six hundred and six years after the utterance of this prophecy we are able to see how it has been fulfilled in the providence of God through Jesus Christ, not simply to the Jews, but to the human race. Through Christ the iniquities of the people are being subdued. Christian civilization, with all that it contains of commerce and institutions, is but the outgrowth of the love of God expressed to men through Jesus Christ. This picture above of the harbor and shipping of Corfu is an illustration of this prophecy, for it is a scene of Christian civilization.

N A H U M.

This prophet was a native of Elkosh, a city of Galilee, and appears to have prophesied about A.M. 3284, a little before Sennacherib invaded Judea, in order to comfort the Jews with the hopes of the approaching destruction of the Assyrian army before Jerusalem, and afterwards of their empire, and of Nineveh the capital. [See Introduction, ch. iv. sect. x.]

[Josephus places Nahum in the reign of Jotham; others think him contemporary with Hezekiah; but, from ch. 2. 2, it is generally concluded that he prophesied after the captivity of the ten tribes. His principal subject is the downfall of the Assyrian monarchy, of which the capital was Nineveh. This prophecy was remarkably fulfilled about a century after the date assigned to its utterance, and thirty years previous to the destruction of Jerusalem. Ch. 1. 15 is quoted Ro. 10. 15, and ch. 3. 4 in Re. 18. 2, 3. C.

The book of Nahum is justly regarded by critics as, in purity of language and sublimity of style, one of the most beautiful in the Bible. It is not inferior even to Isaiah. It seems strange that so little should be known of the author. He calls himself the Elkoshite, doubtless because Elkosh was his birthplace. The locality of this town is disputed. There is a village called Elkosh in ancient Assyria, on the eastern side of the Tigris, two days from Mosul, where the tomb of the prophet is shown, and is venerated by Jews and Christians. Some affirm that this is the native place of Nahum. Jerome, however, places Elkosh in Galilee, and mentions it as a well-known place in his day. I feel inclined to adopt his view.

The date of the book is pretty definitely fixed by internal evidence. He refers in ch. 1. to the overthrow of the army of Sennacherib. In ch. 2. 13 reference is made to the messengers sent by Sennacherib to Hezekiah; and in ch. 3. 8 to the conquest of No in Egypt. The date of the prophecy therefore must be fixed in the reign of Hezekiah. The great theme of his prophecy is Nineveh; but he denounces it because it was the great foe and oppressor of the Israelites. He seems to look upon it as a type of the enemies of the church of God in every age; and its overthrow he regarded as symbolic of the ultimate overthrow of God's enemies in the world. P.]

CHAPTER 1.

The majesty of God in goodness to his people, and severity against his enemies.

THE [a]burden[1] of [b]Nineveh. The book of the [c]vision of Nahum the Elkoshite.

2 God is [d]jealous, and the LORD revengeth;[2] the LORD [e]revengeth, and is furious;[3] the LORD will take vengeance on his adversaries, and he [f]reserveth wrath for his enemies.

3 The LORD is [h]slow to anger, and great in power, and will not at all acquit the wicked: the LORD [i]hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet.

4 He[j] rebuketh the sea, and maketh it dry, and drieth up all the rivers: Bashan languisheth, and Carmel, and the flower of Lebanon languisheth.

5 The[k] mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burned at his presence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein.

6 Who[l] can stand before his indignation? and who can abide[4] in the fierceness of his anger? his fury is poured out [m]like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him.

7 The LORD is [o]good, a strong hold[5] in the day of trouble; and he [p]knoweth them that trust in him.

8 But with an [q]overrunning flood he will make an utter end of the [r]place thereof, and [s]darkness shall pursue his enemies.

9 What[t] do ye imagine against the LORD? [u]he will make an utter end: affliction shall not rise up the second time.

10 For [v]while they be folden together as thorns, and while they are drunken as drunkards, [x]they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry.

11 There is [y]one come out of thee, that imagineth evil against the LORD, a wicked counsellor.[6]

12 Thus[z] saith the LORD, [7]Though they be quiet,[8] and likewise many, yet thus shall they be cut down,[9] when he shall pass through. Though [a]I have afflicted thee, I will afflict thee no more.[1]

13 For now will I break his [b]yoke[2] from off thee, and will burst thy bonds in sunder.

14 And [c]the LORD hath given a commandment concerning thee, that [d]no more of thy name be sown:[3] out[e] of the house of thy gods will I cut off the graven image and the molten

CHAPTER 1. Ver. 2, 3. From a zealous regard to what is right and just, God will not always suffer the wicked to escape his terrible judgments. However long he forbear, he will at last display his infinite power and tremendous equity in the punishment of the wicked, by sudden, perplexing, and unavoidable calamities. 4–6. At his pleasure he divides and dries up seas and rivers, blasts fruitful fields and forests into barrenness, shakes and overturns the mountains by earthquakes, and, by droughts or lightnings, burns up the earth and its inhabitants. What persons, cities, or kingdoms, can then stand before the power of his wrath? It is sufficient to destroy the most hardened and obstinate sinners or the best fortified cities. 7, 8. But in infinite kindness he will protect and provide for his people who trust in him; though with overwhelming, confounding, and desolating judgments, he will destroy the wicked, and will render the very place of Nineveh utterly unknown. 9, 10. In vain do you Assyrians plot and combine to defeat his purposes. While ye are assembled in mighty armies, fortified by powerful leagues, and drunk with pride and carnal security, he will at once and for ever irrevocably destroy your empire and city. 11–14. Sennacherib and his generals now plot and threaten destruction to my people, city, and temple; but his victorious army, now fearless of danger and great in numbers, shall be suddenly destroyed, and his family and idols quickly ruined; yea, the whole Assyrian empire shall be reduced, and the people perish on account of their wickedness, and be buried before Jerusalem, or in the rubbish of their own cities. 12, 13, 15. No more shall the Assyrians afflict you, O ye Jews! no more

But with an overrunning flood he will make an utter end of the place thereof, and darkness shall pursue his enemies." Not all wicked cities are punished in the same physical and tangible way as was Pompeii. But while all have not been covered and blotted out with fire as was this wicked city, wickedness, nevertheless, has brought its penalties. In the above picture we have one of the streets of Pompeii shown in which the channels worn by the tires of the vehicles may be seen. The streets are generally narrow, and the houses are small, but are often decorated with exquisite taste and elegance.

CHAPTER II.

The fearful and victorious armies of God against Nineveh.

HE that dasheth in pieces[1] is come up before thy face:[2] keep[a] the munition, watch the way, make thy loins strong, fortify thy power mightily.[3]

2 For[b] the LORD hath turned away the excellency of Jacob,[4] as the excellency of Israel: for [c]the emptiers have emptied them out, and marred their [d]vine branches.[5]

3 The shield of his mighty men[6] is made red,[e] the valiant men are in scarlet:[7] the chariots shall be with flaming torches[8] in the day of his preparation, and the fir-trees[9] shall be terribly shaken.[f]

4 The[g] chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem[2] like torches, they shall run like the lightnings.

5 He[h] shall recount his worthies:[3] they shall stumble in their walk; they shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the defence[4] shall be prepared.

6 The gates of the rivers[5] shall be opened, and the palace shall be dissolved.[6]

7 And Huzzab[7] shall be led away[8] captive; she shall be brought up,[9] and her maids shall lead her as with the voice of doves, [t]abering upon their breasts.

8 But Nineveh is of old[1] like[j] a pool of water; yet they shall flee away. [k]Stand, stand, shall they cry; but none shall look back.[2]

9 Take[l] ye the spoil of silver, take the spoil of gold; for there is none end of the store[3] and glory out of all the pleasant furniture.[4]

10 She[n] is empty, and void, and waste;[5] and the [o]heart melteth, and the knees smite together, and much pain is in all loins, and the faces of them all gather blackness.

11 Where[p] is the dwelling of the lions, and the feeding-place of the young lions, where the lion, even the old lion, walked, and the lion's whelp, and none made them afraid?

12 The [q]lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin.

13 Behold, [r]I am against thee, saith the LORD of hosts, and [s]I will burn her chariots in the smoke, and the sword shall devour thy young lions; and I will cut off [t]thy prey from the earth, and [u]the voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard.

CHAPTER III.

The miserable ruin of Nineveh.

WOE to the [a]bloody city![1] it is all full of lies and robbery; [b]the prey departeth not;

2 The[c] noise of a whip, and the noise of the rattling of the wheels, and of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots.

3 The horseman lifteth up both the bright sword and the glittering spear:[2] and [d]there is a multitude of slain, and a great number of carcasses; and there is none end of their corpses; they stumble upon their corpses:

4 Because of the multitude of the [e]whoredoms of the well-favoured harlot, the [f]mistress of witchcrafts,[3] that selleth nations through her whoredoms, and [h]families through her witchcrafts.

5 Behold, [i]I am against thee, saith the LORD

REFLECTIONS.—It is terrible to have God as our enemy, but infinitely happy to have him as our friend. Great and daring provocations of him, and injuries done to his people, will certainly issue in men's great and irresistible destruction; yea, nothing more plainly presages their ruin than carnal security and self-confidence; and their plots against him but hasten it upon themselves and families. Men's pride always lays them low, and shameful sins bring on shameful punishments; but God's people shall be delivered from all their oppressors at last. And in this, but chiefly in the other world, they shall have blessed opportunities of celebrating the praises and performing the solemn services of JEHOVAH their gracious deliverer. And great is the mercy to a land when gospel ordinances have free course and are glorified.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1, 2. Ye Assyrians, who have destroyed the kingdom of Israel and repeatedly harassed Judah, may now exert your whole power to protect your own country and cities; for the Medes and Chaldeans, those terrible destroyers of nations, have begun to invade and besiege you. 3, 4. Red in their apparel and armour, and ready to shed your blood, they shall enter your cities amidst torches and flames of fire, and shall, with the most terrible rapidity and fury, destroy whatever they meet with. 5, 6. While the choicest troops of Media and Chaldea shall furiously attack your walls, ye shall exert yourselves for their defence; but the high-swollen river shall open for them an entrance into the city, and assist them in its utter destruction. 7–10. Nineveh and her inhabitants shall be utterly disgraced; her fine ladies and warriors, who thought themselves secure, shall, in great agonies of grief, hasten away, or be led captives; and, notwithstanding all that her generals can do to make them stand in their own defence, the numerous armies and inhabitants shall flee with the utmost precipitation. And while the Assyrians are quite dispirited and overwhelmed with grief, the Medes and Chaldeans shall seize on their wealth, and reduce Nineveh to a heap of ruins. 11–13. The nations around shall rejoice to see Nineveh, in which their oppressive and murderous tyrants had long dwelt securely, and stored up their wealth, utterly destroyed. For I the Lord will abandon them, armies to destruction, and give up their ill-gotten wealth into the hand of their enemies; and never more shall their messengers blaspheme my great name, or terrify the nations with their threatenings or oppressive demands.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! what fearful punishment do injuries done to God's people incur! and at what expense and labour do men destroy one another! But terrible are the weakest nations when God animates them, and pitiful and dastardly the most mighty and numerous when he fights against them. Unavailing are honour, wealth, number, or valour, in the day of his wrath. And it is terrible to have our consciences laden with guilt in an evil day, in which everything dear is taken from us. Awful is it for men to damn their souls by fraudulent attempts to aggrandize themselves and families; and dreadful is the case of oppressors, murderers, and blasphemers, when God rises up to punish them, and when death and hell shut their mouths.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. 4. 10. Woe to Nineveh, whose inhabitants have murdered, deceived, and spoiled the nations around; and by their infernal and artful devices have subjected them to their government, and drawn them into their idolatries. 2, 3, 5–7. OLD PUBLIC BATHS, POMPEII—NEAR THE PLACE WHERE VIRGIL REPRESENTS AENEAS AS PLUCKING THE GOLDEN BOUGH, AND THEN LED BY THE PRIESTESS OF APOLLO PASSING DOWN TO THE WORLD OF THE DEAD. [Nahum, ii.13.]—"Behold, I am against thee, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will burn her chariots in the smoke, and the sword shall devour the young lions; and I will cut off thy prey from the earth, and the voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard." This prophecy was uttered with reference to Nineveh, but in a general sense it may be said to be true that the Lord is against all wicked cities and sooner or later will cut them off. We give above a picture of the public baths in Pompeii. These baths are bounded on two sides by doric porticoes. Under the porticoes the bathers waited their turn, somewhat as gentlemen wait their turn in popular barber shops to-day. Amusements were advertised here. An old inscription was found on the wall of this portico after the excavation of the baths, which, when translated, read as follows: "At the dedication of the baths, at the expense of Caucus Allenis Nigidius Maius, there will be a venatio, athletic contests, sprinkling of perfumes and ointments. Prosperity to Maius, chief of the colony!"

11 Thou also shalt be [w]drunken:[8] thou[y] shalt be hid; thou also shalt [z]seek strength because of the enemy.

12 All[a] thy strong holds shall be like fig-trees with the first-ripe figs; if they be shaken, they shall even fall into the mouth of the eater.

13 Behold, thy people in the midst of thee are [b]women: [c]the gates[9] of thy land shall be set wide open unto thine enemies: [d]the fire shall devour thy bars.

14 Draw[e] thee waters for the siege, fortify thy strong holds: go into clay, and tread the mortar, make strong the brick-kiln.

15 There[g] shall the fire devour thee; the sword shall cut thee off, it shall eat thee up like the [h]canker-worm: [i]make thyself many as the canker-worm, make thyself many as the locusts.

16 Thou hast multiplied thy merchants[1] above the stars of heaven: [j]the canker-worm [2]spoileth, and fleeth away.

17 Thy crowned[3] are as the locusts, and thy captains as the great grasshoppers, which camp in the hedges in the cold day, but when the sun ariseth they flee away, and their place is not known where they are.

18 Thy [k]shepherds [l]slumber,[4] O [m]king of Assyria; thy nobles[5] shall [o]dwell in the dust; thy people is [p]scattered upon the mountains, and no man gathereth them.

19 There is [q]no healing[6] of thy bruise; thy wound is grievous; all that hear the bruit of thee shall [r]clap the hands over thee: for upon whom hath not [s]thy wickedness passed continually?

chariots, shall rout your armies, enter your cities, and fill your streets with multitudes of corpses: and I will render you utterly miserable and disgraced in the view of all around, without any to pity your case. 8–10. Learn from the fate of No in Egypt what you may certainly expect: though famed for the number of its inhabitants, naturally impregnable, and supported by the huge armies of almost all the north-east parts of Africa, nevertheless you Assyrians sacked it, murdering the infants, carrying captive the rest, and dividing the great men for slaves. 11–15. Ye shall be stupified with overwhelming miseries, rendered quite incapable of helping yourselves, buried in contempt and ruin, and obliged to beg assistance against the Medes and Chaldeans. Your strongholds shall, almost at the first onset, fall into the hands of the enemy; your armies and people shall be dispirited, and desert their stations, leaving all the passages quite open; and all the toilsome reparations of your walls shall be to no purpose; even in your strongholds ye shall be burned by the fire or slain by the sword. 15–19. The prodigious numbers of your troops and of hired soldiers shall but devour your wealth and then shift for themselves. Your tributary kings and mercenary commanders will promise you help, but quickly desert you whenever danger appears. Your generals and noble warriors shall be infatuated, dispirited, or murdered, and your armies and people scattered among the nations, without any one to protect or relieve them; nor shall your capital or empire be ever restored; and all the nations whom you have oppressed shall rejoice to hear of your destruction.

REFLECTIONS.—Enormous wickedness ordinarily attends great confluences of men. And curses, shame, contempt, and destruction are the certain and final issue. Little reason then have men to be proud of what can be so quickly taken from them, or rendered their plague. But if our companions in guilt or grandeur have been ruined, it is time for us to take warning and repent. And if God be against us, who can be for us? Useless are all means of preservation in the day of his wrath. Unstable are the most exalted stations on earth. And they who have rendered others miserable will certainly be themselves reduced to misery at last.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF NAHUM.

The prophecies concerning Nineveh furnish a striking historical evidence of the divine origin of the Holy Scriptures. It was certainly one of the greatest and strongest cities in the world—it was the capital of a well-organized government—the commercial emporium of the world. The Euphrates and Tigris gave access to the ocean; and the city lay in the most direct track for the caravans of the East. Yet, as the prophet foretold, it is 'empty, and void, and waste.' Lucian, who lived in the second century after Christ, affirms that 'Nineveh was utterly perished; that there was no trace of it remaining; nor could any one tell where once it was situated.'

Opposite to Mosul, which is situated on the western bank of the Tigris! there are no doubt extensive ruins; but this is most probably the site of the Persian and not of the Assyrian Nineveh. What an invitation to the attentive study of prophecy in the light of history! What a conviction to infidels! What an example to commercial and ambitious nations! What a warning to indolent and luxurious rulers! Above all, what a message to the churches of Europe, to beware of the 'witchcrafts' of false doctrine, of worldliness, and of 'covetousness, which is idolatry;' lest the Lord remove their candlestick, and leave them as the seven churches in Asia, 'empty, void, and waste!' C.

STREET FROM THE PALACE, ATHENS—A POWERFUL CITY AT THE TIME HABAKKUK WROTE HIS PROPHECY. [Habakkuk, i:1.] "The burden which Habakkuk the prophet did see." About the time the prophet Habakkuk wrote, the laws of the archon Draco were established among the Greeks. These were known as the laws of Raco written with blood. Above we have a picture of a scene in Athens, which was not related to Habakkuk geographically, but was chronologically, for Athens was an important city at the time he wrote. This street we see above passes up to the palace from the eastern side of the Acropolis. St. Paul was in this city during the month of November, A. D. 51. It is a remarkable fact that the lands around the Mediterranean Sea which have contributed most to civilization are Bible lands. Greece more than any other nation furnished the language which became the vehicle of Christian truth.

HABAKKUK.

This prophet might prophesy about the same time with Jeremiah, or perhaps during the reign of Manasseh. After complaining of the wickedness of the Jews and Chaldeans, he is divinely informed of their respective ruin: and in his prayer celebrates the power and majesty of God, and professes his joy in him.

Habakkuk is generally believed, and apparently with good reason, to have prophesied soon after the fall of Nineveh, inasmuch as he speaks of the Chaldeans, ch. 1. 6. and not of the Assyrians; and when he speaks of the Chaldeans, he speaks of a people little known, as appears from the particular description he gives of their dispositions, habits, and power, ch. 1. 7–10. It farther appears that he prophesied before the captivity of the ten tribes, ch. 1. 5; 2. 1; 3. 2, 16–19. The Jews think he prophesied in the time of Manasseh, and that he describes the wickedness of his reign, see ch. 1. 3, 4. He foretold the destruction of the Chaldeans, as Nahum did that of the Assyrians. His prophecy is quoted or referred to Ac. 2. 4; 13. 41; Ro. 1. 17; Ga. 3. 11; He. 10. 37, 38. C.

CHAPTER 1.

1 Unto Habakkuk, complaining of the iniquity of the land, 5 is showed the fearful vengeance by the Chaldeans. 12 He complaineth that vengeance should be executed by them who are far worse.

THE burden[a] which Habakkuk the prophet did see.

2 O LORD, [b]how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear! even cry out unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not save!

3 Why[c] dost thou show me iniquity, and cause me to behold grievance? for spoiling and violence are before me: and there are that raise up strife and contention.

4 Therefore [d]the law is slacked, and judgment doth never go forth: for the wicked doth compass about the righteous; therefore wrong[1] judgment proceedeth.

5 ¶ Behold[e] ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvellously: for [g]I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, though it be told you.

6 For, lo, [h]I raise up the Chaldeans,[2] that bitter and hasty nation, which shall march through the breadths[3] of the land, to possess the dwelling-places that are not theirs.

7 They are terrible and dreadful: [i]their judgment and their dignity shall proceed of themselves.

8 Their[j] horses also are swifter than the leopards, and are more fierce[4] than the [k]evening wolves: and their horsemen shall spread themselves, and their horsemen shall come from far; they shall fly [l]as the eagle that hasteth to eat.

9 They shall come all [m]for violence; [5]their faces shall sup up as [o]the east wind, and they shall [p]gather the captivity as the sand.

10 And[q] they shall scoff at the kings, and the princes shall be a scorn unto them; they shall [r]deride every strong hold; for they shall heap dust, and take it.

11 Then [s]shall his mind change, and he shall [t]pass over, and offend, [u]imputing this his power unto his god.

12 ¶ Art thou not [v]from everlasting, O LORD my God, mine Holy One? [w]we shall not die. O LORD, thou hast [x]ordained them for judgment; and, O mighty God,[6] thou hast established[7] them for correction.

13 Thou[z] art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on [8]iniquity: [a]wherefore lookest thou upon them [b]that deal treacherously, and holdest thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he?

14 And makest men as the fishes of the sea, as the creeping[9] things, that have no ruler over them?

15 They[c] take up all of them with the angle, they catch them in their net, and gather them in their [1]drag: [d]therefore they rejoice and are glad.

16 Therefore [e]they sacrifice[2] unto their net,

* The Chaldeans, called in Hebrew Kasdim, a name which is given to the country as well as the people, are supposed by some to have derived their origin from Chesed, the son of Nahor, brother of Abraham, Ge. 22. 22. But this view is opposed to the usual language of Scripture, in which we have Ur of the Chaldees mentioned at an earlier period. The probability is that they were of Cushite origin, and that their earliest seat was among the mountains between the Caspian and Black seas. From thence they migrated southwards, and established themselves on the banks of the Euphrates near the Persian Gulf, and this region was from them called Kasdim, or by the Greeks Chaldæa. They conquered Assyria, and established the Chaldean dynasty in Babylon about B.C. 625. They soon extended their conquests westwards, and overran Syria, Palestine, and Egypt.—P.

CHAPTER 1. Ver. 2–4. Lord, how long must I complain to thee of the oppression and other wickedness which everywhere prevail, before thou takest any course to restrain it and deliver the oppressed? Why is my lot cast in such times and places in which I must always behold such injuries, oppressions, and groundless contentions? and in which, through delay of just punishment, men harden themselves in their wickedness, and grow worse and worse? Thy law is contemned and disobeyed, and common justice is scarcely ever executed; but the wicked, by their numbers or influence, quite overpower and oppress the godly, and pervert judgment as much as they please. 5–11. Behold, with terror and astonishment, how I, who am now punishing the heathen nations, will shortly punish you with a more tremendous destruction, which ye will never believe till ye feel. By my direction the cruel, fierce, and dreadful Chaldeans, who shall rule everything according to their own will, shall furiously invade your country, seize your wealth, and murder or enslave your persons. Regardless of all the opposition that you can make, they shall destroy or lead captive your princes, and waste your cities; and puffed up by their conquests, Nebuchadnezzar and his subjects shall become more and more insolent, self-confident, and idolatrous, ascribing their victories to their idols. 12–17. O everlasting God, who hast for many ages been the God of the Jews by peculiar covenant relation, and who will not utterly destroy us, thou wilt indeed raise up these Chaldeans to correct us, but thy infinite holiness can never permit thee to approve their wicked designs. Why then wilt thou give them success, in treacherously oppressing and destroying thy own people? Alas! why wilt thou permit men to act as stupid and savage animals, which, without any order or government, destroy such as are better or weaker than themselves? And who therefore ascribe all their success, wealth, and honour to their own power and policy? Wilt thou then always permit them to hoard up what they have gotten, and to proceed in their murder and devastations?

Ver. 5. Behold, &c. This is the Lord's answer to the prophet's complaint. Newcome translates it thus 'See, ye transgressors 'despisers.' Boothroyd, and behold a wonder and perish' (see the quotation by Paul, Ac. 13. 41; and so read the Septuagint, Arabic, and Syriac. C.

Ver. 7. Their judgment, &c. In determining their conduct they will have no regard to the law or judgment of God, nor be guided by any regard to his glory, but solely by a view to their own. C.

Ver. 8. Spread themselves. Baron de Tott describes an army of modern Tartar horsemen dividing into several columns, then subdividing and overspreading Servia, burning villages, corn, &c., and carrying off the inhabitants and cattle. C.

and burn incense unto their drag; because by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous.[3]

17 Shall they therefore empty[4] their net, and not[g] spare continually to slay the nations?[5]

CHAPTER II.

1 Unto Habakkuk, waiting for an answer, 2 is shewed that he must wait by faith. 5 The judgment upon the Chaldean for insatiableness, 9 for covetousness, 12 for cruelty, 15 for drunkenness, 18 and for idolatry.

I WILL [a]stand[1] upon my watch, and set me upon the tower,[2] and will watch to see what he will [b]say unto me,[3] and what I shall answer when I am reproved.[4]

2 ¶ And the LORD answered me, and said, Write[c] the vision, and make it plain upon tables,[5] that he may run[6] that readeth it.

3 For the vision is yet for [d]an appointed time, but [e]at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry.[7]

4 Behold, his soul which [f]is lifted up is not upright in him: but the [h]just shall live by his faith.[8]

5 ¶ Yea [i]also, [k]because he transgresseth by wine, he is a proud man, neither keepeth at home, who enlargeth his desire [l]as hell, and is as death, and cannot be satisfied, but gathereth unto him all nations,[1] and heapeth unto him all people:

6 Shall not all these [k]take up a parable against him, and a taunting proverb against him, and say, Woe to him[2] that [l]increaseth that which is not his! how long? and to him that ladeth himself with thick clay!

7 Shall[a] they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee, and thou shalt be for booties unto them?

8 Because [o]thou hast spoiled many nations, all the remnant of the people shall spoil thee; because[p] of men's blood,[3] and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein.

9 ¶ Woe to him that [q]coveteth an evil covetousness[4] to his house, that he may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered from the power of evil![5]

10 Thou hast consulted [r]shame to thy house by cutting off many people, and hast sinned against thy soul.

11 For[s] the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam[6] out of the timber[7] shall answer it.[8]

12 ¶ Woe to him that [t]buildeth a town with blood,[9] and stablisheth a city by iniquity!

13 Behold, is it not of the LORD of hosts that the people shall [u]labour in the very fire, and the people shall weary themselves for very [l]vanity?

14 For [v]the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory[8] of the LORD,[3] as the waters cover the sea.[4]

15 ¶ Woe unto him [z]that giveth his neighbour drink, that puttest thy bottle[5] to him, and makest him drunken also, that thou mayest [y]look on their nakedness!

16 Thou art filled with shame for [6]glory: [z]drink thou also, and let thy foreskin be uncovered: the cup of the LORD's right hand shall be turned unto thee, and shameful spewing shall be on thy glory.

17 For [a]the violence of Lebanon[7] shall cover thee, and the spoil of beasts, which made them afraid, because of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein.

18 ¶ What[b] profiteth the graven image, that the maker thereof hath graven it; the molten image, and a [c]teacher of lies, that the maker of his work[8] trusteth therein, to make dumb idols?

19 Woe[d] unto him that saith to the wood, Awake; to the dumb stone, Arise, it shall teach! [e]behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it.

There is no real discrepancy: for when Christ's kingdom triumphs that of the world must fall.—P.

Ver. 11. 'Then shall their mind change' (then shall the fierce Chaldean degenerate), 'and they shall transgress and be held guilty for imputing their power to their (false) gods.' It is probable the Chaldeans were originally worshippers of JEHOVAH, and that this prediction refers to their perversion to idolatry, on account of which God adjudges them to destruction, ver. 12. C.

Ver. 15. The imagery is taken from the various modes of fishing. 'The angle,' properly so called, is confined to fishing with an artificial fly. It is called 'angling,' because the fly is drawn neither directly up nor down the stream, but at an angle.—The net seems that in which the fish are caught in the meshes.—The drag appears, from Egyptian and Herculaneum paintings, a net extended from the shore, and then drawn circularly to land, enclosing all within its sweep. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Faithful ministers must often bear heavy messages of wrath to God's professing people. And it is grievous to them to behold iniquity abound, while they can do nothing to repress it. Especially to see men diabolically turn tormentors of one another. In the most fearful manner judgment follows wickedness; and violence is returned for violence, and fraud for fraud. And success in sin tempts men to become more and more wicked. But happy is it in evil times to have the eternal God our own, and on our side by special covenant; and to live in the firm faith of the holiness and equity of his whole providential dispensations, and that sin shall not always escape unpunished. And it is highly becoming to ascribe due praise to him, let men injure us as they will.—Sound and well-established principles are great supports to a distressed mind; and though God correct his people, yet he will not utterly destroy them. Whatever difficulties we therefore apprehend in God's providences, we must cast all our care upon him, and wait patiently for his salvation. Instruments of God's wrath may for a time bring awful desolation among men. But however little account they make of men's lives, God will at last reckon with such conquerors as the most arrant robbers and most bloody murderers of mankind.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1–4. I resolved to wait patiently for God's answer to my own bold complaints, that, instructed by him, I might be able to answer others who quarrel with his judgments. And the Lord commanded me to write his declarations in the plainest manner, that every person might receive proper instruction from them; and since they will not be quickly fulfilled, it behoves us patiently to wait for them, as they will certainly be accomplished in their proper season, without so much as a moment's unnecessary delay. And it is by men's patient waiting that their sincerity will be tried. They who despise the vision, discredit the promise, and proudly quarrel with the providence of God; or who, drawing back from him, depend on their own devices, manifest their hearts to be unsound: but they who are justified by faith in Jesus' righteousness shall persevere in their duty, living by faith on his promises. 5–8. The Chaldean kings and their subjects having abandoned themselves to luxury, proud insolence, covetousness of conquest, oppression, and murder of the neighbouring nations, shall be punished in their turn, and be derided by their slaves and tributaries, as ruined by their extent of power and heaps of ensnaring and defiling wealth. For the barbarous Medes and Persians shall quickly and unexpectedly plunder and destroy these Chaldean spoilers and murderers of the Jews and the nations around. 9–11. Dreadful judgments await those who, by unjust acquisitions, think to aggrandize and establish themselves and families, and to build stately palaces and forts for themselves. Bloody cruelty and oppression will issue in the disgrace and ruin of the guilty and their families; and the very materials of their houses, produced by unjust methods, shall cry to God for vengeance against them. 12–14. Dreadful curses shall overtake them who build CASTLE NUOVA, NAPLES—CLOSE BY THE TOMB OF VIRGIL, WHO WROTE IN THE FIRST CENTURY BEFORE THE COMING OF CHRIST. [Habakkuk, ii:9-12.]—"Woe to him that coveteth an evil covetousness to his house, that he may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered from the power of evil! Thou hast consulted shame to thy house by cutting off many people, and hast sinned against thy soul. For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it. Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood, and establisheth a city by iniquity." Nero was emperor of Rome from A. D. 54 to 68. Here we are in the neighborhood of his greatest crimes. And there is no better place to consider the words of the prophet quoted above than in this region. Nero himself committed suicide, and the great nation over which he ruled was broken and scattered a few hundred years after his death. The Castle Nuova was commenced in 1283 by Charles I. of Anjou. Here the kings of the houses of Anjou and Aragon and the Spanish envoys successively resided.

11 The[v] sun and moon stood still in their habitation: at the light of thine arrows they went,[8] and at the shining of thy glittering spear.

12 Thou[x] didst march through the land in indignation, thou didst thrash the heathen in anger.

13 Thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people, even for salvation [y]with thine anointed; thou [z]woundedst the head out of the house of the wicked, by discovering[9] the foundation unto the neck.[1] Selah.

14 Thou[a] didst strike through with his staves the head of his villages:[2] they [b]came out[3] as a whirlwind to scatter me: their rejoicing was as to devour the poor secretly.

15 Thou[c] didst walk through the sea with thine horses, through the heap[4] of great waters.

16 When I heard, [d]my belly trembled: my lips quivered at the voice: rottenness entered into my bones, and I trembled in myself, that [e]I might rest in the day of trouble: when [f]he cometh up unto the people, he will invade them[5] with his troops.

17 ¶ Although[h] the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour[6] of the olive shall fail,[7] and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off or fortify Babylon, or any other city, by that which they have gotten by plunder, injustice, or murder: and all their fatiguing labours shall be of no avail when the Persians shall enter by the gates and destroy the inhabitants: for God shall, in the most alarming manner, glorify himself before all nations in the destruction of Babylon, as well as in our redemption thereby prefigured. 15–17. Dreadful miseries shall befall the Chaldeans and others who are instruments of ruining other nations, and who abandon themselves to beastly drunkenness. Their drunkenness, attended by the fearful judgments of God, shall subject them to disgrace, contempt, and misery; and the violence which they committed against God's temple and people shall issue in their own cruel destruction by the barbarous Medes and Persians. 18–20. Nor shall their idols, by which they misrepresent the true God, in the least help them in the day of their distress; yea, their worship thereof shall bring fearful misery upon them. But JEHOVAH, the God of Israel, is in his church and in heaven, always ready to help his people: let men therefore everywhere adore his perfections, and ponder, admire, and submit to his providences.

Ver. 6. Thick clay. This seems to be an allusion to the carrying of materials for the formation of brick. There being no stones in the plains where Babylon was built, the prophet most probably represents Nebuchadnezzar as ending his career of conquest in the toils and ambition of architecture see Da. 4. 30. The words have also been translated, 'How long shall he lade himself with many pledges?' C.

REFLECTIONS.—In evil times it is best to wait upon God, believe his word, and watch against temptation. And they who preach his truths should make them as plain as possible. God has fixed the best time for his works; and never does he defer them a moment beyond it. But it is only by faith in his promise we can patiently wait his time of performance: and it is only they who are justified in and live by the faith of Christ, who persevere in their duty.—Nothing more effectually seduces men from God than a proud heart. But with the greatest ease God overthrows the mightiest monarchs and empires; and easily he reduces to ruin the most covetous, imperious, drunken, and murderous of mankind. Alas! that men are often so senseless, that when they have much, they would still have more; and that they often ruin themselves and families by doing injury to others! Yea, often they provoke God to give them up to dishonour by their abominable works. And strange is it that in trouble men will seek anywhere for relief but to God. But if they will not be taught by his Word, he will force them to know and acknowledge his judgments; and, notwithstanding all opposition, will show himself victorious over all his enemies.

CHAPTER III. Ver 2. Terrified by thine answers to my former complaints, Lord, I beseech thee to support thy people under these calamities, and under their captivity give them some tokens of thy favour, and some mitigation of trouble. 3, 4. How wonderful were thy appearances for thy people on former occasions! At the giving of the law on Mount Sinai the whole firmament shone with the rays of thy glory, and the earth rang with thy praises; and yet that was but a very scanty manifestation of thy power. 5, 6. By divers plagues thou didst destroy the Egyptians and Canaanites; and taking up thy abode in the ark, thou didst expel the latter, and gave their land to thy people. The mightiest giants and best fortified cities were forced to yield; and thy dispensations are, in every age, powerful and gracious. 7. The Midianites, who trembled at the earthquakes occasioned by the descent on Mount Sinai, were afterwards marvellously destroyed by Phinehas and Gideon. 8, 10. Not from any displeasure with the waters, but in love to thy people, didst thou divide the Red Sea and the river Jordan, and conduct them through, marching before them in the pillar of cloud. 9, 11, 12. In fulfilment of thy covenant promise, made to our fathers, thou didst manifest thy power in destroying the Canaanites; and didst even make the sun and moon to stop, move, and shine as was necessary for their effectual destruction. 13, 14. Yea, not only at first, but all along, thou didst assist Joshua, David, and other leaders of thy people, and grant them signal victories over all their enemies who took arms against them. 16–19. Thy intimations of the Chaldean invasion fearfully distressed my spirits, and rendered me deeply concerned for my own and others' protection. But even though they should destroy every outward comfort in my country, I will trust and rejoice in God himself, as my all-sufficient Portion and Saviour, who will enable me to bear up under trouble, preserve me from danger, and bring me again to my own land.

REFLECTIONS.—Attentive hearing of God's Word animates to prayer. And even under tokens of his wrath, we must never despair of his mercy: there is enough of it in his stores—in his heart. Nor ought we to neglect observing his former providences of mercy or judgment. Even in his most majestic manifestations, he has the salvation of his people chiefly at heart; and all creatures are ready to assist in promoting from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls:

18 Yet[i] I will rejoice in the LORD, I will joy in the God of my salvation.

it. If he then be our leader, our assistant, no enemies can withstand us. And if God, from regard to his promise, did so much to Israel, what will he not do in the work of our redemption through Christ. Let me therefore never indulge slavish fear. If I enjoy created comforts, let me not fix my heart upon them: and if I want them, let me always rejoice in my unchangeable ALL IN ALL, the great God my Saviour. Thus the worst of times may be the best for my soul.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF HABAKKUK.

A third part of this prophecy is prayer; and, considered merely as a specimen of Hebrew piety, it presents an important subject for contemplation. It embraces four principal topics: (1) An acknowledgment of fear at God's message of judgment, ver. 2, 16. (2) An earnest petition for mercy and revival to a decaying church, ver. 2. (3) A sublime record of the wonders of Providence in delivering the church and overturning her enemies, ver. 3–15. (4) Unshaken confidence and joy in God in the midst of want and ruin. The last topic is that which comes most practically home to the 'lives and bosoms of men;' and that for two reasons: (a) Because times of general calamity are always recurring; and though, in some countries, the intervals may be long, yet still the records of history afford a sufficient warning to all nations to read the words of the apostle in a temporal as well as in a spiritual sense—'Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.' (b) Because, though great national calamities may be 'few and far between,' yet personal or family afflictions are of frequent and daily occurrence—losses, disappointments, sickness, and death are continually treading upon the heels of one another; and under any, or it may be all, of these visitations, what a blessed refuge does the faith of the prophet provide! A refuge in which he not merely bears with resignation and patience, but in which he 'rejoices in the LORD;' yea, 'joys in the God of his salvation.' Happy believer!—by the cross of Christ crucified to the world, the world is also crucified to him!—praying without ceasing; rejoicing evermore; glorying in tribulation; and, in the midst of them all, a conqueror; yea, more than a conqueror, through Jesus that loved him! C.

ZEPHANIAH.

This prophet flourished about A.M. 3390, along with Jeremiah. His scope is to foretell the desolation of Judah and Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, and to point out the causes of it; to denounce God's wrath against the nations which assisted in, or rejoiced over, the calamities of the Jews; and to predict the glory of the Jewish nation after the captivity in Babylon and their present dispersion, and of the gospel church thereby prefigured.

[Zephaniah was contemporary with Jeremiah, and delivered his predictions in the reign of Josiah. From his description of the public disorders of the land, it is evident that he must have prophesied previously to the glorious reformation effected by Josiah in the eighteenth year of his reign; and as he predicts the destruction of Nineveh, which could not have taken place sooner than the sixteenth of Josiah, the utterance of the prophecy must be referred to the commencement of his reign. The prophet foretells the invasion of the Chaldeans, and the utter desolation of Jerusalem and Judea, on account of national sins. Exhorts to repentance; pronounces judgment on the surrounding nations; exhorts to hopeful waiting for the restoration of Israel, and to joy in the salvation of God. The New Testament references to this book are Jn. 4. 21; He. 12. 12; Ja. 2. 5; 5. 1; Re. 19. 17–19. C.

One marked characteristic of this book is its comprehensiveness. The prophecies do not apply to one kingdom or people merely, but extend to all those judgments and providential dealings by which God upholds his dominion upon earth. Bucer has well remarked regarding this prophecy that, 'If any person desires to see all the secret oracles of the Old Testament prophets reduced to one short summary, he has only to read the book of Zephaniah. In this respect he differs very widely from all the minor prophets, and is even more extensive in his range than Isaiah himself.' P.]

CHAPTER I.

God's severe judgment against Judah for divers sins.

THE word[a] of the LORD which came[b] unto Zephaniah the son of Cushi, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hizkiah,[1] in[b] the days of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah.

2 [c]I[2] will utterly consume all things from off the land,[3] saith the LORD.

3 I[d] will consume man and beast; I will consume the fowls of the heaven, and the fishes of the sea, and the stumbling-blocks[4] with the wicked; and I will cut off man from off the land, saith the LORD.

4 I[e] will also stretch out mine hand upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and I will cut off [g]the remnant of Baal from this place, and the name of the [5]Chemarims with the priests;

5 And [h]them that worship the host of heaven upon the house-tops; and them that worship

CHAPTER I. Ver. 3–6. Idols, and other occasions of sinful courses, are here called stumbling-blocks. Notwithstanding Josiah's care to reform Judea, some continued to worship Baal; and the Chemarim, or black ones, were the idolatrous priests. Some mingled the worship of JEHOVAH and Malcham or Moloch together: and some, who had been zealous in Josiah's reformation, had apostatized to idolatry. 7. The slaughtered Jews were the sacrifice to righteous judgment; and the Chaldeans took it upon themselves not only to slay them, but to feed upon and devour their wealth and substance. 9. They who leap on the threshold are either idolatrous priests, who jumped over the thresholds of their temples; or rather servants, who insolently entered the houses of pretended malefactors to plunder them for their masters. 12. God will manifest and punish the most secret abominations, particularly of those who, from atheistical principles, are become hardened and secure in wickedness. 14–18. These expressions denote the terrible, confounding, ruinous, and desolating nature of the Chaldean and Roman invasions.

Ver. 5. Malcham. The same as Moloch, the god of the Ammonites. The persons threatened are those who combine the worship of the true God with idolatry. C. and [t]that swear by the LORD,[s] and that swear by [j]Malcham;[7]

6 And them that are [k]turned back from the LORD; and those that [l]have not sought the LORD, nor inquired for him.

7 Hold[n] thy peace at the presence of the Lord GOD; for the [o]day of the LORD is at hand: for [p]the LORD hath prepared a sacrifice, [q]he hath bid[8] his guests.[9]

8 And it shall come to pass in the day of the LORD's sacrifice, that [r]I will punish[1] the princes, and the king's children, and all such as are clothed with [s]strange apparel.

9 In the same day also will I punish all those that leap on[2] the threshold, which [t]fill their masters' houses with violence and deceit.

10 And it shall come to pass [u]in that day, saith the LORD, that there shall be [v]the noise of a cry from the [z]fish-gate, and an howling from the second,[3] and a great crashing from [y]the hills.

11 Howl,[x] ye inhabitants of [4]Maktesh,[5] for all the merchant people are cut down; all they that bear silver are cut off.

12 And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will [a]search Jerusalem with candles, and punish the men that are settled[6] on their lees;[7] that say in their heart, [b]The LORD will not do good, neither will he do evil.

13 Therefore[c] their goods shall become a booty, and their houses a desolation: they shall also build houses, but [d]not inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, but not drink the wine thereof.

14 The[e] great day of the LORD [f]is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even [h]the voice of the day of the LORD: [i]the mighty man shall cry there bitterly.

15 That day is [j]a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness,

16 A [k]day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high towers.

17 And I will bring distress upon men,[8] that[l] they shall walk like blind men, [m]because they have sinned against the LORD: and [o]their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dung.

18 Neither[p] their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the LORD's wrath; but [q]the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy: for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land.

1 An exhortation to repentance. 4 The judgment of the Philistines, 8 of Moab and Ammon, 12 of Ethiopia and Assyria.

2 Before[c] the decree bring forth, before the day pass [d]as the chaff,[3] before[e] the fierce anger of the LORD come upon you, before the day of the LORD's anger come upon you.

3 Seek[g] ye the LORD, all ye [h]meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness,[4] seek meekness: [i]it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the LORD's anger.

4 ¶ For[j] Gaza shall be forsaken, and Ashkelon a desolation: they shall drive out Ashdod [k]at the noon-day, and Ekron shall be rooted up.

5 Woe unto the inhabitants of the sea-coast, the nation of the [l]Cherethites! the word of the LORD is against you; O Canaan, the land of the Philistines, I will even destroy thee, that there shall be no inhabitant.[5]

6 And the sea-coast shall be [n]dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks.

7 And [o]the coast shall be for [p]the remnant of the house of Judah; they shall feed thereupon: in the houses of Ashkelon shall they lie down in the evening; [6]for the LORD their God [q]shall visit them, and turn away their captivity.

8 ¶ I have heard [r]the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border.

Ver. 8. Strange apparel. The forbidden interchange of male and female apparel, as customary in the worship of several idols, De. 22. 5. C.

Ver. 9. Leap on, &c. 'Leap over the threshold.' Those who do not tread on the threshold, in remembrance of Dagon, 1 Sa. 5. 5, or those marauding servants who ride into houses for purposes of plunder—a custom still prevalent among the Arabs, Persians, &c.; on account of which, in many places, the people, and especially the Jews, make the entrance of their houses so low, that a man must enter on his hands and knees, and sometimes so intricate, that it is difficult for a stranger to obtain an entrance at all. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The wrath of God makes fearful havoc in a nation or kingdom, and burns hottest against apostate professors and hypocrites. These refusers of Christ's atoning sacrifice must themselves fall a sacrifice to the provoked judgment of God: nor can any rank or station save them from his stroke. Yea, every sin, secret or open, is taken into his account, as a ground of their punishment. Gaudy apparel and ill-gotten gains speedily help on their destruction. Alas! how terrible is it to fall into the hands of an angry God! How awakening to infidels themselves, who had racked their wits to silence their consciences that they might enjoy their guilty pleasures undisturbed! But if periods of judgment be so dreadful, what must be the great day of the Lord! How will it strike sinners dumb with horror, and consume them as with fire! And all earthly enjoyments will be then altogether ineffectual for their relief.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1–3. O nation, careless about, and odious to God, search yourselves diligently, and assemble together in solemn fasting, before the appointed day of his judgment overtake you, which shall unavoidably hurl you out of your land, and miserably destroy you. Ye poor, afflicted, and humble souls who have obeyed his laws and observed his ordinances, implore his favour, and supplicate increase of grace and holiness:—thus, it may be, ye shall not perish with your wicked countrymen. 4–7. The Philistines' strong cities shall be utterly destroyed, and the inhabitants murdered by the Chaldeans, Greeks, and others; and at last the Jewish Maccabees shall reduce the whole country, and dwell therein. 8–11. For their insolent behaviour towards the Israelites, the country of the Moabites and Ammonites shall be made an utter and lasting desolation, and at last become the property of the Jews;—and in the apostolic and future periods, idolatry shall be banished from it, and a glorious gospel church established there, as in other heathen countries. 12–15. The Ethiopians on the south, and Assyrians on the north-east, shall also be murdered by the Chaldeans and other instruments of judgment. And the now famous, fearless, and haughty city of Nineveh, shall be reduced to a heap of ruins, to the astonishment and joy of the nations which they have oppressed.

Ver. 4. The third and fourth verses are closely connected, although the third refers to the Jews and the fourth to the Philistines. The reason is this: A common enemy was about to desolate both. The Chaldeans when invading Judah would also overrun Philistia. The prophecy also glances down into the distant future, and predicts the state of the great cities of Philistia as they exist at present. I was especially struck with the doom of Ashkelon:—'It shall be a desolation.' No word could more graphically portray its state. Every building within its walls has been overthrown and the very site is almost entirely obliterated by the drifting sand. P.

Ver. 7. This prophecy, no doubt, began to be accomplished on

ANCIENT CASTLE OF NAPLES—NOT FAR FROM THE CLASSIC LAKE OF THE DEAD, WITH ITS MEMORIES OF CHARON AND HIS CREW. [ZEPHANIAH, i: 12–13.]—"And it shall come to pass at that time, that I will search Jerusalem with candles, and punish the men that are settled on their lees; that say in their heart, The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil. Therefore their goods shall become a booty, and their houses a desolation: they shall also build houses, but not inhabit them: and they shall plant vineyards but not drink the wine thereof." Reference has often been made in the descriptions of these pictures to the fact that the same laws which were at work among the Jews to bring confusion and ruin if violated were at work also among the heathen nations by which they were surrounded. No better illustration of this truth can be found in any of the cities about the Mediterranean Sea than in Naples. This old castle is one of the ancient landmarks of this city which has sinned so openly and suffered so deeply in the past pits, and a perpetual desolation: [u]the residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my people shall possess them.

10 This shall they have [v]for their pride, because they have reproached and magnified themselves against the people of the LORD of hosts.

11 The LORD will be terrible unto them: for he[w] will famish[8] all the gods of the earth; and men[x] shall worship him, every one from his place,[9] even all the isles of the heathen.

12 ¶ Ye[y] Ethiopians also, ye shall be slain by my sword.

13 ¶ And [z]he will stretch out his hand against the north, and destroy Assyria; and [a]will make Nineveh a desolation, and dry like a wilderness.

14 And [b]flocks shall lie down in the midst of her, all the beasts of the nations: both the cormorant[1] and the bittern shall lodge in the upper lintels[2] of it; their voice shall sing in the windows; desolation shall be in the thresholds: for he shall uncover[3] the cedar-work.

15 This [c]is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly; that said in her heart, I am, and there is none beside me: [d]how is she become a desolation, a place for beasts to lie down in! [e]every one that passeth by her shall hiss, and wag his hand.[4]

CHAPTER III.

1 A sharp reproof of Jerusalem for divers sins. 8 An exhortation to wait for the restoration of Israel, 14 and to rejoice for their salvation by God.

WOE to her that is filthy[1] and [a]polluted, to the oppressing city!

2 She [b]obeyed not the voice; she received not correction;[2] she [c]trusted not in the LORD; she drew[d] not near to her God.

3 Her[e] princes within her are roaring lions; her judges are evening wolves;[3] they gnaw not the bones till the morrow.

4 Her [f]prophets are light and treacherous persons: her [g]priests have polluted the sanctuary, they have done violence to the law.

5 The[i] just LORD is [j]in the midst thereof; he will not do iniquity: every morning[4] doth[k] he bring his judgment to light, he faileth not; but the[l] unjust knoweth no shame.

6 I[n] have cut off the nations: their towers[5] are desolate; I made their streets waste, that none passeth by: their cities are destroyed, so that there is no man, that there is none inhabitant.

7 I said, [o]Surely thou wilt fear me, thou wilt receive instruction: so their dwelling should not be cut off, [p]howsoever I punished them: but they [q]rose early, and corrupted all their doings.[6]

8 ¶ Therefore[7] wait[r] ye upon me, saith the LORD, until the day that [s]I rise up to the prey; for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger: for all the [t]earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy.

9 For then will I turn to[u] the people a pure language,[9] that[u] they may all call upon the name of the LORD, to serve him with one consent.[1]

10 From[v] beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering.[2]

11 In that day shalt thou [w]not be ashamed for all thy doings, wherein thou hast transgressed against me: for then I will take away out of the midst of thee them [x]that rejoice in thy pride; and thou shalt no more be haughty because of my holy[3] mountain.

12 I[y] will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the LORD.

13 The[a] remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth: for [b]they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid.

14 ¶ Sing,[c] O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem.

15 The LORD hath [d]taken away thy judgments, he [e]hath cast out thine enemy: the king of Israel, even the LORD, is [g]in the midst of thee: thou [h]shalt not see evil any more.

16 In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear thou not; and to Zion, [i]Let not thine hands be slack.[4] the return of Judah and Benjamin from Babylon; but its complete realization is still future. C.

Ver. 11. Famish all the gods. When it is recollected that the bull, the dog, the crocodile, &c., were among the gods of the heathen, there will be no difficulty in understanding how they might be literally 'famished.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Sin renders the highest professors useless and odious before God. And there is great need of self-examination, and solemn humiliation and prayer, when his judgments hang over our head. How terrible are the corrections of God's own people! But little reason have their enemies to rejoice thereat, for their calamities will issue in the ruin of their injurers. Pride, insolence, and carnal mirth must at last give place to debasement, anguish, death, and ruin! Yea, sinners are often fearfully recompensed in this world, and their places of abode marked with wrath. What then must be their eternal misery at last.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1-4. Dreadful miseries await Jerusalem, which is quite filled with wickedness, violence, and oppression. Most of the inhabitants pay no regard to God's laws, warnings, or corrections: they trust not in him, but in their heathen allies and idols: and regardless of his spiritual relation to them, they neither pray to nor worship him. Their princes and judges are rapacious and cruel oppressors. Their prophets are light, frothy, and treacherous to God and men. Their priests profane the sanctuary, and pervert the law, by their false glosses or bad examples. 5-7. Though I, who in infinite righteousness am a hater of all iniquity, am among them in mine ordinances to observe their conduct: and though I have long and repeatedly warned them by my prophets, and by making examples of impenitent sinners, yet still they continue impudent and obstinate in their sin: and though, for their warning, I have executed my desolating judgments on other nations, that so I might not be obliged to destroy them, yet, instead of repenting, they have become more wicked. 8-13. Nevertheless, wait ye on me, till by desolating judgments I have destroyed the wicked from among you, and have even destroyed the wicked nations from the world; for after that I will, by my grace, effectually renew your heart and life, and make you unanimously concur in worshipping me. Gathered from the most distant countries, ye shall humbly present to me your thanksgivings; and, returned to your own land, no more shall ye undergo the reproach and punishment of your former sins. They that prided themselves in their peculiar relation to God, and their outward privileges and ordinances, shall be cut off; and, in their stead, I will raise up a generation of persons, meek and humble under their troubles,

PUBLIC SQUARE, NAPLES—NEAR THE FAMOUS PHLEGRÆAN FIELDS, WHERE, ACCORDING TO HEATHEN POETS, THE GODS AND THE GIANTS HAD THEIR BATTLES. [Zephaniah, ii:11.]—"The Lord will be terrible unto them: for he will famish all the gods of the earth; and men shall worship him, everyone from his place, even all the isles of the heathen." At the time this prophecy was uttered by Zephaniah the country where Naples now stands belonged to the heathen nations by which the Jews were surrounded. Zephaniah declares that the Lord will famish all the gods of the earth, and the heathen gods once worshiped in this beautiful city are all destroyed. It is to-day a city filled with Christian churches. In the above picture we have a view of Naples near the palace. We see a fountain which makes this place very attractive in hot weather. From the days of the Volci, the Samnities, the Oscans, the Campanians, the Apulians, the Lucanians, the Calabians, the Bruttians, and the Siculians, till now, this region of almost unbroken summer has been the scene of intrigue and bloodshed.

STRADA MARINA, NAPLES—THE SITE WHERE SOME OF THE MOST DREADFUL CRIMES THAT HAVE DISGRACED HUMANITY WERE COMMITTED. [Zephaniah. iii:1-3.]—"Woe to her that is filthy and polluted, to the oppressing city! She obeyed not the voice; she received not the correction; she trusted not in the Lord; she drew not near to her God. Her princes within her are roaring lions; her judges are evening wolves; they gnaw not the bones till the morrow." While the above declaration was not uttered with reference to Naples, yet in no city of the promised land has it been more thoroughly fulfilled than in this beautiful city of Italy by the sea. The fires under the earth have not been more constant in their rumbling in this neighborhood than the fires of human passion have been terrible in their expression above it. In the above picture of the Strada Marina we are facing the west. The long hill before us, with its private residences and ecclesiastical structures, with tapering trees on the summit, its bared rocks, and wooded slopes is the hill through which the famous old tunnel passes, leading the traveler from Naples to Puteoli, where St. Paul landed in Italy.

is[j] mighty; he will save, he [k]will rejoice over thee with joy; he will [l]rest[5] in his love, he will joy over thee with singing.

18 I [m]will gather them that [o]are sorrowful for the solemn assembly, who are of thee, to whom the reproach of it was a burden.[6]

19 Behold, at that time I [p]will undo all that afflict thee; and [q]I will save her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out; and I will get them praise[7] and fame in every land where they have been put to shame.[8]

20 At that time [r]will I bring you again, even in the time that I gather you: for I will make you [s]a name and a praise among all people of the earth, [t]when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, saith the LORD.

who shall trust in my promises, believe on my Son, and, being renewed in their hearts, shall detest falsehood and all other wickedness, and shall be encouraged to an upright and holy conversation by the protection which I will afford them. 14–19. Rejoice greatly, O Jews, take courage, and abound in piety, for I the Lord will remove your troubles, and destroy your Chaldean and other enemies. I will, as your God and King, take pleasure in saving and perpetually showing favours to you. I will bring you, who were burdened with the want of my solemn ordinances, and with the scoffing of the Chaldeans at them, to your own land, notwithstanding your weakness and want of courage; and by glorious appearances for your preservation and deliverance, will render you famous and honoured in all the countries where you have lived in disgrace.—But these promises chiefly relate to the conversion of multitudes of Jews and Gentiles, and their noted harmony, purity, comfort, peace, and honour in the gospel church, especially in the coming age. [See Introduction, ch. iv. sect. xvii.–xix.]

Ver. 9–20. This prophecy is still future, and describes the period of that glorious restoration of Israel, and final outpouring of the Spirit upon all flesh, which it is one of the chief objects of all the prophets to describe for our comfort and growth in grace. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! what terrible wickedness against God and men abounds among apostate professors! And it is truly lamentable when they who ought to have been the principal patterns of and encouragers to piety, become the most obstinate ringleaders in wickedness of every kind. Churches and nations, obdurate in guilt, must be made monuments of wrath. But where sin has abounded, how grace much more abounds! An almighty God can easily pardon and reform his people, and cut off their enemies. And when taught and drawn by him, how pleasantly they flock to Jesus Christ and his church: and their very troubles contribute to engage their hearts. In his times of promise and days of power, God graciously puts an end to his people's troubles, bestows the tokens of his presence, delights in them to do them good, comforts their mourners, recovers their weakest captives, and restores with advantage their wonted honours.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ZEPHANIAH.

Zephaniah, like most of the other prophets, was raised up in a time of general corruption and disorder. These he reproves with great plainness of speech, proclaiming against them the wrath of an offended God. And there is good reason to believe that his warnings were not in vain; but that, on the contrary, they contributed largely to that reformation and revival that took place in the days of Josiah, —thus affording an encouragement, in the worst of times, to be 'always abounding in the work of the Lord;' persuaded 'that our labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.' C.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET HAGGAI.

The thirteen preceding prophets had flourished before or during the Jews' captivity in Babylon. This and the two following prophesied after their return to Canaan. Haggai began his public work in the sixteenth year after their return; and his scope is to encourage them to proceed in rebuilding the temple of God. He continued prophesying about four months, ch. 1. 1, 15; 2. 1, 10, 20.

[Haggai is generally believed to have been one of the captives that returned with Zerubbabel in consequence of the edict by Cyrus. The building of the temple had been interrupted for about fourteen years, in consequence of the misrepresentation of the neighbouring governors, addressed to the Persian monarch; and, most probably, also from the coldness, doubts, and fears of the people themselves. In the second year of Darius Hystaspes the edict of Cyrus was, however, providentially renewed, and Haggai was divinely commissioned to encourage the rulers, and stir up the zeal and energies of the people. He accordingly reproves their delay, and exhorts them to proceed. Their ready obedience is encouraged by a renewed message from God. He comforts the old men who wept at the diminished magnificence of the second temple, by assuring them of its surpassing glory in the advent of MESSIAH. He shows how God had smitten the earth with a curse on account of their sins, and promises them fruitful harvests from the day the foundation of the temple was laid; and predicts the prosperity of MESSIAH'S kingdom. Haggai is quoted in the New Testament, Mat. 28. 20; Ro. 8. 31; He. 12. 26. C.]

CHAPTER I. REFLECTIONS.—Lukewarm professors are easily checked in their reforming attempts. If civil powers do not encourage them, they imagine it is not a proper season: and it will require both prophets and plagues to stir them up to their duty. Uncertain, unsubstantial, and unsatisfying are all the enjoyments of wealth: and it is very unlike saints to prefer temporal advantages to the honour of Christ and welfare of his church. But none ever gain by withholding from pious uses: nor can reformation be ever expected till men consider their ways. It is pleasant to be employed in that work in which God delights. And if he direct us by his Word, awe our conscience and animate our heart by his Spirit, we shall then cheerfully apply to it: and the more negligent we have been, the more diligent we ought to be. God will graciously work with such as readily apply themselves to their duty. And if he be with us, we need wish no more.

This people say, [c]The time is not come,[6] the time that the LORD's house should be built.

3 Then came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

4 Is it time for you, O ye, [d]to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste?

5 Now, therefore, thus saith the LORD of hosts, [e]Consider[7] your ways.

6 Ye have [f]sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag [g]with holes.[9]

7 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [h]Consider your ways.

8 Go up to the [i]mountain, and bring wood, and build [j]the house; and [k]I will take pleasure in it, and [l]I will be glorified, saith the LORD.

9 Ye[m] looked for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow[1] upon it.[2] Why? saith the LORD of hosts. Because of mine house that is waste,[3] and ye run every man unto his own house.[4]

10 Therefore[5] the[o] heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit.

11 And I called for a drought upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground bringeth forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labour of the hands.

12 ¶ Then[p] Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the LORD their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the LORD their God had sent him, and the people did [q]fear before the LORD.

13 Then spake Haggai, the [r]LORD's messenger, in the LORD's message unto the people, saying, [s]I am with you, saith the LORD.

14 ¶ And the LORD [t]stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest, and the spirit of all the remnant of the people; and they came, and did [u]work in the house of the LORD of hosts, their God,

* There is a serious and, as I think, insuperable grammatical difficulty in translating this passage as it is in our English version, and in referring the Hebrew word rendered "Desire" directly to the Messiah. The difficulty may be stated thus.—The Hebrew word for "desire" is feminine singular, while the verb for "shall come" is plural and masculine. Such a mode cannot in any sense be applied to Christ at all; and even if it could be, the verb is not in grammatical concord with it. I am compelled, therefore, to admit, with most modern critics, that the ordinary interpretation of this passage is erroneous. I agree with Henderson, that "the only practicable solution warranted by grammatical usage, consists in assuming Chemdah to be a collective noun, conveying a plural idea, the gender of which, but having yet presented itself to the mind of the prophet when he enunciated the verb (which comes first in Hebrew), be naturally expressed it in the masculine as the more worthy gender. The construction in such cases is not formal, but logical." The proper translation of the clause, therefore, will be: "And then the things desired by all nations shall come." Though this particular word does not refer to the Messiah, yet the prophecy is still Messianic. The things desired are the blessings of the new covenant, the redemption work of Christ; the peace, joy, and salvation of the gospel.—P.

CHAPTER II.

1 He encourageth the people to the work, by promise of greater glory to the second temple than was in the first. 10 Under the type of holy things and unclean he showeth their sins hindered the work. 20 God's promise to Zerubbabel.

IN the [a]seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the LORD by[1] the prophet Haggai, saying,

2 Speak[b] now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, [c]governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest, and to the residue of the people, saying,

3 Who is [d]left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it [e]now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing?

4 Yet [f]now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the LORD; and be strong, O Joshua son of Josedech, the high-priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the LORD, and [h]work: for [i]I am with you, saith the LORD of hosts:

5 According to the [j]word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so [k]my Spirit remaineth among you; fear ye not.

6 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, [l]Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the [z]heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land;

7 And I will shake all nations, and [n]the desire of all nations shall come:[3] and [o]I will fill this house with glory, saith the LORD of hosts.

8 The[p] silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the LORD of hosts.

9 The[q] glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the LORD of hosts: and in this place [r]will I give peace, saith the LORD of hosts.

10 ¶ In the [s]four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

11 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [t]Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying,

12 If one bear [u]holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? And the priests answered and said, No.

13 Then said Haggai, If [v]one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.

14 Then answered Haggai, and said, [x]So is this people, and so is this nation before me, [u] Nu. 19. 11, 22, with Le. 19. 28.

[z] Ezr. 3. 2, 3, with ver. 19; ch. 1. 2, 4, with ver. 13, 20, 17; ch. 2. 9-11.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 6, 7, 21, 22. Not only was the Jewish church and state repeatedly shaken by manifold disasters, but the nations around were shaken and overturned by the rise and fall of the Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires, to make way for Christ's incarnation and gospel church. And they will be further shaken by the fall of the Antichristian and Mahometan powers, to make way for his universal reign on earth. y. Christ is the desire of all nations; infinitely desirable in himself, and desired and embraced by all that know him; and his presence filled the second temple with glory. 8. If I regarded outward splendour, I could easily furnish gold and silver to render this temple magnificent. 12-14. As legal holiness is not so easily communicated as legal uncleanness, so your sacrifices do not sanctify you; but your sinful hearts, and neglect to build my temple, debase your offerings, and bring a curse on your labours. 23. Zerubbabel, but chiefly Christ, is a signet, God's precious favourite, who is intrusted with all power, and sealed as the head of his church, and who seals it to the day of redemption.

Ver. 3. Some of the oldest men who returned might perfectly remember the first temple. The foundation of the second temple was laid in the second year of Cyrus, fifty-three years after the destruction of the first; and this prophecy was uttered fifteen years after the laying of that foundation; in all sixty-eight years; so that there might be several who had been familiar with the first temple, from twelve to thirty years, or even upwards. C.

This people say, [c]The time is not come,[6] the time that the LORD's house should be built.

3 Then came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

4 Is it time for you, O ye, [d]to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste?

5 Now, therefore, thus saith the LORD of hosts, [e]Consider[7] your ways.

6 Ye have [g]sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye [h]clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag [8]with holes.[9]

7 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [k]Consider your ways.

8 Go up to the [l]mountain, and bring wood, and build [m]the house; and [k]I will take pleasure in it, and [l]I will be glorified, saith the LORD.

9 Ye[n] looked for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow[1] upon it.[2] Why? saith the LORD of hosts. Because of mine house that is waste,[3] and ye run every man unto his own house.[4]

10 Therefore[5] the[o] heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit.

11 And I called for a drought upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground bringeth forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labour of the hands.

12 ¶ Then[p] Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the LORD their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the LORD their God had sent him, and the people did [q]fear before the LORD.

13 Then spake Haggai, the [r]LORD's messenger, in the LORD's message unto the people, saying, [s]I am with you, saith the LORD.

14 ¶ And the LORD [t]stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest, and the spirit of all the remnant of the people; and they came, and did [u]work in the house of the LORD of hosts, their God,

* There is a serious and, as I think, insuperable grammatical difficulty in translating this passage as it is in our English version, and in referring the Hebrew word rendered 'Desire' directly to the Messiah. The difficulty may be stated thus: The Hebrew word for 'desire' is feminine gender, while the verb for 'shall come' is plural and masculine. Such a noun cannot in any construction be applied to Christ at all, and even if it could be, the verb is not in grammatical concord with it. I am compelled, therefore, to admit, with most modern critics, that the ordinary interpretation of this passage is erroneous. I agree with Henderson, that 'the only practicable solution warranted by grammatical usage, consists in ascribing chamudah to be a collective noun, conveying a plural idea, the gender of which not having yet presented itself to the mind of the prophet when he enunciated the verb (which comes first in Hebrew), he naturally expressed it in the masculine as the more worthy gender. The construction in such cases is not formal, but logical.' The proper translation of the clause, therefore, will be: 'And then the things desired by all nations shall come.' Though this particular word does not refer to the Messiah, yet the prophecy is still Messianic. The things desired are the blessings of the new covenant, the redemption-work of Christ; the peace, joy, and salvation of the gospel. —P.

CHAPTER II.

1 He encourageth the people to the work, by promise of greater glory to the second temple than was in the first. 10 Under the type of holy things and unclean he showeth their sins hindered the work. 20 God's promise to Zerubbabel.

IN the [a]seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the LORD by[1] the prophet Haggai, saying,

2 Speak[b] now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, [c]governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest, and to the residue of the people, saying,

3 Who is [d]left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it [e]now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing?

4 Yet [g]now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the LORD; and be strong, O Joshua son of Josedech, the high-priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the LORD, and [h]work: for [i]I am with you, saith the LORD of hosts:

5 According to the [j]word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so [k]my Spirit remaineth among you; fear ye not.

6 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, [l]Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the [2]heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land;

7 And I will shake all nations, and [m]the desire of all nations shall come:[3] and [n]I will fill this house with glory, saith the LORD of hosts.

8 The[o] silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the LORD of hosts.

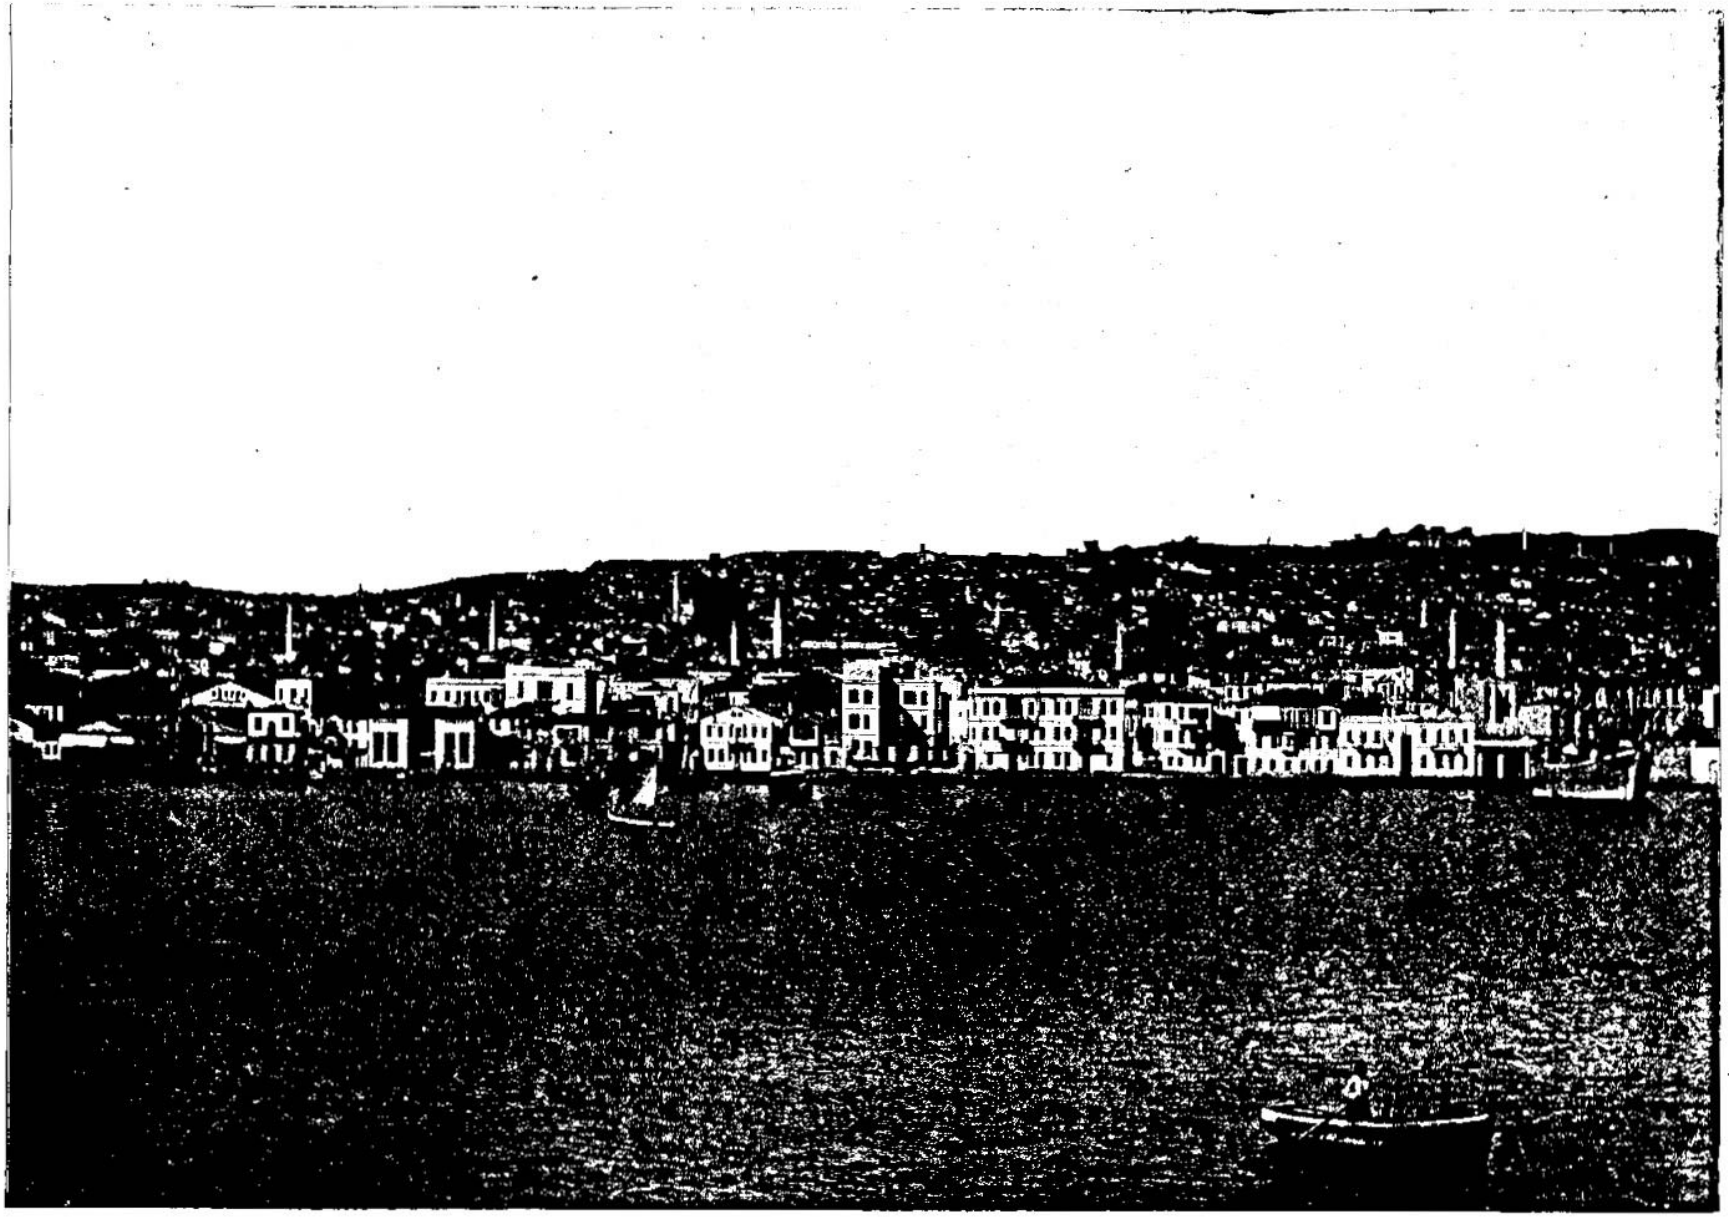
9 The[q] glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the LORD of hosts: and in this place [r]will I give peace, saith the LORD of hosts.

10 ¶ In the [s]four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

11 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [t]Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying,

12 If one bear [u]holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? And the priests answered and said, No.

13 Then said Haggai, If [v]one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.



14 Then answered Haggai, and said, [w]So is this people, and so is this nation before me,

CHAPTER II. Ver. 6, 7, 21, 22. Not only was the Jewish church and state repeatedly shaken by manifold disasters, but the nations around were shaken and overturned by the rise and fall of the Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires, to make way for Christ's incarnation and gospel church. And they will be further shaken by the fall of the Antichristian and Mahometan powers, to make way for his universal reign on earth. 7. Christ is the desire of all nations; infinitely desirable in himself, and desired and embraced by all that know him; and his presence filled the second temple with glory. 8. If I regarded outward splendour, I could easily furnish gold and silver to render this temple magnificent. 12–14. As legal holiness is not so easily communicated as legal uncleanness, so your sacrifices do not sanctify you; but your sinful hearts, and neglect to build my temple, debase your offerings, and bring a curse on your labours. 23. Zerubbabel, but chiefly Christ, is a signet, God's precious favourite, who is intrusted with all power, and sealed as the head of his church, and who seals it to the day of redemption.

Ver. 3. Some of the oldest men who returned might perfectly remember the first temple. The foundation of the second temple was laid in the second year of Cyrus, fifty-three years after the destruction of the first; and this prophecy was uttered fifteen years after the laying of that foundation; in all sixty-eight years: so that there might be several who had been familiar with the first temple, from twelve to thirty years, or even upwards. C.

HARBOR OF THESSALONICA—WHERE ST. PAUL ESTABLISHED A CHRISTIAN CHURCH, TO WHICH HE WROTE TWO EPISTLES FROM ATHENS. [Haggai, ii:7]—"And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts." The desire of all nations as expressed in this verse is generally considered as referring to Christ. We give as an illustration of this prophecy the harbor of Thessalonica, one of the cities in which St. Paul founded the Christian church. This was an ancient city of Macedonia. It was first called Thessalonica after Thessalonica, the wife of Cassander. It is now a city of perhaps 75,000 people. No city on the coast of Asia Minor presents a more attractive and thrifty appearance from the ships in the harbor than this. This is a very important trade point. As in the ages past, so today it continues to have a large number of Greeks among its inhabitants.

saith the LORD; and [z]so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer there is unclean.

15 And now, I pray you, [a]consider from this day and upward, from before [b]a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the LORD.

16 Since[c] those days were, [d]when one came to an heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the press-fat for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty.

17 I[e] smote you with blasting, and with mildew, and with hail, in all the labours of your hands; yet [f]ye turned not to me, saith the LORD.

18 Consider[g] now from this day and upward, from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, even from the day that [h]the foundation of the LORD's temple was laid, consider it.

19 Is the seed yet in the barn? yea, as yet the [i]vine, and the fig-tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive-tree, hath not brought forth: [k]from this day will I bless you.[4]

20 ¶ And [l]again the word of the LORD came unto Haggai in the four and twentieth day of the month, saying,

21 Speak to [m]Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will [n]shake the heavens and the earth;

22 And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen;[5] and [o]I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother.

23 In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the LORD, and will make thee as a signet:[6] for I have [p]chosen thee, saith the LORD of hosts.

Ver. 7. The Desire of all nations. Before, and at the time of our Lord's appearing, the Jews were accustomed to apply this title to MESSIAH, as appears from the Rabbies Aquila and Jarchi. He is truly 'the Desire of all nations;' even of those that know him not, and of those who reject him—for all nations desire pardon of sin and redemption from death, and are ever longing for liberty—all which are in JESUS CHRIST, and in him alone. This glorious title seems to refer to Jacob's prophecy, Ge. 49. 10—'to him shall the gathering of the people be'—which was literally exemplified in the commencement, when, in expectation of the kingdom of Messiah there were assembled at Jerusalem so many 'devout men out of every nation under heaven,' Ac. 2. 5. C.

Ver. 9. There was in 'the former' Solomon's temple, great architectural glory; besides, it was totally overlaid with gold. But its chief glory lay in the fire from heaven, the Urim and Thummim, the anointing oil, the Shekinah, or visible glory, and the Spirit of prophecy. Toanith, fol. 56. 1., all which were wanting in the latter temple. In nothing, therefore, could the 'latter' exceed the 'former' but in the presence of him who was the true Shekinah, whom angels announced with 'peace on earth'—who came and preached peace, and who finally, 'having made peace through the blood of his cross,' now pervades the hearts of all true believers with 'the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—The peculiar time of God's messages and mercies ought to be remarked, and beautiful is every one in its season.—If we be hearty in God's work, he will give us all necessary encouragement.—If, amidst external discouragements, we act for him with vigour, we cannot but succeed. If Christ and his Spirit be with us, nothing need discourage us. He will work all our work in us, and perfect that which concerneth us. He will provide all our necessary expenses. He will shake and overturn nations, in order to establish his church and her privileges. He will extirpate idolatries, that himself, and his oracles and ordinances, may be ALL IN ALL: and his presence will secure peace and tranquillity. God's ministers must assist not interfere with, one another. For it will require great pains to render men duly sensible of their spiritual maladies, and the proper remedies for them. Sinful pollution is much easier communicated and spread than holiness. It is not living among saints that will render us holy in God's sight: and our inward corruptions, and sinful misconduct, often render our works, which are materially good, unacceptable to God. The more we expect from creatures, the more we shall be disappointed: but the more firmly we expect from the new kingdom, the more shall we enjoy. If we take no care of God's interest, we cannot expect that he will take care of ours; but if we make conscience of duty, we may look for his gracious rewards. If we honour him, he will favour, protect, and honour us. Nor need we be dismayed at the ruin of the wicked, since it is but the earnest of deliverances to the church.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF HAGGAI.

It is undeniable that the Jews, in consequence of this prophecy, ch. 2. 7, did expect MESSIAH to appear in this temple, until it was destroyed by Titus the Roman, when, in order to evade its application to JESUS OF NAZARETH, they applied it to a third temple, which they expect to see erected at some future period. For the same purpose the Jewish writers (who are followed, not in the purpose, but in the interpretation, by some modern commentators), contend that the word translated 'Desire,' being in construction with a plural verb, should be changed to 'desires,' which they understand of desirable things, the silver, gold, and rich presents of all nations, such as were presented to Solomon by the queen of Sheba. But this change is not sanctioned by any MS., and the word was unquestionably read in the singular number by the Targum and the Vulgate. Others have insinuated that this prophecy cannot be applied to Messiah, inasmuch as the temple in which JESUS OF NAZARETH appeared was not the second, the temple of Zerubbabel, but the third, the temple of Herod. But whatever repairs and additions Herod made, it is unquestionable that, for all religious purposes, a temple existed during the forty-six years the temple of Herod was in progress. In fact, no nominal distinction was ever made by the Jews between the temple of Zerubbabel and that of Herod; and Josephus himself, upon one occasion, mentions only two temples—a former in the days of Solomon, a latter in the days of Cyrus; and in the Chronicon Hebraum, the temple is said to have been destroyed 440 years after it was built. To nothing less than the advent of Messiah, therefore, can this glorious prophecy be referred; and nothing less than the presence of 'God manifest in the flesh' could fulfil the prediction, and render 'the glory of the latter house greater than of the former.' C.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET ZECHARIAH.

Zechariah was one of the captives who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylon, and, from an expression in ch. 2. 4, there is reason to conclude that he was called to the prophetic office when a young man. He began to prophesy in the second year of Darius Hystaspes, in the eighth month of the ecclesiastical year, and consequently two months after Haggai, and was a powerful assistant to that prophet in promoting the building of the temple. His prophecy, after a solemn call to repentance, contains nine visions with which God was pleased to favour him, ch. i.–vi.; followed by three discourses enforcing godly practice, with predictions of the trials and deliverances of his people, and of the entire gospel church to the end of the world, ch. vii.–xiv. C.

DOG RIVER, BEYROUT—NEAR THE ROCK TABLETS CONTAINING THE CARTOUCHES OF RAMESES II. OF EGYPT, PLACED HERE IN THE FOURTEENTH CENTURY BEFORE CHRIST. [Zechariah, i:15.]—"And I am very sore displeased with the heathen that are at ease: for I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward the affliction." At the time Zechariah wrote his prophecy Beyrout was in the bounds of a heathen country. It is a very old place, and is spoken of in history before the time of Alexander the Great. This place was entirely destroyed in the second century before Christ in consequence of a rebellion against Antiochus VII. After the destruction of Jerusalem, Titus is said to have caused numerous Jews to enter the lists against each other at Beyrout. The picture above of the bridge over the Dog river is about six miles north of the city in sight of the Bay of St. George. The Dog river has its source in Mount Jebel Sunnin.

CHAPTER I.

1 Zechariah exhorteth to repentance. 7 The vision of the horses and their angelic riders. 12 At the prayer of the angel, comfortable promises are made to Jerusalem. 18 The vision of the four horns and the four carpenters.

IN the[a] eighth month, in the second year of Darius,[b] came[c] the word of the LORD unto Zechariah, the son of Barachiah, the son of Iddo the prophet,[1] saying,

2 The LORD [d]hath been sore displeased[2] with your fathers.

3 Therefore say thou unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [e]Turn ye unto me, saith the LORD of hosts, and [f]I will turn unto you, saith the LORD of hosts.

4 Be ye not [h]as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets have cried, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [i]Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: [j]but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith the LORD.

5 Your[k] fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live for ever?

6 But my words and my statutes, which I commanded my servants the prophets, did they not take hold of[3] your fathers? and they returned and said, [l]Like as the LORD of hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath he dealt with us.

7 ¶ Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Sebat,[4] in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto Zechariah, the son of Barachiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying,

8 I saw by night, and behold a [m]man riding upon a red horse, and he [o]stood among the myrtle-trees that were in the bottom; and behind him were there [p]red horses, speckled,[5] and white.

9 Then said I, O my lord, [q]what are these? And the angel [r]that talked with me[6] said unto me, I will show thee what these be.

10 And the [s]man that stood among the myrtle-trees[t] answered and said, These are they whom the LORD hath [u]sent to walk to and fro through the earth.

11 And they answered the [v]angel of the LORD that stood among the myrtle-trees, and said, [x]We have walked to and fro through the earth, and behold all the earth sitteth still, and is [y]at rest.

12 ¶ Then [z]the angel of the LORD[7] answered and said, O LORD of hosts, [a]how long wilt thou not have mercy on [b]Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years?

13 And the LORD answered the angel that talked with me with [c]good words and comfortable words.

14 So the [d]angel that communed with me said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, I am [e]jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy.

15 And I am very sore displeased with the heathen that are [g]at ease: for I was but [h]a little displeased, and they [i]helped forward the affliction.

16 Therefore thus saith the LORD, [j]I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies: [k]my house shall be built in it, saith the LORD of hosts, and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem.

17 Cry yet, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [l]My cities through prosperity[8] shall yet be spread abroad; and the LORD shall yet [m]comfort Zion, and shall yet [o]choose Jerusalem.

18 ¶ Then lifted I up mine eyes, and saw, and behold four [p]horns.[9]

19 And I said unto the angel that talked with me, [q]What be these? And he answered me, These are the horns which have [r]scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem.

20 And the LORD showed me four [s]carpenters.[1]

21 Then said I, What come these to do? And he spake, saying, These are the horns which have [t]scattered Judah, so that no man did lift up his head: but these are come to [z]fray them, to cast out the horns of the Gentiles, which [a]lifted up their horn over the land of Judah to scatter it.[3]

CHAPTER II.

1 God, in the care of Jerusalem, sendeth to measure it. 6 The redemption of Zion. 10 The promise of God's presence.

I LIFTED[a] up mine eyes again,[1] and looked, and behold [b]a man[2] with a measuring line in his hand.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 3, 6. Your wicked ancestors and false prophets have, according to my threatenings, perished in their sins. 8 10. The man riding on a red horse denotes Christ God-man redeeming us to God by his blood, and ready to execute his judgment on all who reject his mercy. The red, speckled, and white horses that attend him represent his angels and ministers as employed in executing or declaring his works of wrath or mercy. The myrtle-trees in the bottom denote the Jews and other saints preserved in debasement and trouble. 18–21. The horns may represent the Samaritans, Arabians, Ammonites, and Philistines; or the four empires of Chaldea, Persia, Greece, and Rome; and the carpenters may denote Joshua, Zerubbabel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and other Jewish deliverers or protectors; or even the four empires which destroyed one another.

Ver. 3. Turn ye unto me, &c. From this and similar expressions some have concluded that the work of spiritual salvation must begin with man, but facts concur with Scripture in attributing the whole work of grace to God. When a house is on fire and the inmates asleep, who begins the work of temporal salvation—the people who awake, or the man whose voice awakes them? Even so the Lord calls to the sleeping sinner: and when he hears and arises, surely the work of spiritual salvation began not with the sinner, but with 'God that showeth mercy.' C.

Ver. 8. A man. The Son of God appearing as the leader or 'Captain of God's hosts.' Comp. ver. 11; see Jos. 5. 13, 14.—Riding: to denote the subserviency of the creatures, the celerity of his providential movements, and the irresistible power of his government. See Ps. 45. 4; Re. 6. 2; 19. 11, 14.—Red: an emblem of war.—Stood: at rest, but ready for action.—Myrtle-trees: emblems of peace.—Bottom: valley.—Red, speckled, white: various conditions of war—mingled war and peace—followed by the reign of righteousness. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The law must be preached as an introduction to the gospel. The past judgments of God upon sinners ought to be improved by us as warnings to avoid imitation of their sins; and the view of his almighty power ought to animate us to a speedy and serious repentance. It is happy to have him for a friend, but terrible to have him our adversary. No pattern ought to be copied in contempt of or disobedience to him; and no safety can be expected in obstinate wickedness. No unbelief can falsify God's word. If we receive not his promises, he will execute his threatenings upon us. But how closely Jesus Christ cleaves to his people in all their debasement and distress! He is ready to teach his servants, or employ his angels or ministers, for their relief. And while most of mankind remain unconcerned under the curse of God and the power of the devil, seasonably and effectually he intercedes for his people. Hereby is ensured to his church the destruction of all their cruel and brutal enemies, and comfort and happiness to themselves. And let Satan find as many and as powerful agents to oppress the church as he will, Christ will find enough to resist and destroy them.

TAKING FREIGHT, VATHY, SAMOS—THE BIRTHPLACE OF PYTHAGORAS, THE PHILOSOPHER. [Zechariah, ii:10, 11.]—"Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion; for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people; and I will dwell in the midst of thee and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee." Not merely the rebuilding of the temple is here signified, and the re-establishment of ordained worship at Jerusalem, but also the incarnation of Christ and His perpetual presence in the church in all countries. Vathy, Samos, is one of the cities on the coast of Asia Minor that is now sharing the benefits of the commerce which has grown out of Christian civilization, which is destined to embrace all nations.

2 Then said I, Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, [c]To measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof.

3 And, behold, the angel that [d]talked with me went forth, and another[3] angel went out to meet him,

4 And said unto him, Run, speak to this young[e] man, saying, [f]Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein.

5 For I, saith the LORD, [h]will be unto her a wall of fire[4] round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her.

6 ¶ Ho,[i] ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the LORD: for [j]I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the LORD.

7 Deliver[k] thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon.

8 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, After the [l]glory[5] hath he sent me[6] unto [m]the nations which spoiled you; for he that [n]toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye.

9 For, behold, [p]I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants: and [q]ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me.

10 ¶ Sing[r] and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I [s]will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the LORD.

11 And [t]many nations shall be joined to the LORD in that day, and shall be my people: and I will [u]dwell in the midst of thee: and thou shalt know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto thee.

12 And the LORD shall [v]inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again.

13 Be[w] silent, O all flesh, before the LORD: for he is [x]raised up out of [7]his holy habitation.[8]

CHAPTER III.

1 Under the type of Joshua, the restoration of the church, 8 Christ the Branch is promised.

AND he[a] showed me [b]Joshua the high-priest standing before [c]the angel of the [1]LORD, and [2]Satan [d]standing at his right hand to resist him.[3]

2 And the [e]LORD said unto Satan, [f]The LORD rebuke thee, O Satan; even the LORD that hath [h]chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee: is not this a [i]brand plucked out of the fire?

3 Now Joshua was clothed with [j]filthy garments, and stood before the angel.

4 And he answered and spake unto those that stood before him, saying, [k]Take away the filthy garments from him. And unto him he said, Behold, I have [l]caused thine iniquity to pass from thee, and I will [m]clothe thee with change of raiment.

5 And I said, Let them set [o]a fair mitre upon his head. So they set a fair mitre upon his head, and clothed him with garments. And the angel of the LORD stood by.

6 ¶ And the angel of the LORD [p]protested unto Joshua, saying,

7 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [q]If thou wilt walk in my ways, and if thou wilt keep my charge,[4] then thou shalt also [r]judge my house, and shalt also keep my courts; and I will give thee [s]places [t]to walk among these that stand [8]by.

8 ¶ Hear now, O Joshua the high-priest, thou and thy fellows that sit before thee: for they are men wondered at;[7] for behold, I will bring forth my servant, the [u]BRANCH.[8]

9 For, behold, the [v]stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one stone shall be [w]seven eyes: behold, I will [x]engrave the graving thereof, saith the LORD of hosts, and I [y]will remove the iniquity of that land in one day.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 4, 5. Multitudes of houses shall be built without the walls, and all live in peace and safety, as God himself will effectually protect them; and his presence in his ordinances will be their distinguished honour. 6–9. Ye who yet remain scattered here and there in Chaldea, hasten to your own country; for scarcely shall my glory have taken possession of the temple at Jerusalem when I will further revenge the injuries done to you upon the inhabitants of Babylon, and reduce them into a state of bondage to the Medes and Persians, who were lately their tributaries.

REFLECTIONS.—The more we have seen of divine things the more we should search into them. Nor need we fear that room for new converts will ever be wanting in the church. Yea, thrice happy is it when multitudes are joined to the Lord, and have him for their protector and glory! Alas! that such multitudes, through unbelief, should be so averse to leave their bondage and share the liberty of Christ! But no dispersion or slavery can hinder his redressing the grievances of his people, or avenging their injuries. Infinitely tender is his sympathy towards them in their distress; and plainly he marks his and his servants' mission in the seasonable fulfilment of his promises and threatenings. Nothing on earth can more rejoice gracious souls than to behold the church restored to her privileges, enlarged by the accession of multitudes, and blessed with the presence of God. And in everything, especially in his great works, we ought silently to adore and wait for him.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1, 2. Satan laboured, by accusations and other means, to render Joshua's ministrations for himself and his people unsuccessful. But Christ, in his Father's name, rebuked the devil, and defended Joshua and the returned remnant of the Jews as persons graciously preserved under, and delivered from, manifold dangers and trials of affliction. 3–5. Joshua's filthy garments represented the sinfulness and miseries of himself and his people; and his change of raiment the pardon of, and reformation from, their sins, and their advancement to glory and honour. 7. If Joshua conducts himself well the high-priesthood shall be continued with him and his descendants, and he shall be highly respected by his fellow-ministers, and at last admitted to the blessed fellowship of angels and glorified saints. 8. Joshua and his fellow-priests were monuments of God's marvellous deliverance from captivity, and were typical of Christ, who, as man, growing up amidst weakness, and bringing forth glory to God and happiness to men, is called The BRANCH. 9. This stone represents Christ as the only foundation laid in Zion, regarded by beholders unnumbered, endowed by God with all eminent gifts and graces, and made perfect by sufferings and glory, that he may be the source of the justification and sanctification of the whole church, and of all the happiness and safety of the world.

Ver. 1. To resist him in his attempts at reforming the idolatrous and immoral practices of priests and people. C.

Ver. 2. The use of Jehovah, the incommunicable name of God, is worthy of special note here. In the first clause it is given to 'the Angel of the Lord,' before whom both Joshua and Satan stood. In the second clause it is applied to God the Father. We are justified in concluding from this that the 'Angel of Jehovah' is the co-equal of Jehovah himself; or, in other words, that the Messiah, Christ, God's Son, is divine. P.

Ver. 8. Men wondered at. Typical men—signs, by their present deliverance, of God's future purposes of mercy and restoration to his people. C.

Ver. 9. Upon one stone, &c. 'From out of one stone shall be seven fountains; behold, I will open the orifice thereof' Booth. read. A reference, however, to ch. 4. 10, will, most probably, lead to the conclusion that 'seven eyes' is the preferable translation; then, for exposition, let it be recollected that 'seven' is the emblem of perfection in successive workings, terminating in rest: even as the six days of creation were closed by the hallowed Sabbath; that the 'seven eyes' represent the 'seven spirits' of Christ the Lamb, Re. 1. 4; 5. 6, and that these are not seven created spirits, but the seven infinite endowments of the Holy Ghost, Jn. 3. 34, whereby our Lord was fitted for the mediatorial office, Is. 11. 2; see also Zec. 4. 10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Satan never fails to resist and dis-

BAY OF ST. GEORGE—AT THE FOOT OF THE LEBANON MOUNTAINS, FROM WHICH THE CEDARS WERE CUT WHICH ENTERED INTO THE BUILDING OF THE TEMPLES IN JERUSALEM. [ZECHARIAH, iv:9.—"The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house, his hands shall also finish it; and thou shalt know that the Lord of Hosts hath sent me unto you." In the above picture we are in the city of Beyrout, overlooking the Bay of St. George. We are at the foot of the Lebanon mountains, from which the cedars were brought used in the construction of the first and second temples at Jerusalem. The bay is called after St. George, concerning whom there are many legends. The old story of St. George and the dragon is familiar to all. Tradition says that near this bay the dragon was killed, and that afterwards St. George washed his hands in its waters. Beyrout is in the midst of the silk-growing regions, and now occupies the place in the commercial world that Tyre, its ancient neighbor, formerly did.

CHAPTER IV.

1 By the golden candlestick is foreshowed the good success of Zerubbabel's foundation; 11 by the two olive-trees the two anointed ones.

AND the[a] angel that talked with me came again, and [b]waked[1] me, as a man that is wakened out of his sleep,

2 And said unto me, [c]What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and behold [d]a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl[2] upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven [e]pipes to the seven lamps,[3] which are upon the top thereof;

3 And [g]two olive-trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof.

4 So I answered and spake to the angel that talked with me, saying, [h]What are these, my lord?

5 Then [i]the angel that talked with me answered and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, [k]No, my lord.

6 Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the LORD unto Zerubbabel, saying, [l]Not by might,[4] nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the LORD of hosts.

7 Who art thou, [m]O great mountain?[5] before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth [n]the headstone thereof [o]with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it.

8 Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 The[p] hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house, his hands shall also finish it; and thou [r]shalt know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto you.

10 For [s]who hath despised the day of small things? [t]for they shall rejoice, and shall see the plummet[7] in the hand of Zerubbabel with those seven:[8] they[*] are the eyes of the LORD, which run to and fro through the whole earth.[9]

11 ¶ Then answered I, and said unto him, What are these [u]two olive-trees upon the right side of the candlestick, and upon the left side thereof?

12 And I answered again, and said unto him, What be these two olive-branches, which [1]through the two golden pipes[2] empty the golden[3] oil out of themselves?[4]

13 And he answered me and said, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord.

14 Then said he, These are the two [5]anointed ones,[6] that [t]stand by the LORD of the whole earth.[7]

CHAPTER V.

1 By the flying roll is showed the curse of thieves and swearers. 5 By a woman pressed in an ephah, the final damnation of Babylon.

THEN I turned,[1] and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold a flying [a]roll.

2 And he said unto me, What seest thou? And I answered, I see a [b]flying roll; the length thereof is [c]twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof ten cubits.

3 Then said he unto me, This is [d]the curse that goeth forth over the face of the whole earth:[2] for [e]every one that stealeth shall be cut off as on this side according to it;[3] and every one that sweareth[4] shall be cut off as on that side[5] according to it.

4 I will bring it forth, saith the LORD of hosts, and it shall [g]enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him [h]that sweareth falsely by my name: and it shall remain in the midst of his house, and [i]shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof.

5 ¶ Then the angel [j]that talked with me went forth, and said unto me, Lift up now thine eyes, and see what is this that goeth forth.

6 And I said, What is it? And he said, This is [k]an ephah[6] that goeth forth. He said moreover, This is their resemblance through all the earth.

7 And, behold, there was lifted up a [l]talent[8]

courage as far as he can the faithful ministers and worshippers of God. But Christ is our present helper in time of need. And he will be graciously pitiful to our infirmities, and ready to relieve. With him narrow escapes from imminent danger are preludes of, and may be pleas for, further favours. No sinful or distressing pollutions can break his covenant with us. And if our hearts be upright with him, he will bear with our infirmities, and reward our services done in faith. There is sufficient virtue in him to change both our state and nature; and great and lasting will be the honours of his faithful servants.—But how infinitely marvellous are the incarnation, person, and office of our Redeemer! Infinitely marvellous were God's preparations of him for his debased and honorary work, as the only Saviour of men. And infinitely delightful are the pardons, sanctification, peace, rest, and holy fellowship which his people enjoy through him.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 2, 3, 11, 14. The candlestick denotes the church curiously framed, pure, precious, and durable; the seven lamps, her ministers and members; the two olive-trees, Christ in his natures or offices, or he and his Spirit in their new-covenant stations; the oil, gifts and graces; and the pipes for conveying it, the ordinances of the gospel. 6–10. Not by human but divine assistance, shall Zerubbabel, notwithstanding all the attempts of the heathens to hinder him, happily and triumphantly finish the building of the temple; and even you who have had low thoughts of the beginning of this work, shall rejoice when you see him carrying it on prosperously, and marvellously assisted by my all-seeing, all-preserving, and governing providence. And in like manner shall Jesus Christ, notwithstanding all the opposition of hell and earth, from age to age build up his gospel church, though by weak instruments, to the great comfort of his people.

Ver. 6. Not by might, &c. The natural light of the sun is not supplied by man's 'might or power,' but by God's good pleasure. The tree is planted and tended by man's hand, but yet the growth of the tree, and the provision of oil for artificial light, is as much the work and gift of God as is the light of the sun. So Zerubbabel shall be God's agent to build his temple, but his light to work and his assumed success are totally independent of human power, and must proceed from the grace and energy of the Holy Spirit. C.

Ver. 14. The two anointed ones. The Mosaic and Christian dispensations, that stand up before the Lord as his witnesses through the whole earth; and through whose prayers and ordinances God has dispensed and will dispense the graces of his Spirit throughout all ages. Comp. with ch. 6. 5, where 'standing before the Lord' refers not to individuals, but monarchies or dispensations. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Not only must the Holy Ghost exhibit to us divine things, but must also make us observe them. And it is desirable to understand God's manifestations of himself in his Word, ordinances, and providences; yea, great is the shame that we are so slow of heart to conceive of them. Yet in parables we may often understand their scope, though we should not clearly understand every circumstance of them. No want of human helps can hinder God's work. Nay, they are often withheld, that his power and grace may have all the glory. Silent progress will issue in triumphant shoutings. What takes its rise from may safely be committed to the care of his grace. He will never forsake the work of his hands. And while fulfilment of predictions attests their divine original, the smallest beginnings of his work ought never to be despised. It is inexpressibly comfortable to see magistrates and ministers active in building the church, and God himself making all his providences to concur for her welfare, while Jesus and his Spirit, by ordinances and oracles, pour down their influences upon her ministers and members.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 6–11. The ephah, a large measure, denotes that they would fill up a very large measure of iniquity everywhere before God would execute his judgments upon them. The woman sitting in the ephah denotes the Jewish nation awfully abandoned of lead: and this is a [1]woman that sitteth in the midst of the ephah.

TOMB OF SHEIK ISLAM, DAMASCUS—ONCE THE CAPITAL OF THE KINGDOM OF SYRIA, UNDER THE DYNASTY OF THE HADODS. [ZECHARIAH, vi.] -Zechariah wrote in the year B. C. 519. At that time Damascus was a wealthy city, having its seaport town at Tyre. Twenty-four hundred and fifteen years after the time that Zechariah wrote we still find Damascus a prosperous and wealthy, though a wicked and ill-governed city. It was in this city that St. Paul was converted, and Christians have always lived here since his time, but for many hundred years it has been one of the principal cities of the Mohammedan religion. The term sheik means elder or eldest. It has a title of dignity belonging to the chiefs of the Arabian tribes. It is also a title of a religious person who preaches in the Mosques. The same form of government by which the sheik could speak with authority has existed since the time of Abraham. Especially among the Moslems the dead who have been distinguished in life by piety are greatly honored.

8 And he said, This is wickedness. And he cast it into the midst of the ephah; and he [n]cast the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof.

9 Then lifted I up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there [o]came out[2] two women, and the wind was in their wings; for they had wings[p] like the wings of a stork; and they lifted up the ephah between the earth and the heaven.

10 Then said I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the ephah?

11 And he said unto me, [q]To build it an house in the land of Shinar:[1] and it shall be established, and set there upon her own base.[2]

CHAPTER VI.

1 The vision of the four chariots. 9 By the crowns of Joshua the high-priest are showed the church and kingdom of Christ the Branch.

AND I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came [a]four [b]chariots out from between two mountains; and the mountains were [c]mountains of brass.

2 In the first chariot were [d]red horses, and in the second chariot [e]black horses,

3 And in the third chariot [f]white horses, and in the fourth chariot [g]grizzled and bay[1] horses.

4 Then I answered and said unto the angel that talked with me, [h]What are these, my lord?

5 And the angel answered and said unto me, These are the four [i]spirits[2] of the heavens,[3] which go forth from [k]standing before the LORD of all the earth.

6 The black horses[4] which are therein go forth into the north country;[5] and the white go forth [l]after them: and the grizzled go forth toward the south country.[6]

7 And the [m]bay went forth, and sought to go, that they might walk to and fro through the earth: and he said, Get you hence, walk to and fro through the earth. So they walked to and fro through the earth.

8 Then cried he upon me, and spake unto me, saying, Behold, these that go toward the north country have [n]quieted my spirit in the north country.

9 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

10 Take of them of the captivity, even of Heldai, of Tobijah, and of Jedaiah, [p]which are come from Babylon, and come thou the same day, and go into the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah;

11 Then take [q]silver and gold, and make [r]crowns, and set them upon the head of [7]Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest,

12 And speak unto him, saying, Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, Behold [s]the man whose name is the BRANCH: and he shall grow[8] up out of his place,[9] and [t]he shall build the temple of the LORD:

13 Even he shall build the temple[1] of the LORD; and he shall [u]bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a [v]priest upon his throne: and the [x]counsel of peace shall be between them both.[2]

14 And the crowns shall be to [y]Helem, and to Tobijah, and to Jedaiah, and to Hen the son of Zephaniah, for [z]a memorial in the temple of the LORD.

15 And they that [a]are far off[3] shall come and build in the temple of the LORD; and [b]ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto you. And this shall come to pass, [c]if ye will diligently obey the voice of the LORD your God.

CHAPTER VII.

1 The captives inquire of fasting. 4 Zechariah reproveth their fastings. 8 Sin the cause of their captivity.

AND it came to pass [c]in the fourth year[1] of king Darius, that [b]the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chisleu;

2 When they[2] had sent unto the house of God Sherezer and Regem-melech, and their men, to pray before the LORD,[3]

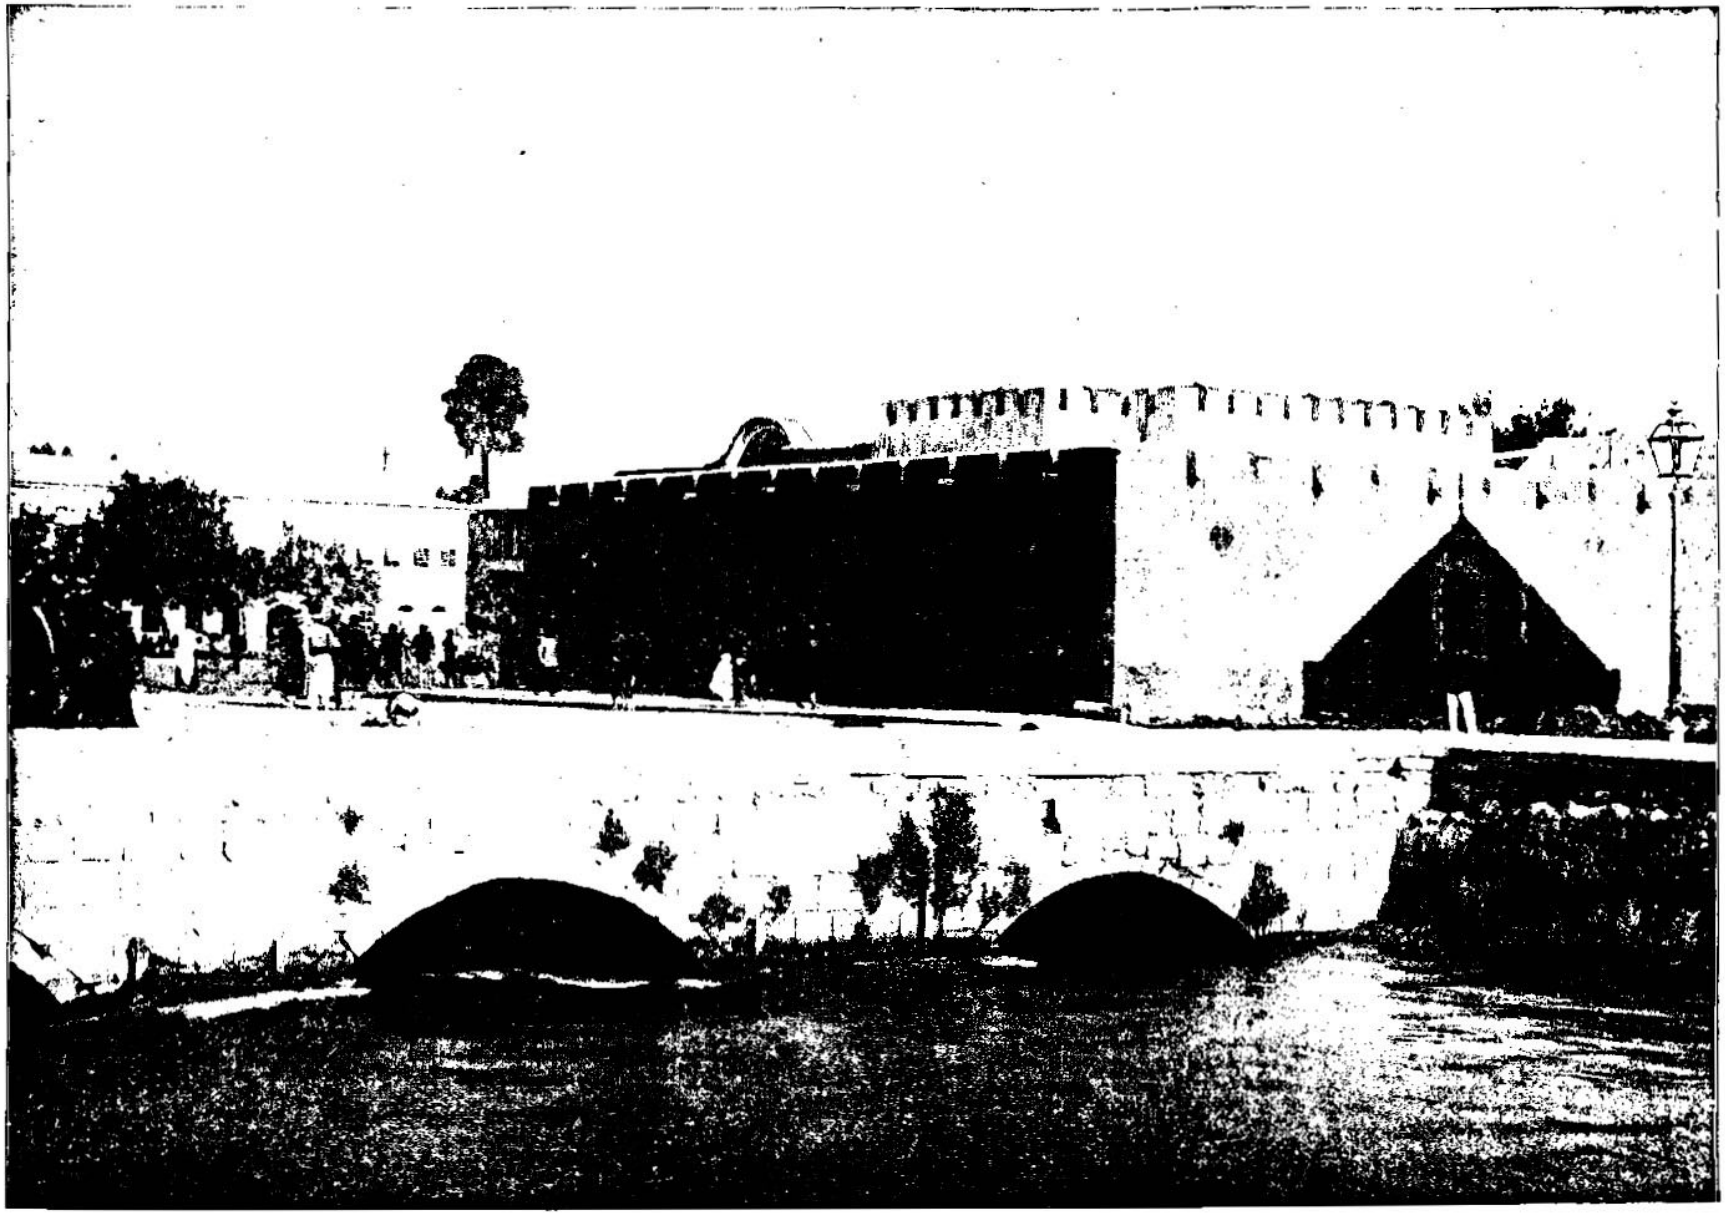
3 And to speak [c]unto the priests which were in the house of the LORD of hosts, and to the prophets, saying, Should I [d]weep in the [f]fifth to wickedness. The talent of lead, for covering the mouth of the ephah, denotes the dreadful and unavoidable weight of their calamities. The two winged women, who carried the ephah, denote the Roman armies destroying the Jews, and carrying them into a miserable and lasting captivity. Their fixing an house for it in the land of Shinar imports that the dispersion of the Jews by the Romans would be as miserable, and much more lasting, than the captivity in Babylon.



REFLECTIONS.—Fearful is the curse which all men are under by nature; and which will find them out, go where they will, if they continue without Christ. Thieves and profane swearers, those brethren in sin, are infamous and self-destroying wretches. And unavoidable, insupportable, and lasting is the wrath of God, which falls upon obstinate transgressors, and especially apostates from his true worship.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1–8. The brazen mountains may denote the unchangeable counsels of God, from which everything in churches or nations originates; or the seeming difficulties in the first rise of events. The four chariots, drawn by horses of different colours, may represent the diversified dispensations of Providence in acts of mercy or wrath; or the angels of God as everywhere throughout the world ministering therein; or the apostles and ministers of Christ as actuated by his Spirit, and ministering in what relates to the church; or the four successive empires in the world. The red horses represented the bloody Chaldeans; the black, the Persians, who executed God's vengeance in conquering Chaldea, called the north country; the white, the rapidly victorious Greeks; and the grisled and bay horses, the Romans at last mingled with the ravaging Goths, who especially carried their conquests to the south. [See Introduction, ch. iv. sect. xi.–xv.] 13. The counsel of peace denotes the promise of grace between Christ and his Father; and the gospel of our salvation, in which Christ's priestly and kingly offices are so gloriously connected. 14. The crowns remained in the temple a memorial of the liberality of those four men who had contributed the materials, and a figure of the future glory of Christ.

Ver. 8. Quieted my spirit. Fulfilled my purposes of judgment on the Babylonians, whose empire was called the north country, because extending to the north of Judea. C.

REFLECTIONS.—From what tender loving purpose all the events of Providence originate: nor can any opposition prevent their execution. In the most august and awful manner are they carried on; and angels and ministers are honoured to be the instruments. Diversified, ever varying, divinely actuated, admirably connected, and strangely mixed are their parts! And God takes pleasure in every motion of them; and all who reject Jesus Christ will find themselves at last without hope. It is honourable to help forward good works by our purse, even when we cannot do it in our persons: nor shall the generosity of such be unremembered by God. But how transcendently glorious is our blessed Mediator, upon whose head are many crowns, which can never totter nor be taken off! Marvellous and useful are his administrations in erecting and managing his church; and to himself shall all the glory and honour of his work redound. Yea, under him, in virtue of the new kingdom and gospel, both Jews and Gentiles are happily and divinely united into his mystical body the church.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 5, 6. In the fast of the PUBLIC SQUARE, DAMASCUS—A NOTED PLACE IN THE TIME OF ABRAHAM (Genesis, xiv:15; xv:2) [Zechariah, vii:1.] "And it came to pass in the fourth year of King Darius, that the word of the Lord came unto Zechariah in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chisleu." At the time the prophecy of Zechariah was written, or in the time of King Darius, Damascus was included in the great Persian empire which stretched from India to Thrace and Egypt.

In the above picture we have a view of the leading public square in the city of Damascus. In the midst of the square is the city prison. We see the Abana river flowing under the square through great stone arches. Damascus was conquered by Nineveh, Babylon and Memphis. She lived before them and she has outlived them all. She has been twice supplanted by Antioch, and has seen Antioch decay. The secret of her life is the Abana river.

month, [g]separating myself, as I have done these so many years?[4]

4 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD of hosts unto me, saying,

5 Speak unto all the people of the land, and to the priests, saying, When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth[5] and [h]seventh month,[6] even those [i]seventy years, [j]did ye at all fast unto me, even to me?

6 And when ye did eat, and when ye did drink, [k]did not ye[7] eat for yourselves, and drink for yourselves?

7 Should[1] ye not hear the words[8] which the LORD hath [l]cried by[9] the former prophets, when Jerusalem was inhabited and in prosperity, and the cities thereof round about her, when men inhabited the [m]south and the plain?[1]

8 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah, saying,

9 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, Execute[p] true judgment,[2] and show mercy and compassions every man to his brother:

10 And [q]oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, nor the poor; and [r]let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart.

11 But[s] they refused to hearken, and pulled away the shoulder,[3] and stopped[4] their ears, that they should not hear.

12 Yea, [t]they made their hearts as an adamant stone, lest they should hear the law, and the words which the LORD of hosts hath sent in[u] his spirit by[5] the former prophets: therefore came [v]a great wrath from the LORD of hosts.

13 Therefore it is come to pass, that as [z]he cried, and they would not hear; so [y]they cried, and I would not hear, saith the LORD of hosts:

14 But [z]I scattered them with [a]a whirlwind among all the nations whom they knew not: thus the land [b]was desolate after them, that no man passed through nor returned; for they laid the pleasant land[6] desolate.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The restoration of Jerusalem. 9 They are encouraged to the building by God's favour to them. 16 Good works are required of them. 18 Joy and enlargement of the church promised.

AGAIN the[a] word of the LORD of hosts came to me, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [b]I was jealous for Zion with great jealousy, and I was jealous for her [c]with great fury.[1]

3 Thus saith the LORD, [d]I am returned[2] unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; and Jerusalem shall be called, [e]A city of truth; and the mountain of the LORD of hosts, The holy mountain.

4 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, There shall yet [f]old men and old women dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, and every man with his staff in his hand for very age.[3]

5 And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof.

6 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, If it be marvellous[4] in the eyes of the remnant of this people in these days, should it also be [h]marvellous in mine eyes? saith the LORD of hosts.

7 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, [i]I will save my people from the east country, and from the west[5] country;[6]

8 And [j]I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; and [k]they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in truth and in righteousness.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [l]Let your hands be strong, ye that hear in these days these words by the mouth of the prophets, which were in the day that the foundation of the house of the LORD of hosts [m]was laid, that the temple might be built.

10 For before these days [n]there was [o]no hire for man, nor any hire for beast; [p]neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in, because of the affliction: for I set[8] all men every one against his neighbour.

11 But [q]now I will not be unto the residue of this people as in the former days, saith the LORD of hosts.

12 For [r]the seed shall be prosperous;[9] the vine shall give her fruit, and the ground shall give her increase, and the heavens shall give their dew; and I will cause the [s]remnant of this people [t]to possess all these things.

13 And it shall come to pass, that as ye were [u]a curse among the heathen, [v]O house of Judah, and house of Israel; so will I save you, and ye fifth month they lamented the burning of the city and temple by the Chaldeans. In the fast of the seventh they bewailed the murder of Gedaliah, whom the Chaldeans made governor over their poor brethren which were left in Judea. But in neither did they fast in a right manner, or with a view to God's glory; and so their fasts were no more acceptable to God than their common eating and drinking to gratify their own sensual appetites. 11, 12. Like unruly bullocks, they refused to be under the yoke of God's laws, and obstinately rebelled against all his warnings, and would not even patiently hear his messages; yea, by a course of presumptuous sinning, they rendered their hearts quite obdurate and impenetrable to conviction, neither regarding the law of Moses, nor the instructions of the prophets which succeeded him in Israel.

Ver. 3. Should I weep? Now that the captivity has been restored, and the temple likely to be soon completed, 'should I continue to' weep?' The question being uttered upon the assumption that they had wept in contrition of spirit—a self-flattering assumption, which the prophet proceeds to rebuke, on the authority of Him who searches and 'tries the reins and the heart.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is an honour for great as well as small to reverence the messengers and ordinances of God, to supplicate his favours, and to ask his directions. Every man ought to be employed answerably to his station and gifts; and in cases of conscience, none ought to be more able and ready than God's ministers, whose daily business it is to search his Word. And if God afflict, it is time for us to humble ourselves under his mighty hand. Religious customs should neither be introduced nor altered without serious and mature deliberation; and never ought we to inquire into our duty, without being willing to hear our faults charged home on our consciences. But, alas! it is too common to make our own inclination, and not God's law, our rule: our pleasure, profit, or honour, not his glory, our end in our actions, whether natural, civil, or religious. All the faithful messengers of God, in every age, remarkably harmonize in the leading truths and duties of religion. And in practical religion, strict equity, tender compassion, and brotherly kindness, are ingredients of the highest importance. Yet, alas! how obstinately many professors neglect them, and practise the opposite vices! And fatal and answerable are the punishments which they incur thereby.

CHAPTER VIII. REFLECTIONS.—God's new-spiritual relations, gracious presence, and everlasting love, are sources of abundant benefits to his people: and the blessings of time, as well as of eternity, inseparably and closely follow sincere reformation from sin. Great is the mercy when children are so healthy, so safe from alarms of war, so well nourished, and so kindly affectioned, as in companies to follow their shall be [z]a blessing: [y]fear not, but let your hands be strong.

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, [z]As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked me to wrath, saith the LORD of hosts, and I repented not:

15 So[a] again have I thought in these days[1] to do well unto Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah: fear ye not.

16 ¶ These are the things that ye shall do, Speak[b] ye every man the truth to his neighbour; execute the [c]judgment of truth and peace[2] in your gates:

17 And[d] let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour: and [e]love no false oath: for all these are things that [g]I hate, saith the LORD.

18 ¶ And the word of the LORD of hosts came unto me, saying,

19 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [h]The fast of the fourth month,[3] and the fast of the fifth, and the fast of the seventh, and the fast of the tenth, shall be to [i]the house of Judah joy and gladness, and cheerful [j]feasts:[4] therefore love the truth and peace.[5]

20 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [k]It shall yet come to pass, that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities:

21 And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, [l]Let us go speedily[6] to pray before the LORD,[7] and to seek the LORD of hosts; I will go also.

22 Yea, [m]many people and strong nations shall come to seek the LORD of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the LORD.

23 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, In those days it shall come to pass, that [o]ten men[8] shall take hold, [p]out of all languages of the nations, even shall [q]take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, [r]We will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Amidst the judgments of the neighbouring nations God will defend his church. 9 Zion is exhorted to rejoice for the coming of Christ, and his peaceable kingdom. 12 God's promises of victory and defence.

THE burden[a] of the word of the LORD [b]in the land of Hadrach,[1] and Damascus shall be the rest thereof: [c]when the eyes of man, as of all the tribes of Israel, shall be toward the LORD.

2 And [d]Hamath also shall border thereby; [e]Tyrus, and Zidon, though it be [g]very wise.[2]

3 And Tyrus did build herself [h]a strong hold, [i]and heaped up silver as the dust, and fine gold as the mire of the streets.

4 Behold,[j] the Lord will cast her out, and he will smite her power in the sea; and she shall be devoured with fire.

5 Ashkelon[k] shall see it, and fear; [l]Gaza also shall see it, and be [m]very sorrowful; and Ekron, for her expectation, shall be ashamed; and the king shall perish from Gaza, and Ashkelon shall not be inhabited.

6 And [n]a bastard[3] shall dwell in Ashdod; and [o]I will cut off the pride of the Philistines.

7 And [q]I will take away his blood[4] out of his mouth, and his abominations from between his teeth; but [r]he that remaineth, even he, shall be for our God; and he shall be as a governor in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite.

8 And [s]I will encamp about mine house because of the army, because of him that passeth by, and because of him that returneth; and [t]no oppressor shall pass through them any more: for now [u]have I seen with mine eyes.

9 ¶ Rejoice[v] greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold, thy king cometh unto thee; [x]he is just, and having salvation, lowly, and [y]riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass.

10 And [z]I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle-bow shall be cut off: and [a]he shall innocent diversions; and when none other amuse themselves with such trifles: and especially when God gathers sinners to his church, and solemnly and practically acknowledges them his people. God can easily reverse the unhappy state of nations and churches, and turn their howlings into shouts of praise and transports of joy. And he will delightfully gather believers out of all kindreds, tongues, and languages. Why then should we ever doubt of his power or will to fulfil the most astonishing promises? Powerfully ought these to engage our hearts to our duty, however difficult or dangerous. And nothing should be dearer to us than the worship of God, and the winning of others to Christ.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 7. The Philistines shall be disabled from murdering and plundering the Jews; nay, shall be subdued by the Maccabees, and many of them turned to the Lord. 8. I will marvellously protect the Jews, while Greeks, Syro-Grecians, and Egypto-Grecians repeatedly march their armies through Canaan. 10. Wars and carnal confidences shall be extirpated; and by the preaching of the gospel among the Gentiles shall Christ's kingdom be extended, not only over all Canaan, but the whole world. 11. And as the Lord, according to his promise, brought you up out of Chaldea, where ye had neither hope nor happiness, so shall he, by the blood of Christ, the condition of the promise of grace, bring multitudes out of their state of heathenism, sinfulness, and misery. 12. Let not only those who remain in Chaldea hasten to Canaan, in hopes of redoubled blessings, sufficient to balance their past miseries; but let those who are in a state of heathenism and unregeneracy, in the faith of the gospel promises, hasten to Jesus Christ, the only Saviour and Refuge. 13–17. I will enable the Jews to withstand, subdue, and route their Syro-Grecian and Turkish enemies with great slaughter, and render themselves honoured and powerful; yea, by means of Jewish preachers, I will go forth conquering the nations, however learned or valiant, to Jesus Christ: and while the redeemed, and especially faithful ministers, are marvellously protected and honoured, persons of all ranks shall, with admiration of his glory and goodness, richly partake of his fulness.

Ver. 13. Sword of a mighty man. Seeing Christ comes to preach peace to the heathen, ver. 10, this conquest over Greece will be, not with the weapons that are carnal, but with 'the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God.' C.

Ver. 15. Defend them. As he 'defended' Paul from the cruelty and conspiracy of the Jews, and made Cæsar a shield against his inveterate enemies, Ac. 21. 27–36; 23. 14–27, 25. 11.—They shall drink—at the 'wells of salvation,' Is. 12. 3; see Jn. 4. 14, and make a joyful 'noise' to the Lord, Ps. 66. 1. Note, The church of God has always been distinguished by singing in her worship. See as specimens of her holy 'noise,' Ex. 15. 1–21, and the book of Psalms throughout. See also Lu. 2. 13; Mar. 14. 26; Ja. 5. 13; Re. 14. 3. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Fearful destructions await the disturbers of God's church. Their punishment may be in part delayed, but is never forgotten. Yet what blessed grace appears in the conversion of those who accept Jesus Christ as Saviour! And it promises well when men are turned from idols to the living God. Though Christ's little flock be in the midst of devourers, his protection can render them safe. Infinite is his excellency, ability, and suitableness to save sinners, even the chief. No case on this side hell is too desperate for his almighty power and grace: and his answerableness to our sinfulness and misery ought to animate our speedy flight to him for deliverance. When he, as the Captain of salvation, prepares and arms his instruments, an easy and notable victory is secured for his followers; and the overthrow of sin contributes to their honour and comfort. And great is their joy in himself and his grace, while they plentifully share of his fulness.

STREET OF GOD, DAMASCUS—TAKEN BY ALEXANDER THE GREAT IN 333 B. C. [Zechariah, ix:1.]—"The burden of the word of the Lord in the land of Hadrach, and Damascus shall be the rest thereof: when the eyes of man as of all the tribes of Israel, shall be toward the Lord." In the above we have a view of the Street of God in the city of Damascus. We find in the streets of this ancient city that every eastern nation and tribe has one or more representatives. Here are Damascus merchants with flowing robes and embroidered turban. Here are Turkish effendis decked in a caricature of Frank costumes. Here are mountain princes trotting along in crimson jackets covered with gold embroidery. Here are Bedouins spare in form and dark in visage. Here are Druse sheiks gorgeously arrayed in silk robes. Here are Kurdish shepherds in sheep-skin caps, and stately Persians with long white robes and flowing beards. These are the classes one is likely to see in the vicinity of the bazaars, a perpetual banquet of color.

12 ¶ Turn[c] you to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope: even to-day do I declare that I will render [d]double unto thee:[7]

13 When [e]I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against [f]thy sons, O Greece, and [h]made thee as the sword of a mighty man.

14 And [i]the LORD shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning: and the Lord GOD shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds of the south.

15 The LORD of hosts shall [j]defend them; and they [k]shall devour, and subdue with sling-stones;[8] and they [l]shall drink, and make a noise as through wine; and they [m]shall be filled like bowls, and as the [n]corners of the altar.

16 And the [o]LORD their God shall save them in that day as the flock of his people: for they shall be [p]as the stones of a crown,[1] lifted up [q]as an ensign upon his land.

17 For [r]how great is his goodness, and [s]how great is his beauty! [t]corn shall make the young men cheerful,[2] and new wine the maids.

is progressive; it extends over a long period; sometimes, as here, commencing soon after the words were uttered and reaching away down to the very end of time. CHAPTER X. Ver. 1-4. But though the Lord has promised plenty, ye must supplicate him for rains to effect it. Indulge yourselves therefore no more in idolatry and divination, which have so disappointed your fathers, and occasioned their miserable captivity, and my wrathful destruction of their princes and priests. I have now recovered you from your captivity, and made you strong and courageous, and have joined you together as a body civil and ecclesiastic, and enabled you to defend yourselves, and even harass your enemies; and quickly I will send you the Messiah, to found, fasten together, and defend his gospel church and destroy opposition. 5-12. Not only shall the Jews under the Maccabees valiantly defend themselves, and even enlarge their power, but especially in the beginning of the millennium they shall be wonderfully assisted by God; and after long and marvellous preservation and increase in their miserable dispersion, they and the ten tribes shall, with great joy, be brought back to Canaan, and there serve the Lord; while the Assyrians, Egyptians, and Turks, who had formerly murdered and oppressed them, shall be debased and ruined. And in like manner shall God, by his lively and animated gospel ministers, call and persuade Gentile nations to Christ, mercifully recover them from their long-continued idolatries and delusions, render them his peculiar people, strengthen and comfort them by the influence of his Spirit, and graciously call them into the church, and thereby render her exceedingly extensive and numerous; and shall remove all obstacles, whether heathenish or antichristian, out of their way, and render them strong and active, be cause of their faith in Jesus Christ.

Ver. 2. Flock. Were driven into captivity as sheep without a shepherd. C.

Ver. 3. I punished the goats. The allusion seems to be to the custom of eastern shepherds who teach goats, as being bolder and more active, to go at the head of their flocks. C.

Ver. 4. Oppressor is rendered 'exactor,' and taken in a good sense, Is. 60. 17: the modern term would most probably be 'financier.' C.

Ver. 6. Having been literally 'cast off,' it follows, by every law of interpretation, that the Jews will be as literally 'brought again to their place.' See ver. 10 C.

Ver. 8. I will hiss for them. The allusion is to a peculiar whistle by which the eastern shepherd collects his flock. See and comp. Is. 5. 26 with 7. 18. C.

Ver. 10. In interpreting this prophecy it must be kept in mind that it was written after the Jews had returned from Babylon. It cannot, therefore, refer to that event: nor indeed could the sweeping statement in the close of this verse, 'and place shall not be found for them,' be regarded as at all applicable to the state of the country after the return from exile. Some other period must have been in the prophet's eye; and I cannot but think that period is still future. P.

Ver. 11. And he shall pass; the leader of the house of Judah, ver. 4.—Deeps of the river; the national resources of Assyria represented by the Euphrates, and of Egypt represented by the Nile. See Col. 2. 6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In our prayers we must follow the promises and attend the providences of God, requesting mercies both suitable and seasonable. And in this let us look to God only. Wandering after strange gods will but expose us to disappointment and trouble. Whether things distress or comfort us, it is God who directs them. All the power that is either for us or against us is of him. His people become powerful and courageous when he affords them his assistance and presence. By him all enemies are easily overcome and obstacles removed. At his effectual call multitudes gather into his church from places the most distant. Marvellous then are her comforts, numbers, power, and preservation; and courageous, upright, and evangelical the walk of her members. Nothing is wanting where JEHOVAH is our strength, our song, and our salvation.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1-3. Lebanon may denote the temple, Jerusalem, or even Judea in general. Fir-trees, cedars, oaks, shepherds, lions, may denote their great men, valiant soldiers, and cruel rulers. The forest may denote Jerusalem, or the common people, unfruitful in holiness, but numerous, entangling, and

CHANGING HORSES ON THE ROAD TO BEYROUT—THIS PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN ON TOP OF THE LEBANON MOUNTAINS. [Zechariah, xi:1.]—"Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars." The artist and the writer left Damascus at 4:30 o'clock in the morning by a diligence to go to Beyrout. This is a ride of seventy miles over the Lebanon mountains, and is made in thirteen hours. Horses are changed every hour. Six are used to pull the conveyance and much of the time they pass in a sweeping gallop. These horses are being changed near the top of the Lebanon mountains, and the time is near the middle of the day. The Bible represents Lebanon as lying on the northern border of the promised land. This mountain has always been famous for cedars. Some distinguished traveler has said: "I have traveled in no part of the world where I have seen another such variety of glorious mountain scenes within so narrow a compass."

12 And [d]I will strengthen them in the LORD; and they shall [e]walk up and down in his name, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER XI.

1 The destruction of Jerusalem. 4 Under the type of Zechariah is showed Christ's care for the flock, the Jews: and their rejection for ingratitude and light estimation of him. 15 The type and curse of a foolish shepherd.

OPEN thy doors, O [a]Lebanon,[1] that [b]the fire may devour thy cedars.

2 Howl,[c] fir-tree;[d] for the cedar is fallen; because the mighty[2] are spoiled; howl, O ye oaks of Bashan; for the forest of the vintage[3] is come down.

3 There[e] is a voice of the howling of the shepherds; for their [g]glory is spoiled: a voice of the roaring of [h]young lions; for the [i]pride of Jordan is spoiled.[4]

4 ¶ Thus saith the LORD [j]my God, [k]Feed the flock[5] of the slaughter,

5 Whose [l]possessors slay them, and hold themselves not guilty; and they that sell them say, [m]Blessed be the LORD; for I am rich: and their own shepherds pity them not.

6 For[6] I[n] will no more pity the inhabitants of the land, saith the LORD: but, lo, [p][I will deliver[7] the men every one into his neighbour's hand, and [q]into the hand of his king; and they shall smite the land, and out of their hand I will not deliver them.

7 And [r]I will feed the flock of slaughter,[8] even you, O poor[9] of the flock. And I took unto me two staves;[1] the one I called Beauty, and the other I called Bands;[2] and I fed the flock.

8 Three[s] shepherds also I cut off in one month; and [t]my soul loathed them,[3] and their soul also abhorred me.

9 Then said I, [u]I will not feed you: [v]that that dieth, let it die; and that that is to be cut off, let it be cut off; [x]and let the rest eat every one the flesh of another.[4]

10 And I took my staff, even Beauty, and cut it asunder, that [y]I might break my covenant which I had made with all the people.

11 And it was broken in that day: and so the [z]poor of the flock that waited upon me [a]knew[5] that it was the word of the LORD.

12 And I said unto them, If ye think [6]good, give me my price; and if not, [b]forbear. So they [c]weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver.

13 And the LORD said unto me, [d]Cast it unto the potter: a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORD.

14 Then I cut asunder mine other staff, even Bands,[7] that[e] I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.

15 ¶ And the LORD said unto me, Take unto thee yet the instruments of a [f]foolish shepherd:

16 For, lo, I will raise up a shepherd in the land, which [h]shall not visit those that be cut off,[8] neither shall seek the young one, nor heal that that is broken, nor feed[9] that that standeth still; but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their claws in pieces.[1]

17 Woe[i] to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock! [j]the sword shall be upon his [2]arm, and upon his right eye: his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened.

* In verses 1–3 the desolation of the whole of Palestine is predicted. The leading places only are named, but these are representatives of the several sections of the country:—Lebanon, of northern Palestine; Bashan, of eastern; Shephelah, of the pastoral south; and Jordan, of the centre.—C.

dangerous. The pride of Jordan may denote all Judea, overrun by the Roman armies, which enraged their rulers, even as the overflow of Jordan enraged the lions which lodged in its banks. 4, 7, 11. For about forty years before their last dispersion, Jesus Christ personally, and by his harbinger and apostles, called the Jews to himself; and many of the poorer sort were converted, and rendered poor in spirit; and, by following his directions in leaving their country and fleeing to Pella eastward of Jordan, most of them were preserved from the common ruin. 5, 6, 8, 9. The Jews were partly destroyed by the cruelty and violence of their own governors, by their intestine divisions, and by the Roman emperor, whom they had avowed for their king in opposition to Jesus Christ. Their princes, priests, and prophets, and the three sects of Pharisees, Sadducees, and Herodians, together with the three civil factions, all haters of God, and detested by him, were cut off one after another; and the nation in general abandoned to sword, famine, pestilence, and miserable captivity. 10, 14. The breaking of these staves may denote his renouncing all claim to them as his peculiar people, and dissolving all connection of government and affection among them; or his entire removal of the ordinances of the gospel from them, which were means of honourably uniting them to the church, and to one another in love. 15–17. They were given up to corrupt teachers and pretended Messiahs, who, by their false doctrines, &c., cruelly murdered their souls, preyed upon their substance, and decoyed them into ruinous calamities; and to civil rulers, whether of their own nation, or of the Romans, Persians, Antichristians, Turks, &c., who miserably oppressed them.—Yea, these teachers and rulers did but render themselves miserable in the issue.

Ver. 7. Beauty: salvation, meekness of spirit, holiness of heart and life, Ps. 149. 4; 1 Pe. 3. 4; Ps. 110. 3. —Bands: union in doctrine, object, and love, 1 Pe. 3. 8; Phil. 1. 27; Col. 2. 2. The word may also well imply brotherly and national union in one place previous to the dispersion, ver. 14. C.

Ver. 8. Three shepherds. Are these the Scribes, Pharisees, and Sadducees—the three great classes of the enemies of Christ the true Shepherd? Or, are they kings, priests, and prophets—the three pastoral orders in Israel? Or, are they 'the priests, people, and king,' threatened with judgment in 'a month,' Ho. 5. 1, 7; who are also addressed in the same chapter as Ephraim (ver. 3), Judah (ver. 5), and Benjamin (ver. 8), all described as shepherds (ver. 6), and summoned together to execution in Gibeah, Ramah, and Beth aven? ver. 8. This last view, though unsupported by authorities, seems decidedly preferable, as the people to whom Zechariah wrote must have been well acquainted with the writings of Hosea, the only prophet who had previously threatened a threefold destruction within a month. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Awfully alarming are the falls of cities, churches, or nations, or even of persons eminent in station. And dreadful and desperate is the condition of nations and churches when their rulers become oppressors and murderers, and when hearers become pleased with clerical monsters of wickedness. Before the most ruinous judgments God often tries men with the offered grace of his gospel. And great is the mercy if even the poorer sort embrace it and repent, when the rich and great pour contempt upon it. But dreadful is the case if the final offers of grace do but occasion men's impenitence and obstinate wickedness. And great is their misery whose churches are dissolved and abandoned by Heaven. Mutual contentions and common calamities quickly issue in their destruction. God justly gives up the refusers of his Son into the hands of unfaithful ministers, deceitful impostors, and unmerciful princes. And dreadful is the guilt of such, and certain and fearful their plagues.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1–9. These promises began to be accomplished in the victories of the Jews over the Syro-Grecians and other enemies in the time of the Maccabees, but will be more fully accomplished in the destruction of the Turks, who shall attack the Jews when newly returned from their present dispersion. They have also an accomplishment in the Lord's making all the attempts of Jews, heathens, or antichristians, against his gospel church, to issue in their own destruction, and the glorious deliverance and protection of his people. And in both cases deliverances, temporal or spiritual, are attended with a plentiful effusion of the Spirit, and deep repentance for sin. 10–14. [See Introduction, ch. iv. sect. 18, 19.]

Ver. 10. The Jewish traditions refer this passage to MESSIAH, so that the Christians cannot be accused of turning it to their own purposes. And when Israel shall come to a sense of their sin in 'crucifying the Lord of glory,' and 'look upon him' whose hands and feet their fathers 'pierced,' then shall their glory return, and their sin and uncleanness shall be washed away for ever. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Thrice happy are they who have the Almighty JEHOVAH, and all the burdens and blessings of his Word, on their side! He will effectually

CHURCH OF THE HOLY SEPULCHER—BUILT OVER THE GRAVE OF OUR SAVIOR. [HOSEA, vi:2.]—"After two days he will revive us; in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight." The Church of the Holy Sepulcher is supposed to stand upon the sight of the place where Christ was crucified. The Holy Sepulcher stands in the center of the rotunda of this church. It is covered by a small building twenty-six feet long by eighteen feet inside the church. The Holy Sepulcher is cased in yellow and white stone and is ornamented with slender semi-columns. It is surmounted by a tomb. The entrance into the sepulcher leads into the first apartment, called the Chapel of the Angel, where it is said that an angel sat on the stone that had been rolled away from the door of the sepulcher. The vault where it is said our Savior was buried is quadrangular, about six by seven feet. In the church which stands over the sepulcher there are many divisions and apartments belonging to different denominations.

the earth, and [d]formeth the spirit of man within him.

2 Behold, [e]I will make Jerusalem a cup of [1]trembling[2] unto all the people round about, when they shall be in the siege both against Judah, and against Jerusalem.[3]

3 And in [g]that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it[4] shall be cut in pieces, though[h] all the people of the earth be gathered together against it.

4 In[i] that day, saith the LORD, [j]I will smite every horse with astonishment, and his rider with madness; and I will [k]open mine eyes upon the house of Judah, and will smite every horse of the people with blindness.

5 And the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, [5]The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the LORD of hosts their God.

6 ¶ In that day will I make the governors of Judah [l]like an hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the people round about, [m]on the right hand and on the left: and [n]Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem.

7 The LORD also [p]shall save the tents[6] of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David, and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem do not magnify themselves against Judah.

8 In that day [q]shall the LORD defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; [r]and he that is feeble[7] among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be [s]as God,[8] as the angel[t] of the LORD before them.

9 And it shall come to pass in that day, that I[u] will seek to destroy[9] all the nations that come against Jerusalem.

10 ¶ And [v]I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the [w]spirit of grace and of supplications; and they shall look upon me [x]whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him [z]as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born.

11 In that day [a]shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon[1] in the valley of Megiddon.[2]

12 And [b]the land shall mourn, every [3]family apart; [c]the family of the house of David apart, and [d]their wives apart; the family of the house of [e]Nathan apart, and their wives apart;

13 The family of the house of [f]Levi apart, and their wives apart; the family of [h]Shimei apart, and their wives apart:

14 All[i] the families that remain, every family apart, and their wives [j]apart.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 The fountain for purgation for Jerusalem. 2 The extirpation of idolatry and false prophecy. 7 The death of Christ, and the saving of a third part after a severe trial.

IN that[e] day there shall be a [b]fountain [1]opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for [2]uncleanness.

2 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD of hosts, that I will [c]cut off[3] the names of the idols out of the land, and they shall no more be remembered; and also I will cause the [d]prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land.

3 And it shall come to pass, that when any shall yet [e]prophesy, then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live; for thou speakest lies in the name of the LORD: [f]and his father and his mother that begat him shall thrust him through when he prophesieth.

4 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the prophets [h]shall be ashamed every one of his vision, when he hath prophesied; neither shall they wear a rough garment[3] to deceive:[4]

5 But he shall say, [i]I am no prophet, I am an husbandman; for man taught me to keep cattle from my youth.

6 And one shall say unto him, What are [j]these wounds[5] in thine hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was [k]wounded in the house of my friends.

7 ¶ Awake,[l] O sword, against [m]my shepherd, and against the man that is [n]my fellow, saith the LORD of hosts: [p]smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered; and I will turn mine hand upon [q]the little ones.

8 And it shall come to pass, that in all the land, saith the LORD, [r]two parts therein shall be cut off, and die; but the [s]third shall be left therein.

render his church and ministers a terror to all the wicked, as he hath done from age to age. For easily he can infatuate the counsels and enfeeble the courage and strength of all sinners. Happy are they whose strengthener, protector, and peace-making governor is the Lord and his Christ! And thrice happy is it when the destruction of enemies is attended with an outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon all ranks, great and small; and when magistrates and ministers are patterns to others in evangelical, bitter, and particular humiliation for sin!

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 2–6. Such shall be the zeal for extirpating idolatry and false teachers, that many of these, ashamed of their impostures, shall lay aside the pretences and habits of prophets, and shall apply themselves to common labours; and shall pretend that the marks of idols, in their hands, or the corrections which they have received for their attempting to deceive, were obtained by some other means, and for some other miscarriages. 7–9. The tremendous sufferings of the Messiah, God in human nature, the chief Shepherd and Governor of the church, while his disciples are scattered from him, shall quickly issue in marvellous favours to them and other Jews of the poorer sort; for though, in their destruction by the Romans, the far greater part shall, on account of their obstinacy in rejecting him, be utterly destroyed or reduced to misery, yet a remnant in that age, and especially in the coming period, shall through much tribulation, be turned to, claimed by, and openly avow the promised Messiah.

Ver. 2 I will cut off the names of the idols, &c. The idols of Israel they have long forsaken, but have adopted in their stead that covetousness which is idolatry: the idols of heathen Greece and Rome have been abandoned for an imperfect and perverted Christianity, which, both in the Greek and Latin, or Eastern and Western churches, sets up and worships the images of the Virgin Mary, of saints, and angels, Re. 9. 20, 21; all which God will utterly cast out at the downfall of mystical Babylon. C.

Ver. 3. Shall yet prophesy. Shall persevere to prophesy falsely, unwarned by God's judgments. C.

Ver. 9. Third part. The nation was divided immediately before and after the death of Christ the Shepherd into three parts — Pharisees, Sadducees, and Christians. The two former were utterly cut off, either by death or captivity; the third part remained, saved at Pella when Jerusalem was destroyed, and preserved in the mass of the Roman empire till they had leavened the whole. C.

9 And[e] I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: [a]they shall call on my name, and I will hear them; [b]I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The LORD is my God.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 The destruction of Jerusalem. 3 The coming of Christ, and the graces of his kingdom. 12 The plague of Jerusalem's enemies. 16 The remnant shall turn to the Lord, 20 and their spirits shall be holy.

BEHOLD, the [c]day of the LORD cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee.

2 For [d]I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the [e]women ravished; and [f]half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the [g]residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

3 ¶ Then shall the LORD go forth, [h]and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle.

4 And his feet [i]shall stand[1] in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east; and the mount of Olives shall cleave[2] in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be [k]a very great valley: and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south.

5 And ye shall flee to the valley of [3]the mountains; [4]for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal: yea, ye shall flee, like as ye fled from before the [l]earthquake in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah; and [m]the LORD my God shall come, and all the [n]saints with thee.

6 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the light shall [o]not be clear[5] nor dark:[6]

7 But it shall be [p]one day,[7] which shall be known to the LORD, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at [q]evening time it shall be light.

[1] As our Lord stood upon the mount of Olives, near Bethany, when he ascended into heaven, Lu. 24. 50, 51; so, it seems here to be intimated that upon the same mountain, shall he again descend at the resurrection, when he comes to judge the world. See Job 19. 25–27. Ac. 1. 11. 2. 1–4. C.
[2] At the death of our Lord there was an earthquake, and "a great earthquake" preceded his resurrection, after which there was a resurrection of "many bodies of the saints who slept," Mat. 27. 50–53. 28. 2. There seems therefore much reason to conclude that this passage describes not a figurative, or political and ecclesiastical, commotion, but a literal earthquake introductory of judgment, and the general resurrection of the just and the unjust. 8 And it shall be in that day, that [q]living waters[8] shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former[9] sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: in summer and in winter shall it be.

9 And[r] the LORD shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one LORD, and his name one.

10 All[s] the land shall be turned[1] as a [2]plain, from Geba to Rimmon, south of Jerusalem: and it [t]shall be lifted up, and inhabited[3] in her place, from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner gate, and from the tower of Hananeel unto the king's wine-presses.

REFLECTIONS.—Full forgiveness and reformation are closely connected with true faith and gospel repentance. Nor is any guilt or stain so deep, but Jesus, freely offered in the gospel, by his blood, his Spirit, and work, can effectually wash it out. Yea, nothing more effectually dislodges idols, devils, and impostors, than the plain and powerful exhibition and application of a crucified Christ, as made of God unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption.—Thrice happy is it when all ranks, in their respective callings, concur to promote reformation, and to extirpate false worship and delusion; and when regular censures and punishments make false teachers sensible and ashamed of their sin, and return to their duty. But how infinitely glorious is our Redeemer! Tremendous were the sufferings which he endured from his Father's just judgment for our sin. And his death effectually issues in mercy, even to his deserters, betrayers, and murderers. By the most fearful calamities God often promotes the purification and happiness of earnest believers and the establishment of his gospel and church in the world. And it is God's apprehending of us by his grace that makes us apprehend him by faith, and seek him by fervent prayer.

CHAPTER XIV.—Perhaps this chapter had the first step of its fulfilment in the signal victories of the Maccabees over the Syro-Grecians, who had taken Jerusalem by force and ravaged the country; and in the restoration of Jerusalem, and the reformation of religion that followed. But it had a more signal fulfilment in the destruction and dispersion of the Jewish nation by the Romans; afterwards of the heathen empire of Rome by the Goths; and the spread of the gospel, and erection, enlargement, or prosperity of the Christian church, which attended the same. Yet it will have a further accomplishment in God's destroying the Turks, who shall attack the newly returned Jews, and in the prosperity and reformation of the Jewish nation attending the same; in his destroying the Anti-christian and Mahometan powers when making their final attack upon the Christians; and in the powerful spread of the gospel, the subjection of all nations to Christ, and the remarkable devotion and holiness of church members, in the gospel period. And it will have its last step of fulfilment in God's destroying the armies of Gog and Magog, which attack his church, in the end of gospel time, and in the final extirpation and damnation of the wicked at the last day, and the glories of the new heaven and new earth in the eternal state. 4, 5. In consequence of Christ's ascension, he shall be manifested in the gospel preached by his apostles, according to the commission given them on Mount Olivet; and the ceremonial worship shall be removed, and Jews and Gentiles, having equal admission, shall, in multitudes, eagerly flee to the Redeemer, and unite in the gospel church. 6, 7. For a time the condition of the Jews shall neither be happy nor absolutely miserable; for a time the ceremonies shall not seem wholly abolished; nay, for many ages the Christian church shall have but a mixed lot of prosperity and adversity; but the Lord shall graciously take notice of and manage all; and at last, in God's time, great shall be the prosperity and purity of the Jewish nation and gospel church. 8, 9. Issuing forth from Jerusalem and the church of God, the gospel shall, amidst prosperity and adversity, be preached by the apostles and others in all quarters of the world, till all nations be turned to the Lord; and men, renouncing all their idolatries and delusions, shall harmoniously unite in the faith, profession, and obedience of Christ. 10, 11. Every obstacle of conversion, and every noted abomination, shall be removed; and the Jews, happily settled in Canaan, shall gloriously and safely share the privileges of the gospel church. 12–15. By signal judgments and mutual contentions the opposers of the Jews and Christians shall be infatuated and destroyed, and their wealth left for a spoil to enrich those whom they had attempted to destroy. 16–19. The keeping of the feast of tabernacles denotes an observance of the various ordinances of the gospel filled with the consolations of Christ. 20, 21. Wars shall be exchanged for serious devotions; or, even in their war and most common employments, men shall act from gracious and holy to year to worship the [g]King, the LORD of hosts, and to keep the [h]feast of tabernacles.

17 And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain.

18 And if the [i]family of Egypt go not up, and come not, that have no[9] rain, there shall be the plague wherewith the LORD will smite the heathen that come not up to keep [k]the feast of tabernacles.

19 This shall be the punishment[1] of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

20 ¶ In that day [l]shall there be upon the bells[2] of the horses, HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD; and the [m]pots in the LORD's house shall be like the bowls before the altar.

21 Yea, [n]every pot in Jerusalem, and in Judah, shall be holiness unto the LORD of hosts; and [o]all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and seethe therein: and in that day there shall be no more the [p]Canaanite[3] in the [q]house of the LORD of hosts.

motives, in a holy manner, and to holy ends; and the church shall be purged from all apparently unclean and mercenary ministers and professors.

Ver. 1. The day of the Lord—which he has appointed for punishing the sins of the Jews who had, 'with wicked hands, slain the Holy One and the Just.' C.

Ver. 6. Clear nor dark. The word 'nor' is supplied by the translators, and mars the sense. The meaning of the expression is, that 'the day' (the twenty-four hours) should no more consist of 'the evening and the morning'—the alternate succession of light and darkness—but become a period of continuous light. A state of the church unlike its past history, in which good and evil, spiritual light and darkness, have been so continually commingled, that it has become a serious question to decide which has been predominant; but 'the just shall live by faith' in the promise, and be 'saved by hope' of the latter-day light and glory. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Judgments commonly begin at the house of God; where then shall the ungodly and sinner appear at last! Scarcely ever do nations or armies prosper much after they have imbrued their hands in the blood of God's people. Thrice happy is the gospel church which hath Jesus Christ for her superintendent and her root, in which both Jews and Gentiles cordially unite! Open is the access to her made by his ascension and published gospel; and with great earnestness ought men to flee into her. It is new spiritual relation to God that can alone render us happy amidst manifold commotions. And let providences be ever so dark and intermixed, if our God knows and manages them they will all issue in a comfortable manner. It is a great honour to be a mother of churches, from whence gospel messengers, oracles, ordinances, and influences do spread into the world, and render the whole a united kingdom of Jesus Christ. Remarkable deliverances of the church are generally attended with terrible ruin to her opposers; if one plague answer not, another is inflicted; and it is for the honour of Jesus' grace that the remnant of such are often converted by his Spirit and saved by his blood. Divine influences graciously rectify men's devotions, with respect to their object, Mediator, manner, and seasons. And if men contemn and neglect the ordinances of God and means of grace, they forfeit not only the blessings of salvation, but even of common providence. But thrice happy shall be the blessed future, when holiness shall not only shine forth in every devotion, but even in the most ordinary business, and everything be used as devoted to the service of Christ.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ZECHARIAH.

Zechariah was contemporary with Haggai, and his coadjutor in the great national work of building the temple, reorganizing the worship of Jehovah, and reforming the principles and habits of the people. But, though there appear no companion but Haggai, it does not necessarily follow, that upon them alone the prophetic spirit was poured out, and the supply of instruction, so inadequate to the spiritual wants of the people. How few of our Lord's disciples and apostles have left any written record of their thoughts or labours!—Even so, there may have been many enlightened and faithful prophets in the days of Joshua the high-priest—who laboured abundantly in the word and doctrine, who were living epistles addressed to all their countrymen—and who yet have transmitted no memorial of their persons or works to posterity. God desired not that his Bible should become a large book—Jn. 20. 30, 31; 21. 25—a load for the memory, or a toil for the understanding—but merely that it should present such specimens of providence and grace, as would render it a book of sufficient precedents for all times and circumstances—of reproofs for all forms of sin, and of encouragement to all duties.

Ch. 9. 9; 12. 10; 13. 7, seem evidently quoted or referred to in Mat. 21. 4, 5; 26. 31; Mar. 14. 27; Jn. 12. 14, 15; 19. 37; Re. 1. 7.

MALACHI.

Malachi seems to have prophesied about A.M. 3600, contemporary with or quickly after the government of Nehemiah. His principal scope is to reprove the Jews for their neglect or profanation of God's ordinances; their sacrilege, heathen marriages, and other abominations; and to warn them of the approaching incarnation of the Messiah.

[Of Malachi, the last of the Old Testament prophets, the tribe and family, and even the precise date of his prophecy, are unknown; and the conjectural opinions of the learned it is useless to detail. Three things only are certain.—(1) That he prophesied after Haggai; for at the time of his prophesying the temple was built, and the worship restored, ch. 1. 7, 10, 12; 3. 10. (2) That his book was, at all times, recognized as an inspired portion of the Jewish canon. (3) That he was fully recognized by our Lord, Mat. 11. 10. The only probability which it seems important to notice is—that Malachi prophesied during or shortly after the administration of Nehemiah. Kennicott and Hales agree in assigning this prophecy to 420 B.C.—a long and dreary interval, during which no one arises whom the Jewish church recognizes as an inspired ambassador of Jehovah. C.

The introductory words of this book which declare the writer, and which may be literally rendered 'by the hand of Malachi,' are translated in the Septuagint version, 'by the hand of his angel.' Such a rendering would require a slightly different reading of the Hebrew; and it has been conjectured by both Jewish and Christian commentators that Malachi is only an official title. Some have affirmed that Ezra was the author of the book, and have supposed their opinion to be corroborated by the fact that nothing is mentioned or known regarding the prophet. It is vain to speculate upon such a subject, and the safest criticism is to take Malachi to be the real name of the writer. The careful reader will observe a close resemblance in many points between this book and Nehemiah. 'Both presuppose the temple to have been already built. The same condition of the Jews is described. They both condemn foreign marriages, and enforce the due payment of tithes which had been neglected. They likewise correct abuses which had crept in with respect to the sacrifices, and reprove their countrymen for their want of sympathy with the poor.' In style the prophet is purer and more elevated than any of the later writers of the Old Testament. This may be accounted for by the fact that Hebrew had ceased to be spoken by the Jewish people. It was now a language for literary men, who naturally made the Pentateuch and the earlier prophets their models. P.]

CHAPTER I.

1 God, by Malachi, complaineth of Israel's ingratitude, 6 and of the profane disrespect shewn to God's worship. 14 The curse of corrupt offerings.

THE burden[1] of the word of the LORD to Israel by Malachi.[2]

2 I have loved you, saith the LORD: yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us? Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the LORD: yet I[b] loved Jacob,

3 And I hated Esau, and [c]laid his mountains and his heritage waste for the [d]dragons of the wilderness.[3]

4 Whereas Edom saith, We are impoverished, but[e] we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the LORD of hosts, They shall build, but I will throw down; and they shall call them, The border[4] of wickedness, and, [f]The people against whom the LORD hath indignation for ever.

5 And your eyes shall see, and ye shall say, The LORD will be [h]magnified from[5] the border[6] of Israel.

6 ¶ A[i] son honoureth his father, and [j]a servant his master: if then [k]I be a father, where is mine honour? and if I be a master, [l]where is my fear? saith the LORD of hosts unto you, [m]O priests, that despise my name. And [o]ye say, Wherein have we despised thy name?

7 Ye[7] offer [p]polluted bread upon mine altar; and ye say, Wherein have we polluted thee? In that ye say, [q]The table of the LORD is contemptible.

8 And if ye offer the blind for sacrifice,[8] is it not evil? and [r]if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy governor: will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the LORD of hosts.

9 And now, I pray you, [s]beseech God[9] that he will be gracious unto us: this hath been by your means:[1] will[t] he regard your persons? saith the LORD of hosts.

10 Who[u] is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? neither do ye kindle fire on mine altar for nought.[2] I[v] have no pleasure in you, saith the LORD of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand.[3]

11 For [z]from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense[4] shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the LORD of hosts.[5]

12 But[y] ye have profaned it, in that ye say, [z]The table of the LORD is polluted; and the fruit thereof, even his meat, is contemptible.

13 Ye said also, [a]Behold, what a weariness is it! and ye have snuffed at it,[6] saith the LORD of hosts: and ye brought [b]that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering: should I accept this of your hand? saith the LORD.

14 ¶ But cursed be the [c]deceiver, which hath in his flock[7] a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing: for [d]I am a great King, saith the LORD of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the heathen.

CHAPTER II.

1 The priests are sharply reproved for profaning their covenant, 11 and the people for idolatry, 14 for adultery, 17 and for infidelity.

AND now, [a]O ye priests, this commandment is for you.

2 If[b] ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, [c]to give glory unto my name, saith the LORD of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings;[1] yea, [d]I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart.

3 Behold, [e]I will corrupt[2] your seed, [g]and spread[3] dung upon your faces, even the dung of your solemn feasts, and one shall take you away with it.[4]

4 And [h]ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, that [i]my covenant might be with Levi, saith the LORD of hosts.

5 My[j] covenant was with him[5] of life and peace; and I gave them to him for the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name.

6 The[k] law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he [l]walked with me in peace and equity, and [n]did turn many away from iniquity.

7 For[o] the priests' lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his CHAPTER I. Ver. 3-5. Their very eyes saw that the Lord had not only almost utterly destroyed the Edomites, but had rendered their country altogether desolate, and fruitful in nothing but serpents. 10, 11. Since ye are so mercenary that, notwithstanding all that I have allotted to you as a reward, ye can scarcely think of shutting a door in my temple without some special hire, ye may withhold your sacrifices. I have provided for myself a people among the Gentile nations to worship and to honour me with spiritual sacrifices of their persons, praises, thanksgivings, and alms-deeds.

Ver. 3. I hated Esau. Hated is sometimes applied to the object of a less degree of love, Ge. 29. 31; Lu. 14. 26. For this love Jacob had every cause to be grateful, for God's special grace was undeserved; while Esau had no cause to complain, for God's hatred of his profanity was a righteous judgment, He. 12. 16. C.

Ver. 7. Polluted bread. Perhaps their ordinary bread, which might be held polluted by leaven, Le. 2. 11; 6. 17; 10. 12, which was only admissible in the sacrifice of thanksgiving and first-fruits, Le. 7. 13; 23. 17. C.

Ver. 9. Will he regard your persons, on account of your descent from Levi and your priestly office? And will he overlook your profanity in the management of his worship? C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the tenderness of divine grace with respect to persons and nations, in favouring and saving all who accept the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord. But if once ingratitude towards God prevail in the heart, nothing will appear too base to be done to or said of him. No greatness in him will awe, no relation engage, and no law will influence, nay, nor even self-interest move, us to serve him aright; and none are ever more noted profaners of God's worship than careless clergymen.—Let men beware! Let our behaviour correspond to God's distinguishing kindness and peculiar relations to us! Let bitter repentance, reverential fear, upright obedience, and fervent and holy devotions, prevent God's removing his gospel kingdom from us to another nation, and his executing his fearful and ruinous curse upon us!

CHAPTER II. Ver. 2-4. I will take your earthly enjoyments from you, or render them useless or hurtful to you. I will cause to rot, or otherwise spoil, your seed-corn, will disdainfully reject your persons and services, and transfer you to foreign places, and even to ruin, in your sins. Thus shall ye be convinced that I have warned you in this manner in order that my covenant of priesthood might continue with the tribe of Levi. 5-9. To reward the piety and zeal of their ancestors, I chose them and their posterity, by a lasting covenant, to be my ministers; and they, according to the law of their office, served me with sincerity and diligence; and, by their example and instructions, turned many from their wicked courses. But ye, instead of instructing the people from my word, lead mouth: for he is [p]the messenger of the LORD of hosts.

8 But[q] ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to stumble at the law;[8] ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the LORD of hosts.

9 Therefore[r] have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, [s]according as ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in[7] the law.

10 ¶ Have[t] we not all one father?[28] hath not one God created us? why do we [u]deal treacherously every man against his brother, by [v]profaning the covenant of our fathers?

11 Judah[w] hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem; for Judah hath profaned [x]the holiness of the LORD which he [9]loved,[1] and hath married the daughter of a strange god.

12 The LORD will [z]cut off the man that doeth this, [a]the master and the scholar,[2] out of the tabernacles of Jacob, and him that offereth an offering unto the LORD of hosts.

13 ¶ And this have ye done [b]again, [c]covering the altar of the LORD with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, insomuch [d]that he regardeth not the offering any more, or receiveth it with good will at your hand.

14 Yet ye say, [e]Wherefore? [9]Because the LORD hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she [h]thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant.[3]

15 And did not he make [i]one? yet had he the residue[4] of the spirit. And wherefore one? that he might seek a godly seed.[5] Therefore take [j]heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously[6] against the wife of his youth.

16 For the LORD, the God of Israel, saith that he [k]hateth putting away:[7] for one covereth violence with his garment, saith the LORD of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously.

17 ¶ Ye have [l]wearied the LORD with your words: yet ye say, [m]Wherein have we wearied him? when ye say, [n]Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the LORD, and he delighteth in them; or, [o]Where is the God of [8]judgment?

CHAPTER III.

1 Of the messenger, majesty, and grace of Christ. 7 Of the return. 8 sacrilege, 13 and infidelity of the people. 16 The promise of blessing to them that fear God.

BEHOLD, I[a] will send my messenger,[1] and he shall prepare the way before me: and [b]the Lord,[2] whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in:[3] behold, he shall come, saith the LORD of hosts.

2 But [c]who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he [d]appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap.

3 And he shall sit [e]as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the LORD an offering in righteousness.

4 Then [f]shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the LORD, as in the days of old, and as in former[4] years.

5 And [h]I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness [i]against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that [5]oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and [j]fear not me, saith the LORD of hosts.

6 For I am the LORD, [k]I change not; [l]therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

7 ¶ Even[n] from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and them aside by your doctrine and example, and make them to abhor my service, and thus violate the terms on which ye hold your office; I will therefore punish your impiety and partiality in your decisions, by rendering you openly contemptible. 10-12. Though, by having one father, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and one God, ye are all brethren in both a natural and spiritual relation, yet ye betray and deceive one another. Violating God's law of righteousness with your nation, ye have acted treacherously and abominably in profaning his institution of marriage and your own persons, which are devoted to God, by marrying heathen women, worshippers of idols; therefore will the Lord punish you, both priest and people. 13-16. Moreover, by your cruelty in divorcing or ill-treating your Jewish wives, ye force them to attend their sacrifices with bitter mournings, instead of praises and thanksgivings, so that I cannot but detest your oblations, having been a witness of the solemn vow which you made to them in marriage, never to neglect, reject, nor suffer any to rival them; and also of your treacherous usage of them. —Did not I, in creation, make only one wife for Adam, though I could as easily have created thousands? And for this reason, that thus an offspring might be produced in lawful wedlock, and trained up in my fear. Take heed therefore to your hearts and affections, that none of you treacherously neglect, abuse, desert, or divorce his lawful wife, or take another in her room; for I hate all such injurious divorces, whatever pretences ye may attempt to cover them with. 17. Ye have also provoked me, and wearied my patience, by your discontented murmurings at my providence, and by your declaring that wicked persons were as much regarded by me as the most pious, at least, that I was very slow and negligent in the punishing of such wretches.

Ver. 9. Partial in the law. Wrested the sense of the law for sake of bribes or partisanship. C.

Ver. 13. Again—rather, 'And this second thing have ye done.' This second crime have ye committed, having criminally divorced your Jewish wives (ver. 14), and then broken the law of God by marrying idolaters, ver. 11. C.

Ver. 15. And did he not make one? &c. Had he not all wisdom and power? and had it seemed good to him that one man should have two or more wives, could he not in power, and would he not in wisdom, have created them accordingly? C.

Ver. 16. Covereth violence with his garment. The 'garment' (see Mat. 22, 11) with which the divorcer adorns himself at his marriage with his new wife is a mere cover, beneath which the eyes of the Lord discern his cruel and unhallowed violence to her that is 'put away.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Abandoned clergymen are generally most furious in impiety. No law can bind, no vow can hold, no motive engage, no pattern attract them to their duty; no example or denunciation of wrath deter them from sin. It is indeed very honourable to be God's messengers in promoting the salvation of mankind, and to confirm our doctrines by our holy lives. But greatly offensive and reproachful to God, and hurtful to men's souls, are ministers unfaithful and unholy. They lose their credit and comfort, and bring fearful curses upon themselves and all that they have. Yea, hateful is the conduct of professors, and especially ministers, when they profane the institutions of God, violate his laws, dishonour their character, and pour contempt on their fellow-professors, by unhallowed marriages with heathens and profane persons. But if men deal treacherously with God, no wonder they deal treacherously and abusively with their nearest relations. And scarcely anything can be more barbarous than to use wives ill. In marriages great regard ought to be paid to the raising up of a godly seed to serve the Redeemer. And every one that would act well must carefully take heed to his spirit.—No wonder that men's conduct is profane and treacherous when their principles are atheistical and blasphemous, and when they tempt God by stifling the convictions of his Word, and justify themselves by murmurs at and misrepresentations of his providence. But denials and derision of God will but issue in the destruction of presumptuous sinners.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. John Baptist proclaimed that the Messiah was come in the flesh, and called the Jews to prepare for his manifestation of himself by faith and repentance.—Christ came in the flesh while the second temple was standing, and honoured it with have not kept them. [c]Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the LORD of hosts. But ye said, [d]Wherein shall we return?

8 ¶ Will a man [e]rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.[6]

9 Ye [f]are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.

10 Bring[g] ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and [h]prove me now herewith, saith the LORD of hosts, if I will not open you the [i]windows of heaven, and pour you out[7] a blessing, [k]that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

11 And I will rebuke the [l]devourer[8] for your sakes, and he shall not destroy[9] the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the LORD of hosts.

12 And [m]all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the LORD of hosts.

13 ¶ Your words have been [n]stout against me, saith the LORD: yet ye say, [o]What have we spoken so much against thee?

14 Ye have said, [p]It is vain to serve God; and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance,[1] and that we have walked mournfully[2] before the LORD of hosts?

15 And now we call the [q]proud happy; yea, [r]they that work wickedness are set[3] up; yea, they that [s]tempt God are even delivered.

16 ¶ Then they that [t]feared the LORD [u]spake often one to another; and the LORD hearkened, and heard it, and [v]a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the LORD, and that thought upon his name.

17 And [w]they shall be mine, saith the LORD of hosts, in that day when I make up my [x]jewels; and I will [y]spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

18 Then [z]shall ye return,[5] and [a]discern between the righteous and the wicked; between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not.

CHAPTER IV.

1 God's judgment on the wicked, 2 and his blessing on the good. 4 He exhorteth to the study of the law, 5 and telleth of Elijah's coming and office.

FOR, behold, [b]the day cometh, that [c]shall burn as an oven; and all [d]the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the LORD of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

2 ¶ But unto you that [e]fear my name shall the [f]Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall [g]go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall.

his presence and ministrations. Though he was the same in nature and equal in personal dignity with his Father, he, as Mediator, was sent by him to declare and attest his will to men, and secure and promote their salvation. The godly rejoiced in his person, incarnation, and work; and even the wicked Jews were pleased with it, as they conceived hopes of temporal advantages thereby. 2–4. Yet few of the Jews will relish his coming when it shall take place; for they will be offended at his appearances and doctrines, to their own destruction; for his instructions and his conduct will tend to separate the precious from the vile, to sanctify the former and destroy the latter; and he will purify his ministers and people from their errors in doctrine, corruptions in worship, and unholiness in practice, that their services may be agreeable to his law, and accepted of God through him, as well as those of their pious ancestors. 5, 6. I will speedily call you to an account for your sins; and, by punishing you, manifest that I have taken notice of them; and this ye may as certainly expect as I am the unchangeable JEHOVAH, who, according to my promises to your fathers, have hitherto refrained from punishing you according to your deserts. 8–12. Notwithstanding my being God, and your God, ye have robbed me of my tithes and offerings, and have thereby procured a curse which, all through the land, hath blasted your crops. But let my justly-required oblations be brought to my temple, and I will abundantly bless you with refreshing and fructifying rains and plentiful increase; and I will restrain caterpillars, locusts, drought, mildew, and blasting, and everything else that destroys the fruits of the earth; and all the nations around shall reckon you singularly happy, and worthy to be the object of their love and admiration, on account of your peace, plenty, and holy religion. 13–15. Some of you have indeed presumptuously quarrelled at my service and providences, as if the zealous observance of my laws did profit no one; as if the most proud and daring contemners of me and my service, and the most notorious workers of wickedness, were the only, at least the most, prosperous persons in the nation. 16–18. Yet know assuredly that I exactly observe and infallibly remember how the upright who fear my name among you exhort and encourage one another to duty; and in the day of national judgments, especially in the last judgment, I will graciously reward them as my people because of their faith. Then shall the most stupid and presumptuous of you be forced to observe and feel the difference that my providence puts between my righteous servants and the wicked rejecters of my worship and service.

Ver. 17. My jewels. For a time the precious and the vile are indiscriminately mixed together, and God often seems to forget the distinction; but there is a day coming when God will separate them, and believers shall appear as jewels in a royal diadem, ver. 18. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Unbounded is the excellency of Jesus' person and work; and great the joys, the blessings, and the terrors which attend his coming. His Word and Spirit have the most purifying influence on the people. But, alas! dreadful is the destruction of those that despise him and do the work of the devil. Great are the pleasures which they enjoy that seek and find Christ in his temple and in his ordinances. And it is by justification and sanctification that all the saints are consecrated spiritual priests unto God.—JEHOVAH'S unchangeableness secures the destruction of the wicked and the preservation of believers. Yet, alas! what fearful wickedness against God and men is to be found among hypocritical professors! But wickedness most surely ruins, and robbery, either of God or men, renders men still more poor and miserable. If we withhold their dues from God, or from his poor, he will make us to pay dear for it at last. Nor can his straitening us, to punish our robbery, ever excuse it. He must be served, not with our leavings, but with the first-fruits of our increase. And if by trusting in him we be liberal to him, we shall find ourselves gainers at last. If we honour and delight in him, he will make us an honour and delight before all around us; while presumptuous sinners, after a short prosperity, shall be eternally miserable. In evil times, therefore, when vice is daring, let us be bold and active in the cause of religion. If the servants of Satan dare to harden one another in sin, why should not Christ's servants encourage one another in holiness? He will honourably mark, kindly remember, and graciously reward all our services.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1, 3. The wicked shall be terribly, suddenly, and unavoidably overtaken by God's judgments, both parents and children; while the righteous shall triumph over them. 2. Jesus, the enlightener, quickener and comforter of his people, shall appear in the flesh, and in the gospel, to heal sinners by his word, his blood, and Spirit, of all their spiritual diseases, and to make them beautifully increase in grace and holiness. 5. John Baptist is called Elijah, because like him in his appearances, work, and success. The time of Christ's manifestation is called great, as he made great alteration in the form and ordinances of the church; and dreadful, as by rejecting him the Jews brought on themselves dreadful destruction. 6. The work of John Baptist was to reconcile all their differences, by directing all parties to Christ as the only Saviour, that so the ruin of their nation might be prevented.

Ver. 1. Behold, the day cometh &c. The dawn of this day commenced in the preaching of our Lord, whose words burned as fire upon the hypocrisy of the scribes and Pharisees; it arose higher and burned more fiercely in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the ruin and dispersion of the remnant of the nation; but the completion of the prophesy is still future, as it is finally to burn so as to leave to the unbelieving and impenitent portion of the Jews 'neither root nor branch' to perpetuate their principles. C.

Ver. 2. His wings: 'rays' (Gill). The sanative powers of light and warmth are known to all, and afford a beautiful emblem of the salvation that emanates from Jesus. C.

Ver. 5. Elijah.—interpreted by our Lord to mean John the Baptist, Mat. 11. 14, 17. 12, 13. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The fire of God's wrath makes fearful work upon obstinate sinners when ripened for it. But great is the joy, light, comfort, vigour, and victories over enemies which believers find in the approaches and discoveries of Christ to their souls. And lasting are the honours of his faithful ministers. If we wish for happiness, or further knowledge of his will, let us adhere strictly to what he has commanded. And never let us complain for want of light as long as we have the oracles of God. The light of divine truth continues constant in the church; but the revelations thereof, and spiritual instructions therein, were and shall be gradually increased as occasion requires. The manifestations of the great God our Saviour are indeed events of vast importance, and the happiness or misery of mankind are deeply concerned therein. But what a marvellous turn may one man, remarkably assisted of God, give to the affairs of churches or nations! And dreadful are the curses, desolations, and miseries which await those sinners that harden themselves against the distinguished means of God's grace.

RESIDENCE OF DR. SCHLIEMANN, ATHENS—ONCE A CITY GIVEN UP TO IDOLATRY, NOW A CITY OF CHRISTIAN HOMES AND CHURCHES. [Malachi, iv:2-3.]—"But unto you that fear my name, shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in His wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts." This prophecy of Malachi was uttered in the year 397 B. C. Since that time the Sun of righteousness has arisen with healing in His wings, and to-day the greatest portion of the globe has felt the influence of His light and warmth. We give as a picture illustrating this fact a view of the residence of Dr. Schliemann in Athens. Under the facilities furnished by Christian civilization, that distinguished man was able to bring to light many of the works of art which belonged to the distant past. It is a strange fact that even the works of art belonging to heathen nations would have been destroyed before this but for the influence and work of Christian nations.

[3] The Old Testament ends with a glorious promise, to which, however, a solemn warning is attached. Elijah was a faithful and uncompromising reformer. Purity of worship, morals, and heart is inculcated with a zeal approaching to severity. In this respect the Baptist was an exact counterpart to the Old Testament prophet. He came in the spirit and power of Elijah. The New Testament opens with the fulfilment of the predictions with which the Old closes. They are thus united by the link of prophecy; and the harmony of the whole scheme of divine revelation is here, as in other places, signally manifested.—C.

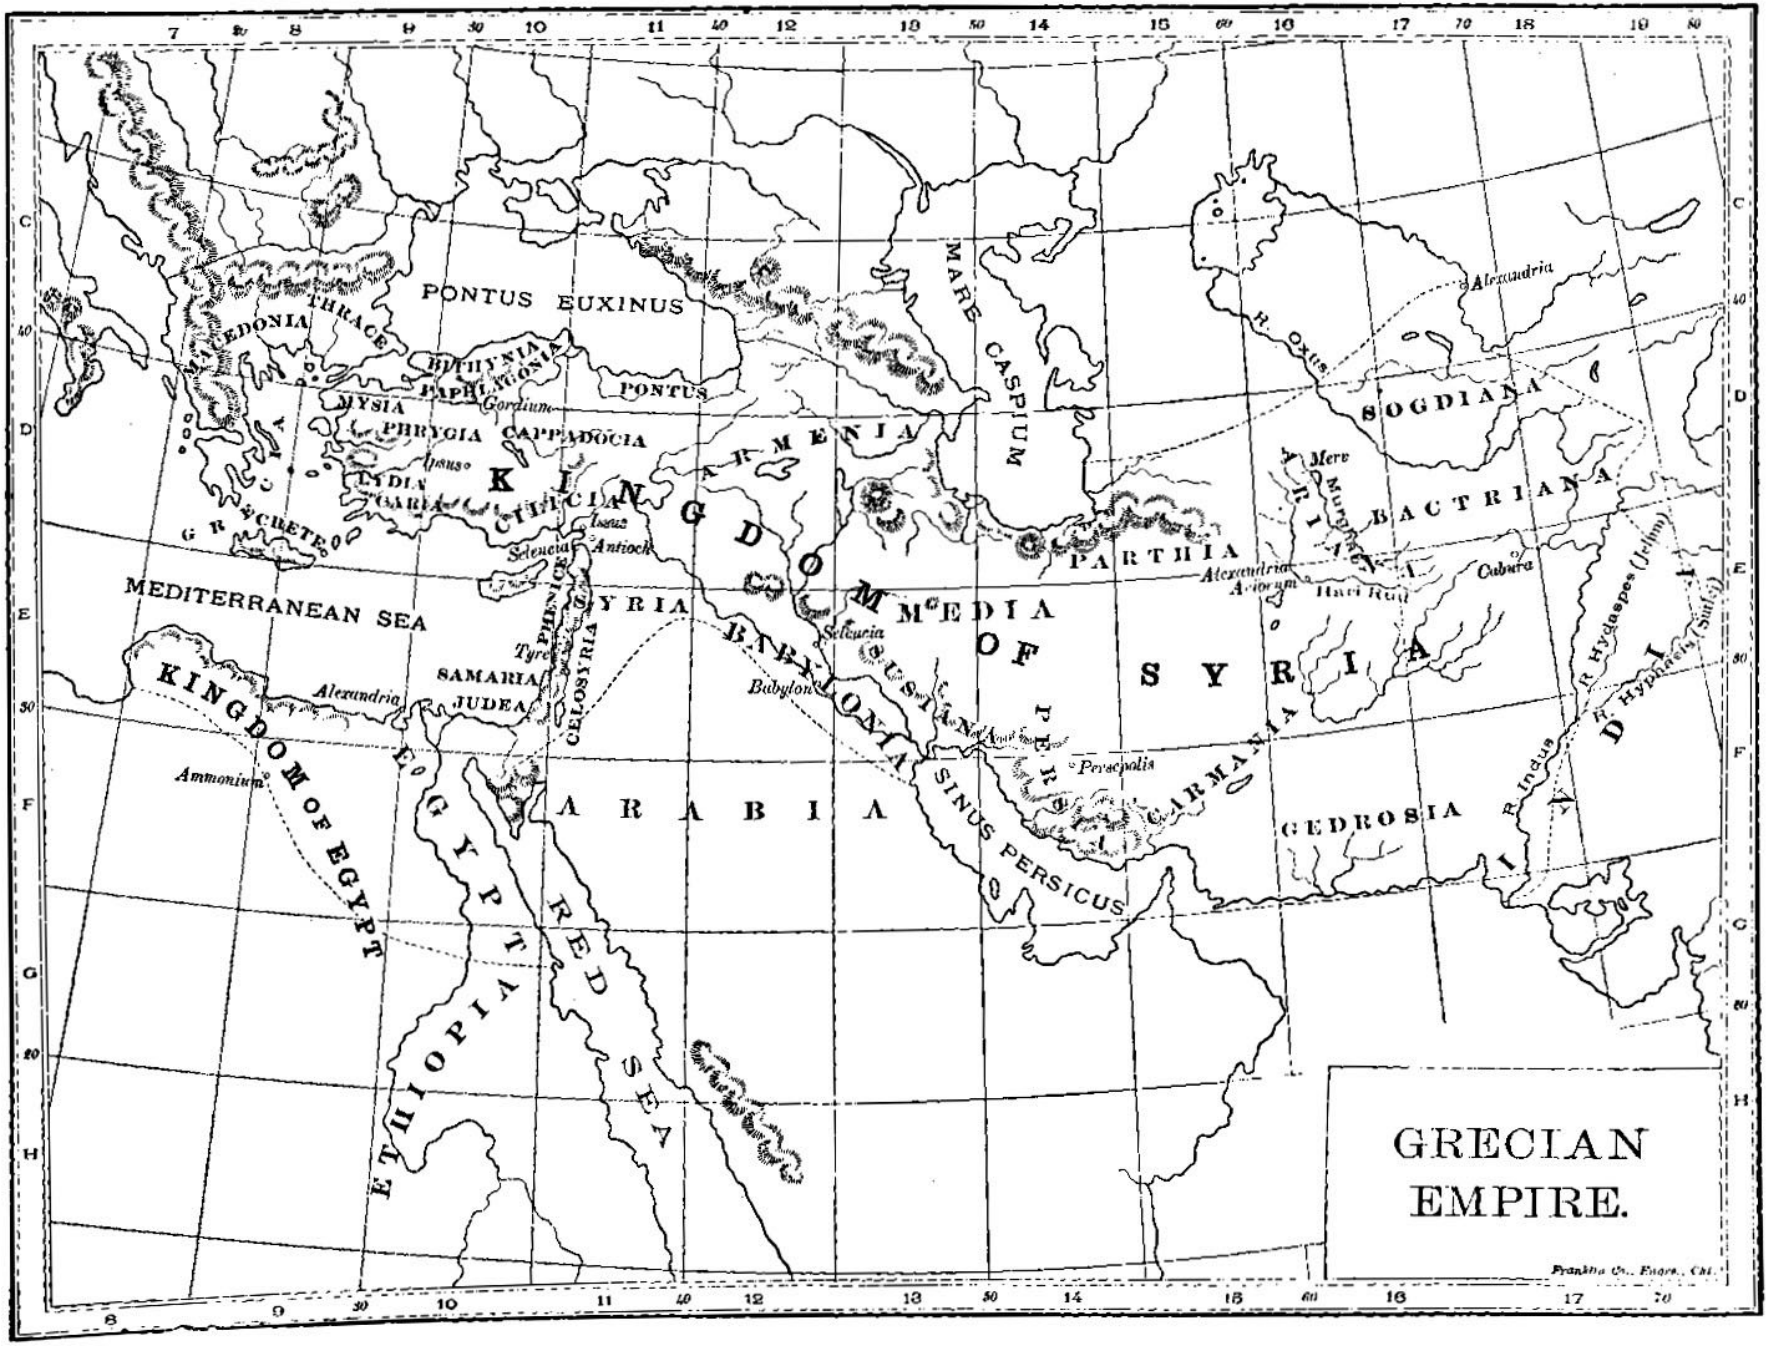
CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF MALACHI.



Here ends the long and illustrious line of the prophets of the Old Testament, whose writings, were the idea of their inspiration entirely laid aside, would suffice to get them as far above all the philanthropists, patriots, reformers, politicians, and moralists of ancient and modern times, as heaven is elevated above the earth. But this very inspiration is their chief characteristic; and, blessed be God, the evidences of it are so plain, that if there be any that read them in the light of history, and yet deny their inspiration, 'neither would they believe though one should rise from the dead.'

Still the office of the prophets will be very imperfectly understood, if they be considered merely as inspired with a knowledge of futurity. Whoever would duly estimate their character, must view them in all lights, and fairly bring them into comparison with other men living in similar times, and placed in similar circumstances, and seeking after somewhat similar ends. They must be tried by the disinterestedness, simplicity, boldness, and honesty with which they executed their several commissions—by the impartiality with which they delivered their instructions, and dealt their stern rebukes to all ranks and conditions of men—by their patient and willing endurance of neglect, contempt, and persecution—and by the high and holy ends after which they always laboured. That the philosophers of Greece and Rome were generally not the mere authors of opinions and systems, is a fact universally known. They were, almost without exception, the advocates of national reformation, in the most extensive sense. Let us compare them with the prophets. But where shall we begin? Certainly with their ideas of God, the author and end of all things. And what do we find? A few denying the being of any God at all—a few ridiculing the system of polytheism—all, however, conforming to the idolatry of their countrymen—and the wisest of them, with his dying breath, commending an idolatrous sacrifice. And let it be especially remembered, that this conformity arose not from any respect for idolatry—for, generally, the philosophers held it in contempt—but it arose altogether from the love of popular favour, which they would not forfeit, by denouncing superstition, from a cowardly dread of popular displeasure, which they would not encounter by disturbing prejudices, and from their preference of bodily and mental ease to the trouble of attempting even a philosophical reformation. With all this, compare the conduct of the prophets. Do they conform to the idolatry of their country? No! One houseless prophet, a wanderer in the mountains—the tenant of a cave—though he believes himself the last of the worshippers of Jehovah, denounces idolatry in the very presence of his idolatrous king—bound by a higher loyalty to the King of earth and heaven. And to his noble example do all his fellow-prophets adhere. Faithful to the worship of Jehovah, the one living and true God, they omit no opportunity of denouncing idolatry, though under the penalty of imprisonment or at the risk of life. If viewed as philanthropists, a similar superiority will be found on the side of the prophets. The philosophic philanthropist, the professed friend of man—actuated by nothing higher than a worldly motive—will always be found the advocate of a class, among whom he takes refuge from the attacks of opponents, and from whom he draws the reward either of popularity or support. The prophets of the LORD were never the advocates of any mere class. The king and the peasant, the priest and the worshipper, the learned and the ignorant, the rich and the poor, were alike the objects of their exhortations or rebukes. 'Ah! sinful nation! a people laden with iniquity! a seed of evil-doers! children that are corrupters! they have forsaken the LORD.—From the sole of the foot even unto the head, there is no soundness in it.' Such is the impartial testimony which the prophets bear against the sins, not of a class, but of a nation—neither inflaming the passions of the many, nor flattering the pride of the few—but honestly and fearlessly pronouncing condemnation upon the common defections of all. But as it has ever been found impossible to separate between the religion, morality, prosperity, and happiness of man, so has it been found impossible to interdict the prophets from a continual reference to the political affairs of their country. Nor is there any view of their character in which they appear to greater advantage than when contrasted with the selfish, ambitious, vacillating, and temporizing politicians of the world. The great political maxim of the prophets was simply this—'The LORD reigneth;' and hence flowed the great practical principle—'whatever is morally wrong can never be politically right.' Upon this principle Samuel addressed himself to Saul; Nathan to David; Elijah to Ahab; Isaiah to Hezekiah; Jeremiah to the king and his princes; Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar and Darius; Ezekiel to the wicked counsellors in the city; Jonah to the Ninevites; Micah to Samaria and Jerusalem; Haggai to the governor; and Malachi to both the priests and the people. And in all these efforts no prophet ever sought after power or aggrandizement to himself; but, as a true and genuine patriot, the reformation and glory of his country.

Viewed in strict connection with their inspiration, one of the most striking characteristics of all the prophets is their fulness of Christ. And though Isaiah has come to be distinguished as the evangelical prophet—and the title is no doubt well deserved—yet as a peculiar characteristic, exclusive of all the other prophets, its application is questionable. 'The things that are written of Christ in the Psalms' cannot be exceeded in perspicuous description of his incarnation, sufferings, atonement, and glory—while truly and fully 'to him gave all the prophets witness.' Among these witness-bearers, Malachi, as the last, holds a peculiar place. His spirit looked out upon the dark futurity of above four hundred years, and beheld the bright and glorious 'Sun of righteousness with healing in his wings,' rising upon that world of spiritual corruption and disease by which he was surrounded; and the church of the regenerate, delivered from a body of sin and death, go forth in youthful vigour, and grow into maturity 'as calves of the stall'—clean and healthful as a sacrifice to the LORD; or strong and obedient and laborious as oxen, to 'break up the fallow ground,' and prepare him a glorious harvest.—Mat. 11. 10, 14; Mar. 1. 2, Lu. 1. 17, will be found to be quotations from ch. 3. 1; 4. 6.

A BRIEF OUTLINE

OF THE

HISTORY OF THE PRINCIPAL PROPHETIC KINGDOMS OF THE EAST,

FROM THE TIMES OF MALACHI, THE LAST OF THE OLD TESTAMENT PROPHETS, UNTIL THE TIMES OF MATTHEW, THE FIRST OF THE NEW TESTAMENT EVANGELISTS.

---

In or about the year 445 B.C. Artaxerxes Longimanus granted a commission to NEHEMIAH to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, and to succeed EZRA in the government of Judea. This monarch was succeeded by Xerxes II.; he, by Sogdianus; and he, by Darius Nothus in the year 423 B.C., about which time Malachi preached reformation, and prophesied to his countrymen of the coming of Messiah. How long Nehemiah continued in the government is uncertain; but it is generally believed that about the year 409 B.C., he renewed and enforced the Mosaic prohibition of marriage between Hebrews and heathens (Ne. 13. 23–31, comp. with De. 7. 2–4); upon which account and occasion one of the sons of Joiada the high-priest, unwilling to part from his heathen wife, retired to Samaria, accompanied with many others who were in the same condition, and there settled under Sanballat his father-in-law, who was governor of that city and district; where, by permission of Darius, a temple was built upon Mount Gerizim; and the son of Joiada, whom Josephus calls Manasseh, was constituted high-priest.

With these particulars the sacred history closes, and what follows, until we arrive at the age of the evangelists, we must derive from Josephus, the Maccabees, Philo-Judæus, and a few scattered fragments of the Greek and Latin writers.

After the death of Nehemiah there is no evidence of any civil governor having been appointed to succeed him in Judea; but it appears to have been subjected to the satrap or governor of Syria, by whom the high-priests were appointed, and under whom they appear to have exercised both civil and ecclesiastical jurisdiction at Jerusalem.

In the year 405 B.C. Artaxerxes Mnemon ascended the Persian throne, whose Syrian satrap, Bagoses, removed Johannan the son of Joiada from the high-priesthood, and appointed his brother Jeshua; whereupon a riot ensued, in which Jeshua was slain in the inner court of the temple. For this act, a heinous crime in itself, and a personal insult to the satrap, he imposed a fine of fifty drachmas upon every lamb offered in sacrifice, which, if all the lambs appointed for the morning, evening, and weekly, monthly, and other fixed solemnities be included, would amount to little more than seventeen hundred pounds. But if to these are to be added all the lambs of the passover, with those of all private sacrifices of vows, peace-offerings, &c., the amount will be much larger. This odious impost lasted, however, only during seven years; for on the death of Artaxerxes Mnemon and the accession of Ochus, in 359 B.C., the governor who succeeded Bagoses either remitted, or ceased to exact it. On the accession of Ochus a considerable portion of western Asia revolted, which revolt having subdued, he entered Judea in the eighth year of his reign, besieged Jericho, took a multitude of captives—part of whom he sent into Egypt—and settled the others on the shores of the Caspian, where, it is said, their descendants continue to reside in large and concentrated numbers till this day; some as Jews, and others as Nestorian Christians.

Nothing farther of importance is distinctly recorded of the Jews till the reign of Darius Codomannus, and the invasion of Asia by Alexander of Macedon, in 334 B.C. Alexander had now entered upon that rapid career of conquest so distinctly foretold by Daniel, and was about to supersede the Persian, and introduce the Grecian monarchy. During his memorable siege of Tyre, the Jews, it appears, continued to furnish supplies to the garrison as fellow-subjects of Persia; but, out of regard for their oath of allegiance to Darius, refused supplies to Alexander. In revenge for this refusal, the moment Tyre was taken, Alexander marched in great wrath to Jerusalem; when Jaddua, the high-priest, in consequence of a dream, went out at the head of his priests—he and they being dressed in the robes which God had directed by the hand of Moses—and accompanied by a multitude of the people dressed in white. This procession advanced to a place called Sapha, which afforded a prospect of the temple and city; and there, in fear and hope, awaited the approach of the conqueror. The moment Alexander beheld the high-priest he advanced to meet him, and instead of anger, as was expected, saluted him with deep religious veneration. To his general Parmenio, who inquired into the cause of this sudden and unexpected transition from anger to amity, Alexander replied, that, when at Dio, in Macedonia, he was anxiously pondering on his contemplated invasion of Persia, this very high-priest, in the same remarkable robes, had appeared to him in a dream, and confidently promised him, in the name of his God, the conquest of Asia; wherefore his homage was not now offered personally to the priest, but to that prescient God whose accredited servant he was. Upon this Alexander entered Jerusalem as a friend, and offered up sacrifices to JEHOVAH in the temple; after which Jaddua showed him the prophecies of Daniel, promising the speedy conquest of Persia to a king of Greece. These prophecies the ardent mind of Alexander, already flushed with the signal victories of the Granicus and the Issus, was not slow to appropriate; and what before was human calculation and hope, now appeared, as it really was, divine appointment and certainty. At his departure Alexander granted to the Jews, not only perfect religious freedom, but also exemption from taxes every seventh year, during which, according to the law of Moses, their lands must remain uncultivated. Egypt speedily submitted to the conqueror, where, having with great judgment selected the site of a city, he built Alexandria, and settled in it a large multitude of Jews with all the privileges of his Macedonian subjects.

After the death of Alexander, in 323 B.C., his empire was divided according to prophecy into four kingdoms; between two of which, the Egyptian and Syrian, Judea was frequently a subject of sanguinary contest. In 320 B.C. Ptolemy Lagus, afterwards called Soter, took military possession of Judea, and in revenge for the faithful adherence of the Jews to their oath of allegiance to Laomedon of Mytilene, to whom they had been assigned, he carried 100,000 of them captive into Egypt. But there, on considering their loyalty to their former rulers, he treated them with kindness, advancing them to places of power and trust; so that many of their countrymen emigrated to Egypt, and settled in it of their own free will. Judea still continued to be the object of sanguinary wars, being sometimes held by Ptolemy, king of Egypt; sometimes by Antigonus, king of Syria. Ptolemy Soter was succeeded by his son Ptolemy Philadelphus in 284 B.C. He was also a generous friend to the Jews; and in his reign, and under his patronage, was the translation of the Hebrew Scriptures—called the Septuagint—commenced and completed. This was undoubtedly one of the most important events in the history of divine revelation. It transfused the Hebrew, one of the simplest languages, into the Greek, one of the most complex and copious; it settled many important translations, on Jewish authority, previous to any controversy with Christians; it diffused, during a literary and scientific age, an extensive knowledge of the Hebrew Scriptures: gave heathen, and consequently unsuspected, testimony to their antiquity and authenticity, and prepared the way for the preaching of the gospel, by familiarizing the Gentiles with the prophetic authorities, to which our Lord and his apostles were afterwards to appeal.

To Philadelphus succeeded Ptolemy Energetes, to whom the Jews, it appears, paid an annual tribute of twenty talents.

Ptolemy Philopator, son to the preceding, ascended the throne of Egypt in 221 B.C., and, having defeated Antiochus the Great, came to Jerusalem, and offered many sacrifices in the temple; but being prevented by the high-priest from entering into the holy of holies, he departed from Jerusalem full of wrath against all the Jews; withdrew all the privileges enjoyed by those of Alexandria, and collected a multitude of them into one place to be devoured by wild beasts; when the furious animals turned upon the spectators, and destroyed a great number of them instead of their intended victims.

Ptolemy Epiphanes, an infant, succeeded his father Philopator, in 204 B.C., when Antiochus took possession of Judea, which was retaken by Scopas the Egyptian general, five years afterwards; but who, within another year, was conquered by Antiochus; when Judea peaceably submitted to his authority, and rendered him most essential services. In gratitude for these services, Antiochus ordered Jerusalem to be repaired, and restored to the Jews the privileges originally granted by Alexander.

Seleucus Philopator succeeded Antiochus in the throne of Syria; and, being severely pressed for his tribute to the Romans, and informed by Simon, the governor of the temple, that it contained immense treasures, he sent to seize them; but his messengers, when on the point of entering, were struck with a panic, and fell down, as if dead. Seleucus, after an inglorious reign of eleven years, died in 176 B.C.

Antiochus Epiphanes succeeded to the throne of Syria, and being also pressed for the Roman tribute, deposed the good high-priest Onias, and sold the office to Jason his brother for 360 talents; and afterwards deposed him, and sold it to his brother Menelaus for 660 talents in the year 172 B.C.,—so venal had every office become, and so shamefully had even the high-priests learned 'to make merchandise of God's heritage.'

While Antiochus was carrying on a successful war in Egypt, a false report of his death was spread in Judea; whereupon Jason collected a thousand men, with a view to recover the high-priesthood; surprised Jerusalem; drove Menelaus into the castle, and put to the most cruel deaths all whom he considered his adversaries. Antiochus, being informed of these events, and supposing the whole Jewish nation had revolted, hastened out of Egypt; and, having been told that the citizens of Jerusalem had made great rejoicings at the report of his death, he immediately assailed and took it by storm; slew 40,000; sold as many more for slaves; pillaged the temple of its treasures and furniture to the amount of 800 talents of gold; entered the holy of holies; sacrificed a sow upon the altar of burnt-offerings; and caused the broth of it to be sprinkled all over the temple. He then returned to Antioch, laden with the spoils of Egypt and Judea; leaving one Philip, a very barbarous man, governor of Judea; and continuing the infamous Menelaus in the high-priesthood. After this he twice invaded Egypt; but, on the second occasion, ambassadors from Rome charged him, on the peril of forfeiting their friendship, to withdraw his troops. This memorable interference, so strongly indicating the approaching fall of the third, and the rise and supremacy of the fourth prophetic monarchy, occurred in 168 B.C.

Mad with the disappointment, while marching back through Canaan, he detached above 20,000 men from his army under Apollonius, with orders to destroy Jerusalem, put all the men to the sword, and sell all the women and children for slaves. These barbarous orders were rigorously put in execution upon a Sabbath-day, when all the people were assembled at public worship; and none were permitted to escape but such as could hide themselves in caves, or escape to the mountains by flight. After having sacked the city, fired it in several places, demolished the houses, and pulled down the city walls, the army of Apollonius built, with the ruins, a fortress upon the eminence called Acra, from which they could overlook and command the temple, and sally out and kill any who might dare to meet for worship. After the infuriated monarch had returned to Antioch, he issued a decree, commanding all his subjects to conform to the religion of the Greeks; and sent one Athenæus to initiate the Jews in the doctrines and forms of idolatrous worship, and to punish with death any who refused obedience. Athenæus, upon his arrival at Jerusalem, being supported by the apostate Jews, interdicted all sacrifices to the God of Israel, suppressed all the peculiar observances of the Jewish religion, burned every copy of the law that could be discovered, dedicated the temple to Jupiter Olympius, erected his statue upon the altar of burnt-offerings, and put every one to death who had been found to neglect or contravene the royal decree.

During the persecution raised by this decree, Mattathias, grandson of Asmonæus (from whom the family were called 'the Asmonæans'), had retired from Jerusalem with his five sons, John, Simon, Judas, Eleazar, and Jonathan, and taken refuge in Modin, his native town, in the tribe of Dan. To this place Apelles, one of the king's officers, came in the course of his idolatrous mission, and applied to Mattathias to persuade the people to renounce the worship of JEHOVAH, and embrace the heathenism of the king; promising to Mattathias royal favour and great riches as the reward of his compliance. This base proposal Mattathias, who was a priest, scornfully rejected; and, in the spirit of Phinehas, slew the first Jew that ventured to approach the idolatrous altar; then, with the assistance of his sons, despatched the commissioner and his whole party; and, putting himself at the head of his family and as many Jews as he could collect, he proceeded to destroy the heathen idols and altars, and retired for safety into the mountains. Here, being joined by numbers of the faithful adherents of the divine law, and especially by those called Assidæans,[1] he emerged from his retreat at the head of a considerable army, with which he marched through the cities of Judah, inflicting judgment upon all apostates and persecutors, pulled down the heathen altars, and, as far as circumstances permitted, re-established the ordinances and worship of JEHOVAH, B.C. 167. The next year Mattathias died, worn out by old age and fatigue, and was succeeded by his son Judas, surnamed Maccabæus,[2] who vanquished, in several successive battles, the armies of Antiochus under his local governors and most renowned generals, recovered the temple and purified it, kept the feast of the dedication, and fully restored the divine worship according to the Mosaic ritual. Antiochus was at this time engaged in a war against the Persians and Armenians who had revolted from him; and, on hearing of the success of the Jews, vowed utterly to extirpate the Jewish nation, and to make Jerusalem their common grave. But while these proud and cruel words were in his mouth, the righteous judgment of God overtook him; for he was seized with a grievous and incurable disease, of which he died B.C. 164.

He was succeeded by his son, Antiochus Eupator, a minor, Lysias being appointed regent, who, galled by the recollection of the defeat he had sustained from Judas, formed a coalition with the Idumeans and other neighbouring nations, for the avowed purpose of extirpating the whole Jewish nation. Maccabæus being informed of this, immediately carried the war into the enemy's country, and for many years proved a terrible scourge to the Idumeans, Syrians, Arabs, and other heathen nations around him, till he was slain B.C. 161. He was succeeded by his brother Jonathan, who, with his brother Simon, continued to manage the affairs of the Jewish nation with great prudence and success, officiating both as high-priests and civil governors. Jonathan, Simon, and his sons Judas and Matthias, having been cruelly murdered, the first by the Egyptian usurper Tryphon, the others by Ptolemy; John Hyrcanus, another son of Simon, succeeded to the high-priesthood and government of Judea B.C. 135. Hyrcanus was a man of great energy; he threw off the Syrian yoke on the accession of Demetrius Nicator B.C. 130, and, during a stormy period, continued not only to maintain his independence, but to enlarge his territory by seizing upon various places in Syria, Phœnicia, and Arabia. He also regained Shechem, destroyed the temple on Mount Gerizim, and extended his conquests over the Idumeans, whom he compelled to embrace the Jewish religion B.C. 129. He also renewed the league with the Romans, which had been first made by his father Simon, and obtained greater advantages than the nation had ever enjoyed since the days of David and Solomon. Under the conduct of his sons Aristobulus and Antigonus, he utterly destroyed Samaria B.C. 109; and after a prosperous administration of thirty years, left the high-priesthood and sovereignty to his eldest son Aristobulus B.C. 107. This prince was the first who, since the captivity, had assumed the crown and title of king. He was succeeded by his brother Alexander Jannæus, who subdued the Philistines, burned Gaza their capital B.C. 97, and compelled them to embrace the Jewish religion. He also subdued the Moabites, Ammonites, and several of the Arabian tribes; and, after a reign of twenty-seven years, died at the siege of Ragaba B.C. 79. He was succeeded by his widow Alexandra, who continued to govern the nation with great prudence during nine years. But she was scarcely dead till Aristobulus, joined by a large party who hated the Pharisees for their tyranny in the administration during the preceding reign, disputed for the crown and high-priesthood against his elder but indolent brother Hyrcanus, and succeeded in dispossessing him after a reign of barely three months. Under these circumstances Aretas the king of Arabia was called to the assistance of Hyrcanus, and besieged Aristobulus in the temple; whereupon Aristobulus calling upon the assistance of

[1] The Jews, after the return from the Babylonish captivity, were customarily divided into the ZADIKIM, or righteous, who adhered barely to the written law of Moses, and the CHASIDIM, or pious, who superadded many superstitious and rigorous observances, according to the tradition of the elders. From the former (the Zadikim) were derived the Sadducees, the Karaites, and the sect called Samaritans; and from the latter (the Chasidim) were derived the Pharisees, Essenes, and Assidæans. These Assidæans, or rather Chassidæans, were specially distinguished by their zeal for the temple, upon which account they served greatly to strengthen the hands of Mattathias.
